At 5 p. m. on the 2d I was started with my command for the Boydton plank road, via Fort Fisher, sending at the same time an order for Major Van Brocklin to join with his train, and also to Captain Jackson to join me with his company and the pontoon train left in my old camp, together with the train of siege materials and intrenching tools. During the night all my troops and trains, except Lieutenant Taylor's pontoon train, with General Humphreys, were concentrated near general headquarters, on the Boydton plank road. The wooden pontoon trains which I had left at City Point arrived at headquarters the same evening, but, by your direction, they were immediately sent back to City Point.

On the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th I moved my command and trains, via the Boydton plank road, the River road, Cox's road, the Epps house, and Notoway Court House, toward Burkeville, encamping on the 6th within two miles of Burkeville. During the whole of this march my men were engaged in repairing old and opening new roads for the passage of army trains and troops.

On the morning of the 7th I moved my command to Burkeville and went into camp. At 10 p. m. of the 7th I received an order from you to take a pontoon train of eighteen boats to Farmville, with sufficient troops to throw the bridge. At 10.45 I started with three companies and the pontoon train, accompanied by Major Folwell, leaving Major McDonald in command of the troops and trains left at Burkeville. From Rice's Station to Farmville the roads were very bad indeed and required a large amount of work to provide for the passage of our own and other trains.

At 9.30 on the morning of the 8th my trains reached the Appomattox at Farmville, and Major Van Brocklin immediately built a pontoon bridge across the river to take the place of one that had been in use belonging to the Twenty-fourth Corps. At the same time I sent an order back to Major McDonald, at Burkeville, to join me with the balance of my command and trains, and he reached my camp at 2 o'clock on the morning of the 9th. Leaving a detachment in charge of the bridge at Farmville, I marched the balance of my train at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 9th toward Appomattox Court-House, and late in the evening the main portion of my pontoon trains were within about one mile of army headquarters, and I reported to you in person. There I first learned of General Lee's surrender.

During the whole march, from leaving my winter camp on the 29th of March until the 9th of April, the labors of the men in my command, in building and repairing roads and bridges, had been incessant, and in addition to their arms, accouterments, knapsacks, and rations, the necessary axes, picks, and shovels. Major Van Brocklin marched his company and train thirty-three miles in less than twenty-four hours, doing considerable work to the roads on the way. The energy and zeal displayed by the officers and the promptness and cheerfulness of the men in the performance of their severe labors were beyond all praise.

On the afternoon of the 10th of April we commenced our return march to Burkeville, reaching the latter place at 6 p. m. of the 12th, having done a large amount of work on the roads and bridges during the march. Brevet Major Van Brocklin was left at Farmville with a detachment of two companies in charge of the two pontoon bridges over the Appomattox at that place, to remain until the Second Corps should recross the river.

On the 14th Brigadier-General Penham arrived at Burkeville with his command, and I rejoined the brigade, from which I had been detached since the 10th of October, 1864, having been on duty at headquarters of the army during this time with my command, under the direct orders of the chief engineer. On the same day one-half of Company A of the Fiftieth, under Lieutenant Brown, joined me, making a total of eleven and a half companies of engineer troops under my command. On the 20th Brevet Major Van Brocklin rejoined me with his detachment. On the 22d I sent Major Polwell, with a detachment of three companies and a bridge train, to bridge the Appomattox at Genito Bridge for the passage of the Twenty-fourth Corps on its way to Richmond. On the 23d I sent Brevet Major Van Brocklin, with a bridge train and a detachment of two companies, to report to General Wright and accompany the Sixth Corps on its march toward Danville. On the 24th the remainder of the brigade started for Stanton River, on the line of the Danville railway, which place we reached on the 26th. On the 27th Major Polwell rejoined me with his detachment, and I moved my command across the Stanton River to a point about one mile south of Clover Station, and on the morning of the 28th commenced getting out timber and sending it to the river for the reconstruction of the railway bridge. On the evening of the 29th I had the [timber] for three-fourths of the bridge delivered, Colonel Brainerd having procured timber for the one-fourth of the bridge on the north side of the river. On my arrival at Stanton River I had a pontoon bridge thrown across the stream, and this was taken up on the morning of the 1st of May and replaced by Brevet Major Van Brocklin, who had got thus far on his return from Danville with orders to wait at this point for the return of the Sixth Corps.

Early on the morning of the 1st of May I started with my command to accompany the brigade on its return to Burkeville, reaching the latter place on the evening of the 2d of May. On the morning of the 3d I sent Captain McGrath, with his company, to accompany General Benham to City Point, for the purpose of loading and forwarding engineer material to Washington, and started with the balance of the brigade, under the command of Colonel Brainerd, for Richmond; and at 5 a. m. on the 5th we reached Manchester, opposite Richmond, having marched forty-two miles during the last twenty-five hours. On the 6th we marched with the army through Richmond, and camped that night near Hanover Court-House. On the morning of the 7th the march toward Fredericksburg was resumed. At the Pamunkey I left Lieutenant Taylor, with a small detachment, in charge of a pontoon bridge over the river, and the balance of the wooden-barge trains, which I had left at City Point and which had been brought to this point, were turned over to me. We reached the Rappahannock near Fredericksburg on the evening of the 8th, and at 7 o'clock the next day I had a bridge completed across the river at Franklin's Crossing. On the same day, by your order, I sent Captain Jackson with one company and a train of four boats to bridge Potomac Creek for the Fifth Corps. On the 10th I received your order to keep down the bridge at Franklin's Crossing until after the passage of the Twentieth Corps, and on the same day, by your order, I sent Brevet Captain Van Rensselaer with a small detachment and a train of six boats to report to General Griffin, at Potomac Creek. Captain Jackson and Brevet Captain Van Rensselaer returned to my camp with their troops and trains on the 12th. On the 17th, having learned that the Twentieth Corps had crossed the river higher up, and that the bridge at Fredericksburg was considered sufficient for the passage of the remainder of the troops, I dismantled my bridge at Franklin's Crossing, and, in accordance with your directions, made up the wooden boats in a raft, loaded all the bridge material on this raft, and placed it in charge of Lieutenant Brown, with a detachment of Company A, and directed him to start next morning in tow of a steamer for Washington. On the morning of the 18th I broke camp at Franklin's Crossing and started with my troops and trains for army headquarters near Washington, marching via Stafford Court-House, Wolf Run Shoals, and Fairfax Court-House, and reaching army headquarters near Fort Berry on the morning of the 21st.

June 2, Brevet Major Van Brocklin rejoined me with his detachment and trains. All my bridge trains and engineer materials were then turned in to the engineer depot, near the Navy Yard, and the transportation to the Quartermaster's Department.

The following is a synopsis of Major Van Brocklin's report:

April 23, with Companies C and E of the Fifth New York Engineers, and the pontoon trains under their charge, consisting of twenty-four canvas pontoon boats and their equipments, and Captain Manger's company of the Fifteenth New York Engineers, I joined the Sixth Corps and marched with it to Clark's Ferry, on the Staunton River, where we arrived at 6 p. m. of the 24th, when I immediately laid a pontoon bridge of nineteen boats, making a bridge 315 feet long. Remained at this place until the morning of the 26th, when I took up the bridge and started for Danville with Companies C and E and their pontoon trains, leaving Captain Manger at the Staunton River to report to General Benham on his arrival at that place. Reached Laurel Hill, sixteen miles from Danville, at 12 m. of the 27th, when I received orders from Major-General Wright to report to Major-General Sheridan at Abbyville, on the Staunton River. While en route for Abbyville and when near South Boston I received notice from General Sheridan that he had already crossed the Staunton River, and therefore did not require the bridge. During the same day (April 28), in compliance with orders of General Sheridan, I started with my bridge trains for Mosely's Ferry, on the Staunton River, with instructions to lay a bridge at that place for the cavalry to recross the river. Had this bridge, which was composed of twenty-three boats, making a bridge 350 feet long, laid at 12 m. of the 26th, having marched a distance of twenty miles that day. This bridge was taken up by order of Brigadier-General Banham at 10 p. m. of the 30th, and moved during the night to Roanoke Station, where it was relaid across the Staunton River near the crossing of the railroad at 8 a. m. of the following morning. This bridge was composed of seventeen boats and was 270 feet long. In consequence of the heavy rains while marching from Mosley's Ferry, I was obliged to lay a pontoon bridge fifty feet long across the Little Roanoke River at Roanoke Station for the purpose of crossing the trains.

Remained at Roanoke Station until the morning of May 17, under orders from Major-General Wright, when the pontoon bridge was taken up and moved to Clark's Ferry, three miles above, on the same river, where a bridge was laid of eighteen boats, being 300 feet long. The supply trains and artillery of the Sixth Corps crossed in the afternoon. The bridge was taken up the following morning, May 18, and moved with the trains of the Sixth Corps to Manchester, via Burkeville and Amelia Court-House, where we arrived at 10 a. m. of the 21st, having laid a pontoon bridge of five boats at Goode's Bridge, on the Appomattox River. Remained in Manchester until the afternoon of the 23d, when I moved my trains to the crossing of the Chickahominy River by the Mechanicsville pike, leaving Captain Kenyon with a portion of his company in charge of a pontoon bridge which had been laid the previous day across the canal at the foot of Eighteenth street, in Richmond, for the purpose of crossing the trains of the Sixth Corps.

During the morning of the 24th the crossing of the Chickahominy was repaired, in doing which four temporary bridges were constructed over water-courses and one trestle bridge sixty feet long put down. Lieutenant Cowan with twenty men was left in charge of this crossing, with instructions to follow the rear of the supply trains. The balance of the trains were then moved to the Pamunkey River, via Umomay Court-House, where we arrived at 4 p. m., and immediately laid down a bridge of ten boats, Captain Kenyon and Lieutenant Cowan coming up during the night. The Sixth Corps began crossing at noon. Remained at this place until the morning of the 26th, when, by order of General Wright, I left Captain Kenyon and a portion of his company in charge of this bridge, with orders to remain until the arrival of the artillery of the Sixth Corps, then at City Point, and to march with them until they should join the corps, and I started with the balance of the trains to reach the Sixth Corps, then at Chesterfield Station. In consequence of the heavy rains during the day the trains of the Sixth Corps had a great deal of difficulty in moving. I came up to their rear at night. The following day the corps did not move in consequence of the continued rains. My trains were moved to the advance of the corps, and moved in that position until we arrived at the camp of the Engineer Brigade near Fort Berry on the 2d day of June, marching by way of Fredericksburg, where we stopped one day, crossing the Potomac at Conkley's Store, three miles west of the crossing of the telegraph road, thence by way of Stafford Springs, Wolf Run Shoals, and Fairfax Court-House. Owing to the heavy rains the streams were very high and the roads in a bad state, requiring a large amount of work to make them passable for the supply trains following the corps. By reason of having the advance of the corps and starting from one to two hours before them in the morning, I was enabled to prepare the roads and build the necessary bridges without delaying them.

During this march one pontoon bridge sixty-five feet long was laid across the Po River, and eight corduroy bridges were built for crossing the infantry over streams, including once across the Occoquan at Wolf Run Shoals.

I cannot, without injustice, close this report without calling your attention to the energy and efficiency displayed by the men under my command and the cheerfulness with which they uniformly discharged their duties, which were many times of a very unpleasant and fatiguing nature. I desire especially to mention Company C, which, by its long experience in handling the canvas bridges and the zeal which it uniformly manifested in the discharge of its duties, has well merited the honor [to] which I believe them entitled—that of being second to no company of pontooners in the service. For their promptness in laying the bridge at Mosley's Ferry I received the thanks of Major-General Sheridan, and for the arduous duties of repairing roads and constructing bridges on the march from Richmond to Washington, performed by Companies C and E, I received the thanks of Major-General Wright.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. VAN BROCKLIN,

Captain, Fiftieth New York Vol. Engineers, Brevet Major, U. S. Vols.

Bvt. Col. IRA SPAULDING,

Commanding Fiftieth New York Volunteer Engineers.

The following tabular statement shows the number, length, and location of the several pontoon bridges built by myself, and by officers and men under my orders, from the 28th of September, 1862, to the arrival of the Army of the Potomac near Washington, in May, 1865:

Date.	No. of bridge.	Length.	Kind of boat.	Location.	River.	Officer in command of train.	Remarks.
1862.		Feet.
Sept. 28	1	800	Wooden	Harper's Ferry.	Potomac.	Captain Spaulding.
Oct. 20	2	1,500	do	Berlin.	do	do.
21	3	80	do	do	Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.	do.
Nov. 22	4	280	do	Occoquan.	Occoquan.	Major Spaulding.	Lacey house.
Dec. 11	5	440	do	Fredericksburg.	Rappahannock.	do.
11	6	420	do	do	do	Captains McDonald and McGrath.	Lower crossing.
12	7	440	do	do	do	Major Spaulding.	Lacey house.
1863.
Apr. 23	8	420	do	U. S. Ford.	do	do.
29	9	400	do	do	do	do.	Part of rough pontoons and part Waterman boats.
May 6	10	400	do	Franklin's Crossing.	do	do.
7	11	400	do	do	do	do.
July 13	12	800	do	Harper's Ferry.	Potomac.	Lieutenant-General Spaulding.
13	13	1,500	do	Berlin.	do	do.
14	14	80	do	do	Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.	do.
Oct. 11	15	1,500	do	do	Potomac.	do.
11	16	100	do	Kelly's Ford.	Rappahannock.	Major Burns.
17	17	180	do	Heavely Ford.	do	do.
18	18	100	do	Bell's Ford.	Hull Run.	Captain Miao.
19	19	100	do	Mitchell's Ford.	do	Captain McDonald.
18	20	420	do	Wheeler's Ford.	do	Lieutenant Moore.
Nov. 18	21	320	do	McLennan's Ford.	do	Captain Fulwell.
8	22	180	do	Rappahannock Station.	Rappahannock.	Captain McDonald.	Above rail-road bridge.
9	23	180	do	Norham's Ford.	do	Captain Miao.	Below rail-road bridge.
9	24	180	do	Rappahannock Station.	do	do.	Do.
20	25	180	do	Culpeper Ford.	Rapahan.	do.
20	26	170	do	Gold Mine.	do	Captain McDonald.
Dec. 4	27	180	do	Rappahannock Station.	Rappahannock.	do.
4	28	140	do	Wetland's Ford.	Hazel.	Captain Miao.
1864.
Apr. 20	29	180	Canvas.	Kelly's Ford.	Rappahannock.	Captain Fulwell.
May 3	30	150	do	Ely's Ford.	Rapahan.	do.
4	31	180	Wooden	do	do	Major Deshaunt.
4	32	220	do	Germania Ford.	do	Captain McDonald.
5	33	320	do	do	do	Captain Van Broek.
5	34	100	Wooden	Culpeper Ford.	do	Captain Palmer.
7	35	180	do	Ely's Ford.	do	Captain McDonald.
10	36	420	do	Fredericksburg (Lower crossing).	Rappahannock.	Major Deshaunt.
10	37	50	Canvas.	do	do	Captain Van Broek.
10	38	50	do	do	do	do.
18	39	440	Wooden	Fredericksburg (Lacey house).	Rappahannock.	Major Moore.
29	40	100	Canvas.	Jorlcho Mills.	North Anna.	Captain Van Broek.

Date.	No. of bridge.	Length.	Kind of material.	Location.	River.	Officer in command of train.	Remarks.
1864.		Feet.
May 24	41	100	Canvas	Railway bridge.	North Anna.	Captain Fulwell.
24	42	100	do	do	do	do
24	43	100	do	Above railway	do	do
25	44	80	Wooden	Quaker's Mills	do	Major Beers.	Replaces pontoon, 200-foot
26	45	100	do	Jericho Mills	do	do	with bridge.
26	46	100	do	Below railroad	do	Captain McDonald.
26	47	130	do	Above railroad	do	do
27	48	180	Canvas	Hannovertown	Pamunkey.	Captain Van Brucklin.
27	49	164	do	do	do	Captain Fulwell.
28	50	146	do	Mrs. Nelson's	do	do	Or Mrs. Hum-
28	51	140	Wooden	do	do	Major Beers.	ley's.
28	52	130	do	Hannovertown	Pamunkey.	Captain McDonald.
28	53	180	Canvas	Dunkirk	Mattaponi.	Captain Pennington.
June 1	54	185	Canvas	do	do	Captain Van Brucklin.
3	55	100	do	New Castle Ferry.	Pamunkey.	do
5	56	150	do	do	do	Captain Fulwell.
12	57	100	Wooden	Long Bridge.	Chickahominy.	Major Ford.	Main channel.
12	58	60	do	do	do	do	South branch.
13	59	00	Canvas	Jones' Bridge.	do	Captain Fulwell.	Main channel.
13	60	40	do	do	do	do	South branch.
13	61	60	Wooden	do	do	Captain Palmer.	Main channel.
13	62	40	do	do	do	do	South branch.
14	63	210	Wooden	Cohes' Ferry.	do	Lieutenant Colonel Spruelling.
			and canvas.
19	64	100	do	Dunkirk.	Mattaponi.	Captain Fulwell.
23	65	00	do	Jones' Bridge.	Chickahominy.	do	Main channel.
23	66	40	do	do	do	do	South branch.
Dec. 7	67	162	do	Freeman's Ford.	Nottoway.	Brigade Major Van Brucklin.
9	68	50	do	Near Dickson's.	Three Creek.	do
11	69	152	do	Freeman's Ford.	Nottoway.	do
11	70	152	do	do	do	Major Fulwell.
1865.
Mar. 20	71	65	do	W. Park Inn's	Hatchers Run.	Brigade Major Van Brucklin.
20	72	55	do	Quaker road.	Gravelly Run.	do
Apr. 8	73	00	Canvas	Parryville.	Appomattox.	do
12	74	00	do	do	do	do
22	75	100	do	Gentle Bridge.	do	Major Fulwell.
24	76	105	do	Clark's Ferry.	Staunton.	Brigade Major Van Brucklin.
27	77	270	do	Rumrider Station.	do	Major Fulwell.
29	78	350	do	Mosley's Ferry.	do	Brigade Major Van Brucklin.
30	79	50	do	Rumrider Station.	Little Run.	do
30	80	270	do	do	Staunton.	do
May 8	81	400	do	Franklin's Cross- ing.	Sappony River.	Major McDonald.
17	82	300	do	Clark's Ferry.	Staunton.	Brigade Major Van Brucklin.
20	83	100	do	Greene's Bridge.	Appomattox.	do
21	84	00	do	Richmond, Va.	do	do
21	85	180	do	Littlepage's Bridge.	Pamunkey.	do
28	86	05	do	Near Gahney's Station.	do	do

Total number of bridges..... 86
 Total length of bridges..... Feet..... 21,248
 Equal to..... miles..... 4.022

The above includes pontoon bridges built by officers and men under my command during the time stated, but does not include the large number of trestle, timber, and corduroy built by my own men, nor the pontoon, trestle, timber, and corduroy bridges built during the same time by other portions of the Engineer Brigade or by the regular engineer battalion. In addition to the six pontoon trains in my charge, I also had charge of two siege trains of twenty-two wagons each during the early part of the siege operations in front of Petersburg and of one siege train of twenty-two wagons during the latter part of these operations. All engineer and siege material used in front of Petersburg was drawn on my order, approved by the chief engineer. I have not as yet received the final reports of the expenditure of siege material during the latter part of March, but the following summary of expenditure will vary but little, if any, from the actual result:

Statement of the total expenditure of engineer and siege material in front of Petersburg, from the 14th of July, 1864, to the 29th of March, 1865.

Sand-bags.....	48,872	Hand saws.....	26
Axes.....	8,063	Drawing knives.....	4
Picks.....	2,092	Gablon knives.....	400
Shovels.....	8,028	Grindstones.....	4
Hatchets.....	349	Piles, flat.....	52
Mining picks.....	28	Piles, taper.....	124
Wheelbarrows.....	120	Wire.....coils..	289
Crosscut saws.....	9	Cables.....do....	1
Spin yarn.....bales..	24	Screws.....dozen..	48
Strap hinges.....	130	Padlocks.....	67
Hooks.....	50	Tracing tape.....rolls..	80
Staples.....	50	Timber.....feet, B. M..	18,150
Spikes.....kegs....	40	Plank.....do.....	18,962
Nails.....do.....	381	Boards.....do.....	22,184

In this my final report of engineering operations a few general remarks in relation to these operations may not be out of place. The advance-guard train and the French pontoon trains taken to the Peninsula in 1862 were, as you are doubtless aware, very deficient in transportation, depending upon movement from place to place upon temporary loans of teams from the quartermaster's department, and the consequence was that during the Seven Days' Battles, nine-tenths of all the bridge material with the army at the commencement of these battles was necessarily either destroyed or abandoned to the enemy. The same evil, but to a less extent, prevailed in the organization of the bridge trains operating on the Rappahannock in 1863, and, though I made repeated protests against this system, the evil was but partially remedied. The trains sent into the field, both wagons and bridge material, were in many cases unfit for service, and often required nearly as much work in the field as had been done in the shops to fit them for efficient service. It was not until the spring of 1864 that the bridge trains of the Army of the Potomac were properly fitted up for active field operations. By the addition of the light canvas trains, as designed by yourself, and by your assistance and cordial co-operation with me in my efforts to fit up and organize those trains, they were at last organized in a manner to render the most efficient service. When these trains crossed the Rapidan in the spring of 1864 it is believed that they were more perfectly arranged than any bridge trains before organized in America; and for the truth of this statement and for the efficiency of the troops having them in charge, no better evidence can be given than a statement of the facts—that from the crossing of the Rapidan in the spring of 1864 to the close of the war no bridge material was ever lost, destroyed, or abandoned to the enemy; nor, so far as I am aware, were any troops ever kept waiting for the construction of these bridges. The actual construction of the bridges is but a small portion of the labor required for the proper care and efficiency of pontoon trains. The truth is, the necessity for labor upon them never ceases, from the time they are first put in the field until the final close of operations requiring their use. Many and very great improvements have been made on pontoon bridge trains during the progress of the war; not only in the character of the boats and arrangement and construction of the bridges, but also in the character of the wagons, the arrangement of the loads, manner of loading and unloading, &c. It would seem to be very desirable that all these improvements should be collated and a record made of them for future reference. The organization and outfit of engineer troops, as sent into the field at the commencement of the war (the volunteers, at least), were very defective, and I was led to devote some thought and study to the proper manner of remedying these defects in my own department. As the result of these investigations and of experience my troops during the last year of the war were furnished with such an outfit as to render each company a unit. Each company was furnished with a company wagon, a commissary wagon, a forage wagon, a tool wagon, and a carpenters' tool-chest. By this means the whole or any portion of the regiment was prepared to move at any time of the day or night, with fifteen days' supplies and a complete outfit for the performance of all kind of engineer duty. That the troops thus organized were at all times admirably prepared for prompt and efficient service, my daily and weekly reports of engineering operations and your own knowledge of their labors furnish abundant evidence, and the works in front of Petersburg are monuments of the skill and industry of the officers and men engaged in their construction.

For your uniform kindness and courtesy, both to myself and the officers and men under my command while serving under your orders, I beg to tender you my most sincere thanks.

Very respectfully,

I. SPAULDING,
Brevet Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. C. DUANE,
Chief Engineer, Army of the Potomac.

No. 14.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Franklin Harwood, U. S. Army, commanding Battalion U. S. Engineers.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. ENGINEER TROOPS,
Near Burkeville, Va., April 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with paragraph 9, Special Orders, No. 94, Army of the Potomac, I have the honor to report that from the 29th of March to the 9th of April the Battalion of U. S. Engineer Troops have been employed as follows:

On the 29th of March broke camp near Petersburg and marched to Gravelly Run.

On the 30th, 31st, and 1st of April was employed corduroying roads between the Vaughan and Quaker roads. From the 2d to the 9th of April marched with and repaired the roads for headquarters Army of the Potomac train.

During the operations from the 29th of March to the 9th of April no casualties have occurred, and no guns nor colors have been captured by this command.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. HEARWOOD,

Capt. of Engineers and Bvt. Maj., U. S. Army, Comdg. Batta.

Capt. CHANNING CLAPP,

Asst. Adj. Gen., Engineer Brigade, Army of the Potomac.

U. S. ENGINEER BATTALION,

Camp near Burke's Station, Va., April 20, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with instructions, I have the honor to submit the following report of my service with the different corps of the army during the campaign commencing the 29th of March:

On the 30th I was directed by you to ascertain and report the position of the Fifth Corps after their repulse by the enemy in the morning. I found them reformed in rear of a small tributary of Hatcher's Run, covering the Boynton plank road, with their left flank thrown to the rear and resting on the breast-work of the preceding night, their right in advance of the Second Corps line, but protected by the thick abatis in front of the line. Again, when the corps advanced in the afternoon I was sent to ascertain and report their position. I found them massed near the White Oak road and preparing to occupy it as soon as a reconnaissance through the dense timber should develop the position of the corps. When I left them regiments were being thrown out on the right flank in echelon, and General Warren was endeavoring to find and make a connection with the Second Corps.

On the 2d of April I was sent to communicate with the Cavalry Corps, to find where General Sheridan needed pontoons. I found him at Ford's Station, on the South Side Railroad, and about to march on Sutherland's Station, on the same road, where he desired the bridge train to be sent.

On the 6th of April, while with headquarters near Jetersville, I was ordered to report for temporary duty with the Sixth Corps. Between 6 and 7 a. m. the corps took up the line of march across the country in a northeasterly direction toward Amelia Court-House, at which point the enemy were reported as making a stand. I was employed in looking for roads, and while so doing the order was countermanded. The corps retraced its steps in order, if possible, to cut off the enemy, now reported to be retreating by way of Deatonsville. I was sent to assist Colonel Michler in finding the best road to Pride's Church, by marching on which the corps would cut the enemy's line of retreat to the west of Deatonsville, on which the Second Corps was already marching. The road was found in time to put the corps upon it as soon as it came up, and the leading division, the Third, was pushed to the utmost to get up in time to cut off the enemy's retreat. Shortly after crossing Flat Creek the Second Corps was heard engaged near Deatonsville and the cavalry near Pride's Church. At the time that the Third Division, Sixth Corps, reached the position of the cavalry, which was on the road from Deatonsville to Burke's Station, the cavalry was held in check by the infantry guard of the enemy's train, which was moving off on a parallel road, or nearly so, about a quarter of a mile distant. At the same time a portion of the cavalry was intercepting their retreat on the road on which they were moving at a point nearer the South Side Railroad. I reconnoitered the enemy's position, which was a good one, the road being on a ridge. As soon as the Third Division, Sixth Corps, could be formed on the ground I selected it charged in concert with the cavalry on its right and, with little or no opposition, carried the road, capturing a few wagons. The pursuit was immediately continued on the road in a southwesterly direction, but was soon checked by the enemy's making a stand on the east side of Little Sailor's Creek. After a brisk skirmish they retreated across the creek and took up a position on the opposite bank. Here the Sixth Corps had the advantage of position, being on the higher ground. Their line (the enemy's) extended in a semicircular form, the convexity toward us, encircling the hillside upon which they had taken position, which was densely timbered, except one open space of about 100 yards width, across which their line was plainly visible, lying down. From our commanding position three or four batteries were brought to bear on this exposed position of their line, which was cut up terribly by our plunging fire of shell and case-shot. The leading division of the Sixth Corps was formed for the charge at the header of the creek, crossed it in gallant style, but just as they rose over the crest of a little hill were attacked in the center by the force of the enemy, said to be their Naval Brigade, which had been lying down in the open field. A regiment broke, and the center was thrown into temporary confusion, but soon rallied, the attacking party of the enemy falling back to their original position. After a little more fighting, not very severe, the enemy's force, under the command of General Ewell, being cut off by our cavalry force in the rear and confronted by the Sixth and Second Corps, surrendered. The Sixth Corps headquarters were established for the night at the crossing of the road to Burke's Station with the road to Rice's Station, being at a point about five miles from the latter. It is to be observed that the pursuit during the day was greatly facilitated by the state of the roads, which were, as a general rule, in excellent condition; this I attribute to the rolling nature of the country, which was well drained by abrupt ravines, the roads being generally on the ridges.

At an early hour on the morning of the 7th I was sent forward to show the leading division the road to Farmville. The morning's march was greatly retarded by the trains of the other corps and the bad crossing at Sandy River. The Sixth Corps arrived at Farmville about 11 a. m., and was posted on the hill overlooking the town. I went down to the Appomattox and found the enemy had burned the railroad bridge as well as the plank road one, but the cavalry and light artillery were crossing by a good, or rather tolerable, ford a few hundred yards above the plank road. Soon after the cavalry and Second Corps became engaged with the enemy on the other side of the river, and, it appearing that the services of the Sixth Corps would be likely to be needed, I sent back to you for a bridge train. In the meanwhile the corps headquarters were moved into the town; and being informed that the bridge train of the Army of the James was near at hand, I so informed General Wright, who so reported to General Grant, who directed it to be brought to the front. In the meanwhile Colonel Munroe, a pioneer officer of the Sixth Corps, reported that, in his opinion, the wreck of the plank-road bridge could soon be put in passable condition for infantry. The work was commenced by the pioneers, and about sunset the infantry began crossing at that point, and in the course of the evening the whole corps was camped on the other side. The bridge train of the Army of the James, being in rear of the wagon trains, did not arrive until a late hour, but the bridge was thrown in sufficient time to admit of the march being again taken up in the morning.

On the morning of the 8th I conducted the leading division to the coal mine at the intersection of the Lynchburg road with the Maysville or Buckingham Court-House plank road. There the troops halted and were rationed. The march was soon resumed on the plank road to a point eight miles from Farmville, where the road forked—one branch leading northeasterly to Cumberland Court-House, the other westerly, via Curdsville, to Buckingham Court-House. I directed the troops on the road to Curdsville, and about one mile outside the village left the plank road, which turned abruptly northward to Buckingham Court-House, and continued our westerly course to the New Store, where the mud road on which we had been traveling came into the Lynchburg road. The Sixth Corps headquarters for the night were established near the New Store. The line of march during the day was over a distance of seventeen and a half miles; good road, excepting the last four miles. A few insignificant bridges destroyed by the enemy were repaired by the pioneers without interrupting the march of the troops.

On the 9th the corps followed the Second Corps, on the Lynchburg road, a distance of ten or twelve miles; and in the afternoon, the Army of Northern Virginia having surrendered, I was by your order relieved from duty with the Sixth Corps, and since that time have not been placed on duty with any of the corps of the army.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. HARWOOD,

Captain of Engineers, Brevet Major, U. S. Army.

Bvt. Col. J. C. DUANE,

Chief Engineer, Army of the Potomac.

---

No. 15.

Report of Bvt. Maj. William H. Paine, Aide-de-Camp.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT,

April 15, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report relative to duties assigned me during the late movements of the army from March 29 to April 9, 1865, inclusive:

On March 29, in accordance with instructions received from you, I examined the several roads leading from the Vaughan road to the Monk's Neck road, west of Hatcher's Run, and found them practicable for making such connection as may be necessary between the Second and Fifth Corps, with the exception of the crossings of Gravelly Run, which required that short bridges be made, as the banks were too high to make an easy ford; stream from fifteen to twenty feet wide, two feet deep. Later in the day I made a reconnaissance to the front of the Second Corps, and prepared a sketch showing the roads leading from the Vaughan road to their position, also of the roads previously mentioned, all of which were placed upon the maps distributed to the troops, which was very rainy. Headquarters removed camp on Aiken's farm to a point south of the Gravelly Run, where it remained the 30th; the rain ceased before noon. Made a recon-intrenched position of the left of the Second Corps this morning [31st], running from where the Dabney's Mill road intersects the Boydton plank road southwesterly. Later made a reconnaissance of the roads running westerly from the Boydton plank road, in rear of the Fifth and Second Corps, and, before night, of the advanced position taken by those corps, of all of which sketches were made and maps corrected to correspond thereto.

On Saturday, April 1, made a survey of the left of the Twenty-fourth Corps and the right of the Second Corps, with rude triangulations to works of the enemy on Hatcher's Run, of which a sketch and an estimate of distances was made. Headquarters camp was established one-half mile southeasterly from Dabney's Mill. On Sunday, April 2, I was with the advance of the Second Corps when it arrived at where the Sixth Corps extended across the Cox road west of Old Town Run. Returned to headquarters and reported the fact, also the position of the Sixth Corps left where it rested on the Appomattox. In the evening guided a pontoon train across the Cox road. Headquarters were established near Mr. Tapley's house, about three miles from Petersburg, on the Boydton plank road. On Monday, April 3, accompanied the general and staff to the line of works on Cemetery Hill, passing through Petersburg, and afterward by way of the River road to near Sutherland's Station, where headquarters were established for the night. On Tuesday, the 4th, headquarters removed to Mr. Jones' place, on the Namozine road, east of Deep Creek. Was engaged much of the time in obtaining information relative to roads by which connections could be made between the several routes taken by the different troops and of our own route in advance. Wednesday, April 5, found the advance of the Second Corps halted by reason of the passing of cavalry. Riding on in advance, found the best route already marked by the passing of the Fifth Corps. At Jetersville made a reconnaissance, first southwesterly and afterward easterly, where I was directed to guide the Sixth Corps into position to the right of the Second and Fifth, which I did when they came up about dark. On Thursday, the 6th, when we had arrived at Hill's Shop, I was directed by Major-General Meade to carry a verbal order to Major-General Griffin, commanding the Fifth Corps, to proceed northerly as far as Burton's Bridge, and then proceed westerly on roads which he indicated on the map. I delivered the order, when Major-General Griffin desired me to remain to designate the route and guide the advance, which I did, passing Burton's Bridge site by a ford about fifty feet wide and two feet deep. We passed through Paineville and Rodophil and near Sheppard's Mill, and arrived after dark and took position on the right of the Second Corps, not far from Sailor's Creek. I returned and found headquarters and reported position of the corps. Headquarters had, during the day, been removed from near Mr. Haskins', about two miles southeast of Jetersville; so Friday, 2d, made reconnaissance of inquiries relating to roads in the vicinity of High Bridge and Farmville. Headquarters were at Rice's Station this night. Saturday, the 8th, continued reconnaissances and inquiries toward Appomattox Court-House and toward the various crossings of the Appomattox River. Headquarters were this night about eighteen miles east of Appomattox Court-House, at Clifton. Sunday, 9th, made reconnaissances to the left of the stage road, as well as along the same. Arrived at the skirmish line of the Second Corps as a flag of truce came through. Soon after, seeing that the enemy's skirmish line had retired, I went forward and sketched the position of the enemy, pacing the distance to and locating a portion of their intrenched line, as then occupied. The surrender occurred shortly after. Headquarters were about four miles east of Appomattox Court-House this night.

Very respectfully submitted.

W. H. PAINE,

Captain, Aide-de-Camp, and Brevet Major of Volunteers.

Bvt. Col. J. O. DUANE,

Major of Engineers, U. S. Army.

---

No. 16.

Report of Bvt. Capt. Charles W. Howell, U. S. Corps of Engineers.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,

BATTALION U. S. ENGINEERS,

April 19, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that, in obedience to your orders, I reported for duty on the 29th of March to Major-General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps, whom I found on the Vaughan road, near Gravelly Run crossing, engaged in forming his line nearly parallel to the road, preparatory to an advance. I was immediately sent around his left flank with a small cavalry escort and orders to push through the country, up the left bank of Gravelly Run to the Quaker road, and then to Gravelly Run Meeting-House, if possible, to determine and report the nature of the country, the character, strength, and position of the enemy's force on that road. We succeeded in reaching a point three-fourths of a mile beyond the church, when we met a superior force and returned with but slight loss. The left wing of the corps was then swung around nearly parallel to Gravelly Run, with left near the church, and intrenched. It was then moved forward to connect with the Fifth Corps, but, owing to the swampy nature of the country, the dense underbrush, and frequent slashings, the connection was not secured until next morning. Late in the afternoon the right advanced, and I was ordered to General Hays, commanding Second Division, to assist him in establishing his line. At dusk the Second Corps line was as follows: Second Division on the right, its right flank near Armstrong's Mill, with a strong skirmish-line extending down to Hatcher's Run, thence to Dabney's Mill, occupying an old intrenched line of the enemy's for about 400 yards to the left; Third Division, nearly perpendicular to the Second, held the center, running through low swampy ground, thickly timbered; First Division, on left of Third Division, and extending nearly to Quaker road, with less difficult ground to move over. On the 30th I was again sent to the Second Corps, but was soon after ordered to find roads to communicate with the different divisions of the corps and to put them in good condition. I found the roads, but, owing to the heavy rains in the morning, found it impossible to get them more than barely passable by corduroying the worst places. During the day the right advanced to the J. Crow house, and the left formed connection with the Fifth Corps on the Quaker road, near its junction with the Boylston plank road. On the 31st I was engaged corduroying a portion of the Vaughan road, from Gravelly Run about one mile to the right, with a detail of 1,100 men from Second Corps, with orders to make a double track and corduroy the whole distance. At night I had one track nearly completed,

On the 1st of April I turned over the corduroy to an officer of the Fiftieth New York, and early in the morning examined the Second Corps line, which I found as follows: Right at J. Crow's house, and running from thence to the junction of Quaker and Boylston roads, with the Third Division across Quaker road and First Division on its left, thrown back and holding a strong position, with most of the Fifth Corps artillery on the line. At this time I was recalled and ordered to find a road from Humphreys' Station crossing Hatcher's Run near Armstrong's Mill and running in rear of Second Corps, to corduroy and open it as soon as practicable. I found the road, and ordered 800 men from the Vaughan road to commence work on it early in the morning of the 2d, but, owing to the movement of the 2d, these orders were countermanded and the details sent to their commands. In the afternoon I reconnoitered a salient work of the enemy on Hatcher's Run, and reported to General Hays that it could be carried by assault. On the morning of the 2d I was sent to the Sixth Corps to collect information for chief engineer; after performing this I remained with headquarters during the day. On the morning of the 3d I was sent, accompanied by Lieutenant Lydecker, to examine the crossings of the Appomattox at Petersburg. I was afterward sent from Sutherland's Station with orders to follow the Second Corps across the Appomattox at ——— Mill and to examine the country from that to Beville's Bridge. I found that the corps had not crossed at the place indicated, and followed it on another road, overtaking it at 10 p. m. beyond Namozine Church, on the Namozine road. I found the roads, after the passage of artillery and a few heavy wagons, in very bad condition, the country hilly, the soil a sandy clay, and in the bottom land disposed to quicksand. The road had been much cut up by the passage of the rebel army with its trains, and our movements were, in consequence, rendered more difficult and laborious. At 5 a. m. on the 4th I started on my return to headquarters, going by way of Ford's Station, thence to Sutherland's, and then across the country to Namozine Church. I then remained with headquarters, which moved out on the Namozine road to the crossing of Deep Creek. The country passed over during the day presented a great uniformity in its general features, being a continuous succession of small hills, bordered by narrow shallow ravines, which quickly carried off the water from the high ground and caused rapid improvement of the roads during dry weather. This feature I remarked became more prominent as we moved up the Appomattox, the hills gradually assuming a more imposing altitude and the ravines often presenting considerable obstacle to movement across the fields. The country moved over was comparatively open in the vicinity of the main roads, and between these there was a net work of plantation roads, affording to those conversant with the country great facilities for avoiding the quagmires in the main roads and for making short cuts. The country was well adapted to retard pursuit, both from the nature of the soil and from the admirable positions everywhere presented for a stand by the enemy's rear guard.

On the morning of the 5th I was ordered to gain information about the roads to Burke's Station and Jennings' Ordinary. I afterward accompanied headquarters to Jetersville, and was engaged during the afternoon in collecting information about the surrounding country, and assisted putting the troops in position to meet an expected attack. On the 6th I was ordered to the Second Corps, and accompanied it during the day. The corps moved at 6 a. m., in three columns, toward Amelia Court-House, but striking the enemy at Amelia Springs, the order was changed. The First Division engaged and pushed the enemy back from the heights beyond the Springs and toward Deatonville. The Third took position on the left and the Second on the right. The enemy's rear guard held a strong position, with slight breast-works, covering the village, but, owing to our numerical superiority, they were soon driven out and retreated on the road to Sailor's Creek, a distance of about two miles, where they again made a stand, covering the cross-roads at that point. Here they were sharply pressed by the Second Corps while the Sixth Corps and cavalry came in on their flank and compelled a precipitate retreat. At this point their force was divided, a portion retreating on the road to the Appomattox, and another portion toward Rice's Station, followed by the Sixth Corps. The Second Corps pursued to the right, breaking connection with the Sixth. Half a mile from Sailor's Creek the rear guard was found intrenched, covering the crossing. This line was assaulted and carried, the enemy retreating across the creek and holding the crest of the hills on the opposite side. A portion of the corps was pushed across, but, owing to the darkness, the pursuit was discontinued for the night. The stream at this place was about twenty feet in width and from two to three feet in depth, impassable for artillery and trains, except over a narrow, rickety bridge; it was bordered on either side by a soft bottom land about 100 yards in width, with a hilly, open country gradually rising beyond.

Early on the morning of the 7th the pursuit was resumed, the Second Corps moving out three miles on the road toward Rice's Station, and then across the country to the right, striking the Appomattox at High Bridge without meeting with opposition. The road bridge at this point was saved, and troops immediately crossed to the opposite side, which, after a brisk skirmish in the bottom land with the enemy's rear guard, we held, the enemy not attempting to hold the redoubts near the end of the railroad bridge. The corps was then rapidly pushed forward up the railroad for a distance of two miles. From this point the Second Division continued along the railroad toward Farmville, while the First and Third Divisions moved to the right to strike the stage road from Cumberland Court-House about five miles from the Appomattox. At this time I was sent by General Humphreys to communicate with General Meade. On my return I followed the Second Division and found it occupying the stage and plank roads opposite Farmville. The enemy held a line about two miles from the river, covering both of these roads, their left covering the road from Jamestown. The Second was shortly after withdrawn and ordered to support the other two divisions, which were at the time attempting to force the enemy's left. Our assaults were made over an open field, with the enemy intrenched, and were unsuccessful. The rebels held their position until late in the evening. On the 8th the pursuit was continued to a point on the stage road to Appomattox Court-House six miles beyond New Store, without meeting opposition. On the 9th the advance, about 12 m., reached the enemy's line near Appomattox Court-House, and was there stopped by the negotiations for surrender.

My duties during the pursuit were confined to getting information of the country and occasionally acting as an aide-de-camp. Although the roads were in very bad condition the rapidity of our movements precluded all attempts to make more than temporary repairs of the worst places. Without an enlarged and better organized corps of pioneers we will always be embarrassed by long and rapid marches in a country such as this. I would respectfully suggest that a battalion of 600 men, with an engineer organization for each division, would not be too great, the three battalions of a corps forming a regiment, the commanding officer being chief pioneer of the corps. From this force details could be made for the columns of troops and wagon trains; the latter would be efficient train guards. During the operations around Petersburg I often felt the need of such an organization to supply the place of heavy, untrained, shiftless infantry details. With a force of this kind I could have secured expedition and uniformity of construction, and could have kept that portion of the line under my charge in much better repair. Such a regiment could have been camped at some central point, and in case of necessity would have answered all the purposes of a reserve. Infantry details, with some few exceptions, I have found slow, careless, and, worse than all, stupidly ignorant of what was required of them, both in throwing up fortifications and in improving roads.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. W. HOWELL,

First Lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, Brevet Captain, U. S. Army.
Bvt. Col. J. C. DUANE,
Chief Engineer, Army of the Potomac.

No. 17.

Report of Lieut. Charles B. Phillips, U. S. Corps of Engineers.

HEADQUARTERS U. S. ENGINEER BATTALION,
April 21, 1865.

COLONEL: In accordance with your instructions, I have the honor to report the service upon which I have been engaged during the recent campaign.

On the 28th of March last I was directed by you to report for temporary duty to Major-General Parke, commanding Ninth Army Corps. On the 29th, 30th, and 31st ultimo I was engaged on the line then held by the Ninth Army Corps (in front of Petersburg, Va.), repairing the damages done to a portion of our line at various times by the enemy's shell, the principal injury being at Fort Haskell, where several embrasures had been destroyed. Changes were also being made in the gun platforms of some of the forts, with a view to slight changes in the armament, as at Fort Davis, where 30-pounders were to be placed in position.

On the 1st instant I also (by direction of General Parke) selected at several points along the line positions for trous-de-loup, which obstructions General Parke proposed having placed in our line.

On the morning of the 2d instant (just before daylight) an attack was ordered upon the enemy's works in front of Petersburg. The main point of attack selected was Fort Mahone, on the plank road, opposite Fort Sedgwick, on our own line. The attack was conducted with great spirit on the part of our troops, and met with a correspondingly stubborn resistance from the enemy (considering their strength), the latter very great force at that point. The works were taken (and which were uninjured by fire from our guns, being supplied and from Fort Sedgwick. These guns, were not so untenable to any great extent on either side of Fort Mahone (on account of the arrangement of traverses on the line) yet proved to be of great service in repelling the assaults of the enemy, who repeatedly in the course of the day made the most desperate attempt to recover their lost work. Our troops while holding Fort Mahone were engaged in taking possession of and turning against the enemy their front line of works, and in the course of the day held the works on either side for a distance of, perhaps, half a mile. The complete occupancy of the line was prevented in a measure by detached batteries of the enemy, which were in position at a considerable distance to the rear of their main line of works, but which were meanwhile engaged with the batteries on our own line. The loss of the Ninth Corps during the day was reported to be 160 killed and 700 to 800 wounded. During the day quite large fires had repeatedly broken out in the city, giving rise to the surmise that public property was being destroyed, and that an early evacuation of the city might be looked for.

During the night of the 2d instant the enemy evacuated the city of Petersburg, and early on the morning of the 3d a portion of our troops were reported as occupying the city.

On the 3d instant I was on duty at General Parke's headquarters, finding roads on which to march the Ninth Corps, &c. On the night of the 3d instant headquarters were established near the headquarters Army of the Potomac, near Sutherland's Station.

On the morning of the 4th instant I was ordered by you to report for duty at headquarters Army of the Potomac, and since that date have been on duty with neither of the corps of the army, but have been on duty either at headquarters of the army or in charge of Battalion U. S. Engineers, which have been engaged in cordroying in front of headquarters trains.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHAS. B. PHILLIPS,
First Lieutenant of Engineers.

Byt. Col. J. C. DUANE,
Chief Engineer, Army of the Potomac.

No. 18.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Henry J. Hunt, U. S. Army, Chief of Artillery.

ARTILLERY HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Camp near Fort Albany, Va., June 1, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor herewith to submit a report of the artillery operations of this army subsequent to March 25, 1865.

The artillery consisted of forty-two field batteries, mostly of four guns each, and a siege train, as follows:

SIEGE ARTILLERY.

Eleven light 12-pounder field guns, eight 12-pounder field howitzers, one 24-pounder howitzer, two 32-pounder howitzers, nine 20-pounder Parrotts (rifle), four 10-pounder Parrotts (rifle), four 3-inch ordnance (rifle), one 6-pounder Sawyer (rifle)—forty guns of position, twelve 8-inch siege howitzers, thirty-seven siege mortars (one 13-inch sea-coast, six 10-inch sea-coast, ten 10-inch siege, twenty 8-inch siege), thirty-six Coehorn mortars, ten 100-pounder Parrotts (rifle), thirty-eight 30-pounder Parrotts (siege), fourteen 44-inch siege rifles, one 30-pounder rifle (Brooke), rebel—188 pieces; 62 officers, 1,767 enlisted men; total, 1,829.

The Siege Artillery, under the command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. F. L. Abbot, consisted of 40 guns of position, 75 siege pieces (10 of v were 100-pounder Parrotts), 37 siege and 36 Coehorn mortars; in all, 188 pieces of ordnance, with their material. Of this train the forty guns of position, two 8-inch siege howitzers, five 8-inch siege and three 10-inch sea-coast mortars, nine 100-pounder Parrotts, and one 30-pounder Brooke (English, captured from the rebels) were in the Bermuda lines. Two siege guns and six 8-inch siege howitzers were in the City Point lines in position. One 100-pounder Parrott, twenty-eight siege guns, four 8-inch siege howitzers, six 10-inch siege and twenty Coehorn and one 13-inch and three 10-inch sea-coast mortars were afloat at Broadway Landing.

After the fall of Petersburg the Siege Artillery was employed in securing the abandoned material of the enemy's forts on the James and in the lines of Richmond and Petersburg, and in arranging and garrisoning the works. Upon the movement of this army toward Washington the train and troops were transferred to the defenses of Richmond, by command of Major-General Halleck.

The personnel of the train consisted of the First Regiment Connecticut Foot Artillery and the Third Connecticut Battery of Heavy Artillery; in all, 62 officers and 1,767 enlisted men.

FIELD ARTILLERY.

Second Corps.

Roder's (K), 4th United States, four light 12-pounders.	Dakin's (M), 1st New Hampshire, four 3-inch.
Brown's (B), 1st Rhode Island, four light 12-pounders.	Adams', 10th Massachusetts, four 3-inch.
Clark's (B), 1st New Jersey, four light 12-pounders.	Duvey's, 11th New York, four 3-inch.

Fifth Corps.

Mitchell's (B), 4th United States, four light 12-pounders.	Rawles' (D and G), 5th United States, four 3-inch.
Johnson's (D), 1st New York, four light 12-pounders.	Rogers' (B), 1st New York, four 3-inch.
Mink's (H), 1st New York, four light 12-pounders.

Sixth Corps.

Parsons' (A), 1st New Jersey, four 3-inch.	Allen's (H), 1st Rhode Island, four light 12-pounders.
Adams' (G), 1st Rhode Island, four 3-inch.	Brinckle's (E), 5th United States, four light 12-pounders.
Van Etten's, 1st New York Independent, four 3-inch.	Harn's, 3d New York Independent, four light 12-pounders.

Ninth Corps.

Roemer's, 34th New York Independent, four 3-inch.	Eaton's, 27th New York, four light 12-pounders.
Jones', 11th Massachusetts Independent, four 3-inch.	Rogers', 19th New York, four light 12-pounders.
Rhoads' (D), Pennsylvania, four 3-inch.	Twitchell's, 7th Maine, four light 12-pounders.

Reserve artillery.

Mayo's, 3d Maine.	Phillips', 5th Massachusetts.
Sturt's, 3d Vermont.	McClelland's (B), 1st Pennsylvania.
Wright's, 14th Massachusetts.	Milton's, 9th Massachusetts.
Stabbs', 2d Maine.	Stone's (C and I), 5th United States.
Rhodes' (E), 1st Rhode Island.	Clark's, 12th New York Independent.
Harris' (H), 1st Ohio.	McClelland's (G), 1st New York.
White's, 4th Maine.	Campbell's (P), 1st Pennsylvania.
Ritchie's (C), 1st New York.	Rogers', 6th Maine.
Matthewson's (E), 1st New York.	Weerner's, 3d New Jersey.
Breck's (L), 1st New York.

Second Corps, twelve batteries; Fifth Corps, eleven batteries; Sixth Corps, nine batteries; Ninth Corps, six batteries; Artillery Reserve, four batteries. The Horse Artillery was detached from this army with the cavalry. The Second and Sixth Corps and the Reserve Artillery had also six Coehorn mortars, each with 100 rounds of ammunition.

Twenty-four of the batteries had two extra caissons each, and in the trains of the artillery brigades of the corps and of Reserve sufficient wagons were provided to transport the additional ammunition necessary to carry up the full supply to 270 rounds per gun. The field artillery comprised 202 guns, 511 artillery carriages, 3,972 horses, 6,123 men, besides the trains and 12 Coehorn mortars, with their equipments, &c.

On the 29th March the batteries for field service with the corps were ordered to be reduced to six for the Second and Sixth Corps and five for the Fifth and Ninth Corps. The reduction was effected at once in the Second and Fifth Corps and the surplus batteries either left temporarily in position on the lines occupied by the Sixth Corps in front of Petersburg or sent to report to Brigadier-General Tidball, commanding the artillery of the Ninth Corps, who employed such of them as he required in the lines or in reserve, and ordered the remainder to report to the Artillery Reserve of the army, at City Point. For the operations of the artillery in the reduction of Petersburg and subsequent operations, I respectfully refer you to the reports of the chiefs of artillery of the respective corps transmitted herewith.

When the Sixth and Ninth Corps moved after the capture of Petersburg they took with them six batteries each, leaving all the rest of the artillery in reserve at and near Petersburg. The field artillery with the army was thus actually twenty-three batteries—in all, ninety-two guns.

The severe marching entailed by the campaign on the batteries which, over bad roads and with scant forage, were required to keep up with the movements of the cavalry and infantry, broke down many of the horses which at the commencement of the campaign were not in very good condition, as the allowance of forage during the whole winter had been restricted, the allowance of hay being but three or four pounds per diem.

Much additional labor was thrown upon the teams by their employment in hauling to the rear and securing captured and abandoned artillery. To replace the horses thus broken down heavy drafts were made on the Reserve Artillery, which, commencing on the 5th of April, sent forward fresh teams to exchange for those which were broken down. In this way the artillery with the corps was kept in efficient condition, and was at all times prepared to act with the other troops. The records and reports show that the artillery bore its full share of the labors and dangers of this the last campaign of the rebellion.

To the chiefs and commanders of the artillery—Brigadier-General Hays, commanding Reserve Artillery; Brevet Brigadier-General Wainwright, Fifth Corps; Brevet Brigadier-General Tidball, Ninth Corps; and Brevet Brigadier-General Abbot, Siege Artillery; Lieutenant-Colonel Hazard, Second Corps; Brevet Major Cowan, Sixth Corps; to Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Fitzhugh, serving with Artillery Brigade, Fifth Corps; to Majors Ricketts and Miller, of the Reserve, and Ager, of the Siege Train—too much credit cannot be given for the excellent manner in which their duties were performed. These duties were very arduous, and required for their efficient performance a much larger number of field officers. As it was, the maximum of efficiency possible under the circumstances was secured, and I respectfully recommend them and the officers they have named in their reports to special notice. The officers and men of the batteries maintained the well-earned reputation they had already gained on many fields.

To my staff—Brevet Colonel Warner, inspector of artillery, Brevet Major Craig, assistant adjutant-general, and Brevet Captain Worth, Eighth Infantry, aide-de-camp—I am indebted for the prompt manner in which their duties were performed. Colonel Warner's duties were co-extensive with the army; they were promptly and ably performed. Captain Worth, in addition to his duties on my staff, served actively on the staff of the major-general commanding in carrying and transmitting orders on the field.

In my previous reports I have had occasion to call attention to the want of a proper proportion of field officers for the artillery, and this I did especially in the reports of the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg; and as there is no bureau of artillery nor other center of administration for it, I take this occasion to present the same subject in order that the results of our experience may not be lost. This is due to the reputation of the artillery in this war, as well as to the future interests of the service. At an early period of the war orders were given that field artillery should be taken into service only by single batteries "in order to save field officers;" this whilst infantry regiments of a single battalion were allowed four, with their proper staffs. Why this policy, so contrary to that of all modern armies and so destructive to the efficiency of the most complicated of all the arms of the service, was adopted I am at a loss to discern. Its effects have been but too clear. Not only has the service suffered from the want of officers absolutely necessary to its highest efficiency and economy, but this system has stopped promotion in the artillery, and, as a consequence, nearly every officer of promise as well as of any distinction has been offered that promotion in the infantry, cavalry, or the staff which no amount of capacity, gallantry, or good conduct could secure him in his own arm. The result is that, with a few marked exceptions, in which officers were willing to sacrifice their personal advancement and prospects to their love for their arm, the best and most distinguished of the officers of the artillery accepted positions elsewhere or left the service in disgust, as opportunity offered. The effect of this and of other errors of organization has been but too evident; the artillery, although it has done much better than under the circumstances could have been expected or even hoped, has not attained to that efficiency which was possible, and has failed to retain the pre-eminence it once held in our Army and in public estimation. This sacrifice of efficiency has been made at the expense of economy. I do not hesitate to say that the field artillery of this army, although not inferior to any other in our service, has been from one-third to one-half less efficient than it ought to have been, whilst it has cost from one-third to one-half more money than there was any necessity for. This has been due principally to the want of proper organization, which has deprived it of the experienced officers required for its proper command, management, and supervision, and is in no respect the fault of the artillery itself.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY J. HUNT,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

No. 19.

Reports of Col. Brig. Gen. Henry L. Abbot, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, commanding Siege Train, of operations April 1-May 31.

RICHMOND, VA., June 3, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following personal report and report of operations for the month of April, 1865:

The following changes occurred in my command: On April 3 the Ninth Corps moved forward, leaving my command entirely under General Hartsuff for the time. On April 23 Companies A and H, Thirteenth New York Artillery, were relieved from duty with me and ordered to rejoin their regiment. Otherwise everything remained as heretofore reported.

My artillery was hotly engaged in the battles resulting in the capture of Petersburg, and in the demonstrations made to prevent General Mahone from leaving the Bermuda Hundred line, firing 5,500 rounds during April 1 and 2. One hundred wagons were constantly employed in handling ammunition. In addition to these usual duties of artillery, a detachment of 100 men and 3 officers, commanded by First Lieutenant Rogers, all of First Connecticut Artillery, accompanied the assaulting column, entered the rebel works near Fort Mahone with the very advance, and served six pieces of captured artillery, with the greatest gallantry, for twenty-four hours, when the rebels evacuated the city. This party was armed with their muskets, and carried lanyards, friction primers, fuses, and other small articles, the want of which always delays the opening of fire with captured guns for a few invaluable moments. This closing battle of the campaign for us was thus marked by a new and brilliant service.

Immediately after the evacuation prompt steps were taken to remove my own and the captured artillery. By the night of April 8 all guns, ammunition, ordnance stores, &c., from the Petersburg lines had been removed. The guns were the following: 49 of my own train in front of Petersburg, 30 belonging to the rebel land batteries there, and 22 from their Appomattox water batteries; also 4 from their line in front of Bermuda Hundred. By the end of the month 11 more from near Bermuda Hundred front and 34 from the land batteries near Fort Harrison had also been removed, together with about 50 of my own train from this part of the line. Everything wasullout and much ordnance had been sent to Old Point and Washington. Thus the total number of guns, &c., shipped during the month was about 200 by my command alone.

I have been much interested to see the devices used in different parts of the rebel line to escape the effect of the artillery fire. Thus, near Hare's Mill, on the Petersburg front, where I had concentrated a very heavy mortar fire, their line was a mere labyrinth of trench, with bomb-proof cover in every available spot. This was often made of railroad iron, covered by about three feet of dirt, the rails being taken from the Suffolk road in the vicinity. They had also made splinter-proofs, at about fifty yards intervals, by laying the rails from the crest line to the rear traverses, and putting dirt on top, the cover being about six feet wide at the crest line. This was evidently used by the men on duty to avoid fragments. This part of their line was not well defended by obstructions, a fault which could not be found with that in front of Bermuda Hundred, where I counted the following, going outward from the parapet: First, fraise; second, ditch; third, abatis; fourth, palisading; fifth, chevaux-de-frise; sixth, after interval of 150 yards, abatis; seventh, after interval of 400 yards, an intrenched picket-line, with abatis in front. In this vicinity they had been exposed to much shelling from guns, and had resorted to the following device: A continuous splinter-proof was made in the breast-height revetment—top two feet above banquette head, bottom one foot below, width four feet. This was made of logs and was well drained. It would perfectly cover one man to every two yards of crest. Here, too, I noticed a strange kind of muntlet, of wood, swung by an arrangement like the usual well-curb. It was evidently a very poor device. They often used logs, looped at three feet intervals, on top of the parapet to cover the heads of the infantry. But as these and many other odd arrangements will doubtless be fully reported by the officers engaged in surveying the lines, I will not cumber this paper with them.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Captain of Engineers, Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

Brig. Gen. RICHARD DICKLAFFIELD,

Chief Engineer U. S. Army.

RICHMOND, June 4, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following as my personal report and report of operations for the month of May, 1865:

The following changes have occurred in my command: On May 1 Companies E and M, Third Pennsylvania Artillery, were relieved from my command, and about May 15 the Seventh New York Independent Battery, thus leaving me my regiment and the Third Connecticut Battery. On May 4, by Special Orders, No. 3, headquarters Military Division of the James, my regiment was transferred from Army of the Potomac to Army of the James. On May 6, by General Orders, No. 54, headquarters Department of Virginia, I was appointed chief of artillery of the department, and my siege artillery brigade ordered to report direct to headquarters, and not to General Harshbarger as heretofore. (Copy of this order inclosed.) On May 20 I was detailed by General Orders, No. 60, headquarters Department of Virginia, a member of an examining board for colonels and staff officers. (Copy of this order inclosed.)*

I have retained command of my regiment and brigade during the month. The latter has been engaged in removing the heavy water-bearing guns from the rebel James River batteries. I have prevailed upon a photographer, who has a fine stereoscopic instrument, to take a series of views of these batteries, with a view of preserving an invaluable record of their wonderful completeness. General Michie may take a few sets, but I think the Department should order several more. I will vouch for their excellence and importance.

The only matter of professional interest brought to my notice has been the wreck of one of the rebel iron-clad rams; this vessel was blown up near Fort Drewry. The force of the explosion was terrific; it threw a mass of timber and iron belonging to the casemate and weighing, according to as close a calculation as I cared to make, about 50,000 pounds, from the river over a bluff about twenty feet high to a distance of about 100 yards; it threw bars of iron, eight inches by two inches by ten feet, over half a mile. The casemate was plated with four plates, each two inches thick by eight inches broad, of rolled iron, and backed by a solid mass of timber. These sides sloped at angles of 45 degrees, and yet the rebels admit that a single 15-inch shot did them great damage.

* See Part III.

My address continues, "First Connecticut Artillery, City Point, Va.," and I would earnestly request that the name of the regiment may be always added; it has been dropped of late, and my letters are delayed, in consequence.

I am, general, respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Bvt. Brig. Gen. of Vols., Captain of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Brig. Gen. RICHARD DELAFIELD,
Chief Engineer U. S. Army.

[Inclosure.]

GENERAL ORDERS, } HQRS. DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,
No. 54. } ARMY OF THE JAMES,
Richmond, Va., May 6, 1865.

I. Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. L. Abbot is hereby announced as chief of artillery of the Department of Virginia, and will report in person to the commanding general for instructions.

II. General Abbot will continue in command of his brigade and of the siege artillery train, with headquarters at Richmond, and will make all reports and returns direct to these headquarters.

III. General Abbot's brigade will be assigned to the occupation of such heavy gun batteries around Richmond as may require garrisons.

By command of Major-General Ord:

ED. W. SMITH,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY,
Broadway Landing, Va., April 14, 1865.

GENERAL: I inclose a list of my siege batteries on the front of the Ninth Corps during the battle of April 2. They were commanded by Maj. George Agar, First Connecticut Artillery, and were served entirely by companies of that regiment. A detachment of 4 commissioned officers and 100 men, under command of First Lieut. William H. Rogers, First Connecticut Artillery, accompanied the assaulting column and served captured guns during the engagement.

The following is a list of ammunition expended:

Designation of battery.	24-pounder Coehorn mortars.	8-inch siege mortars.	10-inch siege mortars.	32-pounder Parrots.	$\frac{1}{2}$ -inch ordnance guns.
No. 4.....				435
No. 5.....		237		438
No. 8.....	208
No. 9.....	312
No. 10.....	108	210
No. 12.....	661	225
Fort Morton.....			212		200
No. 20.....		285
Fort Davis.....					180
Fort Emory a.....				610
Total.....	1,389	651	212	1,313	380

a Also called Fort Avery.

The following is a complete list of captured guns and mortars, excepting the field guns removed under your orders. All siege and sea-coast guns have been removed under mine, and to my depot, as arranged between us; also all siege ammunition, &c., and all the ordnance from the Appomattox batteries, including Clifton:

	Petersburg lines.	Appomattox batteries, including Fort Clifton.	Total.
12-pounder Coehorn iron mortars.....	4		4
24-pounder Coehorn iron mortars.....	10		10
8-inch siege mortars.....	7	2	9
8-inch siege howitzers.....	5		5
8-inch columblines.....	1		1
6-pounder iron gun (smooth).....	1	1	2
12-pounder mortar howitzer, U. S.....		1	1
24-pounder iron howitzer.....		2	2
32-pounder guns, short (smooth).....		2	2
3-inch rifle.....		1	1
10-pounder Blakely rifle.....		1	1
20-pounder Parrott rifle.....		1	1
30-pounder Parrott rifle.....		1	1
30-pounder Brooke rifles.....		4	4
32-pounders, rounded and rifled.....		2	2
4.64-inch Brooke rifle.....		1	1
$\frac{1}{2}$ -inch rifle.....		1	1
Total.....	30	24	54

I will see General Barnard to-day about having the lines surveyed; he is making arrangements for so doing, I understand.

I am, general, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. O. TIDBALL,
Chief of Artillery, Ninth Corps.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE TRAIN, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Broadway, Va., April 21, 1865.

GENERAL: In accordance with Special Orders, No. 94, headquarters Army of the Potomac, just received, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command from 29th ultimo to 9th instant:

On 29th ultimo I received an order from yourself directing me during your absence to report to Major-General Parke, commanding Ninth Corps and our lines near Petersburg. Agreeably to my request he directed me to report to Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. C. Tidball, his chief of artillery, and the operations of my command, or rather that portion of it on the Petersburg front, were, up to the evacuation, conducted under his orders.

At about 10 p. m. of that date the enemy threw up a rocket and fired a signal gun, and opened along his entire line on our Petersburg front. We replied, and a furious cannonade, with musketry fire in addition, continued for about two hours. The following is a list of my expenditures:

Battery.	24-pounder Greshorn mortars.	8-inch sledge mortars.	10-inch sledge mortars.	30-pounder Parrotts.	4½-inch ordnance guns.	Total.
No. 4.....				85		85
No. 5.....		130		90		205
No. 8.....	137					137
No. 9.....	180					180
No. 10.....	12	100				121
No. 12.....	247	70				317
Fort Morton.....			45		6	51
Fort Avery.....					3	3
Total.....	576	315	45	134	9	1,079

On 30th ultimo all was quiet. On 31st ultimo I placed two 4½-inch ordnance guns in Fort Davis, and substituted four 30-pounder Parrotts for the four 4½-inch ordnance guns in Fort Avery. This change was made because the poor ammunition (Schenkl) now issued for the 4½-inch guns is dangerous to fire at long ranges over our troops.

On April 1 I was ordered by Major-General Hartranft to open fire on the Bermuda front, with a view to develop any movements of the enemy. None had occurred. This firing was continued at intervals, with the same object, up to the evacuation on the night of the 3d [2d] instant. The following is the record of firing:

Battery.	Light 12-pound- ers.	12-pounder how- itzers.	24-pounder how- itzers.	32-pounder how- itzers.	30-pounder Par- rotts.	4-inch Parrotts.	3-inch ordnance guns.	10-inch sea-coast mortars.	30-pounder Par- rotts.	100-pounder Par- rotts.	Total.
Sawyer.....								4		4	8
Spofford.....									10	0	22
Persons and Wilcox.....								0		10	10
Drake.....					57	40					97
Carriker.....	64	46									110
Amberson.....					131				93		224
Amshull.....	167						155				322
McConnell.....	42										42
England.....	209						141				350
Prinyo.....		1			91				38		130
Dutton.....			4	48							52
Total.....	410	46	4	48	282	40	296	10	147	20	1,803

On April 2 the assault by the Ninth Corps was made upon the enemy's line at Petersburg. The following is a list of my guns and mortars in position, all of which were actively engaged in supporting our columns or in annoying the enemy in his offensive returns. During the night the bridges across the Appomattox River were shelled:

Battery.	Commanding officers, all of First Connecticut Artillery.	24-pounder Coehorn mortars.	8-inch siege mortars.	10-inch siege mortars.	30-pounder Parrotts.	4½-inch ordnance guns.	Total.
No. 4 .....	First Lieut. J. O'Brien .....						3
No. 5 .....	First Lieut. F. D. Bangs .....				3		7
Fort McAllister .....	do. ....				3		1
No. 9 .....	Second Lieut. A. Brown .....	5			1		6
No. 10 .....	Second Lieut. J. H. Casey .....	5					5
No. 12 .....	First Lieut. R. Lewis .....	4					7
Fort Haskell .....	Second Lieut. W. H. H. Bingham .....	4	12				0
Fort Morton .....	First Lieut. H. D. Patterson .....	4		4			4
Fort Avery .....	Capt. W. C. Faxon .....				4	12	6
No. 20 .....	Second Lieut. H. W. Loomis .....						4
Fort Davis .....	Second Lieut. W. S. Malony .....						4
Total .....		10	14	4	11	4	49

The following is a list of ammunition expended during the day and night. At noon I applied for and obtained from the depot quartermaster at City Point an extra train of fifty wagons, in addition to my usual train of the same number, to supply these unusual demands. They were busy all night:

Battery.	24-pounder Coehorn mortars.	8-inch siege mortars.	10-inch siege mortars.	30-pounder Parrotts.	4½-inch ordnance guns.	Total.
No. 4 .....						235
No. 5 .....		237		235		675
No. 8 .....	208			438		208
No. 9 .....	312					312
No. 10 .....	308	210				518
No. 12 .....
Fort Haskell .....	661	225				786
Fort Morton .....			212		209	421
Fort Avery .....				640		640
No. 20 .....		282				282
Fort Davis .....					180	180
Total .....	1,369	954	212	1,313	389	4,237

In accordance with instructions from General Tidball, the following detail was made from the First Connecticut Artillery for special service with the assaulting column: First Lieut. W. H. Rogers, Second Lieuts. C. W. Smith, G. H. Couch, and G. Reynolds, with 25 enlisted men from Company E, 25 from Company I, 10 from Company K, 20 from Company L, and 20 from Company M, making a total of 4 officers and 100 enlisted men, all under command of Lieutenant Rogers. They were divided into three platoons, each commanded by a second lieutenant. Each platoon was divided into three gun detachments, consisting of 10 men and a chief of piece. All the detachments were armed with their muskets and provided with lanyards, primers, fuzes, priming wires, &c., necessary to the proper serving of captured artillery. This command joined the assaulting column near Battery No. 20, and entered, among the first, the enemy's works in front. They immediately began to serve four captured light 12-pounder guns upon the retreating masses of the enemy. Two more light 12-pounders were moved by them across the work, under a heavy fire, and within half an hour were opened also upon the enemy. These six guns were served most gallantly all day and during the night. About 400 rounds, captured with the pieces, were expended, and a like amount, in addition, which was carried by hand from our lines. The men not required to serve the pieces used their muskets effectively, expending all their own ammunition and much more taken from the prisoners and the dead and wounded. They captured about fifteen prisoners in the different assaults, and turned them over to be sent to the rear. Too much commendation cannot be given to Lieutenant Rogers and to his officers and men for their noble conduct, which contributed greatly to the repulse of the many gallant assaults made by the enemy to retake the captured works. Among the enlisted men Lieutenant Rogers especially names Corpl. W. D. Hogan, of Company K, as highly meritorious.

All the operations on the Petersburg front were conducted under the immediate command of Maj. George Ager, First Connecticut Artillery, and he well maintained his high reputation for intelligence, gallantry, and professional skill. The fire of Captain Faxon from Fort Avery, of Lieutenant Patterson from Fort Morton, and of Lieutenant Malony from Fort Davis, I noticed as being especially effective and well directed. To Capt. S. P. Hatfield, First Connecticut Artillery, my ordnance officer, great credit is due for good judgment and energy in directing his department, which the large and sudden demands from all parts of the line, and the unexpected removal of the telegraph office from the depot, rendered a matter of serious difficulty. Indeed, the conduct of the entire command was all that could be desired.

Before daylight on April 3 the enemy evacuated Petersburg. Between that date and April 9 my command was busily engaged in removing the ordnance from our own batteries, and from the enemy's lines, to my depot at Broadway Landing for shipment. The following exhibits what was accomplished:

All my guns and mortars on the Petersburg front, heretofore named, were removed, with all their ammunition and implements; also the following captured ordnance, with ammunition complete. Except the light guns removed by General Tidball, this list includes all that was left on the Ninth Corps front and in the various batteries on the Appomattox River; also the greater part of the light guns left on the Bermuda front and along the line of water batteries on the west bank of Fort Drewry. There are still in position between Howlott Battery and Fort Drewry forty-two sea-coast guns and mortars of very heavy caliber, which I shall remove as soon as possible. On April 8 I established a branch depot near Chaffin's Bluff, on James River, placing Major Brooker, First Connecticut Artillery, in command, with three companies of that regiment. He will collect the large supplies of ordnance and ordnance stores in the water batteries on the east side of James River, which are not included in the number above named:

	Petersburg lines.	Goose Neck.	Chesterfield.	Fort Clifton.	Bermuda lines.	Water batteries on west bank of James.	Chester Station.	Total.
Smooth bore:
12-pounder Coehorn (iron).....	4					2		4
24-pounder Coehorn (iron).....	18							18
8-inch siege mortars.....	7	2						9
8-inch siege howitzers.....	2							2
8-inch columbiads.....	1		1					2
6-pounder guns (iron).....				2		3		5
12-pounder guns (iron).....						1		1
12-pounder howitzer (iron).....							1	1
12-pounder howitzer (brass).....				1	1			2
12-pounder mountain howitzers.....				2				2
24-pounder howitzers (iron).....				2				2
32-pounder guns (short).....
Rifled:
3-inch rifles.....				1	2	3		6
3.67-inch Blakely gun.....				1				1
20-pounder Parrott.....		1						1
30-pounder Parrott.....				1				1
20-pounder Brooke.....		2	2					4
32-pounders, banded and rifled.....				2				2
4.64 Brooke gun.....				1				1
4.5-inch navy gun.....				1				1
Total.....	30	5	3	14	3	11	1	67

My command has lost 3 enlisted men killed and 11 wounded during the period in question. It has taken 17 prisoners of war and 44 rebel deserters. Private G. E. McDonald,* Company I, First Connecticut Artillery, took a rebel battle-flag during the recapture of Battery No. 12, on March 25, but did not report it to my headquarters until the 31st; I then reported it by telegram to Major-General Parke. It was, however, captured when my command was under your personal orders, and, I think, should be borne on your return.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. HENRY J. HUNT,

Chief of Artillery, Army of the Potomac.

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE ARTILLERY,

Broadway, Va., April 26, 1865.

GENERAL: The following is a statement of what my command has been (and now is) doing since the capture of the enemy's position:

My guns have all been removed and shipped, except fourteen field guns which it is designed to leave for the present in the Bermuda Hundred lines and the armament of Fort Brady, on James River, viz, four 100-pounder guns and three 30-pounder guns, which we are now at work upon placing on shipboard. I have sent, or am sending as fast as possible, all my train to Washington Arsenal, except the following, which, as directed by you, I propose to keep afloat, viz: thirty 30-pounder Parrotts, twenty 8-inch mortars, and thirty-seven Cohorn mortars, with 500 rounds complete; also the necessary guns, mortar wagons, &c. This will require about eight barges or schooners, if all kept afloat.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

As reported in my letter of the 21st instant I have removed sixty-seven rebel guns, carriages, ammunition, &c., complete from the lines south of James River, and have sent or am sending them to the Washington Arsenal as fast as possible.

The following is the disposition and present force of my command, which is all temporarily under command of Major-General Hartsuff, commanding Petersburg, City Point, Bermuda Hundred lines, &c., while the Siege Train is temporarily detached from the Army of Potomac, or, rather, is temporarily absent from it, for no order detaching it has been issued, nor do I suppose any such is intended: It consists of the thirteen companies constituting the Siege Train and of three additional companies belonging to the Army of the James. Its duties are the holding of the Bermuda Hundred lines, the removal of the heavy water batteries of the rebels on James River, and the patrolling of the country near the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad. It is stationed as follows, or will be in a day or two, as soon as I can break up the depot at Broadway: One battalion on north side of James River, at Chaffin's Bluff, removing rebel guns, four companies; one battalion on Bermuda line, four companies; one battalion near Howlett Battery, removing rebel guns, three companies; one battalion near Drewry's Bluff, removing rebel guns, three companies; also two companies patrolling and picketing the railroad. My headquarters will be removed to Fort Drewry, on James River, on next Friday or Saturday. It is designed to keep the guns in this work (fifteen guns, chiefly columbiads) for the present. There are about forty very heavy guns, ammunition, &c., to be removed, which will certainly take six weeks.

If you think best, I can park my train near Fort Drewry, where there are excellent docks, and thus save the cost of keeping it afloat.

I would earnestly request that you will visit me at Fort Drewry, which you can easily reach by tug from City Point, as I am very desirous that you should inspect the rebel water batteries and ordnance before it is removed or disturbed; if not, I should like an order to proceed to your headquarters in person, as there are several points upon which I would like instructions. After this week my address will be, "Fort Drewry, through General Hartsuff, Petersburg," at least until I can get my mail established through Richmond, where I shall have to draw supplies, I suppose.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. HENRY J. HUNT,

Chief of Artillery, Army of the Potomac.

---

No. 20.

Report of Lieut. William H. Rogers, commanding detachment First Connecticut Heavy Artillery.

BROADWAY LANDING, VA., April 14, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to forward the following as a statement of the part taken by a detachment of the First Connecticut

Artillery under my command, in the assault of Sunday, April 2, upon the enemy's lines in front of Petersburg:

On March 31 I was, by order of Major Ager, temporarily relieved from the command of Company K and ordered to take charge of a detachment of 100 men who would report to me at Fort Stedman; with them follow a charging column, and serve the guns taken in the attack then contemplated. The men were divided into three divisions, commanded respectively by Lieutenants Smith, Couch, and Reynolds; each division was divided into three-gun detachments of ten men, and a chief of piece each. All the detachments were provided with lanyards, primers, fuzes, and all necessary articles for the prompt and efficient serving of the guns that might be captured.

During the night of the 31st the detachments were under arms at Fort Stedman; no attack being made they were in the morning (April 1) dismissed, but reported to me again in the afternoon, when, by order of Major Ager, I moved to Fort Emery; there awaited orders from General Tidball. About 3 o'clock in the morning of April 2 received orders from him to move to Fort Rice, at which place I halted until he arrived, and gave his final instructions. I then moved to the left of Battery 20, arriving just as the column was moving out to the attack. My men at once sprung over our works, charged across the space between the lines with and entered the enemy's works at the same time as the charging column. A very few minutes elapsed after entering the works before four of the captured guns were turned upon and doing great execution among the enemy. The other two could not be served where they were taken, and they were ordered to the right of the fort; the moving of them, owing to the peculiar construction of the work and the heavy fire of the enemy, was an undertaking that tried the nerve of all engaged, but which was successfully accomplished. Within half an hour from the time of gaining possession six guns, manned by the First Connecticut, were playing their part in holding the work taken.

During the day most of the guns were served near where they were captured, but at night all but one was moved to the side of the work nearest the enemy, and so placed as to sweep its entire front, in which positions they were kept and served until the next morning, when, by order of General Tidball, the detachments were relieved and ordered to join their respective companies. During the engagement the detachments not serving on the pieces were stationed at the parapet with their small-arms, aiding materially in the defense of the work.

To the officers, Lieutenants Smith, Couch, and Reynolds, for their encouragement of the men, and by their example keeping them at the pieces under a heavy fire during several severe charges of the enemy, and for the prompt execution of all orders, great credit is due. Where all behaved so nobly it is difficult to award individual praises, but for encouraging his men, coolness under fire, prompt serving of his piece, Corporal Hogan, of Company K, is especially deserving of mention.

A list of the killed and wounded I am unable to give, as I am unacquainted with the names of those injured.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. ROGERS,

First Lieutenant, Commanding Company K.

Lieut. O. W. FILER,

Acting Adjutant First Connecticut Heavy Artillery.

[Enforcement.]

HEADQUARTERS SIEGE BATTERIES,
Before Petersburg, April 18, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to headquarters Siege Artillery, with the following additional information: In obedience to orders from General Tidball, received on the 31st of March, a detail of 4 officers and 100 enlisted men was made from the companies under my command, as follows: Lieutenant Rogers, commanding the detachment, with 10 men from Company K; Lieutenant Smith, with 25 men from Company L; Lieutenant Couch, with 20 men from Company L; Lieutenant Reynolds, with 20 men from Company M and 25 men from Company J; all of the First Connecticut Artillery. They were held in readiness to take possession of and serve any of the enemy's guns that might by any circumstances fall into our hands. On the morning of April 2 an assault was made on the enemy's line; Lieutenant Rogers' command, accompanying the assaulting column, were among the first to enter the works of the enemy. They turned the captured guns and delivered a terrible fire on their retreating columns, and during the entire day of the 2d continued the fire from six 12-pounder guns. About 400 rounds of ammunition were captured with the pieces. At about 11 a. m. I visited the captured work; found about half the detachment which was not required for the service of the guns manning the parapet and with their small-arms assisting in the repulse, capturing some fifteen prisoners during the many assaults made by the enemy to retake the work. Some 800 rounds were fired from the guns captured, and the men with small-arms supplied themselves with ammunition from prisoners captured and the dead and dying in the fort. Singular to say, the casualties of this detachment were very light, considering that they were exposed to an enfilading fire of case and canister, and, besides, were very much exposed to sharpshooters; only 1 man was killed and 6 slightly wounded.

I may be brief in speaking of the conduct of officers and men, for it is well known that all did nobly, particularly Lieutenant Rogers, to whose courage and daring in the assault, and good judgment in the disposition of his command after the capture of the work, much credit is due, and to whom the success of holding the work may be attributed.

GEORGE AGER,

Major, First Connecticut Artillery.

No. 21.

Reports of Maj. Gen. Andrew A. Humphreys, U. S. Army, commanding Second Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

GENERAL: On the night of Thursday, the 6th instant, I made a brief report* as to the result of the operations during that day, when the Second Corps, after discovering the enemy in retreat, through Amelia Sulphur Springs, in the direction of Deatonsville, and receiving orders to move in that direction, pursued the enemy rapidly, driving him by constant combat over twelve miles, through a country where forests with dense undergrowth and swamps alternated with cultivated fields, capturing and destroying over 300 wagons (ambulances included), taking 5 pieces of artillery, several flags, and about 1,000 prisoners. Night put an end to the pursuit at Sailor's Creek, where the last fight occurred and where the chief captures were made. The pursuit was renewed the next morning, 7th instant, at 5.30 a. m., and the rear of the enemy overtaken (General Barlow, Second Division, leading) at High Bridge, just as he had fired the common road bridge over the Appomattox, and as the second span of the railroad bridge was burning. A considerable force of the enemy was drawn up on the heights to oppose our passage, and their skirmishers attempted to hold the bridge, but were quickly driven from it, and the troops crossed over. High Bridge was saved with great difficulty, with the loss of four spans. The redoubt forming the bridge-head on the south side of the river was blown up, and eight pieces of artillery in it abandoned to us, together with ten pieces of artillery in the works on the north side. A strong column of the enemy moved off along the railroad in the direction of Farmville, while another moved in a northwest direction. I sent General Barlow, commanding Second Division, toward Farmville, three miles distant, and moved with Miles and De Trobriand on the road running northwest, intersecting the stage road from Farmville to Lynchburg at a point about four miles from Farmville and four miles from High Bridge. General Barlow found Farmville in the possession of a strong force of the enemy, who were burning the bridges there and covering a train of wagons moving toward Lynchburg. He attacked, and the enemy soon abandoned the town, burnt over 130 of the wagons, and joined the main body of Lee's army, who were intrenched in a strong position at the intersection of the Lynchburg and High Bridge road, where the other two divisions of the Second Corps arrived soon after General Barlow reached the vicinity of Farmville.

* See Humphreys to Webb, 7.30 p. m. April 6, Part III.

Seeing our approach the enemy opened their artillery upon us with some effect. Our skirmishers advanced at once and drove in those of the enemy and developed their position. The troops and artillery were quickly formed for attack, but the enemy's position was too strong and too well intrenched to admit of a front attack, and an effort was made to take it in flank, but their flanks were found to extend beyond ours. General Barlow was then ordered up, and learning from prisoners that Lee's whole remaining force was intrenched here, this information was sent to the commanding general of the army, with the suggestion that another corps should attack from the direction of Farmville at the same time that the Second Corps attacked. While awaiting the arrival of Barlow the enemy was observed to shorten his right flank, and some firing being heard in the direction of Farmville (which was supposed to be the Sixth Corps advancing), I contracted my left and extended my right (the length of a division front), hoping to envelope his left flank. An attack was then made from Miles' right, which was repulsed with considerable loss, the intrenchments and position being found as strong here as at any other point. Upon the arrival of General Barlow he was placed on the right of Miles, but it was dark by the time he got into position, and further attack was postponed. As was expected, in the morning the enemy was found to have abandoned the position during the night.

I regret to report that Brig. Gen. Thomas A. Smyth, commanding brigade, Second Division, a gallant and highly meritorious officer was mortally wounded at Farmville. Brigadier-General Lewis, commanding brigade, Walker's division, Gordon's corps, Confederate army, severely wounded (together with other wounded officers and men), was left in our hands by the enemy.

The pursuit was resumed at 5.30 a. m. of the 8th, on the route to Lynchburg, by the Cumberland Court-House and Appomattox Court-House road. Four pieces of artillery was abandoned by the enemy on the route and fell into our hands.

At New Store the enemy's cavalry pickets were come across. A halt of about two hours was made at sunset, and the march resumed with the object of coming up with the enemy, but finding no probability of doing so during the night, and the men being much exhausted from the want of food and from fatigue, the head of the column was halted at midnight. The rear did not get up until morning, and the supply train of two days' rations later. As soon as they could be issued the troops moved forward again at 8 a. m. and at 11 a. m. came up with the enemy's skirmishers about three miles from Appomattox Court-House, where they remained during the day under the flags of truce. Frequent halts were made to give and receive communications from and for the lieutenant-general commanding the Armies of the United States, under flags of truce.

Nothing could be finer than the spirit of the officers and men during the whole operations. The division commanders are especially entitled to my thanks—Major-General Miles, Major-General Mott, Major-General Barlow, Brigadier-General De Trobriand, as also the commander of the Artillery Brigade.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

P. S.—The total result to the Second Corps since the commencement of the campaign is 34 guns, 15 flags, about 5,000 prisoners, and the capture or destruction of over 400 wagons (including ambulances), with their contents.

A. A. H.,
Major-General.

Major-General WEBB,
Chief of Staff.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,
Virginia, April 21, 1865.

GENERAL: I have to submit, for the information of the major-general commanding the Army of the Potomac, the following report of the operations of the Second Army Corps during the campaign just closed:

In conformity to the orders and instructions from the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac of the 27th and 28th of March, the corps moved at 6 a. m. on the 29th with the artillery, ammunition, rations, and trains prescribed, crossed Hatcher's Run and took position covering the Vaughan road with its right resting within supporting distance of the Twenty-fourth Corps (which had taken the place of the Second Corps in the intrenchments extending to the Vaughan road crossing of Hatcher's Run), and its left thrown back to the vicinity of Gravelly Run, about half a mile from the Quaker road. The Second Division was on the right, the Third Division in the center, and the First Division on the left, each division having one-third of its force in reserve. At about 8.30 or 9 a. m. communication was established from the Vaughan road crossing of Gravelly Run with Major-General Warren, commanding Fifth Corps, at the intersection of the old stage and Quaker roads, about a mile distant, on the south side of Gravelly Run. A mounted reconnoitering party was sent up Gravelly Run to the Quaker road, while the line of battle was being formed, who drove the enemy's cavalry pickets and followed them up the Quaker road beyond the old saw-mill, until they met the enemy's infantry pickets intrenched. As soon as the line was formed skirmishers were thrown forward and the enemy's pickets, thinly established, driven from an intrenched line, afterward found to extend from near the Crow house, on Hatcher's Run, to the vicinity of the Quaker road. A reconnoitering party was sent along this intrenched line to the Quaker road at the saw-mill. The advance of the line of battle and skirmishers was stayed, by direction of the major-general commanding the Army of the Potomac, until further orders. At about 4 p. m. I was informed by him that the Fifth Corps was advancing up the Quaker road, and was directed to advance my line of battle and connect with it. The whole line was moved forward at once and connection formed, but repeatedly broken, owing to the dense forest and undergrowth. Upon receiving a dispatch from General Webb, dated 4.50 p. m., informing me that General Griffin had been attacked by two divisions of the enemy and directing me to support Griffin's right, if needed, I rode to that quarter, sending the necessary instructions, and at a few minutes before 6 p. m., while near General Warren's right, I received another dispatch from General Webb, dated 5.40 p. m., informing me General Warren would attack at 6 p. m., and desiring me to support his right and attack with my whole line at the same time, if I could gain anything. In accordance with this and previous orders the advance of my whole line was continued until dark, through dense forest, undergrowth, and swamp, the connection with General Griffin, who advanced along the Quaker road, being made and broken constantly. The enemy's skirmishers were driven in before us, but no main line was encountered, when darkness put a stop to our progress.

At 6 a. m. on the 30th the advance was resumed, Hays' division on the right being supported by Turner's division, of the Twenty-fourth Corps. The enemy was driven inside his intrenchments along Hatcher's Run and the White Oak road, this position being attained at about 8.30 or 9 a. m. The right of the corps (General Hays' right) rested on Hatcher's Run, near the Crow house and the enemy's redoubt in that vicinity. Turner's division, of the Twenty-fourth Corps, took post along Hatcher's Run connecting with the old intrenchments which were occupied by the Twenty-fourth Corps. The left of the corps connected with the Fifth Corps near the Boydton plank road in the vicinity of Mrs. Rainey's. The line of battle was extended in front of the enemy's intrenchments, and was pressed as closely to them as practicable without assailing. The left, on the Boydton plank road, was subsequently advanced in conjunction with the Fifth Corps so as to include the whole of the Dabney Mill road. The skirmish line was pressed close up against the enemy's works during the whole day, developing their character and condition. The enemy's artillery along our front kept up a pretty constant fire upon our skirmishers as theirs were pressed back. With great difficulty, owing to the rain of the night before and during the day, guns were brought up to our right and to our left. The orders for the day were completely carried out. Strong working parties were put upon the roads, which had become impassable for artillery and wagons. Turner's division, of the Twenty-fourth Corps, reported back to Major-General Gibbon during the afternoon, and crossed to the north bank of Hatcher's Run, its left connecting with the right of Hays.

By daylight of the 31st I had, in accordance with orders from the headquarters of the army, occupied the position of the Fifth Corps along the Boydton plank and Quaker roads, with Miles' division, and had rearranged Mott's and Hays' divisions. Owing to the condition of the roads and country no further operations were called for during the day. But between 11 and 12 a. m. Crawford's and Ayres' divisions, of the Fifth Corps (the former on the White Oak road and the latter in supporting distance), became engaged with the enemy. Being informed by a staff officer from Major-General Warren that they were being pressed back and needed support, I ordered General Miles to throw forward two of his brigades and attack the enemy, and subsequently to follow it up with his whole division, at the same time extending Mott's left to maintain the connection and give support. This order was complied with in the promptest and most spirited manner. The brigades of General Mudill and General Ramsey, supported by that of Colonel Nugent, advanced rapidly to the attack, struck the enemy in flank and drove him back into his intrenchments, with severe loss of killed and wounded and one flag and many prisoners, and occupied the White Oak road. The enemy's intrenchments here occupied a strong position on the crest of a long slope, with wide slashings in front and abatis covering the ditch, with artillery at short intervals. De Trobriand's brigade, of Mott's division, was put in position to strengthen Miles, and subsequently McAllister's brigade was extended to the left to perfect the connection. During the day General Mott made an attempt to carry the redoubts and intrenchments covering the Boydton road crossing, but without success. General Hays likewise attempted to carry the Crow-house redoubt, but was prevented by the heavy slashing, which was impassable for any large number of troops. Our line being too much extended, Miles' left was contracted, drawing in from the White Oak road. The advance line thus occupied was slightly intrenched, artillery put in position in it, &c. The remaining batteries of the corps were brought up during the day.

Our loss during the day's operations was:

	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division.....	6	40	12	233	.....	41
Second Division.....	.....	.....	.....	13	.....	1
Third Division.....	.....	6	1	58	.....	42
Artillery Brigade.....	.....	.....	.....	4	.....	.....

I regret to report the loss of that distinguished young officer, Maj. Charles J. Mills, of the adjutant-general's department, who was killed by a cannon shot while serving with me.

During the night orders were received to withdraw to the line occupied in the morning, General Warren having been directed to join Major-General Sheridan in the direction of the Five Forks. This order was carried into effect before daylight of the 1st of April.

During the day (1st of April) close examinations were made with a view to the assault of the Crow-house redoubt. The batteries of the Twenty-fourth Corps intended to cover the assault were not prepared until night. Toward dusk I was instructed to throw forward my left, Miles' division, so as to hold the White Oak road and prevent the enemy from sending re-enforcements to their troops at Five Forks, where Sheridan, with the cavalry and Fifth Corps, was attacking them. This was at once carried out, Miles' left, across that road, being supported by one of his brigades in reserve. Mott kept up connection with the rest of the line by a single rank.

An order was received during the evening to assault the Crow-house redoubt at 4 a. m. of the 2d instant, at which time an assault would be made by the Army of the James, by the Sixth, and by the Ninth Corps. I was also authorized to attack at the same time at any other point where, in my judgment, I could effect a lodgment. In the event of being successful I was to throw forward my command in the direction of the Boydton road, and endeavor to communicate with the troops on my right and look out for my left.

The examinations in the vicinity of the Crow-house redoubt having rendered it highly probable that a column of fours could be led along the edge of the bank of Halcher's Run to the redoubt, General Hays was ordered to assault the redoubt in that manner at 4 a. m., without the use of artillery. The other division commanders were directed to feel the enemy closely at the same time, and if any chance offered to assault.

At 9.15 p. m. I received a dispatch from the major-general commanding the Army of the Potomac informing me General Sheridan had routed the enemy west of Dinwiddie Court-House, had captured several batteries, over 4,000 prisoners, and several trains. To prevent re-enforcements being sent to the troops he had encountered I was directed to feel at once for a chance to get through the enemy's line, and if one was found to assault immediately and push forward. This order, with suitable instructions, was communicated to the division commanders. At 9.30 p. m. the order was modified by a communication from the lieutenant-general commanding the armies, which was sent for my guidance, by which I was advised to push every reserve from my left, and if the enemy were found breaking from my front to push directly forward; if the enemy could not be broken then Miles' division should be sent down the White Oak road to Sheridan. A subsequent dispatch fixed the hour for Miles to move to Sheridan at about midnight, provided by that time I had not broken the enemy's lines or started them. Generals Miles and Mott attacked and drove in the enemy's picket-lines, but the intrenchments, the heavy slashings in front of which I have before described, did not offer assailable points. The enemy were found to be vigilant, and opened heavily with their artillery. Such being the condition of affairs in my front, General Miles moved down the White Oak road to join General Sheridan, between midnight and 1 o'clock, in accordance with the views of the commanding general of the army and of the lieutenant-general. Communication with the cavalry along that road had been previously opened by General Miles with a detachment from my escort. As soon as Miles' division was well out of the way, leaving the advanced picket-line as it was established, I disposed the two divisions on the line held by the three days previous.

About 2 a. m. of the 2d instant I received an order suspending my attack upon the Crow-house redoubt, in consequence of the absence of one of my divisions (Miles'), and was directed to hold myself ready to take advantage of anything that might arise in the operations of the remainder of the army. General Mott and General Hays were instructed accordingly, and directed to keep up constant attacks upon the enemy's pickets, beginning at 4 a. m., and to take advantage of any chance that occurred. About 6 a. m., having been informed by General Webb that both General Wright and General Parke had carried and held portions of the enemy's lines, I directed General Hays to try and carry the Crow-house redoubt and General Mott to strain every effort in his front. About 7.30 a. m. General McAllister captured the enemy's intrenched picket-line in his front, under the fire of their artillery as well as musketry, and about 8 a. m. General Hays carried the Crow-house redoubt and the work adjoining it on the enemy's right, capturing three pieces of artillery and a large part of the garrisons. The enemy's artillery fired but once upon the assaulting party. General Hays immediately extended to his left in the enemy's works.

At 8.30 a. m. Major-General Mott reported to me that the enemy in his front were moving quickly to our left inside their intrenchments, and subsequently that they were withdrawing their artillery from the redoubts. I ordered him to press forward on the enemy and attack. At 9 a. m. I received intelligence from General Miles that he was on his return and about two miles from the position he had occupied the night before on the White Oak road. I had previously been informed from the headquarters of the army that Major-General Sheridan would move at daylight and sweep the White Oak road and all north of it down to Petersburg.

Believing that General Wright's and General Ord's troops had cut off from Petersburg all the enemy's force to our left of the point where Wright had penetrated their works, I directed Mott to pursue the enemy by the White Oak and Claiborne roads leading to Sutherland's Station, on the South Side Railroad, Hays to follow Mott, and Miles to enter their works by the White Oak road and take the Claiborne road. From Miles' position on the White Oak road he would probably lead. I expected by this movement to close in on the rear of that portion of the enemy's troops cut off from Petersburg, while Sheridan would probably strike their flank and front. Upon the arrival of the major-general commanding the Army of the Potomac upon the ground these orders were changed—Mott and Hays were ordered to move on the Baydton plank road toward Petersburg and connect on the right with Wright's corps, the Sixth; and Miles was instructed to move toward Petersburg by the first right-hand fork road after crossing Hatcher's Run and connect with the other divisions.

These orders having been given, I rode over to Miles' division, which I overtook on the Claiborne road about a mile beyond Hatcher's Run, meeting also General Sheridan in that vicinity. Upon learning from the latter that he had not intended to return General Miles' division to my command, I declined to assume further command of it, and left it to carry out General Sheridan's instructions, whatever they might be. It had just got in contact with the enemy's rear.

I rejoined, as rapidly as possible, my other two divisions, and about 2.30 p. m., while putting them in position in front of Petersburg, near Rohoick Creek, was informed by the major-general commanding the army that General Miles needed support, and was directed to take one of my divisions for that purpose, leaving the other to report to General Wright until my return. Mott's division was going into position, and was left. Taking the Second Division, I moved rapidly as possible by the Cox road toward Sutherland's Station, expecting, if the enemy were still in front of Miles, to take them in flank. Upon nearing the station, however, I found that General Miles had, at about 3 o'clock, made a third and successful assault, striking the enemy's left flank and driving him out of his breast-works, taking one flag, two guns, and 600 prisoners. Brevet Brigadier-General Macdill and Brevet Brigadier-General MacDougall, commanding Third and First Brigades,* were among the wounded, the former severely. Captain Clark's battery (B), First New Jersey, rendered great assistance in the assault by keeping up a vigorous and well-directed fire upon the enemy.

Our loss on the 1st and 2d of April was:

	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
April 1.
First Division.....	1		1	3		0
Second Division.....			1	3
Third Division.....	1	1	1	17	6
April 2.
First Division.....	3	30	15	221	3	91
Second Division.....		1	1	0		13
Third Division.....	1	7		37
Artillery.....						1

About 10 p. m. I received orders to report to Major-General Sheridan. A pontoon train was sent me at the same time.

During the morning of the 3d instant I received orders to move out the River road, following the Fifth Corps, and to leave the pontoon train at Sutherland's Station with the cavalry trains, under the guard of one of my brigades. A brigade of the Second Division was detailed for this purpose. By some singular misapprehension of orders the Second Division had moved back toward Petersburg early in the morning without my knowledge. Staff officers were sent to find and bring it up to the command. While on the River road the route was changed to the Namozine road. General Mott rejoined me at the Namozine fork. A bridge was built by the Second Corps over Namozine Creek, adjoining the bridge of the Fifth Corps, which proved of great assistance to the troops following. The corps encamped for the night near Winticomack Creek, close to the Fifth Corps, the Second Division about three miles in the rear, near Namozine Church. Toward sunset I received a communication from Major-General Webb, chief of staff, informing me that, under instructions from the lieutenant-general, Major-General Meade resumed command of the Second Corps, and directed me to report my position and condition of supplies. In reporting my place of halt for the night to Major-General Sheridan I informed him of the receipt of this communication. In reply I was informed that General Sheridan had received no instructions from the lieutenant-general in regard to my corps, but that he should consider it under Major-General Meade's orders. It was added for my information that a force of the enemy was in position that evening on the other side of Deep Creek, and a large wagon train of theirs parked there; that General Sheridan would move early the next morning, with the cavalry and Fifth Corps, upon the direct road to the Richmond and Danville road, which it intersected about midway between Amelia Court-House and Burke's Station. I at once replied that I should follow the Fifth Corps closely, and reported accordingly to Major-General Meade. An order from Lieutenant-General Grant, dated Sutherland's Station, April 3, was subsequently received during the evening, directing me to report thereafter to Major-General Meade, but to follow on the morrow the route of march designated for use by Major-General Sheridan.

* MacDougall succeeded Macdill in command of the Third Brigade after the latter was wounded.

The corps moved on the morning of the 4th at 6 a. m., keeping close on the Fifth Corps. The rains had rendered the roads almost impassable for wagons. By directions from army headquarters a brigade of the First Division was detailed to work upon the road back toward Sutherland's Station, while another of the Third Division was placed upon the road in advance. At 11 a. m., when about three or four miles from Deep Creek, Oster's and Devin's divisions of cavalry and Gregg's brigade of cavalry entered the road I was on, coming from the right, and blocked the way until 7 p. m., by which time I had only reached Deep Creek. Under orders from the major-general commanding I began to move, about 1 a. m. of the 5th, for Jetersville, on the Daville road, but about one mile and a half beyond Deep Creek found the road blocked by the same cavalry that had obstructed it during the day. It was after 8 a. m. before the road was cleared. Advantage was taken of the enforced halt to distribute rations, of which the men stood in much need. The head of the corps reached Jetersville about 2.30 or 3 p. m. The First and Second Divisions were put in position on the left of the Fifth Corps; the Third Division was massed on its right. The detached brigades reached the divisions to which they belonged during the evening.

In compliance with orders from the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, directing the Second, Fifth, and Sixth Corps to advance at 6 a. m. of the 6th on the enemy, at Amelia Court-House, and attack him if found in position—the Fifth Corps to move along the railroad, the Second Corps on its left—the Second Corps began to move at 6 a. m., the Second Division 1,000 yards from the railroad, the First Division 1,000 yards on its left, the Third Division following the First Division. A strong skirmish line, with supports, was kept in advance and on the flanks. The movement was made by compass, about east twenty-two degrees north. The broken and forest character of the ground caused a northerly deviation from that course, and brought the First Division, at about 8.30 or 9 a. m., near Flat Creek, about a half or three-quarters of a mile beyond the cross-road leading to Amelia Sulphur Springs and about three or four miles out from Jetersville. Detachments from my escort, reconnoitering on the left, under Captain Hobensack, at this moment brought me word that a column of the enemy's infantry, with a train of wagons, was visible in the open country beyond the creek, moving westerly. Riding to the open ground on Flat Creek, I saw a column of infantry about one mile and a half distant and some wagons moving in the direction stated. A portion of the column—I had no means of knowing how much—had entered the forest; about a strong brigade was visible. General Miles at once brought up some artillery, and opened upon them. I directed General Mott, who was up to the Amelia Sulphur Springs road, to send a brigade across and feel the enemy, and immediately reported what I had observed and done to the headquarters of the army. I could not tell whether it was the rear of Lee's army in retreat or merely a guard to the trains, but the attack of Mott's brigade would soon develop that. I could not abandon the advance upon Amelia Court-House without further information.

At about 9.15 a. m. I received a dispatch from General Webb, dated 9.30 a. m., directing the Second Corps to move on Deatonville, the Sixth Corps to move through Jetersville and take position on the left of the Second Corps, and the Fifth Corps to move on the right of the army. I at once directed General Mott to move his whole division past Amelia Sulphur Springs to Deatonville and Ligontown in pursuit of the enemy, his right resting on the road, General Miles to cross Flat Creek above Mott and move in pursuit in the same direction, his left resting on the road, and General Barlow, who had just reported and taken command of the Second Division, to follow the right of the First Division. The First and Third Divisions were to have two-thirds of their force in line of battle, one-third in reserve. The enemy had burnt the bridge over Flat Creek; others were built in an incredibly short space of time, the skirmishers wading across and engaging sharply those of the enemy. I soon learnt that the whole of Lee's army was near us, in retreat, and information went to show that a strong column was moving on the road from Amelia Court-House through Paineville toward Ligontown. For that reason General Barlow was moved in column in rear of Miles' right, with directions to look out for his right flank and rear (this information was, however, probably erroneous). A sharp contest with the enemy commenced at once, and he was driven rapidly before us, until night put a stop to the pursuit, at Sailor's Creek, near its mouth, a distance of about fourteen miles from Amelia Sulphur Springs, over every foot of which a running fight was kept up, and several strong partially intrenched positions carried, the enemy using his artillery effectively. The country was broken, and consisted of open fields alternating with forest with dense undergrowth, and swamps, over and through which the lines of battle followed closely on the skirmish line with a rapidity and nearness of connection that I believe to be unexampled, and which I confess astonished me. Nothing could have been finer than the spirit of the officers and men.

The last attempted stand of the enemy was at Sailor's Creek, where a short, sharp contest gave us 13 flags, 3 pieces of artillery, several hundred prisoners, over 200 wagons, with their contents, and more than 70 ambulances. Between thirty and fifty wagons, several battery forges, and limbers were left or destroyed on the road, which for many miles was strewn with tents, baggage, and camp equipage.

The whole result of the day's work to the corps was 13 flags, 4 guns, about 1,700 prisoners, and over 300 wagons, including ambulances, with their contents. The Second Division, being on the right, scarcely came in contact with the enemy.

I have no means of estimating the loss of the enemy in killed and wounded. Our own loss was:

	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division .....	1	19	0	73	0	01
Third Division .....	1	34	10	159	.....	15
Artillery .....				2

I regret to report that Major-General Mott, commanding Third Division, was severely wounded in the leg while overlooking the attack of the skirmish line in the vicinity of Amelia Sulphur Springs. The command of his division devolved upon Brigadier-General De Trobriand.

While passing Deatonville the Sixth Corps was observed at some distance on the left, and subsequently, about two miles beyond Deatonville, some of the cavalry and a brigade of the Sixth Corps were temporarily mixed with my troops. They moved southerly while I moved in a direction north of west.

The pursuit was resumed the next morning at 5.30 o'clock—General Miles following the road; General Barlow on the right, 1,000 yards distant; General De Trobriand on the left, 1,000 yards distant. Where the road forked—one branch running to High Bridge, the other to the vicinity of Rice's Station—the marks on the road indicated that the trains and main force of the enemy had moved on the latter, which I accordingly followed, but learning subsequently from the people of the country that the main body of troops had gone to High Bridge I moved across to it. This brought General Barlow to the bridge a short time in advance of the First Division. Here he overtook the rear of the enemy just as they had fired the wagon road bridge and as the second span of the railroad bridge was burning. The wagon road bridge was scoured—a matter of some importance, as the Appomattox was not fordable.

A considerable force of the enemy was drawn up in a strong position on the heights of the opposite bank to oppose our passage, a position the strength of which the redoubts on the opposite side increased. Their skirmishers attempted to hold the bridge, but were quickly driven from it, and the troops crossed over, General Barlow's division leading. Artillery was rapidly put in position to cover our attack, but the enemy moved off without waiting for it. The redoubt forming the bridge-head on the south bank was blown up as we approached and eight pieces of artillery in it abandoned to us, as were ten pieces in the works on the north side. High Bridge was saved, chiefly by the exertions of Colonel Livermore, of my staff, with the loss of four spans. A strong column of the enemy moved off along the railroad in the direction of Farmville, while another moved in a northwest direction. Believing that General Lee was moving toward Lynchburg by the old stage road, pushing through Appomattox Court-House, north of the Appomattox River, I moved, with Miles and De Trobriand, on the road running northwest and intersecting the stage road at a point about four miles from Farmville and four or five miles from High Bridge; but, lest I might be mistaken in the route Lee was following, I sent General Barlow's (Second) division to Farmville by the railroad, about three miles distant. Artillery could not accompany him.

General Barlow found Farmville in possession of a strong force of the enemy, who were burning the bridges there and covering a wagon train moving toward Lynchburg. The bridges were burned and the troops on the south side prevented from crossing, as the river was not fordable for infantry and scarcely for cavalry. General Barlow attacked, and the enemy soon abandoned the town, burned about 130 wagons, and joined the main body of Lee's army, which a short time after I found entrenched and in a strong position four or five miles north of Farmville, covering the stage and plank road to Lynchburg.

In the attack of General Barlow, Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding Third Brigade, a gallant and highly meritorious officer, was mortally wounded. His fall led to the loss of some part of the skirmish line. Upon approaching the vicinity of the Lynchburg stage road our skirmishers suddenly came in contact with those of the enemy and drove them back. The artillery of the enemy opened upon us as we approached with some effect. Our troops and artillery were quickly formed for attack, the skirmishers were advanced, and developed the position of the enemy. It was too strong naturally and too well intrenched to admit of a front attack, the ground being open and sloping up gradually to a crest, about 1,000 yards distant, which was crowned with their intrenchments and batteries. An effort was made to take it in flank, but their flanks were found to extend beyond ours. Our skirmishers were kept pressed against those of the enemy, and an attack with my whole force threatened. The prisoners we took indicating that the main part of Lee's remaining force was before me, General Barlow was ordered up, and the information sent to the commanding general of the army, with the suggestion that another corps should attack from the direction of Farmville at the same time that the Second Corps attacked. The condition of the bridges and river at Farmville was not known to me at that time.

While awaiting the arrival of General Barlow the enemy was observed to shorten his right flank, and some firing being heard in the direction of Farmville, which was supposed to be the Sixth Corps advancing, I contracted my left and extended my right the length of a division front, hoping to envelop the enemy's left flank. An attack was then made from Miles' right with three regiments of his First Brigade, but without success and with considerable loss, the position and intrenchments being found as strong here as at any other point. Upon the arrival of General Barlow he was placed on the right of Miles, but it was dark by the time he got into position, and further attack was postponed.

The firing in the direction of Farmville, which was never heavy and soon ceased, I learned subsequently was upon some of our cavalry that had crossed, with great difficulty, at Farmville by wading. The Sixth Corps was not able to cross, I heard, until some time during the night. The results to this corps during this day were 19 guns captured and 130 wagons destroyed.

Our loss was 671 officers and men killed, wounded, and missing—of which the First Division lost 424, the Second Division 131, and the Third Division, 16.

Of the enemy's loss I cannot speak with any certainty. Brigadier-General Lewis, commanding brigade, Walker's division, Gordon's corps, Confederate army, severely wounded, together with other wounded officers and men, fell into our hands.

As was expected, in the morning the enemy was found to have abandoned his position during the night.

The pursuit was resumed at 5.30 a. m. on the 8th, on the road to Lynchburg (by the Cumberland Court-House and Appomattox Court-House stage road). Four pieces of artillery were abandoned by the enemy on the route and fell into our hands. At New Store the enemy's cavalry pickets were come up with. A halt was made of about two hours at sunset, and the march resumed, with the object of coming up with the main force of the enemy; but finding no probability of doing so during the night, and the men being much exhausted from the want of food and from fatigue, the head of the column was halted at midnight. The rear did not get up until morning, and the supply train of two days' rations later. As soon as the rations could be issued the troops moved forward again (at 8 a. m.), and at 11 a. m. came up with the enemy's skirmishers about three miles from Appomattox Court-House, where they remained during the day under the flags of truce. At about 4 p. m. it was announced that the Army of Northern Virginia had capitulated.

The captures of the Second Corps during the campaign were 35 guns, 16 flags, over 4,600 prisoners, and the capture or destruction of over 400 wagons and their contents.

Nothing could be finer than the spirit of the officers and men during all the operations of this campaign.

I beg leave to ask the attention of the commanding general to the services of Brevet Major-General Miles, whose division had the good fortune to be most frequently and heavily engaged with the enemy; but it would be an injustice to the other division commanders and their troops not to acknowledge the skill and bravery and fine spirit which they, in common with the First Division and its commander, exhibited throughout all the operations. For the prompt and intelligent manner in which all orders were carried out my thanks are due to Brevet Major-General Miles, Brevet Major-General Mott, Brevet Major-General Barlow, Brigadier-General De Trobriand, and Lieutenant-Colonel Hazard, commanding the Artillery Brigade.

To my staff—and especially to Lieutenant-Colonel William, Lieutenant-Colonel Whittier, Major Livermore, Major Bingham (wounded on the 7th instant), and my aides-de-camp—I am under many obligations for the active, zealous, and intelligent assistance they gave me.

Such brilliant successes have not been gained without severe loss, though comparatively small in number. Among those who fell are Brigadier-General Smyth, in whom the service has lost a noble, gallant, and experienced soldier, and Major Mills, an accomplished, courteous, and gallant staff officer.

Among the wounded are Major-General Mott and Brigadier-General Madill, both severely, and Brigadier-General MacDongall, Colonel Starbird, Nineteenth Maine, dangerously wounded.

For further details I beg leave to ask your attention to the reports of the division and artillery commanders, which accompany this.

I append hereto a statement of the number killed, wounded, and missing during the campaign.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

Major-General WEBB,
Chief of Staff, Army of the Potomac.

[Enclosure.]

Report of casualties in the Second Army Corps from March 28 to April 10, 1865.

Date.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
HEADQUARTERS.
March 31.....	1						1		1
April 7.....			1				1		1
Total.....	1		1				2		2
ARTILLERY BRIGADE.
March 31.....				4				4	4
April 2.....				5				5	5
April 4.....					1		1		1
April 6.....				2			2		2
Total.....				11		1		12	12

Report of casualties in the Second Army Corps, &c.—Continued.

Date.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
FIRST DIVISION.
March 30.....	1	1	2	48		3	3	52	55
March 31.....	5	40	12	233		41	17	311	331
April 1.....	1		1	2		0	2	8	10
April 2.....	3	30	15	221	3	94	21	345	308
April 3.....				3		3		6	6
April 5.....		2		10		13		31	31
April 6.....	1	19	6	73	6	64	13	156	169
April 7.....	4	31	8	100	9	200	21	403	421
April 8.....		5		5				10	10
April 9.....						1		1	1
Total.....	15	128	41	767	18	331	77	1,320	1,403
SECOND DIVISION.
March 30.....				3				3	3
March 31.....			2	13		1	2	14	16
April 1.....			1	3			1	3	4
April 2.....		1	1	6		2	1	0	10
April 4.....				1				1	1
April 7.....	1	2	0	16	3	103	10	121	131
April 8.....				3		1		4	4
Total.....	1	3	10	45	3	107	14	155	169
THIRD DIVISION.
March 20.....				1				1	1
March 30.....		1		5		1		7	7
March 31.....		6	1	58	2	42	3	100	109
April 1.....	1	1	1	17		6	2	24	26
April 2.....	1	7		37			1	41	45
April 3.....		1		2		2		5	5
April 4.....				1				1	1
April 6.....	1	34	10	150		15	17	208	225
April 7.....	1	1		14			1	16	18
April 8.....				2				2	2
April 9.....						1		1	1
Total.....	4	51	18	295	2	68	24	414	438
RECAPITULATION.
Headquarters.....	1		1				2		2
Artillery Brigade.....				11		1		12	13
First Division.....	15	128	44	767	18	331	77	1,320	1,403
Second Division.....	1	3	10	45	3	107	14	155	169
Third Division.....	4	51	18	295	2	68	24	414	438
Total*.....	21	182	73	1,118	23	607	117	1,607	2,024

Respectfully submitted.

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

APPENDIX.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS OF THE SECOND ARMY CORPS:

I congratulate you on the glorious success that has attended the operations just closed.

While awaiting the expressions of approbation from the country, from the commander of the armies and of the Army of the Potomac, for the manner in which you have performed your part in the general plan, I cannot refrain from expressions of admiration at the noble spirit that has animated you throughout, at the brilliant exhibition of those soldierly qualities for which the Second Corps has been conspicuous. The rapid manner in which you pressed the pursuit, from the moment the enemy was discovered in retreat, driving him before you, by constant combat, over an unknown country, through dense undergrowth and swamp, from positions which his advanced troops had intrenched, has, I believe, been unexampled.

* But see revised table, p. 584.

Being in direct pursuit the opportunities for large captures were not yours; but spite the disadvantages you labored under, the results to the corps have been the capture of 35 guns, 15 flags, and 5,000 prisoners, and the capture or destruction of 400 wagons, with their contents, besides tents, baggage, and other material, with which the road was strewn for miles. In addition you have contributed eminently to the general success, and to captures made by other corps, by hamming in the enemy and preventing his escape, and have done your full share in the grand closing scene.

In the operations before Petersburg your success was brilliant. General Miles, with the First Division, was ordered to advance and attack the enemy, flushed with success over two divisions of another corps, which they were pressing back; this was done in the promptest and most spirited manner. The enemy was driven back rapidly into his intrenchments, with severe loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners.

In the plan of general assault upon the enemy's lines on the morning of April 2 this corps was not to attack, but nevertheless the Second Division captured one of the enemy's redoubts, with three guns, and the Third Division, under General Mott, less favorably placed, captured and held the intrenched rifle-pits of the pickets, under the fire of their main intrenchments.

During the night of the 1st instant General Miles' (First) division had been detached, under orders of Major-General Sheridan, and in the pursuit of the following day attacked the enemy, intrenched in a strong position, which was finally carried in the handsomest manner, with the capture of 2 guns, 1 flag, and 600 prisoners.

These great successes have been gained with comparatively small loss, but the rejoicing of our victory is tempered by the reflection that in that loss many noble spirits are counted.

In this brief glance of what you have done, I cannot attempt to award to each the full merit due, but must content myself with thanking the division commanders—Major-General Miles, Major-General Mott, Major-General Barlow, Brigadier-General De Trobriand, and the commander of the artillery, Lieutenant-Colonel Hazard—and, through them, the troops they command. My thanks are also due to Brigadier-General Hays, who commanded the Second Division when it carried the enemy's redoubt before Petersburg.

While enjoying the satisfaction of having done your duty to your country, it is a source of intense gratification to us all—that the greatest military feat of the country was reserved as a fitting climax to the great deeds of that army of which this corps has always formed a part—the Army of the Potomac.

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,

April 16, 1865.

Major-General WEBB, Chief of Staff:

GENERAL: I transmit herewith a copy of a communication from Brevet Major-General Barlow, commanding Second Division, Second Corps, respecting the capture of the redoubt near the Crow house, which must set at rest any claim the Twenty-fourth Corps may make to the capture of that redoubt. I ordered General Hays, then commanding Second Division, to attack and capture the redoubt, if practicable. He did capture it (receiving the fire of the artillery and masonry), and captured the artillery in the redoubt, together with some forty of the enemy. His advanced troops then pushed on to the next redoubt on the right (the enemy's right), and captured it, and while there some of the Twenty-fourth Corps entered the Crow-house redoubt, already in the possession of the Second Corps. The statement of the officer commanding the leading troops accounts for the possession of a flag by the Twenty-fourth Corps.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Major-General, Commanding.

[Inclosure.]

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SECOND CORPS,

April 15, 1865.

Major-General HUMPHREYS, Commanding Second Corps:

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of this date touching the claim of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps to the capture of a redoubt on April 2 last. From inquiries I learn as follows:

The redoubts were on the west side of the run, and the Twenty-fourth Corps was on the east side. The right of the Second Brigade of this division rested on the west bank of the run, connecting with the left of the Twenty-fourth Corps, which rested on the east bank. The attack was made by the Second and First Brigades of this division simultaneously. The Nineteenth Massachusetts Volunteers was part of the attacking force. Captain Palmer and Lieutenant and Adjutant Aytonn, of that regiment, state that their regiment was fired on by one piece of artillery (one discharge) and about thirty musket shots, and lost four men wounded. They state that Captain Palmer was the first officer in the fort, and Lieutenant Aytonn the second. They saw only men of this division and none of the Twenty-fourth Corps. The ground was such that had the Twenty-fourth Corps crossed the run and attacked during the attack of this division, they could have been seen. Various officers state that they saw nothing of the Twenty-fourth Corps at this time. I may mention the names of the following officers who were in a position to see the Twenty-fourth Corps, had they crossed and attacked at this time, and who, yet, saw nothing of them: Lieutenant-Colonel La Point, Seventh Michigan Volunteers; Captain Porter, of this staff; Captain Palmer and Lieutenant Aytonn, mentioned above. After taking the first redoubt our men pushed on to the second, and then some of the Twenty-fourth Corps seemed to have crossed and entered the first redoubt. Lieutenant-Colonel La Point states that when he and his command had entered the second redoubt he saw some of the Twenty-fourth Corps crossing the run and approaching the first redoubt. He supposed them to be the enemy, and faced about his men to meet them before he discovered his mistake.

It appears to be clear that our men drove the enemy from the first redoubt, captured it, and pushed on to the second; and after they had reached the second redoubt some of the men of the Twenty-fourth Corps entered the first redoubt. First Lieutenant Young, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, states that he was the first officer in the redoubt. As his company advanced they were fired upon by musketry and one discharge of artillery. He saw the enemy's pickets run in, and the enemy in the redoubts waived white handkerchiefs and paper in token of surrender before his company reached the redoubt. On reaching the redoubt he found about forty rebels, whom he sent to the rear. They told him that if he pushed on he could capture more prisoners in the second redoubt. He pushed on with his men. He saw none of the Twenty-fourth Corps across the stream (on the west side) at the time the attack was made. Had they crossed and attacked he could have plainly seen them. After the second redoubt was taken he saw some of the Twenty-fourth Corps cross the stream and enter the works on the right of the second redoubt. After both redoubts were taken Lieutenant Young saw a mounted officer of the Twenty-fourth Corps near the redoubt with a rebel flag. There was no flag visible in either redoubt when Lieutenant Young entered them, but as he approached the first redoubt a color was visible on the parapet. Captain Heggart, Sixty-ninth New York National Guard Artillery (Second Brigade, Second Division), states that when he entered the first redoubt one of his men picked up a bag, which he (Heggart) ordered him to throw down, as he wanted the men to push on. Captain Heggart states that the man threw down the bag, and that the flag was found in it by the officer of the Twenty-fourth Corps above mentioned.

It is proper to state that there is a dispute between the First and Second Brigades of this division as to which entered the redoubt first, but this is not material to the present inquiry, and I do not attempt to decide that question. Captain Summerhayes, of this staff, states that he advanced in rear of the skirmish line of the Second Brigade of this division; when he got to the first redoubt our men were in it, but none of the Twenty-fourth Corps. Our men were fired on with musketry and one discharge of artillery as they advanced. Captain Summerhayes pushed on to the second redoubt, and when he returned to the first, some time afterward, he, for the first time, saw some men of the Twenty-fourth Corps.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS C. BARLOW,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

---

No. 22.

Report of Surg. Charles Page, U. S. Army, Medical Director.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,

MEDICAL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE,

April 18, 1865

SIR: I have to submit the following report of the operations of the medical department during the campaign beginning on the 29th of March and ending April 10, 1865:

Before the campaign opened circulars from your office warned the surgeons-in-chief of brigades to lay in a full supply of the articles most needed on an active campaign, and, without exception, all the wagons were well and judiciously filled. The hospitals were emptied of their sick, and commenced the campaign untrammelled. On the 29th of March the corps broke camp from its intrenched position and moved to the left of the Vaughan road across Fletcher's Run, taking up a new line, being merely a prolongation of the old one, and the left extending to the Quaker road near its junction with the Boydton plank road. No casualties from battle occurred on the day of the movement. The hospitals were moved to the left bank of Fletcher's Run, at the crossing of the Vaughan road, also the ambulance trains, except six ambulances to each division, which were to accompany the troops as closely as the nature of the woods and country would permit. On the 30th, the army being advanced, the hospital and ambulance trains were brought over the stream, and the Second and Third Division hospitals established at a point on the Vaughan road known as the "Chimneys." The site chosen for the First Division hospital was at a house about two miles from the junction of the Boydton plank road and the Quaker road, nearly in rear of the First Division, but owing to bad roads was not established until the morning of the 31st. No casualties occurred on this day. The morning of the 31st of March found the position of the troops somewhat changed. The First Division had extended to the left, and the Third Division occupied the lines held the day before by the First Division. It was necessary to move the Third Division hospital to the immediate vicinity of the hospital of the First Division. The latter was not disturbed, as it was yet quite convenient to the line of battle. The Third Division hospital was late in getting its position, owing to bad roads. The wounded during the day numbered, from the First Division, 204; Second Division, 17; Third Division, 74; Artillery Brigade, 2; total, 388. All were in hospital and attended to during the night.

April 1, the troops of this corps were not engaged in any action, except slight skirmishing of pickets. No wounded were brought to the rear. The wounded in hospital were sent off to Humphreys' Station to be transferred to the Depot Field Hospital, City Point.

On the 2d of April, the corps being expected to advance, the hospitals were made ready to move at daylight. The First Division hospital moved to the Moody house, near Five Forks, and received 212 wounded. The Second Division hospital moved by the Squirrel Level road to the Boydton plank road, and across the country to the Cox road, and camped in the neighborhood of its division, receiving during the day 3 wounded. The Third Division hospital moved up the Boydton plank road toward Petersburg, and camped with its division, it receiving during the day 57 wounded. The Artillery Brigade hospital accompanied the Third Division hospital, but had no wounded to care for. The total of wounded during the day was 272. April 3, the wounded were all sent to Petersburg for transportation to City Point, and the hospitals again empty of wounded. Followed the corps on its march after the enemy. The march continued on the Namozine road to Jetersville, without any occurrence of importance, until the morning of the 6th of April, when the corps struck the rear of the enemy near the Amelia Springs. A running fight occurred during the day, resulting in 41 wounded from the First Division, none from the Second Division, and 150 from the Third Division; total, 191. A hospital for the First Division was temporarily established at Amelia Springs, and moved forward late in the afternoon and camped near the corps. The Third Division hospital was established at the Vaughan house two miles west of Amelia Springs. The corps moved during the day over ten miles, the advanced skirmish line fighting the enemy's rear guard at every hill on the road for over eight miles. The wounded from the First Division had necessarily to be conveyed far to the rear before it could be arranged to move the hospital nearer the advancing lines. The Third Division hospital soon became so full as to make it impossible to transport them in a flying hospital, and arrangements were made to keep their wounded at the Vaughan house until they could be sent to some depot for the army.

On the 7th of April the corps moved across the Appomattox at High Bridge, where there was a slight skirmish, to the heights northeast of Farmville, where they found the enemy intrenched. The wounded of the First Division in yesterday's engagement, together with a few wounded at High Bridge, were sent by Rice's Station to Burkeville. After crossing the Appomattox, and late in the afternoon, the hospitals of all the divisions were established at the Brooks house, and received during the day and night—First Division, 147; Second Division, 24; Third Division, 41; total, 212.

April 8, the enemy had abandoned their intrenched position, and the corps advanced on their line of retreat without coming up to them until midnight. The wounded of the previous day were sent to Burkeville in the morning, and the hospitals ordered forward to join the corps. The supply train of the corps arrived in the night and the empty wagons were sent to take up the wounded at the Vaughan house and convey them to Burkeville. I have since learned that they had been removed by ambulances of the Ninth Corps before the wagons reached there.

On the 9th the corps advanced a few miles, and was halted before reaching the enemy's lines to await the result of the negotiations which resulted in the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia to the armies commanded by Lieutenant-General Grant, U. S. Army.

The campaign was short but active, and pregnant with grand results in a military and political point of view, which is not my province to discuss. The rapidity of our movement and extent of country traveled over rendered it necessary to dispose of the wounded from the field hospital as speedily as possible, and the distance of the army depot made it difficult to dispose of them and at the same [time] retain a sufficient number of ambulances for the prospective wounded.

All the wounded sent to the rear in this campaign were accompanied with the necessary surgical attendance and supplies, and I believe that no suffering was experienced that could possibly have been avoided. I have to add that all connected with the hospital department of this corps bore the fatigues of the march cheerfully and worked assiduously for the care and comfort of the wounded.

Accompanying this is the report of the chief ambulance officer.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. PAGE,

Surgeon, U. S. Army, Medical Director, Second Army Corps.

Surg. T. A. McPARLIN,

Medical Director, Army of the Potomac.

No. 23.

Reports of Asst. Surg. Charles Smart, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, of operations March 1-April 30.

HDQRS. SECOND ARMY CORPS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
March 31, 1865.

COLONEL:

The battle and movement that took place toward the termination of this month prevented me from holding the customary inspection of regimental camps and from rendering my report according to the prescribed form.

During the greater part of the month of March the corps lay in camp in rear of the line of works stretching from Fort Cummings to Hatcher's Run at the Vaughan crossing. As the nature of this ground and formation of camps are specified particularly in my report for last month, I will here indicate only the measures taken in order to effect improvements in the condition of those commands mentioned as having been unhealthily situated.

The camping ground of the Second Brigade, Second Division, the swamp bordering the run at the Vaughan road, was considerably altered for the better, although the difficulties in the way of draining were very great, on account of the basin-like formation of the surface. Free trenching and active police, however, did very much.

In the case of the camp occupied by the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery it was found impossible to effect any satisfactory alteration, and hence a removal from the location became necessary. Permission to this end was readily obtained from the major-general commanding, and the camp was removed some distance to the rear of its original position. In settling anew this regiment built log huts of the usual style, but the other regiments in the brigade continued to occupy the company barracks or shelter-tent covered stockades referred to in my last report.

The number of sick treated by the officers of the corps is expressed below:

Command.	Average strength present during March, 1865.	Average number on sick report daily dur- ing month.			Daily ratio of sick per 1,000 men of average strength present.
		In hospi- tal.	In quar- ters.	Total.
FIRST DIVISION.
First Brigade.
20th Michigan .....	180	2	5	7	39
61st New York .....	450	4	7	11	24
2d New York Artillery .....	620	8	13	21	34
183d Pennsylvania .....	332	5	3	8	24
81st Pennsylvania .....	241	1	12	13	53
140th Pennsylvania .....	250	4	3	7	28
5th New Hampshire .....	408	1	6	7	15
Second Brigade.
28th Massachusetts .....	200	4	3	7	35
43d New York .....	150	8	3	11	69
69th New York .....	417	4	4	8	18
88th New York .....	140	5	2	7	50

Command.	Average strength present during March, 1865.	In hospital.	In quarters.	Total.	Daily ratio of sick per 1,000 men of average strength present.
Third Brigade.
126th New York .....	65	1	4	5	63
111th New York .....	609	8	10	18	36
7th New York .....	600	10	16	26	52
52d New York .....	280	4	7	11	65
125th New York .....	234	4	6	10	43
30th New York .....	267		3	3	15
Fourth Brigade.
116th Pennsylvania .....	298	4	13	17	57
69d Pennsylvania .....	370	6	13	22	68
60th New York .....	66	1	2	3	31
4th New York Artillery .....	840	4	7	11	13
145th Pennsylvania .....	197	1	8	9	46
148th Pennsylvania .....	340	2	5	7	21
61th New York .....	317	8	11	19	60
Total First Division .....	7,765	100	160	260	94.58
SECOND DIVISION.
First Brigade.
66th New York .....	240	2	9	5	21
182d New York .....	205	1	5	6	28
19th Maine .....	368	3	10	13	35
184th Pennsylvania .....	305	7	8	15	38
30th Wisconsin .....	338	6	8	13	36
1st Minnesota .....	74	1	1	2	27
20th Massachusetts .....	162	2	1	3	23
16th Massachusetts .....	235	4	7	11	43
7th Michigan .....	116	1	2	3	20
Second Brigade.
176th New York .....	123	2	1	3	24
155th New York .....	180	1	1	2	16
8th New York Artillery .....	635	7	5	12	18
66th New York National Guard .....	132	4	2	6	45
104th New York .....	180	3	1	4	22
Third Brigade.
1st Delaware .....	520	2	10	12	9
106th Pennsylvania .....	34	0.0	1.3	2.2	61
69th Pennsylvania .....	234	4	4	8	31
12th New Jersey .....	620	6	8	14	42
14th Connecticut .....	267	6	5	11	52
7th Virginia .....	209	3	3	6	28
4th Ohio .....	207	2	2	4	19
10th New York .....	233	7	2	9	39
108th New York .....	185		4	4	22
Total Second Division .....	6,701	77	96	172	30.20
THIRD DIVISION.
First Brigade.
40th New York .....	520	16	20	36	69
1st Maine Artillery .....	434	17	7	23	53
26th Indiana .....	520	14	7	20	38
10th Pennsylvania .....	280	3	5	8	29
17th Maine .....	474	7	8	15	32
7th New York .....	280	5	5	10	36
96th Pennsylvania .....	451	2	0	2	18
124th New York .....	439	6	4	12	27
86th New York .....	365	3	7	10	30

Command.	Average strength present during March, 1865.	Average number on sick report daily during month.			Daily ratio of sick per 1,000 men of average strength present.
		In hospital.	In quarters.	Total.
Second Brigade.
1st Massachusetts.....	488	10	5	15	35
103th Pennsylvania.....	431	1	5	6	14
141st Pennsylvania.....	226	2	5	7	12
93d New York.....	331	9	3	12	36
67th Pennsylvania.....	602	4	4	8	16
5th Michigan.....	424	7	8	15	36
Third Brigade.
120th New York.....	363	4	0	15	36
11th New Jersey.....	421	5	0	14	33
7th New Jersey.....	695	7	10	17	24
11th Massachusetts.....	345	3	3	6	17
8th New Jersey.....	600	10	0	10	27
Total Third Division.....	8,470	174	137	311	31.05
Artillery Brigade.....	1,049	2	18	20	10.20
Total in corps.....	24,834	315	410	725	30.72

The field division hospitals were situated during the month at Patrick's Station. The following give their constitution immediately before the commencement of the campaign:

Hospital.	Site.	Water.	Drainage.	Stables.	Medical officers.	Chaplains.	Other commissioned officers.	Hospital stewards.	Enlisted men.	Teams.
First Division.....	Good.	Good.	Good.	Good.	5	1	1	2	50	24
Second Division.....	Good.	Good.	Good.	Good.	2	1	1	1	45	17
Third Division.....	Fair.	Good.	Fair.	Good.	1	2	1	3	38	10
Artillery Brigade.....	Good.	Good.	Good.	Good.	1			1	11	5
Total.....					10	4	3	7	160	65

Hospital.	How warmed.	Ventilation.	Huts.	Cleanliness, &c.	Cooking.	Supplies.	Completeneess.	Neatness.	Medical wagons.	Army wagons.
First Division.....	Woolen chimneys.	Good.	9	Good.	Good.	Fair.	Complete.	Fair.	1	0
Second Division.....	do.	Good.	6	Good.	Good.	Fair.	Complete.	Fair.	1	3
Third Division.....	do.	Good.	5	Good.	Good.	Fair.	Complete.	Fair.	1	4
Artillery Brigade.....	do.	Good.	4	Good.	Good.	Fair.	Complete.	Fair.	1	2
Total.....			24						5	20

The following is report of sick and wounded treated in the field hospitals during the month:

Hospital.	Remaining in hospital February 28, 1865.			Admitted since February 28, 1865.										Aggregate to be accounted for.
				Officers.		Enlisted men.		Other corps.		Killed & wounded.	Total.
	Sick.	Wounded.	Total.	Sick.	Wounded.	Sick.	Wounded.	Sick.	Wounded.		Sick.	Wounded.
First Division .....	138	24	157	11	22	460	503	.....	4	7	471	595	1,222
Second Division .....	77	32	112	3	5	188	45	.....	103	2	191	153	456
Third Division .....	130	24	151	10	12	501	157	.....	1	14	571	184	906
Artillery Brigade .....	15	3	18	.....	.....	19	2	.....	.....	.....	10	5	89
Total .....	358	80	428	24	37	1,228	706	.....	108	23	1,252	934	2,024

Hospital.	Sent to general hospital, City Point.		Returned to duty.		Died.			Remaining in hospital March 31, 1865.			Aggregate to be accounted for.
	Sick.	Wounded.	Sick.	Wounded.	Officers.	Men.	Total.	Sick.	Wounded.	Total.
First Division .....	388	314	138	.....	2	21	23	74	286	900	1,223
Second Division .....	148	65	80	.....	.....	6	6	20	152	118	456
Third Division .....	445	150	118	6	.....	12	14	101	30	131	906
Artillery Brigade .....	22	3	11	.....	.....	1	1	.....	.....	.....	89
Total .....	1,003	532	380	6	4	40	44	295	410	644	2,024

Early in the month, in expectation of the commencement of the spring campaign, the medical wagons belonging to the hospitals, those of brigades, and the boxes of the ambulances were well stocked with field supplies drawn from the purveyor at City Point. The surgeons-in-chief of the Second and Third Divisions, in view of the recurrence of such actions as Reams' Station and Boydton road, where, while the engagement was in progress, all the medicine wagons were by order lying in park many miles in rear, had recourse to a plan by which they would be enabled to render themselves for a short time independent of the contents of their Antenneth and Perot wagons. They caused the boxes of two of their ambulances to be filled not with the beef stock, hard bread, &c., directed by the supply table, but with battle supplies, chloroform, morphine, lint, plaster, rollers, and whisky. The ambulances so loaded were marked, and the ambulance officer directed that whenever a movement was ordered in which a portion only of the hospital train was permitted to participate these ambulances should be of the accompanying portion.

About this time, also, a diminution in the amount of transportation allowed the department was ordered to the extent of depriving the corps of seven wagons—reducing the number from forty-four to thirty-seven. Of these thirty only were available for carrying hospital and brigade medical supplies, seven being forage wagons, the property of the ambulance train. In order the better to accommodate the amount to be carried to the diminished means of transportation everything of questionable utility during a campaign was turned in to the purveyor.

As a further preparation for anticipated active operations an application was made by the acting medical director to have the drummers and musicians of the command report at the commencement of the campaign to the surgeon in charge of the field hospital. It was acceded to. The surgeon in charge was directed to place them under command of the commissioned combatant officer attached to his hospital, who, with the assistance of two or three non-commissioned officers, was expected to keep up an efficient discipline among them, and when work of any description was to be performed by them to superintend its performance. During the campaign of 1864 although it was expected that during an engagement drummer boys and musicians would report to the hospital for duty, only a few of them did so, the majority straggling over the country and doing as they pleased, there being none to exercise any authority over them, to take notice of their absence and punish them for it; and the services of those that did report were of no value, since no one was specially intrusted with their direction. In fact they were looked upon rather as an incumbrance than as affording any assistance. Those belonging to the First Division, however, were in a measure organized and disciplined, and were found to be useful in proportion as they were so, doing guard duty, and in times of need rendering very effective service as stretcher-carriers. This led to the application for the order at this time.

On the 14th instant a telegram from headquarters, Army of the Potomac, medical director's office, directed the immediate removal to the depot, at City Point, of all those unable to accompany the command on a march, and that in future the hospitals should be kept in as mobile a condition as possible. In accordance with these orders, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th instants, there were sent to the rear 779 sick and 71 wounded; of the sick a large proportion were trivial cases that within a few days were returned from the depot to their regiments for duty.

Very early on the morning of the 25th instant the enemy assaulted, captured, and were driven out of Fort Stedman, on the right of the Petersburg front. At 7 a. m. the Second Corps was placed under arms and ordered to expect marching orders at any moment. The idea that prevailed was that the corps would be called upon to move off to the right to aid in repairing the mischief effected by the enemy there, for though the news of the surprise was known to us that of the subsequent success of the Ninth Corps had not reached us. At 8 a. m. the corps was moved out of the fortifications and advanced in line of battle westward for fully a mile, until the works of the enemy were discovered; a brigade of the Third Division was sent forward to charge the first line of picket pits. This they did, losing but very few men in the assault. The wounded were speedily conveyed to Patrick's Station, where a couple of tents were pitched to accommodate them. Nothing of any moment occurred after this until about midday; an active picket shooting, it is true, was kept up, but the casualties were very few. At noon a second attack was made by the Third Division upon another line of rifle-pits; it was equally a success. After this the picket shooting became particularly sharp and continued so during the afternoon until 4.15, when the enemy, having massed Mahone's division in Miles' (First Division) front, assaulted his line with great vigor, but unsuccessfully. The fighting was very sharp and confined at first for the most part to that portion of the line held by the Irish Brigade (Second), but it gradually extended toward the left, implicating the whole of the Third Division and one or two regiments on the right of the Second.

General Griffin's division (First), of Fifth Corps, formed our support. The musketry continued with all its original activity for two hours, and it was past 8 p. m. before the enemy ceased to renew his attempts to break the line. During the course of the afternoon the Sixth Corps, on our right, assaulted the enemy's intrenched picket-line.

As usual during an engagement the medical officers unattached to the division field hospitals reported at the point where the stretcher-bearers of each brigade transferred the wounded to the ambulance wagons, giving such attention to the patients as was imperative before sending them to the rear. The ambulance corps worked zealously, and very shortly after the termination of the engagement had all the wounded lodged at Patrick's Station. The hospitals had been re-established as soon as the musketry had indicated a line of battle fire; all the tents had been pitched and the operating staffs of the different tables had reported for duty. The surgeons in charge were instructed that their patients were required to be in condition to be moved to City Point by 10 a. m. of the morrow, and that immediately on their departure the establishments were again to be held in readiness for a sudden movement.

The casualties were as follows:

Hospital.	Killed, according to regimental medi- cal officers' report.	Wounded, received into field hospital.
First Division .....	35	280
Second Division .....	4	20
Third Division .....	21	120
Artillery Brigade .....	1
Total .....	61	444

No casualties occurred in the medical or ambulance departments. Cars reported at Patrick's Station at noon of the following day, and by 1 p. m. the wounded were all on their way to the depot at the point. All had been attended to, every operation deemed necessary performed, and every wound dressed before the departure of the train.

On the 26th the troops retired from the line of captured rifle-pits to within the fortifications, where they lay quietly until the morning of the 29th instant. On the 28th the command was again placed under marching orders; the sick and wounded, 142 in number, that had accumulated in the hospitals were sent to the point, and the establishment at Patrick's Station broken up and held in readiness to move after the troops.

Special requisitions filled by the medical purveyor had supplied the deficiencies caused by the fight on the 25th.

At 6 a. m. of the 29th the campaign was commenced, the Second Division moved across Hatcher's Run, on the Vaughan road, and was followed by the Third and First. The forenoon was spent in perfecting the line of battle, making connection with the Fifth Corps on the left and on the right with the Twenty-fourth. The line extended east and west from the Quaker road to Hatcher's Run, north of the Vaughan crossing; the First Division being on the left and the Second on the right. In the afternoon, while the Fifth Corps engaged the enemy, our line was pushed forward for some distance without the development of any opposition.

On the following morning, notwithstanding the heavy rain-storm that continued without intermission during the whole of the day, the advance in line of battle was continued, through dense undergrowth and swamps, until the position was reached and intrenched, stretching from the Twenty-fourth Corps, on Hatcher's Run, westward by J. Crow's house, north of the Dabney Mill road, crossing that road about a quarter of a mile from its termination in the Boydton plank, and connecting with the right of the Fifth Corps at Mrs. Rabney's in the angle formed by the junction of the Quaker or military and the Boydton roads. Mrs. Rabney's house was that used as a field hospital during the corps' engagement with the enemy on the 27th of October of last year.

In the order of march published for the morning of the 29th, it was directed that a medicine and an army wagon to each brigade and one-half of the ambulances would be permitted to accompany the troops, and that each train should follow in rear of its division; but as the road was narrow, and a rapid movement into line of battle expected of the troops, which trains would possibly interfere with, the order was modified in so far as to direct the trains of the corps to remain on the left bank until all the troops and artillery had passed across. After the troops had assumed line of battle half a dozen ambulances were forwarded to the immediate rear of each division, while the hospital organization remained at the Cummings house, it being intended to form a hospital there should a fight take place on the line first assumed; but on the morning of the 30th the advance of the troops rendered a corresponding advance necessary on the part of the trains. They were accordingly moved over to the west side of the run, and parked to await events—the Second and Third Divisions at the "Chimneys" (the remains of a house), in an open space, where the road leading to Dabney's Mill leaves the Vaughan road; and the First at a wooden building on the main road, between the "Chimneys" and the crossing over Gravelly Run.

Late on the evening of the 29th twenty of our ambulances were sent to the Fifth Corps field hospital to aid in conveying the wounded of that command to Humphreys' Station.

On the succeeding day a number (about 100) of cavalrymen from Sheridan's command were admitted into the Second Division hospital, dressed, and then conveyed across the run for railroad transportation to the Point. Very early on the morning of the 31st, as the enemy were discovered in heavy force in front of the Fifth Corps, the First Division of this command was moved to the left to their support, the Third and Second Divisions extending to the left, to occupy the vacated part of the line. The hospital of the First Division was directed to move forward from the Vaughan road to a clearance about half a mile distant from the Dabney Mill road, on the north, and the Quaker road, on the west. The communications between this clearance and the roads and between them and the front were very free. Immediately after the hospital train had reached this point, at noon, the division became heavily engaged, and at 2 p. m. the Third Division participated lightly. The wounded were brought off the field with great promptness. The hospital train of the Third Division, at midday, was ordered to move to some spot near the position occupied by the First, but it was close upon midnight before it succeeded in reaching this point. The Vaughan and wood roads were in miserable condition, on account of the heavy rains of the previous day, and, in addition to this, they were blocked up by ammunition and other heavy wagons that had found them impassable until roughly corduroyed. The wounded of the Third Division, however, did not suffer in any degree from the want of the wagons. They were treated at the First Division hospital by the medical officers of their own division until the arrival of the train permitted them to form an establishment of their own.

The Second Division hospital remained at the Chimneys, as this position was still in rear, and near enough to the part of the line held by the troops in the command.

The casualties in this fight were recorded as follows:

Hospital.	Killed, according to regimental medical officers' report.	Wounded received into field hospital.
First Division .....	43	201
Second Division .....		18
Third Division .....	3	74
Artillery Brigade .....		2
Total .....	47	388

No casualties occurred in the medical or ambulance departments. In the afternoon arrangements were made for the transportation of the wounded to City Point. The medical officers were instructed to have all operations performed and every case attended to and ready for transmission to the rear by the following daybreak. The reserve train of ambulances, that which general orders on starting from the fortifications had prohibited us from taking with us, were sent for, in order to carry the wounded to Humphreys' Station, where cars were expected to be ready for them at 9 a. m.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES SMART,

Asst. Surg., U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, Second Army Corps.

SurG. THOMAS A. MCPARTLEN,

Medical Director, Army of the Potomac.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,

April 30, 1865.

DOCTOR: At the commencement of this month the corps formed a line of battle stretching from Hatcher's Run, on the right, westward past the Crow house, the Dabney Mill road, and the Rainey house, at the junction of the Quaker and Boydton roads, toward the White Oak road, where it connected with the Fifth Corps. The Second Division was on the right, the Third held the center, and the First the left. The hospitals were situated—the Second on the Vaughan road, near Hatcher's Run, and the Third and First at a point some distance in rear of the angle formed by the Dabney Mill and Quaker roads. The wounded from the engagement of the 31st of March, as mentioned in the report for that month, were being operated on with all diligence, in order to have them in proper condition by daybreak of the 1st instant for transmission to Warren's Station, where a train of cars was to be awaiting them at 9 a. m. In order to transport them to the station the reserve half of the ambulances had been ordered up from the Cummings house, where they had been in park since the beginning of the campaign.

It was not, however, until about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 1st that they succeeded in reaching the field hospitals. They experienced much delay on account of the bottomless condition of the roads. By the time they arrived the wounded had all been properly cared for. They were immediately loaded up and dispatched for railroad transportation to the Point. In the meantime some changes were taking place in the position of the troops. The Fifth Corps moved off to the left toward the Five Forks, while this command extended toward the left to man the part of the line left unguarded by them. No fighting took place during the day, but toward evening and during the succeeding night the heavy cannonading and occasional musketry near Petersburg and at the Five Forks at times spread so as to engage the right and left of the corps line in the contest. At 8 a. m. of the 2d instant an advance of part of the Third Division line was ordered, with the effect of driving the enemy from his advanced works, in the neighborhood of Burgess' Mills, and, as was subsequently found, of causing an evacuation of the main line. No sooner was this discovered than the corps was started in hot pursuit. The First Division, on the left, moved toward the Cox road, skirmishing very heavily with the enemy, so closely did it follow in their rear. The Third Division advanced along the Boydton road toward Petersburg, near which it formed a line, connecting the left of the Sixth Corps with the Appomattox River. The hospital of this division followed in rear of the troops, and was established at a suitable point on the road in rear of the battle line. The Second Division, accompanied by its field hospital, moved from the position in front of Dahney's Mill to the Boydton road, and thence along the Cox road to Wells' Church, where they settled for the night near the bivouac of the First Division, which had here rested from the pursuit. The ambulances and hospital train of the First Division had followed the troops, carrying the wounded along as they picked them up until the train being loaded they were compelled to halt at a house, Moody's, where a field hospital was formed. During the afternoon and evening the wounded from the division were carried to this place and underwent the necessary treatment. Two hundred and sixteen were received into this hospital, 8 into the Second, and 59 into the Third Division hospital; total received from the fight on April 2, 283. Early on the morning of the 3d, part of the reserve ambulances having returned from Warren's Station, a train was formed to carry these cases to Petersburg for railroad transportation to the depot at the Point. About the same time the Third Division joined the main body of the corps at Wells' Church, having vacated the position in front of Petersburg assumed during the p. m. of the previous day, and the whole command, in the order Third, First, and Second Divisions, followed by the hospital wagons, and a few ambulances that were not required to carry wounded to the city, moved westward along the Nanozine road. The corps camped for the night near Nanozine Church.

On the following morning the march was resumed, but before proceeding far two cavalry divisions, with their trains, blocked up the road in front, and impeded our progress. The corps camped on Deep Run. At midnight the troops were again on the move, and again cavalry and trains interfered with the advance. By 8 a. m. the road was clear and the corps pushed on toward Jetersville, which was reached early in the afternoon. A position was assumed on the left of the Fifth Corps, temporary works were thrown up and the men bivouacked.

Next morning (6th instant) the works were abandoned and an advance toward Amelia Court-House was commenced, in progress of which, near the Sulphur Springs, the rear of the enemy's column was found. This changed the direction and manner of the march; line of battle was formed, and the enemy pursued through Deatonsville toward High Bridge, on the Appomattox. The rear of the enemy was engaged unrelentingly until 8 p. m., when the corps bivouacked on Sailor's Run, where a large portion of the rebel wagon and ambulance trains had been captured. The hospital of the First Division was established early in the day at Amelia Springs, those of the Second and Third Divisions at a house (Vaughan) about a mile from this. There were collected into the First Division sixty cases, into the Third Division hospital, 170; total, 230; but 25 of these were rebels and a dozen Union cavalrymen. The Second Division had none wounded.

In the evening all the ambulances that could be spared from the advance reported to the surgeons in charge of hospitals, in order to carry as many as possible of the cases to Burke's Station (Burkeville, Nottoway County), where a depot army hospital had been formed, but they were insufficient to carry all away. Medical department supplies were left with the cases that had to be left for the present at these field hospitals and suitable attendance and surgical skill provided them. No systematic assignment of commissary supplies was made to the surgeon detailed in charge, as most of his patients had more or less in their haversacks, and as both at the Springs and the Vaughan house there was a supply of corn meal, and fresh beef could be had for the shooting.

At High Bridge, on the following morning, the rear of the enemy was again struck, and skirmishing recommenced. Fighting continued with more or less activity until about 9 p. m., when the corps bivouacked near Farmville, on the right of the army—the Second Division on the right of the corps front, the First in the center, and the Third connecting with the right of the Sixth Corps. During the early part of this day's running fight no hospitals were established, but the wounded were carried along after the advance until, when near Farmville, the enemy made a determined stand; then field hospitals were formed about one mile and a half in rear of the battle line, at the Brooks house. The cases received here numbered as follows: First Division, 150; Second Division, 24; Third Division, 35; total, 209. These were operated on during the night, and in the morning dispatched to the depot at Burkeville in a train, consisting of some Ninth Corps ambulances that had reported to aid the medical department of this corps, some captured rebel ambulances, and a few of those belonging to this command that could be spared from the front in view of the speedy return of those sent from Amelia Springs to the Junction on the previous day. In the meantime, the enemy having evacuated their Farmville defenses, the troops were advancing in pursuit through Buckingham County, but they did not overtake the enemy so as to engage him. At midnight they bivouacked about a mile west of New Store. After settling in camp for the night commissary stores were issued, and in the morning the empty wagons were started for the Vaughan house, to carry to Burke's Station the sick and wounded left there on the afternoon of the 6th by the Third Division, but, as was afterward ascertained, these wagons were not required. Some ambulances belonging to the Ninth Army Corps had already picked them up and transported them to the depot.

On the 9th, although within striking distance of the enemy, no fighting took place, on account of the negotiations then in progress between the commanders of the two armies, which terminated, on the afternoon of that day, in the surrender of Lee's forces. The campaign was over.

No casualties are reported in the medical department of the corps. In the ambulance corps one sergeant belonging to the First Division train was slightly wounded. The casualties during the month, according to reports rendered by regimental surgeons, were:

Hospital,	Killed, according to regimental medical officers report.	Wounded received into field hospital.
First Division.....	86	481
Second Division.....	7	31
Third Division.....	40	270
Artillery Brigade.....		7
Total.....	142	708

If to these be added the numbers yielded by the engagement of March 31 the losses of the corps during the campaign will figure:

	Killed, according to regimental medical officers report.	Wounded received into field hospital.
During April.....	142	708
On March 31.....	47	388
Total in campaign*.....	189	1,100

No accidents occurred from chloroform administration during the month. On the 11th instant, as the troops were under orders to report to Burkeville, the few severe cases of sickness in the command were placed in ambulances and sent on ahead, that they might avoid the fatigue and the discomfort of the delays incident to transportation in rear of their commands. On the morning of the 12th the march was commenced, and on the afternoon of the 14th instant the corps went into camp in the angle formed by the Lynchburg road and that leading to Danville. The Third Division formed camp near the former road, the First near the latter, while the Second occupied the center. The march to this place was not hurriedly effected, but it was very fatiguing to the men. The delays experienced on account of the bad character of the roads, the labor required to improve them, and the exposure to the rain, which fell almost unremittingly during the march, had considerable influence in inducing that increased sickness in the command which showed itself immediately after settling in camp. The men were quartered in shelter-tents, which they had raised from the ground on uprights about a foot and a half high. The bunk or bed place in each was likewise raised. Those regiments encamped in the open ground where there was no shade built arbors over their quarters for protection from the heat.

* But see revised table, p. 584.

The First Division had an excellent location on an irregular ground, drained thoroughly well by nature; water was abundant and good. The soil on which the Second Division was settled was more retentive of moisture, but one that could have been well drained had the probability of a prolonged stay or the character of the weather rendered it necessary. Good water was scarce in this vicinity; the different regimental commands had dug wells, but the water obtained at no great distance from the surface was not clear, and, except when freshly drawn, had a surface-water taste. The Third Division was situated in a belt of woods; water was plentiful and good in the ravines. The division field hospitals were settled in the neighborhood of their commands upon good sites. The following represent their constitution at this time:

Hospital.	Site.	Water.	Drainage.	Sinks.	Medical officers.	Chaplains.	Other commissioned officers.	Hospital stewards.	Enlisted men.	Tents.
First Division .....	Good	Good	Good	Good	4	1	1	15	52	23
Second Division .....	Good	Good	Good	Good	3	1	1	12	45	17
Third Division .....	Fair	Good	Fair	Good	7	1	1	12	32	10
Artillery Brigade .....	Good	Good	Good	Good	1			1	11	5
Total .....					15	4	3	40	140	55

Hospital.	Ventilation.	Cooking.	Supplies.	Cleanliness, &c.	Completeness.	Sickness.	Medical wagons.	Army wagons.
First Division .....	Good	Good	Fair	Good	Complete	Fair	1	5
Second Division .....	Good	Good	Fair	Good	Complete	Fair	1	5
Third Division .....	Good	Good	Fair	Good	Complete	Fair	1	7
Artillery Brigade .....	Good	Good	Fair	Good	Complete	Fair	1	2
Total .....							4	19

The following is a consolidated monthly report of sick and wounded treated in the field hospitals during April, 1865:

Hospital.	Remaining in hospital March 31, 1865.			Admitted since March 31, 1865.										Aggregate to be counted for.
				Officers.		Enlisted men.		Other corps.		Rebels, wounded.	Total.
	Sick.	Wounded.	Total.	Sick.	Wounded.	Sick.	Wounded.	Sick.	Wounded.		Sick.	Wounded.
First Division.....	74	286	360	2	15	155	418	9	23	34	186	491	1,017
Second Division.....	26	123	149	4	7	152	225	23	4	1	150	50	300
Third Division.....	104	30	134	1	20	318	281	37	23	23	322	300	825
Artillery Brigade.....		2	2			7		1			8		10
Total.....	204	440	644	10	52	632	716	40	53	60	652	914	2,152

Hospital.	Sent to depot army hospitals.		Returned to duty.		Died.				Remained in hospital on 30, 1865.
	Sick.	Wounded.	Sick.	Wounded.	Officers.	Men.	Others.	Total.	Sick.	Wounded.
First Division .....	80	713	97	1	.....	14	.....	14	73	9
Second Division .....	28	176	84	.....	.....	8	1	9	63	.....
Third Division .....	203	373	110	4	2	16	1	19	100	7
Artillery brigade .....	.....	2	4	.....	.....	2	.....	2	12	.....
Total .....	311	1,261	295	5	2	40	2	44	247	16

During the remainder of the month—that is, from the 14th in the sickness in the command experienced an increase, not so the number taken sick as in the gravity of the cases. The prevailing disease, became very obstinate, and was accompanied with very great and rapidly increasing prostration, resembling a case as seen during the Peninsular campaign of 1862. The first recent active service, the bad water in the Second Division, but than all, I believe to be the origin of this, the lack of vegetables, camp near Fletcher's Run was broken up until the present time one or two rations of potatoes have been issued, and none of any vegetables, except to a portion of the command a small quantity of beans. This has been all, a quantity insufficient to prevent the recurrence of scorbutic symptoms. No "well-marked" cases of scurvy recorded by the medical officers, except in one or two instances recently returned from Southern prisons. Following the diarrhoea of importance, was pneumonia. In the Second Division a number of cases of measles were treated. The disease was introduced to camp by some recruits. Two cases of smallpox occurred, one contracted the disease at City Point depot, the other at the Burnside army hospital. They were immediately isolated, and are progressing favorably.

On the 20th instant a train of twelve ambulances was dispatched from Amelia Court-House with supplies for some wounded rebels captured there, and to transport such of them as were in proper condition to endure it to the Farmville hospital. On the 29th the Confederates hospital at Farmville, under charge of Surg. O. J. Evans, of the New York Volunteers, having been ordered to report to the Medical Director, Second Corps, a train of ambulances was sent in to carry a hundred of the inmates that were so far recovered from their wounds as to be able to travel to their homes, which were located to be in or near Petersburg, Va. They were brought to Burke's station and placed on the cars for the city. On the same night 3,000 men were ordered out to supply the necessities of those still remaining in the hospital, 650 in number, of whom twenty-seven were Union men to be removed on account of the character of their wounds.

The following represents the sick rate of the corps for the month of April, 1865:

Component.	Average strength present during April, 1865.	Average number on sick report daily during month.			Daily ratio of sick per 1,000 men of average strength present.
		In hospital.	In quarters.	Total.
FIRST DIVISION.
First Brigade.
20th Michigan .....	158	1	3	4	25
41st New York .....	362	1	3	4	11
2d New York Artillery .....	537	1	5	6	11
183d Pennsylvania .....	328	1	1	2	3
81st Pennsylvania .....	198	1	6	7	35
140th Pennsylvania .....	225	1	4	5	17
5th New Hampshire .....	427	5	10	15	35
Second Brigade.
63d New York .....	158	8	3	11	70
61th New York .....	380	1	5	6	15
88th New York .....	130	4	2	6	50
28th Massachusetts .....	138	2	4	6	43
4th New York Artillery .....	408	2	9	11	18
Third Brigade.
90th New York .....	175	2	3	5	18
52d New York .....	180	1	5	6	33
111th New York .....	363	4	4	8	11
125th New York .....	216	3	8	11	61
120th New York .....	89	12	3	15	12
7th New York .....	481	3	11	14	29
Fourth Brigade.
41th New York .....	273	2	4	6	23
53d Pennsylvania .....	391	12	5	17	17
146th Pennsylvania .....	200	1	6	7	28
148th Pennsylvania .....	250	1	2	3	12
119th Pennsylvania .....	201	1	3	4	15
Total First Division .....	6,561	45	114	159	24.23
SECOND DIVISION.
First Brigade.
1st Minnesota .....	253	4	10	14	55
7th Michigan .....	130	2	3	5	37
10th Maine .....	783	4	10	14	62
19th Massachusetts .....	280	2	12	14	50
20th Massachusetts .....	168	1	2	3	12
56th Wisconsin .....	373	3	6	9	32
69th New York .....	203	1	11	12	15
152d New York .....	225	1	11	12	33
184th Pennsylvania .....	410	2	12	14	32
Second Brigade.
60th New York National Guard Artillery .....	150	1	3	4	27
165th New York .....	130	1	2	3	23
161th New York .....	215	1	4	5	21
170th New York .....	120	1	1	2	8
8th New York Heavy Artillery .....	735	2	11	13	17
Third Brigade.
14th Connecticut .....	250	1	7	8	31
148th New York .....	180	1	4	5	28
12th New Jersey .....	483	12	21	33	31
1st Delaware .....	515	12	16	28	22
10th New York .....	210	1	6	7	25
4th Ohio .....	111	1	2	3	18
7th Virginia .....	120	5	2	7	22
69th Pennsylvania .....	247	1	3	4	16
100th Pennsylvania .....	48	1	1	2	31
Total Second Division .....	6,514	34	147	181	27.66

Command.	Average strength present during April, 1865.	Average number on sick report daily during month.			Daily ratio of sick per 1,000 men of average strength present.
		In hospital.	In quarters.	Total.
THIRD DIVISION.
First Brigade.
1st Maine Heavy Artillery .....	425	15	10	25	50
116th Pennsylvania .....	324	2	0	2	55
98th Pennsylvania .....	500	4	12	16	20
124th New York .....	430	1	3	4	9
86th New York .....	330	3	4	7	21
73d New York .....	210	3	4	7	32
46th New York .....	475	3	11	14	27
56th Indiana .....	623	7	8	15	28
Second Brigade.
67th Pennsylvania .....	551	6	5	11	20
165th Pennsylvania .....	664	3	10	13	21
141st Pennsylvania .....	223	0	2	2	10
4th Michigan .....	418	4	8	12	28
63d New York .....	313	8	7	15	48
63d New York .....	491	5	10	15	31
17th Maine .....	473	4	0	4	27
Third Brigade.
7th New Jersey .....	740	7	0	7	22
8th New Jersey .....	672	5	10	15	22
11th New Jersey .....	324	4	6	10	31
11th Massachusetts .....	283	1	3	4	14
120th New York .....	465	2	0	2	10
Total Third Division .....	8,786	87	161	248	28.18
Artillery Brigade .....	6,233	2	5	7	5.67
Total in corps .....	24,123	169	409	577	24.05

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES SMART,

Asst. Surg., U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, Second Army Corps.

THOMAS A. McPARKIN, U. S. Army,
Colonel and Medical Director, Army of the Potomac.

No. 24.

Report of Capt. John G. Pelton, Fourteenth Connecticut Infantry, Chief of Ambulances.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND ARMY CORPS,
OFFICE CHIEF OF AMBULANCES,
April 20, 1865.

DOCTOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Ambulance Corps, Second Army Corps, during the recent successful campaign:

On the evening of March 27 [28] orders were received to be ready to move at 6 o'clock on the following morning, the 28th [29th], with one-half of the ambulances of each division, one medical wagon and one army wagon to each brigade, and one additional wagon to each division for the transportation of forage. The trains were ordered to follow in rear of their respective divisions. The balance of the trains of the corps were ordered to be parked near the Cummings house, all to be in charge of Lieutenant McCarthy, of the First Division train. His instructions were to report to the chief quartermaster of the corps and accompany the general trains.

On the morning of the 28th [29th] the trains moved out on the Vaughan road in accordance with the orders received. Upon arriving at Humphreys' Station it was found that the corps had not as yet moved out; consequently the trains were parked in the open field near the station until the troops moved out, when it was found, at the crossing of Hatcher's Run, that it would be impracticable for the trains to follow in rear of their division, as the roads were narrow and it was not exactly known how soon the enemy would be found, and at the request of Major-General Humphreys the trains were halted and parked in an open field on the north bank of the river until the corps had crossed. The stretchermen, however, all crossed with their commands. On the 29th [30th] the trains were ordered to cross, and, in accordance with orders, parked at a place known as the "Three Chimneys," where a hospital was established. During its stay at this place all the drivers were engaged in building roads to the front.

On the evening of the 30th [29th] orders were received to send twenty ambulances to assist the Fifth Corps in removing their wounded. Lieutenant Lillibridge, of the Second Division train, was detailed to take command of the twenty-one ambulances that went to the Fifth Corps, assisted by a sergeant from each division train. Lieutenant Lillibridge reached the Fifth Corps hospital a little before daylight on the morning of the 31st [30th], and loaded his ambulances and proceeded to Humphreys' Station. After unloading the wounded he rejoined his command on the evening of the 31st [30th]. During the afternoon of the 31st Lieutenant Callanen, of the Second Division train, received orders from Doctor McParlin, medical director, Army of the Potomac, to remove the wounded of the cavalry, which were at that time in the Second Division hospital. For this purpose seventeen ambulances were sent to Humphreys' Station. In the meantime orders were given him that if he needed more ambulances to send for his reserve train, which he did. During this day the First Division was engaged with the enemy. Ambulances were sent to the front and the wounded were conveyed to the hospitals which were established near the Vaughan road. During this day twenty-four ambulances of the First Division were sent to Warren's Station with wounded, under the charge of Lieutenant Clark, First Division ambulance corps. Lieutenant Paxton, of the First Division train, also took ten of the First Division, nine of the Second Division, and sixteen of the Third Division loaded with wounded to Warren's Station.

April 1, Lieutenant Clark reported back with his train, which had been to the station, and from thence followed the division with nine ambulances. On this day Lieutenant Chase, of the First Division, joined the command with twenty-four ambulances, four medical wagons, and five army wagons; Lieutenant Chase having been on leave of absence. Lieutenant Paxton also joined the command with the train he had taken to Warren's Station.

April 2, the First Division was heavily engaged, and the train employed in removing the wounded to the hospital which had been established at the Moody house. Lieutenant Paxton followed the division with nine ambulances to the Sullivan house, near the South Side Railroad, and the whole night was employed in carrying wounded of the First Division from the Moody and Sullivan houses to the Boydton plank road.

April 3, Lieutenant Chase, with eight ambulances and the hospital train, joined the division at the Sullivan house and followed the troops. Lieutenant Clark, with the remaining thirty-five ambulances and ten of the Third Division loaded with wounded, left the hospital for Warren's Station. The roads being very heavy several animals died on the march from exhaustion.

April 4, the remaining train followed in the rear of the corps, heavily laden with sick.

April 5, the trains followed the corps with sick; no wounded to take up on this day.

April 6, broke camp at daylight, and followed the troops near to Amelia Springs, where they became engaged with the enemy. The trains were immediately ordered to the Springs. The wounded of the First and Third Divisions were brought to the Springs house by the stretcher-bearers until the ambulances arrived, and then it was not deemed proper to send many ambulances to the front on account of the road being narrow and on each side dense woods, and in case of a retrograde movement of the troops the train would, of course, be in the way; therefore they remained at the Springs house until the troops had advanced some miles, when the First and Third Divisions were engaged with the enemy. The Second Division being on the extreme right and finding no enemy, the train of the Second Division was not engaged, therefore they were ordered to assist the First and Third Divisions in removing their wounded, which they did. The corps having advanced several miles, it was found that the number of ambulances present was not adequate to the demand, consequently a hospital was established for the Second and Third Divisions at the Vaughan house, which relieved the ambulances and stretchermen very materially. The corps still advanced, and at night encamped near Sailor's Creek. The trains bringing the wounded from Amelia Springs parked near corps headquarters.

On the 7th Lieutenant Clark, of the First Division train, was ordered to proceed with twenty-seven ambulances loaded with wounded to Burkeville Junction. There were also fifteen ambulances of the Second Division sent to Burkeville with wounded of the Third Division, and all of the ambulances but seven of the Third Division were sent to Burkeville with wounded. Upon arriving at High Bridge quite a number of wounded were found belonging to the Second Division. Here nine ambulances were loaded and ordered to join the train which had started for Burkeville about half an hour before; the remainder of the train followed the corps. Upon advancing about a mile beyond the Brooks house the First Division became engaged with the enemy, as also did the Third Division. During the day a hospital was established at the Brooks house and the wounded were speedily removed to the hospital, in consideration of the number of ambulances we had to work with, the greater portion being moved by the stretchermen, who deserve great credit for their courage and endurance, this being the fourth day they had been without rations, which was not the fault of the ambulance officers or the commissary department. The supply train did not have sufficient amount of rations to issue to all detachments; therefore the ambulance corps was left to take care of itself, which it did in a very creditable manner.

April 8, having left quite a number of wounded at the Vaughan house, we were informed that the Ninth Corps ambulances were ordered to assist us in removing them, whereupon Lieutenant Crawley, of the Second Division train, was ordered to High Bridge to meet them and conduct them to the above-mentioned house. Upon his arrival at High Bridge nothing could be found of them, but after running about the country for an hour he succeeded in finding them. In the meantime all the ambulances except eleven of the corps were loaded with the wounded which were at the Brooks house and sent to Burkeville, Lieutenant Clark, First Division, in charge. On this day Lieut. T. C. Chase, Twenty-sixth Michigan, commanding First Division ambulance train, was relieved from duty with the train on the grounds of incompetency.

On the 9th the hospital train, with eleven ambulances, was ordered to follow in rear of the corps. The march this day was not severe, the trains having scarcely moved out of park before a halt was ordered, it having been announced that General R. E. Lee had surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia to Lieut. Gen. U. S. Grant.

On the 10th a train was made up and loaded with sick and a few wounded and went to Burkeville. Lieutenant Page, of the Second Division train, took charge, and was ordered to remain at the station until the corps arrived there.

On the 11th took up our line of march toward New Store, the ambulances and hospital train following in rear of the corps.

On the 12th marched from New Store to Farmville, trains following in the same order as the day previous.

The 13th marched from Farmville to Old Burkeville.

On the 14th selected camp for the trains, the blacksmith and carpenters being engaged in repairing the trains, which were very much in need of repairs.

There is nothing of importance to record from the 14th to the 20th, except that the trains are being put in serviceable condition as rapidly as possible, and are now ready for service.

Second Lieut. James H. Griggs, One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Volunteers, commanding ambulances First Division; Second Lieutenant Clark, First Division; Lieutenant Callanen, One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, commanding ambulances Second Division; Lieut. J. R. Pancoast, commanding ambulances Third Division; Lieutenant Painter, Third Division, and the stretchermen of the entire command deserve great credit for the untiring energy displayed in the speedy removal of the wounded. The following is a list of casualties and losses during the campaign:*

I am, doctor, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. PELTON,

Captain and Chief of Ambulances, Second Army Corps.

Surg. CHARLES PAGE, U. S. Army,

Medical Director, Second Army Corps.

No. 25.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,

April 20, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division during the late campaign:

March 29, at 6 a. m. left camp in breast-works near the Squirrel Level road, crossed Hatcher's Run at 8.30, marched toward Gravelly Run on the Vaughan road, and formed line on the left of the Third Division, the left flank resting on the run. Scouting parties were sent out at different points, who ascertained the position of the enemy's skirmish line to be about three-quarters of a mile distant in my front. At 3.10 p. m. my division advanced in line of battle, through swamps and dense woods, about two miles, when, communication having been established with the Fifth Corps on my left, I halted at dark and bivouacked.

* Shows 1 man wounded, 30 horses and mules died, and 1 ambulance abandoned.

March 30, advanced at 6 a. m. in line of battle, as on the previous day, through an almost impassable country, and halted at 9 a. m. to reform my line along the Dabney's Mill road. At 3 p. m. advanced to the road leading from the Crow house to the Boydton plank road, with my left resting at the latter and connecting with the Fifth Corps. The Second Brigade was sent to corduroy the Dabney's Mill road, which, owing to the heavy rain, was in a very bad condition. Temporary works were thrown up and the command bivouacked for the night.

March 31, at 2.30 a. m. I received orders to relieve the line occupied by the Fifth Corps on my left as soon as I should be relieved by troops of the Third Division from the line I then held. At 5 a. m., therefore, I moved my command to the left, across the Boydton road, and occupied the breast-works of the Fifth Corps, the Third and Fourth Brigades being in the rear line along the Boydton road. At 10.30 a. m. the troops of the Fifth Corps, thus relieved by me, passed through my line to my front and left, entered the woods, and soon became engaged with the enemy. The enemy apparently assumed the offensive and attacked the Fifth Corps, the flanks of both the contending parties being presented to me. They were covered, however, by Dickling Run, upon which the enemy evidently relied for protection. The Fifth Corps was being rapidly pressed back toward the Gravelly Run bridge on the Boydton road. Large numbers of men of the Fifth Corps straggled back in disorder through the lines of the Fourth Brigade, and a guard from that brigade was deployed in rear of my position to stop them and turn them back. At about 12.30 p. m. I received orders from Major-General Humphreys to go to the relief of the Fifth Corps troops then engaged. The Third and Fourth Brigades were immediately advanced in line of battle across the creek above mentioned, the Second Brigade in reserve, and attacked the enemy directly in flank and rear. His force was found to consist of three lines of battle. This attack, striking the enemy so suddenly and unexpectedly, completely routed them. They gave way in perfect confusion. The two brigades advanced steadily, sweeping down the entire front of the Fifth Corps, driving the enemy before them until 3.30 p. m., at which time the White Oak road was crossed by the left of the Fourth Brigade, and the enemy having taken to his intrenchments the pursuit was discontinued. In the beginning of the action, when the Third and Fourth Brigades attacked, I directed the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, of the First Brigade, to charge upon the enemy's line of works, as I was convinced from observation, corroborated by reports of prisoners, that it was entirely unoccupied. Instead of carrying out the order the regiment obliqued so far to the left that it struck the right of the Third Brigade, then engaged, and the opportunity was lost. The remainder of the First Brigade advanced immediately afterward and continued the line to the right and rear. At this time the Third Brigade was yet advancing, driving the enemy rapidly, capturing numerous prisoners, and in the One hundredth and eleventh New York Volunteers, a battle-flag. Their advance created a gap between their right and the left of the First Brigade, and the Second Brigade was therefore brought from its position in reserve and placed in line to fill the vacancy. It was now found that the enemy, being driven by the Third and Fourth Brigades, had retreated to their works and had reformed in them. The works were protected in front by an almost impassable slashing, and it was found impossible to take them with the force available. We were now in possession of the White Oak road, but in order to secure it had been obliged to move so far to the left that our right flank was entirely unprotected, and a movement to the right became necessary in order to connect the lines. I therefore moved the entire division by the right flank until a connection was made with General De Trobriand's brigade, of the Third Division. The Fifth Corps then moved up, connected upon my left, and took possession of the White Oak road. Breast-works were thrown up and the command bivouacked.

April 1, at 3.30 a. m. the command moved back to the position on the Boydton road occupied the previous day by the Third and Fourth Brigades, the left extending toward Gravelly Run bridge. Remained in this position until about 5.30 p. m., when I received orders to advance again and occupy the White Oak road, which was done. Remained in this position until 11 p. m., frequent demonstrations being made upon the enemy's line. At 11 o'clock the division marched, via White Oak road, to the vicinity of Five Forks, and reported for duty to Major-General Sheridan; bivouacked.

April 2, at 7.30 a. m. moved upon the White Oak road to the point left the previous night. The picket-line left here by me the night previous had in the meantime, by orders, fallen back. At 9 a. m. the enemy abandoned his works, and they were immediately occupied by my men. The pursuit of the enemy was at once commenced, and he was followed closely to a point near Sutherland's Station, where he was found in position behind breast-works with artillery. The Second and Third Brigades were immediately ordered to charge the position, and they advanced promptly to the attack, but owing to the natural strength of the position and the difficult nature of the ground intervening the assault was unsuccessful. It was in this attack that Brevet Brigadier-General Madill, commanding Third Brigade, was wounded severely, while gallantly urging his men forward to the enemy's works. At 12.30 p. m. a second assault was made by the Third Brigade, Brevet Brigadier-General MacDougall having been placed in command. The artillery of the division had at this time come up, and being placed in position assisted in the attack by a vigorous shelling of the enemy's line. This attack was also repulsed, the enemy being able to concentrate his force opposite any threatened point. The brigade was withdrawn to its former position—a crest about 800 yards from that occupied by the enemy. I now determined to carry the position by an attack on the enemy's flank. A strong skirmish line was pushed forward upon the extreme right flank of the enemy, overlapping it and threatening the railroad. Indeed, a portion of this skirmish line was on the railroad at 1.10 o'clock. The attention of the enemy being thus diverted from his left flank, the Fourth Brigade (Brevet Brigadier-General Ramsey) was moved rapidly around it through a ravine and wood, and massed in the woods without being discovered by the enemy. At 2.45 p. m. the brigade advanced at double quick, with a hearty cheer and in magnificent order, striking the enemy in flank, and sweeping rapidly down inside the breast-works, capturing a large number of prisoners and putting to precipitous flight the remainder. That portion of the enemy who escaped were driven to the woods near the river, where they were picked up the next morning. Captain Clark's battery (B), First New Jersey Artillery, rendered great assistance in this attack by keeping up a vigorous and well-directed fire upon the enemy. The division captured 600 prisoners, 1 battle-flag, and 2 pieces of artillery. As I was directed by General Sheridan to drive the enemy toward Petersburg, I advanced in that direction by the River and the South Side roads about two miles, when I was met by the Second Division, who were moving on the latter road in the opposite direction. I therefore returned to the vicinity of Sutherland's Station toward evening, disposed my troops so as to hold the railroad, and bivouacked for the night.

April 3, marched from Sutherland's Station, on the River and Namozine roads, to near Winticomack Creek, and bivouacked.

April 4, marched on Namozine road to Deep Creek, and bivouacked at 7 p. m. During the march of this day the Third Brigade was ordered back to assist in bringing up the trains, the roads being in very bad condition.

April 5, at 1 a. m. resumed the march, crossing Deep Creek at 6 a. m., and arrived at Jetersville about 3 p. m. Took up position west of the railroad and on the left of the corps, facing northward, and bivouacked.

April 6, marched northward toward Amelia Court-House at 5.30 a. m., preceded by a skirmish line connecting with the Second Division. When passing to the east of Amelia Springs some scouts discovered the enemy's wagon train, accompanied by a column of infantry, moving rapidly to our left toward Deafonsville. This was at once reported and the direction of the column changed, the artillery at the same time keeping up a hot fire upon the enemy's column and train. Their rear had passed before the division could be got across Flat Creek to attack them, although the Twenty-sixth Michigan Volunteers skirmishers effected a crossing at Amelia Springs in time to become engaged in a spirited skirmish. The pursuit of the enemy was continued all that day, the troops moving in line of battle, over all kinds of ground, preceded by a long and heavy skirmish line, the line being always on the right of the road. The skirmishers were almost constantly engaged with the rear guard of the enemy, but the great length of the line enabled us to expel them from all their positions by overlapping their flank. At one position taken up they were successfully charged by the Twenty-sixth Michigan and One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who captured 100 prisoners. Whenever it appeared probable that the enemy might check us, the skirmish line was re-enforced by a regiment habitually on the right. Proceeding in this manner we advanced rapidly in line about sixteen miles, being often in sight of the wagon train of the enemy, and capturing a great many prisoners. Upon arriving in the vicinity of Sailor's Creek, at about sunset, the enemy were found strongly posted, on a commanding ridge of ground, covering the crossing of the creek, evidently determined to make a fight in order to gain time for the crossing of his train. I gave orders for the First Brigade (Colonel Scott) to take the position. The brigade advanced splendidly, charged with a cheer, and drove the enemy in perfect confusion into and across the creek, capturing 2 guns, 4 colors, his entire train of about 250 wagons, ambulances, &c., together with mules, horses, and all appurtenances, and a large number of prisoners. The Third Brigade (General MacDongall) followed closely on the right of the First, crossed the stream at once, drove the enemy from the other side, and possessed themselves of the crest. The First Brigade then crossed and went into position on the other side also. The Fourth and Second Brigades were moved down to the bank of the creek without crossing, and at 8 p. m. the command bivouacked. The captures by the division on this day were 5 flags, 3 guns, the enemy's train, and several hundred prisoners.

April 7, at 6 a. m. marched from Sailor's Creek to the Appomattox River, at High Bridge. On our arrival at that point the skirmishers of the Second Division had crossed the river, but were being driven rapidly back toward the crossing by a heavy skirmish line of the enemy, which was advancing toward the river. I immediately deployed a strong skirmish line along the bank of the river to keep back that of the enemy and as soon as my artillery could get up directed it to open upon the enemy at once. The order was promptly obeyed, both the batteries (Captain Clark's and Captain Dakin's) going quickly into position, and delivering a well-directed fire; the effect was visible immediately in the rapid falling back of the enemy. My division followed the Second across the river at about 9 a. m., and marched to a point near the intersection of the Farmville plank and the old stage roads, where the enemy was found in position behind breast-works. My division was placed in position under a severe fire of artillery from the enemy's works, the skirmish line being actively engaged. Careful observation induced the belief that we were opposite the extreme left flank of the enemy, and an extended skirmish line was therefore swung forward and to the left with a view to enveloping it. At the same time my division was moved to the right by the flank as far as the main road referred to, and preparations made for an attack. The Third Division kept up the connection by following the movement. The skirmish line swung forward until it struck that of the enemy, when three regiments of the First Brigade (the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, Fifth New Hampshire, and Second New York Heavy Artillery) were ordered to charge the left of the enemy's line. The charge was gallantly made, but was unsuccessful owing to the difficult nature of the ground, which was broken by numerous small and sharp ravines, over which the men were unable to move in order. While the regiments were falling back the enemy advanced over their works in pursuit, but were quickly driven back. A picket-line was established, the Second Division moved up and extended my line to the right, and the command bivouacked.

April 8, marched at 6 a. m. through the enemy's works (he having abandoned them during the night) to a point near Holliday Creek on the stage road, halting at 4 p. m. At 9 p. m. moved forward again about five miles and bivouacked. The negotiations of this day, by flag of truce, looking to the surrender of the rebel army, were carried on through the skirmish line of this division.

April 9, at 6 a. m. marched as on the day previous, preceded by a skirmish line. After advancing about six miles a flag of truce from the enemy was observed, and the command halted. A suspension of hostilities until 2 p. m. was ordered. At 2 p. m. the order had been given to advance, when I was directed to halt until further orders. Soon afterward the surrender of the rebel army was announced.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON A. MILES,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. C. A. WINTER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report the capture by this division of 6 colors and 10 guns, viz: March 31, near White Oak road, 1 color; April 1, near Sutherland's Station, 1 color and 2 guns; April 6, at captured train, 4 colors and 3 guns; April 7, on the march, 1 gun; April 9, near Appomattox Court-House, 3 guns.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON A. MITES,

Breret Major-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. C. A. WHITTIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

No. 26.

Report of Col. George W. Scott, Sixty-first New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HIDQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, SECOND CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to make the following report of operations—part taken by this brigade—during the recent campaign:

The command broke camp in the morning of the 29th of March, marching with the division, via Vaughan road, across and beyond Hatcher's Run, taking position to north of the road and near Gravelly Run, Twenty-sixth Michigan and One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers deployed as skirmishers, the rest of the brigade in line of battle connecting on the right with Third Division and on left with Third Brigade, First Division, keeping this connection advanced in line, halting about dark, and bivouacked. On the 30th the brigade advanced in line, the Fifth New Hampshire being advanced as skirmishers, the connections being the same as day before. About noon my skirmishers struck the enemy, and drove him, the brigade continuing to advance in line. Soon the enemy took refuge within his main work on the run. The One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Twenty-sixth Michigan were deployed, relieving the Fifth New Hampshire. These two regiments continually engaged the enemy until dark. Here the command threw up temporary works. 1 a. m. 31st of March the brigade moved by the left flank, taking up position to the west of Boydton road, and relieving a brigade of the Fifth Corps. 10 a. m. the Fifth Corps being heavily engaged with the enemy to our left, the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers were ordered to advance in our front, and moving to the left soon struck the enemy. The brigade was then advanced in line, being relieved in our old position by De Trobriand's brigade, of the Third Division, the left of the brigade connecting with the Third Brigade, First Division. After sundry changes of front and position, severe skirmishing with the enemy, and enduring heavy fire from their artillery, the brigade was finally placed in position to the left of the Fourth Brigade, and connecting with Crawford's division, Fifth Corps, near White Oak road. Here the command threw up works.

April 1, daylight, fell back to works on Boydton road, near Gravelly Run, left resting on run, right connecting with Fourth Brigade. 5 p.

m., advanced Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers as skirmishers, brigade following in line, connecting on right with Fourth Brigade. Moved forward one mile and a half, reoccupying the works near White Oak road, Twenty-sixth Michigan being here advanced as skirmishers, and heavily engaging the enemy, my picket-line now consisting of the Twenty-sixth Michigan, part of Fifth New Hampshire, and Sixty-first New York Volunteers, while my skirmish line engaged the enemy and repulsed him.

1 a. m. April 2 the rest of the brigade, except the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, moved, with the division, down the White Oak road (having ascertained that the road was clear of the enemy, by a scouting party from the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers), and made a junction with the Fifth Corps and cavalry under General Sheridan, the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers following the division as rear guard. April 2, 6 a. m. returned with the division up the White Oak road to near position occupied the night previous; formed line to west of road, and on left of Fourth Brigade, the Second and Third Brigades being in the advance; soon found that the enemy was evacuating his works and was falling back. The brigade was moved by the flank, passing through the enemy's main works. About 12 m. the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Second New York Artillery were detached as skirmishers, but the enemy being driven from our front by other brigades of the division, this brigade was assembled and moved rapidly forward, and covering the South Side Railroad. 4 p. m., met the advance of the Second Division. 5 p. m., marched with the division and went into bivouac near Sutherland's Station, on railroad and on the River road.

April 3, sent Twenty-sixth Michigan out on a scout; they captured 5 commissioned officers and 29 enlisted men.

April 3, 4, and 5, continued to march with the division in pursuit of Lee's army; went into bivouac 6 p. m., near Danville railroad, night of the 5th.

April 6, marched by the flank at daybreak toward Amelia Court-House. 9 a. m., the Twenty-sixth Michigan was detached to cover a road leading from our flank. 10 a. m., brigade formed line, and under cover of our artillery fire advanced rapidly in pursuit of the enemy and their train of wagons, visible in the distance; made connection on the left with Third Division; keeping this connection the brigade made several gallant charges; finally, 5 p. m., when nearing Monkey Run, the brigade made a gallant and successful charge, capturing 4 battle-flags, 2 guns, a large wagon train, and many prisoners; immediately advanced across the run and took up position, facing the enemy, to the left, connecting on the right with the Second Division, Second Corps; bivouacked here for the night.

April 7, moved at daylight with the division, following closely the retreating enemy; crossed the Appomattox at High Bridge, and, moving to the left of the railroad, passed to the north of Farmville, the Fifth New Hampshire being deployed as skirmishers and flankers. We struck the enemy near Cumberland Church, driving in his outpost. The brigade formed line of battle connecting on the left with the Third Brigade. The Twenty-sixth Michigan and One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers were then advanced to our right and front as skirmishers; the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, having expended most of their ammunition upon the skirmish line, were now relieved by the Sixty-first New York Volunteers. About 3 p. m. the remainder of the brigade, Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, Second New York Artillery, and six companies Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers were, by direction of the general commanding the division, moved to the right, and here made a most gallant charge upon the enemy's works; but after repeated and persevering assaults we were, owing to the greatly superior force of the enemy, flanked and repulsed, my command at one time being within fifteen paces of the enemy's main works. In this charge we lost many brave officers and men killed and wounded, one color (Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers), and a few men captured; the color was, however, recaptured at the surrender of Lee's army, and is now again in the possession of the regiment. The regiments of the brigade while on the skirmish line at this time suffered severely, the Sixty-first New York Volunteers, the Twenty-sixth Michigan, and the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers losing heavily, though maintaining their ground until relieved by the Second and Third Divisions. At dark bivouacked near the battle-field.

April 8, the brigade continued the pursuit of the retreating enemy, halting at dark, but almost immediately resumed the march in pursuit. Halting about six miles beyond New Store, on Lynchburg road, bivouacked for the night.

April 9, resumed march in pursuit of the enemy. By direction of the division commander a regiment (Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers) was sent out on either flank to forage upon the country. 11 a. m., the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, being in advance as skirmishers, came upon the enemy's pickets. The command was here halted and formed in line awaiting negotiation between the two armies, affecting a surrender of the rebel force. 2 p. m., again advanced a short distance, were again halted; here the Sixty-first New York were also deployed as skirmishers, and the Twenty-sixth Michigan as flankers. The Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers now rejoined the column, bringing in about thirty prisoners and a few broken down mules, horses, &c. 4 p. m., news of the surrender of Lee's army was now received. This welcome intelligence was received by the troops amid acclamations of the wildest excitement and most intense joy.

The men who compose this noble old veteran brigade may well be proud of the part taken by them in this as well as in each and all of the campaigns of the Army of the Potomac. Our successes have cost us the loss of many good soldiers, officers and men. Prominent among the many brave, we mourn the loss of Capt. I. H. Boyd, brigade inspector, killed upon the 7th instant. On the same day were wounded Captains Ricker, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, and Kerr, One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting miles-a-camp. These two officers were particularly distinguishable at all times for their gallantry in action.

The entire loss of the brigade during this short and decisive campaign will number in all about 650.

5 p. m., assembled the skirmish line, forming a picket-line covering the division front and left flank. Remained in this position during the night.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. SCOTT,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Lieut. Col. R. A. BROWN;

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division.

No. 27.

Report of Capt. Lucius H. Tres, Twenty-sixth Michigan Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH MICHIGAN VOLUNTEERS,

In the Field, Va., April 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular of the 10th instant, I have the honor to forward the following report of operations of this regiment since the 28th ultimo:

Regiment was relieved from picket the morning of the 29th, having broken camp the night previous, and marched with the brigade; crossed Hatcher's Run about 12 m., and, deploying as skirmishers, moved in advance of the column until late in the afternoon, when we assembled and joined the brigade. 30th, at 5 a. m. advanced in line of battle, connecting with the Third Division on our right, and Second New York Artillery on our left. At 2 p. m. relieved the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the skirmish line. Established our line in an open field in easy range of the enemy's works, with whom a continuous firing was kept up during the afternoon. Loss, two men wounded. 31st, relieved from skirmish line at 7 a. m., and joined the brigade, which was then formed in rear of the works occupied by the Fifth Corps the day previous. Advanced in line of battle about 10 a. m., covering the right flank of Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers; were partially engaged with the enemy during the afternoon, losing two men wounded. Toward night built works near White Oak road, where we remained until 4 a. m.

April 1, we abandoned the position taken the day previous, and occupied another some distance to the left. At night advanced and established a picket-line on White Oak road, about sixty yards from the enemy, covering a flank movement of the division which was ordered to co-operate with General Sheridan. 2d, at daylight fell back to the line occupied by our troops the day previous, where we remained until 4 p. m., when we joined the brigade near Sutherland's Station, on the South Side road. 3d, at 7 a. m. were sent out on a reconnaissance toward the Appomattox and succeeded in capturing thirty-four prisoners, five of whom were commissioned officers. At 2 p. m. joined the column on its march in pursuit of Lee's army. 4th, marched six miles and halted for the night. 5th, continued the march to the Danville road and encamped for the night. 6th, moved in direction of Amelia Court House. Four companies sent out as flankers, the remaining five ordered to make a reconnaissance on a road leading north from Jeter's Station; found the enemy's skirmishers on the opposite side of Flat Creek, which was crossed under fire and the enemy driven back a considerable distance, abandoning three wagons in their flight. In this skirmish the whole regiment participated. We were then assembled and moved in line of battle with the brigade in pursuit of the enemy's train—our right connecting with the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, our left resting on the road. The regiment made several charges, driving the enemy from his position and following closely in his retreat until dark. Captured 147 prisoners and participated in the capture of 162 wagons, losing 1 man killed and 14 wounded. 7th, followed the enemy in his retreat, crossing the Appomattox at High Bridge, and formed line of battle on the right of the brigade in front of his position near Farmville. About 12 m. one commissioned officer and twenty-seven men were sent out on the skirmish line, connecting with the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers on the right. This detachment charged the enemy's works, with the skirmish line of the First Brigade, losing 5 men killed, 8 wounded, and 1 commissioned officer and 12 men captured. At 5 p. m. the regiment deployed to meet the enemy's skirmishers in a counter charge, driving them into their main works and re-establishing our line, where we remained until dark, when we were relieved and joined the brigade. 8th, continued in pursuit of the enemy until 11 p. m. and halted for the night. 9th, deployed on either side of the brigade as flankers until 12 m., when we were halted, and remained until dark, when we were relieved and joined the brigade.

Including those already mentioned this regiment has captured since the 28th ultimo 256 prisoners.

Casualties.

	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
March 30 .....	.....	1	.....	2	.....	.....	.....	3	3
March 31 .....	.....	.....	.....	2	.....	.....	.....	2	2
April 6 .....	.....	.....	.....	14	.....	.....	.....	14	14
April 7 .....	.....	6	.....	8	1	12	1	25	26
Total .....	.....	6	.....	26	1	12	1	44	45

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. H. LVES,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILLIAM MCCALLISTER,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 28.

Report of Lieut. Col. Welcome A. Crafts, Fifth New Hampshire Infantry.

HQRS. FIFTH NEW HAMPSHIRE BATTALION VOLS.,

April 11, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of operations in which the Fifth New Hampshire Battalion Volunteers participated from the 28th day of March to date:

March 28 was spent in camp in preparation for the campaign, the regiment being inspected at 4 o'clock by the colonel commanding the brigade; clothing, arms, and equipments also inspected by the regimental commander. Orders being received during the night, camp was broken, and the regiment marched at the head of the brigade at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 29th; crossed Hatcher's Run and formed line of battle on the left of the brigade, connecting on the left with General Madill, Third Brigade, advancing toward the enemy's works until dark; bivouacked in line of battle, advancing again soon after daylight in a heavy rain which filled the creeks and rivers.

Our skirmishers found the enemy at 10 o'clock; the line was halted and breast-works thrown up; the lieutenant-colonel commanding the regiment being detailed as officer of the day the regiment was left in command of Captain Bicker. By order of General Humphreys the entire skirmish line of the corps was advanced, the rebel skirmishers driven into their works, their position developed, and batteries unmasked. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the enemy threw a brigade out of their works and charged the left of the division skirmish line without moving it. They also demonstrated in front of the entire division line. During the night the regiment moved to the left with the division, which relieved and occupied the position of Griffin's division, of the Fifth Corps. I took command of the new picket-line of the division, charged the enemy with my reserve (Companies A and E, Sixty-fourth New York), drove the enemy into their works, and captured eighteen prisoners; was relieved by Colonel Deuney [Glenny] and assumed command of my regiment at 12 o'clock, and was immediately ordered out to form connection with Third Brigade, and charged the enemy, who had attacked the Fifth Corps. Advanced in line of battle with the brigade; were shelled by the enemy; advanced near their works; lost three men wounded, and after several changes in position threw up breast-works and bivouacked for the night near the White Oak road.

April 1, fell back to the line of breast-works near the Butler house. Six companies were deployed and advanced as skirmishers at 5 p. m. At dark advanced the balance of the regiment in support of the skirmish line, which reached to and rested on the White Oak road, and became engaged with the enemy; lost 3 men wounded, 1 missing. At 12 o'clock moved rapidly down the White Oak road, and reached the position occupied by General Sheridan's command at 2 a. m. 2d instant. Returning from the enemy's works (evacuated), and passing through, pursued them rapidly; engaged their rear guard (Johnson's division) at 12 o'clock. Company H was deployed to prevent stragglers passing to the rear, leaving only two companies of my command with the brigade, the balance having been left on the line in command of the division officer of the day, Colonel Mintzer. By order of General Miles I took command of and advanced the division skirmish line. The enemy being routed we advanced in line of battle to the railroad, the picket detail rejoining the regiment soon after going into camp.

April 3, pursued the enemy without being engaged during the day, and camped near Deep Run. The entire regiment went on picket. Marched at 10 o'clock on the following morning; reached the Danville railroad at 4 p. m.; bivouacked a short distance after crossing the road.

April 5, marched at daylight; halted and issued rations at 10 o'clock; went into camp at 4 p. m. at Sailor's Creek.

April 6, crossed the creek at an early hour; formed line of battle on the right of the main road leading toward Lynchburg, and became immediately engaged with the enemy, pushing them rapidly until near sundown, when a successful charge was made near Monkey Run, where a large and valuable train was captured and over 100 prisoners taken by the regiment, which behaved throughout the day in a manner satisfactory to its commanding officer. Bivouacked on the field.

April 7, crossed the Appomattox at High Bridge and turning to the right the entire regiment was deployed upon the skirmish line; drove the enemy into their works, capturing a large number of prisoners and obtaining temporary possession of one gun belonging to a battery which gave the skirmish line a heavy fire of grape and shell. Two regiments of the enemy advanced out of the works and charged the skirmish line, without moving it perceptibly. After expending all our ammunition, and remaining four hours under a heavy fire from the enemy's line of battle, four companies were relieved by the Sixty-first New York, forming a portion of the assaulting column, which charged the enemy's works near Cumberland Church, where three brigades of the enemy were posted behind breast-works supplied with artillery. The regimental commander being in command of the entire skirmish line of the brigade, the four companies, with the colors, under command of Capt. J. S. Ricker, whose gallantry throughout the day had been very conspicuous, having had two horses shot under him, and refusing to leave the field after being wounded, [sic] two of the companies charged without ammunition and one without bayonets. The colors advanced to within a very short distance of the enemy's works. The enemy, throwing out a strong force upon either flank, the colors, with 52 men and 5 officers, were captured. During the day 110 men and 10 officers were lost.

April 8, pursued the enemy, not being engaged.

April 9, at 10 a. m. the regiment was detailed to forage and scout upon either flank, which was successfully done, returning to camp at 6 p. m.

April 10, remained in camp, Robert Lee having surrendered, and the colors of the Fifth New Hampshire were recaptured from General William Mahone, together with the officers and men captured on the 7th instant.

Throughout this brief but successful campaign, claiming nothing for myself, I can with entire truthfulness and just pride refer to the bearing of this regiment. It has never wavered or hesitated when ordered forward or under fire. Whether advancing in line of battle, on the skirmish line, or charging the enemy who, in overwhelming numbers behind breast-works, awaited their coming with murderous fire, the Fifth New Hampshire has shown most unmistakably that substitutes will fight as well as skedaddle.

The entire loss of the regiment during the campaign is 15 killed, 67 wounded, and 83 missing; total, 165.

Where all have done bravely, distinctions are impossible as well as unjust, yet I cannot close without paying tribute to the lofty courage and cool daring of Lieut. Warren Ryder, who fell dead while gallantly leading his men within fifteen feet of the enemy's works. I would also respectfully recommend that Capt. John S. Ricker, Company C, in consideration of his severe, if not mortal, wounds, and marked and gallant conduct, be brevetted major.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. CRAFTS,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. WILLIAM MCCALLISTER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 29.

Report of Capt. Francis R. Humphreys, Second New York Heavy Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND NEW YORK ARTILLERY,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor respectfully to report that the detailed account of the operations of this regiment was kept by Major Selkirk, and carried by him to the rear when he was wounded. I submit, however, the following statement of our movements:

March 29, at 7 a. m. struck tents at camp near Patrick's Station; marched about three miles, when a junction was formed with Sheridan's cavalry about 11 a. m. about four miles to the left of Hatcher's

Ran, where we halted and threw up a line of breast-works in our front. Left the works about 3.30 p. m.; formed in line of battle; marched through a dense wood till night-fall, when we again halted and built another line of works, which we held till 5 a. m. March 30, when we made a further advance, under cover of the forest, halting about 9 a. m., when firing being heard on left threw up another line of works. About 1 p. m. the enemy opened their batteries upon and continued a sharp fire of shell and solid shot for about two hours, wounding two privates. Remained in the works till 5 a. m. March 31, when we resumed our march with the division to the relief of the Fifth Corps. At 6 p. m. halted; threw up a new line of works in our front; heavy firing on our right and our left. Remained in the works until 4 a. m. April 1, during which time had seven men wounded skirmishing, when we retired a short distance to the rear, had inspection of arms, and continued our advance in support of the Fifth Corps, throwing out flankers, heavy firing being heard on the right and left. Camped at night-fall at ——. April 2, continued our advance, skirmishing on our right and front. One man wounded on the skirmish line. Crossed South Side Railroad and camped for the night. April 3, continued our march till 6 p. m., when went into camp near Lambeth Church. April 5, 6 a. m. moved in the direction of the Danville railroad, which we struck about 2 p. m. Continued the march to Burke's Station, to the right of which we camped for the night. April 6, continued the advance. About 9 a. m. came in sight of the enemy's wagon train, moving rapidly forward on our left. Pushed on till about 3 p. m., when we came up with the enemy and his train about two miles from Farmville. After a sharp engagement drove them from their position, capturing 2 battle-flags and — prisoners, the brigade taking 180 wagons and a large number of prisoners. Camped here for the night. Casualties of the day, 3 enlisted men killed and 9 wounded. April 7, continued the advance; passed through Farmville; crossed the Danville railroad at High Bridge; met the enemy intrenched in a double line of works. At about 3 p. m. charged with the brigade, and met with a repulse, resulting in a loss of 6 killed, 67 wounded, and 74 missing. Lay in rear of battle-field all night. April 8, passed through the enemy's works, they having quietly left during the night. Continued the advance till 11.30 p. m., when we went into camp. April 9, marched to Glover Hill. Halted while flags of truce were passing to and from the enemy. At 3 p. m. the surrender of General Lee announced. Went into camp for the night.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS R. HUMPHREYS,

Captain, Second New York Artillery, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILLIAM MCALLISTER,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 30.

Report of Maj. George W. Schaffer, Sixty-first New York Infantry.

HDQRS. SIXTY-FIRST REGT. NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the following, according to and in compliance with orders received:

This command broke camp at 6 a. m. on the morning of the 29th of March, and marched with the brigade toward the left. At 10.30 a. m.

formed and advanced with the brigade in line of battle. At about noon the brigade halted, and this command erected temporary breast-works in our front. At 3.30 p. m. advanced forward with the brigade, halted at about dark, erected breast-works, and remained there during the night. On the morning of the 30th advanced, and, with the brigade, charged upon the enemy and drove them from their position; during the remainder of the day in support of the picket-line. At 2 p. m. on the 31st ultimo charged with the brigade upon the enemy, and succeeded in driving them from their works. Participated in all movements of the brigade until dark, when this command fell behind breast-works. Casualties during the day, 1 enlisted man killed, 1 commissioned officer and 14 enlisted men wounded.

On the morning of April 1 moved with the brigade toward the left. At 9.30 charged with the brigade upon the enemy's works, and drove them from their position. At 6 p. m. in support of picket-line. During the night moved to the left and joined the brigade. At 7 a. m. on the morning of the 2d moved to the right. 11 a. m. passed through the enemy's evacuated work near the South Side Railroad. At about 4.30 p. m. deployed as skirmishers, advanced about 1,000 yards beyond temporary works erected by the enemy, left resting on South Side Railroad. At about 7 p. m. moved to the right, and formed on left of the Second New York Artillery. At 6 a. m. of the 3d instant moved to the left. This command with the brigade during the day, and also during the 4th and 5th instant. At about 6 a. m. of the 6th instant moved to the right, leading the brigade. At 9.30 a. m. advanced with the brigade in line of battle; charged with the brigade upon the enemy's wagon train, capturing 1 piece of artillery, 2 battle-flags, upward of 200 wagons, and 140 prisoners. At about 10 p. m. halted with the brigade, regiment resting upon the left. One commissioned officer and 2 enlisted men killed, 7 enlisted men wounded. At 7 a. m. of the 7th instant advanced with the brigade, moving to the left. At about 1.30 p. m. formed with the brigade in line of battle. At 3 p. m. deployed as skirmishers, charged with the brigade upon the enemy, and participated in all movements of the brigade. Relieved from picket duty at 9.30 p. m.; moved to and in rear of Third Brigade. Two enlisted men killed and 24 wounded during the day. At 7 a. m. of the 8th moved with the brigade, halting at 7 p. m. At 9.30 advanced with the brigade in pursuit of the enemy, halting at 11.30 p. m.; formed line, regiment resting on left of brigade. At about 9 a. m. of the 9th instant moved forward with the brigade. At 10 a. m. regiment deployed as skirmishers, advanced about 200 yards, halted for the space of one hour, then ordered to advance. At about 4 p. m. halted, and regiment rallied and formed in picket-line, which duty this command has been performing up to the present time.

Respectfully submitted.

G. W. SCHAEFFER,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILLIAM MCCALLISTER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

No. 31.

Report of Capt. William A. F. Stockton, One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQDQS. 140TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders of this date, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this regiment during the campaign just ended:

Having received orders, this regiment broke camp on the morning of the 29th ultimo, and marched with the division beyond Hatcher's Run. Here we were deployed as skirmishers, and advanced about two miles and took up a position and remained on outpost duty during the night.

On the morning of the 30th the lines were advanced, and we engaged the enemy and succeeded in driving them into their works beyond the Boydton plank road and cutting the telegraph communications at this point running south. Early in the morning of the 31st the regiment marched with the brigade and formed a connection with the Fifth Corps. At this locality we marched by the flank until we met the enemy's skirmishers near the Boydton plank road. A charge was made by three regiments of this brigade, of which this regiment was one, and forced the enemy from their alignment in our front, capturing 9 prisoners. On the 1st day of April twenty-five picked men, under Captains Ray and Burns, from this regiment, in pursuance with instructions from Brevet Major-General Miles, were sent to ascertain the exact locality of Gregg's cavalry and form a junction with that division. This was successfully accomplished, and a report forwarded immediately on their return to the general commanding the division. The morning of the 2d day of April we marched with the division through the enemy's works, and were immediately sent to the front in support of the skirmish line commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Glenn, of the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers. At or near the South Side Railroad the enemy offered considerable resistance, and this regiment was deployed on the line and relieved the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers. An advance was ordered, and the men charged the works of the enemy protecting the South Side Railroad, and drove them beyond the railroad one mile, capturing 18 prisoners. The loss of the command in this engagement was 7 wounded, two of whom are considered mortal. The 3d, 4th, and 5th days of April were occupied in marching on the Namozine road in pursuit of the enemy. We advanced in line of battle on the 6th instant and drove the enemy from their intrenched position, with the capture of 175 prisoners, inclusive of five officers. During the whole day the enemy were forced back and pursued with great energy, which terminated in the capture of the greater part of their train and a number of pieces of artillery. The right wing of this regiment was the first troops that advanced to and beyond the train. A strong skirmish line was posted beyond the creek, and remained until the Third Brigade, which was advancing on the right of the division line [sic]. The casualties of this day's engagement in this regiment are 1 commissioned officer killed and 3 enlisted men wounded. The 7th of April we marched toward Lynchburg, and were deployed as skirmishers at or near Farmville. The enemy, under Mahone, being intrenched in a strong position, the skirmish line, consisting of the Twenty-sixth Michigan and the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was checked by a strong line of battle located behind works. The casualties of this engagement were, in this regiment, 1 commissioned officer killed, 3 enlisted men killed, and 1 officer and 26 enlisted men taken prisoners. Our march toward Lynchburg on the 8th was uninterrupted, and we continued the pursuit of the enemy until 12 o'clock at night. On the morning of the 9th, being the Sabbath, we were placed in the advance, and through the skirmish line of this regiment the flag of truce was entertained which terminated in the surrender of the Confederate forces under the command of General Lee.

I am, very respectfully,

W. A. F. STOCKTON,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Captain McCALLISTER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 32.

Report of Col. Robert Nugent, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with circular of the 10th instant from headquarters Second Army Corps, calling for a report of operations of this brigade during the campaign commencing March 28 and ending April 16, 1865, I have the honor to report as follows:

March 29, in obedience to order, broke camp at 6 a. m. and marched to the left. The brigade—consisting of the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, Sixty-third, Sixty-ninth, and Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, at about 8 a. m. were joined by the Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, which had been transferred to this command—continued the march, crossing Hutchins's Run, until 2 p. m., when the line was halted, and line of battle being formed advanced in the direction of the enemy's line until night. Bivouacked.

March 30, resumed the march at 7 a. m., still in line of battle; advanced through the woods about two miles, the enemy falling back as we advanced, portions of the command being employed in corduroying the roads. At 4 p. m. occupied the earth-works in our front, the First and Third Brigades being in the advance; at same time furnished a detail of 450 men, with officers, for fatigue duty, who were reported at corps headquarters; also continued work on the roads through the night.

March 31, at 3 a. m. moved to the left and occupied works built by a portion of the Fifth Corps; slashed timber in our front, under a very heavy fire of artillery, until 1 p. m., when we moved about one mile to our left, connecting with the First and Third Brigades of the division; advanced, driving the enemy into his works. At about 4 p. m. retired about one-fourth of a mile and erected earth-works, in which we remained until about 3 a. m. April 1, when we moved to the right and rear; engaged during the day in constructing earth-works. At 7 p. m. moved about two miles to the left and rested on arms for the night.

April 2, at 1 a. m. moved farther to the left, about three miles, to the camp of Sheridan's cavalry, arriving there about 4 a. m.; rested until 6 a. m., and marched back upon the White Oak road about two miles, where we formed in line of battle and advanced through the wood, with skirmishers in front, toward the enemy's works. Finding that the enemy had evacuated the works we advanced at a double-quick into the works; reformed line of battle in rear of the works; continuing the pursuit, passing a camp filled with the enemy's wounded, and abandoned by them; overtook the rear guard of the enemy, which we drove before us until about noon, driving them into their works immediately in front of the South Side Railroad, where they made a stand; charged the works in connection with the Third Brigade and, owing to a terrific enfilading fire of artillery and musketry, were repulsed, and immediately reformed; charged again, capturing the works and some 150 prisoners, together with 1 battle-flag and 2 pieces of artillery, the prisoners being sent to the rear. The brigade continued the advance, crossing the South Side Railroad, and marched in the direction of the Appomattox as far as Clark's Branch; returned and bivouacked near the railroad, the casualties in the brigade being 1 commissioned officer and 2 enlisted men killed, 6 commissioned officers and 73 enlisted men wounded, and 9 enlisted men missing in action. At this time the fatigue details furnished March 30 rejoined the command.

April 3, resumed the march, and continued in a westerly direction about ten miles, where we bivouacked.

April 4, moved at 7 a. m. in the same direction, advancing about fifteen miles and bivouacking at dusk.

April 5, resumed march at daylight in a westerly direction, crossing the Danville railroad about 2 p. m., and resting upon the right of the Fifth Corps. At this place the brigade furnished a detail of 280 men from the Fourth New York Heavy Artillery as guard to prisoners to City Point.

April 6, resumed march at 6 a. m. in the direction of Amelia Court-House. About 8 a. m. encountered the enemy's rear guard, covering their wagon trains; advanced skirmishers, followed by the brigade in line of battle, the enemy disputing the ground obstinately throughout the day; succeeded in driving them some eight or nine miles and capturing the entire train. Lieutenant Ford, of the Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, captured a battle-flag this day while on the skirmish line. Casualties this day, 4 enlisted men killed, 13 enlisted men wounded, and 5 enlisted men missing in action. Bivouacked for the night after placing a part of the command on guard over the captured train. Many prisoners and stragglers were also captured, who were immediately sent to the rear.

April 7, continued the march, passing near Farmville and High Bridge; overtook the enemy again about 5 p. m., who had intrenched themselves, and having batteries in position was obliged to pass under a heavy fire of artillery to our position on the right of the First Brigade, where we supported that brigade in its charge, preventing the advance of the enemy. Rested for the night, our skirmish line having been relieved by part of the Second Division, Second Corps.

April 8, finding that the enemy had retreated during the night resumed the march, and marched in a westerly direction until 7 a. m., when we halted, resting about two hours, and resumed the march, marching four miles, and bivouacked for the night.

April 9, resumed the march at 7 a. m., and moved about six miles where we halted to await action of conference between the respective commanders. About 4 p. m. bivouacked, awaiting orders.

The total casualties of the campaign have been: Killed, 1 commissioned officer, 11 enlisted men; wounded, 8 commissioned officers, 94 enlisted men; missing in action, 14 enlisted men.*

* But see revised table, p. 582.

My thanks are due in an eminent degree to the members of my staff for their untiring zeal, particularly to Capt. P. W. Black, acting commissary of subsistence, who distinguished himself on Sunday, April 2, in carrying out my orders and assisting me in rallying the men.

In conclusion, it gives me sincere pleasure to add that the officers and men of my command behaved, under the most trying circumstances, with courage and fidelity, carrying out all orders to my complete satisfaction, they having now the proud satisfaction of seeing a stubborn enemy, whom they have combatted against for nearly four years, humbled, thereby adding their feeble mite to promote the life, prosperity, and independence of our nation.

I have the honor to remain, colonel, your obedient servant,
ROBERT NUGENT,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Lieut. Col. RICHARD A. BROWN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division.

ADDENDA.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 16, 1865.

Lieut. Col. RICHARD A. BROWN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division:

COLONEL: Having been informed that the honor of the capture of the battle-flag taken from the enemy in the charge of this brigade on the 2d of April was about to be awarded to an enlisted man of the One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, I beg leave to state that the flag was captured by Private Frank Denio, Company M, Fourth New York Artillery, which fact can be substantiated by Lieut. Col. J. J. Smith, Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. Denis F. Burke, Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, Capt. John Oldershaw, brigade inspector Second Brigade, and Lieut. Charles M. Granger, of my staff.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ROBERT NUGENT,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 16, 1865.

Respectfully returned.

A careful investigation by the general commanding the division has elicited the fact that the flag in question was first captured by Private Phillips, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, thrown down and passed over by him, and afterward secured by Private Frank Denio, Fourth Artillery.

By command of Brevet Major-General Miles:

RICHARD A. BROWN,
Lieutenant-Colonel and Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 33.

Report of Capt. Patrick H. Bird, Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-EIGHTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular from headquarters Second Army Corps, I have the honor to report that the Twenty-eighth Massa-

Massachusetts Volunteers broke up camp on the 29th of March, at 6 a. m., and marched with the brigade; crossing Hatcher's Run formed a line of battle and marched through the woods all day without striking the enemy's lines; camped at night, and resumed the march at 2 a. m. on the 30th; moved to the left a distance of about one mile and a half; moved again to the right at about 6 p. m. on the 31st. Kept moving from one point to another until the evening of April 1; were ordered to march to re-enforce General Sheridan's cavalry, arriving at our destination at 4 a. m. April 2; at 8 a. m. moved back to the right; formed a line of battle at White Oak road; moved in line of battle through the woods, and found the enemy's works evacuated; moved down the road by the flank a distance of two miles and a half; formed a line of battle and participated in the engagement near the South Side Railroad on April 2. Casualties: 2 commissioned officers and 4 enlisted men wounded. Camped at night near the road. Resumed the march at 9 a. m. on April 3; marched about twenty miles, camped at night, and marched on the 4th at 7 a. m. in a westerly direction, distance about fifteen miles. Resumed the march at 3 a. m. on the 5th, crossing the Danville and Lynchburg Railroad; camped at night, and marched on the 6th at 7 a. m. striking the enemy's rear guard; moved in line of battle all day, and camped at night. Resuming the march at 7 a. m. [7th marched] a distance of about ten miles. On the 8th moved at 7 a. m.; marched a distance of about fifteen miles; camped at night, and resumed the march at 9 a. m. on the 9th; marched a distance of about seven miles, and encamped.

During the operations of this command from the 28th of March to the 10th of April, 1865, the battalion has neither lost nor captured any battle-flags or prisoners.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. BIRD,

Captain, Commanding Battalion.

Captain WALL,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 34.

Report of Capt. William H. Terwilliger, Sixty-third New York Infantry.

REGTS. SIXTY-THIRD REGT. NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular of this date from headquarters Second Army Corps, I have the honor to submit the accompanying report of operations in my command from the 28th of March to the present date.

Broke camp on the morning of the 29th of March and joined the corps; marched across Hatcher's Run, halting about noon. 2 p. m., formed line of battle and moved upon the enemy's lines until dark, when we bivouacked for the night. On the 30th, resuming the march in line of battle at 7 a. m., moved through the woods about two miles; engaged during the evening in building corduroy road. At 3 a. m. of the 31st moved one mile and a half behind earth-works, relieving part of Fifth Army Corps and covering the right of the Third Brigade of this division, who were engaged with the enemy. At 4 a. m. of April 1 moved about a mile to the right and engaged during the day in building earth-works. At dusk moved to the left along the line of works some two miles and halted. At 1 a. m. April 2 moved to left some three miles to join Sheridan's cavalry. At 7 a. m. resumed the march, moving to the right to White Oak road, where we formed line of battle and moved upon the enemy's works, finding them evacuated; continuing the march by the flank two miles and a half, reformed line of battle, and participated with the brigade in three charges upon the enemy's defenses of the South Side Railroad. The losses in this engagement were, 1 commissioned officer killed, 1 commissioned officer and 6 enlisted men wounded, and 2 enlisted men missing in action. Encamped at night near the railroad. At 9 a. m. of 3d instant resumed the march, moving about ten miles. 4th instant, resumed march at 7 a. m., moving westerly about fifteen miles, camping at dark. Formed line at 1 a. m. 5th instant, but did not move until daylight. Crossing the Appomattox, marched toward the Danville and Richmond Railroad, which we crossed at 1 p. m., and took position on left of line, having marched about twenty miles. Bivouacked for the night behind our arms. 6th, at 6 a. m. resumed march, striking the enemy's rear guard at 7 a. m., when we formed line of battle and engaged them, following them closely all day. Assisted in the capture of the enemy's luggage train. Bivouacked at dark. Loss this day: 1 enlisted man killed on skirmish line, and 1 enlisted man killed by provost guard. April 7, continued the march; crossed High Bridge, and overtook the enemy about 2 p. m.; engaged them until dark. Loss this day: 2 enlisted men missing in action (supposed killed). Resuming the march at 5.30 a. m. of the 8th marched westerly until dusk, when we halted for two hours; continued the march until 11 p. m., when we bivouacked for the night. 9th instant, marched at 7 a. m., moving about five miles, and halted; remained here until the announcement of the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia.

During the operations for the period extending from March 28 to April 10 this command has not taken any prisoners; neither captured nor lost any artillery, battle flags, or other material.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. TERWILLIGER,

Captain, Comdg. Sixty-third Regiment New York Volunteers.

Capt. M. W. WALL,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 2d Brig., 1st Div., 2d Army Corps.

No. 35.

Report of Lieut. Col. James J. Smith, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-NINTH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,

April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular of the 10th instant from headquarters Second Army Corps, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment from the 28th day of March to the 10th day of April, 1865:

March 29, 1865, in obedience to orders received on the evening of March 28, we broke camp at 6 a. m., and, joining the brigade column, marched across Hatcher's Run and halted about noon in rear of the Third Brigade of this division. At 2 p. m. advanced in line of battle in the direction of the enemy's lines until night, when we halted and bivouacked for the night.

March 30, 1865, resumed the march in line of battle at 7 a. m., marching through the woods and acting as a second line, covering alternately the First and Third Brigades of our division. About 4 p. m. detailed 200 enlisted men and 6 commissioned officers, who were sent to corps headquarters for special duty. Engaged during the afternoon and night in constructing a cartway road.

March 31, at 3 a. m. moved to the left about one mile and a half and occupied the earth-works built by the Fifth Army Corps; engaged in slashing timber in our front, under a heavy artillery fire, until about 1 p. m., when we moved to the left and front about one mile in line of battle, connecting on our right with the First, and on the left with the Third Brigade of our division; advanced as far as the slashing in front of and driving the enemy into his works; returned about half a mile; threw up earth-works, and camped for the night.

April 1, 1865, at 3 a. m. got under arms and marched to the right and rear; engaged during the day in building earth-works. At 7 p. m. moved to the left about two miles, and bivouacked for the night.

April 2, 1865, about 1 a. m. marched to the left about three miles to the camp of Sheridan's cavalry on the White Oak road, where we camped for the night. At 7 a. m. got under arms and marched back about one mile and a half, where we formed line of battle in the woods facing the enemy's works and received orders that we were to take them by assault; soon after the skirmish line advanced and discovered that the enemy had just left; advanced at a double-quick and was the first regiment to enter the works; formed in line of battle some 400 yards inside of the works and moved after the enemy as far as the creek; crossed and received orders to deploy my regiment as skirmishers; advanced in this order, passing an abandoned rebel camp filled with wounded rebel officers and men, and overlooked the enemy's rear guard in a field and wood; drove them before us until sheltered by their works and artillery. Skirmished with the enemy until about 12 m., when we charged with our own and Third Brigade in a direct assault on the enemy's works; were repulsed and returned; reformed the regiment and joined the brigade; charged the second time with the brigade and occupied the works, capturing many prisoners, but sending them to the rear without guard. Advanced in line of battle, crossing the South Side road and marching in the direction of the Appomattox, and afterward Hatcher's Run, as far as Clark's Branch; returning, camped for the night near the South Side Railroad. Casualties: 2 commissioned officers wounded, 1 enlisted man killed, 4 enlisted men wounded. Major Moroney with six commissioned officers and 200 enlisted men rejoined the regiment from special duty, having been away since the 30th of March.

April 3, 1865, about 9 a. m. got under arms and marched westwardly about ten miles; camped for the night.

April 4, 1865, about 7 a. m. moved westwardly about fifteen miles, and went into camp just after dark.

April 5, 1865, formed line and about daylight marched to the west, crossed over the Burkeville and Richmond railroad near Jetersville, and took up position on the left of the Fifth Army Corps; afterward were marched to the rear as a reserve.

April 6, 1865, about 6 a. m. got under arms and marched toward Amelia Court-House, this regiment leading the division. Soon after leaving the earth-works seven companies of the regiment were thrown out as skirmishers. I had the honor to be placed in command of the skirmish line. After advancing about two miles I discovered the enemy's column and baggage train moving on a road on our left toward Burkeville, and about a mile and a half distant. I immediately halted the line and sent information to the major-general commanding the division. About 10 a. m. received orders to advance the skirmish line across the run and follow up the enemy's column; advanced the line across the run and reached the road on which he had just passed; met with no opposition on the right of the line; then wheeled the line to the left facing a fence and woods in which the enemy's rear guard made a bold stand. Charged and drove them out; met with great opposition from the enemy's rear guard, and also their cavalry, at every yard of the road. About 4 p. m. the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers were sent up and relieved the Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, and also the Fourth New York Heavy Artillery; remained with the skirmish line until dusk, when the division was placed in line of battle. I then collected what men I could find belonging to the Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, and also to my own regiment, to the number of about seventy-five, and was trying to find the brigade when I was met by Major-General Miles, commanding division, at the captured wagon train of the enemy, and was by him placed in charge of said train. During the day we had casualties on the skirmish line as follows: Commissioned officer wounded, 1; enlisted men killed, 2; enlisted men wounded, 6.

April 7, 1865, the three companies with the colors, under command of Capt. R. H. Milliken, marched with the brigade, crossing the Appomattox River under High Bridge, and marched as far as Farmville, where the enemy were met in force at about 5 p. m. This portion of the regiment became engaged with the enemy on the right of the First Brigade, the engagement lasting about half an hour, and the loss of the regiment was 4 enlisted men wounded. About 6 a. m. I was informed by Captain Black, aide-de-camp, First Division, that I would be relieved of duty as guard to the captured train by a small regiment from the Fourth Brigade of this division. About an hour afterward, no regiment making its appearance to relieve me, I saw Colonel Batchelder, chief quartermaster Army of the Potomac, riding through the train, and I informed him of my duties, and also mentioned that I expected to have been relieved early that morning, but no regiment had reported to relieve me. He said that he would see General Meade about it, and soon after returned to me with orders for me, from General Meade, to remove all the ammunition from the wagons, harness up the mules to ambulances, and send as many as possible of them to the front and turn them over to the Second Corps; also after the column and trains had passed to burn all the wagons, ambulances, caissons, limbers, &c., and explode the ammunition that could not be brought away. Soon after receiving these orders Captain Lane, of the Sixty-sixth New York Volunteers, reported to me to take charge of the captured train. Believing that it was my duty to have the orders I received from General Meade, through Colonel Batchelder, effectually carried out, I deemed it my duty to remain until it was accomplished, and when the troops and train had all passed sent about fifty ambulances forward on the road, in charge of Captain Lane, and then burned the train and ammunition, consisting of 203 army wagons, 63 ambulances, 3 caissons and limbers, about 230,000 rounds of small-arm ammunition, and about 450 shell, canister, &c.; also on the road 8 wagons, 4 ambulances, 3 limbers and caissons, and 60 rounds of 12-pounder shell fuses and friction primers, and joined the brigade same evening, near Farmville.

April 8, 1865, about 5 a. m. marched westerly until about 7 p. m., when we camped. About 11 p. m. got under arms and marched to the front about four miles, where we camped for the night.

April 9, 1865, marched out at about 7 a. m., moved about six miles, halting at different times until about 2 p. m., when we were drawn up alongside of the road, and soon afterward received the joyful news of the surrender to the United States forces of the troops of the so-called Confederate States, comprising their Army of Northern Virginia.

During the operations from March 28 to April 10, 1865, this regiment has taken a number of prisoners and sent them to the rear also has neither taken nor lost in action flags or other material.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, captain, your obedient servant,

JAMES J. SMITH,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Sixty-ninth New York Veteran Vols.

Capt. M. W. WALL,

Adj. Asst. Adj. Gen., 2d Brig., 1st Div., 2d Army Corps.

---

No. 36.

Report of Lieut. Col. Denis F. Burke, Eighty-eighth New York Infantry.

HQRS. EIGHTY-EIGHTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 11, 1865.

In compliance with orders, I have the honor to forward the following report of operations from the 28th ultimo to date:

March 28, were encamped near Hatcher's Run, under orders to move. 29th, moved at 6 a. m. down the Vaughan road and crossed Hatcher's Run; marched about ten miles and rested for the night. On the 30th advanced in line of battle, through woods, about two miles; were employed in building corduroy roads, and furnished detail of one captain, one lieutenant, four sergeants, six corporals, and fifty privates for fatigue duty. On the 31st advanced at 3 a. m. to the rear of the Fifth Corps, and relieved them at daylight; lay in the works until 10 a. m., when we moved to the left, where the division engaged the enemy; were ordered to advance and charge the enemy's works, but the order being countermanded we fell back and built breast-works, where we remained until the following morning at 2 a. m. April 1, moved to the rear and occupied the works. At 10 a. m. advanced and built a new line of works; remained until evening, when we moved to the left to support pickets; remained until 2 a. m. next morning (2d); moved along the White Oak road and formed line across the road, and advanced through the woods until within a few hundred yards of the enemy's works; finding the enemy [had] left we advanced double-quick in pursuit of them, having skirmishers in our front all morning; marched through to South Side Railroad, where we found the enemy intrenched; charged their line of works, were repulsed, reformed and charged again, and succeeded in capturing them, with many prisoners; continued our advance across the South Side Railroad, through woods along River road about six miles, and returned and encamped near South Side Railroad for the night. April 3, 10 a. m. marched in pursuit about fifteen miles and halted. 4th, continued our march until night and halted. 5th, marched on and connected with Fifth Corps, and out about one mile threw up works and halted. 6th, moved forward about two miles, when we came in sight of the enemy's wagon train; rested on a hill while our batteries were shelling them; fell in and marched about half a mile, crossing the Appomattox River and formed line on the other side; advanced along the road on which the enemy's train was moving; when within a short distance of them were ordered to the right to a point where part of the skirmish line of the First and Third Divisions were held at bay, and was directed by Major Church, First Division staff, to advance and engage the enemy; deployed and drove the enemy, capturing many prisoners and one battle-flag. This flag was captured by Lieut. George W. Ford, Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, who on this occasion, as well as through the whole campaign, acted with great gallantry. Here we were detailed, by order of General Miles, to burn the wagons and destroy their contents. 8th, rejoined the brigade and continued the pursuit, marching about fifteen miles. 9th, continued the pursuit up to near Clover Hill, where we halted, the enemy having surrendered.

Our casualties during the campaign were 4 enlisted men wounded.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

DENIS F. BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers.

ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL, SECOND BRIGADE.

---

No. 37.

Report of Maj. Seward F. Gould, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery.

History of the operations of the Fourth New York Artillery from March 28, 1865, to April 10, 1865:

On the 28th of March, 1865, 9 p. m., orders were received to pack up and be ready to move at a moment's notice. On the morning of the 29th, at 6 o'clock, we left camp and marched toward Hatcher's Run. About 8 a. m. we were transferred to the Second Brigade, First Division, Second Army Corps, Col. Robert Nagent commanding. About 10 p. m. we formed a line of battle and rested all night. On the morning of the 30th, about 6 a. m., we advanced in line of battle through the woods and across a swamp. After we crossed the swamp we formed a line of battle on the Boydton plank road; there we heard heavy skirmishing in front of us. We stacked arms and laid a corduroy road. About 4 p. m. we received orders to advance and occupy the breast-works in front of us, at the same time supporting Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery. About 5 p. m. a detachment of 400 men were sent on picket. At 7 p. m. orders were received to advance half a mile and relieve the Third Division, Fifth Army Corps. We remained there under arms until 6 a. m. of the morning of the 31st of March, 1865. About 7 a. m. we occupied the works, when the enemy opened a heavy artillery fire on us, which lasted about two hours; the ground lost by the Third Division, Fifth Army Corps, was retaken by the Second Brigade, First Division, Second Army Corps; we had 1 officer (Maj. D. F. Hamlin) and 5 privates wounded. About sundown threw out a line of skirmishers, and fell back fifty rods and threw up a line of works and remained there until 4 a. m. of the morning of the 1st of April; we fell back to the Boydton plank road and remained there for three hours, when orders were received to move to the left, on the Boydton plank road, to re-enforce the Second Division of the Fifth Army Corps, and remained there until 6 a. m. of the 2d of April, when we marched back on the same road about three miles, and at 9 a. m. occupied the enemy's breast-works, which they had evacuated. We then pursued the enemy for about two miles, when we overtook them and gave them battle. About 3 p. m. we charged on the enemy and were repulsed; reformed about 3.45 p. m. and charged again, and took their works and a large number of prisoners. In the first charge the regiment lost 97 killed, wounded, and missing. Two men of Company A, named, respectively, James C. Bogan and David A. Winans, captured 2 pieces of artillery and turned them at the enemy, and at the same time over 150 of the enemy surrendered, but we advanced and left them in the rear; at the same time Private Frank Denio, of Company M, captured one of the enemy's battle-flags. We then pursued the enemy for about three miles in the direction of Petersburg, when we received orders to return and camp by the railroad for the night. At 6 a. m. of the 3d of April we started again and marched fourteen miles and camped for the night.

About 6 a. m. of the 4th of April we started and passed the Fifth Army Corps and camped for the night. Advanced next morning, 5th of April, about two miles, and overtook the enemy's rear guard and wagon train near Amelia Springs. The regiment was then sent out as skirmishers, and engaged the enemy. We drove the enemy about five miles that day, taking a large number of prisoners and losing about eighteen wounded. The regiment having been relieved from the skirmish line rejoined the brigade at 10 a. m. of the 6th of April. We engaged the enemy again on the 7th of April, near Burkeville, and drove the enemy across the Appomattox River, capturing their works and a number of pieces of artillery and quite a number of prisoners. We camped for the night near Farmville. Engaged the enemy on the morning of the 8th of April five miles from Buckingham Court-House, drove them out of their works, when we were relieved by the Sixth Army Corps. We marched all that day and camped for the night about twelve miles from Buckingham Court-House. On the morning of the 9th of April we marched two miles, when we received the news that General Robert Lee, of the so-called U. S. Army, had surrendered his whole army to Lieut. Gen. U. S. Grant.

S. F. GOULD,

Major, Commanding Fourth New York Artillery.

---

No. 38.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Clinton D. MacDougall, One hundred and eleventh New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with instructions, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this brigade in the campaign beginning the 29th of March and ending the 9th of April:

On March 29, at 6 a. m., the brigade, under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. J. Madill, left camp and marched across Hatcher's Run. The brigade took its place in line of battle formed by the First Division, sending the One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment out as skirmishers, and constructed temporary breast-works. During the afternoon the brigade advanced in line of battle to different positions without meeting the enemy, halted at dark, threw up breast-works, and bivouacked for the night.

March 30, the advance in line of battle was resumed. At about 11 o'clock the skirmish line of the One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment was relieved by a detail from the One hundred and eleventh Regiment. At noon our skirmishers met those of the enemy and drove them across the Boydton plank road. The line of battle advanced beyond the road, halted in view of the enemy's main works, constructed breast-works, and bivouacked for the night.

March 31, at 4 a. m. the brigade moved by the left flank, following the Fourth Brigade, and took position in a line of breast-works, with the right on the Boydton plank road, which works were occupied the day before by the Fifth Corps. At 11 a. m. a detail of 100 men from the Seventh Regiment and Thirty-ninth Regiment were sent out as skirmishers. At noon the brigade advanced in line of battle, found the enemy posted on the crest of a hill, charged on him and drove him in great confusion from his position. The brigade charged with the greatest enthusiasm, driving the enemy rapidly back from point to point, capturing one battle-flag and many prisoners. At night breast-works were thrown up.

April 1, before daylight the brigade moved back to the same position occupied the previous day; before being ordered to charge threw forward the right wing almost in a right angle to the former line. At sundown the brigade marched back to the same position held the night before, and took part in the movement to the left. At 11 o'clock the One hundred and eleventh Regiment was ordered by Brevet Major-General Miles to reconnoiter the enemy's works and, if possible, to carry them by assault. After a careful examination, having fully developed the enemy's position with a skirmish line, the Third Division, on the right of the brigade, co-operating, the result of an attack appearing doubtful, the regiment was withdrawn. The brigade continued the march toward the left until 4 a. m., then made a short rest.

April 2, at about 7 a. m. the brigade marched about three miles back in the same direction from which it came the night before, formed, at 8.30, in line of battle, and advanced toward the enemy's works, throwing out the One hundred and eleventh Regiment as skirmishers. After a severe skirmish, in which the enemy used artillery very freely, they abandoned their works, and fell back before our skirmishers, and at 9.30 the battle-flag of the Third Brigade waved as the first flag over the rebel works. The march toward the South Side Railroad was then continued, driving the enemy's rear guard across Hatcher's Run, causing them to burn caissons and baggage in their flight. At about 12 o'clock the enemy was found, strongly intrenched, having six pieces of artillery in position; the brigade, in connection with the Second Brigade, taking position on the left, charged, but was repulsed with a very heavy loss, General Madill himself being severely wounded. Brevet Major-General Miles, commanding division, assigned me to the command of the brigade. A second charge was made with the same result as the first. In this charge I received myself a severe flesh wound in the right arm. I then received orders to withdraw the brigade. At about 4 p. m. a third charge was made, and this time, with the assistance of a well-directed fire from Captain Clark's (First New Jersey) battery, the enemy was driven back, his works and the South Side Railroad held by us. The brigade advanced about one mile over the railroad and then went into camp for the night.

April 3, the brigade, having the lead of the First Division, marched in pursuit of the enemy from 8 a. m. until 8 p. m.; was engaged during this day's march to repair the road.

April 4, at 6 o'clock in the morning the brigade left the bivouac, advanced with the division about three miles, was then ordered back to repair the roads and to bring forward the supply train of the Second and Fifth Army Corps and the Cavalry Corps. The brigade was at work until late in the night.

April 5, at 2 o'clock in the morning the brigade started and, after having succeeded in bringing up the different trains, marched twenty miles and reached the division, then in position near Jetersville, at 9 p. m.

April 6, the brigade took part in the several attacks made by the First Division on the enemy's rear guard. The Seventh Regiment was sent in the morning for the protection of the artillery. About 2 p. m. the One hundred and eleventh Regiment was thrown out as skirmishers, covering the front of the division, and drove the enemy constantly before them, routing him frequently from strongly intrenched positions. At 5 o'clock the brigade charged, under a very heavy fire of artillery and musketry, on a battery which the enemy had in position on the other side of a small stream, well supported by cavalry and infantry, protecting a train of about 140 wagons, and two pieces of artillery in the valley below; drove the enemy back and captured the whole train and artillery; the First Brigade having at the same time captured the upper end and left flank of the same train, containing still a large number of wagons. The brigade then crossed the run and bivouacked for the night, being the first brigade of the division across.

April 7, the brigade advanced at 6 a. m., came at about 10 o'clock in view of High Bridge, where the enemy was strongly fortified. The Thirty-ninth and Fifty-second Regiments were deployed as skirmishers along the bank of the river, and assisted the crossing of the Second Division. After a short resistance the enemy was driven back, and the brigade crossed the river and resumed the march toward Farmville. At 5 p. m. the enemy was found in a strong position; the brigade formed line of battle under a heavy artillery fire, moved then in different positions on the left flank of the enemy, and finely supported the charge of the First Brigade. At dark breast-works were thrown up and the brigade bivouacked in line of battle. The Fifty-second Regiment was sent out as pickets.

April 8, early in the morning it was discovered that the enemy had left the position. The brigade was ordered at 6.30 a. m. to advance, being the leading brigade of the division. The One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment and One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment and a part of the One hundred and eleventh Regiment were sent out as skirmishers. About two miles beyond New Store the brigade arrived at sunset, and rested for two hours, then resumed the march and advanced still three miles, formed line of battle and rested during the night.

April 9, at 7 o'clock the brigade marched, continuing the advance until about 2 p. m.; halted until about sundown, when (Major-General Meade having established his headquarters just opposite and within two rods of our right flank) it was announced from army headquarters that General Lee had surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia. The Third Brigade, being in this position, were the first in the corps (if not in the army) to hear the glad news. Their joy knew no bounds; cheer after cheer rent the air. Major-General Meade rode along the lines and was greeted with the wildest enthusiasm.

Throughout the campaign officers and men have behaved with great gallantry. Although frequently very short of rations and much exhausted from the long and fatiguing marches, not a murmur was heard during the whole eleven days marching and fighting.

I cannot speak too highly of the conduct of my staff. Especially would I call attention to Capt. H. Dodd, my acting assistant adjutant-general. His gallantry and energy in action are distinguished and much to be commended. He was of great service to me during the campaign by the faithful and cheerful manner in which he discharged his duties. I respectfully recommend that he be brevetted major.

Capt. L. L. Rose, commissary of subsistence, being upon duty on the staff, was frequently under fire, and was of great assistance to me in selecting the line of march.

I inclose the reports of my regimental commanders.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. D. MACDOUGALL,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Lieut. Col. R. A. BROWN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 39.

Report of Lieut. Col. Anthony Pokorny, Seventh New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTH REGIMENT,

April 15, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with orders received from brigade headquarters, I beg to submit the following account of the part taken by this regiment in the recent operations:

The regiment left its camp near Hatcher's Run on the morning of March 29, crossed Hatcher's Run at about 3 p. m., and immediately began building breast-works. At 4 o'clock formed line of battle and advanced about five miles and a half, where the regiment rested for the night in a breast-work evacuated by the enemy.

On March 30 advanced at 4 o'clock in the morning about one mile, building several times breast-works on our road; heard heavy picket-firing at our right and prepared for an engagement.

On the 31st, at 4 a. m., we marched along the breast-work in order to relieve the Fifth Corps, which was engaged with the enemy; 100 men of the regiment were sent as reinforcement to the Fourth Brigade, which was in front. At 11 o'clock the regiment finds itself engaged also; it charges the enemy, drives him out of a farm, advances farther, and finally remains in the woods, where breast-works were at once erected. Our loss on this day amounts to 1 officer killed, 3 officers and 16 men wounded. Eighty-five prisoners in the hands of the regiment proves that it has done its duty. In the night ensuing we give a picket of thirty-five men, who rejoin us in the morning of the 1st of April. The regiment returns to the position from where it had marched the day previous. In the evening we advance again to the breast-works abandoned in the morning and remain there about one hour. We give a picket of twenty-five men, who take part in a reconnaissance undertaken by General De Trobriand and lose about 13 men wounded and missing. The regiment along with the whole division marches afterward to join Sheridan's army, which it reaches at about 2 o'clock in the night.

On the morning of April 2 we advanced toward South Side Railroad; we march in line of battle, forty men of the regiment acting as flankers on our left. At 9 o'clock reach the enemy's breast-works, when our flankers were employed as skirmishers in the front; found the breast-works abandoned. Advance about four miles, till near South Side Railroad, and attacked the enemy in his strong intrenchments. The first charge was made almost exclusively by this brigade, but being vastly inferior in numbers we had to retreat with heavy loss. Some artillery came to our assistance. A second charge, in which the regiment took the lead, was likewise unsuccessful. At a third charge, assisted by Colonel Nugent's brigade, we dislodged the enemy, and encamped near South Side Railroad for the night, after having given a guard of forty men to watch the prisoners. Our loss on this day consisted in 1 major and 4 line officers wounded, 14 men killed, 40 men wounded, 1 lieutenant and 27 men missing.

On the morning of April 3 the regiment detailed a lieutenant and twenty-five men as guard for the ammunition train, and at 10 a. m. begins its march toward Danville railroad.

On the 4th, in the morning, resumes its march, but after having made six miles it is ordered to return about five miles for the sake of mending the almost impassable roads.

On the 5th the regiment advances again in order to join the division, which it reaches late in the evening at Danville railroad.

On the 6th the regiment is detailed to cover Clark's and Dakin's batteries, who succeed in capturing part of the enemy's train, at which occasion the battle-flag of the First South Carolina Regiment falls as a trophy into our hands. In the night we received the order to rejoin the brigade.

On the 7th, at about 6 o'clock, we march toward Lynchburg, crossed the railroad near Farmville, and at about 11 o'clock meet the enemy in the woods, where we find us heavily shelled, losing seven men by one shell. The regiment details 100 men as skirmishers, who lose 1 officer, slightly wounded, and 8 men killed and wounded. After this detail has been recalled the Fifth New Hampshire Regiment was repulsed by the enemy, and another picket detail required of us. It was this detail which had our flag of truce, and the enemy's passing through.

On the 8th, a. m., the enemy had left his position in our front, and we march in pursuit as far as New Shore. After a short halt the regiment advances in skirmish line; some little firing takes place, when the brigade joins us. At 11 p. m. the regiment advances about five miles further.

On the 9th, in the morning, the regiment resumes its march till about 10 a. m., when General Meade is seen passing by. Another advance of about one mile, and the regiment goes into camp amidst a cloud of rumors concerning peace conferences, surrenderings of armies, &c.

On the 11th the regiment begins its march toward Richmond, and after long and tiresome marches, in which this regiment distinguished itself by being almost entirely without strugglers, we reach Burkeville, where we are in camp now.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A. POKORNY,

Lieut. Col., Comdg. Seventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

Capt. H. DODD,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 40.

Report of Maj. John McE. Hyde, Thirty-ninth New York Infantry.

HQDQRS. THIRTY-NINTH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment since the 28th ultimo:

In compliance with orders, the Thirty-ninth Regiment New York Veteran Volunteers left camp at 8 a. m. March 29 with the brigade, and moved across Hatcher's Run, where line of battle was formed at 11 a. m. At 4 p. m. an advance was ordered, and we moved forward without opposition until after dark, when we bivouacked for the night. At daylight March 30 the advance was continued in line of battle, without opposition, until we reached the Quaker road. A line of breast-works was constructed a short distance beyond the road, and bivouac ordered for the night. Early in the morning of the 31st we moved to the left and occupied a line of breast-works on the Boydton plank road, thrown up by the Fifth Corps. At 10 a. m. the brigade advanced for the purpose of attacking the enemy. After moving in line of battle nearly a mile we struck their skirmish line. A left wheel was made by the brigade for the purpose of attacking the enemy on his flank. As the Thirty-ninth was on the extreme right men were deployed to protect that flank of the brigade until the entire regiment was deployed as skirmishers. The First Brigade advancing over my line I withdrew my regiment and rejoined the brigade. Colonel Funk was wounded in the hip early in the engagement, and I have since been in command of the regiment. After rejoining the brigade the division line was straightened and breast-works thrown up.

Before daylight on the morning of the 1st instant we moved to the rear and occupied the original line of works on the Boydton road, and afterward threw up a new line a short distance in advance. In the afternoon we advanced again [to] the line erected the previous day, and lay there ready to receive an attack, demonstrations being made on different portions of the enemy's lines by other regiments. At 1 a. m. 2d instant we moved rapidly to the left, and halted at 4 a. m. somewhere near Dinwiddie Court-House. At 6 a. m. we returned and formed line of battle in front of the enemy's works, ready to attack. Soon after it was ascertained that they had evacuated, and we advanced at the double-quick to occupy their works. The colors of the Thirty-ninth were the third on their works. The advance was continued until the enemy was found in an intrenched position on the South Side Railroad. The Third Brigade was ordered to charge them, and although the men were much exhausted from loss of sleep the previous night and the rapid marching they had gone through yet they advanced gallantly through a piece of woods and across an open field, exposed to the fire of two batteries and from the enemy in his breast-works. The Thirty-ninth was on the extreme left of the brigade, and succeeded in reaching the crest of a hill, and if a few shots could have been thrown from a battery of our own I think [they] could have entered the enemy's works. At this time the right of the brigade fell back, and as, from my advanced position, I was in danger of being surrounded I was compelled to fall back. One officer and 2 men, who were unable to keep up on the retreat, were captured at this point. Line was again formed in the edge of the woods, and a skirmish line thrown out on the left and in advance. I would call attention to the conduct of First Lieut. Baron W. Briggs and Second Lieuts. Charles Menzler, and Allen M. Baker, who succeeded in establishing this line under great difficulty, on account of the exhaustion of the men, &c. A second charge was ordered, this time supported by artillery, but we did not succeed in breaking the enemy's line. As most of my regiment was on the skirmish line the few men I had could do very little. My colors, however, were as far in advance as any in the brigade. Line was again formed on edge of woods, and presently the enemy was observed leaving in confusion, having been flanked in their position by the Second Brigade. We now advanced across the railroad, and my regiment, with others, was advanced for the purpose of completing the connection on the skirmish line. Afterward rejoined the brigade and bivouacked for the night. At 6 a. m. on the morning of the 3d we moved forward, meeting no opposition, and marched until 9 p. m., when we bivouacked for the night. On the 4th started at 6 p. m., moved forward three miles, when we were ordered back to meet trains and repair roads; worked until 10 p. m., and then bivouacked. At 5 a. m. morning of the 5th resumed the march, meeting the division at 9 p. m. at Jetersville and bivouacked.

On the morning of the 6th moved forward about one mile, when we met Lee's rear guard, and skirmished and fought all day, driving the enemy, and at 5 p. m. participated in the capture of a part of a wagon train. Crossed Monkey Run and bivouacked for the night. At 6 a. m. morning of the 7th moved forward to High Bridge, drove the enemy from their works and across the river, and continued the pursuit to within half a mile of Farnville. Moved to the right of Farnville and erected works, subjected to heavy artillery fire. Bivouacked for the night. Enemy in strong force in our front.

Early on the morning of the 8th it was discovered that the enemy had abandoned his position, and we immediately started in pursuit, marching without opposition until 6 p. m., when we bivouacked. At 9 p. m. again moved forward about three miles. At 6 a. m. on the morning of the 9th moved forward about three miles, when we halted, awaiting the result of a flag of truce. At 4 p. m. the surrender of Lee was announced.

Respectfully submitted.

J. McE. HYDE,

Major, Comdg. Thirty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers.

Capt. H. DODD,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 41.

Report of Lieut. Col. Henry M. Karples, Fifty-second New York Infantry.

HQs. FIFTY-SECOND REGT. NEW YORK VETERAN VOLS.,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit report of operations.

This regiment, in accordance with orders, after being relieved from picket by troops of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, left its encampment in front of Petersburg March 29, 1865, 10 a. m., and joined the brigade on the south side of Hatcher's Run at 2 p. m. the same day. The brigade was in line of battle and threw up breast-works. About 5 p. m. orders to advance were received. The regiment advanced in line of battle with the brigade, second in line, about a mile and a half, through a densely wooded and swampy country, and halted about 8 p. m. in line of battle on the left of the First Brigade and threw up breast-works. March 30, at daybreak the regiment moved forward with the brigade about half a mile, halted and threw up breast-works; advanced again about a quarter of a mile and again built breast-works; halted on a road until the morning of March 31, when we moved by the left flank about two miles, troops of the Third Division relieving us, and took position on the Boydton road, relieving troops of the Fifth Army Corps. The command remained in this position until about 2 p. m., when it advanced in line with the brigade, over the works and through the woods, about one mile, where it met the enemy, who occupied a crest of hills in our front. A charge was ordered, and the enemy driven from his position. The regiment lost 3 commissioned officers killed, 2 commissioned officers wounded, 6 enlisted men killed, 30 enlisted men wounded, and 5 enlisted men missing. It then moved by the left flank, and again by the right flank about one mile, and to the rear about one mile, where we bivouacked for the night.

April 1, at 4 a. m. the command returned to its position on the Boydton road, somewhat to the right of the one occupied in the morning, and remained there until 9 a. m., when it threw up a line of works at right angles with the Boydton road. It moved from this position at about 5 p. m., and reoccupied our old position of the same morning at about 9 p. m., gradually extending the lines to the left about one mile, remaining stationary about two hours, when we moved along the works by the left flank until we struck the White Oak road, and joined General Sheridan about 4 a. m. April 2. The command moved down the road at 6 a. m., formed in line of battle in front of the enemy's works, advancing over them in line of battle to the left, toward the South Side Railroad, about two miles, until we struck the enemy. A charge was made, but repulsed by the enemy. The troops were reformed on the crest of a hill opposite their old position and slight breast-works thrown up. My horse was shot under me in this charge and I received a painful contusion on the right foot, which compelled me temporarily to place Major Ritzius in command of the regiment. A second charge being subsequently made, was again repulsed. The position was upon a third advance taken. The command lost—commissioned officer slightly wounded, 1; enlisted men killed, 3; enlisted men wounded, 18; enlisted men missing, 12. The regiment advanced over the South Side Railroad and bivouacked for the night, remaining until about 11 a. m. April 3, when we moved forward by the left flank, the brigade being rear guard, and ordered back to repair roads, resuming our march at daybreak April 4 to rejoin the division, which we did at about 10 p. m. the same day, bivouacking for the night. April 5, we resumed our march at 9 a. m., on the Lynchburg road, and formed in line of battle with the brigade in reserve. At about 4 p. m. we moved into the front line on the right of the First Brigade, charging the enemy and advancing over Sailor's Creek. I was ordered to advance my regiment as skirmishers to the crest of the hill, where I remained until relieved, when I rejoined the brigade and went into bivouac.

April 6, the regiment moved forward at 6 a. m. on the road until it reached the Appomattox at High Bridge. I was ordered to the right to effect a crossing, if possible, but found the river too deep, and was ordered back to the brigade, which resumed its march, crossing the river, the enemy having been driven. I was then ordered to advance a skirmish line, consisting of my regiment and Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, to connect with the Second Division, covering the flank of the Third Brigade, and subsequently ordered to rejoin the brigade. The command then advanced in line of battle, under the enemy's artillery fire, changing position several times, until we formed on the left of the Lynchburg road. I was then ordered out with my command and a detail from the Seventh New York Volunteers to relieve the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers on the picket-line that night. I found the enemy's position evacuated about 2 a. m., and at daybreak April 7 advanced my line about two miles, when I was relieved and rejoined the brigade, with which the regiment advanced in column, nothing of interest taking place until April 9, when General Lee surrendered his army.

The officers and men did their duty fully, under all hardships and privations.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY M. KARPLES,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. H. DODT,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 42.

Report of Lieut. Col. Lewis W. Husk, One hundred and eleventh New York Infantry.

HQRS. 111TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command in the campaign commencing March 29, 1865:

At 6 a. m. of March 29 the regiment broke camp, and with the brigade moved in the direction of Hatcher's Run, which was crossed before noon, and from thence moved some three miles to the west, where we halted and constructed temporary breast-works. During the afternoon the regiment advanced with the brigade in line of battle toward the enemy, meeting no opposition, and halting for the night in a thick wood. In the morning (March 30) the advance in line of battle was continued. Two lines of breast-works were built and abandoned for a further advance, as our skirmishers compelled the enemy to retire. In the afternoon we reached an old line of works within easy range of the enemy's batteries. Here a considerable action took place, in which a portion of the regiment, under Lieut. J. P. Fishback, was engaged, with a loss of two men wounded. On the morning of the 31st we moved about a mile to the left, occupying works built by the Fifth Corps, and just before noon the division advanced in line of battle to check the enemy, who were pressing back the Second and Third Divisions of the Fifth Corps. The enemy were strongly posted on the crest of a hill, behind hastily constructed works, and to dislodge them the whole line was ordered to charge. This regiment advanced with the greatest enthusiasm, gallantly carrying the enemy's works, completely routing them and capturing 1 stand of colors and over 100 prisoners. A detail from the regiment, under Lieut. E. W. Hoff, were engaged as skirmishers during most of the day, and performed their duty admirably, driving the enemy to the shelter of their fortifications and capturing some prisoners. A new line of works was erected about a mile in advance of those occupied in the morning. The loss of the regiment during the day was 3 men killed, 23 wounded, and 1 missing.

On the evening of April 1 the regiment was ordered to reconnoiter the enemy's works in our front and, if practicable, carry them by assault; but after a careful reconnaissance the regiment was withdrawn and, with the division, joined General Sheridan. On the 2d of April the regiment had the advance of the division, and was the first to enter the works which the enemy was abandoning. Following to the vicinity of the South Side Railroad the regiment participated in the three assaults upon the enemy which resulted in the capture of the railroad. Our loss in this affair was 1 commissioned officer and 4 enlisted men killed, 1 commissioned officer and 46 enlisted men wounded, and 2 commissioned officers and 16 enlisted men missing. In the operations subsequent to the 2d, which resulted in the destruction of the Army of Northern Virginia, this regiment performed its full share of duty, meeting with a further loss of five men wounded.

The conduct of the regiment during the campaign, both on the march and in action, is worthy of high praise. Many of the men had but recently entered the service, but they generally behaved with the steadiness of veterans, and the regiment has, I believe, fully sustained its former reputation.

Very respectfully,

LEWIS W. HUSK,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. H. Dorr,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 43.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph Hyde, One hundred and twenty-fifth New York Infantry.

HQDQs. 125TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,
April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to forward the following report of the action taken by this regiment in the campaign commencing March 29 and ending April 9, 1865:

The regiment broke camp on the morning of March 29, crossing Hatcher's Run, taking up position on the Vaughan road, on which and the succeeding day it moved in line of battle, and intrenched on the Boydton road, near the Quaker road. March 31, the regiment was engaged with the enemy, with a loss to the command of 3 killed and 14 wounded. April 2, the regiment was again engaged with the enemy, with a loss to the command of 2 killed, including Capt. John Quay, of Company D, and 13 wounded. The regiment was again under severe fire on the 6th and 7th instant. On the 8th instant the regiment was on the skirmish line, and captured about 100 prisoners, 1 piece of artillery, 15 wagons, several caissons, and a large number of small-arms.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH HYDE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. H. Dorr,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 44.

Report of Capt. J. Hart Wilder, One hundred and twenty-sixth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 126TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this battalion since March 23, 1865:

This battalion moved from camp near Petersburg at 8 a. m. March 29, 1865, crossing Hatcher's Run. After the division was in position and the advance commenced, this battalion was sent out onto the skirmish line. March 30, at about noon the enemy's pickets were met and driven across the Boydton plank road. Here the battalion was relieved from the skirmish line and rejoined the brigade. March 31, at 4 a. m. the battalion, with the rest of the brigade, moved still farther to the left, resting behind breast-works on the plank road about two hours, then moved in line of battle toward the enemy's works, but soon the brigade made a left wheel, bringing the line perpendicular to the enemy's works. In this position we moved forward, capturing many prisoners and losing some killed and wounded. Among the wounded were Capt. John B. Geddis, commanding battalion, and Lieutenants Hopper and Pasco; but one private killed. At night breast-works were built in front of where we rested in the morning.

April 1, moved back to the works where the morning before we rested, and built breast-works nearly perpendicular to those. There we remained until nearly sundown, when we were moved again to the works in front. Soon after we were marching to the left, and continued the march until 4 a. m. of the 2d instant, halting near Dinwiddie Court-House. At 7 a. m. we were moved to the right again about three miles, halted, formed a line, and rested. Soon the order forward, double-quick, was given, and the troops crossed the enemy's main line of works at 10 a. m. About noon we found the enemy intrenched. We charged his works twice and were repulsed; the third, however, we succeeded in driving him and capturing many prisoners. The troops then moved on about a mile and went into camp for the night. April 3, this battalion, with the rest of the brigade, marched to the vicinity of Lemon Grove Church and encamped for the night. April 4, this battalion, with the remainder of the brigade, repaired roads to enable the wagon trains to pass.

April 5, we marched with the wagon train and joined the division at sundown on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, near Amelia Springs. On the morning of the 6th we moved out and soon found the enemy, but the troops of this command were not engaged until afternoon, when we were moved in line of battle, charging the enemy whenever they would make a stand. At about 5 p. m. we charged through a piece of woods and came upon quite a large wagon train. The enemy had one piece of artillery in position still farther on but succeeded in escaping with it. We moved on the hill where this piece had been and encamped for the night. There were no casualties in this command during the day. April 7, this battalion was not engaged. Though under a sharp artillery fire in the afternoon there were no casualties in this command. The enemy were found to be strongly intrenched. At night we built breast-works and rested behind them until daylight. April 8, this battalion went onto the skirmish line and moved as skirmishers during the day. Found none of the enemy, except stragglers, until near sundown, when a few cavalrymen made their appearance. At 8 p. m. we were relieved from the skirmish line and rejoined the column, and marched about four miles and went into camp. April 9, at 8 a. m. the command was again in motion and moved slowly on until nearly noon, when there seemed to be a lull, and we rested quietly along the road. Soon after it was announced that Lee had surrendered his entire force.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

I. HART WILDER,

Captain, Commanding.

Capt. H. Dorr,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 45.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. John Ramsey, Eighth New Jersey Infantry, commanding Fourth Brigade.

HQRS. FOURTH BRIG., FIRST DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,

Near Burkeville, Va., April 14, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with orders from headquarters Second Army Corps, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command during the recent campaign:

We broke camp near Petersburg on the 29th ultimo, marched to and formed line of battle at Gravelly Creek, my left resting on the creek, my command being on the extreme left of the corps, and connected with the Fifth Corps by picket-line, and subsequently by line of battle. Shortly after leaving camp the Fourth New York Heavy Artillery was detached from my command and assigned to the Second Brigade, and the One hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers (Colonel Egbert) relieved from duty with the First Brigade and assigned to mine. During the night the line of battle had become disconnected by the Fifth Corps advancing through a dense wood and swamp. It was absolutely impossible to preserve a line of battle, or rather a connection, in consequence of the impassability of woods, swamps, and the impenetrable darkness overhanging all.

30th, moved forward at daylight and connected with the Fifth Corps, with left of my line resting at the Boydton plank road and the right crossing the Dalney Mill road. During the day the whole line was advanced about 1,000 yards. At this point the skirmishers were briskly engaged during the day, the enemy using their artillery on both of our lines, skirmish and line of battle, with but little effect. I had two companies of the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers at this point, under the command of Maj. G. D. Pifer, of that regiment. The conduct of the major and his men was worthy of emulation. The enemy made several efforts to capture the line, but was unsuccessful; but was successful in driving in a portion of the line on my immediate left, composed of troops of the Fifth Corps, with whom I connected. Pending the relaxation of artillery fire the men were constantly engaged in strengthening the temporary works which they occupied.

31st, relieved from the position held yesterday by Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister, commanding Third Brigade, Third Division, Second Corps, and occupied a line of works to the left made vacant by an advance of a portion of the Fifth Corps, and here connected with the left of the Third Brigade, First Division. While in this position an attack was made by a portion of the Fifth Corps. A large number of the attacking party came back in a decidedly disorganized condition. At this juncture I deployed two regiments—Sixty-sixth New York Volunteers and One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers—as a guard in rear of the line of works, to stop and force the fugitives into the line of temporary works. Shortly afterward I was ordered forward to attack the advancing and exultant foe with the force then at my command, which consisted of the following regiments: Fifty-third, One hundred and sixteenth, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Sixty-sixth New York Volunteers, the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, One hundred and forty-fifth and One hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers being elsewhere and performing other duties, the former on picket, the other two corduroying the Dabney Mill road. I moved forward as directed and attacked the enemy, but shortly afterward the whole line gave way and retired about 200 yards and was reformed. The conduct of a majority of the troops of this command was admirable, while one regiment, the One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, gave way unceremoniously and in confusion. This regiment giving way, and the failure of the Third Brigade to advance simultaneously, was the primary cause of the troops of this command retiring. It was not caused by an absence of determination on the part of the troops or the superior fighting of the enemy; a force of circumstances alone obliged them to retire. Had the Third Brigade advanced with me, after crossing the run, instead of remaining idle spectators, the result of the assault would have been different and my brigade spared the mortification of a repulse. After the line had been reformed, which occupied but a short time, and which was accomplished under considerable of a musketry fire, the troops were again moved forward and again occupied the position from which they had previously retired, and still without the co-operation of the Third Brigade. At this time Captain Peterson, of the Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, came to my assistance with about fifty men of that regiment, they having been relieved from picket duty. The conduct of these men was admirable. These men remained with me until their regiment joined the brigade and rendered good service. We kept gaining ground slowly until the Third Brigade moved forward and connected with us, when we pushed forward more rapidly, pushing the enemy back into his works. His opposition was determined and obstinate, aided by his temporary success in repulsing a portion of the Fifth Corps in the earlier part of the day. The attack on our part was eminently successful, but with considerable loss. We built a line of temporary works a few hundred yards distant from the enemy's main line and rested for the night.

1st, shortly before daylight we moved back to the position occupied in the morning previous and occupied the works from which we advanced. Here the men were supplied with rations and ammunition, and arms and ammunition inspected, in order to be ready for a renewal of the conflict should an emergency at this or a distant point render our services necessary. About dusk we moved forward and occupied the position which we had vacated in the morning, rested here for a short time, and then marched, via the White Oak road, to join the forces under Major-General Sheridan.

2d, joined General Sheridan about daylight, rested about two hours, resumed the march, retracing our steps, and entered the enemy's works at the point where the White Oak road runs through them, the works being occupied without any loss. The march was continued through the enemy's late camp, without any incident of note, until we reached a point near the South Side Railroad, excepting the detachment of the One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers to capture a wagon train, in which it was unsuccessful; they came in sight of but could not capture the train, or any part of it, the roads being in a very fair condition and the train moving rapidly. Arriving near the railroad the head of the column came up with the rear guard of the enemy crossing the River road, and in a manner to protect the railroad, with several pieces of artillery in position. The Third and Second Brigades preceded me; I came up and formed line in rear of the latter; remained inactive for a short time, except looking out for our right flank. The Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers was detached at this time for the purpose of finding the enemy's right. For the particulars of its operations I invite your attention to the report of its commander, Lieut. Col. William Glenn. The One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers was also detached to extend the line to the right. I was now ordered to move to the right and assault the enemy's position; a position which the several combined assaults of two brigades could not take. I was conducted to a position in rear of the skirmish line of the One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers by Brevet Major Marlin, of Brevet Major-General Miles' staff. Formed line of battle under the crest of a hill, which screened the men from the view of the enemy, the One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers deployed as skirmishers. The whole preparations were made in a most incredible short time, the officers working energetically and the men obeying orders with alacrity. The whole line now pushed forward with resistless fury, determined for victory. While advancing the enemy used his artillery, giving us grape and canister, but its use was of short duration. The fire did not intimidate or retard our advance, but did considerable execution. Among the wounded, while we were advancing, was Lieut. C. H. Burghardt, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, acting aide-de-camp, who fell from his horse seriously wounded in the leg with a grape-shot while gallantly performing his duty. While advancing the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers was taken from the extreme left and placed on the right of the line for the purpose of striking the railroad sooner, which done would necessitate an abandonment of the position held by the enemy. Subsequent events proved the correctness of this view. The men continued the advance cheering lustily, and when the right of the line struck the railroad the enemy commenced his retreat, my command pressing as rapidly as circumstances would permit. The fruits of victory were the capture of 2 guns, 1 color, and a number of prisoners, sent to the rear, of whom no number was taken. This success was eminently a happy, a glorious one. I did not have then, nor have had since, any information that our forces had possession of the road at an earlier period, and from the importance attached to the possession of this place, am led to the belief that they had not. After crossing the road we struck the River road and marched to the right about two miles in the direction of Petersburg, and then countermarched and rested near Sutherland's Station for the night.

3d, 4th, and 5th, marching to overtake the retreating enemy, without anything of particular note occurring.

6th, resumed the march from Jetersville, and at an early hour came in sight of the enemy; a line of battle was formed and advanced to attack the enemy. I was ordered to connect with the First Brigade and march in line of battle with it, which was done as long as it was practicable to do so, and then I marched the command out in the road in supporting distance of the leading brigade should assistance be required. Was not actively engaged during the day; rested for the night near the Appomattox River.

7th, the pursuit continued, my brigade leading the column, but by subsequent countermarching was brought third in column. Came up with the enemy a short distance from Farmville, formed line of battle, with right resting on the road and connecting with the left of the Third Brigade. The Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers was deployed as skirmishers, the commander of which reports the capture of 1 gun and 1 color, but were subsequently retaken from him. Attention invited to his report. While the brigade was making connection with the Third Brigade we lost several men, including my bugler. The brigade was not called upon to make any further demonstration; changed our position once and remained for the night.

8th, march resumed, no incident of note worth recording. 9th, march resumed. Came up with the enemy in the morning, and rested pending the result of the correspondence in relation to the capitulation of the Army of Northern Virginia. Its consummation was hailed with undisguised feelings of joy, the prospect of peace, through victory, being desirable by all. It was a proud satisfaction to those who have been in this Army of the Potomac for four years, and shared with it the vicissitudes and the varying fortunes of its several campaigns, to be present on this occasion, and to have a share in the honor of the campaign which ended so auspiciously to our cause.

The conduct of the officers and men of this command, with the exception above noted, was eminently satisfactory, and creditable to the several organizations, commanded as follows: Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers by Col. William M. Mintzer, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers by Maj. David W. Megraw, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers by Capt. James H. Hamlin, One hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers by Col. George T. Egbert, Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers by Lieut. Col. William Glenn, Sixty-sixth New York Volunteers by Capt. Nathaniel P. Lane. The One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, whose conduct has been censured for the part taken by them in the action of the 31st, did very well on the 2d in the operations against the railroad.

In conclusion, I beg to name the following officers, whose conduct was such as calls for a recognition of their distinguished services: Col. W. M. Mintzer, commanding Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers; Maj. D. W. Megraw, who received a painful wound and still retained command of his regiment, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, until ordered to the rear; Maj. Theodore Tyrer, Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers, for valuable aid and assistance; and also to Capt. J. H. Hamlin, commanding One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Capt. A. F. Peterson, Sixty-fourth New York Volunteers; Lieut. S. P. Corliss, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, acting assistant adjutant-general; and Lieut. C. H. Burghardt, Fourth New York Artillery, acting aide-de-camp.

The following is a statement of casualties during the campaign:

Date.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
March 31.....	2	22	7	124	.....	3	0	140	158
April 2.....	.....	3	1	19	.....	1	1	23	24
April 6.....	.....	.....	.....	3	.....	.....	.....	3	3
April 7.....	.....	6	1	14	.....	.....	1	20	21
Total *.....	2	31	9	160	.....	4	11	105	206

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN RAMSEY,
Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.
 Lieut. Col. R. A. BROWN,
Acty. Asst. Adj. Gen., First Division, Second Army Corps.

No. 46.

Report of Lieut. Col. William Henry, Sixty-fourth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-FOURTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 14, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to report operations of this command from 28th ultimo to 10th instant, as follows:

The regiment broke camp on the morning of 29th of March, and moved from near the signal station in the direction of Hatcher's Run. On the following day the march was continued on the Boydton plank. Early on the morning of the 31st the regiment composed the picket for the brigade, and were posted at an early hour. Companies A and B, under command respectively of Captains Hurdley and Darby, by direction of the division officer of the day, charged and took the enemy's picket-line in their immediate front, capturing 16 prisoners. The regiment participated in the further operations of the day, and in addition to the above took 40 prisoners, making in all 56. Isaac Strumph, a private of Company B, took a rebel color, which was taken from him by an officer on General Crawford's staff, of the Fifth Corps, with which the line connected on the left. At night the regiment built works and retired from them before day the following morning. At night of the same day (April 1) the works were reoccupied, but again abandoned before day on the morning of the 2d, and moved in the direction of the South Side road. During the day, by direction of General Miles, the regiment took a designated position to protect the left flank of the division, and subsequently charged and took a point of the road, including Sutherland's Station, capturing one gun and a large number of prisoners. The regiment continued its operations with the advancing column to the 8th, when it charged as a skirmish line at Farmville, driving the enemy and capturing one gun, which they were compelled to relinquish by the force of superior numbers. The following day, 9th, the regiment moved with the column until the enemy surrendered their forces composing the Army of Virginia.

* But see revised table, p. 582.

The whole number of prisoners taken exclusively by the regiment is 163.

The conduct of the officers and men is worthy of praise.

The losses during the thirteen days are as follows: Killed—enlisted men, 6. Wounded—officers, 2; enlisted men, 23.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM GLENNY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Fourth Brigade.

---

No. 47.

Report of Capt. Nathaniel P. Lane, Sixty-sixth New York Infantry.

HDQRS. SIXTY-SIXTH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,

April 14, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to forward a report of operations of this command from the 29th day of March to the 11th day of April, 1865.

The command broke camp at Fort Sampson at 6 o'clock on the morning of the 29th of March and marched toward Hatcher's Run until 12 a. m., when it was deployed as skirmishers, connecting on our left with the Fifth Corps. On the 30th of March, at 10 a. m., the command advanced as skirmishers, flanking the enemy's pickets and drove them to their main works and captured several prisoners without loss of life. At 3 p. m. it was relieved from the front by the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, and having joined the brigade it advanced about half a mile and, under the enemy's fire, threw up slight breast-works in a field, and remained behind the same that night. At daybreak on the 31st of March the command left the works and marched to the left of the line, where it was detailed as provost-guard to keep stragglers from the Fifth Corps from going to the rear. Ordered over the works at 11 a. m., it advanced half a mile across the creek, and after being repulsed once it reformed and drove the enemy one mile; captured several prisoners with loss of ten men wounded. At dark the command built heavy breast-works in a pine woods and remained there that night.

Left the works at 5 p. m. on the 1st of April and went back to the main line of works, where it remained until 7 p. m., when it marched over the works again and moved toward the left until 4 a. m. on the 2d of April. After resting until 7 a. m. the command moved toward the enemy's works, which having been evacuated by the enemy it crossed at 9 a. m., and flanking the enemy at the South Side Railroad it charged across a field at 1 p. m., being the first regiment that had their colors on the railroad, and sent several hundred prisoners to the rear with loss of one man killed and one wounded. After remaining near the railroad that night the command broke camp at 10 a. m. on the 3d of April, and after marching toward the left went into camp. On the 4th of April broke camp at daybreak and marched until 7 p. m. April 5, broke camp at 5 a. m. and struck the Danville road at 6 p. m. and went into camp near the said road. April 6, left camp at 7 a. m. and formed line of battle at 10 a. m.; advanced in line several miles and camped in line at 9 p. m. April 7 to 10, the command was detailed to guard the captured wagon train, burned about 150 wagons, with contents, and a large amount of ammunition, and arrived at the brigade, with 25 captured ambulances and 60 mules, on the 10th of April at 2 p. m.*

Very respectfully,

NATHANIEL P. LANE,

Captain, Commanding Sixty-sixth New York Veteran Volunteers.

[Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

---

No. 48.

Report of Col. William M. Mintzer, Fifty-third Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. FIFTY-THIRD PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
April 12, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my regiment from March 29 to the 10th instant:

On the morning of the former date (March 29, 1865), at 6 o'clock, I had my command in readiness to move in accordance with orders previously received from corps headquarters through the regular channel. Our march was by the left flank and nearly parallel with the line of breast-works formerly held by the Second Corps. We crossed Hatcher's Run during the morning and marched in the direction of the Boydton plank road. I formed line of battle on a hill, where temporary breast-works were erected. In the afternoon we advanced in line of battle several times, but met no enemy. Night having come upon us we were ordered to make ourselves comfortable, which order was obeyed. March 30, at 6 a. m. we moved by the left flank, through the woods and swamp, and after forming line of battle near the Boydton road temporary breast-works were erected. In accordance with orders received from brigade headquarters I sent two companies from my regiment, in charge of Major Pifer, to relieve the skirmishers from our brigade. It was while in performance of this duty that Major Pifer had his horse mortally wounded, after having been shot at by rebel sharpshooters six or seven times. In the afternoon our line was advanced to the crest of the hill, a short distance to the front of former line, where we remained for the night.

I would here state, that my skirmishers handsomely repulsed two successive charges of the enemy's skirmishers, while the connection on their left was broken by the skirmishers of the Fifth Corps, who had retired without scarcely firing a shot.

March 31, I was relieved from the front line quite early in the morning, by the Third Division, Second Corps; moved to the position held yesterday morning; soon afterward we moved to the left, in rear of breast-works formerly occupied by part of the Fifth Corps. The Fifth Corps were about engaging the enemy. They were repulsed and driven back in great disorder. My regiment in connection with the Sixty-sixth New York, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania, and One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, were moved forward to retake the ground lost by the Fifth Corps. I was formed on the right. We charged across Hatcher's Run and engaged the enemy on the crest of the hill beyond. This position could have been held, but the One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, on my left, fell back in considerable disorder, thus leaving my left flank, as well as the right, exposed. In this position of affairs I retired and recrossed Hatcher's Run. I reformed my regiment as soon as possible, and, in connection with the three regiments named, again crossed Hatcher's Run; now, having connection on the right with the Third Brigade, we retook all the ground lost by the Fifth Corps, capturing a great many prisoners. In this engagement I had 15 enlisted men killed, 2 officers and 47 enlisted men wounded. We bivouacked for the night in rear of breast-works built near the Boydton plank road.

---

* Nominal list of casualties (omitted) shows 12 enlisted men wounded and 1 killed.

April 1, at 6 a. m. I moved my command, in connection with the balance of the brigade, to the position held yesterday before the engagement. We remained there until 6 p. m., when we again took up the position left in the morning.

April 2, moved at 2 a. m. to the left in support of cavalry; remained until 9 a. m., when we returned in rear of position held the night before. It having been discovered that the enemy had abandoned their works we were moved by the right flank in quick time in pursuit. We came upon them near the South Side Railroad. My regiment, in connecting with others of the brigade, was formed in line on the left flank of the position held by the enemy. We were ordered to charge, but General Ramsey desiring my regiment to form on the right of the brigade, I moved it there, by the flank, at a double-quick, and charged forward with the other regiments of the brigade, capturing the South Side Railroad and quite a number of prisoners. I have reason to believe that the enemy held their position until my regiment charged forward on the extreme right. In this engagement I had eight enlisted men wounded. We bivouacked for the night on the north side of the railroad.

April 3, marched at 9 a. m. toward the Danville railroad; found no enemy.

April 4, moved at 7 a. m.; my regiment was in front of the brigade. We encamped for the night at 7 p. m.

April 5, marched the whole day, from 5 a. m. until 7 p. m., following the One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. We crossed the Danville railroad and formed line of battle beyond, where we remained for the night.

April 6, moved at 4 a. m. The enemy having been discovered in our front we formed line of battle and followed them in this way the entire day. A great bulk of the enemy's train having been captured at Deep Creek my regiment was detailed as a guard in the evening. I had one man wounded during the day.

April 7, moved at 6 a. m.; crossed the South Side Railroad near the High Bridge; crossed the Appomattox River; moved forward on the Buckingham road, and formed line of battle confronting the enemy in front. In forming my line I had one man killed and one man wounded. We bivouacked for the night in line near Farmville.

April 8, marched on the Buckingham road the entire day but met no enemy.

April 9, continued our march until about 4 p. m., when, it having been announced that General Lee had surrendered his army to General Grant, I formed my regiment on the right of the Buckingham road and bivouacked for the night.

During the march and in the several engagements all my officers and men behaved gallantly.

Numerical Report of Casualties.

Date.	Killed.		Wounded.		Remarks.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
March 31 .....		15	2	47	1 man wounded; shot died.
April 2 .....				8
April 6 .....				1
April 7 .....		1		1
Total .....		16	2	57

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. M. MINTZER,

Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 49.

Report of Capt. John R. Weltner, One hundred and sixteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS, 116TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

Report of operations from the 28th ultimo to the present time.

March 29, broke camp at 6 a. m., marched on the left until we joined the Fifth Corps, passed through the line of works and marched southward. About 12 m. formed line of skirmishers and advanced until after night, met with no opposition, rested for the night, still being deployed as skirmishers.

March 30, shortly after daylight the line began to advance, and continued to do so until about 10 a. m., when they were relieved, fell back, and built works, remaining in the latter position all day and the rest of the night.

March 31, moved early in the morning toward the left and occupied a position behind a line of works; remained until about 9 a. m., when we moved still farther to the left in support of the Fifth Corps; shortly after forming line heard heavy firing in our front, and in a few minutes a portion of the Fifth Corps broke and retreated to our line. About this time our brigade was ordered out in front of the works. They formed line of battle and advanced on the enemy, charged them twice, and were driven back each time; the third time we were more successful, and compelled the enemy to fall back at least two miles; held our position, built works, and remained all night.

April 1, moved about daylight and took up our old position occupied by us on the day previous. About 6 p. m. received orders to move; formed line and moved two or three miles to the left and occupied our old line of works; considerable skirmishing going on while we occupied this line; marched about 12 midnight, moving toward the left.

April 2, joined the Fifth Corps, formed line, and rested until 8 a. m., when we took up line of march and moved back to a position a short distance in the rear of the position occupied on the night previous; remained about two hours, when word was received that the enemy had evacuated; advanced at once and passed into their line; continued to advance for a mile or two, when the enemy were found to be intrenched and offering resistance to our farther advance; formed line of battle in an open field on the right of the road, advanced a short distance and then lay down awaiting further orders; lay in this position two hours when we were ordered to move to the left; advanced in this way about a mile and a half, formed line of battle and charged the enemy's works (coming in on their left flank), and drove them from their position; after the charge formed lines and continued on until we made connection with the other line, which being complete moved down the road for a short distance, when we about-faced and marched about one mile; formed line and rested for the night.

April 3, marched about 8 a. m., nothing of consequence occurring all day; rested quietly during the night.

April 4, nothing of consequence occurring.

April 5, still moving on the left; drew rations in the morning; took up line of march; passed a portion of Fifth Corps about 4 p. m.; crossed railroad, built works and rested quietly all night.

April 6, moved early in the morning and came in sight of the enemy's wagon train in about an hour's time; formed line of battle and advanced a long distance; this day a large number of wagons were captured; rested about 9 p. m., and remained quiet all night.

April 7, formed line of march and advanced about four miles, when we were attacked by the enemy; built works and rested quietly all night.

April 8, marched all day, nothing of consequence occurring.

April 9, marched about 8 a. m. and moved slowly along the road; advanced about one mile and halted, remaining in the road until late in the afternoon; received word of the surrender of General Lee; great rejoicing throughout the whole brigade. Camped all night in a field to the left of the road.

April 10, quiet all day, men busily engaged in cleaning their arms and putting up tents.

Date.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
March 31, 1865.....	1	1	2	19	.....	2
April 2, 1865.....	.....	1	.....	3	.....	1
Total.....	1	2	2	21	.....	3

Respectfully submitted.

J. R. WELTNER,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

No. 50.

Report of Capt. James H. Hamlin, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 145TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: Pursuant to circular from headquarters Second Army Corps, of this date, I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of this command from March 23 to April 10, 1865:

On the morning of the 29th of March the regiment broke camp, with the brigade, and took up a line of march to the left, striking the Vaughan road. In this direction we proceeded as far as the Hargrave house, where we encamped for the night. The enemy had been found at this point.

On the morning of the 30th a detachment of the command was placed on the skirmish line, in charge of Lieutenant Lee, who charged the enemy's frontline, driving him out and occupying his works. This position was held until the line of battle advanced, the Fifth Corps covering this ground. On the 31st ultimo the regiment was detached for the purpose of building a corduroy road, at which it was occupied until evening, when it joined the brigade at a position some miles to the left. Here bivouacked for the night. On the morning of April 1 we moved back to a line of works formerly occupied by the Fifth Corps, where we laid until evening, when we were advanced to another line of works thrown up by the same organization. Bivouacked. On the morning of the 2d were moved on the double-quick some distance to the left, and returned to the vicinity of the former position, the enemy having evacuated his works. An immediate pursuit was begun. He was found posted in a strong position on the South Side Railroad. At this point a train of the enemy's was discovered moving off, whereon my command was detached in pursuit. The capture failed through loss of time. Returned to our position in the line. The regiment was thrown as skirmishers on the left front and flank of the enemy, driving him from his works and capturing one gun, and contributing to the general capture that then and there ensued. The 3d, 4th, and 5th instant were occupied in the pursuit of the enemy, who was again found at the Danyville road, near Amelia Springs. At this point the regiment was detached on a scout on our right, which resulted in the capture of eight prisoners. From this to the 10th instant nothing beyond the general incidents of the pursuit occurred, save that at Farmville we had one man wounded, as at different times before we had 1 killed and 4 wounded.

JAS. H. HAMLIN,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Lient. S. P. CORLISS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 51.

Report of Capt. John F. Sutton, One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 148TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this command from March 29 to this date, inclusive:

My command broke camp, with its corps, on the morning of the 29th, and marched to the vicinity of the Boydton plank road. At about 4 p. m. of that day the regiment was placed in support of the brigade skirmish line, connecting with the Fifth Corps on the left. The regiment was gradually deployed on the line as it advanced, taking up the interval between the Fifth and Second Corps, and remained on the skirmish line throughout the night. During the 30th the regiment remained in support of the brigade, in line of battle, near the dirt road, in front of a portion of the enemy's works. 31st, moved to the left with brigade supporting the Fifth Corps. At about 11.30 a. m. the whole brigade moved in line of battle to a position along Gravelly Run, on the left of a brigade of the Fifth Corps, and immediately attacked the enemy's line across the run. After a sharp fight the line fell back in some confusion, but was soon rallied and pushed forward, driving the enemy out. Captain Rhinehart, commanding regiment, was wounded at this juncture, and the command devolved on me. After driving the enemy some time the brigade was reformed in rear of skirmish line, moved some distance to the left, where works were put up and the regiment remained all night in position.

April 1, the brigade moved back to the position from which it had advanced on the 31st and remained throughout the day. At dark moved to the left and at midnight to the extreme left. In the morning, after considerable manœvering, it was discovered that the enemy's works had been evacuated, and my regiment, with its brigade, was pushed through in pursuit. About noon, the division having been stopped by the enemy's rear guard, on a choice position near the South Side Railroad, I was directed by Captain Marlin, of the division staff, to deploy regiment as skirmishers to the front and on right of the enemy's position, and immediately I was ordered to charge along their left flank. I succeeded in reaching the church on the dirt road, on the left, and, with the aid of other portions of the brigade, in driving them out, capturing a number of the prisoners, 1 gun, and 1 battle-flag. They were pursued with vigor until near dark, when the brigade was taken in.

During the 3d, 4th, and 5th the regiment marched, with brigade, in pursuit of the enemy without incident of any note, and on the 6th, with it supporting part of the division, in the manœvers which resulted in the capture of part of their train and some artillery. After reaching High Bridge on the morning of the 7th I was ordered to send out my regiment for the purpose of foraging. The regiment succeeded in securing, in the vicinity of Farmville and beyond, about 7 head of horses, 180 head of cattle, 50 head of sheep, and 40 head of hogs. These, with about 1,600 weight of bacon, were disposed of as I had been ordered; and on the 9th I rejoined the brigade and moved with it to the position now occupied.

During these operations my command has lost as follows:

Date.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
March 30 .....				1				1
March 31 .....	1	4	2	54		1	3	30
April 2 .....				4				4
April 7 .....		1						1
Total .....	1	5	2	39		1	3	45

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. F. SUTTON,

Captain, 148th Pennsylvania Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 52.

Report of Col. George T. Egbert, One hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania Infantry.

Report of operations of One hundred and eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers from March 29 to April 9, 1865, inclusive:

The regiment left camp on morning of March 29; was transferred, by order of division commander, from First to Fourth Brigade; moved with the division, and were advanced as skirmishers in the afternoon, connecting with the right of the Fifth Corps line; about dark were relieved by One hundred and forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers and halted for the night. 30th, advanced in line of battle and halted for the night near Boydton plank road. 31st, the regiment, with One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, were ordered to the rear to corduroy on the road from Dabney's Mill to Boydton plank road; were employed all day; moved to the brigade about dark. April 1, moved back and occupied a line of works until about 5 p. m., when we moved out and occupied a line of works in advance until about 2 a. m. April 2, when the regiment moved to the left in rear of Fifth Corps. About 7 a. m. moved about one mile to the right and formed line of battle. About 10 a. m. marched through the enemy's works and came upon his rear guard near the South Side Railroad. Moved by the left flank about 4 p. m. and charged the enemy, driving him and gaining possession of the railroad, with the following casualties: Corpl. William C. Hixson, Company D, Corpl. John F. Maxwell, Company E, and Sergt. George C. Warner, Company F, wounded. Marched with the brigade during the 3d, 4th, and 5th, without any particular incident. On the 6th moved a short distance and came in sight of the enemy's rear guard; formed line of battle in support of a battery, which opened upon him. Advanced during the day, closely following the enemy, but did not become engaged with him. Three prisoners were brought in by a member of the regiment. 7th, moved with the brigade, passing High Bridge; came up with the enemy; formed line of battle, and advanced, changing position during the day. A detail from the regiment as flankers became engaged, with the following casualties: Private Joseph Solomon, Company H, wounded. Twelve prisoners were brought in. 8th, marched until 6 p. m. without incident and halted. Shortly after dark were thrown out as skirmishers and advanced about five miles, capturing five prisoners; met Major Mason, of General Lee's staff, with flag of truce. Spent the night on picket duty. April 9, relieved by One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers and joined the brigade; marched with it. About 4 p. m. received news of the surrender of Lee's army. Halted for the night.

Casualties: April 2, 3 enlisted men wounded; April 7, 1 enlisted man wounded; total, 4.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. T. EGBERT,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. S. P. CORLISS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Fourth Brigade.

No. 53.

Report of Brig. Gen. William Hays, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.

FORT REYNOLDS, May 18, 1865.

Colonel WHITTIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Corps :

I have the honor to transmit a report of the operations of the Second Division, Second Corps, from the 29th of March to the 5th of April, also the reports of the brigade commanders. These reports have been delayed in consequence of not having been able to get the necessary data to make my report out until just as I was leaving on the march from City Point.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM HAYS,
Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

FORT REYNOLDS, VA., May 15, 1865.

I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the Second Division, Second Army Corps, from the 29th of March, 1865, to the 5th of April, 1865:

On the 29th of March the division moved out on the Vaughan road, drove in the enemy's vedettes, and encamped at Dabney's Mill. On the 30th marched in line of battle to the Crow house; took up a position there and intrenched. On the 30th a reconnaissance in force was made and the enemy's works on our front found to consist of two redoubts, connected by a line and constituting a portion of his main works. The skirmishers and sharpshooters got so near to the enemy's works that he could not use his artillery. The slashing in front of the redoubts was very heavy and difficult to get through. Early on the morning of the 2d of April an attack was made on the enemy's works and one redoubt taken. The troops then pushed on and took the second redoubt, capturing in the two redoubts three 12-pounder guns, with caissons all complete, and in good, serviceable order, also 300 muskets and about 100 prisoners. Strong supports followed the attacking party and the remainder of the division held in readiness to take advantage of any success. The redoubts were entered first and at about the same time by men belonging to the Seventh Michigan, Sixty-ninth New York,* and Company G, Eighth New York Artillery. The troops engaged consisted of the Seventh Michigan (Lieutenant-Colonel La Point), Sixty-ninth New York (Captain Heggart), Nineteenth Massachusetts (Captain Palmer), First Minnesota Sharpshooters, Company G, Eighth New York Artillery, and the battalion of the One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania, and the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania (Captain McAnally). Skirmishers from the One hundred and sixty-fourth New York, a detachment of the Tenth New York (Captain Van Winkle), five companies of the Fourteenth Connecticut (Captain Murdock), and a detachment from the Fourth Ohio (Captain De Witt and Captain Rounds). As soon as the works were taken the First and Second Brigades were concentrated in them. The Third Brigade had been sent early in the morning to support General Mott's division, and did not rejoin the Second Division until evening. The conduct of the officers and men engaged in the attack merits the highest praise. The division marched from Sutherland's Station on the 3d and arrived at Jetersville on the 5th of April at 2.30 p. m.

---

* National Guard Artillery, or One hundred and eighty-second Volunteers.

Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding the Third Brigade, Colonel Olmsted, commanding the First Brigade, and Colonel Melvor, commanding the Second Brigade, acted on all occasions with promptness and ability, and are deserving of special notice. Lieutenant Westcott's battery (B), First Rhode Island Artillery, was in position at the Crow house, and did excellent service by its accurate firing, and assisted very essentially during the assault on the redoubts on the 2d of April.

The officers and soldiers of the division deserve great credit for their patient endurance of the fatigue and exposure incident to so vigorous a campaign, and for their bravery and good conduct.

The officers of my staff—Major Norvell, assistant adjutant-general; Surgeon Maull; Captain Summerhayes, inspector; Captain Knapp, aide-de-camp; Captain Russell, acting engineer; Captain Crombargh, commissary of subsistence; Captain Gleason, assistant quartermaster; Captain Doten, commissary of musters; Captain White, ordnance officer; Captain Porter, judge-advocate, and Lieutenant Moore, aide-de-camp—performed their respective duties in an efficient and satisfactory manner.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM HAYS,
Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

Lieutenant-Colonel WHITTIER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

---

No. 54.

*Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Francis C. Barlow, U. S. Army, commanding
Second Division.*

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 11, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that I was assigned to the command of this division on April 6, 1865, relieving Brigadier-General Smyth. The division was at that time near Amelia Springs. On the morning of that day the division moved out on the ——— road, covering the right flank of the First Division. We did not come in contact with the enemy during the day. On the morning of April 7 we continued the pursuit of the enemy, moving on the right of the First Division and the main road. During the morning, learning that it was the intention of the corps commander to pass over High Bridge, I sent the Nineteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers (of the First Brigade) to secure the bridge. After considerable skirmishing this regiment drove away the enemy, and secured the crossing and extinguished the fire on the small dirt road bridge. They were unable to extinguish the fire on the railroad bridge; three spans of it were destroyed before the division pioneers could cut away the burning part. During the skirmishing Colonel Starbird, commanding Nineteenth Maine Volunteers, a gallant officer, was dangerously wounded. The enemy subsequently made a smart attempt to retake the bridge, supporting their skirmish line with troops in line of battle, but the Third Brigade (Brigadier-General Smyth) coming up they were repulsed. The division here received eighteen abandoned guns and about 500 Enfield rifles. They afterward advanced to Farmville, meeting with considerable resistance, during which a portion of the skirmish line was captured. During the skirmishing Brigadier-General Smyth, commanding Third Brigade, was mortally wounded. From Farmville we pursued the enemy in a northeasterly direction, on the Cumberland Court-House road, but were subsequently ordered to join the rest of the corps.

On the 8th of April we advanced, without incident, to a point some eight miles west of New Store. On the 9th hostilities were terminated by the surrender of the enemy.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS C. BARLOW,

Brevet Major-General Volunteers, Commanding Division.

Lieut. Col. C. A. WHITTIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

---

No. 55.

Reports of Col. William A. Olmsted, Fifty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,

April 10, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with orders received from headquarters Second Division, Second Army Corps, General Hays commanding, I moved the brigade, following the Second Brigade, and moved from camp by the left flank, down the Vaughan road, through the picket-line, over Hatcher's Run. A line of battle was formed by the Third and Second Brigades, leaving this brigade in reserve. The Seventh Michigan was temporarily detached to the Third Brigade. At 2 p. m. I was ordered to make a reconnaissance toward Dabney's Mill and capture a fort supposed to be there—the Nineteenth Maine, commanded by Colonel Starbird, supported by the Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers, commanded by Captain Ludgate, and the One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers, commanded by Major Curtiss. We advanced and took Dabney's Mill. The brigade was then advanced to the old line of the enemy's breast-works and bivouacked for the night. March 30, at 7 a. m. the command, with the rest of the division, advanced and carried the enemy's works at Hatcher's Run and at the Crow house; took up our position on the left of the Second Brigade and relieved Pierce's brigade, Third Division; threw out the Nineteenth Maine as skirmishers, supported by the One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, to find out the position of the enemy's works in our front. The One hundred and fifty-second New York was sent to support the Third Brigade on their left. The brigade advanced for about three quarters of a mile through heavy slashing of woods; found the enemy in position, with a fort mounting two guns and with a fort in supporting range; this was mounted with one gun, with works forming the angle over the extreme right of the main line of works of the enemy running from Petersburg. March 31, remained in same position, and at 4 p. m. we marched to the left and reported to Third Division, General Mott commanding; deployed the brigade in a thin line to occupy the works of Pierce's brigade.

April 1, at 6 a. m. reported back to General Hays and occupied the old line of works we left when we marched to report to General Mott. At 2 p. m. advanced the brigade and threw up strong line of works, so as to connect with Second Brigade and it with Twenty-fourth Corps. Received orders at 11 p. m. to advance a strong skirmish line, with supports, and attack the enemy's works in our front. April 2, at 6 a. m. advanced the Seventh Michigan (without knapsacks, by order of Captain Doten, division staff) and about twenty men of First Minnesota, with telescopic rifles, to attack the fort. The Nineteenth Massachusetts Volunteers was sent out as reserve. At 8 a. m. Lieutenant-Colonel La Point reported that he captured the fort, also the one in the rear, and kept advancing by the left flank, capturing six forts, with prisoners, in front of the Third Division. The pickets of the Third Division kept firing at the Seventh Michigan and Nineteenth Massachusetts as they were moving to the left, and were not aware that my brigade had captured them until Brevet Brigadier-General McAllister came out and found them in our hands. We captured 400 prisoners and turned them over to the division provost guard. At 8 a. m. the brigade marched by the left flank, in connection with Second Brigade, down the Vaughan road to Burgess' Mill; then marched up the Boydton plank road to within one mile and a half of Petersburg; crossed over and marched west from Petersburg on Cox's road to the house of Widow Kidd. bivouacked for the night. April 3, moved back over Cox's road to Cogswell's house at 11 a. m.; marched back over the Cox road, and struck the Nunezio road; moved in a southwestern direction. bivouacked at 9 p. m. on the farm of a Mrs. Burke.

April 4 and 5, we marched to Amelia Station, on Danville road. April 6, General Hays ordered the Seventh Michigan to advance as skirmishers; the brigade followed the division column. General Hays was relieved from command and General Smyth assumed command. Shortly afterward Major-General Barlow, having been assigned to the command, ordered the brigade to move; marched in column by ranks of fours in support of Third Brigade, advancing in battalion columns of fours. At Amelia Springs, by order of General Barlow, detailed the One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers to relieve a brigade of First Division, and remain until further orders. The Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers, commanded by Captain Ludgate, was thrown out as skirmishers to Third Brigade, at Perkinson's Saw-mill, and captured a rebel wagon train.

April 7, advanced with the brigade, my brigade marching in column on the right flank of the road; arrived near High Bridge; reported to General Barlow that a rebel wagon train was in sight; was ordered to advance a regiment as skirmishers to take a supposed work of the enemy near and southwest of High Bridge, all on Danville road; deployed the Nineteenth Maine; they advanced, and afterward moved to the right and saved the High Bridge, also a smaller bridge for crossing below the bridge; formed line of battle on left of railroad and advanced the Seventh Michigan and Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers as skirmishers and flankers. Just as the brigade moved I was ordered to move by the right flank, cross the railroad, and march in column in rear of Second Brigade to support Smyth. Advanced about two miles when we met the enemy; the skirmish line moved promptly in advance to within rifle range of Farmville, when part of the skirmish line was captured. After the position was carried was ordered to advance down the railroad to Farmville; after the men had meal for dinner took the advance and moved to the right, and formed line of battle on the right of First Division; at sundown changed front and formed line facing the enemy. April 8, moved in column by fours, marching them through heavy woods on right of road. April 9, marched in column of fours down Lynchburg road, and participated in the grand and glorious surrender of Lee's Army of Northern Virginia to the Army of the Potomac; went into camp, where we now remain.

The following is a correct list of casualties, on the days they occurred.*

April 9, all the prisoners captured on the 7th were recaptured and reported to their regiments, and are now doing duty.

The brigade captured 3 guns (12-pounders, light) at Crow's house, and 18 of all calibers at High Bridge, and about 1,000 prisoners in all.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM A. OLMSTED,

Colonel Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Vols., Comdg. Brigade.

In concluding my report I wish to call the attention of the major-general commanding the division to the promptness of the commanding officers of regiments in this brigade in promptly obeying each and every order given, and to all officers and men for their steadiness on the march and earnestness to do their every duty under all circumstances.

The following are the officers who commanded their regiments during the whole campaign from March 29, 1865, to April 9, 1865, inclusive: Col. J. W. Starbird, commanding Nineteenth Maine Volunteers; Colonel Stover, commanding One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Lieutenant-Colonel Warner, commanding Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Volunteers; Lieutenant-Colonel Curtis, commanding Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers; Lieutenant-Colonel La Point, commanding Seventh Michigan Veteran Volunteers; Major Curtiss, commanding One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers; Capt. William Laudgate, commanding Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers; Captain Palmer, commanding Nineteenth Massachusetts Volunteers; Capt. F. Houston, commanding First Minnesota Volunteers.

To my staff I am indebted for their usefulness in doing and exposing themselves under all circumstances, and, if brevet rank is to be given, would recommend Capt. O. R. Small, Nineteenth Maine, acting assistant adjutant-general, to be major by brevet; Capt. A. B. Holmes, Twentieth Massachusetts, acting assistant inspector-general, to be major by brevet; First Lieut. and Adj. George Matthews, Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet; First Lieut. Aldrich Tennant, Seventh Michigan Volunteers, to be captain by brevet; Second Lieut. William H. Tripp, aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet.

I would also call the attention of the general commanding the division that Capt. Augustus Hubbell, acting commissary of subsistence, was up to the front each day, and attended to his duties promptly and well; also Surg. S. H. Plumb, Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers, surgeon in charge of the brigade, was with the head of the column and with the brigade in each position it occupied.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM A. OLMSTED,

Colonel Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Vols., Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVILL,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Div., Second Army Corps.

* Embodied in table, p. 583.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,

April 26, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with circular, Second Division, Second Army Corps, to forward a report of the operations of this brigade from March 29, 1865, to April 6, 1865, inclusive, I do respectfully report:

By a preparatory order to be in readiness to move had the command under arms and in order for the orders of the commanding officer of the division, Brigadier-General Hays, at 6.30 a. m. March 29, 1865. By an order from General Hays detailed the Seventh Michigan Veteran Volunteers to report to General Smyth, commanding the Third Brigade. We were ordered to move by the left flank and follow the Second Brigade (at 7 a. m.), Second Division, Second Army Corps. We crossed over Hatcher's Run, following down the Vaughan road; we were halted and formed in reserve to the Second and Third Brigades, forming the first line. On moving to position I was ordered to support my rear and right; did so by having the Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers deployed for that purpose. I (by order of General Hays) advanced the Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers to skirmish the front of our line. Shortly afterward I was ordered to remove them; shortly thereafter I was ordered to make a reconnaissance toward Dabney's Mill and capture a supposed work there held by the enemy. I ordered the Nineteenth Maine, supported by the Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers (Captain Indgate) and One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers, to make the reconnaissance. Shortly after, in riding down, found that we had occupied Dabney's Mill, and so reported to Major Norvell, assistant adjutant-general, Second Division, Second Army Corps. The brigade advanced to Dabney's Mill about 5 p. m. and bivouacked.

March 30, 1865, with the balance of the division advanced to Crow house, on Hatcher's Run; took up our position on crest of hill on left of Second Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps. Made a reconnaissance to the front to ascertain strength of position and number of guns in a fort on extreme right of enemy's line of works running from Peterburg. Advanced the Nineteenth Maine, supported by Thirty-sixth Wisconsin and One hundred and eighty-fourth Pennsylvania, with the First Minnesota on the right of slashings in front of Crow house. Found the fort to contain two brass pieces, with a fort in rear mounting one gun, and so reported. March 31, reported to Third Division, and occupied the line of works held formerly by First Brigade, Third Division, they having moved to the left.

April 1, reported back to Second Division at 6 a. m.; resumed old line formerly occupied; advanced the brigade about 300 yards and threw up breast-works, connecting with the Second Brigade, and it with the Twenty-fourth Corps. April 2, I advanced the Seventh Michigan, with twenty or twenty-five sharpshooters, supported by the Nineteenth Massachusetts, to assault the work and capture it. The assault commenced about 6 a. m., and at about 7.30 or 8 a. m. Lieutenant-Colonel La Point, Seventh Michigan, reported to me that he had captured the fort, and I reported to General Hays at Crow's house. The brigade was advanced to the line of enemy's works at 9 a. m.; moved by left flank and moved to Boydton plank road to Burgess' Mill; then up Boydton plank road to and near Mr. Cogswell's house, on Cox's road; moved down Cox's road, crossing railroad at Sutherland's Station; threw out skirmishers, and proceeded until we met the First Division skirmishers, where we halted over near a Mrs. Kidd's house, and bivouacked. April 3, marched back to Cogswell's house; after resting for about two hours resumed march again down Cox's road; advanced down Namozine road, and bivouacked on a farm of a Mrs. Burke. April 4 and 5, on march; arrived on the afternoon of the 5th at Amelia Station. April 6, was ordered to prepare to attack the enemy. Soon afterward Brigadier-General Hays was relieved and Brigadier-General Smyth assumed command; shortly afterward Brevet Major-General Barlow took command.

The regiments which took a prominent part in the capture of the fort mounting two brass pieces, with one in rear mounting one gun, on April 2, 1865, was the Seventh Michigan, Colonel La Point, Nineteenth Massachusetts, commanded by Captain Palmer, and First Minnesota, all sharpshooters. Sergeant Warren, of the Seventh Michigan, was amongst the first to enter the fort, and shot a rebel sharpshooter dead for not surrendering. Lieutenant-Colonel [La Point?] on entering the second fort (he was the first one to enter it) changed the gun so as to fire at the rebels as they were retreating.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM A. OLMSTED,
Colonel Fifty-ninth New York Vet. Vols., Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. J. M. NORVELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division.

---

No. 56.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph W. Spaulding, Nineteenth Maine Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS NINETEENTH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to forward the following report of the doings of this regiment since the 29th ultimo:

March 29, broke camp at 5 a. m. and marched at 7 a. m. out on Vaughan road about one mile and formed line. In afternoon advanced as skirmishers to Dabney's Mill, where it remained for the night. March 30, five companies advanced as skirmishers and the remainder with the line of battle; skirmishers advanced till they met the enemy at Fort Powell, and engaged them during the day until 4 p. m., when they were relieved by the Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Volunteers and rejoined the regiment and brigade at the Crow house. March 31, at 4 a. m. moved short distance to relieve a part of the Third Division. At noon, an advance having been ordered, this regiment was deployed and advanced as skirmishers to within short range of the enemy's works, and engaged them during the day, taking a few prisoners and having several men wounded. Withdrew at dark and rejoined the brigade.

April 1, lay in line all day. At 5 p. m. moved a short distance to the front and constructed works. From this date to the 7th instant marched with the brigade, but was not engaged. The 7th instant, at 10 a. m., the regiment advanced as skirmishers up to the works on the east side of High Bridge, on Lynchburg railroad, which were found vacated, but the enemy were discovered on the opposite side of the run, and both bridges were found to be on fire. The regiment advanced on double-quick to the foot bridge, sent three companies across as skirmishers, and with the remainder put out the fire and saved the bridge. The enemy advanced a strong skirmish line against the skirmishers of this regiment, and pressed them back and followed so closely that but one of our companies could recross the bridge. The Third Brigade advancing to our support at just this moment, the enemy were driven back on the double-quick. Col. I. W. Starbird was severely wounded in this engagement. The regiment afterward marched along the railroad with the brigade to Farmville, and in the afternoon moved to the right and took position with the division on the right of the First Division and constructed works. April 8 and 9, marched in a westerly direction with the brigade to this place, and did not meet the enemy. In afternoon of the 9th participated in the general enjoyment of the Army of the Potomac.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. SPAULDING,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. O. R. SMALL,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 57.

Report of Col. James P. McIvor, One hundred and seventieth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with circular of this date from headquarters Second Division, Second Army Corps, I have the honor to report the following as the operations of the Second Brigade since the 28th of March:

The brigade broke camp on the morning of the 29th, and moved with the balance of the division across and beyond Hatcher's Run, a distance of some three miles. During the 30th and 31st of March the advance toward the enemy's main line of works was continued until the Crow house was reached. Whilst en route the brigade built three lines of breast-works, the last line upon what is known as the Crow farm, from which point reconnaissances were made by portions of this command against the enemy's works, which were found to be of a formidable character.

On the 1st of April the command was advanced still nearer to the enemy (our skirmishers driving those of the opposing force into their breast-works), forming a connection with the Twenty-fourth Army Corps on the run; and at that point also a strong line of works was constructed. During the night of the 1st a force from this brigade, consisting of the Sixty-ninth New York National Guard Artillery, One hundred and fifty-fifth and One hundred and seventieth New York Volunteers, was ordered to assault the enemy's works, in column of fours, at 4 a. m. the following morning. Everything was prepared accordingly, and the above-named regiments were advanced beyond our skirmish line and close to the enemy's abatis at 3.30 a. m. At 15 minutes before 4 o'clock the order for the assault was countermanded and the troops quietly withdrawn. Shortly afterward the enemy made a fierce upon the left of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps and also upon our skirmish line. The latter was immediately re-enforced and the enemy. At 7 a. m. orders were received to assault the enemy's fort, in column of fours, with one-third of the number of men at first detailed. For this purpose the Sixty-ninth New York National Guard Artillery, under command of Capt. Robert Heggart, was quickly formed upon the skirmish line, and together with the skirmishers, consisting of the One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers and Company G of the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, attacked and captured the fort and works, with two guns and caissons and many prisoners, in the most gallant manner. The Sixty-ninth New York National Guard Artillery, led by Capt. Robert Heggart, observing another fort directly in rear of the one first attacked and captured, advanced on it and captured it, together with one gun and caisson and many prisoners. The Sixty-ninth New York National Guard Artillery and the One hundred and sixty-fourth New York Volunteers were promptly reformed and sent as skirmishers in pursuit of the enemy, of whom they captured and sent to the rear many. The Sixty-ninth Regiment New York National Guard Artillery was led throughout by Capt. Robert Heggart, whom I would respectfully recommend as deserving of some mark of approbation for his meritorious services. Immediately after the capture of the works the remainder of the brigade advanced and occupied them for a short time, when it was rejoined by that portion which had been skirmishing, after having marched to a point within three miles of Petersburg.

The evening of the 2d and the morning of the 3d was occupied in marching and countermarching between Wells' Church (South Side Railroad) and the point above named. On the afternoon of the 3d the brigade was detailed to guard the train of the Cavalry Corps, which was in park at Sutherland's. On the night of the 3d the train moved toward Namozine Church, the brigade accompanying it as escort, repairing roads and building bridges in places which had been rendered impassable. The march was continued day and night until 6 a. m. on the 6th instant, when this command rejoined the division, and without being permitted to rest accompanied it in pursuit of the enemy during the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th instant. Encamped at Clover Hill on the 10th, since which date this command has marched to its present location.

The brigade has captured in all above 300 prisoners.

I am, major, yours, very respectfully,

J. P. McIVOR,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Div., Second Army Corps.

---

No. 58.

*Reports of Col. Daniel Woodall, First Delaware Infantry, commanding
Third Brigade.*

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 27, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of this command from March 29 to April 6, inclusive, in compliance with circular of April 26 from headquarters Second Division, Second Army Corps.

Pursuant to orders from headquarters Second Corps of the previous day, we left at 6.38 a. m. March 29. After crossing Hatcher's Run the Seventh Michigan Volunteers (of the First Brigade) reported to General Smyth as skirmishers. After passing our picket-line General Smyth sent out the Seventh West Virginia Volunteers, Seventh Michigan Volunteers, and Fourth Ohio Volunteers as skirmishers, who advanced about a mile and a half, but found no enemy. Our skirmishers were then withdrawn and line of battle formed—Second Division on the right, and this brigade on the right of the division, resting near Hatcher's Run. Seventh Virginia, Fourth Ohio, and Seventh Michigan were sent out to picket in our front. While advancing to reconnoiter the front of his regiment Lieutenant [Patterson], of the Seventh Michigan, a valuable officer, was shot dead by a sharpshooter. The enemy occupying a line of works near Dabney's Mill, our line then advanced to Dabney's Mill, the brigade marching by the flank, as the woods were too thick for a line of battle. We took position on the right of the division, our right resting on Hatcher's Run, connecting with Twenty-fourth Corps and connecting on the left with First Brigade. While this movement was being executed the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, which had been sent out as skirmishers to picket in our front, struck the enemy between Dabney's Mill and the Crow house, and a lively skirmish was kept up until dark, but with no loss to us. Our skirmish line for the right was composed of the Fourth Ohio, Seventh Virginia, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania, and the Fifty-ninth New York Volunteers (from First Brigade), which regiments reported to General Smyth about dark.

March 30. Our whole line advanced this morning to the Crow house; the enemy left their position at this point during the night; our brigade was in reserve of the division during the day. The enemy were found to have fallen back to their main line of works, which was found to be very strong. While establishing a picket-line from the right of the Third Division to Hatcher's Run, the enemy opened with artillery on our picket force, under command of Lieut. Col. J. C. Nicholls, First Delaware Veteran Volunteers, but did no damage. We remained in this position until 1 o'clock of the morning of the 31st, when this brigade was ordered to the left of the division. It rained hard until daybreak, at which time we occupied the works extending from the Crow house—the First Brigade, Second Division, on our right, and a brigade of the Third Division on our left. General Smyth, with the One hundred and eighth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. Francis M. Pierce commanding, reconnoitered our front and unmasked the position of the enemy, drawing the fire of his batteries. An attack was then ordered. The Seventh Michigan (Lieutenant-Colonel La Point), Seventh West Virginia (Lieutenant-Colonel Baldwin), Fourth Ohio (Lieutenant-Colonel Calahan), and a company of the First Delaware (Captain Davis and Lieutenant Dunn)—the First Delaware was formed in line of battle, under Colonel Woodall—advanced through the enemy's slashing, driving them to their works, and, after sharp skirmishing, succeeded in silencing the fire of their battery in our front, which was in a square work without embrasure. Lieutenant Hopkins, Seventh Virginia, was severely wounded during the affair. The slashing in our front was so thick a line of battle could not get through. During this time a heavy firing was going on on our left. At night our skirmish line was withdrawn under cover of the woods, and we remained in the position until the afternoon of the 1st of April, when our line was shortened by the Third Division moving to the right. The First and Second Brigades established a new line along the edge of the woods in our front, and this brigade held the line occupied by the First Brigade; held this position until 2 a. m. April 2, when this brigade was ordered to report to General Mott on our left. A detachment of the Tenth New York Volunteers, Captain Van Winkle, the Fourth Ohio, in charge of Capt. S. W. De Witt and Capt. Lewis Rounds, and half of the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, under command of Capt. William Murdock, were left on the skirmish line, and participated in the attack at that point which resulted in the capture of a fort, several pieces of artillery, and a number of prisoners, the detachment of the Fourth Ohio Volunteers, under Capt. L. Rounds, taking 67 prisoners, and the Tenth New York detachment, Captain Van Winkle, taking 30 prisoners. The One hundred and sixth Battalion of Pennsylvania Volunteers, Captain Gallagher, was organized for field service in conjunction with Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. Charles McAnally, and participated in all the movements of the last-named command. The brigade—consisting (exclusive of those left on the skirmish line) of the First Delaware Volunteers, a portion of the Tenth New York, a portion of the Fourteenth Connecticut, the Seventh Virginia, One hundred and eighth New York, Twelfth New Jersey, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania, and the One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers—moved to the left and took position on the left of the Third Division. When the enemy were discovered to have evacuated we marched with the Third Division to Cox's road, near Petersburg, and on the arrival of the Second Division we were joined by the detachment of our brigade left on the skirmish line, who had participated in the attack at that point under General Hays. General Smyth then received an order from General Humphreys to rejoin his division, under General Hays. The division then moved down the South Side Railroad, this brigade resting for the night on the railroad, about nine miles from Petersburg. In the morning we returned to near Petersburg, starting at 6 a. m. We were then ordered to turn back, and marched until 11 p. m., halting for the night near Namozine Church. On the morning of the 4th instant we moved at 7 a. m., and halted about 1.30 p. m. near the forks of Burkeville and Amelia Court-House roads. Taking the road in the direction of Jetersville, we halted for the night at 9 p. m. in line of battle, our brigade on the right. Our command was entirely out of rations and the men worn out. We received orders to move at midnight (12 p. m.), but were obliged to wait to issue rations to the command. As soon as rations were issued we moved on in advance of the corps, this brigade in advance of the division. We passed Denimsville about 9 a. m., and reached the Fifth Corps, near Jetersville, at 2.30 p. m. The marching on this day was very hard, the day warm and the roads bad. We found the Fifth Corps in line, fortified, and our division was formed in line on the left of the Fifth Corps, this brigade on the right, with our right resting on the railroad at or near Jetersville. The enemy reported to be advancing, we built works and remained in this position until the morning of the 6th instant, when we received orders to advance and attack the enemy's works. General Smyth then sent out the Seventh Virginia, Fourth Ohio, and Seventh Michigan (of the First Brigade) as skirmishers. Taking a northeast direction we advanced about a mile, finding a few of the enemy's cavalry in our front, our brigade on the right and marching by the flank in rear of the skirmishers. About 9 o'clock General Smyth was called on to take command of the division, and the command for a short time devolved on Col. Daniel Woodall, First Delaware Volunteers. About 10 o'clock, or near that time, General F. Barlow assumed command of the division, and General Smyth returned to the command of the brigade. The enemy having gone around on our left, we were ordered to move to the left and pursue him, our division moving on the right of the other divisions of the corps. General Smyth was then ordered to connect with the First Division (General Miles), but was afterward ordered to throw out skirmishers and take the advance of the division. The Sixty-ninth and One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers were thrown out on our right flank as flankers, the One hundred and eighth New York and half of the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers were deployed as skirmishers, and participated in the attack on the enemy's position at Sailor's Creek. During the day we kept close on the heels of the enemy and pushed him vigorously, and halted when it became so dark we could not continue the pursuit.

The troops engaged in the attack on the redoubt on the 2d instant were a detachment of the Tenth New York Volunteers, Captain Van Winkle; a detachment of the Fourth Ohio Volunteers, Capt. S. W. De Witt and Lewis Rounds; five companies of the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, Captain Mardock. The Seventh Michigan Volunteers were also left there and participated, and reported at that place to their own (the First) brigade. Officers wounded during operations to the 6th instant, inclusive: Lieut. Mark Hopkins, Seventh West Virginia, wounded March 31; Lieut. Col. S. A. Moore, Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, April 6. Officers killed: Lieut. Stephen Patterson, Seventh Michigan Volunteers, April 1 [March 29]. Lieutenant-Colonel Moore, of the Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, though not on duty, superintended the movements of his command on the 6th instant, and while engaged in the capture of some rebels accidentally shot himself with his pistol.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL WOODARD,

Colonel First Delaware Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Burkeville Junction, Va., April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of this brigade during the time I have had command of it. I assumed command at noon on the 7th instant, immediately after the late Brigadier-General Smyth was wounded and during the skirmish with the enemy between High Bridge and Farmville, on the South Side Railroad:

With the exception of the Tenth New York Volunteers, Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, and Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, the whole brigade was deployed as skirmishers, and in compliance with instructions I advanced this line, engaging the enemy and driving them until I reached a road running east from Farmville. Here I was ordered to halt and assemble the command, and to post a line along the aforesaid road. The Twelfth New Jersey Volunteers, Seventh Virginia Volunteers, Fourth Ohio Volunteers, and One hundred and eighth New York Volunteers were left on the road as skirmishers, and the remainder of the command massed with the division. Shortly afterward the command was marched with the division to the right of the First Division of this corps, and after dark I was assigned position on the right of the First Brigade. Temporary breast-works were thrown up, and the command encamped for the night. This brigade moved with the division on the morning of the 8th instant, and throughout the day nothing of mentionable importance occurred. The Sixty-ninth and One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers and Tenth New York Volunteers preceded the column as skirmishers on this day. At 6.30 p. m. the command was halted, and one day's rations were issued to the troops, after which it again moved with the division a distance of about three miles and encamped for the night. Moved with the division on the morning of the 9th instant to the vicinity of "Clover Hill farm." At this place the command remained until the morning of the 11th instant, when the march to this place commenced.

In a complete report of the operations of this command since the opening of the recent campaign much might be said of the praiseworthy action of individuals and separate organizations. I can only say, that since I have had the honor to command the brigade I have received the cordial support of officers and men, and all are entitled to credit for the patience, energy, and steadiness in action which has so largely contributed to secure the general result.

I respectfully submit herewith the nominal list of casualties,* together with the reports of regimental commanders.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WOODALL,

Colonel First Delaware Veteran Volunteers, Comdg. Brigade.

Maj. JOHN M. NORVELL,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division.

No. 59.

Report of Capt. J. Frank Morgan, Fourteenth Connecticut Infantry.

HDQRS. FOURTEENTH CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that since breaking camp, March 28, 1865, this regiment as a regiment has not been engaged with the enemy. The right wing was upon the skirmish line near the Boylston road April 1 and 2, during which time they were at intervals under the enemy's fire. On the morning of the 2d they participated, with the Seventh Michigan and Tenth New York Volunteers, in the movement in which a fort and several pieces of artillery in their front were captured. Upon the 6th of April, in Amelia County, the left wing of the regiment skirmished in advance of the brigade, capturing some thirteen of the enemy and sustaining no loss, except the accidental wounding of Lieutenant-Colonel Moore. Upon the 8th the whole regiment was twice exposed for a few moments to the enemy's fire (at High Bridge and a point near Farmville) without having any opportunity of replying.

All the casualties sustained in this command during the above period are three—1 commissioned officer and 2 enlisted men wounded. The number of prisoners taken from the enemy is 36.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. FRANK MORGAN,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. THERON E. PARSONS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

* Embodied in table, p. 583.

No. 60.

Report of Maj. John T. Dent, First Delaware Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DELAWARE VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to forward the following report of the late operations against the enemy in which my command have participated:

Received orders to march on the 27th ultimo; broke camp; were ordered on picket; relieved from picket on the 28th and joined our brigade; remained along the line near Petersburg, Va. On the 30th were ordered out as skirmishers; engaged the enemy; lost two enlisted men wounded; the enemy were driven from their works; immediately pursued them. Again engaged them near Farmville, Va., April 7; drove them from their works, capturing a few prisoners; assisted in capturing 9 pieces of artillery. Loss—2 commissioned officers wounded; 3 enlisted men killed, 9 wounded, and 1 missing, in action. Have not since been engaged with the enemy. Total loss—2 commissioned officers wounded; 3 enlisted men killed, 11 wounded, and 1 missing, in action.

The regiment has been commanded by Col. Daniel Woodall till April 7, when he received an order to take command of the brigade. Lieutenant-Colonel Nichols in the meantime having been wounded, the command devolved upon me.

The officers and men have displayed much gallantry and deserve great credit.

In all, the operations of my command since the beginning of the campaign to the present date bear a similar history as that of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN T. DENT,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. T. E. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 61.

Report of Maj. Henry F. Chew, Twelfth New Jersey Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TWELFTH NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment from the 28th [29th] ultimo to the present:

On the morning of 28th [29th] of March broke camp near Petersburg and moved to the left, on the Vaughan road, to position near Hatcher's Run. Lay here until about 7 o'clock on morning of 29th [30th], when this regiment was detailed to corduroy a road leading from Hatcher's Run to the Vaughan road; worked at this until evening of April 1, when rejoined the brigade, then lying at the Lewis house. Next morning (2d), in conjunction with the brigade, moved to the left of the army, beyond the Boydton plank road; remained here until 10 a. m., when marched up the road to within a short distance of Petersburg. About 2 p. m. moved along the South Side Railroad to a station (name unknown) and lay there during the night. On morning of 3d marched to within a short distance of Petersburg; thence retracing our steps moved to Moravian Church. Lay there during the night, and on the morning of the 4th moved toward the Danville railroad and halted for the night. On the morning of the 5th instant moved on, and in afternoon arrived near and took position near the Danville railroad, where remained during the night. On the 6th moved to attack the enemy at or near Amelia Court-House, but were not engaged during the day; halted for the night about seven miles from Amelia Court-House. Next morning (7th) pushed the enemy down to and across the Lynchburg railroad; found them posted at a high bridge, where we attacked and drove them from thence to Farmville, where the regiment was deployed as skirmishers on the extreme left of the division, to the right of the railroad; were ordered to advance, which was done, and drove the enemy from his position, and halted on the Richmond road, where rejoined the brigade and moved up on the right of the First Division, Second Army Corps; was then placed on picket, where remained all night. On morning of 8th continued pursuit of the enemy down the Buckingham road and halted for the night about six miles from New Buckingham. On morning of 9th continued the march down the Buckingham road and halted near Clover Hill, where surrender of the rebel army took place.

Hoping that the above will prove satisfactory, I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. F. CHEW,
Major, Commanding.

Capt. THERON E. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

N. B.—I append the nominal list of casualties.*

---

No. 62.

Report of Lieut. Col. George F. Hopper, Tenth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TENTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 14, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the part taken by this command in the operations since March 29, 1865:

March 29, started from camp near Hatcher's Run 6 a. m., and marched to a point upon the Vaughan road near Dabney's Mill, where the command aided in erecting breast-works. March 31, regiment sent upon picket duty about 6 a. m. Remained upon this duty until morning of 2d of April, when, in conjunction with the rest of the line, the regiment advanced and entered a rebel fort to the right of the Boydton road, capturing it and the works contiguous, with 30 prisoners. Loss, 1 commissioned officer and 1 enlisted man wounded. Upon 7th instant the command acted as flankers to the column, and participated also in the advance at High Bridge and near Farmville, losing two enlisted men wounded. April 8, the command acted as skirmishers and flankers on the right of the division. 9th, marched to a point near Clover Hill, where we remained until the morning of 11th instant, when the command took up line of march toward Burkeville, where it arrived evening of 13th instant.

---

* Embodied in table, p. 583.

I have to report very favorably as to the general good conduct and steady bearing of the commissioned officers and enlisted men of my command during the past fatiguing and arduous campaign.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. F. HOPPER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Tenth New York Volunteers.

Capt. THERON E. PARSONS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 63.

Report of Lieut. Col. Francis E. Pierce, One hundred and eighth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 108TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I respectfully make the following report of the operations of this regiment during the late campaign:

The regiment left camp on the morning of March 28 [29], with the rest of the brigade, and moved out the Vaughan road across Hatcher's Run, and bivouacked for the night near Dahney's Mills. On the morning of the 29th [30th] advanced with the rest of the brigade; nothing beside ordinary picket and fatigue duty was done by the regiment until the morning of March 31, when the right wing was sent out to ascertain the strength of the enemy in our immediate front. The enemy's skirmish line was driven in, and it was discovered that they had a line of works, in front of which was a broad slashing, and were in considerable force behind the works. Later in the day the left wing was sent out to capture some of the enemy's pickets if possible. The pickets were easily driven behind their main line of works; but, owing to the denseness of the slashing, it was impossible to capture any of them.

On the morning of April 2 this regiment and the Seventh Virginia of this brigade were ordered to advance upon the enemy's works, and enter them if possible. All arrangements were made, but at 2 a. m. the order was countermanded, and, with the rest of the brigade, it was moved to the left. Shortly afterward it was discovered that the enemy had abandoned his works in our front, and this regiment was moved to the right to within two miles of Petersburg, where it remained for a short time, when it was moved back toward the left again some five or six miles, where it bivouacked. On the morning of the 3d the regiment again moved nearly to Petersburg, where it remained until about noon, when it started, with the rest of the brigade, in pursuit of the enemy. The regiment was on the skirmish line during the advance on the 6th of April, and on the 7th was again placed in support of the skirmish line of the brigade. On nearing High Bridge the regiment was taken from the skirmish line and placed on the right of the brigade, and marched toward the bridge, on the railroad, in column of fours, preceded by some of the First Delaware, who had been on the skirmish line. After remaining near the east end of the bridge about half an hour the regiment was moved alongside of the railroad track to a small bridge below the railroad bridge, and was the first regiment that crossed. It advanced as skirmishers along the piers of the railroad bridge, and its colors were continually in advance of all others and were the first planted on a small fort at the west end of the bridge, and officers and men belonging to this regiment were the first at the ten pieces of artillery that were left by the enemy at the west end of the bridge. It is not intended to assert that this regiment captured the fort or the ten pieces of artillery, as the credit is due to the whole brigade; but simply that the colors of this regiment were the first over the bridge, and kept in the advance, and that the regiment was the first to reach the fort and the guns. The regiment was reformed immediately in rear of the captured artillery, and advanced beside the railroad track toward Farmville. At about one mile and a half east of that place it was again deployed as skirmishers, the left resting on the railroad, the line being nearly at right angles with the road. The enemy, who had besides a strong skirmish line a section of artillery, was repeatedly driven from strong positions until the whole line was ordered to halt, and was reformed and moved to the right of the First Division.

On the night of the 7th the regiment constructed a line of works. On the morning of the 8th it advanced, with the rest of the brigade, in pursuit of the enemy, and was with the brigade when the enemy surrendered. It made the return march to this place, arriving here on the evening of the 13th.

Although the regiment has endured many hardships and at times been almost without rations, there has been very little or no complaint by officers or men, and all duty has been readily and cheerfully performed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. B. PIERCE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. THIERON E. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 64.

Report of Capt. Charles McAnally, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. SIXTY-NINTH PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment since the 29th ultimo:

On the morning of the 29th of March the regiment broke camp and moved along with the brigade across Hatcher's Run to the vicinity of Dabney's Mills, at which place the regiment was thrown out as skirmishers to connect with the pickets of the Twenty-fourth Corps; in so doing the enemy opened a brisk fire of musketry, and kept it up till dark. During the night I captured two prisoners, who were sent to brigade headquarters. At daylight I found that the enemy had abandoned his position, which fact I immediately reported to brigade headquarters. About 8 o'clock on the morning of the 30th my regiment was relieved, and I joined the brigade at Gum Run, where I remained until evening, when I was ordered to report with my regiment to Captain Howell, U. S. Engineers, on the Vaughan road, by whom my regiment was employed in constructing corduroy roads until the morning of the 2d instant, when I rejoined the brigade, in compliance with an order to that effect from General Humphreys, and marched with it to Cox's road, where I bivouacked the regiment for the night.

Nothing of event transpired until the afternoon of the 6th instant, when I was ordered to take my regiment upon the right flank of the brigade, which I accordingly did. The road upon which the column moved took an oblique direction to the left, whilst I moved my regiment directly in the direction indicated to me by a staff officer of the division, and in this manner I became so far separated from the brigade as to be unable to rejoin it until the day following. During the time that I was thus separated I took 29 of the enemy as prisoners, and captured 1 mule, all of which I turned over to Major Palmer, provost-marshal, Second Corps. I rejoined the brigade with my regiment at noon of the 7th instant. On the morning of the 8th instant I deployed my regiment as skirmishers for the division, and during the day the regiment captured 7 prisoners. With this exception none of the enemy was met with until about 5 p. m., when we encountered a force and drove it back a distance of about one mile, after which we were withdrawn and rejoined the brigade. Nothing of note has occurred in this regiment since.

During the foregoing operations no casualties occurred in this regiment. Both the officers and men behaved in a manner for which they deserve great credit, and I would deem it an injustice to particularize one above another.

I would further state the One hundred and sixth Battalion Pennsylvania Volunteers operated along with my regiment.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. McANALLY,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

The number of prisoners captured on each day was as follows: March 29, 2 enlisted men; April 6, 29 enlisted men; April 8, 6 enlisted men and 1 officer. Total, 1 officer and 37 enlisted men. Captured 1 mule.

Capt. THERON E. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 65.

Report of Capt. John H. Gallagher, One hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. 106TH BATTALION PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to forward the following report of operations of this command since the 28th ultimo:

Left camp on the 29th at 6 a. m.; marched with the column; halted and constructed breast-works; again moved with the column to Dabney's Mill; ordered to the front as skirmishers in conjunction with the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers; met the enemy, and drove them to their works at dark; remained on line all night. 30th, occupied the works at daybreak and found no enemy; relieved by Twenty-fourth Army Corps, and joined the brigade at 8 a. m.; remained with brigade till 5 p. m.; ordered to report to headquarters for fatigue duty; camped near army headquarters for the night. 31st, engaged in corduroying roads all day. April 1, engaged in corduroying all day. 2d, joined the brigade at 7 a. m.; camped for the night on the South Side Railroad. 3d, moved toward Petersburg; countermarched in pursuit of the enemy; camped for the night. 4th, moved at daybreak with the column; on picket all night. 5th, joined the brigade 1.30 a. m.; moved with the column; reached the Fifth Corps in breast works; passing them, formed on their left; constructed a line of works, and remained for the night. 6th, moved at 6 a. m.; detailed on flank of column; captured 8 prisoners and 3 contrabands, and destroyed 26 muskets for want of transportation; remained on flank all night. 7th, joined the brigade near Farnville, Va.; camped for the night. 8th, marched in support of skirmishers all day; went into camp at dusk; moved at 10 p. m. in advance four miles; camped till daybreak. 9th, moved at 8.30 a. m. with the column; halted at 1 p. m.; went into camp about 6 p. m.

No casualties occurred in this command since the 28th ultimo.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. H. GALLAGER,

Captain, Commanding 106th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Capt. THERON E. PARSONS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 66.

Report of Lieut. Col. Francis W. H. Baldwin, Seventh West Virginia Infantry.

HDQRS. SEVENTH WEST VIRGINIA VET. VOL. BATTALION,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular of this date, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this command from the 28th of March to the 10th day of April, 1865:

By your order the regiment took up our line of march on the Vaughan road south, and as soon as we crossed Hatcher's Run were deployed as skirmishers during the 29th day of March. 31st of March, at 11 a. m., the regiment was again advanced in front of the brigade as skirmishers, and engaged the enemy at not over seventy-five yards distance from their fort, enabling them to use their guns until 7 p. m., when I returned to the works occupied by the brigade. April 2, soon after the enemy's lines south of Petersburg were broken I took up the line of march with the brigade. Arrived at Jetersville Station, on the Danville railroad, evening of the 5th instant, and threw up temporary works. 6th instant by your order my regiment again advanced as skirmishers and joined the brigade at evening without any loss. Morning of the 7th by your order my regiment engaged the enemy at High Bridge, across the [Appomattox] River, without any loss. In the latter part of the day skirmished with the enemy near Farnville without any loss. 9th instant, by your order my regiment were flankers on the right of the brigade.

List of casualties: Wounded, March 31, 1865, Lieut. Mark Hopkins, Company C, and 4 enlisted men.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. H. BALDWIN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Captain PARSONS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

Report of Brig. Gen. Regis de Trobriand, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 17, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this division in the active operations from March 29 to April 10, the first part being simply a résumé of the reports of the brigade commanders (herein inclosed) from the 29th of March to the morning of the 6th of April, as Bvt. Maj. Gen. G. Mott was in command of the division during that period:

PART I.

March 29, in compliance with orders the division broke camp early in the morning, and after crossing Hatcher's Run formed in line of battle on the north side of the Vaughan road and on the left of the Second Division—the Second Brigade (General Pierce) having the right, the Third Brigade (General McAllister) the left, and the First Brigade (General De Trobriand) being held in reserve behind the two others. Three regiments were soon sent forward to reconnoiter. The Twentieth Indiana (Captain Shafer), on the left, did not find the enemy. The Ninety-third New York (Colonel Gifford) and Seventeenth Maine (Lieutenant-Colonel Hobson), advancing to the front, found a small force of the enemy's pickets, protected by a line of breast-works. They were promptly dislodged, and the line of battle was advanced so as to occupy the intrenchments with the addition of two regiments of the First Brigade.

March 30, early in the morning the line of battle was advanced across the Dabney's Mill road and a branch of Hatcher's Run, throwing up a line of breast-works from J. Crow's house toward the Boydton road. The weather was very unfavorable, and the First Brigade furnished strong details during the day to repair the Dabney's Mill road and lay corduroy roads and bridges for the passage of the artillery to the front.

March 31; before daybreak the division moved by the left to the Boydton road, relieving the First Division, the Second and Third Brigades occupying the breast-works, and the First being massed to support General Miles near Rainey's house. About 12 m., General Miles having attacked the enemy and driven it, the First Brigade followed the movement, and soon afterward took position in line to fill a gap opened by the advance, between General Miles' right and General McAllister's left. In the meantime it was deemed expedient to make a diversion in favor of the First Division, and the Second and Third Brigades were ordered to assault the enemy's works on their respective fronts. The attacking force of the Third Brigade was composed of the Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers (Lieut. Col. C. C. Rivers), the One hundred and twentieth New York (Lieut. Col. A. L. Lockwood), and the left wing of the Eighth New Jersey (Major Hartford), supported by the Eleventh New Jersey (Lieutenant-Colonel Schoonover). The enemy's rifle-pits, although protected by a heavy slashing, were carried, with the capture of some fifteen rebels, but our men were unable to proceed any farther under a cross-fire of artillery sweeping their entire front, besides a brisk firing of musketry, and when ordered to fall back the retreat was found as perilous as the advance had been. The assault by the Second Brigade met with the same obstacles—heavy slashing, sweeping cross-fire of artillery, and brisk firing of musketry. The attack was made by the Fifth Michigan (Colonel Pulford) and the First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, the men being unable to reach the works of the enemy. The whole division bivouacked in line of battle, protected by breast-works, and forming a complete connection with the Second Division on the right and the First Division on the left.

April 1, about 4 a. m. the division was ordered to resume its position of the previous morning—the Second and Third Brigades along the breast-works on the right of the Boydton road, the First Brigade in reserve about sixty yards to the rear. After sunset, however, the First Brigade took again position in line on the left of the Boydton road, the division spreading in single file to the left until it connected with General Madill's brigade, of the First Division. At 10.30 p. m., the line being well established and the pickets thrown forward, an attack was ordered in front of the First Brigade, to find if the enemy was there in force, and should its line be weakened to pierce it. The point of attack being selected three regiments were designated to carry it—the Seventy-third New York (Lieutenant-Colonel Burns), the One hundred and twenty-fourth New York (Lieutenant-Colonel Weygant), and the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania (Capt. F. B. Stewart), the whole under the orders of Lieutenant-Colonel Burns, the ranking officer. The pickets of the enemy were carried successfully, but the moon going down left our men in a complete darkness, under woods obstructed by slashing and unable to find their way any farther. The fire of the enemy having already sufficiently demonstrated that they were there in force the party was withdrawn and returned to the breast-works. The brigade report speaks in high terms of the credit due to Lieutenant-Colonel Burns, Lieutenant-Colonel Weygant, and Captain Stewart for the handsome manner in which the whole operation was conducted. Skirmishing went on, at times fiercely, on different points of the line during the rest of the night.

April 2, at 3 a. m., in compliance with orders from corps headquarters, the Second and Third Brigades resumed their positions on the right and left of the Boydton road, the First Brigade extending farther to the left, from the swamp in front of Rainey's house to the Butler house, with a re-enforcement of 450 men from the First Division, and the support of Third Brigade, Second Division (General Smyth). The movement was completed not without some difficulty, arising from a lively attack of the enemy while the troops were in motion, but before 5 o'clock the three brigades were in position. Between 8 and 9 a. m., some suspicious movement being perceptible in front of the Third Brigade, General McAllister was ordered to feel the enemy's line with one regiment. The Eighth New Jersey Volunteers (Major Hartford) advanced accordingly, and charging under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry, carried the whole line of pits, with 165 prisoners and about 200 muskets. Soon after the guns disappeared from the embrasure the enemy was seen running toward their right, and the Eighth New Jersey Volunteers, advancing on the main works, planted their flag on the redoubts before 10 o'clock, capturing another lot of prisoners. A general advance followed, the division marching along the Boydton road until, having reached the immediate vicinity of Petersburg, the First and Second Brigades were formed in line of battle with the Sixth and the Twenty-fourth Corps, the Third Brigade being kept in reserve, in which disposition the troops bivouacked for the night.

April 3, the enemy having evacuated Petersburg during the night, the division crossed the South Side Railroad, and marched along the River road, the First Brigade leading, and our skirmishers and flankers capturing a great number of rebels scattered through the woods. Bivouacked beyond Mamborough.

April 4, the march of that day was a short one, the men being mostly employed in repairing the road for the passage of the artillery and the supply trains.

April 5, the march was resumed in earnest, and the roads being in a better condition the division reached Jetersville about sunset, where it was massed on the extreme left of the position occupied and intrenched by the Fifth Corps.

PART II.

April 6, the division moved at 7 a. m., in the direction of Amelia Court-House, and about 9 o'clock we had reached Salt Sulphur Springs. There Brevet Major-General Mott communicated to me his instructions. I crossed the run accordingly, deployed the Twentieth Indiana (Captain Shafer) as skirmishers, with the One hundred and twenty-fourth New York held as reserve; and bringing up the balance of the brigade I now engaged the enemy's rear force. General Mott wishing to judge by himself of my dispositions, joined me soon after behind the skirmisher's line, where he was shot through the leg, and having turned over to me the command of the division was carried away from the field. At the time when I assumed command of the division the First Brigade (now under command of Col. R. B. Shepherd) was forming in line of battle, its right on the road, with two regiments from the Second Brigade on the left extending to the creek, so as to be secured on that side against any possible flanking movement of the enemy. It was intended that we should connect on the right with General Miles; but the First Division, coming by another road, was still far behind, although its advanced skirmishers connected with my line of battle. Knowing that part of the enemy's trains was within our reach if we advanced promptly, I did not deem it necessary to wait for the First Division. I formed a strong regiment, the Fortieth New York (Lieutenant-Colonel Cannon), on the right of the road, and the enemy falling back before our advance I pushed forward my line of battle close behind my skirmishers. The elan of the men was remarkable from the start and augured well for the success of the day. It hardly left time to the enemy to attempt a stand behind hasty breast works erected around a farmhouse before the whole was carried. Major-General Humphreys, commanding the corps, sent me then full confirmation of the instructions already transmitted to me by General Mott, urging the importance of pressing the enemy without loss of time, and on we went. The first stand that the enemy made with some result was by putting in position some pieces of artillery, supported by a cavalry force, which checked on the right the skirmishers of the First Division in open fields, while a very accurate shelling threatened to disturb our advance in the woods. But having found a favorable position for our artillery I directed a section of the Eleventh [Battery] New York Artillery to open from there on the enemy's cavalry, and a few shots well directed soon put an end to the resistance at that point. In the meantime Major-General Humphreys had come to our front and recommended especially the capture of the enemy's guns whenever an opportunity would present itself. This was accomplished afterward, but not before we had felt again the accuracy of their fire. Emerging from the woods the skirmishers carried a line of light works, weakly defended, the enemy retreating rapidly to another line much stronger, on the crest of a hill, offering every advantage for defense. It required more than a line of skirmishers to dislodge them, and the line of battle having at all points reached the breast-works just captured I ordered it to charge. At the command forward the whole line sprang over the works and rushed through the open ground, under a heavy fire of musketry and artillery, each regiment anxious to be the first to reach the enemy's intrenchments and to plant there its flying colors. The One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania, the Seventy-third and Eighty-sixth New York, the First Maine Heavy Artillery (from the First Brigade), the Seventeenth Maine and One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania (from the Second Brigade), emulated each other in the ardor of this attack. The position was carried, with the capture of about 400 prisoners and several battle-flags, and without halting we occupied Deatonville. By that time, the First Division having come up, I had withdrawn the Fortieth New York from the right to the left of the road. The other regiments of the First Brigade had been relieved successively when their ammunition was exhausted on the skirmish line and sent to the rear to replenish their cartridge-boxes, the ammunition following, but with difficulty, the rapidity of our advance; so my line of battle was then nearly exclusively formed of the Second Brigade, with the support of the Third Brigade on the left, which had been but slightly engaged. The presence of the Sixth Corps on our left precluded any danger on that side, but the advance was somewhat interfered with at that point by some force of cavalry and a brigade of the Sixth Corps being in our way. The fourth line of breast-works was encountered on a hill beyond, and carried without hesitation, the Fortieth New York capturing there the first piece of artillery from the enemy, soon followed by four others. The First Brigade, which had fought in advance since the morning, was then reformed in the rear, having during the campaign, and according to the report of its commander, captured 1,390 enlisted men, 17 commissioned officers, and during the day 5 pieces of artillery, 28 wagons, 1 limber, 1 artillery guidon, and 3 battle-flags. Enough for the brigade, but not enough, still, for the division. The Second Brigade, having now the lead, charged and carried the fifth line of breast-works encountered during the day, with more prisoners and more wagons captured. About sunset, having advanced through a dense wood, General Pierce found the enemy intrenched on a hill, and was met with a determined resistance. The cause of it soon became evident. The road turned abruptly to the left and ran there parallel to the breast-works which covered it and close in their rear. The rear part of the enemy's train was close by, and their only chance of escape was in the holding of the breast-works. But this last effort was of no avail against the elan of our men, who would not be checked. The works were carried, driving a battery from its position, when General Pierce, seeing his left uncovered, refused it, so as to facilitate his connection with the Third Brigade, advancing at the same time his right, so as to change front facing toward the wagons then in sight. By this time the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers (Lieutenant-Colonel Lockwood) had connected with the left of the Second Brigade, which charged at once on the wagons huddled in the ravine on the bank of the creek and captured them, the Seventeenth Maine and Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers passing through, crossing the stream, and taking position on the hill beyond. This ended the operations of the day, during which the Second Brigade, according to the report of its commander, had captured 963 prisoners, 5 battle-flags, 1 signal flag, 1 piece of artillery, and about 200 wagons and ambulances.

I would mention here that during the attack of the enemy on the Sixth Corps, the rapidity of our advance having opened a wide gap between my left and that corps, I ordered General McAllister to extend as far as possible his line in that direction. But having gone myself to see the condition of things, and being satisfied that the repulse of the enemy had made it impossible for him to endanger my flank, I had subsequently directed the action of the Third Brigade principally to the support of the Second, and before dark my command was all brought well together.

April 7, followed the pursuit and overtook the enemy in the afternoon. The Second and Third Brigades were formed in line on the left of the First Division, the First being kept in reserve and protecting the artillery with three regiments. After skirmishing for some hours with the enemy the division covered its front with breast-works and bivouacked for the night.

April 8, followed the enemy on the road to Lynchburg, the division moving in column through the fields about 1,000 yards on the left of the road until ordered to follow the First Division. Issued rations to the command in the evening, and joined during the night the two other divisions, four miles farther.

April 10 [9], short march. Surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia by General Lee.

During that short but brilliant, decisive campaign, the Third Division, Second Army Corps, has captured over 3,000 prisoners, 9 battle-flags, 1 artillery guidon, 6 pieces of artillery, over 200 wagons and ambulances, carried several portions of the enemy's picket-line in the vicinity of Boydton road, and on the 6th instant stormed six intrenched positions. Such results speak for themselves, and are the best evidence of the excellent behavior and admirable gallantry of the officers and men of this command. I would also claim for them the credit due to the remarkably good spirit with which they endured the fatigue of hard marching and occasionally the privation of food. It seemed like if swallowing the army of General Lee could satisfy their appetites without regard to the regularity of the issue of rations. The list of recommendations for promotion designates officially the officers who particularly distinguished themselves. But I could not conclude without especial thanks to my brigade commanders—Brig. Gen. B. R. Pierce, Bvt. Brig. Gen. R. McAllister, and Col. R. B. Shepherd—for the gallantry and efficiency with which they co-operated to the common work and contributed to the common success. All the officers of my staff have been so uniformly active, intelligent, and brave in the performance of their respective duties, that I could not mention any of them without some injustice to the others. As to the recommendations for promotion among them, having been but a short time in command of the division, I consider it more proper to take no action until I have consulted Brevet Major-General Mott on the subject.

Respectfully submitted.

R. DE TROBRIAND,

Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. CHARLES A. WHITTIER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Army Corps.

No. 68.

Report of Brig. Gen. Regis de Trobriand, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 11, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the First Brigade, under my command, in the active operations from March 28 last to the evening of the 6th instant, when I assumed command of the division, this report being completed by the report of Colonel Shepherd, who succeeded me in the command of the brigade:

March 29, started at 7 a. m. by the Vaughan road, crossed the Hatcher's Run, and, by order of General Mott, taking a position in reserve along the road near the field where Major-General Meade had his headquarters, sent the Twentieth Indiana on reconnaissance on the left. The regiment did not find the enemy, and the line of battle being moved forward I followed the movement and bivouacked near a line of works abandoned by the enemy, after having filled with two of my regiments, the First Maine Heavy Artillery and the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania, a gap open in the line of battle between the Second and Third Brigades.

March 30, furnished strong details for repairing the Dabney's Mill road, and laying corduroy work for the passage of the artillery to the front line at J. Crow's house, my position being on the run, with the road in my rear.

March 31, moved before daybreak to the Boydton road, where I was ordered to mass my brigade in support of the First Division. During the morning I was ordered with my command to the support of the Second Division, near J. Crow's house, but soon after was recalled to the Boydton road, where General Miles was engaging the enemy. I followed his advance, occupying first the line of intrenchments vacated by two of his brigades and extending from the swamp in front of the corps headquarters on the left to the Boydton road on the right, where I connected with the Third Brigade. Soon, however, the advance of the First Division having opened a gap between its right and the left of the Third Brigade, Third Division, I moved my command forward to fill it, leaving two regiments to cover the artillery in the breast-works. Our connection in line of battle with General Miles' right and General McAllister's left was completed under a brisk shelling of the enemy and a light skirmishing with its sharpshooters, losing a dozen men in the movement. At sunset we covered our position with breast-works and bivouacked on the spot.

April 1, before daybreak I was ordered to withdraw my command, our pickets falling back to occupy the works, while the brigade was again massed in the woods behind the line occupied by the Second and Third Brigades, on the right of the Boydton road. After sunset, however, in compliance with orders, I took back my command to the position of the previous evening, extending the line in single file to the left, so as to connect with General Madill, of the First Division. I had completed my connection when, about 10.30 p. m., I received orders from corps and division headquarters to attack the enemy's line and try if I could pierce at some point. Having, therefore, selected the most favorable ground for the attack, I sent forward three regiments—the Seventy-third New York (Lieutenant-Colonel Burns), the One hundred and twenty-fourth New York (Lieutenant-Colonel Weygant), and the

One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania (Capt. F. B. Stewart), the whole under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Burns, the ranking officer. These three regiments were formed in line of battle, and advanced across an open field steadily and in good order, without answering at first the fire of the rebel pickets (which were in the edge of the woods in front), until at very short distance, when all the line charged and carried the pits, capturing some prisoners. While the line of battle was reforming under an oblique fire of the enemy, briskly answered by a flanking company, the moon went down and the men found themselves in a dense wood obstructed by slashing and unable to see their way in the complete darkness of the night. At that time I received instructions from General Mott to limit my attack to a reconnaissance and to withdraw when it would be accomplished. The firing directed on my men, and which had been going on all this time, having satisfied me that the enemy was in force, I sent an order to Lieutenant-Colonel Burns to fall back to the intrenchments. This was accomplished in excellent order, the line of battle emerging from the woods and retreating slowly across the field, never breaking in any part until it resumed its position behind the breast-works. Great credit is due to Lieutenant-Colonel Burns, Lieutenant-Colonel Weygant, and Capt. F. B. Stewart, for the handsome manner in which all the operation was conducted. This was the first of a series of similar attacks which succeeded each other during the night, keeping the enemy on the alert and in force on our front. Our loss in that attack was eighteen men; Captain Cornick, One hundred and twenty-fourth New York, was unfortunately killed while gallantly leading his men forward.

April 2, at 2 a. m. I received orders to withdraw my command and to occupy a new position on the Boydton road, in the breast-works, extending from the swamp in front of Rainey's house to Butler's house, across the road, supporting four batteries of artillery. While the brigade was moving the enemy made a brisk attack in front of our left. Three of my regiments which were still in the woods formed in line of battle, and three others which were crossing the field in the rear of the intrenchments, seeing them unoccupied and the artillery without immediate protection, formed themselves behind the breast-works until the attack had subsided. This occasioned some delay in movement ordered, but by daybreak all the brigade had assumed its new position. Still my left did not extend as far as Butler's house, and I had to send two full companies of the First Maine Heavy Artillery to support the battery stationed there, until a detachment of 450 men from the First Division, returning from fatigue detail, were ordered to report to me, soon followed by the Third Brigade, Second Division (General Smyth), which was massed in my rear, and made our left perfectly safe. About 11 a. m. the attack of the Ninth and Sixth Corps having been successful in front of Petersburg, and the enemy having left in haste the works in front of us, we marched forward, penetrating his line at Burgess' Mills and following the Boydton road until in the immediate vicinity of Petersburg, when I was directed to form in line of battle, connecting on my left with the Sixth Corps at ——— house, and with the Twenty-fourth Corps on my right. Some shelling and light skirmishing took place there, wounding some few men, and we bivouacked in that position.

April 3, followed the enemy by the River road, my brigade leading, with the Seventy-third New York Volunteers as advanced guard. Our skirmishers and flankers captured during the day over 300 prisoners scattered in the woods. Bivouacked beyond Mannborough.

April 4, short march, the men being mostly employed in repairing the road for the passage of the artillery and trains. April 5, resumed the march in earnest and reached Jetersville toward the evening, where the brigade was massed for the night on the extreme left of the position occupied and intrenched by the Fifth Corps. April 6, we moved forward at 7 a. m., and my brigade having the advance, I was just engaging the rear of the enemy's forces, near Salt Sulphur Springs, when Brevet Major-General Mott, having come to the front to give me some verbal instructions, was struck by a bullet in the leg, and carried away from the field, turning over to me the command of the division.

Respectfully submitted.

R. DE TROBRIAND,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. WILLIAM R. DRIVER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Div., Second Army Corps.

---

No. 69.

Report of Col. Russell B. Shepherd, First Maine Heavy Artillery, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 17, 1863.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the First Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps, in the pursuit of the enemy from the morning of the 6th to the 9th instant:

About 9 a. m. the 6th instant I took command of the brigade by order of General R. de Trobriand, who had been called to the command of the division. The following disposition of the brigade had previously been made: The One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania and five companies of the Twentieth Indiana were deployed as skirmishers, the remaining five companies in reserve; the Seventy-third and Eighty-sixth New York were thrown out on the left to protect the flank, as there was no immediate connection; the remaining four regiments—the Fortieth and One hundred and twenty-fourth New York, Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania, and First Maine—formed the line of battle, the Fortieth on the right of the road leading westward from Amelia Springs, the One hundred and twenty-fourth in the road, the First Maine and Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania on the left of the road. The skirmish line, connecting on the right with that of the First Division, Second Army Corps, drove the enemy rapidly for two miles or more, capturing prisoners, wagons, &c. The skirmishers having exhausted their ammunition were relieved by the five reserve companies of the Twentieth Indiana and the One hundred and twenty-fourth New York. The skirmish line continued to advance for a mile or more till it met the enemy's line of battle posted behind temporary works. Our line of battle immediately charged with the skirmishers, driving the enemy from their works, capturing wagons and prisoners. The skirmish line having again exhausted its ammunition was relieved by the First Maine and sent to the rear to replenish. At this time, about 12 m., the Fortieth New York was transferred to the left of the road, and I was ordered to keep a connection on the right with the First Division, Second Army Corps. This division, through some misunderstanding, moved very slowly, until I reported to General Miles that the skirmishers were nearly a mile in advance. He immediately moved his line forward and no further delay was occasioned. Again the enemy had thrown up temporary works and checked the advance of the skirmishers. The line of battle again charged, driving the enemy from their works, capturing several wagons, 2 flags, 1 piece of artillery, one artillery guidon, and quite a number of prisoners, and during the remainder of the day whenever the enemy checked the skirmishers the line of battle charged, always driving the enemy and capturing prisoners. Meanwhile, the Seventy-third and Eighty-sixth New York were actively engaged on the left, driving the enemy, capturing prisoners, &c. At length their ammunition having become exhausted they were ordered to the rear to replenish, their position being held by a portion of the Second Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps. The whole line continued to advance rapidly until about 4 p. m., when a portion of the Sixth Corps charged from the left across the front of the brigade, and by making a left turn came between us and the enemy. I then halted for the purpose of assembling the brigade, which, owing to the large portion (six regiments) that had been deployed as skirmishers, the rapid advance of several miles, and the frequent charges upon the enemy, had become very much scattered. After assembling the brigade I moved in rear of the Third Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps, and bivouacked for the night.

To sum up in a few words what was accomplished by the First Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps:

April 6, the enemy was attacked directly in rear on the road by which he was retreating and driven several miles. The brigade captured 1,300 enlisted men, 17 commissioned officers, 5 pieces of artillery, 28 wagons, 1 limber, 1 artillery guidon, and 3 battle flags. The conduct of both officers and men throughout the day was excellent; even the recruits, inspired by the gallantry of the veterans, charged with enthusiasm. I cannot make special mention of any without injustice to others, for all behaved with great gallantry.

April 7, the brigade moved by the flank till about 2 p. m., when a line was formed to support the Second Brigade, Third Division, Second Army Corps. During the afternoon we maneuvered, in connection with the Second Brigade, but was not engaged. The skirmishers thrown out to protect the left flank were engaged for a few moments with the enemy, but suffered no loss.

This brigade took part in no engagement after this date.

Respectfully submitted.

R. B. SHEPHERD,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. T. E. PARSONS,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Div., Second Army Corps.

No. 70.

Report of Brig. Gen. Byron R. Pierce, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
Near Burke's Station, Va., April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the operations from March 28 to April 10, 1865:

At 7 a. m. the 29th ultimo in compliance with instructions, moved from camp near Humphreys' Station with the following regiments in my command: Fifth Michigan Infantry (Col. John Pulford), strength present, 354; First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery (Maj. Nathaniel Shutswell), strength present, 424; One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers (Lieut. Col. Joseph H. Horton), strength present, 217; Seventeenth Maine Volunteers (Lieut. Col. William Hobson), strength present, 378; Ninety-third New York Volunteers (Lieut. Col. Haviland Gifford), strength present, 281; One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers (Maj. James Miller), strength present, 630; Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers (Col. George Zinn), strength present, 489. Following the Second Division, moved down the Vaughan road, crossed Hatcher's Run, and advanced about one mile and a half, where I went into position in line on the north side of the road, connecting with the Second Division. Threw up a line of works. At 2 p. m. the Ninety-third New York (Lieutenant-Colonel Gifford) and Seventeenth Maine (Lieutenant-Colonel Hobson) were ordered to the front to discover the whereabouts of the enemy. Advancing about three-quarters of a mile, we came upon a line of works held by a few of the enemy's pickets. Deployed a part of the Ninety-third New York Volunteers as skirmishers and charged the works, driving in the pickets, and occupying the works. At 4 p. m. the line of battle advanced and occupied the line just taken. 30th, at 7 a. m. line of battle advanced through a dense thicket, crossing the Dahney Mill road, driving in a few of the enemy's pickets, and occupied another line of works about three-quarters of a mile in advance of the previous one. The skirmish line was advanced about half a mile, finding the enemy in force. The line of battle was advanced a short distance, and threw up a line of works. My position at this time was on the left of the J. Crow house.

At 1.30 a. m. of the 31st, in compliance with orders, moved to the left about three-fourths of a mile and relieved a brigade of the First Division, connecting with General Smyth on right and General McAllister on left, near Boydton plank road. At 1 p. m. received orders from General Mott to charge the enemy's lines in my front with two regiments. I ordered Colonel Pulford, Fifth Michigan Infantry, with his regiment and the First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, temporarily commanded by Captain Davis, to advance. Owing to a bend in the run and works of the enemy, my advancing line was enfiladed by the battery in front of the Crow house and the one on the Boydton plank road. I formed them, however, parallel with the enemy's line on the left of the battery in front of the Crow house. The assault was made with vigor at 2.30 p. m., and, I think, would have been a success and the works carried but for the dense slashing, which made it impossible for the men to reach the works. The casualties in this charge were: Fifth Michigan Infantry, 1 commissioned officer and 4 enlisted men wounded; First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, 1 enlisted man killed and 10 enlisted men wounded; One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, 1 enlisted man wounded on picket. At 5 p. m. the brigade moved to the left about 250 yards, crossing the Boydton plank road.

On the morning of April 1 the brigade moved back to the position it occupied on the evening of the 31st ultimo, where it remained during the day. At 9 a. m. of April 2 I received orders to advance two regiments and occupy the works on left of fort in front of Crow house. Ordered Colonel Pulford, Fifth Michigan, with his regiment and the First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, to advance at once. They were soon in possession of the enemy's works, and occupied the forts on the Boydton plank road. The balance of the brigade immediately moved forward and occupied the enemy's works and, in compliance with orders from General Mott, moved across Hatcher's Run and up the plank road within a short distance of Petersburg, where I formed on the left of the Sixth Corps, which had formed from their main works across to the canal and Appomattox River. Formed line parallel with canal and Appomattox River at 1.15 p. m. The enemy placed a battery on the opposite bank of the river in my front and commenced shelling the lines of the Sixth Corps. I at once ordered forward the sharpshooters and drove the battery away. At 4 p. m. moved to the right; formed line of battle facing Petersburg, right resting about 200 yards to right of house formerly occupied by General Mahone as headquarters; threw up a line of works and remained during the night. The casualties this day were 1 enlisted man killed and 7 enlisted men wounded.

April 3, the enemy having evacuated Petersburg we took up the line of march at 8.30 a. m., marching on the River road toward Burke's Station. Many prisoners were picked up during this day's march. Bivouacked at 10 p. m., after marching about twenty miles. April 4, my brigade was employed most of the day in repairing the roads; marched about five miles. April 5, took up the line of march at 5 a. m., crossed the Richmond and Danville Railroad near Jetersville, and bivouacked on the left of the Fifth Corps.

April 6, advanced a short distance, when we came upon the enemy's trains and rear. After crossing Flat Creek near Sulphur Springs, I received orders from General Mott to place two regiments on the left of the First Brigade, which was then advancing in line; deploying the Ninety-third New York Volunteers (Lieutenant-Colonel Gifford) as skirmishers, I ordered the Seventeenth Maine (Lieutenant-Colonel Hobson) and the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers (Major Miller) to form line of battle on the left of the First Brigade, and at the same time supporting the advancing line with the balance of my brigade. The two regiments in line, advancing with the First Brigade, drove the enemy rapidly before them until halted by a temporary line of works erected by the enemy; the halt was but a moment, when the whole line charged, the Seventeenth Maine capturing the battle-flag of the Twenty-first North Carolina Regiment and about 75 prisoners, with a large proportion of officers; the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers captured 16 commissioned officers and 199 enlisted men. Lieutenant-Colonel Hobson, Seventeenth Maine, was wounded a short time before the charge, and the command devolved upon Major Mattocks. At this time receiving orders from General De Trobriand, then commanding division (General Mott having been wounded), I formed my brigade in line, relieving the First Brigade, my right connecting with General Miles at the road, with orders to keep the connection; deploying skirmishers, I advanced at once charging every position the enemy took with success. About sunset the enemy made a determined stand behind some slight breast-works on the main road; owing to a bend in the road my brigade was brought parallel with it, and the regiments on the left of my line, being nearest to the enemy, charged them at once, capturing a number of prisoners and driving away the battery, which was then sweeping down the road. I at once ordered forward the regiment (Seventeenth Maine) which was keeping the connection with the First Division, forming the balance of the regiments on its left as it advanced; charged up the road over the crest of a hill about 200 yards in advance, drove the enemy from their train, which had become huddled in the ravine beyond. Two of my regiments—the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers and Seventeenth Maine—charged through the train and took a position on the hill beyond; the balance of the brigade I halted on the crest of the hill this side of the train, which consisted of about 300 wagons. After remaining in this position about one hour received orders from General De Trobriand to halt for the night and place guards on such wagons as were not guarded by the First Division. I placed guards on fifty-six wagons and ambulances. The result of the capture by my brigade this day was, 1 piece of artillery, 5 stand of colors, and 1 signal flag, a large number of prisoners, and nearly the entire train of the enemy. The casualties this day were: 1 commissioned officer and 9 enlisted men killed; 6 commissioned officers and 60 enlisted men wounded and 32 enlisted men missing.

April 7, moved at 6 a. m., crossing the Appomattox at High Bridge; left one company of the Seventeenth Maine at the bridge to guard guns captured. Advancing about three miles from the bridge met the enemy in force; formed in line of battle, right connecting with General McAllister; skirmished with the enemy until after dark. Casualties this day, 1 commissioned officer killed and 11 enlisted men wounded.

April 8, at daylight found the enemy had gone; marched about fourteen miles in pursuit on road to Lynchburg. April 9, marched until about 12 m., when we were halted, owing to the conference with the generals commanding the two armies. At 4 p. m. received the gratifying intelligence that the Army of Northern Virginia had surrendered.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of my officers and men; all behaved with great gallantry and to my entire satisfaction. Where all did so well it is difficult to particularize acts of gallantry. I would make special mention, however, of Col. John Pulford, commanding Fifth Michigan Infantry; Col. George Zinn, commanding Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; Lieut. Col. William Hobson, commanding Seventeenth Maine (wounded on morning of 6th); Lieut. Col. Haviland Gifford, commanding Ninety-third New York; Lieut. Col. Joseph H. Horton, commanding One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; Maj. Nathaniel Shatswell, commanding First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery; Maj. James Miller, commanding One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; and Maj. Charles P. Mattocks, commanding Seventeenth Maine Volunteers—for the admirable manner in which they handled their regiments at all times.

My thanks are also due to Lieut. Charles W. Forrester, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. George A. Winans, acting aide-de-camp; Capt. Frank B. Stewart, brigade inspector; Capt. George W. Verrill, acting aide-de-camp; Lieut. Silas K. Pierce, aide-de-camp; and Lieut. William H. Allen, acting commissary of subsistence—members of my staff—for the prompt manner in which my orders were delivered and for valuable assistance rendered me on the field.

Attached please find nominal list of casualties during the campaign; also report of prisoners of war, pieces of artillery, battle-flags, and materials of all kinds captured by my brigade.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. R. PIERCE,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Capt. AUG. W. KEENE,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Third Division, Second Army Corps.

Report of number of prisoners, pieces of artillery, battle-flags, and materials of all kinds captured.

	Prisoners.	Battle-flags.	Signal-flags.	Pieces of artillery.	Officers' swords.	Muskets.
5th Michigan Volunteers .....	137	3
105th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....	250					250
17th Maine Volunteers .....	125	1		1	4
1st Massachusetts Heavy Artillery .....	0
37th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....	200	1	1
141st Pennsylvania Volunteers .....	31	4
63d New York Volunteers .....	205
Total .....	903	5	1	1	4	250

Wagons and ambulances (by brigade), 200.

Respectfully submitted.

B. R. PIERCE,
Brigadier-General.

No. 71.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Robert McAllister, Eleventh New Jersey Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIG., THIRD DIV., SECOND ARMY CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders from division headquarters, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command from March 28 up to date:

Pursuant to orders the brigade broke camp on the morning of the 29th of March, and, with the rest of the division, moved to the left. Our movements on the 29th and 30th consisted in advancing our lines cautiously, the enemy's skirmishers falling back before us. On the 31st moved further toward the left to relieve the First Division, near Boydton plank road, where the enemy was found strongly entrenched and three of their forts commanding the road. An assault on one of these having been ordered, at 12 m. the Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers (Lieut. Col. C. C. Rivers), the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers (Lieut. Col. A. L. Lockwood), and the left wing of the Eighth New Jersey Volunteers (Major Hartford), supported by the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers (Lieut. Col. J. Schoonover), advanced. The regiments charged through heavy slashing to the crest of the hill overlooking the enemy's works, and succeeded in driving the enemy from and occupying part of their rifle-pits, capturing some fifteen of their pickets. The attack was made under a severe fire from the enemy's batteries and a sharp musketry from the enemy's pits. After remaining there under an onslading fire of the enemy's artillery, sweeping our entire front, for about one hour, orders were received to withdraw, which was a more difficult task than the advance. The men were drawn off, almost one by one, under a severe fire of the enemy's sharpshooters, not, however, without the loss of many men killed, wounded, and prisoners. At dark the brigade was ordered to the left of Boydton plank road, and took up position near a run in the woods for the night.

April 1, at 5 a. m. the brigade was ordered to occupy the line held on the afternoon of the 31st of March. After dark we again returned to the line in the woods held the previous night. Heavy skirmishing was entertained all night and on the 2d of April, at 3 a. m., orders were received to withdraw to the position occupied the previous day, when the enemy opened a most galling fire of artillery and musketry on our line. A general attack on the enemy's lines having been ordered on the same morning, General Mott directed me, at 8 a. m., to send out one regiment to attack the enemy's picket-line in our immediate front. The Eighth New Jersey Volunteers (Major Hartford) was selected accordingly, accompanied by myself and staff. On reaching our picket-line the enemy opened a terrific fire of musketry, shells, and canister upon us. The regiment steadily advanced and succeeded in capturing the enemy's whole picket-line in our front, 165 prisoners, and 200 muskets, the enemy's artillery fire still continuing, which was, however, soon silenced by our men pouring a well-directed fire of musketry into their main line. While the Eleventh Massachusetts and Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, whom I had ordered up for support of the Eighth New Jersey, advanced, the enemy was observed to withdraw their guns and to leave. In the subsequent charge on the enemy's main works another lot of prisoners was captured, and Major Hartford succeeded in first planting our flag on the enemy's redoubts at 9.30 a. m. The whole command behaved most gallantly in this charge, and our men were seen grappling with the enemy, who in some places offered the most stubborn resistance. This over, the command moved with the rest of the division toward Petersburg, in front of which the army bivouacked for the night, and where news was received of the evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond.

On April 3, orders having been received to pursue the enemy, we left, in connection with the division, from in front of Petersburg, taking the River road toward Danville railroad, which we crossed on the morning of the 5th. Marching on the left of said road we passed Jetersville on the morning following (April 6), when the enemy's line was discovered in our front, the Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers (Lieut. Col. C. C. Rivers), on the left of the division skirmish line, rendering valuable service. The balance of the brigade was formed at once in line of battle, marching forward for several miles—Second Brigade (General Pierce) on our right, and the Sixth Corps on our left. At 3 p. m. a charge was ordered, which was executed in a very handsome style. We succeeded in driving the enemy from our front, and the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers (Lieut. Col. A. L. Lockwood) and Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers (Lieut. Col. C. C. Rivers), with the rest of the brigade, materially assisted in capturing the enemy's wagon train and quite a number of prisoners. On the morning of the 7th crossed the Appomattox at High Bridge, part of which the enemy had fired previous to our arrival. Further progress of the fire was soon checked by the pioneers. About two miles from Farmville the enemy again made a stand, and skirmishing was sustained all day. During the night from the 7th to the 8th the enemy had left our front, we rapidly pushing him toward Piedmont Coal Mine, New Store, and on Lynchburg road toward Appomattox Court-House, where, at 3 p. m. of the 9th, official intelligence was received that General Lee had surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia. Troops were then consigned to their camps, and remained so for the 10th. The Eighth New Jersey was there ordered to escort the ammunition train back to Burkeville, and the rest of the brigade having followed the division to Farmville on the 11th, was ordered to act as a rear guard to the artillery train, with which we arrived near Burkeville on the 14th instant, at about 4 p. m.

During this short and eventful campaign all officers and men of this command have exhibited such commendable bravery and endurance that it is almost impossible to make a distinction. I cannot, however, omit to mention particularly the brave and gallant conduct of the following officers and to recommend them for brevet promotion: (1) Lieut. Col. John Schoonover, Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, and (2) Capt. John P. Finkelmeier, assistant adjutant general of this brigade, to date from January 21, on which date both officers have been recommended for brevet promotion in just appreciation of their valuable services during last summer's campaign. They have since, on the 5th of February, near Hatcher's Run, as well as throughout this campaign, fully sustained their previous reputation, and are so well known throughout the corps for their gallant and efficient conduct in the field, that I deem it my duty to renew the application for their well-earned promotion. (3) Maj. H. Hartford, Eighth New Jersey Volunteers, for his gallantry exhibited on the morning of the 2d of April. (4) Col. Francis Price, commanding Seventh New Jersey Volunteers; (5) Lieut. Col. A. L. Lockwood, (6) Maj. W. F. Scott, (7) First Lieut. and Adj. B. McC. Russell, One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers; (8) Capt. Charles F. Gage, Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers—for their bravery exhibited on all occasions during the campaign. (9) First Lieut. W. Plimley, acting aide-de-camp on my staff, for his brave conduct during the morning of the 2d of April with Maj. H. Hartford.

Subjoined I have the honor to submit nominal list of casualties* in this command.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. McALLISTER,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Capt. A. W. KEENE,

Adj. Asst. Adj. Gen., Third Division, Second Army Corps.

---

No. 72.

Report of Bvt. Lieut. Col. John G. Hazard, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.

HDQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, SECOND ARMY CORPS,

April 19, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that, in obedience to orders from headquarters Second Corps, dated March 28, 1865, I directed Capt. J. W. Roder, Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, and Capt. George K. Dakin, M, First New Hampshire Artillery, to report to Brevet Major-General Miles; Capt. J. Wobb Adams, Tenth Massachusetts Battery, and Lieut. William B. Westcott, B, First Rhode Island Artillery, to Brigadier-General Hays; and Capt. A. J. Clark, B, First New Jersey Artillery, and Lieut. James A. Manning, Eleventh New York Battery, to report to Brevet Major-General Mott, commanding Third Division. The commands broke camp March 29, at 6 a. m., the

---

* Embodied in table, p. 684.

Second Division, Brigadier-General Hays, leading. After crossing Hatcher's Run about half a mile, Battery B, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, Lieut. William B. Westcott, was put in position on the right side of the road facing toward Dabney's Mill; the Third Division, Brevet Major-General Mott, moved out to the left of Second Division; the batteries went into park on the Vaughan road, near the Brown house; First Division, Brevet Major-General Miles, with its batteries, moved to the left and connected with Third Division, its batteries accompanying it. The corps remained in this position during the night; the batteries unhitched and unharnessed.

Thursday, March 30, the First and Third Divisions advanced their lines, the left of the First Division crossing the Boydton plank road and connecting with right of Fifth Corps. Captain Roder's battery (K, Fourth U. S. Artillery) was placed in position on the left of First Division, near Rainey's house, and covering the left of the line; M, First New Hampshire Artillery, was put in position at junction of Boydton plank road and Quaker road, a little to the left of Captain Roder's battery and covering the left front of First Division. About 2 p. m. both batteries were advanced to the new advanced line of the First Division, which crossed the Boydton plank road near Rainey's house and about 700 yards in advance of old position. Battery B, First New Jersey, and Eleventh New York Battery still in park near the Brown house. About 7 p. m. Battery B, First Rhode Island, moved into position near the Crow house, on the Second Division front. Tenth Massachusetts Battery moved up in a field near Dabney's Mill and parked. Batteries remained in these positions all night.

Friday, March 31, batteries in same position, firing occasionally in reply to the enemy, when about 12 m. the enemy commenced a spirited attack on the right of the Fifth Corps. Captain Clark, Battery B, First New Jersey Artillery, and Lieutenant Manning, Eleventh New York Battery, were hurried up, and Captain Clark's battery put in position in front of Rainey's house, covering the new line of First Division, which was being advanced to check the enemy, who had succeeded in driving the right of Fifth Corps from its position. Eleventh New York Battery relieved a battery of Fifth Corps on the crest to the right of Rainey's house; immediately upon Eleventh New York Battery taking position they opened fire and succeeded in silencing the enemy's peach orchard battery. The First Division succeeded in checking and afterward in driving the enemy to his main line of works, and establishing a new line upon the ground thus occupied. At 9 p. m. Captain Clark's battery was put in position on this new line, about one mile and a half in advance of his previous position; remained until 12 p. m., when the battery was withdrawn and parked near Boydton road at 3 a. m. At 11 p. m. K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, and Eleventh New York Battery changed position, a smooth-bore battery being found more effective in the position on the line occupied by Eleventh New York Battery; Tenth Massachusetts Battery was moved from field near Dabney's Mill, and put in position on the right of B, First Rhode Island Artillery, at Crow's house; at dark this battery was withdrawn and moved to extreme left of line and parked near Rainey's house. During the day K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, and M, First New Hampshire Artillery, succeeded in silencing and keeping quiet the enemy's artillery, which was in a large work on the Boydton road.

Saturday, April 1, early in the morning, Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, in position at Crow's house, engaged the enemy's battery, which was a small redoubt. At 6 p. m. the right section was advanced about 300 yards, and threw up covering for its men. About 4 p. m. Battery B, First New Jersey Artillery, was put in position again near Rainey's house. With the exception of Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, the batteries were not engaged.

April 2, at 4 a. m. the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, Captain Adams, took position on the Boydton plank road, on the right of Captain Dakin's battery, and at 7 a. m. engaged the enemy. About daylight the enemy opened upon Battery M, First New Hampshire Artillery; his fire was replied to by that battery and the Tenth Massachusetts Battery until 9 a. m., when it was observed that the enemy was evacuating the works. A reconnaissance was sent out under General McAllister, the batteries covering the movement. Captain Roder's battery opened on a small work that the infantry were about to charge; he succeeded in driving the artillery out, when our troops took possession. At this time it was found that the enemy was evacuating his entire line from Hatcher's Run to the Boydton road. Mott's division was ordered to advance, and Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery, and Eleventh New York Battery were assigned to move with it, which they did, occupying the enemy's works, and afterward moving by way of plank road toward Petersburg. Captain Clark's battery and M, First New Hampshire Artillery, were ordered to follow down the enemy's line to White Oak road, and report to General Miles, who was assisting Major-General Sheridan's command. Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, was brought up to the plank road and ordered, together with Tenth Massachusetts Battery, to follow, and report to General Hays, Second Division; Battery B, First New Jersey Artillery, and M, First New Hampshire Artillery, joined the First Division about four miles from Rainey's house, on the White Oak road, and proceeded with them toward Sutherland's Station. When about three miles from Sutherland's, Captain Clark's battery was put in position near the Cox road, and opened fire on the enemy, who were strongly intrenched and distant about 1,200 yards. The enemy had four guns on different points of the line, which were soon silenced. M, First New Hampshire Artillery, by order of General Miles, occupied a position near the road, and shelled a piece of woods that was supposed to cover the enemy's cavalry. The batteries continued firing until the enemy was forced to leave his works and retreat. During this time Captain Roder's battery and Eleventh New York Battery had marched within two miles of Petersburg, where Captain Roder's battery was put in position and opened fire on the enemy, who was attempting to establish an intrenched skirmish line. The distance being so great, little could be accomplished, and when the division formed line of battle, the battery was withdrawn and put in position on a high knoll to the right, where it remained all night.

April 3, the Third Division, accompanied by its batteries, moved from Petersburg, via River road, to near Wells' Church, where it joined the First Division and marched to Coleman's house. Through some misunderstanding the Second Division, followed by its batteries, moved from Wells' Church to near Petersburg, and then back from Petersburg to the Coleman house, where they joined and camped with the corps.

April 4, corps started at 6 a. m., batteries following the divisions, and marched to near the Jones house, and encamped for the night.

April 5, corps moved at 1 a. m., batteries following their divisions, and took the Namozine road; followed this road four miles, and took a road leading to the right toward Jetersville; followed this road to Jetersville, crossed the Danville railroad, and took position on the left of the Fifth Corps. All the batteries were put in position on the line excepting one section of the Tenth Massachusetts Battery.

April 6, corps moved toward Amelia Sulphur Springs, where we came up with the enemy's wagon train. M, First New Hampshire Artillery, was put in position, and opened on the train; Captain Roder's battery and Tenth Massachusetts Battery also shelled the train. These batteries continued moving with the advanced line, shelling the enemy every time he took position, until we came up to him in a strong position, trying to cover the crossing of his train over Sailor's Creek. Captain Clark's and Captain Dakin's batteries were put in on the right of Third Division, and opened fire on two of the enemy's batteries, causing them to withdraw hastily. Captain Roder's battery was put in position on the left of Third Division and opened on the enemy's batteries also. These batteries assisted materially in the capture of a large train at Sailor's Creek by causing the enemy's batteries to cease firing. Encamped for the night near Sailor's Creek.

April 7, moved at 6.30 a. m. across Sailor's Creek to High Bridge, where the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, M, First New Hampshire Artillery, and B, First Rhode Island Artillery, were placed in position and opened fire on the enemy's retreating columns; also upon a party who were trying to destroy High Bridge. The enemy soon after retreated, leaving a large number of guns, &c. The batteries continued the march on the right of Farmville, about four miles, to Price's farm, where the enemy were found strongly intrenched. On the approach of the head of our column the enemy opened a lively artillery fire. Dakin's and Clark's batteries were put in position and succeeded in silencing the battery. The enemy were found so strongly posted it was thought necessary to put more artillery in position. Roder's battery was brought up and put on the right of Clark's battery, facing to the right; Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, was placed in position on the Third Division line. During this time one section of B, First New Jersey Artillery, Lieutenant Rhein's, was moved to the left about 800 yards, on a crest on the right of Third Division; Tenth Massachusetts Battery was put in position on the right of Lieutenant Rhein's section; M, First New Hampshire Artillery, was advanced about 700 yards, to the new line erected by the First Division. After dark Roder's battery and Eleventh New York Battery were placed on and to the right of the old stage road, on the line of the Second Division. The other batteries remained in their positions all night.

April 8, corps moved at 6 a. m. to New Store, and halted about 10 p. m.; resumed the march in the direction of Clover Hill; marched four and a half miles and bivouacked for the remainder of the night.

April 9, continued the march at 9 o'clock; at 11.30 a. m. halted. Clark's battery was put in position to cover skirmish line of First Division pending the result of the conference of Lieutenant-General Grant and General Lee. This battery remained in position and the other batteries halted in the road until 4 p. m., when the announcement was made that the Army of Northern Virginia had surrendered. The batteries then went into camp. April 10, commands remained in camp all day. April 11, batteries moved together, under my command, back on the same road they advanced to New Store and camped for the night. April 12, command moved at 8 a. m. by a plantation and from thence by the plank road to Farmville; parked on the hills near Farmville. April 13, started at 6 a. m.; camped near Rice's Station, on the Danville railroad. April 14, started at 6 a. m. and marched to Burkeville; arrived here at 2 p. m.; went into camp and have remained here since.

From the nature of the arm of the service, no trophies have fallen into our hands as pledges of gallantry; but officers and men have performed every duty promptly and faithfully, and I claim for the artillery of the corps a share of the laurels so nobly earned by it.

I would make special mention of Bvt. Maj. T. Fred. Brown, B, First Rhode Island Artillery; Bvt. Capt. J. W. Roder, Battery K, Fourth U. S. Artillery; and Capt. A. Judson Clark, Battery B, First New Jersey Artillery, for their valuable assistance; also Lieut. A. M. E. Gordon, acting assistant adjutant-general, and Lieut. John G. Deane, acting aide-de-camp, for the promptness with which they performed their arduous duties.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JNO. G. HAZARD,

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Maj. J. N. CRAIG,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Artillery Hdqrs., Army of the Potomac.

No. 73.

Report of Capt. J. Webb Adams, Tenth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS TENTH MASSACHUSETTS BATTERY,

Near Burkeville Station, Va., April 15, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on the morning of March 20, at 6 a. m., as per order from Artillery Brigade headquarters, I reported with my battery to Brigadier-General Hays, commanding Second Division, Second Corps, and by him was placed in position to the left of my old camp, near the Tacker house, covering the right of the Second Division. At 4 p. m. was ordered to move my battery up to the field near Dabney's Mill; did so, and was at once ordered back to my old position. Was not engaged this day. No loss of men or horses. March 30, moved up to the field near Dabney's Mill, and remained in park during the day and night. No loss of men or horses. March 31, at 1 p. m. moved up to the Crow house and went into position on the right of Battery B, First Rhode Island Artillery, on the line of the Second Division. At dark drew out and marched to the left to near Hatcher's Run, and went into park in rear of headquarters Artillery Brigade. No loss of men or horses. April 1, remained in park all day. No loss to-day. April 2, went into position at 4 a. m. on the Boydton plank road, on the line of the Third Division, Second Corps. Engaged the enemy at about 7 a. m., expending ninety-seven rounds of ammunition, when it was discovered that the enemy was retreating, and our troops advanced (my battery marching with the Second Division) toward Petersburg. A little past noon started for Wells' Church with the Second Division, where we arrived at dark, and encamped for the night. No loss to-day. April 3, marched at 6 a. m. with the Second Division toward Petersburg. When about half way there halted for an hour or more; then turned back and started for Lee's retreating army on the road leading to Lynchburg. Marched till past midnight; then parked in a field by the roadside. The roads very heavy and the horses much fatigued. To-day three horses died; lost no men.

* Nominal list of casualties (here omitted) shows 11 men wounded and 1 man missing. The loss in horses was 10 killed, 6 wounded, 59 died, and 16 abandoned.

April 4, continued our march with the Second Division, and at dark went into park for the night. No loss of men or horses. April 5, harnessed and hitched in at 1 a. m., but did not march till 6 a. m.; arrived at the railroad at Jetersville at 4 p. m. and went into park at dark; one section was placed in position on the left of the Fifth Corps, where it remained during the night; not engaged. No loss of men to-day; one horse died. April 6, marched at 6 a. m. The Second Division having taken the woods to the right of the road the battery marched in rear of the batteries of the Third Division. When near Amelia Springs went into position on the left of the road and shelled the enemy's train across the creek, expending thirty-seven rounds of ammunition. Soon after continued our march and parked for the night near Sailor's Creek. No loss of men; two horses died to-day. April 7, marched at 6 a. m. in rear of the batteries of the Third Division. Before noon reached High Bridge, on the Lynchburg railroad, where I went into position, and shelled the enemy as they retired on the other side of the river, expending sixteen rounds of ammunition. Continued our march, and at about 3 p. m. went into position on the line of the First Division, near Farmville, and shelled the enemy's rear guard, expending thirty-four rounds of ammunition. Remained in position all night. No loss of men; two horses died to-day. Received nine new horses.

April 8, drew out of position and marched at 6 a. m., in rear of the batteries of the First Division, about one mile beyond New Store; went into park, and unhitched and unharnessed, but immediately got an order to harness and hitch in and report to General Barlow, commanding Second Division, Second Corps, and with that division marched till midnight, when I parked the battery, and unhitched and unharnessed. No loss of men; four horses died to-day. April 9, marched at 6 a. m., and arrived at Clover Hill a little past noon, when, hearing of the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, under General Lee, to the Army of the Potomac, gave three cheers (inwardly), and went into park for the night. No loss of men; two horses died to-day. April 10, remained in camp all day. No loss of men; two horses died to-day. April 11, marched at 10 a. m. on our return to Burkeville Station, the batteries marching together, mine being the fourth battery; arrived at New Store at 7 p. m. and encamped for the night. Roads very heavy. No loss of men; five horses died to-day. April 12, resumed the march at 6 a. m., and arrived at Farmville at 6 p. m., and encamped for the night. No loss of men; five horses died to-day. April 13, resumed our march at 6 a. m., and arrived to within about six miles of Burkeville Station, and encamped for the night, the roads being almost impassable. No loss of men; four horses died to-day. April 14, marched at 6 a. m., and arrived at Burkeville Station at 2 p. m., and went into camp near the railroad, where the battery now remains. No loss of men; four horses died to-day.

Recapitulation: Horses died, 34; rounds of ammunition expended, 184; rounds ammunition abandoned, 201.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. WEBB ADAMS,

Captain, Commanding Tenth Massachusetts Battery.

Lieut. A. M. E. GORDON,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Second Corps.

No. 74.

Reports of Maj. Gen. Gouverneur K. Warren, U. S. Army, commanding Fifth Army Corps.

NEW YORK, February 21, 1865 [1866].

General GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Military Division of the Atlantic:

GENERAL: I forward herewith my report of the operations of the Fifth Corps during the 29th, 30th, and 31st of last March. The long time consumed was unavoidable, for I am without any assistance in my work, the War Department being unable to grant me an assistant or even to pay for copying my report. This copy I send you is not very neat, and it is the only one I have made. If you have force enough in your office will you not please have a fair copy made for yourself and return this one to me for my own file. I will compare and sign the copy you make if you wish it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. K. WARREN,
Major Engineers, &c.

REPORT.

The initial movement of the final campaign was made by the Fifth Corps at 3 a. m. on the 29th of March, no other portions of the army moving till 6 a. m. The Fifth Corps was at the time composed as follows:

First. The First Division, commanded by Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, contained 6,547 men. It was divided into three brigades: The Third Brigade was under General J. J. Bartlett, being composed of veteran regiments, and numbered —; the Second Brigade was under General Gregory, and numbered —; the First Brigade was under General J. L. Chamberlain, and numbered —.

Second. The Second Division, Bvt. Maj. Gen. R. B. Ayres commanding, contained about 3,980 men, divided up as follows: The Maryland Brigade (the Second), — strong, under General Denison; the Third Brigade, — strong, under General Gwyn; and the First Brigade, General Fred. Winthrop commanding, — strong. Both Generals Griffin and Ayres were officers of the regular artillery and graduates of West Point.

Third. The Third Division, which was 5,260 strong and commanded by Bvt. Maj. Gen. S. W. Crawford. It was composed of all the regiments that had belonged to the old First Army Corps prior to its consolidation with the Fifth. This division had been organized for General Crawford by General Meade's order, after the battle of the Weldon Railroad, where General Crawford's previous command suffered a heavy loss in prisoners. The three brigades of this division were commanded—the First, — strong, by Colonel Kellogg; the Second, — strong, by General Baxter; the Third, — strong, by General Conter.

The artillery of the corps consisted of two rifled-gun batteries of four guns each and three light 12-pounder batteries of four guns each, the whole under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. O. S. Winwright. The staff of the corps was full of experienced and educated officers: Col. H. C. Bankhead, inspector-general, and Maj. William T. Gentry, commissary of musters, were graduates of the Military Academy. Col. F. T. Locke, the adjutant-general, had held his position from the first organization of the corps in May, 1862. Col. A. L. Thomas, chief quartermaster; Col. D. L. Smith, chief commissary; Dr. T. R. Spencer, medical director; Dr. Charles K. Winne, medical inspector; Captain Malbon, chief ambulance officer, and Capt. George B. Halsted, assistant adjutant-general, were all experienced and [of] unquestioned ability in their departments. Maj. E. B. Cope, my principal aide-de-camp, was a very skillful topographer, an indispensable officer in the column having the advance over a country like that we were upon. Capt. James W. Wadsworth, son of the lamented general, and Capt. Gordon Winslow, son of the lamented Rev. Gordon Winslow, were my personal aides. Capt. W. H. H. Benyard, of the regular engineers, was detached from General Meade's staff to accompany me, and gave most important assistance. Major Van Brocklin, of the Engineer Brigade, with a light pontoon train of canvas boats, also accompanied me. Captain Horrell commanded my escort of about forty mounted men, which constituted the cavalry of the corps.

The map which we possessed of the country into which the Fifth Corps was about to operate, was what was known as the Dinwiddie County map, prepared many years ago, and republished for our use on a scale of one inch to the mile. It gave no topography except the main streams and main roads. The names of the occupants of the houses did not now all correspond to those on the map; some of them, too, had disappeared, and others had been erected in places not noted. The map contained no distinction of the forest and clearings or swamps, all of which have ever played a most important part in the Virginia campaign. I give a copy of the map with which we set out* and one on the same scale of the country as we found it.†

The country in which we were to operate was of the forest kind common to Virginia, being well watered by swampy streams. The surface is level and the soil clayey or sandy, and, where these mix together, like quicksand. The soil, after the frosts of winter first leave it, is very light and soft, and hoofs and wheels find but little support.

The following extracts are from the order for the general movement directed by General Meade, dated March 27, but received by me during the afternoon of the 28th:

The following movements of the corps of this army are ordered:

1. At 3 a. m. of the 29th instant the Fifth Army Corps, Major-General Warren commanding, will move to the crossing of Hatcher's Run at W. Perkins' house; thence west to the junction of the old stage road and the Vaughan road, and from this point will open communication with the Second Corps on the Vaughan road. This accomplished, the Fifth Corps will be moved to occupy a position in the vicinity of Dinwiddie Court-House.

8. The chief engineer Army of the Potomac will detail a pontoon train of about 100 feet of bridge to accompany the Fifth Corps to Hatcher's Run.

10. Each corps will be prepared to move with five four-gun batteries—three smooth-bore and two rifled.

On the receipt of the above the following order was prepared and issued by me:

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 22. }

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
March 28, 1865.

The following will be the order of march to-morrow:

1. At 3 a. m. General Ayres, with his division, will cross Arthur's Swamp; proceed south, via the Goshen house and B. W. Kelly's,‡ to the stage road; thence along the stage road to the crossing of Rowanty Creek and seize the crossing. General Ayres will be followed immediately by the pontoon train, and that by two batteries of artillery, all under the orders of General Ayres. The part that does not cross until after the bridge is laid will mass and park. As soon as the crossing is gained a double bridge will be laid, and General Ayres will proceed (as soon as the two batteries can cross) to the junction of the stage road with the Vaughan road, at Miss Hargrave's, keeping the column stretched out on the road after crossing, so as to lose no time in so doing.

* See Plate XCIV, Map 8 of the Atlas.

† See Plate XCIV, Map 9 of the Atlas.

‡ H. W. Shelley's on map.

2. General Ayres' batteries will be immediately followed by General Griffin's division.

3. The remaining artillery and intrenching tools will follow General Griffin.

4. General Crawford will follow the artillery.

5. The train designated to accompany the troops and the bridge train not already in use will follow General Crawford's division, and with these will be sent all the pack animals and servants, and they will not be allowed to accompany the troops.

6. The command in this order will proceed as rapidly as possible, via J. Hargrave's and J. Kidd's, to Dinwiddie Court-House, promptly attacking the enemy if found opposing the advance, and keeping well closed up to the front. The troops must by all means be kept in the ranks of their respective companies, and any man may be justifiably shot who leaves without permission from division commander.

7. Headquarters of the corps will be with the advance division.

8. The trains authorized to accompany the corps across Rowanty Creek are—one medical wagon; one army wagon, with hospital supplies to each brigade; one army wagon with forage for each division; ambulance train (one-half the ambulances); ammunition wagons sufficient to carry twenty rounds per man; one wagon for each brigade for sales to officers; forage for one day must be carried in the spring wagons or on the horses.

9. The remaining wagons will be parked under the direction of the corps quartermaster near W. Perkins', and after the day's operations are completed, on application at corps headquarters, other supplies can be brought up at night if needed.

10. As a battle is expected the command must be as little encumbered as possible and prepared for action so that nothing will have to be sent to the rear when the fighting begins.

11. The musicians will be left in camp to sound reveille as usual, not at the hour of march, but as signaled under ordinary circumstances. Commanders are requested to give the matter their particular attention. After the usual hour of reveille has been sounded the musicians can join their respective commands.

By command of Major-General Warren:

FRED. T. LOCKE,

Brevet Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

After the above order was issued the following was received from General Meade's adjutant-general:

[Extract.]

2. Major-General Warren will move at the hour designated, but will not proceed beyond the junction of the Vaughan and Quaker roads till notified that Major-General Humphreys is in position, or nearly so. On being so notified Major-General Warren will advance on the Boydton plank road, taking position with his right in connection with General Humphreys and reserving sufficient force to refuse and guard his left. Major-General Warren will also advance skirmishers, well supported; and in case the enemy is found outside his works attack and endeavor to force him back to them. Corps commanders are notified the cavalry will be occupied on the left of the Fifth Corps.

About 8.25 p. m. March 28 I also received the following dispatch from General Meade's chief of staff:

General Humphreys is not certain that he can reach the Quaker road. He is instructed to place his right within supporting distance of General Ord and to form his line and determine his left by his formation of his corps. He is informed that you will probably move up the Quaker road to connect with his left after being informed of his position.

It will be noticed that these two dispatches differ about the road I was to move upon—the one saying the Boydton road, and the other the probability of the Quaker road. As General Humphreys was not to move till 9 a. m. it was obvious that, unless I was greatly impeded by the enemy, I should reach the junction of the Vaughan and Quaker roads much in advance of his getting into position, so as "to determine his left." I should therefore have to take up a position while waiting his movements. From my previous acquaintance with this locality, gained in the movement made in February, I knew that to get a good position for my troops I should have to extend my left to include a high ridge at H. Hargrave's. This would place me within half a mile of the Boydton road should I be directed ultimately to move out on that road, and leave the remainder of my force near the junction of the Vaughan and Quaker roads, so as to move up the latter if required to. In obedience to the orders the head of the column (General Ayres' division) moved out precisely at 3 a. m. The excitement of moving and the necessary preparations kept almost every one from sleeping any of the preceding portion of the night.

At 4.45 a. m. the head of the column reached the crossing of Rowanty Creek. A few shots were fired by the enemy's lookouts there, probably as an alarm signal, but no opposition was made to our crossing. The engineers speedily laid a canvas pontoon bridge, and meanwhile the troops were scrambling across on fallen trees and the wrecks of a former bridge. As soon as the bridge was passable for horses I passed over with my escort, and we again began to advance. For the first mile our progress was somewhat impeded by trees which the enemy had cut down, and which were removed as we went along. The roads were dry except in the swampy places.

At 8 a. m. the head of the column reached the junction of the Vaughan and stage roads. This information I communicated to General Humphreys, along the Vaughan road, by Captain Winslow and an escort of ten mounted men. I then went with the troops to superintend the taking up the position required, while awaiting the movements of General Humphreys. At 10.20 I received the following dispatch by Major Jay, written by General Webb at 8.45 a. m.:

Major-General Meade directs you to move up the Quaker road to Gravelly Run crossing. By throwing out parties on your right you will be able to find General Humphreys in the direction of J. Slaughter's (the most northerly). He is feeling out in that direction.

To this I sent back by Major Jay the following reply:

I have just received the dispatch by Major Jay. I think my skirmishers are out on the Quaker road as far as Gravelly Run. They had been ordered there, and I'll see that it is done. My command will be posted as follows: One brigade, with the trains, at the junction of the Vaughan and stage roads; two brigades at the crossing of the Quaker and Vaughan roads; a brigade up the Quaker road; one on the road leading to R. Boisseau; Griffin's division near Chapel, Scott, and Hargrave. Skirmish lines will be put well out, and as soon as things are in hand I will push out a force to R. Boisseau's on the plank road. Barringer's brigade, and perhaps a division of cavalry, passed down the Quaker road to Stony Creek yesterday. No enemy met; a few scouts seen.

At 12 m. I received the following from General Webb, written 11.20 a. m.:

From your last dispatch the major-general commanding would infer that you did not understand his last order by Major Jay. Your disposition to cover your left flank and rear are approved, but this must not prevent your moving your corps up the Quaker road across Gravelly Run, and then facing north, with your right connecting with General Humphreys. This done, you can make disposition to cover your left, and you will cover and hold the plank road, if possible, with your corps.

I immediately ordered General Griffin's division up the Quaker road, and sent the following dispatch to General Webb, by Captain Emory, the bearer of the last dispatch received:

I did not understand till Captain Emory came that I was to move my corps up the Quaker road. My dispositions were preliminary to feeling out from my assigned position here. I have sent my escort out toward R. Boisseau, and they have not yet returned. General Griffin's division is now moving up the Quaker road, as directed, and I will send Crawford after him and dispose of the troops according to developments and as directed in the dispatch just received.

General Meade himself joined me at the junction of the Vaughan and Quaker roads, and we proceeded with the troops north to Gravelly Run. Here we found the bridge broken, and the stream too deep to be easily forded. The skirmish line, however, got over and engaged a small force of the enemy trying to stop our advance, but they were speedily driven back and followed up.

The pioneers of General Griffin's division commenced at once to construct a bridge, which, in the usual time, they rendered practicable, though somewhat difficult for artillery.

During the afternoon Major Van Brocklin added here a pontoon bridge. The north bank of Gravelly Run presented an excellent position for the enemy to dispute the advance up the Quaker road, and breast-works had been thrown up for that purpose. But had they been occupied in force possession of them could have been gained by a flank and rear attack by the Second Corps, a division of which might have soon been disposed for that purpose.

My advance, soon after crossing Gravelly Run, passed the left flank of the Second Corps, which, moving up in extended line through difficult woods, did so more slowly. The resistance of the enemy gradually increased till, in the vicinity of Wilson's and Arnold's old saw-mill, between 3 and 4 p. m., his line of battle was met, and a sanguinary encounter took place. The road was found seriously obstructed with fallen trees, but the pioneers labored with energy and a way was soon cleared, and a 12-pounder battery was brought up and opened on the enemy.

Captain Horrell, commanding my escort, was sent out on the road which leaves the Quaker road one mile north of Gravelly Run and goes to the plank road, and engaged the skirmishers on the enemy's right, and General Crawford was ordered to form behind Captain Horrell's skirmishers and on General Griffin's left.

The fire of General Griffin's division was, however, so effective that the enemy gave way in his front, and the enemy fell back everywhere on his line, leaving about 100 prisoners and the dead and wounded in our hands. Our loss was about 370 killed and wounded; among the former was the lamented Major Macenen, of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. The brave General Chamberlain, of Maine, was slightly wounded and his clothes quite riddled with bullets; General Sickel, of Pennsylvania, was also wounded. At the time of writing this, I have not received General Griffin's report. I, however, quote the following from General Chamberlain's report of First Brigade, First Division:

On reaching Gravelly Run Major-General Griffin directed me to form my brigade in order of battle and advance against some works which were in sight on the opposite bank. Crossing the run, I sent Maj. E. A. Glenn, commanding second battalion of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, forward with his command as skirmishers, and formed my lines, with Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. G. Sickel, One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the right, and Col. G. Snijper, One hundred and eighty-fifth New York, on the left of the road. Major Glenn pushed forward vigorously and drove the enemy's skirmishers out of their works without any difficulty, and succeeded in pushing them through the woods and as far as the Lewis house. The enemy making considerable show of force in the edge of wood beyond, I halted Major Glenn and brought my line of battle up to supporting distance. Here I was directed to halt. In a short time I was ordered by General Griffin to resume the advance. There being at that time no firing of any consequence on the skirmish line

I brought my line of battle up to that point, reformed it on the buildings, re-enforced the skirmishers by a company from the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York, and commenced a rapid advance with my whole command. The skirmishers reached the edge of the woods before the firing became at all severe. I was exceedingly anxious that the troops should gain the cover of the woods before receiving the shock of the fire, but the obstacles to be overcome were so great that this could not be fully accomplished, and my men were obliged to gain the woods against a heavy fire. They advanced, however, with great steadiness and drove the enemy from their position and far into the woods. It was not long, however, before another attack was made upon us, evidently by a greatly superior force, and we became completely enveloped in a withering fire. We replied with spirit and persistency, holding our ground, taking rather the defensive at this stage of the action. In the course of half an hour my left became so heavily pressed that it gradually gave way, and at last was fairly turned, and driven entirely out of the woods to a direction parallel with the road by which we advanced. This position could not be held ten minutes, and nothing but the most active exertions of field and staff officers kept the men where they were, the fire all the time being very severe. At this moment I sent a request for General Gregory, commanding Second Brigade, on my left, to attack the enemy in flank in their newly gained position. I was assured by Major-General Griffin, who was on the line, that if we could hold on five minutes he could bring up the artillery. Upon this I succeeded in rallying the men, and they once more gained the woods. Battery B of the Fourth U. S. Artillery now came into position and opened a most effective fire. By this assistance we held the line until the enemy fell heavily upon our right and center, and my men being by this time out of ammunition, many of them absolutely without a cartridge, began to yield ground. Seeing that this was inevitable I dispatched an aide to General Gregory asking him for a regiment, and at the same time Major-General Griffin ordered up three regiments of the Third Brigade. These regiments came promptly to our assistance. I was at that moment endeavoring to reform my broken line, so as, at all events, to cover the artillery. The line was falling back in front of the Lewis house when Lieutenant-Colonel Doolittle, of the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York, came up, gallantly leading his regiment, as also Colonel Partridge, Sixteenth Michigan; the One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania and First Michigan came on in the most handsome manner, passing to my front, Brevet Brigadier-General Pearson, of the One hundred and fifty-fifth, grasping his colors and dashing straight against the enemy's line. This assistance and the admirable service of the artillery compelled the enemy to abandon their position; otherwise I must have been driven entirely from the field.

This action lasted nearly two hours before any support reached us. I need not speak of the severity of the engagement, nor of the conduct of my officers and men, inasmuch as it was all under the eye and direction of the major-general commanding, who shared the dangers, as well as the responsibilities, of that field; but I may be permitted to mention the fact that more than 400 of my men and 18 officers killed and wounded marked our line with too painful distinctness. Nor can I fail to speak of the steadfast coolness and courage of Brevet Brigadier-General Stokol, whose example and conduct made my efforts needless on that part of the line, until he was borne from the field severely wounded; the unflinching tenacity of Colonel Snipe at his perilous post, and the desperate bravery with which he rallied his men, seizing his colors after it had fallen from the hands of three color-bearers and a captain, and bearing it into the very ranks of the enemy; the fiery courage of Major Glenn, which could scarcely be restrained; and of the heroic spirit of Major Macenen, who fell dead foremost in the ranks of honor; nor shall I forget to name the young gentlemen of my staff—Lieutenants Walters and Vogel, my personal aides, both painfully wounded, but keeping the field to the last; Lieutenant Mitchell, my adjutant-general, and Lieutenant Fisher, pioneer officer—who rendered me essential aid in the hottest of the fire. Private Kelsey, my orderly, rode upon the enemy's line and captured, under my own eyes, an officer and five men, and brought them in. Remaining on the field that night and the next day, we buried our dead and 180 of the enemy's, and brought in the wounded of both parties.

General Griffin's skirmish line was advanced by my order as soon as the enemy gave way, myself accompanying it, and did not stop till it drew the fire of the enemy's artillery from breast-works about half a mile north of the junction of the Quaker road with the plank road to Boynton. This position of the enemy was then thought by us to be his main line. The One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers drove the last of the enemy out of the position where the two roads join, but a farther advance could not be made across the large, open field, occupied as it was by the enemy on the farther side. The difficult woods through which General Humphreys' troops had to move prevented his left getting up to join with my right.

General Crawford's troops, on the left of General Griffin's, mistook the direction given them, so that neither got up into position till after dark. A farther advance against the enemy could not be made that night, and it was believed we had accomplished what was expected by our instructions.

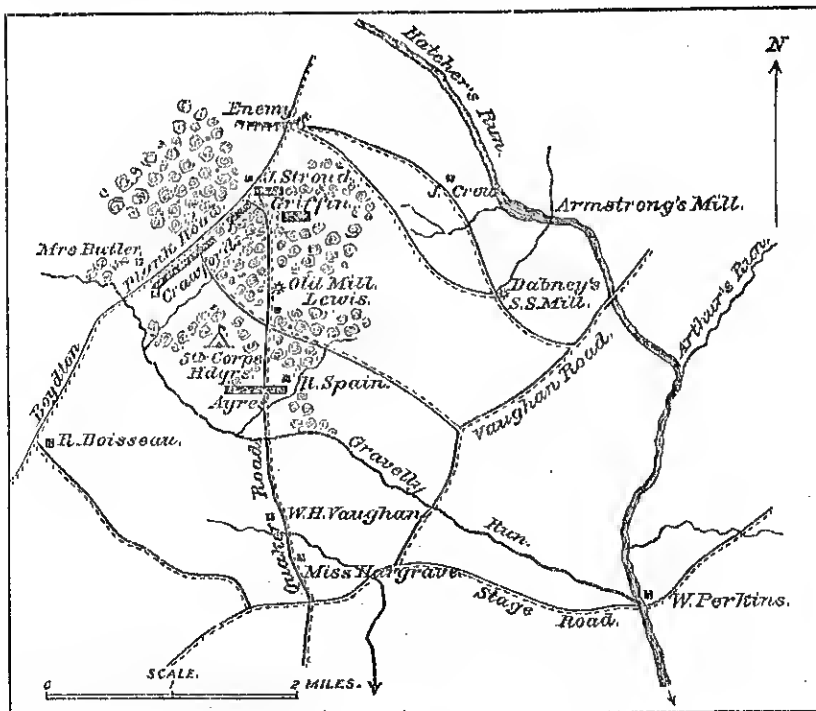

In different dispatches to General Meade the above facts were reported.

In a dispatch from General Webb, written at 7 p. m., I had the gratification to find the following:

The major-general commanding directs me to congratulate you and General Griffin upon your success to-day.

I communicated a copy of this to General Griffin, who was eminently deserving praise.

During the night I intrenched a brigade and two batteries at J. Strond's, the most advanced position we had gained, and placed General Crawford's division on and facing west from the plank road, his left resting on Gravelly Run, the plank road bridge over it having been destroyed by the enemy. General Ayres was held in reserve and to picket the rear, a measure rendered necessary for the security of our position and trains, which latter might be attacked by the enemy's cavalry (Barringer's) that had been reported to have passed south of us. The following sketch shows the location of the Fifth Corps and the enemy on the night of March 29, 1865—scale one inch per mile.*

* See reduced scale in cut.

I give here the report of casualties in the Fifth Army Corps, March 29, 1865:

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Cavalry escort, headquarters Fifth Army Corps.				3				3	3
Artillery		1	1	1			1	4	5
First Division	5	47	18	275		22	24	344	367
Second Division
Third Division				6				6	6
Total	5	48	19	287		22	24	357	381

During the evening of the 29th the following dispatch was received from General Meade's assistant adjutant-general—Colonel Ruggles:

Major-General Warren will advance his line at 6 a. m. to-morrow, holding his right rest over and across the Quaker road and his left extending as far as is consistent with a due covering and guarding of his flank.

Major-General Humphreys will at the same time advance his line, keeping his left connected with Major-General Warren and throwing his right forward as far as Crow's. The object of this movement is to force the enemy into his line of works and develop the same, and, if he is found out of his line, to give battle. Corps commanders will endeavor to have reserves suitably posted along their lines, and will render each other such mutual support as the exigencies of the hour may demand.

This was succeeded by the following from General Webb, chief of staff, written at 9.20 p. m., received at 11 p. m.:

The major-general commanding directs me to state that from your dispatch he infers that the main points of the order now sent to you have been practically carried out by General Griffin. You will, however, determine this definitely in the morning, and the enemy being driven within his works, you will extend your line to the left and will determine the position of his works. General Humphreys will push on, and will do the same in his front. You will develop to your left as far as possible consistent with the instructions to protect your flank.

In accordance with the above I issued the following order at 11.20 p. m.:

Division commanders will hold their commands in readiness at 6 a. m. to-morrow either to advance upon the enemy or to repel any attempt upon his part. The order is to advance.

It began to rain during the night, and continued on throughout the 30th, sometimes falling heavily. This made the roads and fields almost impracticable for artillery and filled the swamps with water. Heavy details had to be sent back to assist the trains, which were nearly immovable in the mud.

At 5.50 a. m. I sent the following to General Webb:

I have my command all in readiness, but my advance is so far ahead of General Humphreys and in sight of the enemy across the open ground that I do not think it advisable to attempt anything more northward until General Humphreys gets into position on my right. My left, on the plank road, cannot be extended with propriety till I can get some idea of General Sheridan's movement, and now rests on Gravelly Run, and, if I move, it will be in the air. I believe I am now in the best position I can be, unless an assault is intended on the enemy's lines near the Quaker road. I cannot move forward, and it does not appear a favorable place in front of Griffin.

At 6 a. m. I sent the following to General Humphreys, commanding Second Corps:

I do not think it best to advance any farther till General Miles gets up in position on my right, which, as the woods are difficult, will take some time. A broad, open field is in my front, with the enemy in force last night on the opposite side. Will you let me know as soon as your line is established as near the enemy's line as may be without assaulting it.

To this I received the following reply from General Humphreys:

Your dispatch of 6 a. m. is just received. My Third and Second Divisions are moving, but through a dense and most impenetrable swamp, and their progress is necessarily slow. General Miles has orders to keep moving, keeping his connection with you. I have just repeated these orders to him.

At 6 a. m. I also sent the following order to General Griffin, commanding First Division:

Have General Bartlett's skirmish line feel the enemy in his front and ascertain if they are in the same position as last night, if he has not already determined it, and send me a report in writing.

At 7.30 a. m. I received the following from General Griffin:

Since the fog has lifted a little I find the right of my skirmish line within 150 yards of a complete line of rifle-pits, now held in, as far as developed, the usual force for such a line. I have made a demonstration with my skirmish line, which is in the open field, and am satisfied the position will be hotly contested. I send a diagram of my lines and the lines of the enemy, with the supposed line of advance of the Second Corps. No connection has yet been made with me on my right or left, either by line of battle or skirmish line.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOS. J. BARTLETT,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding Brigade.

Since the above was written it has been reported that the Second Corps connects.
CHAS. GRIFFIN,
Brevet Major-General.

I then sent this to General Webb, chief of staff, with the following remarks:

I send the above for your information. General Crawford is in force across a swamp on Griffin's left. We have a corporal from Johnson's division, captured this morning on the skirmish line. From the shape of the enemy's line I think there must be a considerable salient or bend near Dabney's Mill.

At this time my information was that the enemy held Dabney's Mill. At 8.30 a. m. I received the following dispatch from General Webb, written, probably, on the receipt of my dispatch to him of 5.50 a. m.:

General Meade does not think you hold as much of the front line as the strength of your command would warrant. He desires to have you make use of both Crawford's and Ayres' to develop to the left. He cannot give you any more definite information of General Sheridan's movements than to state that he is ordered to attack or turn the enemy's right. You must act independently of Sheridan, and, protecting your flanks, extend to the left as far as possible. If the enemy comes out and turns your left you must attack him. You will be supported with all the available force to be procured.

A. S. WEBB,
Chief of Staff.

Preparations were immediately made to carry out this order "to extend to the left as far as possible," and General Ayres' division was moved up to my most advanced position on the left, and reconnoitering parties were sent out to gain a knowledge of the country to my left. This dispatch placed me in much perplexity. I had already stated that I could not extend farther with safety to my remaining in position, and yet this dispatch required me to extend farther; and yet did not define how far, nor for what object. I had no desire but to comply with instructions; but leaving the limit of extension discretionary with me, while being dissatisfied with my use of this discretion and requiring me to extend farther, and not saying how far nor what for, was most embarrassing. The fault of these unlimited extensions were inevitable exposure of the flanks. It was a system that, notwithstanding what we had suffered from it, the orders to the corps commanders constantly required, and the enemy were so aware of this prevailing plan that they constantly provided to attack the flank as soon as we had fairly exposed it, as we were required to do in closing upon the enemy's intrenchments. These intrenchments, from their artificial strength, enabled the enemy to hold with comparatively weak force, and to detach, notwithstanding his inferiority in numbers, a force to operate on our flank, where a blow could be given with even a small body.

Illustrations of the weakness of our lines from extension and of consequent disastrous swoops of the enemy upon them are numerous throughout the war. Our flanks could only be secure, either in moving into position or advancing to attack, by providing a heavy mass of troops at that always threatened point. If the enemy came out and turned my flank it was inevitable that I would have to receive his attack, provided I extended my lines "as far as possible." I therefore sent the following questions to General Webb, at 8.30 a. m.:

I have just received your dispatch dated 7.50 a. m. If I extend my line to the left as far as "possible," using "both Crawford and Ayres," and "the enemy turns my left," what will I have to attack him with?

I would further remark here that in almost every instance orders from above me so disposed of my troops that they could not be kept together or moved together as General Grant's report says mine should have moved on the 31st.

At 9 a. m. I received the following dispatch from General Webb, written 8.40 a. m.:

From deserters and prisoners we learn that the enemy's line runs along the White Oak Ridge road to Boydton plank road; then back on the road to Burgess' Mill, and then down Fletcher's Run. Humphreys has possession of Dabney's Mill. Their picket-line was a rifle-pit and easily taken.

At 9.20 a. m. I sent the following dispatch to General Webb:

Your dispatch of 8.40 a. m. (No. 3) just received. The information I have received is of the same effect as that you send me. Two deserters report the line immediately in front of General Griffin as what they think a strong one, with two lines of obstructions in front. They had a large number of negroes to work upon it yesterday. General Crawford is at present making a temporary line near the plank road on which we can reform in case of a reverse after advancing. I will then extend my left as far as practicable.

At 9.55 a. m. I received the following from General Webb, written 9.30 a. m.:

General Meade directs that you send Colonel Walsh to his position at the junction of the old stage and Quaker roads, and direct him to report from that point to General Maury, provost-marshal-general. He is very anxious to have you cover as much of the front line as possible consistent with the safety of your command, and his idea was that you would put both Griffin and Crawford in front, keeping a portion of each as a reserve, and keeping Ayres to cover your left flank.

At 9.50 a. m. I sent the following to General Webb:

Captain Gillespie has just come from General Sheridan's headquarters, at Dinwiddie Court-House, on his way to General Grant. He came up the Boydton plank road. When he left Dinwiddie Court-House one division of the cavalry was to move out on the road due north of Dinwiddie, and mass at Boisseau's, then feel out toward the White Oak road. General Sheridan remains at Dinwiddie with one other division, and the other division is upon Stony Creek, where the Vaughan road crosses. I shall soon send out General Ayres' division on a reconnaissance from Mrs. Butler's northwesterly toward S. Dabney's. He will be in position to develop the enemy's line, and where I can support him with General Crawford, and where he can co-operate with General Sheridan if he comes within reach.

At 10.15 a. m. I sent the following dispatch to General Webb:

My idea of the way I should extend my line I have indicated in my dispatch of 9.50. Having my troops all well in hand I can move out Ayres in column to-day as I did Griffin yesterday, and if he meets the enemy give him battle. I can support him, if needed, with nearly the whole corps, and follow up any advantage gained, and if I am worsted I have a good place to reform on. This may seem a little slow, but it is the only way we can keep our troops working together and conduct operations with certainty. The amount of line I can occupy will depend upon the character of the country I develop. The roads and fields are getting too bad for artillery, and I do not believe General Sheridan can operate advantageously. If General Humphreys is able to straighten out his line between my right and the vicinity of the Crow house, he will hold it in pretty strong force, but the woods are so bad they alone will keep him nearly all day finding out how matters stand. The order about the cavalry reporting to General Macey has been sent out.

Having made all the necessary preparations at 10.30 a. m. I sent the following order to General Ayres by Major Cope:

I wish you would take your division (with a battery of artillery, if you think it practicable), and move out on a reconnaissance northwest from Mrs. Butler's, or as near that direction as may be practicable, keeping with your own men a connection with our present picket-line, which must remain as it is. Major Cope, of my staff, will accompany you. If within a mile beyond the plank road you find any enemy drive him back, but do not advance your main force farther than that, unless to procure some obvious advantage gained, till you report to me the result. With your main body thus in good position, protecting your own flanks, advance your skirmishers out as far as prudent to reconnoiter and develop the character of the country and the enemy's position. A portion of my escort will accompany you. General Merritt's cavalry division is massed at J. Boissac's, and are feeling on the road north from that toward the White Oak road. If you become engaged with a superior force, and can hold on, I will re-enforce you with Crawford's division as soon as called for.

At 11.15 a. m. the following dispatch was also sent to General Griffin by Colonel Locke, my adjutant-general:

The major-general commanding wishes you to swing around on the left as General Ayres moves out.

At 11.20 a. m. I received the following dispatch from General Humphreys:

My line of battle now extends in a straight line past the Crow house to your right. I have ordered the skirmishers of the two divisions and those on the right of Miles' division to be advanced and get to Hatcher's Run if they can. Please let me know if you are going to advance your skirmishers or line of battle, that I may have my movements conform to yours. The enemy's main line of works on the other side of Hatcher's Run is in view, the Crow house being 600 or 800 yards distant there.

To this I sent, at 11.20 a. m., the following reply:

My position on the plank road at the junction of the Quaker road cannot be advanced any farther, the enemy being reported strongly entrenched. There may be a little portion of my extreme right, retired last night for want of connection, which can be thrown out if your line can be advanced. Any straightening out in that portion of the line that General Miles thinks practicable shall be done. I am about sending out a division from the plank road north northwest from Mrs. Butler's, to reconnoiter and drive back the enemy, and shall follow up any engagement that may take place outside of the enemy's line of works with nearly all the corps. Your line must now be very much shorter than it was when first taken up yesterday. Telegraph line is at my headquarters.

At 11.30 a. m. I sent the following to General Webb:

General Ayres is now moving out to extend my line. If he meets more force within a mile than he can dispose of Crawford will go to his support, and I can also use a brigade from Griffin. If the enemy is outside of his line, or comes out, we shall have a considerable fight pretty soon.

At 12 m. I received the following dispatch from General Grant to General Meade, forwarded to me by General Webb:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
March 30, 1865.

Major-General MEADE:

My idea was that we should try to extend our left so as to cross to White Oak road, say at W. Dabney's, or as near up to the enemy as we can. This would seem to cover all the roads up to Ford's road, by which Sheridan might then go and get on the South Side road, and possibly double up the enemy and drive him north of Hatcher's Run.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

General WARREN:

This dispatch is forwarded to you for your information simply. Your dispatch has been received. The commanding general sees no reason for any change in his previous orders to you. He has no information of General Sheridan's movements beyond the general statement that General S. is to turn the enemy's right.

ALEX. S. WEBB,
Brevet Major-General.

It did seem to me that on General Meade's receiving this dispatch he should have signified to me whether or not I was to extend my left so as to cross the White Oak road; if not, how far I should extend it; for in this latter case I should not be carrying out General Grant's expectations. Had I been in communication with General Grant I should certainly have solicited from him some definite information on this point. But General Meade so far differed in judgment with me that he did not think a movement for a specific object which might be impracticable did not require any modification of instructions, arriving at no apparent consummation. It seemed to me all the difference imaginable. I therefore, at 12 m., addressed the following dispatch to General Webb:

I received your dispatch inclosing one from General Grant, in which you say "the commanding general sees no reason to change his previous orders." Your instructions have never said definitely how far I was expected to extend, nor the object desired. General Grant's is definite on both points, and if I am to attempt that myself at all hazards I don't shrink from it. General Humphreys' men, perhaps, extend further to the left, if required. Common experience requires that I should extend my left toward the White Oak road with strong force and precaution against an attack from the enemy. I am very glad to know the object and extent of my further movement to the left. I have seen General Sheridan. He has ordered a division to move north to the White Oak road, which greatly simplifies my movement.

The receiving of dispatches and giving necessary orders had kept me almost continuously engaged at my headquarters so that I had had no opportunity to examine the condition of affairs personally along my front.

I now went up the Quaker road to where General Griffin's advance was, and arrived there just as his skirmish line was advancing, that of the enemy having fallen back. What this act on their part was due to I am not aware of, but think it probable that the advance of General Humphreys' skirmish line some distance to my right had made the position of those in front of General Griffin untenable. Finding by personal examination that our line of battle could be now advanced across the open field to a good position, and also open the direct road to Dabney's Mill, it was directed to move forward. General Miles' division, of the Second Corps, also moved forward, connecting with my right. During this movement the enemy opened with artillery from some breast-works near the Burgess house. It was for some time uncertain whether this was on the north or south side of Hatcher's Run, but reconnaissances which we made and prisoners taken showed it to be at the junction of the plank road with the White Oak road.

I went out on our picket-line, after it had been advanced, to see the enemy's breast-works, and found these were well located and constructed, and defended by infantry and artillery, wherever the trees enabled us to see them. The timber had been well slashed to give effect to their fire, and where the fallen trees did not obstruct the ground abatis had been laid. It rained very hard during these operations.

While occupied in the above manner, I sent, at 12.40 p. m., the following:

I have just received notice from General Humphreys that deserters inform him that Heth's and Wilcox's divisions left Petersburg this morning, and are now in the lines this side of Hatcher's Run. P. S.—Prisoners just captured (four of them) in front of First Division picket-line report that they understood that two of the divisions that came down were Heth's and Pickett's.

About 1.20 p. m. I received the following dispatch from General Webb, written at 1 p. m.:

In view of the information received from the cavalry, and of the state of the weather, General Meade directs me to state you are not to shorten any line you may have developed, but you will push that well up to the enemy, and, having intrenched, you will await orders. Your dispatch of 12.40 is received.

At 1.20 p. m. I received from General Webb the following from Col. E. S. Parker, on Lieutenant-General Grant's staff, written 12.45 p. m.:

The lieutenant just in from General Merritt's with dispatches from Sheridan. Merritt says that the reconnaissance sent out from near Boissseau's encountered the enemy in considerable force. They went to about two miles of the Five Forks; found the enemy occupying the road. Those going north proceeded to about a mile of the White Oak road, and found the road also occupied by the enemy. Nearly all the forces met the cavalry. All the roads leading toward the White Oak road are covered by the enemy. No engagement reported.

At 2.30 p. m. I sent the following report to General Webb—the first paragraph relating to General Griffin's front; the latter, to General Ayres, from whom I had just heard:

I have advanced my line of battle to cover the junction of the Dabney Mill road with the plank road, and made a heavy advance with my skirmishers. The enemy opened with artillery from a fort near Burgess' Tavern, and also from a point near T. Penteconst's. General Ayres' advance is near S. Dabney's, meeting that far with no opposition. From his advanced point he saw infantry moving west on the White Oak road. Soon as our attack began near the plank road there was a movement of their troops back toward Burgess' Mill. The reports about their late movements are a little uncertain. I have received the report of General Merritt's operations. His skirmishers could be heard due west from J. Stroud's.

At 3.15 p. m. I sent the following to General Webb:

We have captured one officer of Pickett's division near S. Dabney's. He was in charge of a guard to the train that was passing west. I was mistaken about Griffin's firing causing these troops to return; they have all gone on. Cannot General Humphreys extend a little more to the left, and let me have Griffin's division to move out with, as well as Ayres and Crawford? I am already advanced as far as I think it would be prudent to take up a continuous line. The cavalry skirmishing is now heard southwest from Dabney's.

At 4 p. m. I again addressed General Webb on the same subject, as follows:

General Ayres' advance now sees the White Oak road near W. Dabney's for three-quarters of a mile. There is a difficult swamp between the plank road and that place. I have now a continuous intrenched line from my right across Griffin's front, and along the plank road nearly down to Gravelly Run. If General Humphreys can take charge of Griffin's front, about 500 yards west of plank road, with the return down it, I can take my corps and block the White Oak road.

At about 4.30 p. m. the enemy made an advance against General Griffin's skirmishers, and forced them back on Griffin's left; but his attack was not made in much force, and was quickly driven back, and we took a few prisoners. This was probably a mere reconnaissance by the enemy to ascertain our position. The prisoners taken were perfectly raw, drafted men from North Carolina.

At 4.50 p. m. I sent the following to General Webb:

A portion of Wilcox's division made a demonstration against Griffin about twenty minutes ago, and were easily driven back into their lines. We took a few prisoners—broken-down men lately forced into the service. They don't know much, but think Johnson's division moved to their right when they came down this morning. General Heth is here, but they do not think his division is. They think Heth commands the corps, and fill all the defenses south of the James.

When the above was received by General Webb, he, at 7.20 p. m., sent the following, which I received at 7.30 p. m.:

Your dispatch dated 5 p. m. has just been received. Please find out and telegraph, if possible, what brigades of Wilcox's are in your front. What grounds have those men for thinking more of his brigades than their own are there?

At 8.15, having obtained full information, I sent the following in answer to the above:

General Griffin has taken no prisoners to-day, except from Scales' brigade. One of them, Thirty-fourth North Carolina, states his brigade was led by Major Norman [Norman]. There are four brigades in Wilcox's division, commanded by General Scales, Colonel Howe [Hymn], Callaway, and Stowe. They left the works in front of our signal tower at 3 o'clock this morning. Thinks all the brigades of his division were present to-day, but is not sure. General Wilcox is absent on leave.

I have quoted the last two dispatches out of the order of time, so that they may all appear here together, relating to the same subject.

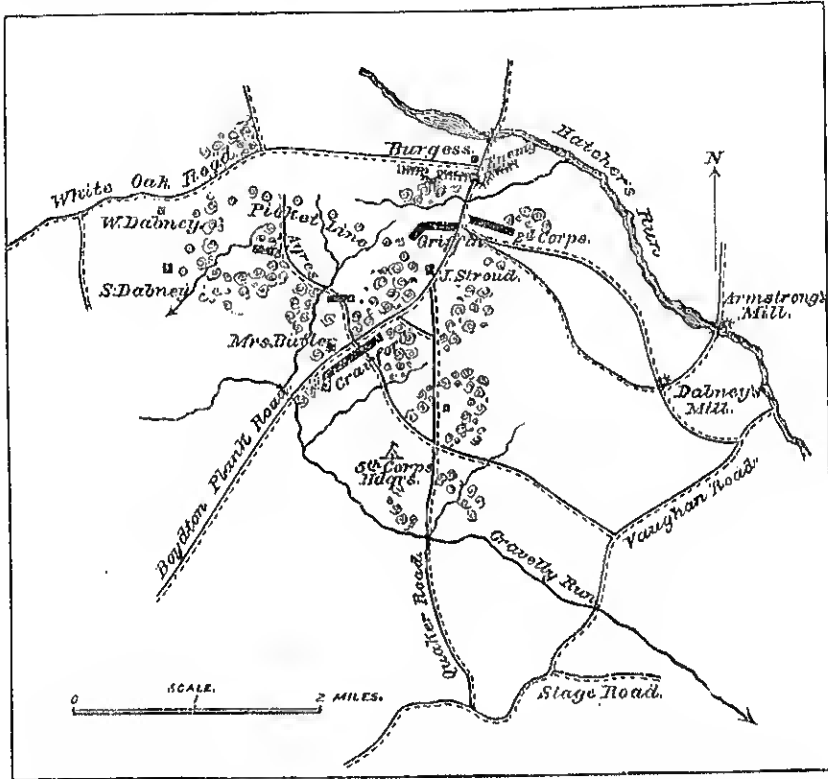

While still with General Griffin's division, I, at about 5.30 p. m., received the following copy of a dispatch from Lieutenant-General Grant to General Meade; the hour it was written not stated:

GRAVELLY CREEK, March 30, 1865.

and that no opposition had compelled them to stop short of it. I then gave directions to the officer in charge of the pickets to have them advanced at sunset, and then rode back to my headquarters, which I reached some time after dark.

The only casualties reported to-day were 3 men killed and 9 wounded in the First Division, and 1 man killed in the artillery—a total of 13.

The following sketch shows the location of the troops at the close of the day, March 30, 1865:

The whereabouts of Pickett's division that we had seen to pass along the White Oak road going west was explained by the following:

At 11 p. m. I received the following dispatches by telegraph from General Webb:

The accompanying dispatch from Major-General Sheridan is sent for your information. In consequence of the state of affairs here reported, it will be necessary General Ayres should be put on his guard, and that he should be re-enforced without delay, as the enemy may attack him at daylight. As General Humphreys will hold the right and relieve General Griffin, it is presumed that Crawford can be sent to Ayres' support, if not there now. Acknowledge receipt of this.

The following at the same time:

General Humphreys has been ordered to relieve General Griffin with General Miles and one brigade of General Mott's division—in all, 10,000 men—and is directed to hold the plank road and General Griffin's line. Griffin relieved, you will support General Ayres in his position, and strengthen yourself at this point. You will hold your corps ready to attack and await further orders.

The following is the dispatch from General Sheridan:

CAVALRY DIVISION, March 30, 1865—7 p. m.

Lieutenant-General GRANT:

Pickett's division is developed along the White Oak road, its right at Five Forks, and extending toward Petersburg. After the steel here at Five Forks was driven back, no attempt was made to follow up, and the enemy did not appear to be in strong force there. Pickett's division is on the White Oak road, his right extending as far as Five Forks. Prisoners report the enemy's cavalry concentrated at Five Forks. I have, however, no positive information of this. General Merritt picks up nearly up to the White Oak road, and is encamped at J. Bissell's house.

P. SHERIDAN,
Major-General.

About 11 p. m. I also received the following dispatch from General Griffin:

I regret to say that I have been unable to form any definite opinion as to the practicability of an assault upon the enemy's works. My skirmish line was unable to pass forward, as they encountered a skirmish line of the enemy in superior numbers, and to-morrow things may be changed.

At 11 p. m. I informed General Webb of the contents of General Griffin's dispatch in the following, which also acknowledged the receipt of his dispatch, as requested:

Your dispatch referring to General Ayres being re-enforced and dispatch of General Sheridan's received. General Griffin reports that he has been unable to form any definite opinion as to the practicability of making an assault.

Colonel Locke, my adjutant-general, at 11 p. m. March 30, issued the following order:

General Ayres will re-enforce his advance at daylight to-morrow morning with his whole division. General Crawford will hold his command ready to follow General Ayres. General Griffin, as soon as relieved by General Humphreys' troops, will move down the Boydton plank road to where General Ayres now is.

It will be seen now that General Crawford was still in position on the Boydton plank road, as I had wished to use him where necessity might require, either to the right or left. The point at which General Ayres' headquarters were was the point designated for Griffin's division. I directed the advance of General Ayres to be re-enforced at daybreak, as it could not well be done in the night without a great consumption of time and loss of rest to the men; and, beside that, on account of the darkness and bad road, and want of knowledge of the position, the troops would not be in as good order to meet an attack at daybreak as if fresh and moving up to the point. No attack at daybreak was made by the enemy, nor any attack ordered for me to make, as intimated might be in General Webb's dispatch of 11 p. m.

At 12.10 a. m. the following dispatch was received from General Webb, time of writing not given:

General Griffin will be relieved as soon as possible. General Humphreys will be instructed to report to you when the division starts.

And at the same time the following from General Humphreys:

I am directed to relieve General Griffin with Miles' division, and take up the line now held by Griffin, and take up the return on Boydton plank road. I am to send a brigade from Miles' division to support the left of the line after Griffin leaves. I have given the necessary orders to carry this out as soon as possible. Can you send me some description of the position held by Griffin, indicated in the instructions I have received, as above stated?

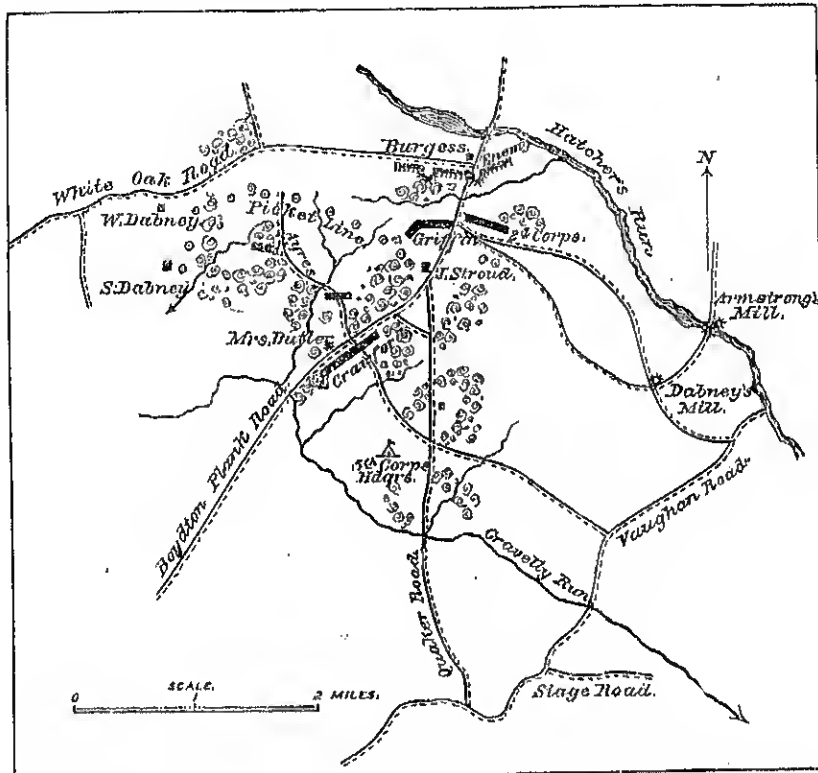

To this last Colonel Locke, adjutant-general, sent the following reply, at 12.25 a. m. March 31:

In reply to your dispatch of 12 p. m., General Warren having retired, I have the honor to state that General Griffin occupies a line of works from the left of your

and that no opposition had compelled them to stop short of it. I then gave directions to the officer in charge of the pickets to have them advanced at sunset, and then rode back to my headquarters, which I reached some time after dark.

The only casualties reported to-day were 3 men killed and 9 wounded in the First Division, and 1 man killed in the artillery—a total of 13.

The following sketch shows the location of the troops at the close of the day, March 30, 1865:

The whereabouts of Pickett's division that we had seen to pass along the White Oak road going west was explained by the following:

At 11 p. m. I received the following dispatches by telegraph from General Webb:

The accompanying dispatch from Major-General Sheridan is sent for your information. In consequence of the state of affairs here reported, it will be necessary General Ayres should be put on his guard, and that he should be re-enforced without delay, as the enemy may attack him at daylight. As General Humphreys will hold the right and relieve General Griffin, it is presumed that Crawford can be sent to Ayres' support, if not there now. Acknowledge receipt of this.

The following at the same time:

General Humphreys has been ordered to relieve General Griffin with General Miles and one brigade of General Mott's division—in all, 10,000 men—and is directed to hold the plank road and General Griffin's line. Griffin relieved, you will support General Ayres in his position, and strengthen yourself at this point. You will hold your corps ready to attack and await further orders.

The following is the dispatch from General Sheridan:

CAVALRY DIVISION, March 30, 1865—7 p. m.

Lieutenant-General GRANT:

Pickett's division is developed along the White Oak road, its right at Five Forks, and extending toward Petersburg. After the small force at Five Forks was driven back, no attempt was made to follow up, and the enemy did not appear to be in strong force there. Pickett's division is on the White Oak road, his right extending as far as Five Forks. Prisoners report the enemy's cavalry concentrated at Five Forks. I have, however, no positive information of this. General Merritt picks his way up to the White Oak road, and is encamped at J. Buisson's house.

P. SHERIDAN,
Major-General.

About 11 p. m. I also received the following dispatch from General Griffin:

I regret to say that I have been unable to form any definite opinion as to the practicability of an assault upon the enemy's works. My skirmish line was unable to press forward, as they encountered a skirmish line of the enemy in superior numbers, and to-morrow things may be changed.

At 11 p. m. I informed General Webb of the contents of General Griffin's dispatch in the following, which also acknowledged the receipt of his dispatch, as requested:

Your dispatch referring to General Ayres being re-enforced and dispatch of General Sheridan's received. General Griffin reports that he has been unable to form any definite opinion as to the practicability of making an assault.

Colonel Locke, my adjutant-general, at 11 p. m. March 30, issued the following order:

General Ayres will re-enforce his advance at daylight to-morrow morning with his whole division. General Crawford will hold his command ready to follow General Ayres. General Griffin, as soon as relieved by General Humphreys' troops, will move down the Boydton plank road to where General Ayres now is.

It will be seen now that General Crawford was still in position on the Boydton plank road, as I had wished to use him where necessity might require, either to the right or left. The point at which General Ayres' headquarters were was the point designated for Griffin's division. I directed the advance of General Ayres to be re-enforced at daybreak, as it could not well be done in the night without a great consumption of time and loss of rest to the men; and, beside that, on account of the darkness and bad road, and want of knowledge of the position, the troops would not be in as good order to meet an attack at daybreak as if fresh and moving up to the point. No attack at daybreak was made by the enemy, nor any attack ordered for me to make, as intimated might be in General Webb's dispatch of 11 p. m.

At 12.10 a. m. the following dispatch was received from General Webb, time of writing not given:

General Griffin will be relieved as soon as possible. General Humphreys will be instructed to report to you when the division starts.

And at the same time the following from General Humphreys:

I am directed to relieve General Griffin with Miles' division, and take up the line now held by Griffin, and take up the return on Boydton plank road. I am to send a brigade from Miles' division to support the left of the line after Griffin leaves. I have given the necessary orders to carry this out as soon as possible. Can you send me some description of the position held by Griffin, indicated in the instructions I have received, as above stated?

To this last Colonel Locke, adjutant-general, sent the following reply, at 12.25 a. m. March 31:

In reply to your dispatch of 12 p. m., General Warren having retired, I have the honor to state that General Griffin occupies a line of works from the left of your line on the Boylton plank road, running one-fourth of a mile west, then refused to the rear until it again strikes the plank road near the junction of the Quaker road, from thence south on the plank road a few hundred yards. The left of his picket-line rests near a large branch of Gravelly Run.

At 6.10 a. m. March 31 the following dispatch was received from General Ayres, written at an hour not named:

I have the honor to request that the line of pickets now extending to the Dabney house may be relieved by other troops as soon as my division takes up its new position. I would relieve them by other troops of this division, but those troops now on are so well tired out (having been on picket at the last position on the Vaughan road) that I can't expect much service from them to-day, and the effective force of the division would thus be reduced.

The following directions were consequently sent at 7 a. m. to General Crawford:

Withdraw all your pickets south of those established by General Ayres; then move with your whole division and mass it by a house occupied by a colored man; then replace General Ayres' pickets from left of General Humphreys up to a point north of negro house. Make your headquarters at that house. Leave the pioneers of two brigades to begin to make a bridge across the stream for the passage of artillery. Major Cope will go with you and assist you in carrying out this order.

Instructions were also sent to General Crawford to support General Ayres, and it was my intention to go in person to superintend operations at the point as soon as the giving and receiving instructions necessary for the operations of the day would permit. On this morning, as on the preceding one, the dispatches received and orders rendered thereby necessary to be issued retained me at the vicinity of the telegraph office till nearly 9 a. m.

At 7.35 a. m. the following dispatch was received from General Webb, per U. S. military telegraph, written at 7.30 a. m. March 31, 1863:

Major-General WARREN:

The general commanding desires you to report the position of your troops this a. m.

In answer to which the following was sent:

General Griffin's troops will be massed near Mrs. Butler's; General Ayres' near S. Dabney's; General Crawford about half way between. They are along a wood road running from near Mrs. Butler's to W. Dabney's, on the White Oak road; it is not practicable now for wheels, and there is a very difficult branch of Gravelly Run that runs south from the White Oak Ridge, joining the main stream at the crossing of the plank road, which will take a long time to make practicable for wagons. I have all the pioneers I can spare to work on it. I will send you a sketch.

Finding myself still delayed in going to General Ayres position, the following dispatch was sent to him at 8.15 a. m. March 31:

During the night I received a dispatch, of which the inclosed is a copy. I infer from that that the small force of General Blerritt which gained the White Oak road fell back again a short distance. The point called Five Forks, alluded to, is on the White Oak road, about four miles due west from S. Dabney's. You must, therefore, have your dispositions made to look out for my force coming against your left flank from the west, as well as from the north. General Crawford is to mass at the negro house in a field which you passed on your way out, and Griffin is where you camped last night. I send you a tracing.

At 8.40 a. m. I received the following dispatch from General Webb, written 8.25 a. m.:

There is firing along Humphreys' front. The major-general commanding desires you be ready to send your reserve, if it should be called for, to support Humphreys. There will be no movement of troops to-day.

To this I at once sent the following:

Your dispatch of 8.25 is just received. There is a good deal of musketry firing going on in our lines by the men firing off their guns to put in fresh loads. Unless I break loose entirely from General Humphreys, I think the force he sent to relieve General Griffin is much more than under any circumstances could be needed there. My troops are, however, at all times as ready to move as it is possible to keep them for a long time. If the enemy break General Humphreys' line at any time, or threaten to do so, I shall not wait for orders to assist him if I can.

At 8.50 a. m. the following was received from General Humphreys, written 7.40 a. m.:

Please let me know where your right will rest, that I may connect with you. General Miles has already relieved General Griffin, and I find a vacant space on his left.

At 8.55 a. m. the following order was received from General Meade's headquarters, and the necessary orders consequent upon it were given to the chief of artillery, chief quartermaster, and chief commissary:

Owing to the weather no change will to-day be made in the present position of the troops. Three days' rations of subsistence and forage will be brought up and issued to the troops and the artillery, and every one authorized to accompany them. The empty supply wagons will be sent to the rear, to be refilled at the railroad terminus. The chief engineer and corps commanders will use every exertion to make practicable the roads to the rear, and communicating with their several commands.

At 9 a. m. the following dispatch was sent to General Humphreys in reply to his:

I send you a sketch of the country west of the plank road and a copy of my communication to General Webb as to my position. I cannot take up any regular line of battle on account of the woods and swamps, but have assembled each division at a point so they can fight in any direction with the line refused. I had a portion of Griffin and a battery stationed at Stroud's for support. I don't think your left could be turned, even if I moved away, without your having full information; but as my troops now are, I could move Griffin right upon your flank along with my artillery. I shall work hard all day to get the road through the woods in order.

At 9.40 a. m., from information received, I sent the following dispatch:

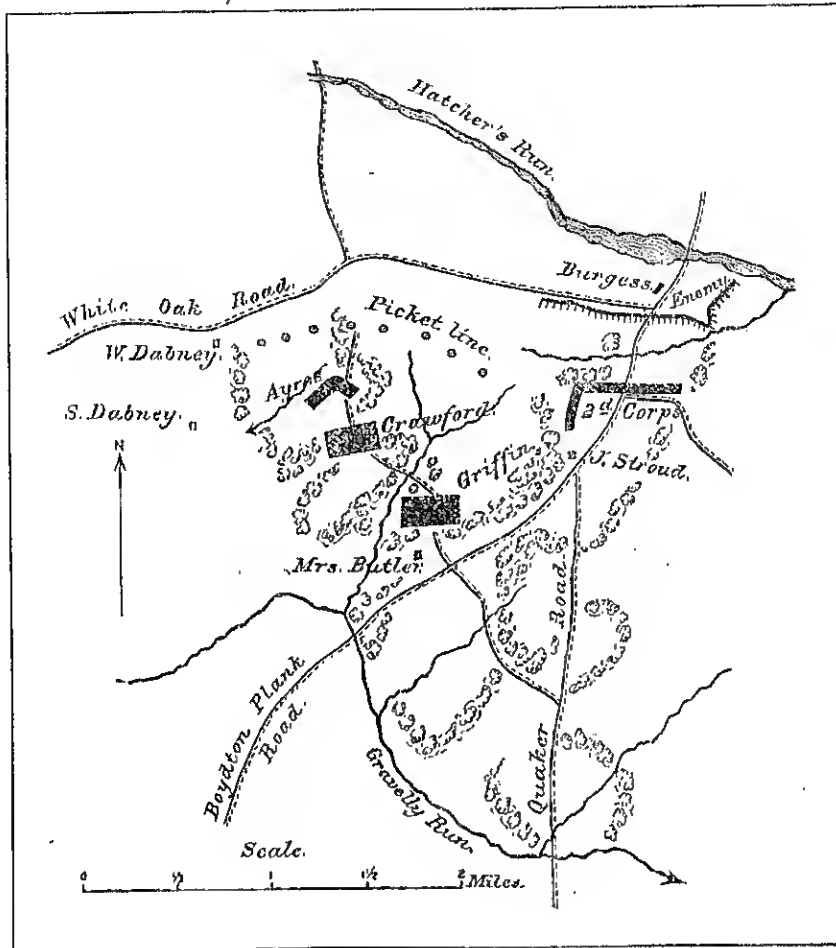

General Webb,
Chief of Staff:

I have just received report from General Ayres that the enemy have their pickets still this side of the White Oak road, so that their communication is continuous along it. I have sent out word to him to try and drive them off or develop with what force the road is held by them.

This operation I deemed essentially necessary to the safety of our position, and only rendered the more so by the suspension of a further movement of troops, as this pause would give time to the enemy to gain a knowledge of our force and position. And in order that the troops might gain rest while operations were suspended a greater distance would be required between our picket-line and line of battle to give the latter time to fully get under arms so soon as any pressure of the advancing enemy showed itself at the advance posts. To prevent any relaxation of vigilance till our position should be made secure, I gave no notice to my command of the order suspending movements. General Webb on receiving the above-quoted dispatch sent me the following, written 10.30 a. m.:

Your dispatch giving Ayres' position is received. General Meade directs that should you determine by your reconnaissance that you can get possession of and hold the White Oak road you are to do so, notwithstanding the order to suspend operations to-day.

The following sketch exhibits position of troops at this time, General Griffin being in position to support either my advance or the Second Corps as required:

General Winthrop, with his brigade, of General Ayres' division, advanced about 10.30 a. m. and was repulsed, and simultaneously an attack which had been preparing against General Ayres was made by the enemy in heavy force, both from the north and west, and he was forced back. General Ayres and General Crawford did all that was in their power to stay the enemy. I hastened toward the point of attack, but on arriving near General Crawford's division it was also being forced back, and all our efforts to hold the men in the woods were unavailing. I am unable to give a more detailed account of this affair, not having reports of it from General Ayres and General Crawford. I then directed the formation of General Griffin's division along the branch of Gravelly Run, with Mink's battery on his right. General Crawford's and General Ayres' divisions formed behind and in this line, and many of them took part in the engagement there. There Colonel Sergeant, of the Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, of Ayres' division, was mortally wounded.

Severe fighting at the creek now ensued and the advance of the enemy completely checked.

I had early in these occurrences sent word of them to General Humphreys, on my right. He at once ordered up General Miles' division on my right, and a brigade of this advanced gallantly against the enemy, but was at first driven back.

The temporary result of this attack by the enemy was such as different portions of our army had experienced on many former occasions in taking up new and extended lines, but our loss was not great, and was probably quite equaled by the enemy.

The prospect of fighting the enemy outside of his breast-works, instead of having to assail him behind his defenses and through his obstructions, was one sufficiently animating to our hopes to more than compensate for the partial reverse we had sustained, and preparations were at once instituted for an advance with the whole corps.

At 1 p. m. I made the following report to General Webb:

General Ayres made no advance with a small force at 10 a. m., which the enemy drove back and followed up in heavy force, compelling both Ayres and Crawford to fall back on Griffin, and, of course, in much confusion. Griffin's troops held the enemy at the run, west of the plank road. General Miles' division (a brigade of it) afterward attacked the enemy and were forced back on my right. My skirmish line in front of Griffin (most of it) has advanced on my left. I am going to send forward a brigade, supported by all I can get of Crawford and Ayres, and attack, swinging on our right. Arrangements are being made for this, and it will take place about 1.45 p. m., if the enemy does not attack sooner.

Owing to some difficulties in crossing the run this advance, which was thus made with the whole corps available, took place a little after the time specified above.

General Humphreys' division, under General Miles, also advanced against the enemy about the same period on our right, but his movement was not made in close connection with mine. While my corps was moving the following dispatch, written 2.50 p. m., was received from General Webb:

General WARREN:

The following is received from General Humphreys:

"From the prisoners taken it is apparent that the left of Pickett's division is opposite the center of Miles. An advance of the Fifth Corps, swinging round, must necessarily take Pickett on his right flank. Pickett is the right of their line.

"A. A. H.,
"Major-General."

Since Miles is already well forward from your right flank the general commanding considers that that must be secure. Miles is ordered to take the enemy's works, supported by his own corps. You will see the necessity of moving as soon as possible.

This dispatch evidently implied a want of promptness in my movements, and yet my troops had been urged and moved as fast as possible. The information about Pickett's division was erroneous, and was worse than useless to me. According to subsequent information his division was at that time some three or four miles away driving General Sheridan. Nor did Miles assault the enemy's breast-works as the dispatch led me to infer he would. General Chamberlain's brigade led my advance, and finding the opposition less than we expected, General Crawford's division was brought to my right, so as to be in support there, as we approached the White Oak road, the direction of our movements being such as to present that flank first to the enemy's position along that road. I quote the following from General Chamberlain's report:

I was desired by General Griffin to regain the field which these troops had yielded. My men fired a stream nearly waist deep, formed in two lines, Major Glenn having the advance, and pushed the enemy steadily before them. Major-General Ayres' division supported me on the left en echelon by brigade, the skirmishers of the First Division, in charge of General Pearson, in their front. We advanced in this way a mile or more into the edge of the field it was desired to retake. Up to this time we had been opposed by only a skirmish line, but quite a heavy fire now met us, and a line of battle could be plainly seen in the opposite edge of the woods, and in a line of breast-works in the open field, in force at least equal to our own. I was now ordered by Major-General Warren to halt and take the defensive. My first line had now gained a slight crest in the open field, where they were subjected to a severe fire from the works in front and from the woods on each flank. As it appeared that the enemy's position might be carried with no greater loss than it would cost us merely to hold our ground, and the men were eager to charge over the field, I reported this to General Griffin and received permission to renew the attack. My command was brought into line and put in motion. A severe oblique fire on my right, together with the artillery which now opened from the enemy's works, caused the One hundred and ninety-eighth to waver for a moment. I then requested General Gregory, who reported to me with his brigade, to move rapidly into the woods on our right by battalion en echelon by the left, so as to break this flank attack, and possibly to turn the enemy's left at the same moment that I should charge the works directly in front at a run. This plan was so handsomely executed by all that the result was completely successful. The woods and the works were carried, with several prisoners and one battle-flag, and the line advanced some 300 yards across the White Oak road.

My loss in this action was not more than 75, but it included some of my best officers and men.

It would be unjust not to mention the services of Major Glenn and Colonel Snipser in this affair, whose bravery and energy I relied upon for the successful execution of my plans. I would also express my obligations to General Gregory for his quick comprehension of my wishes, and for his efficient aid. I may be permitted also to mention the gallantry of Captain Fowler, assistant adjutant-general of division, who rode into the hottest fire to bring my orders, having his horse killed under him in doing so, and who by his conduct and bearing showed an example worthy of all praise.

During the night we buried our dead and cared for our wounded, and bivouacked in the line.

The temporary halt was necessitated by the threatening attitude the enemy's position exhibited, as above described by General Chamberlain, and in order to get the remainder of the corps up and well in hand for a weighty assault. This having been effected, the order to advance was given, with the result as described in the quotation from General Chamberlain's report.

At 3.40 p. m. I wrote from the White Oak [road] the following dispatch to General Webb:

We have driven the enemy, I think, into his breast-works. The prisoners report General Lee here to-day, and also that their breast-works are filled with troops. We have prisoners from a portion of Pickett's and Johnson's divisions. General Chamberlain's brigade acted with much gallantry in this advance, capturing nearly the entire Fifty-sixth Virginia Regiment with its flag.

With the elation due to our success, I thought we might be able to carry the enemy's breast-works at once, and thus force in their right flank and carry all their line south of Hatcher's Run. I at once commenced a personal reconnaissance for this purpose, and superintended personally the advance of our skirmishers to gain points of observation. We thus drew a very severe fire from the line, particularly of artillery. The examination showed me that the enemy's defenses were as complete and as well located as any I had ever been opposed to.

as far my operations had been quite independent of those of General Sheridan.

About 5 p. m. March 31 I received, while on the White Oak road, following from General Webb, chief of staff, written 4.30 p. m.:

Hold your position and protect as well as possible your left flank. Word has come from Sheridan, and it is believed that Sheridan is pushing up. General Hancock will be ordered to push up and to connect with your right. You might, if you find it worth while, push a small force down the White Oak road and try to connect with Sheridan, but they must take care and not fire into his advance.

A rattle of musketry could now be heard southwest from us, which led to us to be receding, and which led us to think the enemy was moving our cavalry. I then ordered General Griffin to send General Cist, with his brigade, directly across the country, so as to attack the enemy on the flank, and I sent Major Cope, of my staff, with him.

At 5.15 p. m. I received the following from General Webb, written 5 p. m., which directed what before had only been suggested:

Major-general commanding directs that you push a brigade down the White Oak road, to open it for General Sheridan, and support the same, if necessary. The distance is so near that the general presumes that the command will not have far to go, and that you will push out must depend on the circumstances of the movement and the support you can give them.

At the time that to General Meade it seemed "the firing is so close" it plainly sounded to us more and more distant, indicating that the enemy's cavalry was falling back, of which I soon had confirmation.

At 5.50 p. m. I sent the following to General Webb:

We have just seen an officer and a sergeant from General Sheridan's command who were cut off in an attack by the enemy and escaped. From what they say our cavalry was attacked about noon by cavalry and infantry and rapidly driven back, two regiments—Crook's and Devin's—being engaged. The firing seems to recede from me. I have sent General Bartlett and my escort in that direction, but I think they cannot be in time. I hear commanding that I think is from General Dinkins Court-House.

About 6.30 p. m. I received the following from General Webb:

Chief of staff of General Merritt has made a report that the enemy has penetrated into Sheridan's main command and your position. This is a portion of Pickett's division. Let the force ordered to move out the White Oak road move down the plank road as promptly as possible.

The force I had sent under General Bartlett had now been gone an hour and to recall it would have required two hours at least for it to get back to the Boydton plank road, and make it too late for use before dark. The artillery had all been left on the Boydton plank road on account of the darkness, which had compelled me to do so, and General Griffin had left with Brigadier-General Pearson there with three regiments of infantry to support it. I therefore sent the following dispatch to General Webb at 6.30 p. m., to explain what I did:

I have ordered General Pearson, with three regiments that are now on the plank road, to move down toward Dinkins Court-House. I will let Bartlett work and see what result, as it is too late to stop him.

It was then nearly dark. Having reconnoitered the enemy's breast-works on the White Oak road, I added the following concerning them to my dispatch of 6.30 p. m.:

We can see the enemy's breast-works for two miles east along the White Oak road. If they are well manned they cannot be carried. I am within 200 yards of them and they turn off northward from the White Oak road.

I then gave directions to secure the position we had gained, by intrenching, and proceeded with my staff back about two miles to the Boydton plank road, at which place I could communicate by telegraph with General Meade during the night. General Meade's headquarters were distant four miles and a half, near where the Vaughan road crosses Hatcher's Run; General Grant's were near Dabney's Mills, about four miles from me; General Sheridan's at Dinwiddie Court-House, distant five miles and a half, and separated from me by a stream not fordable for infantry, where it crossed the Boydton plank road, and the bridge broken down.

At 8 p. m. I received the following dispatch from General Meade, written 7.30 p. m.:

Dispatch from General Sheridan says he was forced back to Dinwiddie Court-House by strong force of cavalry, supported by infantry. This leaves your rear and that of the Second Corps on the Boydton plank road open, and will require great vigilance on your part. If you have sent the brigade down the plank road it should not go further than Gravelly Run, as I don't think it will render any service but to protect your rear.

General Pearson had been compelled to stop at Gravelly Run on account of the swollen stream and broken bridge.

At 8.20 p. m. I wrote to General Webb:

I sent General Bartlett out on the road running from the White Oak road and left him there. He is nearly down to the crossing of Gravelly Run. This will prevent the enemy communicating by that road to-night. I have about two regiments and the artillery to hold the plank road toward Dinwiddie Court-House. It seems to me the enemy cannot remain between me and Dinwiddie Court-House if Sheridan keeps fighting them, and I believe they will have to fall back to the Five Forks. If I have to move to-night I shall leave a good many men who have lost their way. Does General Sheridan still hold Dinwiddie Court-House?

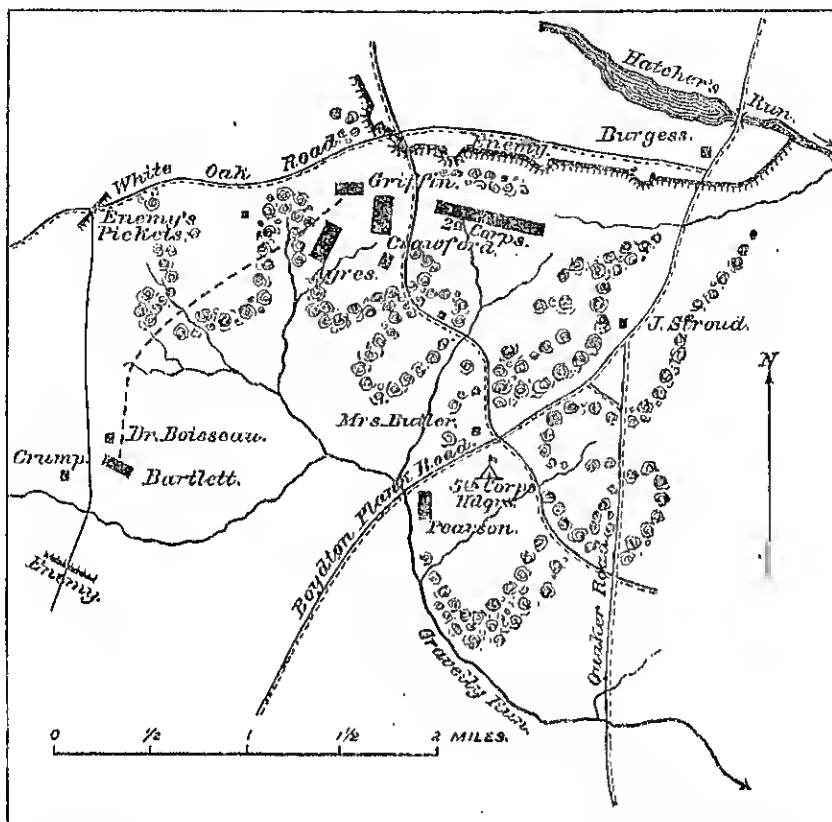

At 8.40 p. m. I received by telegraph the following from General Webb, marked "confidential," written 8.30 p. m.:

The probability is that we will have to contract our lines to-night. You will be required to hold, if possible, the Boydton plank road, and in Gravelly Run; Humphreys and Ord along the run. Be prepared to do this at short notice.

I regretted exceedingly to see this step foreshadowed, for I feared it would have the morale of giving a failure to our whole movement, as similar orders had done on previous occasions. It would besides relieve the enemy in front of Sheridan from the threatening attitude my position gave me, and I therefore sent the following by telegraph, at 8.40 p. m., to General Webb:

The line along the plank road is very strong. One division, with my artillery, I think can hold it if we are not threatened south of Gravelly Run east of the plank road. General Humphreys and my batteries, I think, could hold this securely, and let me move down and attack the enemy at Dinwiddie Court-House on one side and Sheridan on the other. On account of Bartlett's position they (the enemy) will have to make a considerable detour to re-enforce their troops at that point from the north. Unless General Sheridan has been too badly handled I think we have a chance for an open field fight that should be made use of.

The following sketch represents the position of the Fifth Corps at dark March 31, 1865:

The following is the report of casualties in Fifth Army Corps March 31, 1865:

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Cavalry escort.....				1				1	1
Artillery.....				6				7	7
First Division.....	2	21	7	143		6		160	178
Second Division.....	1	59	25	239	3	336	29	694	1003
Third Division.....	1	50	20	360	3	124	21	594	658
Total.....	4	123	52	750	6	464	62	1,345	1,407

My desire to retain the position we had gained after so much hard fighting, and which I considered under the circumstances so advantageous to us, was not accomplished, and orders came to fall back.

At 9.17 p. m. I received the following by telegraph dispatch, written by General Webb at 9 p. m.:

You will, by the direction of the major-general commanding, draw back at once to your position within the Boydton plank road. Send a division down to Dinwiddie

Court-House to report to General Sheridan. This division will go down the Boydton plank road. Send Griffin's division. General Humphreys will hold to Mrs. Butler's.

Whereupon I issued the following order to my command, which was sent out 9.35 p. m.:

I. General Ayres will immediately withdraw his division back to where it was massed yesterday, near the Boydton plank road.

II. General Crawford will follow General Ayres, and cross his troops behind the intrenchments near Mrs. Butler's.

III. General Griffin will immediately withdraw General Bartlett to his present position; then move back to the plank road and down to Dinwiddie Court-House, and report to General Sheridan.

IV. Captain Horrell, with the escort, will remain where General Griffin's headquarters now are till daybreak, and then come back to the plank road, bringing in all stragglers.

V. Division commanders in executing this movement, which is ordered by General Meade, will take care to see that none of their pickets or any portion of the troops are left behind.

VI. General Ayres and General Crawford will have their troops under arms at daylight, and the chief of artillery will have all the batteries in readiness to move.

At 9.50 p. m. I received by telegraph the following from General Webb, written 9.20 p. m.:

The division to be sent to Sheridan will start at once. You are to be held firm to act within the Boydton plank road. General Humphreys will hold to the road and the return.

To this I immediately replied:

Your dispatch of 9.20 is just received. I had already sent out my orders, of which I send you a copy. You directed General Griffin to be sent to General Sheridan at once. It will take so much time to get his command together that I withdraw the other divisions first. They being unengaged, but this will not retard General Griffin. The bridge is broken on the plank road, and will take I hardly know how long to make practicable for infantry. I sent an officer (Captain Boynard, engineers) to examine it as soon as your first order was received. He now reports it not fortable for infantry. It requires a span of forty feet to complete the bridge, and the stream is too deep to ford. Nevertheless, I will use everything I can get to make it passable by the time General Griffin's division reaches it.

General Griffin's division, in addition to the delay of assembling General Bartlett's brigade, had to withdraw his picket-line in front of the enemy, and if he moved first, the others, pending it, had to relieve his picket-line.

The bridge over Gravelly Run we had found broken by the enemy on our occupation of the plank road on the 29th. As I was required to operate independently of the cavalry and protect my own flanks, it was desirable to me, being in my rear, as I forced the enemy on the White Oak road, that it should remain so. Even the dispatch this evening from General Meade, which I received at 8 p. m. (previously given), would have justified me in destroying it had it yet been standing intact.

I had no pontoons with me now. The supply with which I had started on the 29th had been used in bridging Rowanty Creek and the Quaker road crossing of Gravelly Run, and the boats and engineers were kept there for the service of the trains. I directed a house to be torn to pieces to supply materials. At 10.15 p. m. I received by telegraph the following dispatch from General Webb, written 9.40 p. m.:

Since your dispatch of 8.20 p. m. the general commanding finds that it is impossible for Bartlett to join Griffin in time to move with any promptitude down the Boydton plank road. He therefore directs that you send another good brigade to join Griffin in the place of Bartlett's in this movement.

Sheridan was attacked by five brigades from Gordon's corps—three from Pickett's, possibly by two from Gordon's, one of them being Hoke's old brigade.

This dispatch showed that my previous one, giving the condition of the bridge at Gravelly Run, had not yet been received. I deemed it would show when it was that General Bartlett could join General Griffin before the bridge would be passable, and that Griffin could thus reach Sheridan as soon as anyone and require no change in my previous order, and while waiting the result of the reception of the knowledge of the state of the crossing by General Meade, I, at 10.50 p. m., received the following dispatch from him, written 10.15 p. m.:

Send Griffin promptly as ordered by the Boydton plank road, and move the balance of your command by the road Bartlett is on and strike the enemy in rear, who is between him and Dinwiddie Court-House. General Sheridan reports his position as north of Dinwiddie Court-House, near Dr. Smith's, the enemy holding the cross-roads at that point. Should the enemy turn on your line of retreat will be by J. M. Brooks' and R. Boisseau's, on the Boydton plank road (see 1-inch map). You must be very prompt in this movement, and get the forks of the road at J. M. Brooks' before the enemy, so as to open to R. Boisseau's. The enemy will probably retire toward Five Forks, that being the direction of their main attack this day. Don't encumber yourself with anything that will impede your progress or prevent your moving in any direction. Let me know when Griffin starts and when you start.

This dispatch also showed that mine concerning the crossing of Gravelly Run was still not received. That I did not overestimate the effect of this dispatch when it should reach, is proved by General Meade's dispatch, written 11.45 p. m. It also showed complete ignorance of the position of the enemy along the road Bartlett is (was) on, for the enemy already held this road on the south side of Gravelly Run, and if not themselves at J. M. Brooks', occupied our approach to it. The condition of affairs here is given by Major Copo in his report, as follows:

About 5 p. m. you directed me to lead General Bartlett's brigade, by a direct road, if possible, toward the sound of firing in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House, and attack the enemy in the rear. I immediately reported to General Bartlett, who had his column put in motion. The left of the corps rested in open ground. We came out from the left and crossed this ground for half a mile, then we came to a small branch of Gravelly Run, on the edge of the timber. Here we found a wood road that ran in the right direction. We followed it one mile through this wood, over rolling ground, crossing three branches of Gravelly Run. At the south edge of this timber and in open ground on a hill stands Doctor —'s house, and here our skirmishers became engaged with the enemy's pickets. The ground slopes from here to Gravelly Run, and is open in front all the way down. The enemy, after considerable skirmishing, were driven down the slope and across the run, three-quarters of a mile from the house. The house is near a main road leading north from Dinwiddie Court-House to the White Oak road. General Bartlett established a line of pickets along Gravelly Run, crossing this road. He also kept vedettes out on his right watching this road and other approaches in the rear. It was much after dark when he had made the proper disposition of his troops, and then we began to turn our attention to the number and extent of the enemy's camp-fires. They seemed to stretch for miles on the south side of the run, and we could distinctly hear them chopping, moving wagons, and talking.

In addition to this the enemy held a point on the road Bartlett was on where it joins the White Oak road, as had been ascertained by Major Gentry, of my staff, while endeavoring to communicate with General Bartlett. The major lost his orderly by capture while he narrowly escaped himself.

It was now an hour and a half since my order had been sent withdrawing the divisions to the plank road, so that I supposed they were all moving back toward the plank road along the forest road, with its single bridge across the branch of Gravelly Run, and in the order of Ayres, Crawford, Griffin, with General Bartlett's brigade nearly rejoined to the latter. To prevent the confusion and delay that would occur by bringing General Griffin to the plank road and sending back General

Ayres, one of which would have to leave the road for the other to pass, and to save the time that would be lost by each division in changing their relative places I determined to send General Ayres' division instead of General Griffin's, as it greatly simplified and expedited the operation and saved the men's strength, so sorely tried. It had besides the effect to prevent the separation of brigades from their proper divisions and keep each intact, a matter of importance.

As quickly as I could write it, I, at 11 p. m., issued the following order:

I. General Ayres, instead of halting his command as directed in his last order (see mine on p. [820]), will proceed down the plank road to Dinwiddie Court-House and report to General Sheridan. He will send a staff officer to report here when the head of the column arrives.

II. General Crawford and General Griffin will mass their divisions at the point where this order reaches them, and report their position by the officer that brings it. A change of plan makes this change of order necessary.

I note here, a little out of the order of time, that I did not learn the position of General Crawford and General Griffin till 1 a. m., and so difficult had it been to get the troops in motion on this intensely dark and stormy night that although this order from me was sent one hour and a half after the one for them to fall back to the plank road, yet it found them still in the same position.

It must be remembered that our troops, so near the enemy, could not be roused by drums and huges and loud commands, but each order had to be communicated from each commander to his subordinate—from the general till it reached the non-commissioned officers, which latter could only arouse each man by shaking him. The obstacles to overcome in carrying out so many orders and changes of orders in the darkness of a stormy, starless night, when the moon had set, requires a statement of them in detail.

In order to comply with General Meade's first order I had first to send an officer to each division; then Major Cope was the only officer capable of taking an order to General Bartlett's brigade, and he was sent. I had sent Major Gentry to ascertain General Bartlett's position, but he, taking the White Oak road, found the enemy holding the junction of it with the one General Bartlett was on, and he failed, as before stated, to find a way to him.

I had to send another officer for the pioneers, and go with them at once to the crossing of Gravelly Run to make the bridge. I had to send another to the bridge itself to report the condition of the crossing. I had, with my full complement of staff officers, the following available, all the others being engaged in their appropriate departments: Colonel Bankhead, Major Gentry, Major Cope, Captain Benyaurd, Captain Wadsworth, and Captain Winslow.

Having, under these circumstances, made my dispositions to execute one order for a general movement promptly, it is easy to see what strait I would be placed in to countermand those orders before the officers sent out with the first orders returned. After I had sent the order last quoted, I informed General Meade what I had done, as follows:

I issued my orders on General Webb's first dispatch to fall back, which made the divisions retire in the order they could most readily move in, viz, Ayres, Crawford, and Griffin. I cannot change them to-night without producing confusion that will render all my operations nugatory. I will now send General Ayres to General Sheridan, and take General Griffin and General Crawford to move against the enemy, as this last dispatch directs I should. Otherwise, I cannot accomplish the apparent objects of the orders I have received.

I proceeded to make the necessary orders and arrangements to move with the two divisions as soon as I could. The movement had to be made without artillery or ambulances or ammunition wagons, and instructions had to be given in the two latter cases for special provisions. The chief of artillery had to be informed and relations established between him and General Humphreys, commanding the Second Corps, whose troops were required to take my place along the plank road.

At twenty minutes past 12 I received the following from General Humphreys:

I am directed to resume my position of this morning, &c., &c. At what time do you propose to move? I propose to move simultaneously with you.

To this I sent the following reply:

I have just received your dispatch by Captain Wister. Under the order to withdraw at once (viz, that received at 9.17 p. m.) I thought we each could do so individually, under cover of darkness, and so ordered. I have since received orders to attack the enemy with two divisions, sending one down the plank road to report to General Sheridan. My artillery, five four-gun batteries, under General Wainwright, will remain on the line of the plank road. I think the enemy that drove General Sheridan must withdraw to-night. I had a brigade on the road north from J. Boisseau's. I have now orders to move against the force that attacked Sheridan, and shall send all the force I have to move there, or wherever the firing of battle near us may indicate.

At 1 a. m. I received reports from my officers who had returned from carrying my orders of 11 p. m., and learned the position of Generals Crawford and Griffin.

At this time I received the following dispatch from General Meade, written by him at 11.45 p. m.:

A dispatch, partially transmitted, is received, indicating the bridge over Gravelly Run is destroyed, and time will be required to rebuild it. If this is the case, would not time be gained by sending the troops by the Quaker road? Time is of the utmost importance. Sheridan cannot maintain himself at Dinwiddie without re-enforcements, and yours are the only ones that can be sent. Use every exertion to get troops to him as soon as possible. If necessary, send troops by both roads and give up the rear attack. If Sheridan is not re-enforced and compelled to fall back he will retire by the Vaughan road.

On receiving this dispatch showing so much solicitude for General Sheridan's position and the necessity of re-enforcing him directly, even if I had to countermand the previous order and forego entirely the rear attack, and which also left the question for me to determine, I felt much anxiety about what to do. The night was far advanced. The distance to Dinwiddie Court-House by the Quaker road from the location of my troops was over ten miles. It was impossible for them to reach there by that road before 8 a. m. By that time they could be of no use in holding Dinwiddie Court-House.

In this case the most direct route for the rear attack would be down the plank road, where General Ayres was marching. This attack, too, would be then the most effective, as the whole corps would be together in making it, and all in communication with headquarters and General Sheridan, which might be of great importance. If General Sheridan retired by the Vaughan road the rear and right flank of General Humphreys would be left exposed, as stated in General Meade's dispatch, received by me 8 p. m. (already given here). To send the division around by the Quaker road was to break my command up in three pieces, and if it had been done it is doubtful if the success of the 1st of April would have been gained, as the men thus sent would have been too exhausted to reach the Five Forks that day. I therefore determined that it was best to abide the movements already begun, and keep the two divisions—Griffin's and Crawford's—where they were, till I could hear that General Ayres had certainly re-enforced General Sheridan. The men of the two divisions were gaining, while waiting the result, a little of that rest they stood so much in need of on this their fourth night of almost continual deprivation of it, and we had but a short distance to move before reaching the enemy near J. Boisseau's. Having determined this, at 1.20 a. m. I wrote the following dispatch to General Meade:

I think we will have an infantry bridge over Gravelly Run sooner than I could send troops around by the Quaker road, but if I find any failure I will send that way. I have sent Captain Bonyard (two hours ago) with what he thought was necessary to make it practicable in one hour, and trust to that. I am sending to General Sheridan my most available force.

At 2.05 a. m. I learned the following, which I sent General Webb:

The bridge over Gravelly Run Captain Bonyard reports now practicable for infantry, and General Ayres advancing across it toward Dinwiddie Court-House. I have given General Ayres orders to report to General Sheridan.

At 4.30 a. m. I received information that General Ayres had communicated with General Sheridan, and while I was just mounting to join Generals Griffin and Crawford, to move across the country against the enemy at J. Boisseau's, I received the following from General Sheridan at 4.50 a. m., which is published with his report, and there stated to be written at 3 a. m.:

I am holding in front of Dinwiddie Court-House, on the road leading to Five Forks, for three-fourths of a mile, with General Custer's division. The enemy are in his immediate front, lying so as to cover the road just this side of the Adams house, which lends across Chamberlain's run or bed. I understand you have a division at J. Boisseau's; if so, you are in rear of the enemy's line and almost on his flank. I will hold on here. Possibly they may attack Custer at daylight; if so, have this division attack instantly and in full force. Attack at daylight anyway, and I will make an effort to get the road this side of Adams' house, and if I do you can capture the whole of them. Any force moving down the road I am holding, or on the White Oak road, will be in the enemy's rear, and in all probability get my force that may escape you by a flank attack. Do not fear my leaving here. If the enemy remain I shall fight at daylight.

This supposititious state of affairs given above promised most brilliant results if true, but it was not. The enemy occupied the position at J. Boisseau's on the preceding night, and instead of my having a division there, the nearest to it I had was Bartlett's brigade, three-fourths of a mile north of Gravelly Run, the crossing of which the enemy guarded. Even this brigade of mine I had to withdraw, by General Meade's order, at 9.35 p. m. I fully expected, if the enemy had not retired, to have to fight a battle in order to get across Gravelly Run to J. Boisseau's, and if the enemy had designed to stay we undoubtedly must have done so. I so anticipated in my instructions to General Griffin, who, about 5 a. m., left his position near the enemy on the White Oak road and moved directly and rapidly across the country to Crump's. He found the enemy had left the crossing of the run open, and he moved on to J. Boisseau's, meeting at the forks of the road our cavalry, under General Devin. At this point General Griffin reported to General Sheridan, as I had directed, should such a state of affairs as was found be developed. I remained with General Crawford's division, which we formed to retire in line of battle to meet the enemy should he pursue us from his breast-works, as I confidently expected he would as soon as he discovered our movements. I also deployed my escort to retire toward the plank road to take back any men or supplies which might be coming to that point through ignorance of the change that had been made in the night. General Griffin's march having been unmolested I did not reach him until he had met our cavalry. I then ascertained that General Ayres' division was massed about half a mile south of us, near J. M. Brooks'. It will be remembered that General Ayres began to move back from the White Oak road by an order from me, sent at 9.35 p. m., and which was the first intimation of sending troops to General Sheridan. No orders stopped him, nor did anything delay him but physical obstacles, such as the darkness, bad roads, and broken bridge. I will now quote (from his report) the result:

The division was ordered to move down the Boydton pike during the night of March 31, and report to General Sheridan at Dinwiddie Court-House. Before arriving there it was met by a staff officer of General Sheridan's, with instructions to turn off on a road leading west into a road leading from Dinwiddie Court-House to the White Oak road (i. e., from R. Boisseau's to J. M. Brooks') and come upon the left and rear of the enemy, who was facing General Sheridan's command, near Dinwiddie Court-House. As we approached just after daylight the enemy hastily decamped.

This actual trial disposes of the question of the ability of my troops to reach General Sheridan by midnight. It took General Ayres till daylight. It may be said in support of the "expectations" that the state of this bridge and stream were not known when the expectations were formed, but they should have been, as the route was used for communications between General Grant and General Sheridan the two preceding days. But let us suppose the two divisions that General Grant directed to be moved by J. Boisseau's were expected to reach General Sheridan by midnight. The order which I received was written by General Meade 10.15 p. m., five minutes after General Grant's to General Sheridan. It reached me 10.50 p. m., thirty-five minutes after being written. Supposing all possible dispatch used, twenty minutes at least would be required for me to make the necessary arrangements; twenty more minutes would be required to carry my order to the divisions; twenty more minutes for them to transmit them to the brigades, and forty minutes at least for the troops to get ready to move, for it must be remembered that no bugles nor drums could be used to sound calls or arouse the men. No general could make plans based on greater rapidity of execution than here allowed, and our experience rarely realized it on the most favorable occasions, while this was one of the least so. Summing up these intervals of time we have two hours to add to the time of General Grant's writing to General Sheridan. I venture to say it took nearly this time for the note itself to reach General Sheridan. Adding these two hours would make it at least 12 o'clock before my two divisions could move. They then had four miles to traverse, taking the White Oak road, before reaching the crossing of Gravelly Run, which would occupy till 2 a. m. I had then to cross the stream and strike the rear of the enemy attacking General Sheridan, enumerated by him as follows:

The opposing force was Pickett's division, Wise's independent brigade of infantry, and Fitzhugh Lee's, Rosser's, and W. H. Lee's cavalry commands. This force is too strong for us.

To join General Sheridan by midnight on this route I then had to capture or destroy whatever of this force was between me and General Sheridan. Any expectation more unreasonable could not have been formed, nor would I attribute them to any one not wholly ignorant of the true state of the case.

In regard to intercepting the enemy, the facts show it was impossible, under the circumstances. I learned from deserters that they had begun to move toward Five Forks as early as 10 p. m. the night before, believing their position would be untenable the next morning. They had consequently withdrawn in the night, carrying off their wounded and leaving only a cavalry picket in General Sheridan's front, which, as General Ayres says, "hastily decamped as he approached at daylight."

It will be seen by the following dispatch of General Meade to General Grant, dated 6 a. m. April 1, that General Sheridan himself must have been aware of this withdrawal of the enemy early in the night:

The officer sent to Sheridan returned between 2 a. m. and 3 a. m. without any written communication, but giving General S[heridan]'s opinion that the enemy were retiring from his front. The absence of firing this morning would seem to confirm this. I was asleep at the time this officer returned and did not get the information until just now. Should this prove true, Warren will be at or near Dinwiddie soon with his whole corps and will require further orders.

Now, the officer that brought General Meade this information from General Sheridan, "between 2 and 3 a. m.," could not have left General Sheridan less than two hours previous, the distance being about ten miles, over the worst possible roads; so that General Sheridan thought the enemy was retiring as early, at least, as between 12 and 1, and the information could scarce have reached General Sheridan from his picket-line in less than one hour's time; so that the enemy's movements in retiring must have become apparent as early, at least, as between 11 and 12. This conclusion confirms the report that deserters gave me in the morning, and the completeness of the withdrawal further sustains it.

While awaiting with General Griffin for instructions from General Sheridan, who had advanced with the cavalry toward Five Forks, I received, about 9.30 a. m., the following order, written by General Webb, at 6 a. m.:

General Meade directs that in the movements following your junction with General Sheridan you will be under his orders and will report to him. Please send in a report of progress.

At 9.30 a. m. I sent the following to General Webb, as directed:

I reached the crossing of Gravelly Run early this morning and met General Sheridan there. We are massed at that point by his order. I did not meet General Sheridan personally; General Griffin, leading the column, saw him. If we remain in this vicinity we can get rations up by the Boydton plank road; we were unable, except in part, to replenish yesterday. The enemy did not follow with a single man when we left the White Oak road this morning.

It was a matter of wonder at the time, and has been ever since, how the enemy permitted our thus withdrawing without following us up to see the way we took, even if it had been with only a regiment. He would thus early have gained the knowledge that our infantry was moving toward his detached force, under General Pickett, which we beat so badly toward evening. General Lee could then have re-enforced his detached troops or timely warned them to withdraw. I kept my skirmish line halted a long while after my advance set out in the morning, so as to cover the movement as late as possible, and deployed my escort to fall back on the Boydton plank road and delude any pursuing force, if possible, into the belief that we had all retired in that direction. It was a want of vigilance that was most rare on their part and betokened that apathy which results from a hopelessness as to the use of further resistance.

The following dispatch from Colonel Locke to General Webb, written 11 a. m. April 1, describes an achievement which deserves mention, and which seems alike indicative of the sinking spirits of the Confederates:

I have the honor to send the following report:

Capt. B. C. Clement, with one sergeant and thirteen men of the Sixteenth North Carolina Cavalry, Roberts' brigade, Lee's division, have just been received. They were captured this morning by three men of the First Division sharpshooters, Major Jacklin commanding. These three men went through the lines of the Second Corps to find the First Division (which had moved early this morning from its former position), and after passing around the picket-line of the Second Corps came upon these men in two squads and captured them. The names of the captors are W. M. Cronkite, A. McGarry, and William Stahel, all of the Sixteenth Michigan Veteran Volunteers, detailed as sharpshooters. The horses of the prisoners were brought in with them. Our escort being short of horses they have been retained here. The prisoners will be sent up at once.

P. S.—General Warren being absent at the front, I send the above.

The battle of Five Forks, in the evening, was the last serious engagement of the Fifth Corps. I have made the report of this to Colonel Bowers, headquarters armies of the United States.*

The operations of my command, just recounted, were of a most wearying and sanguinary character. The order to move at 3 a. m. on March 29 was of the deepest moment to everyone. The arrangements to be made and the excitement of the hopes and fears of the campaign kept all from sleeping that night. We were moving during all the 29th, and the day closed with a sharp and successful engagement. The night brought rain, and much destroyed the opportunity of the men to rest. Continuous operations throughout the heavy rains of March 30 resulted in much extension of our lines, with new intrenchments to build, and closer contact with the defenses into which the enemy was driven. Another rainy night, with the ground now soaking wet, allowed of little sleep, except to those overpowered with weariness. Movements early commenced on the morning of March 31 were succeeded by a fierce engagement and heavy losses, resulting in the defeat of the enemy and a still closer investiture of his defenses, and the wresting from him of the use of the White Oak Ridge. Disasters to our cavalry corps compelled my men to move to its succor during the night, many of them moving the whole night through. All this was done in a section of country quite new to us, where swamps and heavy forests abounded, and yet I can testify it was done as cheerfully and promptly as it was possible for us to do.

As usual we lost heavily in battle, but the enemy suffered more, and on every occasion the conflict closed with ourselves the masters of the field. The following is the aggregate loss from March 29 to 31, inclusive: Killed, 183; wounded, 1,206; missing, 492; aggregate, 1,881.

It is not in my power to speak in adequate terms of those who did their duty. Many of them had risked their lives on all our former battle-fields. This I shall endeavor to recapitulate when I have finished all the detailed reports.

At present I will but make my acknowledgments of the faithful service of my command in general, and of my division commanders and staff officers, whose names, rank, and positions I gave at the commencement of this report.

Respectfully submitted,

G. K. WARREN,

Late Major-General Volunteers, Comdg. Fifth Army Corps.

---

* See p. 828.

NEW YORK, February 21, 1866.

Col. T. S. BOWERS,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Hdqrs. Armies of the United States:

COLONEL: I respectfully forward herewith my report of the battle of Five Forks. I beg you will excuse any want of neatness in the copy, as I have no one to assist me, and I send it as it is to prevent any further delay.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. K. WARREN,
Major Engineers, &c.

NEW YORK, December 1, 1865.

SIR: I respectfully submit this report and map of the operations of the Fifth Army Corps at the battle of Five Forks.*

About 9 a. m. April 1 (having effected a junction with General Sheridan at about 7 a. m.) I received the following order from General Meade:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
April 1, 1865—6 a. m.

Major-General WARREN:

General Meade directs that in the movements following your junction with General Sheridan you will be under his orders, and will report to him. Please send a report of progress.

ALEX. S. WEBB,
Brevet Major-General and Chief of Staff.

In compliance with the above, I served under General Sheridan during that day and until the winning of the victory at Five Forks in the evening. At 7 p. m. I received from him the following:

FIELD ORDER, }
No. —. }

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,
April 1, 1865.

Major-General Warren, commanding Fifth Army Corps, is relieved from duty, and will report at once for orders to Lieutenant-General Grant, commanding Armies of the United States.

By command of Major-General Sheridan:

JAS. W. FORSYTH,
Brevet Brigadier-General and Chief of Staff.

In consequence of this order I address this report to you. General Sheridan gave no reason for this order of his, but I at once set out to obey it, reaching General Grant about midnight. The next morning I was assigned another command. Deeming, by the comments of the public prints, that the removing of me from the command of the Fifth Corps at the close of an eventful battle was, in the ignorance and misrepresentation concerning it, causing me an injury in the estimation of my countrymen, I requested a full investigation of it in a communication to you, written on April 22. In the rapid sequence of important events this communication remained unacted upon till May 6, at which time it was disapproved as being "impossible at this time to give the court and witnesses necessary to an investigation." I had a few days previous been appointed to the command of the Department of Mississippi, which, it was given me to believe, was regarded as an evidence of confidence in me, removing any unfavorable inferences to be drawn in the taking of me from the command of the Fifth Corps. That this was fully satisfactory to my feelings it could not be said; but the war was ended in Virginia, while yet the Confederate flag and forces kept the field in the department assigned me, and this made the change of command at that time acceptable. The surrender, however, of all the organized troops of the enemy in the limits of my new command took place while on my way to it, and my military operations there were confined to capturing the few still delinquent fugitives on their way to Texas and Mexico. The war being closed, duty no longer required me in the field. Wearied as I was with long and continuous service, I felt unable to endure the summer climate of Mississippi. To request to be relieved would place me with the "unemployed generals" whose resignations had been solicited by the War Department order of May 1. I therefore tendered my resignation, and it was accepted.

* For map see Plate LXVI, Map 11 of the Atlas.

The report of General Sheridan concerning the battle of Five Forks, dated May 16, I first saw in the official Army and Navy Gazette of June 13. In this he states his reasons for relieving me from command of the Fifth Corps. That he should have given his reasons for this removal was to be expected, but I cannot but think it an additional hardship to me that these should have been given to the public, without my first having a chance to explain or justify my conduct on the points in question, especially as I had sought in every way to arrive at these reasons and to submit my conduct to the severest scrutiny. In justice I but ask that this report shall be given the same publicity.

REPORT.

The order of General Meade in the morning of April 1, to serve under General Sheridan, gave me much satisfaction at the time of its receipt. I was then completely ignorant of his having a preference for another corps, or the slightest objection to myself. I had never served with him before. When I met him at about 11 a. m. his manner was friendly and cordial. After talking with me a short time at the place where I found him (during which time he was occasionally receiving reports from his cavalry commanders) he mounted and rode off to the front. At 1 p. m. an officer brought me an order to bring up the infantry. I at once dispatched Col. (now brevet brigadier-general) H. C. Bankhead to give the orders to the division commanders to bring up their commands, specifying the relative order in which I thought they could move the most rapidly. I then went up the Five Forks road, in advance of the infantry, to see General Sheridan, and to inform myself of the use to be made of my troops, so that no time would be lost on their arrival. General Sheridan explained to me the state of affairs and what his plan was for me to do. This I entered upon most cordially. He had placed a staff officer back on the road to mark the point where my command was to turn off. I then rode back to the point indicated, turned up the road (which led by Gravelly Run Church), and examined the ground, using my escort to picket the front I was to take up, so as to prevent the enemy discovering the presence of the infantry. General Sheridan's order was to form the whole corps before advancing, so that all of it should move simultaneously. He specially stated that the formation was to be oblique to the road, with the right advanced, with two divisions in front, and the third in reserve behind the right division. The number of lines and consequent extent of front he left me to decide. Upon examination I determined on an equivalent of three lines of battle for each of the front divisions, arranged as follows: Each division was to place two brigades in front, each brigade in two lines of battle, and the third brigade in two lines of battle behind the center of the two front lines; the Third Division to be posted in column of battalions in mass behind the right. To General Ayres I assigned my left; General Crawford, my right; and General Griffin, my reserve, behind the right. In moving they were instructed to keep closed to the left and to preserve their direction in the woods, by keeping the sun, then shining brightly, in the same position over their left shoulders. General Ayres placed the Maryland Brigade on his left, in two lines, and General Gwyn's brigade on his right. This last brigade was formed in three lines, instead of two, as the regiments could not be well disposed in two lines. General Winthrop's brigade General Ayres formed as his reserve. General Crawford formed his line so as to place Colonel Kellogg's brigade on his left, General Baxter's brigade on his right, and General Coulter's brigade as his reserve. The length of the front we occupied was about 1,000 yards. The casualties of battle of the three preceding days, together with the loss of those who had given out from weariness or were absent on detached duty, had probably reduced our effective force at least 1,000 men in each division below that with which we set out on the 28th, so that we had then present about 12,000 men. While the troops were forming I prepared the accompanying sketch, with explanations, for each division commander, and directed them, as far as time would admit, to explain it to the brigade commanders.

APRIL 1—3 p. m.

The following is the movement now about to be executed:

The line will move forward as formed till it reaches the White Oak road, when it will swing round to the left perpendicular to the White Oak road. General Merritt's and General Custer's cavalry will charge the enemy's line as soon as the infantry get engaged. The cavalry is on the left of the infantry, except Mackenzie's, which is moving up the White Oak road from the right.

General Griffin in his report says the formation prior to the attack was as follows:

The First Division, on the right flank, formed in three lines, with one brigade on its right in echelon.

I supplied General Griffin with the same sketch and plan of operations as I had General Ayres and General Crawford, in which I thought I indicated General Griffin's position in rear of the right. But the necessity for him to protect his own flank, and the wedge-like shape of the formation, as a whole, led General Griffin to regard his division as on the right.

General Sheridan says in his report that he directed "one division to be formed in reserve, opposite the center." This is a mistake. His order was to form it in rear of the right. The line was to be formed "obliquely to and at a point a short distance from the White Oak road." This threw the right in the advance, and it was supposed by him would strike the enemy first and need the support.

During the formation of my troops I used all the exertions possible to hasten their arrival, and everything was so prepared for them that they marched at once to their assigned position without a halt. General Sheridan expressed to me the apprehension that the cavalry, which continued to fire on the enemy, would use up all their ammunition before my troops would be ready. I informed him that they would not all be in position before 4 p. m., but that I was ready to move at once with whatever was at hand if he directed, and let the rest follow, but he did not. His impatience was no greater apparently than I felt myself, and which I strove to repress and prevent any exhibition of, as it would tend to impair confidence in the proposed operations. When everything possible is being done, it is important to have the men think that it is all that success requires, if their confidence is to be retained.

Against General Sheridan's most ungenerous statement that I gave him the impression that I wanted the sun to go down, I simply place my denial, and trust that my whole conduct in life, and especially in this war, sustains me in it. The sun did not set until two hours and a half after the formation was completed.

In proof of the efforts I made to get the troops in position and the rapidity with which they did move, I present the following communications from Brevet Brigadier-General Bankhead, of my staff; Brevet Major-General Crawford, commanding Third Division; Brevet Major-General Griffin, commanding First Division; Brevet Major-General Ayres, commanding Second Division:

General Bankhead writes, under date of June 27:

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 17th instant, received the 25th, I have the honor to state that I was with you April 1, at the time you received such instructions from General Sheridan through one of his staff officers. As to the nature of the order I am not aware, further than that you immediately turned to me and directed me "to bring up the corps at once" along the road we were at the time, and that you would meet the column yourself; that the divisions would march in the following order, viz: Third, First, Second. I immediately galloped back and gave the order in person to Generals Griffin and Crawford. As I was directed to see the head of the column was started on the right road, I sent the order to General Ayres, commanding Second Division (who was farther off to the right), by one of your aides, either Major Cope or Captain Wadsworth. The orders were obeyed promptly, and the troops moved out as expeditiously as the nature of the road and the crowded state it was in (being blocked up with led cavalry horses) would admit. Every exertion appeared to be made by General Crawford, who had the advance, to keep the road clear for the infantry to pass. I remained with the head of the column until within a short distance of the place it was halted and placed in position to make the attack.

H. C. BANKHEAD,

Brevet Colonel and Assistant Inspector-General.

The following is from General Crawford, dated July 17:

GENERAL: In reply to your communication of June 17, asking if my division did not move with all practicable dispatch in forming prior to our attack on the enemy at the battle of Five Forks, I have the honor to state that the troops under my command moved at once upon receipt of the order, and that, in my opinion, no unnecessary time was lost from that time till they were formed as you directed.

S. W. CRAWFORD,

Brevet Major-General.

The following is from General Griffin, dated June 26:

GENERAL: In reply to your communication of the 17th instant, in reference to the movement of the First Division just prior to the battle of Five Forks, April 1, 1865, I have to state I was in command of that division on that day, and, about 2 p. m., received, through Colonel Burkhead, corps inspector, an order to move down the road leading northward with all possible dispatch, as the cavalry and infantry were to attack the enemy at once. I moved my troops as promptly as I could, and on arriving near the place where the corps was formed for the attack was met by yourself. You immediately pointed out the ground that my troops were to form on, remarking in substance that you wished me to be as expeditious as possible. The order was executed at once, and I then reported in person to you. In my opinion the division was formed without any halting or unnecessary delay.

CHARLES GRIFPIN,
Brevet Major-General.

The following is from General Ayres, dated June 24:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 17th instant, last evening, asking an official statement concerning the movement of the Fifth Corps on the 1st of April, from the position where it was massed to that where the lines of battle were formed previous to the attack. I do not know at what time the order was given to commence the movement. I was ordered to follow the First Division. This was done, and my division was kept well closed up on the troops in front. On arriving near the position where the lines were forming you requested me to form my troops as expeditiously as possible, as General Sheridan desired to attack the enemy immediately. Once again during the formation you desired me to be expeditious. My division being a very small one, was soon formed, whereupon I reported to you that I was ready. The order was then given, and the troops moved at once to the attack.

R. B. AYRES,
Brevet Major-General.

In view of this testimony it is apparent that General Sheridan had left out of his calculations the necessary time to make the formation he directed, and that, in his own opinion, his plan was endangered thereby. The propriety of an army all moving at once presupposes, in order that the general who so employs it should be entitled to the credit of the results obtained, that he should have his information so exact that the mass falls directly upon a vulnerable and vital point of the enemy's position. If there should be a mistake in this, the chief merit belongs to those exertions and arrangements by which this mistake is corrected or in the new dispositions which the occasion demands as requisite and which are not impracticable. But this calculation as to the position of the left flank of the enemy's line was faulty, and to a very serious extent, considering that he had placed all the troops in position for the move. The changes we had to make afterward required the greatest exertion of myself and staff, when everything was in motion and in woods of the difficult nature usually found in Virginia, no one of the command being at all acquainted with the ground over which we were moving.

After the forward movement began a few minutes brought us to the White Oak road, distant about 1,000 yards. There we found the advance of General Mackenzie's cavalry, which, coming up the White Oak road, had arrived there just before us. This showed us for the first time that we were too far to our right of the enemy's left flank. General Ayres' right crossed the road in the open field, and his division commenced changing front at once, so as to bring his line on the right flank of the enemy's position. Fortunately for us the enemy's left flank so rested in the woods that he could not fire at us as we crossed this open field, and the part of it that faced us formed a very short line. This General Ayres attacked at once, the firing being heavy, but less than usually destructive, on account of the thick woods. The rapid change of front by General Ayres caused his right flank at first to get in advance of General Crawford's, owing to the greater distance the latter had to move, and exposed the former to being taken in flank by the enemy. Orders were sent by me to General Crawford to oblique his division to the left and close up this interval. As soon as I had found the enemy's left flank orders were sent to General Griffin by several staff officers to move also obliquely to the left and come in to the support of General Ayres. But as Griffin's division was moving out of sight in the woods the order only reached him in the neighborhood of the place marked "Chimneys" on the map.*

While giving orders thus I did not think it proper to leave my place on the open field, because it was one where my staff officers, sent to different parts of the command, could immediately find me on their return, and thus I could get information from all points at once, and utilize the many eyes of my staff and those of my commanders, instead of going to some special point myself and neglect all others. The time had not arrived, in my judgment, for me to do that. It may be that at this time it was that General Sheridan thought I did not exert myself to inspire confidence in the troops that broke under a not very severe fire. There was no necessity for my personal presence for such purpose reported from any part of the field. The time which elapsed before hearing from General Crawford or General Griffin convinced me that they must have passed on beyond the right of General Ayres. Leaving sufficient means to send any important information after me, I then rode rapidly to the right near the Chimneys, and was received with a considerable fire from the enemy across the open field. As I afterward learned, this fire occasioned some unsteadiness in General Ayres' right and also caused the left of General Crawford to oblique to the right, so as to keep the protection of the ridge and trees. I remained here until General Griffin arrived with his division, when I directed him to attack the enemy on the right of General Ayres, and this he proceeded to do. I then rode back to General Ayres' position and found that he had captured the enemy's extreme right (left) and some thousand prisoners. This information I sent to General Griffin, and then rode as rapidly as possible to direct General Crawford as circumstances might require. Before proceeding further I will give quotations from Major Cope's report relating to the proceeding:

You sent me to General Griffin with an order to bring his division toward the White Oak road, by the flank, in order to be in better supporting distance of the Second Division, also to inform General Crawford that he was going somewhat too far to the right. I found Generals Griffin and Crawford to the right of the Chimneys, and gave them your orders. At this time the enemy had a line of skirmishers running from the left of their line of works by the Sidney [Sydnor] house toward Hatcher's Run. You came to where General Griffin was, and then returned to the White Oak road, where I joined you a few minutes after. The part of the enemy's line where you were had been carried by General Ayres, and you sent me again to General Griffin with this information and with an order to push forward as fast as possible. He had already reached the Sidney [Sydnor] house and was pushing forward across the field. I delivered your order and gave him the direction to advance, which was west.

I also annex an extract from General Ayres' report describing his operations after the forward movement began:

Advancing through a wood into an opening, the skirmishers engaged those of the enemy, pushing them back. Soon after crossing the White Oak road, finding the enemy's fire to come from the left, I changed front to the left, by facing the Second Brigade to the left and firing it to the left. Not to lose time I also threw the First Brigade (his reserve) into the front line, on the left of the Second. The Third Brigade soon after engaging the enemy, finding its right flank in the air (I must confess that I experienced anxiety also on this account), portions of it were very unsteady, * See Plate LXVI, Map 11 of the Atlas.

† So corrected by General Warren, in letter to Adjutant-General of the Army, February 24, 1866.

but subsequently moved up and bore their part in the action in a handsome manner. After this change of front the troops were pushed forward and soon came upon the left flank of the enemy, which was thrown back at right angles with his main line and covered by a strong breast-work, screened behind a dense undergrowth of pine and about 100 yards in length. This breast-work my troops charged and took at the bayonet's point, capturing in carrying it over 1,000 prisoners and several battle-flags. Halting there a short time by General Sheridan's order, till it was apparent the enemy were giving way generally. I pushed forward rapidly, holding my men in hand and marching steadily in line of battle.

I have italicised "halting there, &c.," because it shows that General Sheridan modified his own order not to halt. No order to halt was given by me. What caused the general giving way of the enemy while General Ayres was halted by General Sheridan's order was due to the operations elsewhere directed.

It will be seen that the rapid change of front by General Ayres, necessitated by the unexpected condition of things, unavoidably threw his flank temporarily in the "air." Had the line gradually swung round General Crawford would have been on his right, but as it was the change had the momentary effect to leave General Crawford "in echelon" in rear of General Ayres' right. It happened also that the right of General Ayres became exposed to a fire from the enemy across the open field around Sidney's [Sydnor's]. General Crawford's left encountered the same fire as it came up on General Ayres' right, and the effect was to cause the line to oblique somewhat to the right to gain the cover of the woods and ridges; but it kept steadily moving on in the enemy's rear, a threatening movement which made the position of the enemy no longer tenable, assailed as he was both in front and flank beside. I will now extract from General Crawford's report. After giving a copy of the order of attack that I had furnished him with (see p. 8*), he says:

In obedience to this order we crossed Gravelly Run, crossed the White Oak road, and changed direction to the left and advanced directly west. We encountered the enemy's skirmishers shortly after moving, driving them steadily back. Our way led through bogs, tangled woods, and thickets of pine, interspersed with open spaces here and there. The connection between the Second Division and my line could not be maintained. I received orders from both General Sheridan and General Warren to press rapidly forward. I urged on the entire command. General Coulter's brigade, from being in support in my rear, was brought to fill the gap between me and Second Division. I pressed immediately on and found myself in the enemy's rear, on the Ford road, which I crossed. . . . Just at this point the enemy opened upon my center and left flank a very heavy fire. Major General Warren arriving on the field at that moment directed me to advance immediately down the Ford road, and General Coulter's brigade was selected for that purpose. Two regiments, commanded by Major Funk, [were] placed on what was then the left of the road, and the rest of the brigade were on the right, supported by the other two brigades in echelon. I advanced at once and captured a battery of four guns and the battle-flag of the Thirty-second Virginia Infantry. We then changed direction and advanced again in a southwest direction, the enemy lying before us, though keeping up a desultory firing.

General Griffin's report says:

Immediately after the order to advance against the enemy was given, with instructions to the division that after it had crossed the road it was to change direction to the left, so as to strike the enemy in flank and rear. After advancing about a mile, and finding nothing in front save a few cavalry vedettes, and there being heavy volleys of musketry to the left and rear, the division was halted.

This halting, under the circumstances, was a commendable exercise of discretion. He says that a personal examination showing him the enemy on his left he marched in that direction. To effect this same thing I had sent Major Cope to him, as already stated. A small portion of General Griffin's division became separated in the woods from the rest and continued on with General Crawford's division, and was used by me on the Ford road. General Griffin moved against the enemy at "double-quick," taking his breast-works and 1,500 prisoners. As stated by General Crawford I came up with his division near B. Boisseau's after he had crossed the Ford road. He had been driving back the enemy's skirmish line all the way and continually turning the left of any force opposing Generals Ayres and Griffin.

* See Crawford's report, p. 880.

NOTE.—General Sheridan's report states that he directed General Mackenzie to swing round on the right of the infantry and gain the Ford road, so as to cut off the enemy's escape that way. As General Mackenzie did not succeed in getting there till after the infantry had gained the road I asked of him the nature of his operations. He informed me that in attempting to execute his order he found himself north of Hatcher's Run and moving directly away from the battle, which seemed heavy. He therefore (as General Griffin had done) moved back toward the White Oak road so as to take part in the action.

I at once directed his line to swing round to face southward, as we had now closed up the outlet for the enemy's escape northward, and move down upon the position of the enemy at the forks of the road, a point well indicated to us by the firing of some pieces of artillery there by the enemy. General Crawford's troops soon encountered a still line of the enemy, braved to meet him, and from the fire of which General Coulter's brigade suffered severely. The contest, however, was short, for the enemy, now pressed front, flank, and rear, mostly threw down their arms. Three guns of the captured battery were found on the road where they had been stopped in their attempt to escape northward. Immediately after the forks were gained I directed General Crawford to change front again to the right and march toward the sound of the firing, so as again to take the enemy in flank and rear, and this he at once did. I also directed a cavalry brigade, which had been kept mounted and which now came rapidly along the Ford road toward me, not to move along it farther, but to file to their left and proceed in the direction General Crawford had taken. I then passed down the Ford road, reached the forks and turned to the right along the White Oak road. The troops were joyous and filled with enthusiasm at their success, but somewhat disorganized thereby and by their marching and fighting so long in the woods. On my arriving at the point E (see map),* I found that our advance there was stayed by the enemy, who had formed a new line for their left flank near the position F, while they yet maintained their line against our cavalry on the south. Though the orders had been not to halt, and many officers were then urging their men forward, the disordered men, not feeling the influence of their commanders, continued to fire without advancing. Accompanied by Captain Benyaurd and the portion of my staff then present, I rode out to the front and called those near me to follow. This was immediately responded to. Every where along the front the color-bearers and officers sprang out, and, without more firing, our men advanced, capturing all the enemy remaining. During this last charge my horse was fatally shot within a few paces of the line where the enemy made his last stand, an orderly by my side was killed, and Colonel Richardson, of the Seventh Wisconsin, who sprang between me and the enemy, was severely wounded. I sent General Bankhead, after the last of the enemy had been captured, to General Sheridan to report the result and receive his instructions. He but subsequently moved up and bore their part in the action in a handsome manner. After this change of front the troops were pushed forward and soon came upon the left flank of the enemy, which was thrown back at right angles with his main line and covered by a strong breast-work, screened behind a dense undergrowth of pine and about 100 yards in length. This breast-work my troops charged and took at the bayonet's point, capturing in carrying it over 1,000 prisoners and several battle-flags. Halting there a short time by General Sheridan's order, till it was apparent the enemy were giving way generally, I pushed forward rapidly, holding my men in hand and marching steadily in line of battle.

* See Plate LXVI, Map II of the Atlas.

I have italicised "halting there, &c.," because it shows that General Sheridan modified his own order not to halt. No order to halt was given by me. What caused the general giving way of the enemy while General Ayres was halted by General Sheridan's order was due to the operations elsewhere directed.

It will be seen that the rapid change of front by General Ayres, necessitated by the unexpected condition of things, unavoidably threw his flank temporarily in the "air." Had the line gradually swung round General Crawford would have been on his right, but as it was the change had the momentary effect to leave General Crawford "in echelon" in rear of General Ayres' right. It happened also that the right of General Ayres became exposed to a fire from the enemy across the open field around Sidney's [Sydney's]. General Crawford's left encountered the same fire as it came up on General Ayres' right, and the effect was to cause the line to oblique somewhat to the right to gain the cover of the woods and ridges; but it kept steadily moving on in the enemy's rear, a threatening movement which made the position of the enemy no longer tenable, assailed as he was both in front and flank beside. I will now extract from General Crawford's report. After giving a copy of the order of attack that I had furnished him with (see p. 8*), he says:

In obedience to this order we crossed Gravelly Run, crossed the White Oak road, and changed direction to the left and advanced directly west. We encountered the enemy's skirmishers shortly after moving, driving them steadily back. Our way led through bogs, tangled woods, and thickets of pine, interspersed with open spaces here and there. The connection between the Second Division and my line could not be maintained. I received orders from both General Sheridan and General Warren to press rapidly forward. I urged on the entire command. General Coulter's brigade, from being in support in my rear, was brought to fill the gap between me and Second Division. I pressed immediately on and found myself in the enemy's rear, on the Ford road, which I crossed. * * * Just at this point the enemy opened upon my center and left flank a very heavy fire. Major General Warren arriving on the field at that moment directed me to advance immediately down the Ford road, and General Coulter's brigade was selected for that purpose. Two regiments, commanded by Major Funk, [were] placed on what was then the left of the road, and the rest of the brigade were on the right, supported by the other two brigades in echelon. I advanced at once and captured a battery of four guns and the battle-flag of the Thirty-second Virginia Infantry. We then changed direction and advanced again in a southwest direction, the enemy flying before us, though keeping up a desultory firing.

General Griffin's report says:

Immediately after the order to advance against the enemy was given, with instructions to the division that after it had crossed the road it was to change direction to the left, so as to strike the enemy in flank and rear. After advancing about a mile, and finding nothing in front save a few cavalry vedettes, and there being heavy volleys of musketry to the left and rear, the division was halted.

This halting, under the circumstances, was a commendable exercise of discretion. He says that a personal examination showing him the enemy on his left he marched in that direction. To effect this same thing I had sent Major Cope to him, as already stated. A small portion returned with the reply that my instructions had been sent me. At 7 p. m. they reached me, and were as follows:

* See Crawford's report, p. 880.

Major-General Warren, commanding Fifth Army Corps, is relieved from duty, and will report at once for orders to Lieutenant-General Grant, commanding Armies of the United States.

The Fifth Corps in this battle captured 3,241 men, with their arms, 11 regimental colors, and 1 four-gun battery, with its caissons. It lost in killed and wounded 634 men, of which 300 were in General Crawford's division, 205 in General Ayres' division, and 125 in General Griffin's division.

The conduct of my command, officers and men, in these last four days' operations, was characterized by unqualified obedience to orders and resolve to do their duty as it was required of them. Their exertions are deserving of highest commendation.

If it be not too invidious to mention the names of a few where many deserve to be, I will here speak of my division commanders and of my staff, as these were immediately subordinate to me. Bvt. Maj. Gen. S. W. Crawford commanded my Third Division, Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin my First Division, and Bvt. Maj. Gen. R. B. Ayres my Second Division, and performed their duties bravely and ably, meeting the varying requirements of their commands on the battle-field with judgment and energy, and always striving to carry out the orders they received, according as the nature of the ground and dispositions of the enemy's forces permitted or required. My staff did not fail me in one instance, in the multifarious, arduous, and dangerous duties of their positions. The following is an enumeration of them: Bvt. Brig. Gen. C. S. Wainwright, chief of artillery; Col. H. C. Bankhead, inspector-general; Col. F. T. Locke, adjutant-general; Col. A. L. Thomas, chief quartermaster; Col. D. L. Smith, chief commissary of subsistence; of Surg. T. Rush Spencer, medical director; of Maj. William T. Centry, U. S. Army, commissary of musters; Dr. Charles K. Winne, U. S. Army, medical inspector; Capt. George B. Halsted, assistant adjutant-general. My aides-de-camp were: Maj. E. B. Cope, Capt. James W. Wadsworth, and Capt. Gordon Winslow, and in the operations herein reported Capt. William H. H. Benyard, U. S. Engineers. Capt. Napoleon J. Horrell, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, one of the most brave and energetic of officers, commanded my personal escort, consisting of about forty men.

In nearly every one of the numerous battles we have had with the enemy, my command had to lament the loss of some of its bravest and best, and the battle of Five Forks was not an exception to our former experience. Bvt. Brig. Gen. Frederick Winthrop, colonel of the Fifth New York Volunteers, commanding First Brigade, Second Division, was mortally wounded at the head of his command while making a successful assault. His conduct had always been distinguished for gallantry of action and coolness of thought, and no one carried with him more of the confidence and inspiration that sustains a command in trying scenes. His countrymen have lost no one of their soldiers who more deserves a lasting place in their memory.

In this battle I claim to have done my duty myself, and I believe a perusal of this report and of those of my subordinates will show that the opinion of General Sheridan, that I did not exert myself as he thought I should, must have arisen from some misapprehension or misconception of my efforts. His implied charge of neglect, in stating that I failed to reach Dinwiddie Court-House by midnight, as expected, the lieutenant-general must now know is unjust, for it was impossible for my troops to get there before daybreak. I trust, therefore, that I may yet receive some unequivocal acknowledgment of my faithful services at the battle of Five Forks, that will forever free me from opprobrium even among the superficial.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. K. WARREN,

Late Major-General of Volunteers, Comdg. Fifth Army Corps.

Col. T. S. BOWERS,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Headquarters Armies of the United States.

ADDENDA.

PETERSBURG, April 13, 1865.

Major-General WARREN:

GENERAL: I beg leave to submit statement of the operations of the Fifth Army Corps on April 1, 1865, at the battle of Five Forks, as seen by me.

About 8 o'clock on the morning of the 1st I started out from headquarters to join you on the White Oak road, near the Dabney house. I reached there at 8.30 a. m. and found the troops in motion. They marched in a southwest direction, and in one mile came to the Dinwiddie Court-House road, near Doctor Boisseau's; then proceeded down this road to its junction with Ford's road. This point was reached by the First and Third Divisions about 9.30. The Second Division had come up by the Boydton plank road the night before, and was massed half a mile beyond. The cavalry was passing on Ford's road toward Five Forks. About 12 o'clock the corps was ordered to move in the direction of the Five Forks, the First Division leading, followed by the Third, then came the Second. In two miles and a half the head of the column turned to the right and proceeded to the vicinity of Gravelly Run Church. The troops were then formed in the following order: The Third Division on the right of the road leading north by the church and crossing the White Oak road, the Second Division on the left, and the First in reserve. There each division commander was furnished with a plan and written explanation of the movement about to be made. About 4 o'clock, all being ready, the line was ordered to advance. In one-fourth of a mile it crossed the White Oak road, wheeled to the left perpendicular to the road. This movement brought the First and Third Divisions in the woods, and as the line advanced they went too much to the right and lost the connection with the Second Division. After the line had passed through the open fields to the edge of timber, the Second Division became engaged with the enemy's skirmishers. You sent me to General Griffin with an order to bring his division toward the White Oak road, by the left flank, in order to be in better supporting distance of the Second, also to inform General Crawford that he was going somewhat too far to the right. I found Generals Griffin and Crawford to the right of the burned chimneys, and gave them your orders. At this time the enemy had a line of skirmishers running from the left of their line of works by the Sidney [Sydnor] house toward Hatchor's Run. You came to where General Griffin was, and then returned to the White Oak road, where I joined you a few minutes after. This part of the enemy's line where you were had been carried by the Second Division, and you sent me again to General Griffin with the information and with an order to push forward as fast as possible. He had already reached the Sidney [Sydnor] house and was pushing forward across the field. I delivered your order and gave him the direction to advance, which was about west. Bartlett's brigade struck the enemy on the flank behind their works and drove them steadily before him. Crawford's division had gone into the woods on the extreme right. It soon reached the Ford road north of Five Forks. Wheeling and advancing south he came up in rear of the enemy's line, at the same time cutting off their retreat in this direction, and capturing wagons, artillery, and a large number of prisoners. The enemy, finding themselves pressed in front, flank, and rear, made but a feeble resistance. The line then swept on down the enemy's works, carrying everything before it, capturing prisoners by hundreds. The brigades that had been in reserve followed up by the flank on the White Oak road. I joined you again at the Five Forks, and remained with you through the evening. The enemy having been driven out of their entire line of works, two miles long, were followed up until dark, and the troops were withdrawn to the large fields at Willisbury house, where they encamped for the night.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. B. COPE,

Major and Aide-de-Camp.

---

No. 75.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding Fifth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Nottoway Court-House, Va., April 29, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command while serving under Major-General Sheridan:

On the morning of April 1 the First Division, Fifth Army Corps, which was then holding a position on the White Oak road near the Dabney house, was ordered by Major-General Warren to move at 5 a. m. in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House, and report to General Sheridan. After moving something over three miles the cavalry division under General Devin was met, when the First Division was halted and its presence soon after reported to the major-general commanding. Major-General Warren arrived between 9 and 10 a. m., and the troops remained massed at this point until about 2 p. m., when they were moved to within a mile of Five Forks, when the corps were placed in line of battle—the First Division being on the right flank, formed in three lines, with one brigade on its right in echelon; the Third Division, Brevet Major-General Crawford, in the center; and the Second Division, Brevet Major-General Ayres, on the left. Immediately after the order to advance against the enemy was given (who was supposed to be intrenched at the Five Forks), with instructions to the division that after it had crossed the road it was to change direction to the left, so as to strike the enemy in flank or rear. After advancing about a mile and finding nothing in front save a few cavalry vedettes, and there being heavy volleys of infantry to the left and rear, the division was halted, and upon a personal examination it was found that the enemy was moving up the White Oak road. Immediately the division was faced by the left flank, and marched some 400 or 500 yards, when its direction as to the line of battle was changed perpendicularly to the left and moved down on a double-quick upon the enemy, who was visible some three-quarters of a mile distant moving up the White Oak road. The enemy's rifle-pits were taken, together with about 1,500 prisoners and several battle-flags. Here a little confusion resulted from the troops exchanging shots with the cavalry who were coming up in front of the enemy's works. After a few moments' delay the line of battle was again changed perpendicularly to the White Oak road and the enemy's works. This change brought the First Division on the left of the Third. The command was then pushed forward along the rifle-pits, capturing prisoners and driving the enemy before it, until it advanced to the Five Forks, where the cavalry and the infantry met, capturing five guns, several caissons, and the Third Brigade, First Division, taking on the Ford road a train of wagons and ambulances belonging to Pickett's division. About this point Major-General Sheridan in person directed me to take command of the Fifth Corps and push the enemy down the White Oak road. I immediately directed General Ayres and the other commanders to push forward with all possible dispatch, and the pursuit was kept up until after dark, when the command was halted, the cavalry having pushed to the front out of sight and hearing of the infantry. Soon after this an order was received from the major-general commanding to withdraw the corps some three miles and camp near Gravelly Run Church. The corps went into bivouac about 11 p. m.

On the morning of April 2 the command moved down the White Oak road some two miles and massed near the Dabney house, where it remained until about 11 a. m., when it returned to the Five Forks, and moved across Hatcher's Run on the Ford road, and across the South Side Railroad to the Cox road, driving the enemy's cavalry vedettes before it and camping at night at the Williamson house at the intersection of Nanozine road with the River road. The Third Division, under General Crawford, was detached at this point and directed to co-operate with General Merritt, who was confronting the enemy near the crossing of the Nanozine River.

April 3, the command moved along the River road to the Nanozine Creek, thence across to the ford taken by the cavalry, bivouacking for the night in the vicinity of Deep Creek. April 4, the command moved at 5 a. m., via Dennisville, and before dark was found in line of battle below Jetersville, with its left extending across the Danville railroad. During the night a line of rifle-pits was constructed in front of the corps. The command remained in this position during the whole of the 5th instant. At 7.40 p. m. April 5 an order was received from the major-general commanding directing me to report for orders to Major-General Meade, commanding the Army of the Potomac.

On the morning of the 2d, at the Five Forks, between 3,000 and 4,000 stand of arms and several caissons and wagons were destroyed, there being no transportation for them.

I desire to call to the especial attention of the major-general commanding Brevet Major-Generals Ayres and Bartlett, Brigadier-General Chamberlain, and Brevet Brigadier General Gregory, for their efficiency and promptness in executing my orders and in the management of their commands in the battle of the 1st instant; also Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, commanding Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers, who came under my personal observation; he handled his regiment with great ability, and displayed great energy in pushing his command after the enemy.

The number of prisoners captured from the enemy and received by the provost-marshal of the corps on the 1st instant was 3,244, including 132 officers. The number picked up on the subsequent days was 944, including 42 officers. A report of flags captured and the names of the captors has already been forwarded with the flags to the headquarters of the Cavalry Corps.

I submit herewith a list, nominal and tabular, of the casualties in my command in the battle of the 1st instant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. GRIFFIN,
Brevet Major-General.

Lieut. Col. F. C. NEWHALL,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters Cavalry Corps.

NOTE.—The official report from the commanding officer First Division states the number of prisoners taken by the division on the 1st instant to be as follows: First Brigade, 1,050 men, 2 colonels, 6 captains, 11 lieutenants; Second Brigade, 475 men; Third Brigade, 849 men, 3 captains, 5 lieutenants; total, 27 officers and 2,374 men.

GENERAL RECAPITULATION.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division:
First Brigade	1	3	1	15		3	1	21	23
Second Brigade		1	1	14			1	15	16
Third Brigade	1	13	1	71			2	84	86
Second Division:
First Brigade	1	3	2	35			3	38	41
Second Brigade	1	0	11	47		12	12	68	80
Third Brigade	1	9	4	61		0	5	82	87
Third Division:
First Brigade	1	11	8	82		0	9	100	108
Second Brigade		4	3	37	1	1	4	42	46
Third Brigade	3	12	7	103		21	10	136	140
Total	9	65	38	408	1	24	48	586	633

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. GRIFFIN,
Brevet Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Nottoway Court-House, April 29, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with orders from Major-General Sheridan, received April 5, at 7.40 p. m., I reported to Major-General Meade with the Fifth Corps, at Jetersville, for orders. At 6 a. m. on the 6th instant, in compliance with orders from headquarters Army of the Potomac, the Fifth Corps marched from Jetersville along the Danville railroad in the direction of Amelia Court-House to attack the enemy, the Second Division, under General Ayres, taking the advance, the Sixth Corps connecting on the right, and the Second Corps on the left. After moving about three miles to a place called Smith's Shop, undoubted evidence was received that the enemy had left our front and had gone westward. The command was halted and this information sent to the major-general commanding, when orders were received for the Fifth Corps to move to the north on the Pridesville road, thence to move on the right of the army. The advance was continued, via Paineville, to the vicinity of Ligontown Ferry, meeting with no opposing force, save small detachments of cavalry, and capturing about 300 prisoners and many wagons. The distance marched this day was thirty-two miles.

April 7, moved at 5 a. m., in obedience to instructions, for Farmville, via Rice's Store. The head of the column arriving near High Bridge, orders were received, at 9.30 a. m., to pass in rear of the Sixth and Second Corps and move with all possible dispatch to Prince Edward Court-House, which point was reached about 7.30 p. m., marching about twenty miles.

April 8, the corps marched toward the Lynchburg railroad, in obedience to the following order—

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Farmville, April 7, 1865. (Received headquarters Fifth Army Corps 11 p. m.)

General MEADE:

Order the Fifth Corps to follow the Twenty-fourth, at 6 a. m., up the Lynchburg road, the Second and Sixth to follow the enemy north of the river.

R. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

Striking it at Prospect Station about 12 m., thence following the Twenty-fourth Corps toward Appomattox Court-House, bivouacking the next morning about 2 a. m. within about two miles of the above place, having marched a distance of twenty-nine miles. The march from Prospect Station was very slow and tedious, the road being obstructed by the repeated and long halts of the Twenty-fourth Corps.

April 9, the corps moved at 4 a. m., reaching General Sheridan's headquarters, near Appomattox Court-House, about 6 a. m. Very soon after it was reported that the cavalry were heavily engaged and hard pressed. The Twenty-fourth Corps was moving out when the Second Division, under General Ayres, moved on a parallel line rapidly toward the firing. A message was received from General Sheridan, through his aide, Captain Martin, that the enemy was pressing back the cavalry. General Ayres immediately pushed forward his division at a double-quick, and deployed the One hundred and ninetieth and One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Colonel Pattee, as skirmishers, they being armed with the Spencer rifle, and the rest of the division in two lines of battle. The First Division, under General Bartlett, came up on the right, and formed two lines of battle, with the One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania, a portion of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania, and the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Volunteers as a skirmish line. All immediately moved forward and attacked the enemy, pushing him back, and driving both his infantry and artillery from the hills westward through the town, taking a number of prisoners, several wagons, caissons, and limbers. A portion of the skirmish line had entered the town, being strongly supported by our lines of battle, when a message was received from General Sheridan that hostilities would be suspended, as General Lee was about to surrender.

Although a battle was expected at this point, and orders had been carefully given by staff officers for the divisions to keep well closed up, through some unaccountable mistake or neglect on the part of the commander of the Third Division it failed to follow the column, and did not move until an officer had been specially dispatched for it to move up, and did not reach its proper position until after hostilities for the day had ceased.

In conclusion, to show more precisely the part taken in the short campaign by the corps, I would state that our killed and wounded amount to—officers, 18 killed, 103 wounded; enlisted men, 245 killed, 1,553 wounded; missing, 546; total, 2,465.*

The number of prisoners captured were, 187 officers, 4,287 enlisted men; total, 4,474.

Too much praise cannot be given both officers and men for the cheerfulness exhibited through the long marches and the many privations and hardships that had to be endured.

I beg to call the especial attention of the major-general commanding to Brevet Major-Generals Ayres and Bartlett and Brigadier-General Chamberlain for their promptness, efficiency, and zealousness in the execution of all orders.

To my staff, both personal and corps, my thanks are due for their patience, alacrity, and cheerfulness in the discharge of all their duties.

A list of casualties, nominal and tabular, has already been forwarded.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. GRIFFIN,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

Report of casualties in Fifth Army Corps from March 29 to April 3, 1865, both inclusive.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Headquarters Fifth Army Corps.
Cavalry escort				4		1		5	6
Provost guard
Artillery		3	1	9				12	13
First Division	9	91	28	533		30	17	651	681
Second Division	4	71	43	305	3	356	40	822	871
Third Division	5	80	32	612	3	153	40	815	885
Total*	18	545	103	1,453	6	540	127	2,338	2,465

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. GRIFFIN,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

April 27, 1865.

No. 76.

Report of Asst. Surg. Charles K. Winne, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

Nottoway Court-House, April 27, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that on March 26, 27, and 28, all sick in field hospital, as well as every man throughout the command unable to march and endure the fatigue of the ensuing campaign, were sent to the depot hospital at City Point, by rail from Humphreys' Station. The daily report of hospitals for the 26th shows the number requiring treatment in the general hospital; those sent subsequently were unable to march, sick in quarters, &c. On the 28th the hospital of the Artillery Brigade, at Parke's Station, was closed, the hospital trains brought up and parked with the division hospital trains near Cummings' house. All necessary preparations for the campaign had been made; field companions in every regiment filled; the ambulance boxes filled with supplies of hard bread, sugar, and coffee, in addition to the articles required to be carried in them; surplus medical property turned in at City Point; and as large an amount of supplies obtained for the different field hospitals as the railroad and too limited transportation admitted. On March 29 the corps broke camp before daybreak. The flying field hospital accompanying the command consisted of one-half the whole number of ambulances, carrying hospital tent-flies, one medicine wagon for each division, each one carrying two extra operating tables, and five hospital wagons for each division, carrying all the hospital tents, blankets, rations, clothing, &c. The remaining ambulances, brigade supply wagons, and medicine wagons joined the general corps train. The corps, with five batteries, marched down the stage road, crossing Rowanty Creek at the Perkins house, near which the trains were parked. From this position, after halting some time, the troops moved up the Quaker road and on to Lewis' farm, near the junction of Boydton plank and Quaker roads. The First Division encountered the enemy. The hospitals were established near the old Quaker Church, on the Quaker road. Supplies in ambulances and train brought up by permission of the general commanding. Rain commenced about dark, and a violent storm continued all night and next day (30th), rendering the roads terrible, and the movements of the ambulances were extremely difficult. It being necessary to remove all the wounded to Humphreys' Station with as much rapidity as practicable, and all the capital operations having been performed, the surgeons of other divisions uniting with those of the First Division in expediting these operations, the ambulance train of the Fifth Corps, aided by twenty ambulances belonging to the Second Corps, were started for Humphreys' Station at 7 a. m. March 30, accompanied by pioneers of the First Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Army Corps, to assist in clearing the road. During the afternoon a portion of our line was attacked; the losses in our command falling almost entirely upon the First Division.

* But see revised table, p. 586.

March 31, the entire corps was engaged upon the White Oak road, and one-half the number of ambulances present were constantly occupied in transporting wounded, after their wounds had received necessary attention from the hospital at Quaker Church to the railroad station at Humphreys'. Each train was placed in charge of a medical officer, assisted by attendants, supplied with stimulants, dressings, &c. The wounded were all fed before leaving the hospital, and such cases as needed blankets supplied.

During the night (31st) the Second Division moved down the Boydton plank road toward Dinwiddie, followed next morning by the First and Third Divisions by another road heading in the same direction. In the afternoon the battle of Five Forks was fought. The hospital was established at the Methodist Church. Owing to the terrible condition of the roads, rendered almost impassable by the long, violent storm and the passage of infantry and cavalry, the flying hospital was not fully established before midnight. Owing to the same reason and the number of hours required to convey the wounded in ambulances from Quaker

Church to Humphreys' Station the hospitals still existed, and, the supply trains having been wired in attempting to follow the command, no empty wagons could be obtained for additional transportation.

April 2, six rebel wagons captured the previous day were sent with slight cases to Quaker Church, and at 11 a. m. sixty-six ambulances, loaded with wounded, were sent from the Methodist Church hospital to Humphreys' Station, orders having been received to send no more wounded to Quaker Church hospital. Only a sufficient number of medical officers had been left at this hospital to provide for the daily wants of the wounded until they could be shipped to City Point, as all the operations had been performed, and thirty-five ambulances had been left to convey them to the station. This was so far accomplished during the afternoon that the remaining wounded were all sheltered in the house, in charge of one medical officer, with three days' rations and supplies, and the tents that had been left brought up to Methodist Church, where the rest of the train had been parked. The troops to-day occupied Sutherland's Station, on the South Side Railroad. The wounded were also being shipped from Methodist Church to the railroad until the morning of the 3d, when the remaining wounded at Methodist Church, with the whole hospital train, marched, via White Oak, Claiborne, and Namozine roads, to Sutherland's Station, where a hospital was established of fourteen tents, medical officers, attendants, with three days' rations and supplies, and the wounded left, and the train followed the command, but the troops camped on the 3d on Namozine road, near Deep Creek, and, marching with greater rapidity than I have ever seen marches made, attended with the terrible condition of the roads, to separate them from the flying hospital train, which, placed in the rear of the corps, and afterward cut off by troops of another corps, was pushed forward as rapidly as circumstances would admit.

April 4, troops marched on Namozine road, then to Jetersville; total distance, twenty miles. April 5, corps at Jetersville. Intrenchments were thrown up, expecting an attack from the enemy, and positions were selected for the hospitals. In the afternoon the hospital train arrived and went into park, having been thrown twenty-four hours in rear of the command. April 6, marched at 6 a. m., nearly to Amelia Court-House, then, via Farmville and Deatonsville, to within five miles of High Bridge, on Appomattox River, marching twenty-nine miles. April 7, marched to Prince Edward Court-House, eighteen miles. April 8, marched through Prospect Station, along Petersburg and Lynchburg Railroad, to within seven miles of Appomattox Court-House, and meeting the enemy. The Abbitt house was at first selected for a field hospital, but few cases, however, were received, as overtures were made on the part of the enemy for the surrender of his entire force. The corps remained in camp until the 15th of April at Appomattox Court-House, when the troops commenced marching back, camping at night at Pamplin's Station. April 16, march resumed to Farmville, over exceedingly bad roads. April 17, corps marched to Sandy River, eight miles from Burkeville, and sites selected for the different division hospitals near the troops. April 20, command moved to Nottoway Court-House, and was distributed along the line of the South Side Railroad, from a point between Burkeville and Nottoway to beyond Sutherland's Station.

The division hospitals were all in exceedingly eligible sites for hospitals: First Division stationed at Wilson's Station; Second Division and Artillery Brigade near Nottoway Court-House; and the Third Division hospital at Blacks and Whites—each being as near the center of its respective division as practicable, and where the sick can be placed upon the cars when it is desirable to send them to the depot hospital.

In the above memoranda I have presented as succinct an account of the movements of the corps and of the hospitals as practicable. The daily reports of the hospitals heretofore forwarded present the number of wounded admitted for treatment during the campaign. The large number admitted, the terrible condition of the roads, and rapid changes in the position of the troops, rendered it necessary, or rather compelled the existence of two field hospitals during the earlier part of the campaign, or at Quaker Church during the conflict of the 28th [29th] of March to the 31st, inclusive, and the engagement of the 1st caused the establishment of the hospital at Methodist Church. The few remaining at Quaker Church were finally sent off from Warren's Station, and the wounded in the last depot (Methodist Church) brought up to Sutherland's Station as soon as the movements of the army rendered it practicable, and a hospital temporarily established there by order of Surgeon Ghiselin, medical director, and from thence they were sent to Petersburg. I can say from personal observation during the different engagements that all the wounded were removed from the field where the Fifth Corps fought, and only one case was in reality left, and he (Lieutenant-Colonel Furnham) would have undoubtedly died, if at that time an attempt had been made to send him to the depot hospital; he was left at the Moody house, with supplies, and I hear has subsequently been taken to Petersburg.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. K. WINNE,

Asst. Surgeon, U. S. Army, Medical Inspector, Fifth Army Corps.

Col. T. A. McPARKIN,

Surgeon, U. S. Army, Medical Director, Army of the Potomac.

---

No. 77.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

April 29, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the troops under my command from the 29th of March to the 9th of April, 1865, inclusive:

In compliance with orders from corps headquarters, dated March 28, the First Division broke camp, on the morning of the 29th at 5 a. m., near the crossing of the Vaughan road and Hatcher's Run, moving on the stage road to the crossing of the Rowanty; thence to a position near the Otappell house, about two miles from Dinwiddie Court-House. About 12 m. instructions were received from General Warren to return to the Quaker road and to move down it in the direction of Boydton plank. Immediately after crossing Gravelly Run General J. L. Chamberlain, with the First Brigade, having the advance, met the enemy's cavalry and infantry and steadily drove them before him, the force constantly increasing until reaching a point known as the Lewis house, where our troops were met by a portion of Johnson's and Anderson's forces of the enemy, attacking with Wise's and Wallace's brigades, supported by other commands. The engagement lasted over two hours with great severity. General Chamberlain handled his brigade with ability, gallantly repulsing a much larger force than his own. At the close of the fight Battery B of the Fourth U. S. Artillery, one regiment (the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York) of the Second Brigade, and three from the Third Brigade went to the support of the First, when the enemy was driven from the field, his wounded and killed falling into our possession, with 200 prisoners. One hundred and thirty of the enemy's dead were buried by our pioneers. Our lines were advanced to and intrenched on the Boydton plank road before dark.

March 30, two brigades (Second and Third) were pushed across the plank road and occupied the rifle-pits of the enemy, some half a mile distant, the picket-line being established within easy range of the enemy's main works. The rain fell incessantly during the day and but little was done. March 31, the division was relieved by the Second Corps, and directed to move to the left and mass upon the ground the Second Division had previously occupied. About 11 a. m., heavy musketry being heard in our front toward the White Oak road, the division was immediately put in motion in the direction of the firing, and had scarcely reached the bank of Gravelly Run when it was met by the Third Division running to the rear in a most demoralized and disorganized condition, soon after followed by the Second Division. The First Division was formed in line of battle along the bank of the run with the utmost difficulty, and two batteries placed in position, when the enemy pursuing our troops were checked and driven back. The command was then pushed across the run, supported by the Second and Third Divisions, and the First Brigade, leading, regained the position first taken by the troops in the morning. The enemy demonstrating in his rifle-pits, still in our front, General Chamberlain pushed boldly forward, carrying them in a handsome manner, taking one flag and about 135 prisoners, and gaining possession of the White Oak road. The First and Second Brigades intrenched upon this line, throwing a strong picket-line to the front and across the White Oak road. About an hour after this connection was established by the Second Corps with our right. Soon after 5 p. m. the Third Brigade, under command of General Bartlett, which was in reserve, was sent, via the J. Boisseau house, to connect with the cavalry, which appeared to be engaged some miles distant in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House. The brigade moved some three miles, when it struck a picket-line of the enemy; some skirmishing occurred, but darkness coming on almost immediately further operations were prevented. This brigade remained in this position until about midnight, when it returned to the vicinity of the line occupied by the First and Second Brigades, in compliance with an order received about 10.30 p. m. for the division to withdraw and move down the plank road to Dinwiddie Court-House and report to General Sheridan. Owing to the difficulty of communication and the time occupied in getting this brigade back, the order was changed, and the Second Division, under General Ayres, directed to report to General Sheridan. About 5 a. m. on the morning of April 1 an order was received through a staff officer to move the First Division with all possible dispatch, via the J. Boisseau house, and report to General Sheridan, and this order was immediately executed, the First and Second Divisions being relieved by the Second Corps, the command arriving at the White Oak road about 7 a. m., where it remained until 2 p. m.

For the movement of the troops under my command from the 1st to the 5th instant, inclusive, I respectively refer to my report to Major-General Sheridan, herewith inclosed.*

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. GRIFFIN,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

---

No. 78.

Report of Brig. Gen. Joshua T. Chamberlain, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.

CAMP OF FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,

April 24, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders just received, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the First Brigade of this division from the 29th of March to the 9th of April, 1865:

The brigade broke camp on the morning of the 29th ultimo and marched at 6 a. m., by way of Arthur's Swamp and the old stage road and Vaughan road, toward Dinwiddie Court-House; turning to our right, we went into position near the Chappell house. Soon after this we returned to the Vaughan road and moved up the Quaker road in a northerly direction. On reaching Gravelly Run Major-General Griffin directed me to form my brigade in order of battle and advance against some works which were in sight on the opposite bank. Crossing the run, I sent Maj. E. A. Glenn, commanding the second battalion of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, forward with his command as skirmishers, and formed my lines, with Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. G. Sickel, One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania, on the right, and Col. G. Snipe, One hundred and eighty-fifth New York, on the left of the road. Major Glenn pushed forward vigorously and drove the enemy's skirmishers out of their works without any difficulty, and succeeded in pressing them through the woods and as far as the Lewis house. The enemy making considerable show of force in the edge of woods beyond, I halted Major Glenn and brought my line of battle up to supporting distance. Here I was directed to halt. In a short time I was ordered by General Griffin to resume the advance. There being at that time no firing of any consequence on the skirmish line I brought my line of battle up to that point, reformed it on the buildings, re-enforced the skirmishers by a company from the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York, and commenced a rapid advance with my whole command. The skirmishers reached the edge of woods before the firing became at all severe. I was exceedingly anxious that the troops should gain the cover of the woods before receiving the shock of the fire, but the obstacles to be overcome were so great that this could not be fully accomplished, and my men were obliged to gain the woods against a heavy fire. They advanced, however, with great steadiness and drove the enemy from their position and far into the woods. It was not long, however, before another attack was made upon us, evidently by a greatly superior force, and we became completely enveloped in a withering fire. We replied with spirit and persistency, holding our ground, taking rather the defensive at this stage of the action. In the course of half an hour my left became so heavily pressed that it gradually gave way, and at last was fairly turned, and driven entirely out of the woods to a direction parallel with the road by which we advanced. This position could not be held ten minutes, and nothing but the most active exertions of field and staff officers kept the men where they were, the fire all the time being very severe. At this moment I sent a request for General Gregory, commanding Second Brigade, on my left, to attack the enemy in flank in their newly gained position. I was assured by Major-General Griffin, who was on the line, that if we would hold on five minutes he could bring up the artillery. Upon this I succeeded in rallying the men, and they once more gained the woods. Battery B of the Fourth U. S. Artillery now came into position and opened a most effective fire. By this assistance we held our line until the enemy fell heavily upon our right and center, and my men being by this time out of ammunition, many of them absolutely without a cartridge, began to yield ground. Seeing that this was inevitable I dispatched an aide to General Gregory asking him for a regiment, and at the same time Major-General Griffin ordered up three regiments of the Third Brigade. These regiments came promptly to our assistance. I was at that moment endeavoring to reform my broken line, so as, at all events, to cover the artillery. The line was falling back in front of the Lewis house when Lieutenant-Colonel Doolittle, of the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York, came up, gallantly leading his regiment, as also Colonel Partridge, Sixteenth Michigan; the One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania and First Michigan came on in the most handsome manner, passing to my front, Brevet Brigadier-General Pearson, of the One hundred and fifty-fifth, grasping his color and dashing straight against the enemy's line. This assistance and the admirable service of the artillery compelled the enemy to abandon their position; otherwise I must have been driven entirely from the field.

---

* See p. 838.

This action lasted nearly two hours before any support reached us. I need not speak of the severity of the engagement, nor of the conduct of my officers and men, inasmuch as it was all under the eye and direction of the major-general commanding, who shared the dangers, as well as the responsibilities, of that field; but I may be permitted to mention the fact that more than 400 of my men and 18 officers killed and wounded marked our line with too painful destructiveness. Nor can I fail to speak of the steadfast coolness and courage of Brevet Brigadier-General Sickel, whose example and conduct made my efforts needless in that part of the line, until he was borne from the field severely wounded; the unflinching tenacity of Colonel Sniper at his perilous post, and the desperate bravery with which he rallied his men, seizing his color after it had fallen from the hands of three color-bearers and a captain, and bearing it into the very ranks of the enemy; the fiery courage of Major Glenn, which could scarcely be restrained; and of the heroic spirit of Major Muecen, who fell dead foremost in the ranks of honor; nor shall I forget to name the young gentlemen of my staff—Lieutenants Walters and Vogel, my personal aides, both painfully wounded, but keeping the field to the last; Lieutenant Mitchell, my adjutant-general, and Lieutenant Fisher, pioneer officer—who rendered me essential aid in the hottest of the fire. Private Kelsey, my orderly, rode upon the enemy's line and captured, under my own eyes, an officer and five men, and brought them in.

Remaining on the ground that night and the next day, we buried our dead and 130 of the enemy's, and brought in the wounded of both parties.

On the morning of the 31st we moved up the Boydton plank road, and upon this nearly to Gravelly Run crossing, taking position on the left of the division and the corps. A sharp engagement commenced to our right, which resulted in the troops falling back through our lines in great confusion. I was desired by General Griffin to regain the field which these troops had yielded. My men forded a stream nearly waist deep, formed in two lines, Major Glenn having the advance, and pushed the enemy steadily before them. Major-General Ayres' division supported me on the left in echelon by brigade, the skirmishers of the First Division, in charge of General Pearson, in their front. We advanced in this way a mile or more into the edge of the field it was desired to retake. Up to this time we had been opposed by only a skirmish line, but quite a heavy fire now met us, and a line of battle could be plainly seen in the opposite edge of woods and in a line of breast-works in the open field, in force at least equal to our own. I was now ordered by Major-General Warren to halt and take the defensive. My first line had now gained a slight crest in the open field, where they were subjected to a severe fire from the works in front and from the woods on each flank. As it appeared that the enemy's position might be carried with no greater loss than it would cost us merely to hold our ground, and the men were eager to charge over the field, I reported this to General Griffin, and received permission to renew the attack. My command was brought into one line and put in motion. A severe oblique fire on my right, together with the artillery which now opened from the enemy's works, caused the One hundred and ninety-eighth to waver for a moment. I then requested General Gregory, who reported to me with his brigade, to move rapidly into the woods on our right by battalion in echelon by the left, so as to break this flank attack, and possibly to turn the enemy's left at the same moment that I should charge the works directly in front at a run. This plan was so handsomely executed by all that the result was completely successful. The woods and the works were carried, with several prisoners and one battle-flag, and the line advanced some 300 yards across the White Oak road.

My loss in this action was not more than seventy-five, but it included some of my best officers and men.

It would be unjust not to mention the services of Major Glenn and Colonel Sniper in this affair, whose bravery and energy I relied upon for the successful execution of my plans. I would also express my obligations to General Gregory for his quick comprehension of my wishes and for his efficient aid. I may be permitted also to mention the gallantry of Captain Fowler, assistant adjutant-general of division, who rode into the hottest fire to bring my orders, having his horse killed under him in doing so, and who by his conduct and bearing showed an example worthy of all praise.

During the night we buried our dead and cared for our wounded, and bivouacked on the line.

The brigade left bivouac on the White Oak road early on the morning of the 1st and moved, with the rest of the division, toward Dinwiddie Court-House, until we met General Sheridan with his cavalry. We then moved in connection toward Five Forks. Arriving at a point near Gravelly Run Church we were formed on the right of the Third Brigade of this division in three lines. Brevet Brigadier-General Gregory, commanding Second Brigade of this division, reported to me with his brigade, by order of General Griffin, and was placed upon the right flank of our lines, one regiment being deployed as skirmishers in our front, one on the flank faced outward, and one held in reserve. Mckenzie's cavalry was on our right. In this formation we advanced in the order designated. Our instructions were to keep closed to the left on the Third Brigade, and also to wheel to the left in moving, the design being to strike the enemy in flank. We advanced through an open wood with nothing but light skirmishes in our front for some time. The constant change of direction to the left made the march on the right flank exceedingly rapid. On coming out at a large opening it was discovered that the Third Division of the corps was no longer on the left of the First Division, as had been the order of movement, and the heavy firing was all concentrated at a point to our left and front, where the Second Division had struck the enemy's works. Seeing the division flag moving in that direction I immediately drew my brigade into the field by the left flank and formed them facing this fire, and General Griffin ordered me to move against the point. Brevet Major-General Bartlett advanced at the same time with three regiments of the Third Brigade immediately on my right. We moved up rapidly under the crest of a hill and charged the works, striking them obliquely in flank and reverse, the right of my line—the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York (Colonel Sniper) and the first battalion of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania (Major Glenn)—passing down to the rear of the works, and the left—second battalion of the One hundred and ninety-eighth (Captain Stanton)—passing in front of them. The regiments of the Third Brigade, striking further up, met a very heavy flank fire on the right, which broke us up somewhat, the extreme right falling back and the remainder of the line showing strong disposition to swing to the left into the works from which we had driven the enemy, a position which would render them powerless against the flank attack which was then commencing. It required the utmost personal efforts of every general and staff officer present to bring our line to face perpendicularly to the line of works, and to repulse the attack. General Bartlett informing me of the imminent peril on his right I directed my two right regiments to sweep down the rear of the Twentieth Maine and First Michigan and break the attack, General Gregory also pressing forward with his brigade in the same direction. In the attempt to do this the regiments of the several brigades became somewhat mixed, but a new direction was given to our line, and the enemy completely put to rout. In the meantime, with one staff officer and Captain Brinton, of the division staff, I assisted General Bartlett in collecting the stragglers from all commands who were seeking shelter in the edge of the woods; these men, to the number of 150 or 200, were formed and pushed in. While engaged in this I saw in the open field in our rear the flag of General Gwyn, of the Second Division, and dispatched Lieutenant Fisher, of my staff, to request him to throw his brigade in as rapidly as possible in the same direction as had been given to the troops already in. This assistance was most cheerfully and promptly rendered, and contributed in a good degree to our success. The confusion of the battle at this moment was great; different commands were completely mingled, but our line was still good. The men of my own brigade were, for the most part, nearest to the line of works, though many of them were mixed with those of the Twentieth Maine and of the Second Brigade. As the line all merged into one the right of our line, consisting chiefly of the Second and Third Brigade troops, struck a battery and wagons on a road running perpendicular to the works, while Colonel Sniper and Major Glenn, with their colors close together, came upon the flank of other guns in position in the works. Two battle-flags were taken here by the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Volunteers, and a large number of prisoners. The whole line then pressed on, three brigades of the division as one, and driving the enemy far up the road to the distance, I should judge, of a mile or more. At dark I received an order from General Griffin to collect the troops of the division, and afterward from General Sheridan, to gather all the infantry that could be found and reform them in an open field to the left of the road, which was done; and we then encamped for the night along the works.

The prisoners captured by my brigade who cannot be claimed by other commands were nearly 900. Four battle-flags were taken; all these were turned over and receipted for except one battle-flag, which was torn up and distributed among the men before it could be properly taken charge of. My loss was not heavy in comparison with that of previous days, but cannot be considered otherwise than severe, inasmuch as it includes the name of so excellent a gentleman, and so thorough a soldier, as Maj. Edwin A. Glenn, commanding One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who fell mortally wounded in the extreme advance. I have already recommended his promotion by brevet for distinguished gallantry at the battle of Lewis' farm and White Oak road.

On the afternoon of the 2d we moved from the battle-field by the Church road, my brigade leading the advance. Colonel Sniper deployed six companies as skirmishers, holding four as support. Flankers were thrown out on the right and left. We advanced but a short distance before we came upon a strong skirmish line of the enemy, who endeavored to oppose our crossing a small creek. Colonel Sniper, however, attacked them with a vigor which soon dislodged them, and drove them before him. At Church road crossing on the South Side Railroad we captured a train of cars, which happened to be passing, in which were some Confederate officers and men. Crossing the railroad, I was then directed by Major-General Bartlett, commanding the division, to push out, if possible, to the Cox road, crossing our direction at nearly right angle. The enemy here showed a disposition to make a stand, deploying a line in single rank, composed, as I judged, of about 1,500 dismounted cavalry. I immediately formed the two battalions of the One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania in line of battle, threw forward Lieutenant-Colonel Townsend's regiment, of General Gregory's brigade, which had reported to me, into a piece of woods to protect my right, and in this order pushed rapidly forward. The enemy fell back on Colonel Sniper's brisk fire, and, with a loss of only three men wounded, the road was secured. I was then ordered to make disposition to hold the road, which was done; the skirmish line being formed along a creek half a mile or more in advance. We remained in this position until General Sheridan came up, when we moved again down the Cox road, with skirmishers and flankers as before, marching until night, and encamping on what is called the Namozine road. On the morning of the 3d we moved out the Namozine road toward Amelia Court-House; bivouacked that night on the same road. Marched at 6 a. m. on the morning of the 4th, and after dark came upon the Danville railroad at Jetersville, and made preparations to attack the enemy's trains in that vicinity. As the enemy appeared to be in force we threw up works, and remained on the alert during the night. The next day, the 5th, we were under arms nearly all day prepared to receive or make an attack. At about 1 o'clock I moved out the Amelia Court-House road to support a portion of our cavalry who were bringing in a large number of prisoners, and were severely attacked on the road. I returned to camp and remained during the night. The next day, the 6th, we marched in pursuit of the enemy in a westerly direction, passing through Paineville, my brigade in advance; firing was heard on our left. The skirmishers captured about 150 prisoners and several teams, and our pioneers destroyed, by order of the corps commander, a large number of army wagons, gun carriages, and caissons which had been captured by our cavalry or abandoned by the enemy. Our march this day was very rapid and tiresome. After dark we encamped near Sailor's Creek. On the morning of the 7th we moved up the road by Sailor's Creek, and crossing the Lynchburg railroad near Rice's Station, brisk firing was heard on our right. Marched to Prince Edward Court-House and encamped for the night. On the 8th we moved by way of Prospect Station up the Lynchburg pike, the Twenty-fourth Corps preceding. Our march was frequently obstructed and tedious. Bivouacked at midnight on the road. Information was here received that General Sheridan had met the enemy and captured several trains. Marched at 4 a. m. on the 9th to the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House, being but a short distance, and found the cavalry warmly engaged. My brigade having the advance was filed to the right, moved to the rear of the cavalry, and formed on the right of the division and corps, in two lines. A heavy skirmish line was thrown forward, connecting with the Third Brigade skirmishers on the left, and our lines advanced against the enemy, relieving the cavalry, who reformed on my right. The skirmishers drove the enemy rapidly before them, while our line of battle was opened on by a battery in the town, my right being exactly in the line of fire. My skirmish line had reached the town, its right being at the house of Mrs. Wright, and my line of battle was rapidly closing on them, when a flag of truce came in with an aide of the commanding officer of the opposing forces, who was referred to the major-general commanding. I soon after received the order to halt my lines and to cease the skirmishing. During the conference which ensued we remained as we had halted, and afterward went into camp near the same ground. My loss this day was, 1 killed and 1 wounded, Lieut. Hiram Clark, of the One hundred and eighty-fifth New York, being instantly killed by a cannon-shot, just as the flag of truce came in.*

Respectfully submitted,

J. L. CHAMBERLAIN,

Brigadier-General, late Commanding First Brigade.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division, Fifth Corps.

---

*Copy of so much of this report as relates to operations April 4-5 was furnished General Sheridan April 14.

No. 79.

Report of Bet. Brig. Gen. Edgar M. Gregory, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
April 18, 1865.

I have the honor to make the following report of the action of the brigade under my command in the recent campaign commencing March 29, 1865:

The Second Brigade, agreeable to orders, left camp near Humphreys' Station, Va., at 5.30 o'clock on the morning of the 29th ultimo, preceded by the First Brigade, First Division, Fifth Army Corps. We crossed Rowanty Creek at 7.30 o'clock and took the old stage road leading toward Dinwiddie Court-House. We bivouacked at the Miller house, awaiting orders, and at 1 p. m. proceeded back, taking the Vaughan road to Gravelly Run. Meeting with small squads of the enemy we advanced a skirmish line and formed our regiments—One hundred and eighty-seventh, One hundred and eighty-eighth, and One hundred and eighty-ninth [New York]—in line of battle. Our skirmishers soon became engaged with the enemy, and the First Brigade, in advancing on our right, became actively engaged with the enemy in force. Advancing some distance in two lines of battle, at this juncture General Chamberlain, commanding the First Brigade, asked the assistance of a regiment of my brigade, and I immediately sent the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel Doolittle, to his assistance. We continued to advance the two remaining regiments, as per instructions, passing over swampy and difficult grounds, protecting the flank of the First Brigade, until reaching the Quaker (or telegraph) road, where we halted, a line of battle being in our front. From this point we were relieved, and bivouacked in the field opposite the J. Lewis house, an old saw-mill, for the night. On the morning of the 30th the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers returned to the brigade, and at 1 p. m. we were moved up the Quaker road to a large field, near the Boydton road, and took position in the rear of the line of battle, occupying the earth-works. We lay in line of battle in this position the entire day. At 7.30 o'clock the regiments were moved back of the Boydton road, and bivouacked for the night. The morning following (31st) received orders to move down the Boydton road to General Ayres, Second Division, being relieved by the Second Corps, and took position immediately on his right. The Second Division at this time was actively engaged with the enemy, and meeting with some reverses, the First Division entire was ordered forward. My brigade, after crossing Gravelly Run, was formed in two lines of battle—the One hundred and eighty-eighth and One hundred and eighty-ninth forming a line, with the One hundred and eighty-seventh in rear. My brigade joined the right of the First. The enemy's line being driven back, and the ground lost in the morning was handsomely retaken. I continued to advance my brigade until near the White Oak road, taking the enemy's skirmish line and occupying their rifle-pits. We also captured many prisoners. In this position we threw up a line of works, extending from the First Brigade, on our left, to General Miles' division, or the Third Brigade, First Division, Second Corps, on our right. A heavy skirmish line was placed near the road, connecting as above, respectively. From this point we sent out parties to reconnoiter our front orders from Major-General Warren, and found the enemy strongly intrenched on the hill opposite the White Oak road. I received orders at 11 p. m. to move with the division, but these orders were countermanded.

I received orders on the morning of the 1st of April to move at 6 a. m. We did so, preceded by the First Brigade, First Division, First Army Corps, and took the road leading toward Dinwiddie Court-House. Our picket guard was ordered to remain in position before our works at Gravelly Run, near the White Oak road, and were to follow in the rear of the division. We marched to a point three miles and a half from Dinwiddie Court-House, where, meeting with the cavalry under command of Major-General Sheridan, we bivouacked by the roadside. At 2 p. m. we were ordered, in conjunction with the other brigades of the division, to move on the road leading to the right, and at a distance of about four miles from the starting point. I formed the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Doolittle commanding, in line of battle to the right of the First Brigade. The One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Townsend commanding, were sent forward as skirmishers, joining the Third Brigade skirmishers on the left, and extending to the One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Myers commanding, who were posted as flankers to protect our right. Our troops becoming engaged on the left of our lines we were ordered to advance. The ground was uneven and unfavorable, but they advanced in perfect order, receiving an oblique fire from the enemy posted in the skirt of a piece of woods. The One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, in connection with the First Brigade, were ordered to charge across the open field and drive the enemy from their position. Changing direction to the left, the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, with First Brigade, charged across the field and drove the enemy from their position, capturing about 400 prisoners. Still driving the enemy before them they met with a stubborn resistance from the enemy posted behind an earth-work on the right side. Clearing a portion of this work to the left I ordered the left flank of the One hundred and eighty-eighth over the works, and when the right cleared the line. The One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers at this point captured a four-gun battery posted on a road which intersected the road on which the works were built nearly at a right angle. Here the color-sergeant of the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers was wounded, and one of the picket guard, while holding the flag to its place, was also wounded. One of the battery horses was taken from the harness by Lieutenant Williams, is now in possession of the One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Volunteers. The fighting here was desperate, but the courage and bravery of the troops carried the day and decided its fortunes. The firing having ceased, and the enemy having dispersed, we occupied the captured works for the night.

We received orders to move at daylight, but did not leave Ford's Forks until 12 m. With the First Division we moved up the road leading to the South Side Railroad near Ford's Station, which we reached at 2.30 p. m. April 2. Crossing the railroad, the One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Volunteers was sent forward to General Chamberlain, commanding First Brigade, and posted to the right of the rear line of battle. The One hundred and eighty-seventh and One dred and eighty-eighth were formed in line of battle in rear of the First Brigade. At 3.30 o'clock we received orders to resume our line of march and proceeded up the Cox road and railroad some distance, when turning to the left and taking Namozine road we bivonacked in line of battle near Sutherland's Station at 8 p. m. On the morning of the 3d we marched at 10.30 a. m., continuing the Namozine road, and bivonacked at 9 p. m. four miles from the Namozine Church, having marched fifteen miles. April 4, moved at 6.30 a. m., passing through Dennisville, on the Namozine road, and reached the Danville railroad at 5 p. m. Here we met with Sheridan's command, and intrenchments were thrown up during the night, the Second Brigade occupying the line bordering the roadside. April 5, we remained in position until 1.30 p. m., when orders were received to quit our works and move to the succor of a portion of the cavalry, said to have been cut off by the enemy. We moved but a short distance up the railroad, when we were ordered back to our works, where we remained during the night, with orders to move at 6 a. m. on the morrow, taking the road to Amelia Court House. 6th, marched in pursuance to orders, taking the line of the Danville railroad. We left the railroad, turning to the left, and passed over the scene of Sheridan's exploit the day previous; rested at Paineville at 2 o'clock p. m., and finally bivonacked four miles from the Appomattox River (High Bridge) at 9 p. m. April 7, marched this morning at 7 o'clock, crossing the Danville railroad, and bivonacked at 8.30 p. m. at Prince Edward Court House. April 8, preceded by the Twenty-fourth Corps, in accordance with orders, we took the Lynchburg road, passing Hampden-Sidney College. We halted at 12.30 o'clock, coming up with the cavalry. Again moving, we struck the Petersburg railroad near Prospect Station, taking the road toward Appomattox Station. We bivonacked on the roadside at 11.30 p. m. April 9, moved at 5.30 a. m., following Third Brigade, the First Brigade leading, and marched some three miles. Found the cavalry engaged with the enemy near Appomattox Court House. I formed my brigade in two lines of battle, joining the Third Brigade on the right, and sent forward a line of skirmishers. Advancing toward the crest of the hill (Clover) in perfect order and precision, we halted at 9.30 a. m., when the word came of the surrender of General Lee, commanding Confederate forces. This was given us by an officer of General Sheridan's staff. This was afterward verified. We were moved from this position to a field in the vicinity of the Court House by one of General Bartlett's aides, where we bivonacked for the night.

The officers and men of my command, with very few exceptions, faithfully discharged every duty devolving upon them during the entire campaign. They were prompt and energetic in every duty assigned them, and proved themselves equal to any emergency. To individualize, I will not, for all deserve the highest praise for bravery and soldierly conduct.*

I am, captain, very respectfully,

E. M. GREGORY,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Second Brigade.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division, Fifth Corps.

---

* Copy of so much of this report as relates to operations April 1-5 was furnished General Sheridan April 14.

No. 80.

Reports of Lieut. Col. Daniel Myers, One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Infantry.

HDQRS. 187TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 19, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with Special Orders, No. 74, headquarters Army of the Potomac, dated April 14, 1865, I have the honor to transmit the following report:

On the 29th of March left camp near Humphreys' Station with brigade, and in the evening formed line in the rear of One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, supporting the First Brigade, which was engaged; lay under a brisk fire of musketry and artillery, but had no casualties. March 30, moved out to support of Third Brigade; formed line in their rear; lay all day under a fire of artillery; no casualties. March 31, formed line in rear of Second and Third Divisions, fighting at Gravelly Run; advanced with brigade, and took part in retaking ground lost by Second and Third Divisions; threw up a line of breast-works, and remained in them until morning, when we received orders to march; in this day's operations we lost six men wounded. April 1, moved with brigade, and about 2 p. m. was ordered to form my regiment as flankers on the right of the division, to cover the right and connect with skirmish line in front; advanced with them, my movement being guided by that of the skirmish line. The skirmish line halted, and I soon ascertained that the skirmish line had been broken by cavalry, and hearing that the division was engaged, and there being already troops on our right and front, so that it would not leave the right exposed, we reformed, and, together with the One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, moved forward, hoping that we might arrive in time to get into action, but when we arrived we found the firing had ceased and the day was won. We reported to General Gregory at once, went into works that night, and laid there until noon Sunday, April 2. On that day we marched until dark, nothing of importance occurring. Moved out with brigade Monday morning, and after marching until noon was ordered by General Gregory to report to Lieutenant-Colonel Fitzhugh, commanding a part of Artillery Brigade, Fifth Corps, for escort to return and go by another road. Marched until 12 p. m., and having caught up with the rear of the corps, the artillery going to move at 4 a. m., and my men being very tired, I asked to be and was relieved from duty with the artillery. Marched at 5 a. m., caught up with the corps, and marched in rear of Second Division, and caught up and reported with my regiment to General Gregory about 4 p. m.; marched with them until dark, threw up a line of breast-works that night, and remained in them until the morning of the 6th. On the 5th were ordered out of works to assist cavalry, but did not go far before we were ordered to return. On the 7th marched all day till 8 p. m.; men kept up well, nothing of importance occurring. Marched on the 8th all day until 12 p. m.; went into bivouac, with orders to march at 4 a. m. Marched at 5.30 a. m., formed a line of battle about 8, and advanced, holding the left of the first line, when the news of the proposed surrender of Lee's army was received. Went into bivouac about 4 p. m.

The enlisted men of the command are entitled to credit for the alacrity and willingness with which they obeyed all commands, and only falling out on the march when completely worn out.

To Adjt. Carl Zentz I owe much for the valuable assistance rendered me. Had it not been for this officer my duties would have been much more laborious. The officers, with a few exceptions, were constantly with and urging on their men to their duty, and I must here specially mention Captains Loeb and Wagner, to whom I am indebted in a great measure for the good behavior of the regiment on the march and while under fire.

I am, captain, very respectfully,

DANIEL MYERS,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. 187th New York Volunteers.

Capt. H. G. DENNISTON,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Brig., First Div., Fifth Corps.

---

HDQRS. 187TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 14, 1865.

In compliance with orders from headquarters First Division, Fifth Army Corps, dated April 13, 1865, calling for reports of the operations of this command from the morning of the 1st to the 5th of April, I have the honor to transmit the following:

On the morning of April 1 received marching orders, and started about 6 a. m., and about 2 o'clock came upon Second Division, Fifth Corps. This regiment was ordered to form on the right of the division as flankers, to connect with skirmish line and advance with them. Advanced, and when the engagement became general we laid on the flank; in a short time I ascertained the division was engaged, and formed my regiment, together with the One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Townsend commanding, and pushed forward to the front. This was, however, not done until we were certain of there being troops on our right. We did not arrive in front in time to become engaged. Were ordered to hold line of works that night, and remained in them until noon Sunday. Marched Sunday until night, nothing of importance occurring. Monday morning resumed the march; after marching some six miles I received an order to report to Lieutenant-Colonel Fitzhugh, commanding Artillery Brigade, Fifth Corps, to escort him by some other road. Started back, escorted the artillery, marched until 12 p. m. that night, having taken the artillery to the corps. I put my men in camp at 12 p. m., and at 6 a. m. on the morning of the 4th I took up the line of march to rejoin the brigade. Marched in rear of the Second Division until 4 p. m., when I rejoined the brigade. Went into the woods near Jetersville Station and threw up a line of breast-works that night, working details of men all night. Remained in the works until the morning of the 7th.

I am, captain, very respectfully,

DANIEL MYERS,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. H. G. DENNISTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 81.

Report of Lieut. Col. Isaac Doolittle, One hundred and eighty-eighth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 188TH NEW YORK STATE VOLUNTEERS,
Camp near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 14, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to circular dated headquarters First Division, Fifth Army Corps, April 13, 1865, calling for a report of the part taken by the several commands in the recent engagements, I beg leave to submit the following:

March 29, broke camp near Hatcher's Run at 5 a. m.; marched on the Halifax road about eight miles; crossed a small creek, and formed line of battle on the Lewis farm at about 2 p. m.; advanced nearly a mile through woods and underbrush; halted with our right resting near the open field where the batteries were planted. Received an order from General Gregory to report to General Chamberlain with my command. Moved by the right flank until the two right companies had gained the open field, when, seeing a line of battle advancing on my right, without waiting for orders I formed connection with them and advanced on the double-quick; charged the enemy, who were using certain piles of saw-dust as breast-works. The enemy made but feeble resistance and retreated, leaving their killed, wounded, and a few prisoners in our hands. As the remainder of the line advanced no farther we halted here. Here I received an order from a division staff officer to form on the extreme right of the corps. Having taken up the position and thrown forward two companies as skirmishers I reported to General Chamberlain and was ordered to remain where I was until further orders. Just before dark we advanced through the woods nearly half a mile and halted for the night. March 30, was ordered to return to the Second Brigade at 8 a. m. In the afternoon we moved to the support of the Third Brigade, and were under artillery fire some two hours, but were not engaged; moved back about half a mile; went into camp for the night. March 31, about 8 a. m. we moved down the Boydton plank road; took a position near a winter camp vacated by the enemy. Shortly afterward we moved to the support of Mink's battery; formed on his right; threw forward two companies as skirmishers; were withdrawn from this position about 3 p. m.; marched to a field near Gravelly Run, where we charged and captured the enemy's skirmish line while under heavy artillery fire. During the night we threw up strong works and made heavy skashings in front.

April 1, moved out of the works about 7 a. m.; moved about four miles to the left; formed a junction with General Sheridan, advancing through the woods and swamps about one mile and a half, receiving an oblique fire from the left. I was ordered to charge across the open field and drive the enemy from his position in the edge of the woods, nearly three-quarters of a mile in our advance. Changing direction by the left we advanced on the double-quick across the field; discovered a line of works, which we charged and carried, capturing nearly 400 prisoners; resting here a moment, receiving a heavy cross-fire from our right, we changed direction by the right and advanced up the road, capturing prisoners at every step. The firing in front ceasing and receiving a fire from the right oblique, we changed direction to the right, charged, and captured a four-gun battery posted on the road which intersected the road on which the works were built at nearly a right angle. After advancing beyond this battery a short distance we were joined by fragments of several regiments, and advanced nearly three-quarters of a mile on a line with the Third Division. Remaining in this position till dark we were withdrawn to the works near the captured battery and bivouacked for the night. April 2, moved from the works about 2 p. m.; crossed the South Side Railroad near Ford's Station; marched up the road and camped near Sutherland's Station. April 3, marched about fifteen miles in a westerly direction. April 4, marched at 6 a. m. in a westerly direction, through Mamborough and Old Court-House; struck the Danville railroad about 7 p. m. near Jetersville Station; worked all night throwing up intrenchments. April 5, remained in the works all day. April 6, marched about 8 a. m., crossed Flat Creek, and passed through Paineville. April 7, moved at 7 a. m.; passed in sight of High Bridge and Farmville; camped about 9 p. m. at Prince Edward Court-House. April 8, started at 6.30; passed Hampden-Sidney College, through Charlotte, Prospect Station, and camped near Evergreen about midnight. April 9, marched to Appomattox Station, formed line of battle, and were advancing on the enemy when a flag of truce was received from the enemy, when all operations ceased. Bivouacked for the night near Appomattox Station.

While with scarcely any exception both officers and men performed their duties faithfully, I cannot forbear to especially mention the following officers and enlisted men for exceeding coolness and gallantry under heavy fire: Capt. James T. Reilly, First Lieut. John Marks, Second Lieut. Edward Martin, Second Lieut. Patrick Sweeney, Color-Sergt. Willis Sager, Sergt. A. J. Radle, and Sergt. Daniel Sliker.

I am, captain, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

ISAAC DOOLITTLE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. H. G. DENNISTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 82.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph G. Townsend, One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 189TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 13, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders from headquarters Second Brigade, First Division, Fifth Army Corps, relative to the operations of my command from the morning of the 1st of April to the night of the 5th of the same month, I have the honor to submit the following report, viz:

On the morning of April 1, 1865, my command occupied the breast-works which we had constructed the preceding night, and at 6 a. m. received orders to march, my command having the right of the brigade. We marched about three miles in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House, where we halted and stacked arms; here we remained in line until 3 p. m., when we advanced about one mile and again formed in line of battle. I received orders to deploy my regiment as skirmishers, connecting with the Third Brigade on my left and the One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Volunteers on my right. I deployed three companies on the front skirmish line, under command of Major Withey, and two companies on the right of the One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Volunteers, that regiment covering our right flank; the remaining five companies I held in reserve. At the order to advance the skirmish line advanced rapidly, keeping up a connection with the left until broken by a large force of General Sheridan's cavalry. It being impossible to reconnect the line I reported to Lieut. Col. Daniel Myers, commanding One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Volunteers, who reassembled the line, and under his command I rejoined the brigade on the White Oak road about 6.30 p. m.

On Sunday, April 2, 1865, I received orders to march and fell in on the left of the brigade. After marching a short distance we struck the South Side Railroad, and I received orders to report to General Chamberlain with my command, and by him was assigned to the right of his rear line of battle, of which I was placed in command. I advanced in line of battle about half a mile, when the brigade was relieved by cavalry and we resumed our line of march, which we continued until night, and bivouacked for the night. Monday, April 3, 1865, about 9 a. m. we resumed our line of march, my command in the center of brigade; we marched about twelve miles and camped for the night about 7 p. m. April 4, resumed our line of march about 7 a. m., my command on the right of brigade; passed through Dennisville and crossed the Danville railroad about 7 p. m. Here I received orders from General Bartlett to throw up breast-works as soon as possible in front of my regiment. We were busily engaged on the same until 12 o'clock that night, when I gave my men permission to lie upon their arms near the works until called. April 5, strengthened our works and remained behind them during the day and until the next morning.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. G. TOWNSEND,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. H. G. DENNISTON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 83.

Report of Brig. Maj. Gen. Joseph J. Bartlett, U. S. Army, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the battle of Five Forks, April 1, 1865:

At daylight the command was marched from the extreme left of the Army of the Potomac through by-roads to a point near Dinwiddie Court-House, coming upon the skirmish line of the Second Division, Fifth Corps, between 8 and 9 a. m. The troops were permitted to rest in this position until nearly 2 p. m., while the cavalry were developing the enemy's line of battle. At this hour I was moved to a position on the right of the Third Division, Fifth Corps, and connecting with it. The formation of the brigade was in three lines of two battalions each, with one small regiment deployed as skirmishers in front, and one regiment held in reserve. The plan of the battle, as given to me by my commanding officer, was that the whole infantry line, after marching a prescribed distance which it was thought would bring us in rear of the enemy's works, were to wheel to the left and fall upon and rout him. Between 2 and 3 p. m. the advance was made through thick woods in our front; the left of the corps soon became engaged with the enemy's skirmish line, and very soon after with his line of battle, while we were borne off to the right so far that it became apparent to all that if the direction was continued the greater portion of the corps would not become engaged. The firing becoming more severe on my left and there being none at all on my front I rode to the left and struck an open field, across which could be distinctly seen the left flank of the enemy. Brevet Major General Griffin, commanding at that time the division, made the discovery almost at the same instant; and our united efforts recovered three regiments, First Michigan, Twentieth Maine, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania, from the rear lines of the column of attack, which were still crowding to the right, and wheeled them sharp to the left, and charged the exposed flank. The charge routed the enemy and gave us thousands of prisoners, many battle flags, and six pieces of cannon. As rapidly as my other regiments could be rescued from their bloodless march to the right they were thrown into the hottest of the fight and continued the pursuit until long after dark. The entire command was drawn to the rear and left of the Third Division of the corps, contrary to the order of attack, or no one of my regiments would have been engaged in the battle.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of the officers and men of my brigade; they were all that could be asked of old and true soldiers, and the crushing defeat of the enemy in this battle was in a great measure owing to the personal efforts of officers, both staff, field, and line. My thanks are especially due to Brevet Colonel Cunningham, Thirty-second Massachusetts Volunteers, for the skill and judgment he brought to my assistance during the battle while acting on my staff. Great credit is also due the other members of my staff, Brevet Major Belcher, Major Spear, Captain Farnsworth, and Captain Morgan, for their efficiency and bravery in directing my lines when direction was necessary, and in urging others to greater efforts when they had become fainthearted or timid.

I shall avail myself at an early day of my right to mention for promotion those of my command who, on this occasion as upon many others, have distinguished themselves, and deserve that promotion which is the dearest reward in the gift of the Government to a true soldier who wins it under the eyes of his superiors in battle.

[JOS. J. BARTLETT,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.]

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 84.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Alfred L. Pearson, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

In compliance with instructions from First Division headquarters, I have the honor to submit the following report of movements and operations of my brigade from the 2d to the 5th day of April, inclusive:

At 1 o'clock on the afternoon of the 2d instant the brigade left the ground where it had bivouacked, near Five Forks, and moved in the direction of South Side Railroad, following General Chamberlain's brigade (First), and reached the railroad at 3 p. m. of that day. After a short rest moved down the line of the road several miles, and bivouacked near Sutherland's Station. At 10 o'clock on the morning of the 3d resumed our march, and moved a distance of twenty miles, and bivouacked on Namozine road. On the 4th, at 7 a. m., resumed the march, proceeding in the direction of Richmond and Danville Railroad, which road we reached at 6 p. m., the First and Second Brigades having been placed in line of battle running at right angles with railroad. By orders received from Major-General Bartlett, I placed two regiments—Thirty-second Massachusetts Volunteers and Twentieth Maine Volunteers—in line on right of General Chamberlain's brigade (First), and placed the First Michigan Infantry on extreme left of division, connecting with General Gregory's (Second Brigade) left. Massed the Ninety-first, One hundred and eighteenth, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania, Sixteenth Michigan, and First Maine in rear of First and Second Brigades. Built a line of breast-works and bivouacked for the night. On the morning of the 5th placed the One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers in line of battle on the left of First Michigan; remained in that position during the day and night.

Seven hundred men, consisting of the Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers and detachments from the rest of the regiments, under command of Colonel Rogers, Eighty-third Pennsylvania, accompanied the corps trains during the movements.

Respectfully submitted.

A. L. PEARSON,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 85.

Report of Capt. George R. Abbott, First Maine Sharpshooters.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MAINE SHARPSHOOTERS,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 24, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the late campaign from the 29th of March to the 1st of April:

At 6 a. m. 29th ultimo broke camp and took up the line of march, following the Thirty-second Massachusetts Regiment. At about 11 a. m. I was detached with my command from the brigade to hold possession of a cross-road, with orders to remain until relieved by General Crawford. The brigade returning I again took my position in the column and proceeded on. At 5 p. m. the enemy were found in our front by the First Brigade, and we moved up rapidly to their support. The enemy being repulsed and driven back we were not called into action. In the evening advanced about a mile to the Boynton plank road, and during the night threw up a line of breast-works about 800 yards from the enemy. The morning of the 30th, it being very stormy, no advance was made. At 1 p. m., the enemy's line of skirmishers being driven back on our right, our line was immediately advanced, and occupied the rebel skirmish line, my command holding the right of the brigade and connecting with the Second Corps. At 4 p. m. the enemy drove in our skirmish line on my left and attacked the main line, but were easily repulsed and driven back. During the skirmish had one man slightly wounded in neck. On the morning of the 31st moved to the left down the Boydton plank road, and took position in the rear as support to Second and Third Divisions. They having been apparently routed, and coming back in confusion, we immediately advanced and formed line of battle in the edge of the woods. During the advance and after forming line of battle stragglers from the Second and Third Divisions continued to pass through my line, part of whom were stopped by my officers and men and formed into line in my rear. In a few minutes the enemy attacked us, but were repulsed. I immediately threw out three of my largest companies, with a detail from the remaining companies as skirmishers; they immediately attacked the enemy and soon succeeded in forcing them back. At 4 p. m. advanced to the front about a mile and a half, from whence we proceeded to the left about two miles in direction of Dinwiddie Court-House, for the purpose of opening communication with General Sheridan. Finding the enemy in our front, and it being dark, we halted and threw up a breast-work. We remained here until about midnight, when we marched back to near our former position, where we arrived at 3 a. m. the morning of the 1st. At 6 a. m. we again marched to the left and opened communication with General Sheridan at about 10 a. m.; we then halted and rested until 2 p. m., when we again took up the line of march to the front. At 3 p. m. the troops were massed for the purpose of flanking the enemy, my command being the second regiment on the right of the second line; we immediately advanced and without difficulty drove the enemy before us. After we had advanced about half a mile I found that I was on the extreme right of the first line (the line having obliqued to the right). When near the Five Forks, in crossing a swamp in a dense thicket, my three right companies got separated from the command, and, obliquing to the right, encountered a portion of Rosser's cavalry, whom they charged and routed; finding that they were separated from the rest of the command they moved to the left and joined me. I immediately afforward moved to the left to a road, where, after counter-marching, threw up a breast-work. At dark sent out two companies, under command of Capt. C. F. Sawyer (whose report I inclosed, marked A), to take possession of a bridge over the creek. At 1 p. m. the 2d we joined the brigade and took up the line of march. At 3 p. m. crossed the South Side Railroad and marched about seven miles beyond, and bivouacked for the night at 7 p. m. Morning of the 3d marched at 7 a. m., and bivouacked at 7 p. m. Morning of the 4th marched at 6.30 a. m., taking the Amelia Court-House road; formed line of battle at Jetersville at 7 p. m., on the Richmond and Danville Railroad. During the night threw up a line of works. Remained there until 6 a. m. the 6th instant, when we advanced about one mile and a half in line of battle. Finding that the enemy had moved we took the road and marched until 8.30 p. m., when we bivouacked for the night. Morning of the 7th marched at 7 a. m.; crossed the Lynchburg and ——— Railroad at about noon; bivouacked at Prince Edward Court-House at 9 p. m. Morning of the 8th marched at 7 a. m., taking the Lynchburg road; marched until midnight, when we bivouacked.

At 5 a. m. the 9th instant marched and proceeded to the front, passing on the road cavalry bringing to the rear captured flags and guns; formed line of battle and advanced, the enemy shelling us. When we had driven them back to within a mile of their trains a flag of truce appeared from their lines. We were halted and it was reported that the enemy had surrendered. We advanced immediately to Appomattox Court-House and stacked arms and rested. At 5 p. m., the enemy having surrendered, we went into camp.

I would here mention the gallant conduct of First Lieut. John Butler, Company C, who was placed in temporary command of Company A in the action of March 31, in leading the line of skirmishers in their attack on the enemy. I would also mention the following named enlisted men: Corpl. Charles A. Hadley, Company C, volunteered to go on the skirmish line March 31, and, getting within a few rods of the enemy, succeeded in killing three of the enemy before he was wounded himself. Private Leavitt Larkin, Company C, also volunteered to go on the skirmish line March 31, and, getting in rear of the enemy's line of skirmishers, succeeded in killing one man, wounding another, and took the third man prisoner. The prisoner was armed with a Sharps rifle, which is now carried by Private Larkin. I would respectfully ask that he may be allowed to retain it. Private Henry Giles, Company A, during the advance on April 1, in crossing a swamp, lost his company, and was taken prisoner by a rebel cavalryman, who disarmed him; watching his chance he sprung under the horse's neck and seized the cavalryman, dragging him from his horse, at the same time receiving a severe blow on the head and arm. He then disarmed him, sprung out the horse, the rebel cavalry after him, and came in toward our lines, where he was again taken prisoner by our troops as a rebel. As they were taking him along the lines I saw him and released him.

Casualties: Killed, 4; wounded, 29; missing, 5; total, 38. Of the 5 missing, 4 have been recaptured and are now with regiment.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. R. ABBOTT,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Captain FARNSWORTH,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 86.

Report of Capt. Charles F. Sawyer, First Maine Sharpshooters.

CAMP FIRST MAINE SHARPSHOOTERS,
April 24, 1865.

SIR: I respectfully submit the following report of the two companies under my command on the 1st instant:

At 7 p. m. April 1 was detailed to take Companies E (Capt. William O. Howes) and C (Lieut. John Butler commanding) to report to Maj. Ellis Spear, aide-de-camp, who accompanied me to a creek nearly two miles in rear of the line of regiment, with instructions to take possession of and hold a bridge, if possible. I sent Captain Howes, with his company deployed as skirmishers and flankers, who advanced to the bank of the creek, when they received a volley from the enemy who were in earth-works on opposite bank, about twenty-five yards distant. Skirmishing was kept up for nearly an hour, about which time General Mackenzie rode to my command and said we were shooting our own men, and advised me to send one company across, which I refused to do, having seen the enemy, and knew them to be such. General M. then advised Captain Howes to send some men across; the enemy having acknowledged our halloo, saying they were the "Ninth New York Cavalry." I again refused to send men across, feeling sure the force were rebels. In the meantime two sergeants (unknown to me at the time) volunteered to go across, which they accordingly did, and were retained as prisoners (since released, and state we were confronted by Rosser's cavalry in strong force). About 8 o'clock the enemy again opened fire on front and flankwise of the line, and I was compelled to retire to rear about 400 yards, it being useless to remain engaged, there being no bridge at that point. I was relieved about 10 o'clock by cavalry from General Mackenzie's command and proceeded to position occupied by regiment.

The casualties were four wounded.

I am, &c., your obedient servant,

CHAS. F. SAWYER,

Captain, First Maine Sharpshooters.

Lieut. S. W. SCOFIELD,

Acting Adjutant, First Maine Sharpshooters.

---

No. 87.

Report of Lieut. Col. Walter G. Morrill, Twentieth Maine Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,

April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the operations of the Twentieth Maine Volunteers and First Michigan Volunteers, which were under my immediate command during the engagement at the Five Forks on April 1, 1865.

At 3 p. m. we were formed for a charge, my command being in the third line; in this order we advanced three-quarters of a mile and halted. General Bartlett ordered me to move my command by the left flank some half a mile; halted and fronted. Were ordered by him to charge the enemy on his flank, which I immediately did; carried the enemy's works, capturing a large number of prisoners and the battle-flag of the Ninth Virginia Regiment. After doing this the enemy began to press us very hard on the right flank, and I sent Brevet Major Clark to report to General Bartlett the state of affairs. The enemy still continued to press us very hard, and we were losing men very fast. I also sent Captain Sidelinger to General Bartlett, and he immediately ordered a regiment in on our right, which relieved us at once, and, more troops coming up, the enemy began to fall back, and we continued to press him for the next three miles, when we gave up the pursuit and came back to the breast-works and bivouacked for the night.

In justice to all under my command, I have only to say that every officer and man did his duty well and faithfully; there was no skulking, and every one was in his place.

The loss of the First Michigan I am not able to report. The loss in the Twentieth Maine was 7 killed and 23 wounded.

Respectfully, yours,

WALTER G. MORRILL,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Twentieth Maine Volunteers.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Division, Fifth Army Corps.

55 R R—VOL XLVI, PT I

No. 88.

Report of Lieut. Col. Eli G. Sellers, Ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS NINETY-FIRST REGT. PENNSYLVANIA VET. VOLS.,

April 14, 1865.

In obedience to instructions received from your headquarters, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the two regiments under my command during the action of the 1st of April:

The Sixteenth Michigan, with the Ninety-first Pennsylvania on their right, were formed in line on edge of woods on right of road leading to Five Points, on the right of and about thirty paces in rear of second line of Third Division, Fifth Corps, with orders to move when Third Division moved, and conform with their movements, which was done. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon moved forward in good order about 300 yards, when we were joined by the cavalry in an open field on our right. The men then took up double-quick step, drove the enemy before them for about one mile, when they came to a small stream which could not be crossed at that point. Moved to the left and crossed the stream and ascended a hill, when a few shots were fired by the enemy, wounding four men of the Ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers. The enemy was soon driven off, when the two regiments recrossed the stream and took up a position on right of Third Division, who by this time had moved to the left. The line again moved forward, the firing from the enemy coming more rapid; the men moved forward in good order, capturing many of the enemy who were straggling through the woods. I think it safe to say that these two regiments moved over nearly five miles of ground, and greater part of this at a double-quick step, moving nearly in a half circle, and halted about dark on the right of General Baxter's brigade, Third Division, Fifth Corps, on the White Oak road, about two miles from Five Points. Moved down road after Third Division, and went into camp near brigade headquarters, about 200 yards from cross-roads, about 9 o'clock at night.

Before closing this report I would most respectfully make mention of the able manner in which Major Colt, of the Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, then in command of the Sixteenth Michigan, handled the regiment, keeping the men well closed up, connecting well with the Third Division.

I also sent a detail from the Ninety-first Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers to secure some wagons and mules which were captured, which a staff officer of the Third Division said were in danger of being recaptured.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELI G. SELLERS,

Lieut. Col., Comdg. Ninety-first Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 89.

Report of Bvt. Lieut. Col. Henry O'Neill, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 118TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 14, 1865.

GENERAL: In compliance with instructions received from headquarters First Division, Fifth Army Corps, April 14, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report in regard to the operations of the One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers and First Maine Sharpshooters, under my command on 1st instant:

In obedience to instructions from the general commanding, I advanced out with the two regiments in the second line of battle, preserving a perfect line, the men behaving well and satisfactorily. I advanced out until I reached the creek where the ambulances and wagons were abandoned by the enemy, where, meeting General Warren, commanding Fifth Army Corps, he ordered me to form my men on the left across the White Oak road, within about 500 yards of the enemy's works. I did so as soon as possible. Afterward he (General Warren) ordered me to change front to the rear, throw up breast-works across the road, and be ready to repel an attack from the enemy's cavalry. I did so, throwing out a picket-line in front, relieving the cavalry pickets who were then posted there. Remained there, the men well prepared to repel any attack which would have been made, until the 2d of April, when received orders to fall in with the rest of the Third Brigade as they came along, which orders I obeyed, and followed in the advance out to the South Side Railroad.

I take great pleasure in testifying to and applauding the good conduct and excellent behavior of both officers and men of the two regiments under my command.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. O'NEILL,

Bvt. Lieut. Col., Commanding 118th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. T. BARTLETT,

Commanding First Division, Fifth Army Corps.

---

No. 90.

Report of Maj. John A. Oline, One hundred and fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQRS. 155TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
Near Appomattox Court-House, April 11, 1865.

I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of the One hundred and fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers during the action of April 1, 1865:

About 3 p. m. the regiment was formed in line eighty paces in rear, covering the left of the Third Brigade, First Division, Fifth Corps, as reserve to fill any vacancy which might occur near that point of the general lines. After an advance of about one mile from a halt the regiment moved a short distance by the left flank and formed a line facing to the left of the general lines. From this position the regiment was moved at a double-quick by the right flank by file left to connect on the right of the troops formed on the crest of a ridge about 300 paces distant to the left. When within seventy-five paces of the line to which we were to connect it moved forward on a charge, and the regiment was ordered to follow, and moved forward on their right with all possible haste. After crossing a fence into the woods the regiment was brought into line facing by the rear rank, and advanced with a view to connect on the right of the troops now out of sight in the advance on the left. The regiment moved forward independently and without connection on the right or left, and when passing through a thick growth of small pines came upon the enemy, striking their works on the left flank and rear at the time they were receiving re-enforcements from their right. The left striking their works some of the men pushed into their works, and about 140 of the enemy passed through to our rear, prisoners; others had thrown down their arms, but were rallied and the butts of muskets were used by both parties, and on account of their superior numbers the men fell back in comparative good order, with the loss of 5 killed and 21 wounded, about 100 paces, when they were formed and advanced farther to the right, the enemy leaving without much resistance. We then connected on the left by troops supposed to be of the First Brigade, First Division, and a general advance was made, the regiment capturing three pieces of artillery, several wagons and ambulances, and a number of prisoners. At this point portions of the Third and Second Divisions, with the First Division massed, while moving forward, separated the men of the regiment into squads, who continued to follow the routed enemy until after dark, when halted and called together by the officers and call of the brigade bugle, when they bivouacked for the night.

Very respectfully,

J. A. CLINE,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. WILLIAM FOWLER,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division, Fifth Corps.

No. 91.

Reports of Col. Maj. Gen. Romeyn B. Ayres, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 13, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that I was ordered to make a reconnaissance on the 30th ultimo of the country lying between the Boydton plank road on the east, the White Oak road on the north, and a road running from Dinwiddie northward to the White Oak on the west. In doing this I established a chain of pickets connecting with the main line on the right and extending westward to the vicinity of S. Dabney's house. The morning of the 31st I was ordered to move my division in that direction. I took up a position in a field lying east of Dabney's and extending to the White Oak road, posting the Second Brigade on the left and facing the Dabney place. Soon after I received from the corps commander an order, through Maj. G. B. Cope, aide de camp, to take the White Oak road and intrench a brigade upon it. I was furnished one brigade of the Third Division as support, which I posted across the field in the position occupied by the First Brigade before it moved forward. I ordered forward the First Brigade, supported on the right by the Third. As the troops arrived within about fifty yards of the White Oak road the enemy's lines of battle rose up in the woods and moved forward across the field into the open. I saw at once that they First Brigade was at once fired about (order) and marched back across the field from my lines along the southern flank the supports could not be held.

This was partly due to the fact that the enemy sent a division past Dabney's and attacked my left at the same time that the front attack was made. I then endeavored to form the troops along a ravine which ran north and south along the eastern edge of the field, but in this I also failed. The result was that the troops fell back to the position occupied the day before, behind the swamp, and where the First Division, with artillery, was in line of battle. My three brigade commanders deserve credit for extricating their little brigades from their difficult positions, threatened by overwhelming numbers. Bvt. Brig. Gen. A. W. Denison, commanding the Second Brigade, was wounded, but did not leave the field till he had formed his brigade on the left of the First Division, where it engaged the enemy. The Third Brigade was formed on the right and left and joined in the engagement. Later in the day the entire corps moved forward over the field on the White Oak road finding no obstacle but some of the enemy's skirmishers, his main body having moved off.

For additional details I refer to the accompanying reports of brigade commanders. List of casualties accompany this.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. AYRES,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

Col. FRED. T. LOCKE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters Fifth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS.

April 12, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division on April 1, 1865:

The division was ordered to move down the Boydton pike during the night of March 31, and report to General Sheridan at Dinwiddie Court-House. Before arriving there it was met by a staff officer of General Sheridan with instructions to turn off on a road leading west into a road leading from Dinwiddie Court-House to the White Oak road, and thus come upon the left and rear of the enemy, who was facing General Sheridan's command, near Dinwiddie. As we approached, just after daylight, the enemy hastily decamped. The cavalry pursued, and this corps, having united, followed northward about 2 p. m. Arriving near the White Oak road the enemy were found in line of battle, with breast-works along that road facing south. Our troops were formed in line of battle for the attack—two cavalry divisions on the left, my division on the left of the corps line, the Second and Third Brigades in two lines (the Second on the left), the First Brigade in support. Advancing through the woods into an open the skirmishers engaged those of the enemy, pushing them back. Soon after crossing the White Oak road, finding the enemy's fire to come from the left, I changed front to the left by facing the Second Brigade to the left and fling it to the left. Not to lose time, I also threw the First Brigade into the front line, on the left of the Second. The Third Brigade, soon after engaging the enemy, finding its right flank in the air (I must confess that I experienced anxiety also on this account), portions of it were very unsteady, but subsequently moved up and bore their part in the action in a handsome manner. After this change of front the troops were pushed forward, and soon came upon the left flank of the enemy, which was thrown back at right angles with his main line and covered by a strong breast-work, screened behind a dense undergrowth of pines and about 100 yards in length. This breast-work my troops charged and carried at the bayonet's point, capturing in carrying it over 1,000 prisoners and several battle-flags. Halting there a short time by General Sheridan's order, till it was apparent the enemy were giving way generally, I pushed forward rapidly, holding my men in hand and marching steadily in line of battle, the First Brigade leading. The pursuit was continued till dark, over some three miles, and till orders were received to halt. The division was then retired to camp near the Five Forks. It took in this battle some 2,000 prisoners and 8 battle-flags.

That distinguished soldier, Bvt. Brig. Gen. Fred. Winthrop, U. S. Volunteers, fell mortally wounded just as his brigade was gallantly charging the enemy's breast-works, and in the moment of triumph freely laid down his life for his country. His dying thoughts were for his comrades, and his last anxious inquiries were concerning the fate of the day. Col. R. N. Bowerman, Fourth Maryland Volunteers, was wounded while gallantly commanding the Second Brigade.

For further details, flags and prisoners captured, &c., I respectfully refer to the accompanying reports of brigade commanders.

At some opportune moment I will take pleasure in forwarding the names of those officers who, by their gallantry and soldierly conduct, have merited reward. I must again express my thanks to my staff for their gallantry and zeal on this as on all other occasions. Those with me were: Bvt. Col. C. E. La Motte, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, division inspector; Bvt. Maj. W. W. Swan, U. S. Army, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. W. J. Purnell, Eighth Maryland Volunteers, assistant commissary of musters; Capt. Jesse D. Childs, First Maryland Volunteers, assistant provost-marshal; Bvt. Capt. Robert P. Warren, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, aide-de-camp; Bvt. Capt. John J. Diehl, Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, aide-de-camp; Bvt. Capt. E. T. Yardley, Fourth Delaware Volunteers, aide-de-camp.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. AYRES,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

Col. FRED. T. LOCKE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters Fifth Army Corps.

No. 92.

Reports of Brig. Gen. Joseph Hayes, U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS, FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Nottoway Court-House, Va., April 24, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command from March 29 to April 9, inclusive:

The brigade, under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Fred. Winthrop, moved from camp near Hatcher's Run at 3 o'clock the morning of the 29th ultimo, and, marching in a southerly direction, reached the Quaker road at 8.30 a. m. After resting until 2 p. m. it again advanced and marched three miles on the same road, when it halted and bivouacked for the night. The distance marched this day was fifteen miles. On the 30th a reconnaissance was made by this command in front of the position occupied by the Third Division, the skirmishers advancing two miles and a half toward the Dabney house, on the White Oak road. Here the brigade bivouacked for the night after marching a distance of five miles. At 11 a. m. the 31st ultimo, the brigade being formed in line of battle, advanced and attacked the enemy in his intrenched position upon the White Oak road. After a gallant and most determined effort to carry the enemy's lines it was repulsed, with heavy loss, and compelled to fall back. The line, however, being reformed, subsequently advanced with the rest of the corps and occupied the enemy's position.

For the details of this day's operations I have the honor to refer you to my report of the 13th [12th] instant,* from which it will appear that the regiments of the brigade on this occasion distinguished themselves by their valor and discipline under circumstances peculiarly trying.

April 1, the command having moved from camp at midnight, marched by the Roydton plank road toward Dinwiddie Court-House until 6 a. m., when, forming in line of battle, it rested until 2 p. m., at a point two miles north of the Court-House. The division was then ordered to support the cavalry, who were at this time engaged about two miles in advance. On reaching the field the division engaged the enemy, this brigade forming the left of the line of battle. The enemy's works were carried. One thousand prisoners and four stand of colors formed the share of the fruits of this victory rightfully claimed by this command alone. Bvt. Brig. Gen. Fred. Winthrop fell mortally wounded while gallantly leading the brigade on this occasion, and was succeeded by Col. James Grindlay, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers.

My special report of this battle, dated on the 10th instant, contains a more detailed account of the part performed by this brigade, and to which report I have the honor to refer you.†

April 2, marched from Five Forks to South Side road. Distance marched, twelve miles. 3d, marched sixteen miles and encamped. The present commander reassumed command of the brigade. 4th, marched to Jetersville, fifteen miles, and encamped. 5th, formed line of battle and intrenched. 6th, marched twelve miles and encamped. 7th, marched sixteen miles and encamped at Prince Edward Court-House. 8th, marched eighteen miles toward Appomattox Station and encamped. 9th, marched six miles toward Appomattox and formed in line of battle about 9 a. m. The cavalry, which had been engaging the enemy, were being repulsed and driven back when this brigade, which formed the head of the column of the corps, reached the field. The division forming and immediately pressing forward the enemy gradually withdrew. Soon a white flag coming from the enemy, a halt was made in our advancing lines and hostilities ceased. Subsequently during the day official announcement was made of the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia.

Nominal and tabular lists of casualties have already been forwarded to headquarters.

I desire here to mention the gentlemen of the staff who have served with the brigade through the campaign under its different commanders, each and all of whom I take pleasure in stating have ably and efficiently performed their duties; they are: James B. Campbell, acting assistant adjutant-general; Captain Leatz, brigade inspector; Capt. E. W. Warren, commissary of subsistence; First Lieut. R. Clark, aide-de-camp, and Second Lieut. William Raymond, pioneer officer.

* See p. 873.

† See next, post.

I have the honor to remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH HAYES,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
Camp near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following summary of the reports of the regimental commanders of this brigade of the operations of their commands on the 1st instant:

The Fifth New York Veteran Volunteers, Capt. Henry Schickhardt; One hundred and fortieth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. W. S. Grantsyn; One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, Col. James Grindlay; Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, Lieut. Col. M. Wiedrich, the regiments composing this brigade, under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Fred. Winthrop, broke camp at 12 m. the 1st instant, and marched with the rest of the division by the Boydton plank road toward Dinwiddie Court-House. Having arrived at a point about two miles north of the Court-House, the brigade was formed in line of battle and advanced toward the enemy. The enemy retreating, the brigade rested until 12 m., when the division was again ordered forward, and moved in support of the cavalry, then engaged about two miles in the advance. On reaching the field where the latter were engaged, the division was placed in column of attack, the two rear lines of which were formed of this brigade. The column advanced through the woods across an open field until the front line being engaged, the troops were deployed, and this brigade formed the left of the line of battle. Pressing forward down a hill to the edge of a swamp the enemy's intrenchments were discovered through a dense underbrush. Undismayed by the enemy's hot fire, and unchecked by the obstacles in the way, the brigade rushed upon the works and carried them. Quickly wheeling to the left upon the enemy's exposed flank their utter and complete rout was effected. More than 1,000 prisoners and four stand of colors were captured.

Corporal Kanss, Company H, Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, Sergt. R. F. Shipley, Company A, One hundred and fortieth New York Volunteers, Sergt. Thomas J. Murphy, Company G, and Private David Edwards, Company H, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, are entitled to the honor of capturing these flags. I would recommend that they receive medals and furloughs.*

Col. Fred. Winthrop, Fifth New York Veteran Volunteers, and brevet brigadier-general, fell mortally wounded while gallantly leading the brigade on this occasion. The brigade feels deeply the loss of this officer, whom all had learned to love and respect as an able and faithful commander. Col. James Grindlay, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, succeeded General Winthrop in command upon the field. The pursuit of the enemy was continued for two miles, when the brigade bivouacked near the Five Forks. Lieut. Col. W. F. Drumm, lately appointed to the Fifth New York Veteran Volunteers, arrived on the field in time to share the honors of the day. First Lieut. Henry Loomis, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, commanded his regiment upon Colonel Grindlay taking command of the brigade. Colonel Grindlay specially mentions his gallantry, and recommends he be appointed brevet major.

* Medal of Honor awarded to each of the men named.

A tabular and nominal list of the casualties in this engagement has already been forwarded to headquarters.

I have the honor to remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH HAYES,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Mnj. W. W. SWAN,
Adj. Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Division, Fifth Army Corps.

HEADQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
Near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that this brigade, having been encamped the night of the 30th ultimo near the Quaker road, moved out at daylight the morning of the 31st, under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Fred. Winthrop, and formed into line of battle near the Dabney house, on the White Oak road, in the following order: One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, Col. James Grindlay, on the right; Fifth New York Veteran Volunteers, Capt. Henry Schieckhardt, the center; and Fifteenth New York Heavy Artillery, Lieut. Col. M. Wiedrich, on the left; the One hundred and fortieth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. W. S. Grantsym being deployed as skirmishers. At 11 a. m., the order to advance being received, the brigade promptly moved to the attack. The enemy were at this time concealed along the White Oak road, and there was nothing to indicate either their number or position excepting the heavy fire with which they greeted our line as it advanced. Through this fire, over an open field for one-quarter of a mile, the brigade charged with unwavering and unbroken front. On reaching within ten or fifteen yards of the enemy's position two lines of battle, rising from their ambush, were hurled upon the thin and already weakened single line of this brigade. To have attempted to hold the ground would have exposed the command to capture by vastly superior numbers; the order was accordingly given to face about, and the brigade retired to its former position. Subsequently the line was established along Gravelly Run, and having repulsed the enemy's attack the brigade again moved forward with the rest of the division, recovered the lost ground, gained possession of the enemy's works, and established itself along the White Oak road.

A tabular and nominal list of casualties has already been forwarded to headquarters, by reference to which it will be perceived the command lost heavily in officers and men.

The result of this day's fight was most satisfactory, and shows the discipline and courage of the troops, who, though at first beaten back by overwhelming numbers, were again ready to advance and to make for themselves, instead of defeat and disaster, a record of complete success and victory.

I have the honor to remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH HAYES,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Brevet Major SWAN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 93.

Reports of Col. David L. Stanton, First Maryland Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
April 12, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Second Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Army Corps, in the action and movements of March 31, 1865:

The brigade, 968 muskets strong, under command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. A. W. Denison, marched at 6 a. m. from bivouac near Gravelly Run, in the center of the division, to a position near Dabney's house, where at first it was held in reserve at the left flank of part of the Second and Third Divisions. After about half an hour the Fourth and Seventh Regiments Maryland Volunteers were deployed as skirmishers for protection of left flank. About noon an engagement ensued, exposing the brigade to a heavy enfilading fire from the front and left flank, and was compelled to fall back until rallied about three-quarters of a mile to the rear, where it was ordered to support a battery. After about one hour the brigade readvanced with the other troops and regained its original position. During part of the following night the First Maryland Volunteers was on picket duty, and sometime before daylight were ordered to march with the division to the regiment.

Casualties of this day: Officers—wounded, 3. Unlisted men—killed, 8; wounded, 35; missing, 58.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

D. L. STANTON,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit to you the following report of the part taken in the action and movements of Second Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Army Corps, at or near Five Forks, April 1, 1865:

The brigade, under command of Col. R. N. Bowerman, 875 muskets strong, moved before daybreak April 1, 1865, on the right of division and continued to move on the Boydton plank road, and about 8 a. m. deployed the Eighth Regiment Maryland Volunteers as skirmishers, who, after about one mile's advance, met a portion of Major-General Sheridan's cavalry, when the skirmishers were drawn in, and the brigade, with division, rested on their arms until about 2 p. m. At this time the brigade moved in center of division to the right, and after about one hour's march formed line of battle in the position. About 3 p. m. the line advanced and carried the enemy's works, the brigade acting well their share, capturing two battle-flags and a number of prisoners as their trophy; Lieut. Jacob Koogle,* Seventh Maryland Volunteers, and Private Joseph Stewart,* Company G, First Maryland Veteran Volunteers, having the honor of capturing the flags. After the engagement the brigade halted about one hour. By orders received from division commander we moved down the White Oak road, where it was halted by orders from General Sheridan until the division returned, when it took up the line of march and encamped about 9 o'clock near the battlefield; ordered to send out sixty men on picket in front of brigade. The command of the brigade passed into the hands of Col. D. L. Stanton, First Maryland Volunteers, Col. R. N. Bowerman, Fourth Maryland Volunteers, having been wounded early in the advance.

*Awarded a Medal of Honor.

The casualties of the day are: Officers—killed, 1; wounded, 11. Enlisted men—killed, 9; wounded, 46; missing, 11.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. L. STANTON,

Colonel First Maryland Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 94.

Reports of Bvt. Brig. Gen. James Gwyn, One hundred and eighteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,

April 11, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report in reference to the engagement of the 31st instant [ultimo]:

My command moved about 4 a. m., left in front, in obedience to orders from headquarters Second Division, Fifth Corps, from bivouac near the Boydton plank road to a point near the White Oak road—the Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Col. William Sergeant, leading, followed by the Fourth Delaware Volunteers, under Capt. William J. Mackay, and the Eighth Delaware Volunteers, under Lieutenant Curry, both under command of Capt. John N. Richards; the One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Capt. R. M. Birkenman, the One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Capt. Perez L. Norton, the One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Maj. B. T. Tiers, all under command of Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Pattee; and the Third Delaware Volunteers, under Capt. J. H. Cade, having been sent the evening before to establish a picket-line about 500 yards in front of the brigade. Upon arriving near the White Oak road I halted and formed each regiment into column by division—the Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right, the Delaware battalion on the left, the First Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Corps, being on the left, and a dense woods on the right. We remained in this position until about 9 a. m., when an advance was ordered, the First Brigade leading. I immediately deployed the brigade and moved forward. The line had proceeded but a short distance when the enemy appeared in the front and left flank. After fighting for some time under very great odds we were forced to retire, but not until the support on the left had given away. A rebel headquarters flag, reported to have been General Pickett's, [sic] on a line with and about fifty yards from my headquarters flag, the enemy thereby completely flanking our position. We continued to retire until I found a line formed by General Baxter's brigade, of the Third Division, Fifth Corps, when a stand was made. The enemy continued to press forward on our front and left flank, forcing us back. We continued to retire, forming line of battle whenever the ground would permit, until arriving near the point from which we started in the morning, when a line was formed on the crest of a hill, which was held until about 3 p. m., when the line again advanced, my brigade being formed in two lines in echelon on left of General Chamberlain's brigade, of the First Division, Fifth Corps, driving the enemy's skirmish line beyond the White Oak road.

Great credit is due to Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Pattee for the able manner in which he fought his command on the skirmish line, without any support or connection with the right or left. The designs of the enemy to turn back our flanks and prevent us from reaching the Boydton plank road were effectually frustrated by the determined manner in which his men disputed their advance, thereby giving the command time to form line on the hill above mentioned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GWYN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report in reference to the engagement of the 1st instant:

After bivouacking until 1 p. m. this command moved up the Boydton plank road, in obedience to orders from headquarters Second Division, Fifth Corps, from a point about twelve miles from Dinwiddie Court-House, in the following order: Company A, Third Delaware Volunteers, under command of Capt. D. D. Joseph, was ordered to the front as an advance guard, the Delaware battalion, under command of Captain Richards, acting as support; the head of the main column, composed of the One hundred and ninetieth, One hundred and ninety-first, and One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Pattee, and Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Lieut. Col. E. L. Witman, following at distance of 100 yards in rear of the Delaware battalion. When arriving near the Court-House we diverged to the right, following a road leading to the White Oak road. At about 8 a. m. a halt was ordered and the men allowed to rest until about 2 p. m., when the command again moved forward until reaching a point near the left of the enemy's intrenched line on the White Oak road, when it was formed in two lines of battle—the front line composed of the Fourth Delaware Volunteers, under Capt. W. H. Maclary, Third Delaware Volunteers, under Capt. J. H. Cade, One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Capt. Perez L. Norton, and the One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Maj. E. T. Tiers, all under command of Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Pattee, of the One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers; the Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers forming the second line, under command of Lieut. Col. E. L. Witman, the right resting on a road leading at right angles with the White Oak road. The One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under command of Capt. R. M. Birkman, was deployed as skirmishers, covering the brigade front. The Second Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Corps, was on the left in echelon; the Third Division, Fifth Corps, on the right. At about 3 o'clock the line advanced against the enemy, forcing their skirmish line back to their main line, which was also driven back in confusion. After following them up for some distance I halted, reformed the line, and changed direction to the left, so as to be able to attack their works on the flank and rear. We again charged their line, driving it in great confusion, capturing two battle-flags and many prisoners; the color-sergeant of the One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers planting the first stand of colors on the captured works.

I am unable to state the number of prisoners captured, on account of the command having pressed forward so rapidly, sending them to the rear as we advanced; I, however, sent back one squad of 300 men, under charge of Capt. J. W. Scott, One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. At this point the skirmish line of the One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers extended intervals to the right, in order to keep up the ammunition, on account of the Third Division line having fallen back some distance. The pursuit was continued until darkness put an end to further operations.

Subjoined is a list of casualties in the command during the engagement.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GWYN,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 95.

Report of Bvt. Col. Joseph B. Patten, One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding One hundred and fifty-seventh, One hundred and ninetieth, and One hundred and ninety-first Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQRS. 190TH AND 191ST REGTS. PENNSYLVANIA VOLS.,
April 14, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the proceedings of my command on the 9th instant:

After having crossed the Petersburg and Lynchburg Railroad a short distance, proceeding toward the scene of action indicated by the firing in advance, I received orders to detach my command—consisting of the One hundred and ninetieth, One hundred and ninety-first, and One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiments—from the marching column and hasten with it to the front. On arriving there I was directed by Brevet Major-General Ayres, commanding the division, to deploy my command as skirmishers in front of the division and push forward at once, connecting my right with the skirmish line of the First Division (General Bartlett) and my left with the troops of Major-General Ord. My line was at once formed and pushed forward through the timber into the open field beyond. I now extended the intervals of my line to the right while advancing, in order to connect with the First Division; but after extending across the entire front of that division I found no line had yet been thrown out with which I might form a junction. Leaving this portion of my line with orders to push forward, I proceeded to the left and found my line connecting with a few colored troops who were being withdrawn. From this time I pushed forward without any connection on my right or left and without any assistance except from a few gallant cavalymen interspersed among my skirmishers, driving the enemy from the next belt of timber. On emerging into the open field again the enemy's artillery was seen in position, firing rapidly from the Lynchburg road, occupying the crest of a bold ridge flanked by timber and crowded with masses of his infantry apparently in confusion. After driving the enemy from and passing beyond the Trent and ——— houses and over the creek and ravine beyond, a distance of about one mile from the point of starting, a line of skirmishers from the First Division came forward in my rear, overtaking and mingling with my right a few moments before the firing ceased. Pending this movement the left wing of my line had swung forward through the wood on my left, running up to the Lynchburg road, flanking the enemy's artillery on their right, causing it to be withdrawn in great haste. My men got within fifty yards of the section near the wood alluded to and succeeded in capturing one caisson. At 10 a. m. my line swept over the ridge in front of the village, driving the enemy before them, and when about entering the town a flag of truce came forward and passed through my line. The enemy still maintained a fire, however, from the cover of the houses, killing a cavalryman; whereupon some twenty of my men, among whom were four or five from the First Division, entered the town and drove the enemy beyond it and sending some twenty prisoners to the rear, who, passing through the line of the First Division, were, I understand, claimed by them. All firing ceased a few minutes past 10 o'clock and the advance skirmishers were withdrawn.

I beg leave here to commend what few officers I have with my command for their gallantry, and especially Capt. R. M. Birkman, One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who was the first officer to enter the village, which he did to stop the firing of the enemy from the cover of the houses and restrain and withdraw the advance skirmishers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. PATTER,

Bvt. Col., Comdg. 190th, 191st, and 157th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Bvt. Maj. W. W. SWAN,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Second Division, Fifth Army Corps.

---

No. 96.

Reports of Lieut. Col. Edward L. Witman, Two hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 210TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to circular from brigade headquarters of this date, I have the honor to forward a statement of operations in which this regiment was engaged on March 31, 1865.

We broke camp on the morning of the 31st of March about daylight, and marched about two miles to the right of the enemy's lines, and massed in an open field on the right of the brigade, during a heavy rain. The skirmish line was attacked, and we were ordered forward.

We deployed, moved forward about 200 yards, and entered the rifle-pits to the skirmish line. We were attacked by a superior force of the enemy on the left flank and in front when we fell back. Colonel Sergeant, Lieutenant Shlesinger, adjutant, and two other officers were wounded just as the regiment broke. Two other officers, missing, are supposed to be wounded and in the hands of the enemy. We retreated about a mile, when we rallied and advanced, driving the enemy over the ground we had lost, and camped that night about 6 o'clock, where we laid until 1.30 a. m. April 1.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. L. WITMAN,

Lieut. Col., Commanding 210th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Maj. H. GAUSE,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS 210TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 12, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to circular from brigade headquarters of this date, I have the honor to forward a statement of operations in which this regiment was engaged on the 1st of April, 1865.

About 1.30 a. m. we broke camp and marched about eight miles in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House and halted about two hours, when we proceeded about two miles toward the enemy's works and formed in line of battle. By order of General Gwyn the One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers was attached to this command and posted on our left. We then marched in line of battle about one-quarter of a mile before opening fire, which brought us to the edge of the woods in which the enemy was posted, when sharp musketry firing commenced. We were ordered forward, and drove the enemy from his works, whom we followed for about two miles, until the regiment became scattered. About 5 o'clock the Fifth Corps assembled in a field near the works captured from the enemy, marched to the rear, near where the battle commenced, and went into camp for the night.

On making out our field return we discovered that we had sustained a loss of 1 enlisted man killed, 28 wounded, and 8 missing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. L. WITMAN,

Lieut. Col., Commanding 210th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Maj. H. GAUSE,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 97.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel W. Crawford, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

April 20, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command on the 1st of April:

Early in the morning, while still in camp near the White Oak road, it was announced to me by the major-general commanding the corps that he was about to move with his entire command toward Dinwiddie

Court-House, to operate in connection with the cavalry, then in the neighborhood of a place called Five Forks. My division was the last to retire. General Baxter's (Second) brigade was formed in line of battle in the center, General Coulter's (Third) brigade on the left, and Colonel Kellogg's (First) brigade on the right in column by regiments. We marched in retreat in a southwest direction until we approached a road leading south to Boisseau's Cross-Roads. General Coulter had been ordered to go toward the White Oak road and then to strike the road leading to Boisseau's Cross-Roads, and to follow the other two brigades. The enemy did not follow us from his intrenchments upon the withdrawal of the skirmish lines, as was anticipated. Upon arriving at Boisseau's Cross-Roads the command was massed for a short time, when by an order received from Major-General Warren the division took the lead on a road leading directly to Five Forks. Near E. L. Boisseau's we were turned to the north on a road leading to the White Oak road past Gravelly Run Church. Upon arriving at Gravelly Run Church the division was formed with two brigades, namely: Second Brigade (General Baxter's) on the right, the First Brigade (Colonel Kellogg's) on the left, each in two lines, supported by General Coulter's (Third) brigade, in the rear of the center. Here we remained until the Second Division had arrived and adopted a similar formation on my left, and until the First Division had passed to my right and to the rear. We were in a short distance, less than half a mile, of the White Oak road. When the troops were in land, the following order was sent to me, accompanied by a diagram, of which the following is a copy:

The following is the movement now about to be executed:

The line will move forward as formed till it reaches the White Oak road, when it will swing round to the left perpendicular to the White Oak road. General Merritt's and General Custer's cavalry will charge the enemy's line as soon as the infantry get engaged, the cavalry on the left of the infantry, except Muekenzie's brigade, which is moving up the White Oak road from the right.

Respectfully,

G. K. WARREN,
Major-General.

In obedience to this order the command moved at once. We crossed Gravelly Run, crossed the White Oak road, and changed direction to the left and advanced directly to the west. We encountered the enemy's skirmishers shortly after moving, driving them steadily back. Our way led through bogs, tangled woods, and thickets of pine, interspersed with open spaces here and there. The connection between the Second Division and my line could not be maintained. I received orders from both General Sheridan and General Warren to press rapidly forward. I urged on the entire command. General Coulter's brigade, from being in support in my rear, was brought to fill up the gap on the left between me and the Second Division. I pressed immediately on and found myself in the enemy's rear on the Ford road, which I crossed. Here I captured seven ambulances and several wagons of Wallace's brigade, which I sent at once to the rear, and many prisoners. No exact number can be reported, as they were sent to the rear as fast as taken. Just at this point the enemy opened upon my center and left flank a very heavy fire. Major-General Warren, arriving on the field at that moment, directed me to advance immediately down the Ford road, and General Coulter's brigade was selected for that purpose. Two regiments, commanded by Major Funk, were placed on what was then the left of the road, and the rest of the brigade were on the right, supported by the other two brigades in echelon. I advanced at once and captured a battery of four guns, the commanding officer of which was killed at that point, and also the battle-flag of the Thirty-second Virginia Infantry, which was captured by Sergt. Hiram A. Delavie,* Company I, Eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. We then changed direction, and advanced again in a southwest direction, the enemy flying before us, though keeping up a desultory firing. The men advanced through the woods with the utmost enthusiasm until we came in rear of the works on the enemy's right flank, where a few shots were received. The command pressed steadily onward until after dark, when it was halted at a point on the White Oak road and subsequently marched back along that road to the neighborhood of the Gravelly Run road, from which we had started, where we passed the night.

I have greatly to regret the loss of many valuable officers, among whom are the following: Lieut. Col. A. B. Furham, division inspector, while carrying an order from me to the left of the line, was, I fear, mortally wounded. Maj. H. H. Fish, commanding Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, had received, the day before, a severe scalp wound which would have entitled him under any circumstances to remain at the rear. He rejoined his regiment, however, and was killed while bravely leading them into action. To Major Funk, commanding One hundred and twenty-first and One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, great credit is due for the manner in which he led on his command and for the capture of the enemy's guns on the Ford road. To Major Laycock, commanding a consolidated regiment of the Fifty-sixth and Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania, great commendation is due for the skill and admirable management of his men. To Colonel Tarbell, commanding Ninety-first New York Volunteers, a comparatively new regiment, also great commendation is due for the admirable manner in which this large command was handled.

The officers of my staff were constantly and actively engaged throughout the action, and their conduct was all I could wish. One of them, Lieutenant Wright, One hundred and fourth New York Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, had his horse killed under him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. CRAWFORD,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

Col. FRED. T. LOCKE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Fifth Army Corps.

---

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

No. 98.

Reports of Col. John A. Kellogg, Sixth Wisconsin Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION,
April 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I have to make the following report of the operations of my command from the 29th of March to April 25, both inclusive:

On the morning of the 29th of March, 1865, the brigade broke camp, situated near the military railroad about two miles from Humphreys' Station, and moved in a northwesterly direction, to a point about half a mile from the Boydton Plank road. At this point the brigade was halted and massed in column of regiments, right in front. Some firing being heard in my front the men were ordered to load, soon after which the command was moved into position in line of battle as follows: The Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers forming the front line, in rear of the Second Brigade (commanded by General Baxter); the Ninety-first New York Volunteers, divided into three battalions, moved on the left flank of the brigade, ready to be deployed either on the left flank of the line of battle or in rear of the first line, as circumstances should require. The enemy being driven from their position on the Boydton plank road by the troops in my front, my command was moved to a position near that road and crossing the same, the Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, being advanced to the road, the balance of the brigade being in line of battle about eighty rods to the rear, connecting on the right with the Second Brigade, under command of General Baxter, where we remained during the night.

On the morning of the 30th of March the brigade was moved to the Boydton plank road and threw up breast-works, remaining there during the night.

On the morning of the 31st of March, &c.*

On the morning of the 2d of April the brigade moved to the South Side Railroad, only to find the position evacuated by the enemy. The command without halting here moved on the railroad track three or four miles, the mile-board marking thirteen miles from Petersburg, when, by command of General Crawford, commanding division, the command moved at a rapid rate in a westerly direction about five miles, when the enemy were found in strong force in an intrenched position on the Burkeville road. By order of General Crawford, commanding division, I deployed in two lines on the right of the road, my right resting on a wood, my left connecting with the Second Brigade, commanded by General Baxter. The Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, were deployed as skirmishers, with orders to cover the extreme front of the line of battle. By this time it was quite dark, and the enemy not being able to distinguish our uniforms, were at a loss to know whether we were Yankees or not, and before they had obtained the desired information the troops were in position to attack or resist the same, as circumstances would require. Upon ascertaining who we were the enemy opened fire upon my portion of the line; my men replied and immediately advanced toward the enemy, and halted within a few rods of their breast-works. The enemy ceasing to fire, I reformed my lines, and the men lay upon their arms until daylight.

* For operations of March 31 and April 1, see pp. 883, 885.

On the morning of the 3d of April we again took up the line of march in pursuit of the flying enemy, who had beat a hasty retreat during the night, but failed to overtake them, and late in the evening bivouacked for the night.

On the morning of the 4th broke camp at an early hour, and took up the line of march in pursuit of the flying foe, reaching the Danville railroad at Jetersville Station in the afternoon of that day, finding it occupied by the cavalry under General Sheridan, and the enemy in strong force just beyond. Here the brigade was formed in line of battle, and the troops, weary and footsore, having traveled all day without food, labored nearly all night, throwing up breast-works, remaining in this position, resting and waiting for an attack, until the morning of the 6th, when we moved out to attack the enemy, who was found to have made another hasty retreat, but without overtaking him.

April 7, still following the enemy, the tired but gallant column pushed on, following the west side of the Appomattox to the high railroad bridge just after the enemy had crossed, the structure itself having been fired and three spans destroyed by the enemy.

On the 8th made a long forced march, the most tiresome I believe ever made by troops, being impeded by the wagon train of the Twenty-fourth Corps, the infantry being obliged either to march through the thicket or mix in promiscuously with the wagon train. Camped that night in line of battle. On the morning of the 9th again started in pursuit of the enemy, who were brought to bay near Appomattox Court-House. But before we were engaged, the enemy, tired, dispirited, harassed, and surrounded, surrendered at discretion.

A tabular and nominal list for each of the engagements, of casualties, I have already had the honor to forward. In conclusion, I beg leave to submit the following list of names of officers and men of my command who have distinguished themselves, and to ask for them a suitable recognition of their services (see regimental lists and previous reports). For further particulars, I beg leave to refer to my reports for the 31st of March and 1st of April, already forwarded.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

J. A. KELLLOGG,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. HARRISON LAMBORN,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division.

---

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION,
April 25, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with field order of April 13, 1865, headquarters Third Division, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the action near the Boydton plank road on the 31st day of March, 1865:

On the morning of that day my command, consisting of the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteer Infantry and the Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers, pursuant to orders from the division commander, moved from their breast-works on the Boydton plank road in a northwesterly direction, across Gravelly Run about a mile, where the brigade was massed in column of regiments, right in front, in a thick wood near an open field, and remained in this position about half an hour. The command was then ordered to deploy in line of battle on the left of the Second Brigade, commanded by Brigadier-

General Baxter. In compliance with said order I directed the brigade to deploy on the first battalion, but before the movement was completed two regiments only, to wit, the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers being in line, the Ninety-first New York being treated as three battalions, not yet having time to deploy, I was ordered to deploy the two Wisconsin regiments and arrest the troops belonging to the front line, consisting of a portion of the Second Division, who were flying in confusion from the field. This order I found myself unable to execute, the men breaking through my line and throwing my own command into confusion. I then ordered the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin to close their intervals, and formed them into line of battle, and directed them to open fire, and sent orders to the Ninety-first to deploy on second battalion (the Sixth Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers). Both of these orders were promptly executed. The brigade remained thus in line of battle, firing rapidly upon the advancing enemy until both flanks were turned and the enemy firing upon both flanks and rear of the command. I then directed Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers, to change front, so as to meet the fire on his flank, which was executed, but the enemy appearing in so large force in my rear, I directed the brigade to retire across Gravelly Run in as good order as possible. In retiring to this position my command was somewhat broken up, owing to the fact that the enemy was in their rear, compelling them to fight their way back. I claim that my command were the last organized troops to leave the field.

The Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers were formed as they arrived on the front line next to the creek, near the bridge crossed by the troops in the morning. The Ninety-first New York Volunteers fell back across the creek farther to the right. One battalion, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Denslow, formed in an interval between the troops of the Second Division, where they remained the balance of the engagement, doing good service. When the firing had ceased I reformed the brigade in the rear of their first position and ordered them to lie down. We remained in this position about one hour, were then again moved to the front across the battle-field of the morning, and went into camp about half a mile in advance of the same.

The following-named officers are entitled to special mention for gallantry, viz: Colonel Tarbell and Lieutenant-Colonel Denslow, Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers; Lieutenant-Colonel Kerr, commanding Sixth Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers, who was badly wounded while cheering on his men; Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, commanding Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers; also First Lieut. J. A. Watrons, acting assistant adjutant general, Second Lieut. G. W. Atherton, acting aide-de-camp, and Capt. H. T. Garfield, brigade inspector, members of my staff. The conduct of these officers came under my immediate notice. Lieutenant Watrons was wounded and taken prisoner while discharging his duty. Lieutenant Atherton and Lieutenant Watrons each lost a horse, shot under them, which, with the horse of the orderly, make three horses lost from my headquarters on that day by the fire of the enemy.

My two orderlies, William Holloway, Company K, and Henry A. Hackett, Company H, both of the Sixth Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers, behaved in the most gallant manner, Holloway having his horse shot under him.

There are others, both officers and men, deserving special mention. The names of such officers will be found submitted in my report of the 23d instant for brevets, as recommended by their regimental commanders.

My loss in killed, wounded, and missing was large for the time engaged, amounting to 8 officers and 290 men.

I transmit herewith a tabular and nominal list of casualties occurring on that day.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. KELLOGG,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. HARRISON LAMB DIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION,
April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command on the 1st instant.

On the evening of the 31st of March the command encamped near the battle-field of that day, about one mile and a half northwest from the Boydton plank road, in column of regiments, right in front, facing the north. About daylight in the morning of the 1st instant, in accordance with orders, I changed the front of the brigade, by change of direction by the right flank, facing the east, and moved in column, faced by the rear rank, in a westerly direction about three quarters of a mile, through an open field, my right connecting with the Second Brigade, commanded by Brigadier-General Baxter. At this point, by direction of the general commanding the division, the command was changed from the order in column and moved left in front, in a southwesterly direction, following the Second Division, Fifth Army Corps, to a position on Gravelly Run, near the Moody house and Gravelly Run Church, where, by order of the general commanding division, the brigade was formed in two lines of battle, the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers holding the front line. The right of my line connected with General Baxter's command, the left with the Second Division, Fifth Army Corps. Receiving orders to that effect, I advanced my command to a road about half a mile in my immediate front, at which point it executed a left wheel. Here we became engaged with the enemy, the command moving forward and firing as it advanced, driving the enemy before us. In moving through a dense thicket and wood, the connection became broken between my left and the Second Division, causing a large interval, which was taken advantage of by the enemy, who threw a force on my left flank and opened fire, evidently with the desire of arresting the forward movement of the line of battle. I ordered my front line to continue the advance, and ordered one battalion of the Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers, forming a portion of my second line, under command of Colonel Tarbell, to deploy on the left flank of the brigade, covering that flank, with orders to move forward and engage the enemy at short range. This order was promptly executed, holding the enemy at bay, until the Third Brigade, commanded by General Coulter, came up and filled the interval. My brigade now occupied the center of the line, between the brigades of Generals Baxter and Coulter, and continued in that position until we found the enemy intrenched. We then drove them from their works across an open field, pursuing them closely about three-quarters of a mile, taking many prisoners and killing and wounding many of the enemy, when, in compliance with orders, the brigade was moved into camp for the night.

I cannot speak too highly of the officers and men of my command; all did their duty. I desire especially to mention Colonel Tarbell and Lieutenant-Colonel Denslow, Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers; Acting Major Whaley; Second Lieut. William H. Church, acting adjutant; First Lieut. Thomas Kelly, commanding Company H, and Lieutenant Davis, commanding Company F, of the Sixth Wisconsin Veteran Volunteers—who were conspicuous for gallantry and daring on that day. Also the members of my staff, who were all that I could desire. Every order was correctly transmitted, and no one faltered in his duty. Lieutenant Sherley, Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers, temporarily serving on my staff, had his horse shot under him while gallantly discharging his duty.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. KELLOOG,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. HARRISON LAMBDIN,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division.

No. 99.

Report of Col. Jonathan Tarbell, Ninety-first New York Infantry.

HDQRS. NINETY-FIRST NEW YORK VETERAN VOLTS.,

In the Field, near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 12, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit my report of the movements of the Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers from the 29th ultimo to the present time, premising that the regiment has not at any time been detached, so that its movements are embraced in the history of the First Brigade, Third [Division], Fifth Army Corps, to which it belongs.

Being in camp about two miles from Humphreys' Station, on the U. S. Military Railroad from City Point, early in the day of the 29th ultimo the regiment, with its brigade and division, entered upon the grand campaign which has just closed so gloriously. Marching in a southwesterly direction, the advance met and drove the enemy near the Boydton plank road late in the afternoon of that day, the Ninety-first, with its brigade, being formed in line of battle, but the retreat of the rebels rendered its engagement unnecessary. The 30th was a very rainy day, and was spent in camp, at night throwing up intrenchments at the crossing of the Boydton plank road over ——— creek to intercept a probable movement of the rebels in that direction.

On the 31st the march was again taken up, leaving the earth-works in our rear. About 9 o'clock in the morning the advance met and engaged the enemy near the Quaker road, the Ninety-first being in column by battalions, with its brigade, in a dense wood a short distance in rear of the troops engaged in action. In the temporary absence of the brigade commander giving the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Regiments new positions, a brigade from the front, denoting a rapid retreat, broke through my battalions to the rear. The movement being imminent I took the responsibility of deploying my regiment into line of battle, which I did to the right of the third battalion, advancing my line about ten yards to the brow of a small declivity having a little ravine at its base, when

I at once opened fire briskly, checking the enemy on this part of the line and turning him off to our left, remaining in this position until all other troops had left the field and the enemy in large numbers had passed my left considerably to our rear, when I directed my regiment to retire. I have since learned that orders had been sent to me to retire some twenty or thirty minutes before I moved to the rear, but the gallant acting assistant adjutant general who started with the message for me fell wounded before reaching me, observed by some of my officers, but at the time unknown to me. At a log house in a clearing in the line of retreat an attempt to check the enemy was made, in which a portion of my regiment participated, my colors, myself, my lieutenant-colonel, Captain Felthousen, and others among the number, in vain. On the brow of a high declivity farther in the rear a successful stand was made, and here a large portion of my regiment took an active part. Lieutenant-Colonel Denslow with a number of men and officers assisted in supporting a battery on its right, while others, under my own direction, officers and men, were in the line on the left of the battery. The enemy was here checked, the troops reformed, and another forward movement at once entered upon, passing over the battle-ground beyond the Quaker road and encamping for the night without further engagement on our part.

April 1, at daylight, the march was resumed, resulting in turning the rebel right, compelling the enemy to evacuate strong and extensive earth-works, and to a hasty and evidently unexpected retreat. On this morning the regiment broke camp at an early hour in obedience to the orders of the proper commander, marching with the brigade and division by a circuitous route several miles to the rebel right and rear, halting near what was said to be called the Gravelly Run Church, where the troops were formed in line of battle about 2 p. m., the Ninety-first New York forming the second line of this brigade, in rear of the Sixth and Seventh Wisconsin Regiments, connecting on the right with General Baxter's (Second) brigade, Third Division, advancing thence directly on the enemy about 3 p. m. After marching thus in line of battle a short distance, the enemy's fire was drawn; and soon after the left wing of the Ninety-first was moved up to the first line of battle, on the left of the front of the brigade to which it belongs; shortly after the right wing was also moved up to the first line, both in obedience to orders of brigade commanders. The firing of the enemy was sharp, close, and continued, but the Ninety-first, with the other troops, advanced steadily, sometimes on the run, driving the enemy, who was not allowed to make a stand. Arriving at right of the enemy's intrenchments, a portion of the Ninety-first took an active part in the capture of four pieces of the enemy's artillery. Under the lead of its officers, headed by its colors, the regiment promptly charged thence across a large, open field, where the fire of the enemy was particularly severe and where the most of the casualties of the day occurred. Following in this charge, over the rebel works and across the field, Major-General Warren close to, and next to him, over the rebel works and across the field. On the further side of the field the rebels disappeared from sight by a hasty flight into the woods, and so far as the Ninety-first was concerned, nothing further was seen of the enemy that day. The advance was continued till within two or three miles of the South Side Railroad, when a halt was ordered, and where the Ninety-first was the first regiment reformed. It was now long after dark, and the troops were halted to be reformed. This done, the Ninety-first went into camp for the night, with its brigade and division, marching back some four or five miles for that purpose.

During the advance and though fighting all the way, the entire line of battle successfully made a left wheel, by refusing the left and advancing the right, the Ninety-first performing its appropriate part in this splendid movement.

I respectfully submit that my officers, without exception, behaved throughout in the most gallant and resolute manner, while the men rushed on with loud cheers at almost every step. My color-bearer, Sergt. Patrick W. Mullen, Company I, is entitled to especial notice for his coolness and steadiness; he went at my side over the enemy's breast-works into the open field spoken of; but, as far as I can ascertain, Corpl. Egbert H. Caswell, Company I, was the first man of the regiment to spring over, calling on his comrades to follow. Sergt. Henry S. Lodewick, Company K, and others took part in the capture of the enemy's artillery beyond the right of the regiment.

April 2, our men marched with the other troops to the east two or three miles, where we halted, receiving the news of the evacuation of Petersburg. During the forenoon we were put on a rapid march to the west, reaching the South Side Railroad only to find it evacuated by the enemy. The troops without halting were started on the track of that road, the mile-boards marking thirteen miles from Petersburg, following this track on a swift walk three or four miles, when information was received of a column of the enemy to the west, after which the already tired, foot-sore, and hungry troops were hastened without a moment's delay and at a pace which even flying fugitives could not outdo, overtaking the rebels late in the evening of that day. The Ninety-first went into camp with the other troops in line of battle, its right on a wood and swamp, and forming the second line of its brigade. Late in the evening the Ninety-first with other regiments of the brigade became engaged with a party of the enemy in the woods on our right, in which my regiment lost 1 killed and 15 wounded. The engagement lasted only a few moments, when the rebels retired.

April 3, we started with the other troops in pursuit of the enemy, who had retreated during the night, following by forced marches, and though the way was strewn with the evidence of a hasty flight, we failed to overtake the enemy that day, and at a late hour after dark bivouacked for the night.

April 4, again pursued the enemy, reaching the Danville railroad at Jetersville Station, finding it in possession of the Union troops, and the enemy in strong force just beyond. Here the First Brigade, including the Ninety-first, threw up strong breast-works, awaiting and wishing an attack.

April 6, at 6 a. m. marched out to attack the enemy, who was found to have made another hasty retreat, but we followed on his track, making a long and forced march of about thirty-two miles.

April 7, still pressing the enemy, following the west side of the Appomattox, approaching the High Bridge, so called, over that stream soon after the passage of the enemy.

April 8, farther pursuit of the enemy and guarding the trains.

April 9, started with the train, but were detached at an early hour and sent to the assistance of our troops engaged with the enemy on the Lynchburg road, but success crowning the efforts of our brothers before we reached the scene of action, we were not engaged. On the afternoon of the 9th the enemy surrendered near Appomattox Court-House, where the Ninety-first is in camp with its brigade and division.

From the best calculation that I am able to make, the distance actually traveled since the 29th ultimo exceeds 150 miles.

My officers and men have generally manifested the most determined perseverance and courage. Captain Hobbs and Lieutenant Danforth were seriously wounded on the 1st instant while gallantly leading their men on the final brilliant charge over the open fields alluded to above. Lieutenant Chapman was dangerously wounded in the neck on the 31st ultimo while cheering his men and using the musket of a fallen soldier. Lieutenant Reese walked the last half of the march in bare feet. The shoes of Sergt. Maj. E. R. Cone gave out early in the march, yet he has not only kept up with the regiment, but has performed all his duties in bare feet. Private James Richardson, Company F, wounded on the 1st instant, without shoes, his feet dressed in cloths, has kept up with the regiment, and is now present for duty. Private Daniel D. Tompkins, Company B, seriously wounded in the thigh, had the ball extracted, refused to stay in hospital, and is with the regiment for duty. Private Dennis Fitzpatrick, Company A, wounded twice, has kept up with the regiment. Private John Grafton, Company G, captured a rebel captain and turned him over to the proper authority. Private Henry Phelps, Company B, captured the adjutant of the Thirty-fourth Alabama, turned him over to the provost-marshal, Fifth Army Corps, and holds receipt. Sergt. Warren C. Padden has been conspicuous for keeping the men in line and column, while two or three of my officers are to the rear on account of sickness; most of them have persevered against hunger, sore feet, exhaustion, and actual sickness, cheered on step by step to renewed exertion by the unequalled generalship that was moving us to such grand results. The same may be said of my entire regiment; though a few fell out, the great body has moved compactly, orderly, and soldierly, entitling it to my thanks and my pride.

The following are the casualties Ninety-first New York Veteran Volunteers March 31 and April 1 and 2: March 31, killed, 25 men; wounded, 106 men, 3 officers; missing, 16 men. April 1, killed, 6 men; wounded, 38 men, 2 officers; missing, 6 men. April 2, killed, 1 man; wounded, 15 men. Total, killed, 32 men; wounded, 159 men, 5 officers; missing, 22 men.

Respectfully submitted.

J. TARBELL,
Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. HENRY NARGLY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 100.

Report of Brig. Gen. Henry Baxter, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, FIFTH CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the following as the part taken by this brigade in the action of the 1st instant in battle of Five Forks:

Formed line of battle in rear of works occupied night previous near White Oak road, marching in retreat toward Gravelly Run Church, the Third Brigade (Brevet Brigadier-General Conter) on our left flank and First Brigade (Colonel Kellogg) on right flank, with Thirty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, deployed as skirmishers, following the movement. March was continued to Gravelly Run Church, where [we] arrived about 3 p. m. Brigade was here formed in two lines, on right of division—First Brigade (Colonel Kellogg) on left and Third Brigade (General Conlter) in rear—One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania (Colonel McCoy), Ninety-seventh New York (Lientenant Colonel Egelston), and Thirty-ninth Massachusetts (Captain Cooper commanding) forming advance line; Sixteenth Maine (Colonel Tilden) and Eleventh Pennsylvania (Major Overmyer commanding) forming rear line. One company Eleventh Pennsylvania was deployed as skirmishers, connecting on right with skirmishers of First Division and on left with those of First Brigade. Advance was ordered at 3.30 p. m. of the entire line, when we moved forward at once, soon encountering the enemy's skirmishers, driving them steadily before us. On arriving at White Oak road changed direction to the left, moving parallel with road. We swept down upon the enemy's works, driving them from them in confusion. One stand of colors was captured by the Eleventh Pennsylvania and many prisoners by the brigade; also several ambulances and wagons. The pursuit was continued until dark, when, all resistance having ceased, a halt was ordered, and the brigade, with the division, moved back on White Oak road and bivouacked.

Officers and men conducted themselves creditably, and I think the comparatively small loss may be, in a great measure, attributed to the celerity with which they pushed forward.

Regimental commanders all exhibited energy and ability in conducting their commands and rendering them effective. Major Overmyer, Eleventh Pennsylvania, although receiving a painful wound in the shoulder while charging the enemy's works, remained with his command, and by his coolness and daring courage fully sustained his heretofore well-earned reputation. Captain Plummer, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, brigade inspector, was energetic in rendering me every assistance, until, while superintending the skirmish line, he was, unfortunately, captured. Captain Sheen, Thirty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, Lientenant Leavitt, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, aide-de-camp, and Lientenant Knaggs, aide-de-camp, also rendered me efficient aid, exhibiting coolness and energy under all circumstances. Capt. B. W. Bucklin, commissary of subsistence, is entitled to especial mention, having volunteered his services and performed his duties with that energy and daring he has so often exhibited on former occasions.

Herewith I send nominal and tabular lists of casualties.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. BAXTER,

Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. HARRISON LAMB DIN,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division.

No. 101.

Report of Lieut. Col. Rouse S. Egelston, Ninety-seventh New York Infantry.

HDQRS. NINETY-SEVENTH REGT. NEW YORK STATE VOLTS.,

April 25, 1865.

Report of the part taken by the Ninety-seventh Regiment New York State Volunteers in the actions during the campaign from March 29 until April 9, 1865:

On the 29th day of March, 1865, the regiment broke camp and took up the line of march with the brigade at daybreak. Marched about six or eight miles toward the Boydton plank road, and formed line of battle, facing north, on the left of the First Division, which was then engaged on our right. We advanced about half a mile in line of battle, when we halted near the Boydton plank road, and remained during the night. Next morning, the 30th, marched to the plank road, forming line parallel with the road, and built breast-works. Remained there during the day.

March 31, marched about one mile and a half, crossed a branch of the Stony Creek—Gravelly Run; formed line of battle under fire of the enemy's skirmish line. The enemy's lines advancing, and the troops on our left giving way, we were compelled to fall back, with some loss. The line was reformed after recrossing the creek, and we again advanced half a mile beyond our former position, recovering the wounded, who were before left on the field. We there remained during the night.

April 1, marched to the left six or seven miles to support General Sheridan; formed line of battle on the right of Gravelly Run Church; advanced in line about three miles, driving the enemy. April 2, marched to the South Side Railroad, Sutherland's Station; marched down the railroad several miles, struck to the left four or five miles, where we halted, forming two lines of battle. The enemy's skirmish line opened suddenly on us, when Lieutenant-Colonel Eggleston was wounded. The firing ceased, and we remained during the night. April 3, crossed the north branch of Appomattox River, marched about ten or twelve miles, and halted for the night about two miles from Mamborough. April 4, marched through Mamborough and Dennisville to the Danville railroad, near Jeter's Station, where we halted for the night. The Ninety-seventh did picket duty all day the 5th. April 6, passed Jetersville, marched a short distance northeast, then west toward Burkeville Junction, passing through Paineville, halting about three miles east of Burke's high bridge for the night. April 7, crossed the Appomattox, about two miles above the railroad bridge, and marched to Prince Edward Court House, leaving Farmville on the right, where we stayed for the night. April 8, left Prince Edward Court House, passed near Hampden-Sidney College, crossed Bitler's Run, passed Prospect, and encamped for the night about five miles east of Appomattox Court House. On the morning of the 9th marched near the Court House, where we were about to form line of battle, when flag of truce was sent in.

Casualties: Killed, 2 enlisted men; wounded, 2 officers and 18 enlisted men; missing, 7 enlisted men.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. S. EGGLESTON,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

---

No. 102.

Report of Col. Thomas F. McCoy, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQRS. 107TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,
Appomattox Court House, Va., April 14, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to your order of to-day, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my regiment in the late great movements, resulting in the surrender of General Lee and the Army of Northern Virginia, under his command:

At 3 o'clock on the morning of March 29 I broke camp, then in the bounds of the Third Brigade, having been attached to that brigade since February 5, and marched about a mile and reported with my command in the field in front of your (General Baxter's) headquarters. At about 6 a. m. the division moved, your brigade leading the column and my regiment in the advance. The First and Second Divisions of the corps (Fifth) preceded ours on the Halifax road southwest, and going over the same route as that of the 5th of February movement. The march was continued in this direction, passing Rowanty Creek and the Vaughan road some distance south of Hatcher's Run, until we struck the Quaker road, up which we turned in the direction of the Boydton plank road, and crossed the Gravelly Run near the Spain House. Here the division was massed. The First Division, advancing up the road, was soon briskly engaged with a large force of the enemy. Our brigade was immediately ordered forward, and formed line of battle, with the right resting on the road and near the left of the First Division. A battery was immediately in our rear. Soon a farther advance in line was made and into the thick wood and underbrush. While this advance was in progress I was ordered to form a connection with Bartlett's brigade on the left of the First Division, which I soon effected and retained during the evening. The enemy were driven back all along the line, the principal fighting being with the First Division. By this movement their attempt to flank us was defeated, and the possession of the Boydton road, an important point, was secured. On the morning of the 30th, in a heavy rain, we moved so as to connect with the left of the First Division, and threw up breast-works and slashed the timber in front. The storm continued during the night and forenoon of the 31st, rendering the roads deep with mud and water and swelling the streams. Early in the morning of this day the division was moved forward and to the left of the Boydton road, and over a deep run, a branch of Gravelly Run, about a mile in advance of the former line, and while getting into position the Second Division, partially in our front, was suddenly attacked by the enemy, and gave way, rushing through our lines, then in course of formation. My regiment was formed on the right of the brigade, and the brigade being on the right of the division, I connected with no other troops until the brigade said to be General Gwyn's, of the Second Division, having been driven from the front line, partially rallied on my right; but when the enemy flanked the division on the left, the brigade or regiment successively giving away, and opened a sharp fire in our front, the part of the brigade of Second Division that had rallied on my right also gave way, leaving my regiment at this time the only one on the line. Seeing that I would soon be surrounded if I remained longer, I immediately ordered my regiment to retire, which was done with little loss. A battery being put in position on the opposite side of the run, supported by part of the First Division, formed the first secure rallying point, and here the rebel advance was successfully resisted. Soon fresh troops of the First Division advanced, supported by the Second and Third, to recover the ground lost, which was handsomely done and a farther advance made nearly to the fortified line of the enemy, securing the possession of the White Oak road, another important point. Here breast-works were put up, and we bivouacked for the night.

Early in the morning of April 1 the whole corps withdrew from this part of the line. The movement was covered by our brigade, under the personal direction of Major-General Warren and Brigadier-General Baxter, commanding the brigade. It was understood that the corps was to march about four miles in the direction of the South Side Railroad, where our cavalry, under Sheridan, were confronted by a large rebel force, and to report to him with a view of co-operating with him in his contemplated movement against the enemy. It was about 2 p. m. when we reached him, in front of the enemy's intrenchments at the Five Forks. Immediate preparations were made for the attack. The cavalry were on the left, and the infantry (being the Fifth Corps) on the right; our brigade (Second, under Brig. Gen. Henry Baxter) on the right, my regiment being on the right of the brigade. At about 3 p. m. the line was in readiness to advance, and very soon thereafter the grand movement commenced. The ground over which we were to pass was composed of woods, fields, thickets of underbrush, swamps, ditches, streams, &c. After arriving at a certain road running parallel with the line of battle, a half-wheel was to be made to the left, intending by this, in which we succeeded, to swing around into the enemy's rear. The enemy was soon met along the whole line. We moved in this battle over a distance of three miles. The movement and the fighting continued, we driving the enemy all the time, until dark ended the battle, being one of the most grand, complete, and important victories of the war. Indeed, it seems to have been the turning point in the great movements against Petersburg and Richmond and the destruction of Lee's army, as all of these important places and that great army that has confronted us for nearly four long, wearisome, bloody years soon after fell into our possession.

I am happy in being able to say that my regiment conducted itself in this long trying engagement in the most gallant manner; and in this I am glad to say it only vied with the other gallant regiments composing the brigade. The thanks of the general commanding the brigade immediately at the close of the engagement, for the good conduct of my regiment, was most gratifying.

In this great work of to-day I must acknowledge, in addition to the personal aid extended by Brigadier-General Baxter, commanding brigade, the important aid given in the various movements by Capt. W. G. Sheen, acting assistant adjutant-general, Capt. B. F. Bucklin, commissary of subsistence, Lieut. R. C. Kuaggs, aide-de-camp, and Lieut. A. Leavitt, of his staff. Laboring under special difficulties in consequence of the very few officers in my regiment, the aid extended by these officers is the more appreciated. The difficulties to be overcome in advancing in line of battle over such ground were great.

April 2, the movement was on the White Oak road for several miles, to co-operate, as was supposed, with a movement of the Second Corps, near the Burgess Mills; but we were soon countermarched, and our column headed toward the South Side Railroad, which the victory of yesterday secured, and which we reached about 3 p. m., and up which we marched toward Petersburg some four miles. As we were about going into camp for the night we were marched in the direction of Burkeville some four miles, to support the cavalry, then engaged with a retreating column of the enemy. At about 10 p. m. we reached the vicinity of the enemy and had some skirmishing, in order, as we supposed, to develop his position. My regiment, by order of the general commanding the division, was deployed to the front and left, where it remained during the night, suffering greatly from the cold, no fires being allowed in consequence of the proximity to the enemy.

April 3, after the balance of the corps reached our camp the march in pursuit of the enemy was continued, his forces having decamped during the night. Our march was on the road leading toward Jetersville, on the Danville railroad, being about four miles south of Amelia Court House and near eight miles north of Burkeville Junction. The road over which we passed to-day exhibited many evidences of the haste with which the retreating enemy were moving. While on the march to-day the pleasing intelligence that Petersburg and Richmond were in our possession was proclaimed along the line, eliciting great cheering and most hearty rejoicing.

April 4, at an early hour were again on the march, the Third Division leading the corps, and late in the evening reached the Richmond and Danville Railroad at the Jetersville Station, being preceded, however, by a part of the cavalry. At this time great care and caution seemed to be taken, as the enemy, with a large train, was reported near. The troops were placed in line of battle, the line crossing the railroad and the turnpike road running parallel with it. The enemy not advancing, intrenchments were thrown up during the night. The next day, April 5, the march was not resumed, but the troops were kept in momentary expectation of the advance of the enemy. Rations, of which the men were in much need, arrived, and were issued. The Second and Sixth Corps arrived during the day. The cavalry made a capture of some prisoners and artillery, and destroyed a train of the enemy. To-night orders were received to prepare for an advance upon the enemy in the morning.

At an early hour April 6 the Fifth Corps moved north toward Amelia Court House, where the enemy was supposed to be, with a view of attacking him. It was soon ascertained, by deserters and stragglers of the enemy coming into our lines, that Lee's army had decamped during the night, on parallel roads farther west, and our order of march was immediately changed with a view of pursuit. Our column turned southwest, and took the Paineville road in the direction of Farmville. The Second and Sixth Corps pursued upon other roads, and came in contact with the enemy, capturing prisoners, artillery, and trains in large numbers. Our march to-day was supposed to be about thirty miles, and the troops were much exhausted. We encamped at a point within about three miles of the high and long bridge, where the South Side Railroad passes the Appomattox toward Lynchburg, and within three miles of Farmville. To-day our corps was on the right of the army.

April 7, moved at an early hour in the direction of the bridge. Heavy cannonading was heard in that direction, and farther to the east at another crossing. The Fifth Corps was transferred from the right to the left of the army, and continued its march until its arrival at Prince Edward Court House, having made during the day a march of over twenty miles.

April 8, again in motion on the road leading to Lynchburg, and continued the march until about one o'clock at night, the troops being much exhausted, having marched about thirty miles.

April 9, soon after daylight the division was again on the march, our brigade leading. Cannonading soon began forward in the direction of our advance. We soon came near the spot where this last skirmishing with the rebel army took place, and found that the cavalry under Sheridan, part of the Twenty-fourth Corps, and our own (Fifth Corps) were occupying the road leading through Appomattox Court House toward Lynchburg, over which General Lee with his army must pass if he ever succeeded in reaching that point. At this time our columns were forming to advance upon the enemy, then a short distance east of the Court-House. He, finding himself surrounded on all sides with nearly the whole Army of the Potomac, and that it would be destruction to attempt a farther advance, sent in a white flag, which resulted in a truce until 4 o'clock, at which hour it was announced, amidst the acclamations of the troops present, that General Lee had, upon conditions proposed by Lieutenant-General Grant, surrendered himself and the Army of Northern Virginia, under his command. This great and happy event closed the operations of the 9th, capping the climax of great achievements for the Army of the Potomac, and rendering it, and the day itself, ever memorable in history.

I would express my sense of the good conduct of Lieut. H. W. Smyser, Company E, part of the time acting adjutant (Lieutenant Venable having been relieved on account of sickness), and Lieut. H. H. Hinton, Company K, and the following non-commissioned officers: Sergt. Maj. L. B. Green; Sergt. J. A. Tompkins, commanding Company F; Sergt. Michael J. Hawley, commanding Company G; Sergt. William C. Beck, commanding Company H; Sergt. George Smith, commanding Company B; Sergt. William Hoover, commanding Company D; Sergt. Isaac S. Dissinger, commanding Company I until wounded April [March] 31, when Sergt. John Delany succeeded to the command, in which he did himself great credit; Sergt. Joseph Fitzpatrick and Sergt. A. Kinney Buoy, Company F; Sergt. G. C. Worley, Company I; Sergt. J. R. Michaels, Company K; Sergts. William Commers and D. Noel, Company B; Corpl. John L. Willey, commanding Company A; Corpl. William Sterner, commanding Company G; Corporals Whalk, Company A, Borry, Company I, S. P. Oborn, J. Bullman, J. Westlake, and John M. Hileman (color-bearer) of Company C; Corporals Harrop and Montgomery, Company H; Corpl. Philip B. Reath, Company E; Corporals Hinkleman and Lehr, Company G.

I would also mention for their faithfulness and good conduct Asst. Surg. R. S. Dana and Hospital Steward James A. Watson; and Commissary Sergt. William Ackermann, the regimental quartermaster, John M. Montgomery, and Chaplain W. T. Campbell, who was with the division field hospital, and rejoined the regiment April 6.

A list of the casualties is appended.*

In closing this, which will doubtless be the last and final report of battles for this regiment, I would express my gratitude to a kind and ever merciful Providence that He has permitted us to pass through the many exposures, hardships, and great perils of this last great and closing campaign of an unprecedented war with comparatively so little sacrifice of life and blood, and that the lives and the health of so many brave officers and men of the regiment have been preserved, under the shield of His almighty power during the past three eventful years, to return to their homes to dwell in peace and rejoice over violated laws vindicated, a righteous Government preserved, the Union restored, and the old flag re-established with more than its original power, beauty, and significance, in some honorable degree through their instrumentality.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. F. MCCOY,

Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. W. G. SHEEN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

* Embodied in table, p. 586.

No. 103.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Richard Coulter, Eleventh Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., THIRD DIV., FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Millsville Station, Va., April 26, 1865.

SIR: I report the following part taken by brigade in movements from March 29 to April 9, both dates inclusive:

Pursuant to previous orders, March 29, broke camp on Halifax road, reaching point near Boydton plank road about 10 a. m., where General Griffin had already engaged the enemy. Went into line on General Ayres' left. One hundred and forty-seventh New York (Brevet Colonel Dailey) and Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania, consolidated (Major Laycock), having entered the line, immediately advanced, engaging enemy's skirmishers, driving them across the plank road, which road was then permanently held at this point by brigade; and, further, being first occupation of that road. After several changes of position division massed for night when plank road was struck, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Dailey, One hundred and forty-seventh New York, picketing front. Butler house, front of picket-line, was burned to prevent enemy from making lodgment there. Rained heavily during evening and night. Loss in brigade slight. Bvt. Capt. Lemuel Shaw, Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania, very severely wounded.

March 30, remained, without important change, in same position, making several lines of works, finally adopting and erecting works on line of plank road. In morning Colonel Dailey's pickets were advanced, left resting at Gravelly Run bridge, on plank road, and right connecting with General Griffin, with reserve at Butler and Burdett houses, and for this purpose Ninety-fifth New York was added to his command. Slight skirmishing on right of picket-line, but no casualties. Rained during entire day.

March 31, marched to Dabney's house, on Gravelly Run, and near White Oak road. General Ayres' division (one brigade) went into line about three-quarters of a mile from White Oak road. By orders from division headquarters reported to General Ayres, and was shown position to be occupied by brigade, short distance in rear of Second Division lines. While going into position right by file preceding line had advanced and engaged enemy, and before this brigade was, or could be, properly in position first line was retiring. Pressed by the enemy about same time, of four battalions in position, three of the commanders—Lieutenant-Colonel Dailey, One hundred and forty-seventh New York, Lieutenant-Colonel Warren, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Major Fish, Ninety-fourth New York—had been wounded. The enemy had also concentrated a fire on left flank. These causes, with the retiring of Second Division, compelled the falling back of this brigade. After several temporary intermediate formations of line, secured position on ridge occupied by First Division (General Griffin). The enemy being now checked, was again advanced, this brigade recrossing Gravelly Run and forming in two lines on left of General Ayres. White Oak road was regained without much loss to advance line (General Griffin) and without any further loss in brigade. Hero bivouacked for night.

April 1, marched from above point, being near junction White Oak road and Dinwiddie Court-House, reaching Gravelly Run Church 3 p. m., where line was formed—division in center, brigade in two lines, in rear and center of First and Second Brigades, order commencing on right: First line—Fifty-sixth and Eighty-eighth Pennsylvania (consolidated), Major Laycock; strength, 14 officers and 309 men; Ninety-fourth New York, Major Fish; strength, 9 officers and 214 men. Second line—One hundred and forty-seventh New York, Captain McKinley; strength, 12 officers and 315 men; Ninety-fifth New York, Captain Knight; strength, 6 officers and 88 men; One hundred and twenty-first and One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania (consolidated), Major Funk; strength, 15 officers and 195 men. Total, 56 officers and 1,011 men. At 3.30 p. m. advanced, crossing White Oak road, when direction was changed to left and parallel to road, left of division resting on road, Second Division being on left and south of road; soon after enemy was engaged. After half-mile advance formed brigade in front and directly engaged with enemy, part of first line having been passed, and others perhaps not maintaining proper directions, having closed distances, to right and left. Fire became severe; force which had engaged First Brigade now turning their attention to our left flank. Left was maintained on White Oak road until reaching woods fronting enemy's works. Here found no connection on left, and no troops whatever in that direction. Also, enemy had battery in position about 400 yards to front, on road. By direction of General Crawford, moved two regiments—One hundred and twenty-first and One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania, under Major Funk—to left of road, and again advanced. Battery was captured, consisting of four guns; also, number of ambulances; commanding officer being killed by one of Major Funk's skirmishers. Continued advance without halting, enemy retreating; their fire had almost ceased. Changed direction somewhat to right of road, and after passing some distance beyond captured guns, connected with portion of First and Second Divisions, who were also advancing on left of division; farther on connected on right with Eleventh Pennsylvania, left of General Baxter's brigade. Enemy's works were soon crossed, and continued to advance with residue of corps and cavalry to point where line halted, all resistance having ceased. Division then retired to near Gravelly Run Church, on White Oak road, and bivouacked for the night. Entire advance covered distance about one mile and a half, much of which was over very broken ground. Fire was very severe at two points when directed on our left flank, and also upon approaching enemy's battery. My own horse being wounded during action, was dismounted for a period until loss could be supplied.

April 2, crossed Hatcher's Run, following Church road to South Side Railroad, followed railroad to crossing of Cox's road, and from that point marched to forks of Namozino and River roads. Division was about to go into camp when it was again moved along Namozino road, crossing Candle's Run, to junction of Church or Ford's and Namozino roads. Here found enemy (said to be under General Fitzhugh Lee) encamped, with works along Namozino road, having checked our cavalry at this point. Slight skirmishing between advance and pickets. Very few casualties. Very late bivouacked for the night.

April 3, during night enemy made good his retreat; marched, rejoining residue of corps in afternoon. From this date to April 9 brigade was not again actively engaged, duties being confined to a series of long and tedious marches, over miserable roads, along which were found abundant evidences of rapid and fatiguing retreat by enemy.

April 9, reached Appomattox Court-House 8.30 a. m., going into position with residue of corps, part of First Division having been slightly engaged with enemy, who had again been brought to stand at this point. Further movements were now arrested by reception of flag of truce, which eventuated in the capitulation same day of Army of Northern Virginia (rebel), General Lee to Lieutenant-General Grant.

The conduct of officers and men was creditable, and to their alacrity in advancing on April 1, especially, I attribute the small list of casualties—small when compared to other fields on which these troops have been engaged.

Maj. H. H. Fish, Ninety-fourth New York, was severely wounded March 31, but his sense of duty and regimental pride impelled him to resume command of his regiment, and he fell while gallantly leading it in action of April 1, as also Capt. George French, of same regiment, another gallant and deserving officer.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. D. B. Dailey, Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, commanding One hundred and forty-seventh New York, Major Laycock, Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania, and Major Funk, One hundred and twenty-first Pennsylvania, all deserve honorable mention. Lieutenant-Colonel Dailey, for promptness and gallantry on March 29 and 31; on 31st he was severely wounded. Major Laycock, for his gallantry on all the dates when brigade was engaged, but particularly for the manner of conducting and maintaining his large and recently consolidated command on March 31 and April 1. Major Funk, for his conduct in capture of enemy's guns on April 1.

Bvt. Maj. H. G. Elder, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania, inspector of brigade, and Lieut. R. Esmond, One hundred and forty-seventh New York, acting assistant adjutant-general, are mentioned for gallantry; the former had two horses shot under him, one on March 31 and other April 1, and although painfully wounded on April 1, remained on field rendering good service. Lieutenant Esmond had his horse shot under him on March 31; he has been heretofore recommended for brevet promotion bestowed on meritorious officers.

Lieut. Joel A. Baker, One hundred and forty-seventh New York Volunteers, aide-de-camp, proved himself a valuable officer, and I desire to acknowledge his services and assistance.

A nominal list of casualties has been heretofore forwarded; a tabular statement is annexed.

B. COUTLER,
Brevet Brigadier-General.

Capt. J. H. LAMBDIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division, Fifth Army Corps.

No. 104.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles S. Wainwright, First New York Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS ARTILLERY BRIGADE,
April 21, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit herewith my report of the part taken by this command in the campaign ending with the surrender of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia.

In accordance with orders four batteries—Fifth Massachusetts, C, E, and L, First New York—were detached from the brigade, with their proportion of the quartermaster and ordnance train, and placed under the immediate command of Bvt. Maj. Charles A. Phillips, with directions to report to General Tidball on the morning of the 29th of March. No report of the part taken by these batteries in the assault on the enemy's lines in front of Petersburg has yet been received at these headquarters. On the morning of the 29th of March the remaining five batteries—viz, B, Fourth United States; D and G, Fifth United States; B, D, and H, First New York Artillery—moved with the corps, at 3 a. m., from the neighborhood of the Armstrong house, taking the old stage road to the crossing of Rowanty Creek, near the Perkins house, and then to the junction of the Vaughan and Quaker roads. In the afternoon the corps moved down the Quaker road toward the Boydton plank road, the First Division leading, with Mitchell's battery (B, Fourth United States) and Rawles' (D and G, Fifth United States) following the Second Brigade. The two leading brigades had just entered the wood beyond the Lewis house, about one mile from the junction of the Quaker and Boydton roads, when the enemy charged and drove our men from the cover after a protracted resistance. The two batteries following were detained by timber felled in the road, but this was removed sufficiently to enable Lieutenant Mitchell to get his four guns through just as our men fell back. Lieutenant Mitchell brought his battery into position at a gallop, placing two pieces on each side of the Lewis house, and contributed materially to the repulse of the enemy, with heavy loss. His two left pieces came into position within close canister range of the enemy's advancing lines.

I regret to report that Lieutenant Mitchell was severely wounded in the right arm during the engagement. The battery also lost 1 man killed and 3 wounded. None of the other batteries were engaged this day.

March 30, before daylight the line held by the corps was pushed forward to the junction of the Boydton and Quaker roads, Rawles' and Vose's (late Mitchell's) batteries being placed in position at the junction. During the day Battery D, First New York, under Lieutenant Johnson, was posted on the left of the Rainey house, so as to cover that part of our line extending along the Boydton plank road. The right of the line being thrown forward on the Boydton road some 600 yards, Rawles' and Vose's were moved with it and posted to command a small wood road which came in from the left. In the afternoon the enemy made an attempt at this point, but were easily repulsed, the two batteries doing efficient service.

March 31. The line held by the Fifth Corps was this morning taken up by a portion of the Second Corps, and the Second and Third Divisions were pushed out across the country to the White Oak road. Mink's battery (H, First New York) and Johnson's (D, First New York) were placed in position on the left of the line, to command the crossing of Gravelly Run by the Boydton road, Rawles and Vose remaining on the Second Corps line. The Second and Third Divisions being driven back in considerable confusion from the White Oak road, Mink and Johnson were advanced as rapidly as possible through the woods to positions commanding the crossing of two small streams. The position taken up by Major Mink was an excellent one, commanding a small open field and the woods beyond, through which the enemy were advancing. His practice was most admirable, and inflicted severe loss on the enemy. That of Johnson's battery was almost completely in the woods, and the enemy did not come within fair view of his pieces.

April 1 to 9. On the 1st the Fifth Corps joined Sheridan's cavalry and fought the battle of Five Forks. Neither in this action nor at any time since have any of the batteries been engaged. On the 9th Rogers and Mink were just going into position to open on the enemy's trains when the white flag was seen coming into our lines.

The marching during these nine days was the most severe I have known in all the campaigns of this army. The roads were for the most part deep with mud; and the Fifth Corps, operating most of the time with the cavalry, constantly traversed the country by by-roads, on marches averaging from twenty to thirty miles a day.

Though the events of the campaign have called for but little use of artillery in action, the rapid marching and bad roads have necessitated incessant labor on the part of the battery officers, and still more on the part of those of my staff, to all of whom I am indebted for valuable services rendered.

Following in support of the cavalry, this corps has done little in the way of picking up abandoned guns and material. At the battle of Five Forks the united corps captured five 3-inch regulation guns of United States manufacture and three caissons. These guns I had hauled to Warren's Station, and turned over to the quartermaster there for transportation to City Point. The caissons were destroyed.

On the 3d of April three light 12-pounder guns were found abandoned in a swamp near Namozine Creek, which I hauled up to General Sheridan's headquarters and turned over to his quartermaster.

I submit herewith report of casualties, losses, and expenditures on the campaign.*

Report of expenditures of ammunition in Artillery Brigade, Fifth Army Corps, from March 28, 1865, to April 10, 1865.

Date.	Battery.	Light 12-pounders.				3-inch.
		Shot.	Shell.	Case.	Canister.	Shrapnel.	Percussion-shell.	Canister.
1865.
Mar. 29	B, 4th United States .....	107	4	5	6
30	do .....	100	14	61	19
30	D and G, 5th United States .....					23	41	9
31	do .....					4	3
31	D, 1st New York .....	30		0
31	H, 1st New York .....	114	31	118
	Total .....	353	49	183	25	27	47	9

Report of material lost from March 28 to April 10, 1865, 1st Artillery Brigade, Fifth Army Corps.

Date.	Battery.	Tar buckets.	Water buckets.	Hand spikes, trail.	Sponges and rammers.	Wormers.	Sponge covers.	Breech sights.	Belts, saber.	Belt plates.	Halters.
1865.
April 7 .....	B, 4th United States a .....
March 31 to April 14 .....	D and G, 5th United States .....
April 1 to 6 .....	B, 1st New York .....	2	4	7	1	2			15	15	49
April 1 to 6 .....	D, 1st New York .....	1	2	2	1	1			10		16
April 8 to 9 .....	H, 1st New York .....
	Total .....	3	6	10	7	1	6	1	25	15	65

a No material lost.

* Nominal list of casualties (here omitted) shows 3 men killed and 1 officer and 9 men wounded. Loss of horses reported as follows: 7 killed, 1 wounded, 2 stolen, 29 abandoned, and 36 died of disease; total, 75.

Report of material lost from March 28 to April 10, 1865, &c.—Continued.

Date.	Battery.	Halter chains.	Halter straps.	Saddle blankets.	Spurs and straps.	Wearing bridles.	Cavalry bridles.	Drivers' whips.	Saddle-bags.	Lead traces.	Wheel traces.
1865.
April 7 .....	B, 4th United States a
March 31 to April 14...	D and G, 5th United States...	4	46	1	23	15	1	8	1	1	1
April 1 to 6 .....	B, 1st New York .....	7	29	3	7			12	1
April 7 to 9 .....	D, 1st New York .....			1	3	4		3
April 10 to 11 .....	H, 1st New York .....
	Total .....	9	69	5	33	19	1	24	1	1	2
Date.	Battery.	Spare poles.	Pole pads.	Spare wheels.	Tarpsaulins.	Wool-bags.	Horse brushes.	Curt-combs.	Ax, felling.	Pickaxes.	Shovels.
1865.
April 7 .....	B, 4th United States a
March 31 to April 14...	D and G, 5th United States...			2	45	40	10				1
April 1 to 6 .....	B, 1st New York .....	3	2	2	9						4
April 7 to 9 .....	D, 1st New York .....			2	10	12	9			1	1
April 10 to 11 .....	H, 1st New York .....
	Total .....	3	2	4	64	52	19	1	1	1	7

a No material lost.

I remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. S. WAINWRIGHT,

Brevet Brigadier-General.

Bvt. Maj. JOHN N. CRAIG,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 105.

Reports of Maj. Gen. Horatio A. Wright, U. S. Army, commanding Sixth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH CORPS,

April 22, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this corps in the operations of Sunday, the 2d instant, which operations resulted in the evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond by the rebel Army of Northern Virginia, and the subsequent surrender on Sunday, the 9th, of what remained of that force:

On the evening of the 30th ultimo the instructions received by me looked to an attack on the following morning at daybreak upon the enemy's lines, somewhere upon the front held by this corps; but certain considerations relating to other portions of our army which could not be got ready in time occasioned a suspension of that order, though this corps, which had hitherto laid quietly in its winter camps, was fully prepared for the movement. On the evening of the 1st orders were received from Major-General Meade to attack at 4 a. m. the next day, and the necessary instructions were promptly issued to the various commanders, designating the point of attack, formation of troops, &c., a copy of which is as follows:

ORDERS.]

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
April 1, 1865.

In accordance with instructions received from Major-General Meade an attack will be made at 4 a. m. to-morrow upon that part of the enemy's line between the house burnt by us on Saturday (the Jones house) and our left. The First Division will take the right, the Second Division the center, and the Third Division the left—the Second Division being in advance, the First and Third, on the right and left, being in echelon, the entire formation being by brigade, with regimental front, small regiments being consolidated so as not too much to extend the column, and the Third Division being well advanced, though still in echelon. The divisions, being moved in as near the picket-line as practicable, will advance promptly at 4 a. m., on the firing of a gun from Fort Fisher. The entire picket-line will be advanced at the same time, and that part of it on the right of the attacking columns will gain any point in the enemy's works that it may be practicable for it to carry—the parts of the line which it may be impossible to advance keeping up a heavy fire upon the enemy. The garrisons of the works from Fort Howard to Fort Preston, reduced to this minimum, will be maintained, as well as those of Forts Gregg, Sampson, and Cummings, and also the one-fourth of the force in the rifle-pits connecting the works named, the line between Forts Preston and Gregg being abandoned. The five batteries already designated to move with the corps will accompany the attack, one being assigned to each division, and the other two being held in reserve, with the remainder of the batteries now present will remain in the works to the right of Fort Fisher, and in the left of Fort Gregg, as may be directed by the chief of artillery, under special instructions. The troops in the forts on the rear line to the left of Fort Cummings will be returned to their commands to-night in time to take part in the attack. Pioneers should be distributed along the front of the assaulting columns, to clear away abatis and other obstructions, and the division sharpshooters will be so disposed as to be rendered most effective. The garrisons left behind will be held ready to repulse any counter attack of the enemy, and the infantry promptly to join their commands, and the artillery to go to the rear upon receiving orders to that effect.

In forming the column for attack it is recommended that the First Division be formed left in front, and the Third Division right in front, so as to form readily in the right and left respectively, if necessary.

The troops should start from their camps to-night and proceed to the vicinity of Forts Fisher and Welch in time to move to the positions assigned them near the picket-line and complete their formation before 4 a. m.

The quartermaster's, commissary, and medical departments will be in readiness to conform to the movements referred to.

The necessity of perfect silence in this movement up to the time of making the assault cannot be too strongly impressed upon the command. Should we succeed in breaking the enemy's line and gaining the Boydton plank road, the subsequent movements of the corps will be in conformity with the orders of Major-General Meade, already promulgated.

By command of Major-General Wright:

C. D. WHITFIELD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

In addition to the above arrangements, a detachment of twenty picked artillerymen, under Bvt. Maj. G. W. Adams, Battery C, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, who had volunteered for the duty, accompanied the assaulting columns, with the purpose of promptly turning any captured guns upon the enemy. This detachment, which had been carefully supplied by Major Adams with rammers, hammers, and friction primers, was of great service in the operations subsequent to the assault in turning the captured guns upon the enemy's columns and works, thereby adding much to the demoralization of the rebel forces. The assaulting columns were in position before 4 a. m.; but the unusual darkness at that hour rendered any connected movement impracticable, and the columns did not therefore move till 4.40 a. m., when it had become light enough for the men to see to step, though nothing was discernible beyond a few yards dis-stance. Axmen had been distributed along the front of the assaulting columns, and the sharpshooters of the divisions had been so disposed as to produce their greatest effect. The point chosen for assault, selected after the most careful considerations, based upon personal examination and the reports of a large number of officers who had for a long time scanned the works of the enemy, was in front of Forts Fisher and Welch, over ground perfectly cleared of trees and offering few natural obstructions, except the marshes with which the front of the enemy's line was intersected. It was near the left of the corps line; and on its right was an inundation, which was entirely impracticable, while still farther to the right, and before reaching the Ninth Corps left, were the strong works, originally constructed for the defense of Petersburg, in the vicinity of the lead-works. All examinations concurred in designating the point chosen as the true one for attack, and, after observations, concurred in sustaining this conclusion. The works in front of the chosen point of attack were known to be an extraordinarily strong line of rifle-pits, with deep ditches and high relief, preceded by one or two lines of abatis; but it was not known till after our successful columns had passed over them that these two lines of abatis were not only unusually well constructed, but that a line of very strong fraise existed between them. At every few hundred yards of this line were forts or batteries well supplied with artillery. These lines might well have been looked upon by the enemy as impregnable, and nothing but the most resolute bravery could have overcome them. It should here be remarked that, but for the successes of the 25th ultimo, in which the corps carried the intrenched picket-line of the enemy, though at a cost in men which at the time seemed hardly to have warranted the movement, the attack of the 2d instant on the enemy's main lines could not have been successful. The position then gained was an indispensable one to the operations upon the main lines, by affording a place for the assembling of assaulting columns within striking distance of the enemy's main intrenchments. By some mischance or misapprehension our pickets in the vicinity of the forming columns commenced firing while the columns were forming, and brought, not only upon themselves but on the dense masses in their rear, a return fire which, for a moment, threatened to seriously interfere with if not break up the plan of attack. Everything was soon quieted down, however, by the exertions of the officers, though many casualties occurred from this contretemps. The men behaved well during the whole of the severe fire, without returning a shot or uttering a word to indicate their presence to the enemy. All being ready, the hour named for the assault having passed and light enough having dawned, the columns moved promptly at the signal, at 4.40 a. m., broke over the enemy's picket-line, meeting little resistance, and poured their masses over the main defenses, under a heavy fire of artillery and a more deadly though less noisy fire of musketry from the parapets. Abatis was cut away, and through the openings thus made, and through those made by the enemy for his convenience of access to the front, his works were gained. Here occurred a brief but sharp conflict, which soon resulted in giving us possession of the whole front of attack. In the ardor of the movement it was quite impossible to check the advance of the troops at once, and parties from each division soon reached the Boydton plank road and the South Side Railroad, breaking up the latter somewhat and cutting the telegraph wire of the enemy. As promptly as possible the lines were reformed, wheeled to the left, and moved, with the left of line guiding on the rebel intrenchments, toward Hatcher's Run. At first the enemy attempted resistance, but he was soon broken, and the entire rebel line from the point of attack to Hatcher's Run, with all his artillery and a large number of prisoners, was in our possession. In making this movement the Second Brigade, First Division, was left at the point of assault to hold what we had gained and to resist any force the enemy might send from Petersburg. Portions of this brigade and a part of the Second Division picket-line gained a considerable extent of the enemy's line of works to the right of the point of attack, while the rest of the corps was engaged toward the left, a portion of which it was unable to hold against the attacks of a considerable force sent from Petersburg. On reaching Hatcher's Run (a small portion of the force crossed it) I learned from staff officers of the lieutenant-general that the Second and Fifth Corps and the cavalry were sweeping down in that direction, and that it was not necessary to proceed farther. I therefore turned and moved toward Petersburg.

While halted and reforming near Hatcher's Run, one division of the Twenty-fourth Corps and a command of colored troops came in across the lines we had captured, and another division of the same corps came in by way of Fort Fisher to the support of the brigade which had been left to take care of our rear. At the request of Major-General Gibbon, commanding Twenty-fourth Corps, the division first referred to was allowed to pass the Sixth Corps, which immediately followed, returning to the original point of attack. Thence the troops were again pushed forward to closely invest Petersburg—the Second Division and the First and Third Brigades of the First Division moving on the left of the Twenty-fourth Corps, the Third Division on the right of the same corps, and the Second Brigade of the First Division being sent to the support of the left of the Ninth Corps, which was reported to be hard pressed. The Third Division moved up to the position finally occupied with little resistance. The Second Division formed promptly on the left of the Twenty-fourth Corps and moved rapidly forward, under a considerable fire of artillery and musketry, till the position near the Whitworth house was gained, when our lines were halted. The two brigades of the First Division gained the left of the Second Division as promptly as possible and moved forward with it, its left somewhat refused and reaching to the Appomattox. Several batteries of the enemy, which were very dashingy handled, occasioned some loss, but were driven back from point to point into the rebel works, with the exception of one, which was captured after its horses had been shot down by our skirmishers. On reaching the position finally occupied there was an interval of at least half a mile between the left of the Twenty-fourth Corps and the right of Getty's division, which was covered only by our skirmishers, but which was subsequently filled by Mott's division, of the Second Corps. On reaching the position referred to the men were so exhausted as to make an assault upon the enemy's lines unadvisable. The corps had been under arms for nearly eighteen hours; had assaulted the strong lines of the enemy; swept down them several miles and returning had moved upon Petersburg, some miles farther. It was therefore determined not to attack that night; but, under orders from Major-General Meade, the artillery was put in position and the troops prepared for an assault at daylight the next morning. On advancing the next morning it was ascertained that the place had been evacuated during the night, and preparations were at once made for the pursuit, and by 8 o'clock the troops were in motion, following the River road.

To the division commanders, Brevet Major-Generals Getty and Wheaton and Brigadier-General Seymour, too much of the credit of the successful assault cannot be awarded. They entered cheerfully and confidently into the project of attack, and handled their commands admirably during the whole of the operations of the day. The same may be said of the brigade commanders, and, indeed, of all officers, special mention of whom is made in the accompanying reports.

To my own staff I was as usual indebted for prompt, intelligent, and gallant discharge of duty during the day.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WRIGHT,

Major-General, Commanding.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH ARMY CORPS,

Danville, Va., April 29, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this corps from the 3d instant, after the retreat of the rebel forces from Petersburg and Richmond, to the 9th instant, the date of the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia near Appomattox Court-House:

At daylight on the morning of the 3d of April, the artillery of the corps being in position ready to open fire and the troops prepared for the assault, in pursuance to orders from headquarters Army of the Potomac of the evening previous, the skirmish line was pushed forward and soon discovered that the city of Petersburg had been evacuated during the night and that the army of General Lee was retreating. A communication received from the city authorities surrendering the place was forwarded to your headquarters, and the skirmish line halted. Soon after orders were received to pursue the enemy, and Mott's division, of the Second Corps, temporarily under my command, was at once put in motion by the River road, followed closely by this corps. The other two divisions of the Second Corps being in our front, with the trains which usually accompany the troops, our march for the day was necessarily a slow and short one, and we camped for the night about ten miles from Petersburg. The next morning the march was resumed, and at night we camped about two miles beyond Winticomack Creek, near the place of Mr. Featherston. On the 5th the corps moved, at 3 a. m., toward Jetersville Station, on the Danville railroad, and went into position some time before dark about two miles from that point and on the right of the Fifth Corps and of the army. It had been reported that the enemy, who had concentrated at Amelia Court-House, were threatening an attack, and the latter part of the march was hurried in consequence, and the troops put in position in order of battle.

The next morning (the 6th) the corps was put in motion at 6 a. m., in conjunction with the rest of the army, toward Amelia Court-House, where it was supposed the enemy still was, with the intention of attacking him at that place. Without regard to roads the troops were moved across the country, but after proceeding some three miles information was received that the enemy had left during the night and was endeavoring to pass around our left. The corps was at once halted and this information sent to army headquarters. Orders were soon received for the corps to take the right of the army in the pursuit; but these orders were shortly after changed by instructions to move via Jetersville to the vicinity of Dentonsville, and take position on the left of the Second Corps and of the army. In obedience to these instructions the corps was promptly started. Following for a time the road from Jetersville, parallel to the railroad, and then turning square to the right, the road passing Dentonsville was reached at a point to the southward of that place. Here I found the Second Corps was engaged in skirmishing in advance of the road; and awaiting the arrival of the column the ground on the left of that corps was reconnoitered with a view to taking up that position, but finding the country to be a difficult one through which to advance, and hearing the cavalry heavily engaged some distance to the left, I moved on the arrival of the head of the column down the Buckeville road, perhaps a mile, and, turning sharp to the right, proceeded across the country toward a nearly parallel road on which the enemy was moving with troops and trains, and along which he had thrown up some slight breast-works. As soon as Seymour's division, which was leading, could be formed it was moved upon the road held by the enemy, which was carried after a slight resistance. This movement compelled a part of the enemy's force to move off by a branch road to the right, and in front of the Second Corps, which was rapidly coming up. The road being carried, the Third Division was wheeled to the left, with its left on the road, and Wheaton's Division, which had come up, having been rapidly formed on Seymour's left, the line was advanced down the road against a pretty sharp resistance for about two miles, when reaching Sailor's Creek, a marshy and difficult stream, it was found that the enemy had reformed his line on the opposite side, and that he had thrown up such breast-works at various points of his line as time permitted. Readjusting the lines somewhat, the First and Third Divisions keeping their previous formation of the Third on the right, the creek was crossed, and the attack made, the artillery, previously established in position, opening with great effect upon the enemy, while the Second Division, still in rear, was hurried up to take part in the battle in case it should be needed, and at any rate to sustain the batteries which were without support. This division was rapidly brought forward at the double-quick by Brevet Major-General Getty, and though not actually engaged performed an important part by its presence. The First and Third Divisions charged the enemy's position, carrying it handsomely, except at a point on our right of the road crossing the creek, where a column, said to be composed exclusively of the Marine Brigade and other troops which had held the lines of Richmond previous to the evacuation, made a countercharge upon that part of our lines in their front. I was never more astonished. These troops were surrounded—the First and Third Divisions of this corps were on either flank, my artillery and a fresh division in their front, and some three divisions of Major-General Sheridan's cavalry in their rear. Looking upon them as already our prisoners, I had ordered the artillery to cease firing as a dictate of humanity; my surprise therefore was extreme when this force charged upon our front; but the fire of our infantry, which had already gained their flanks, the capture of their superior officers, already in our hands, the concentrated and murderous fire of six batteries of our artillery within effective range, brought them promptly to a surrender.

The position was won, the right of the rebel army was annihilated, and the prisoners secured were counted by thousands.

In the attack upon the road along which the enemy was passing, and already referred to, a portion of General Sheridan's cavalry operated upon our right, and in the subsequent attack the mass of the cavalry operated on the enemy's right flank and rear, doing splendid service and completing the successes of the day, capturing most of the prisoners who had been driven back, broken and demoralized, by the attack previously described. Many general officers were captured by the combined forces of the infantry and cavalry, and of those who surrendered to the Sixth Corps were Lieutenant-General Lewell and Maj. Gen. Custis Lee. After the battle General Getty's division, which was still comparatively fresh, was advanced some two miles to the front, and he pushed his skirmish line some two miles farther, meeting no serious opposition. The First and Third Divisions, following General Getty's movement, took position on his left and right, respectively, where they bivouacked for the night.

In this battle of Sailor's Creek the corps nobly sustained its previous well-earned reputation. It made the forced march which preceded that battle with great cheerfulness and enthusiasm, and went into the fight with a determination to be successful seldom evinced by the best troops, and by its valor made the battle of Sailor's Creek the most important of the last and crowning contests against the rebel Army of Northern Virginia. To it had fallen the opportunity of striking the decisive blows, not only at Petersburg, on the 2d of April, but at Sailor's Creek, on the 6th, and most gallantly did it vindicate the confidence reposed in it by its own officers and the commander of the Army of the Potomac. The corps has always fought well, but never better than in the assault at Petersburg, and at Sailor's Creek four days after.

On the morning of the 7th, receiving orders from your headquarters to continue the pursuit of the enemy so long as there was a prospect of success, the corps was on the road shortly after 7 a. m., proceeding in the direction of Farmville on the road taken by the enemy. Reaching Rice's Station it was ascertained that the Twenty-fourth Corps had passed that point from Burkeville, and was of course ahead of us. Proceeding to Sandy River I was there informed that the advance of the Twenty-fourth Corps was in possession of Farmville, and not knowing what direction the enemy had taken no officer was sent forward to obtain information, with the intention of moving on Prince Edward Court-House if this intelligence was true, where the corps would have been in position either to follow the enemy promptly or cut him off if he moved toward Danville, or to move on Appomattox Court-House by the most direct route, with a prospect of intercepting a portion, at least, of his force, in the event of his taking that direction. Ascertaining that Farmville was not in our possession, I again moved toward that place, being somewhat delayed, however, by a division of cavalry that passed Sandy River in my front and by the Twenty-fourth Corps, the rear of which was overtaken before reaching Farmville. Passing the latter, the corps was massed on the high grounds overlooking the town, and the lieutenant-general, who came up about this time, directed me to remain in that position till further orders. It had been previously ascertained that the enemy, instead of moving toward Danville, had gone in the direction of Lynchburg, and that the main body had crossed the river at Farmville and High Bridge, burning the bridges at both these points, and that their rear guard alone had moved on the south side of the Appomattox. The river being too deep for the fording of infantry, a light foot bridge was constructed over it, and, under instructions from the lieutenant-general commanding, a pontoon train from the Army of the James was ordered up and a bridge thrown across the river for the artillery and trains. The infantry, crossing by the foot bridge, were encamped some time after dark, the trains and artillery getting into camp about midnight.

On Saturday, the 8th, orders to move at 5 a. m. were not received till 8 a. m., when the corps was at once put in motion and rapidly overtook the Second Corps. Instead of following this corps, the head of the column, at Major-General Humphreys' suggestion, was turned off on the plank road, which runs nearly parallel to and intersects at New Store the road followed by this corps. At New Store the corps camped for the night, after a march of about seventeen miles.

Starting at 5 a. m. on Sunday, the 9th, the Second Corps was soon overtaken and followed closely to the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House, where the troops were halted and held ready for any movement, awaiting the result of the conference then being held between Generals Grant and Lee. Soon after halting official intelligence of the surrender of General Lee's forces was announced to the army, and was received with great enthusiasm by the soldiers, who looked upon this as the result of all their privations, and as the virtual ending of the struggle which has convulsed the country for four years, in which they had willingly risked their lives and fortunes.

In the whole campaign I have been ably assisted by my staff, who, by their services, are entitled to the acknowledgments of the country; they are as follows: Maj. C. H. Whittelsey, assistant adjutant-general; Lieut. Col. Walter S. Franklin, assistant inspector-general; Majors Arthur McClellan, Richard P. Halsted, Thomas L. Haydn, and Henry W. Farrar, aides-de-camp; Lieut. James W. Dixon, acting aide-de-camp; Maj. S. H. Manning, acting chief quartermaster; Maj. James K. Scofield, acting chief commissary of subsistence; Lieut. Col. S. A. Holman, medical director; Actg. Staff Surg. S. J. Allen, medical inspector; Maj. D. I. Mihn, provost-marshal; Capt. George B. Wood, ambulance officer; Maj. E. K. Russell, acting commissary of subsistence; Lieut. Thomas H. Pearey, signal officer; Lieut. Alex. Samuels, acting assistant quartermaster.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WRIGHT,

Major-General, Commanding.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

List of casualties in the Sixth Corps, on April 2, 1865.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division .....	1	38	21	257	.....	2	21	297	321
Second Division .....	1	39	21	292	.....	57	20	368	414
Third Division .....	3	32	21	269	.....	.....	20	391	327
Artillery Brigade .....	.....	5	1	13	.....	.....	1	18	10
Total .....	6	114	63	811	.....	59	77	1,001	1,081

* So much of this report as relates to the operations of April 6 was furnished by Wright to Sheridan May 6, 1865.

List of casualties in the Sixth Corps, on April 6, 1865.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division .....	7	70	19	277	.....	.....	26	347	373
Second Division .....	.....	7	2	58	.....	.....	3	65	67
Third Division .....	.....	.....	.....	13	.....	.....	.....	13	2
Artillery Brigade .....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total .....	7	77	21	337	.....	.....	29	414	413

A D D E N D A .

Address of General Meade, April 17, 1865, to officers and soldiers presenting battle-flags captured by the Sixth Corps.

Officers and soldiers of the Sixth Corps, I thank you very much for these numerous proofs of your valor, captured during the recent campaign. I do not wish to make any invidious distinctions between your own and the other corps of this army. They performed with valor and courage the part assigned to them. But candor compels me to say that in my opinion the decisive movement of this campaign which resulted in the capture of the Army of Northern Virginia was the gallant and successful assault of the Sixth Corps on the morning of the 2d of April. It was with much pleasure I had received a dispatch from your commander assuring me his confidence in your courage was so great that he felt confident of his ability to break through the enemy's lines. I finally ordered the charge to be made at 4 o'clock on the morning of the 2d and it was with still greater satisfaction that a few hours afterward I had the pleasure of transmitting a dispatch to the general-in-chief telling him the confidence of your brave commander had been fully borne out.

To you, brave men, I return the thanks of the country and of the army. To each of you a furlough of thirty days will be granted to enable you to present these proofs of your valor to the War Department. Let us all hope that the work upon which we have been engaged for nearly four years is over, that the South will return to its allegiance, and that our beloved flag will once more float in triumph over a peaceful and undivided country extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Saint Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico.

No. 106.

Reports of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Frank Wheaton, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of this division in the engagement before Petersburg on the 2d instant:

At midnight of the 1st, by direction of the major-general commanding the corps, I moved my command from camp near the Weldon railroad to the left of the corps line, and massed it outside of Fort Welch, on the right of the Second Division. The brigades were formed in echelon, the left forward, in the following order: Third Brigade, Col. O. Edwards, in three lines, thirty paces in rear of the right of the Second Division; First Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. William H. Penrose, in three lines, thirty paces in rear of the right of the Third Brigade; and the Second Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, in two lines, thirty paces in rear of the right of the First Brigade. At 4.30 o'clock, upon a signal gun from Fort Fisher, the division moved forward with its "guide left," each brigade taking up the movement toward the enemy's lines as soon as the troops on its left had gained their prescribed distance of 100 paces between brigade lines. We were received by a sharp musketry and artillery fire, from which our losses were comparatively small, considering the distance we had to pass over under fire and the line of abatis that had to be cut away. During the advance in the dark each command became more or less disordered, the lines naturally merging in each other, on account of the enemy's opposition and the natural physical obstacles—abatis, frise-work, &c.—encountered. An extra number of axes had been issued to the pioneers of each brigade, and directions given for these men to be deployed along the division front; and although from frequent previous inspections it was known that the works we were ordered to storm were well protected by lines of abatis, all were astonished to find these obstructions such serious obstacles and so difficult to remove; openings were made in them, however, under a severe canister and musketry fire, and all along our front officers and men pushed through and captured the enemy's strong works in the most dashing and gallant manner. The Fifth Wisconsin and Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers formed the front line of the Third Brigade, which was the advanced echelon, and nearest the rebel works. Portions of these regiments had passed through the enemy's intrenchments and camps, crossed the Boydton plank road, and fired into a train of cars moving on the South Side Railroad before day had fairly dawned. From its position the opposition encountered by the Third Brigade was much greater and its losses in the assault very much larger than in either or both the First and Second Brigades. They gallantly worked their way through the darkness and obstructions into the enemy's works, capturing guns and prisoners, and the Second Brigade being on the extreme right deployed regiments and companies along the line of works toward Petersburg, occupying battery after battery of the enemy's lines for more than a mile to the right of the point assaulted. A detachment of the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, after entering the works, ran forward to the Boydton plank road and cut the telegraph wire leading to Petersburg. The Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery and Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers formed the first line of the Second Brigade, and the Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers formed the first line of the First Brigade.

The troops were perfectly wild with delight at their success in this grand assault, and with difficulty could be restrained and the brigades reformed after the works, guns, prisoners, and camps were indisputably ours. In the original program for the assault it was determined that this division should, after the capture of the enemy's line of works, operate to the right in the direction of Petersburg. The three brigades composing it had hardly been reformed, with a view to a movement in the direction of that city, still held by the enemy, who was distinctly heard resisting the Ninth Corps attack, when orders were received from General Wright to send the two nearest brigades to the left to assist the Third and Second Divisions of this corps in their movement toward Hatcher's Run, and with the remaining troops of the division to hold what we had gained and to wait further developments, it having been reported that the enemy were advancing in strong force to recapture their works.

In compliance with that order, I sent the First and Third Brigades, and withdrew the Second Brigade from the right to the position first occupied. Strong skirmish lines were advanced by the latter brigade toward Peterburg and the Appomattox River, and the enemy's reconnoitering parties checked; but a force of some 600 of them came down the line of works, driving a detachment of some eighty men from the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and division sharpshooters out of a fort they had captured some three-quarters of a mile to our right. They soon opened an enflading fire upon us with two rifled guns from this work, and at the same time the tower signal officer reported a column of some 600 of the enemy as having passed through the woods between us and the Appomattox, apparently to attack the left of the Second Brigade as it faced toward Petersburg. More than three-quarters of this brigade was already deployed in the line of works and skirmishing, and there were but few troops in reserve for any emergency. In a very short time, however, a column of our troops arrived from near Fort Fisher, and the Second Brigade was relieved by a division of the Twenty-fourth Corps.

Almost immediately after, about 9.45 a. m., the First and Third Brigades returned from the left with the Second and Third Divisions, having met with but little resistance and encountered the advance of the Second and Fifth Corps from Hatcher's Run. Soon after these brigades returned, by direction of the corps commander, I sent the Second Brigade to report to General Parke, commanding the Ninth Corps, and with the other two brigades moved to the right on the enemy's line of works, forming on the left of the Second Division, joining it in the advance toward Petersburg, the Twenty-fourth Corps being on its right. In this order, with the Third Brigade in line and the First Brigade in echelon and refused on its left, we advanced for nearly three miles, exposed to a constant front and flank artillery and occasional musketry fire, until arrived within two miles of the city, at 1 p. m., and touching the South Side Railroad, we halted to await the arrival of other troops to complete a more thorough connection to the Appomattox. This, for reasons best known to the major-general commanding the corps, was not perfected, and at 5 p. m. orders were received to form my command in two lines on the left of a division of the Second Corps, which had arrived, and to intrench my front, which was accomplished at 10 p. m.

The work accomplished by the division on this day was the most difficult I had ever seen troops called upon to perform. Massing and advancing in the dark they successfully assaulted strongly intrenched and elaborately obstructed lines with a determination and gallantry that could never be excelled.

I cannot repress my admiration of the conduct of both officers and men and my deep-felt obligations to the brigade commanders for their distinguished services and able handling of their troops. Brevet Brigadier-General Penrose, Brevet Brigadier-General Hamblin, and Colonel Edwards more than earned for themselves this day the promptest recognition of their past long and gallant services.

During our advance toward Petersburg Capt. Crawford Allen's battery (H) of the First Rhode Island Artillery was admirably handled, and his losses were severe; his guns were always in front, frequently in advance of the skirmishers, and as our lines moved forward he invariably forced the enemy's batteries to retire, and followed them closely. Earlier in the day, when the assault commenced, Captain Allen very handsomely compelled a section of the enemy's artillery to retire. If these guns, occupying one of their intrenched works and thoroughly enfilading our lines, had not been silenced they might have materially retarded our advance.

In the assault and during the subsequent operations of the day the officers of my staff rendered the same efficient and gallant service that has marked them on so many previous battle-fields. Their names are separately presented on the list of officers recommended for promotion.

A nominal list of casualties in this engagement accompanies this report, also a list of officers recommended for promotion for meritorious services and enlisted men entitled to special mention and reward.

The reports of brigade commanders include the operations of the 2d and 6th instant. They will be submitted with my report of the operations of this division from the 3d to the 13th instant, including the battle of Little Sailer's Creek.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK WHEATON,

Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELSBY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,

April —, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following list of casualties of commissioned officers and enlisted men in my command in the action of the 2d instant.*

RECAPITULATION.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Brigade .....	1	4	8	32	.....	15	7	38	75
Second Brigade .....	.....	12	3	48	.....	.....	3	50	52
Third Brigade .....	2	32	13	147	.....	.....	15	170	194
Total .....	3	38	21	257	.....	2	21	207	321

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK WHEATON,

Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELSBY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps.

* Nominal list omitted.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,

April 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit a report of the operations of my command from the 3d to the 13th instant, inclusive.

During the night of April 2 directions from the corps commander were received to hold my division in readiness to attack the enemy's works in our front at daylight, when the artillery of the corps was ordered to open fire. Soon after daylight Capt. M. L. Butterfield, acting engineer officer of the division, while inspecting the picket-line, was met by the mayor of Petersburg, under flag of truce, and handed by him a letter to Lieutenant-General Grant, or any other commander, surrendering the town. General Lee's forces having evacuated Petersburg during the night, similar letters had been sent by the mayor to our forces on other roads, and by the time this one had reached Sixth Corps headquarters it was known that the enemy had retreated from the Ninth Corps front and that our troops were already in Petersburg. The Second Brigade of this division had, on the 2d, been sent to support a portion of the Ninth Corps front, and Brevet Brigadier-General Hamblin was the first commander who entered Petersburg with his brigade.

At 9 a. m. on the 3d this division moved with the corps in pursuit of the retreating enemy, being the second division in order of march, taking the River road from Petersburg toward Burkeville, marching ten miles, and bivouacked near the old Baptist Church, three miles west from Sutherland's Station, on the South Side Railroad.

April 4, moved at 5 a. m., this division being the leading one in the order of march of the corps, halting at 8 a. m. to allow the Fifth Corps train to pass, which occupied until 2 p. m. At that hour resumed the march along the River road, crossing Namozine Creek, and going into bivouac at dark near the Cousins house, within a mile of Winticomack Creek.

April 5, marched at 6 a. m., this division being the third in the order of march of the corps, halting for issue of rations at the Jones house, near Deep Creek, at 10 a. m. By orders from the corps commander I directed the First Brigade, Brevet Brigadier-General Penrose, to remain as guard, in conjunction with a Second Corps brigade, to the trains of the Second and Fifth Corps, which were ordered to follow this corps. The balance of my command resumed the march at 2 p. m., halting at 10 p. m. near the Smithy house, a mile from Jetersville Station, on the Richmond and Danville Railroad. At this place we joined the Fifth Corps and Sheridan's cavalry, to whom we had been hurried up, it having been reported to us that the enemy were in force in his front and threatening an attack. Bivouacked for the night, with orders to prepare to attack at daylight.

April 6, received orders to move at 6 a. m. in support of the Second and Third Divisions, and in the rear of the Second on the right, in an advance toward Amelia Court-House, where the enemy were supposed to be in force, prepared for an attack. In accordance with that order, with the Third Brigade on the right and the Second on the left, in two lines each, I advanced by the left of regiment to the front, guiding by the right regiment of the Second Division. Capt. Crawford Allen's battery (H, First Rhode Island Light Artillery) followed 100 paces in rear. In this manner we advanced two miles, through dense woods and over creeks and ravines, when orders were received from General Wright to return to the vicinity of Jetersville, the enemy having abandoned his intrenched position near Amelia Court-House. At 10 a. m., when near the Smithy house, I was ordered to follow the Third Division, which was moving, via Jetersville, northwest toward Deatonsville. During the last two miles of our march heavy skirmishing by our cavalry and some artillery firing was heard. Halting the trains to facilitate the movement of the troops across the bridges of Flat Creek, we hurried forward in anticipation of an engagement, though the reports made me by cavalymen from the front who met us on the road was that no infantry force had yet been encountered, and that the enemy's cavalry were retreating. I never saw troops press on more eagerly or show greater desire to meet the enemy. After an hour's hard marching we reached a turn in the road and high ground, from which we could see the road running from Deatonsville to Jennings' Ordinary, upon which our cavalry had attacked the enemy's wagon guard and train. By the time the head of my column had reached the vicinity of Little Sailor's Creek we found the Third Division deployed, with its left upon the road referred to, some troops of the Second Corps on its right. Although the division had been pushing forward with the greatest haste, much of the march over plowed fields and rough ground, and the troops greatly fatigued, they doubled-quickened into position with the greatest spirit upon finding themselves in the immediate presence of the enemy. Our lines were soon formed—the right of the Third Brigade, Col. Oliver Edwards, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, commanding, on the left of the Deatonsville road, and at right angles to it; the Second Brigade, Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, whose troops, being in rear, had a still harder race to get into position, forming on the left of the Third Brigade. The enemy's partially intrenched position could be plainly seen in our front, less than one-third of a mile distant, on the crest in the woods opposite Little Sailor's Creek, which lay at the foot of a long slope of plowed ground between us and their line. As our cavalry was known to be operating in their rear, I was urged by General Wright to hasten the attack, and, without waiting for the Second Brigade to be fully formed, the advance was ordered. Our artillery—Capt. Crawford Allen's battery, of this division, and others—shelled the enemy's line with great effect as we moved forward; fortunately for us, they had no guns in position. Our movement toward the creek was in plain view and down a perfectly cleared field for more than one-quarter of a mile. Reaching the creek, instead of finding it like most of the streams we had passed that day, it was discovered to be a swamp, varying in width from 40 to 100 yards, and traversed by several streams, the water in many places above the shoulders of the troops. Both brigades were in one line, in order to cover the front. I was ordered to attack, and none but good troops, knowing that there was no second line behind them, would so gallantly have dashed into and crossed this difficult swamp and stream, while from the moment they reached its edge they were under the enemy's severe musketry fire. The line after crossing the creek was readjusted under the crest occupied by the enemy, but the slopes in front of the right and center of the Third Brigade were too gradual to afford them protection and they were exposed to a severe front and enfilading fire. The Second Brigade was ordered to charge at once up the steep hills and into the enemy's line in the woods. This movement was brilliantly executed under a galling fire, and the Third Brigade at the same time advancing against the strong lines in its front, and the battle of Sailor's Creek was won. A brigade of Southern marines stubbornly continued the fight, but the movements of the One hundred and twenty-first New York and Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, which were admirably handled, compelled them to speedily recognize our victory. On the extreme right the Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers rapidly pressed fairly through the enemy's lines and skirmished directly in their rear, capturing Lieutenant-General Ewell, of the rebel army, his staff, and many other prisoners. The cavalry attacked the enemy in rear soon after our front attack had succeeded, and, of course, took most of the prisoners and material. This division pushed rapidly on in pursuit, the Third Brigade to the right and the Second to the front and left. The number of prisoners taken is not known. I understand that the result of our attack was the capture of nearly all the rebel troops in our front, which consisted of Ewell's two divisions and the Confederate Marine Brigade. This division took Lieutenant-General Ewell and General G. W. Custis Lee and several battle-flags—eight have been turned over to the assistant adjutant-general of the corps, and four more are known to have been taken within the four days preceding and including that.

The troops felt the immense importance of success in this, the last battle fought by Lee's Army of Northern Virginia, and their marching and fighting was all that could be wished.

Accompanying this, I have the honor to submit the reports of brigade commanders, and again, expressing my full appreciation of their gallantry and skill, I ask that the services of these officers in all the operations of this division since the assault at Petersburg, on the 2d instant, may meet with prompt acknowledgment.

I desire, in this connection, to submit the names of my efficient staff, and to thank them for the gallant service they have so continuously and faithfully rendered: Bvt. Lieut. Col. George Clendenin, jr., assistant adjutant-general, U. S. Volunteers; Lieut. Col. Rufus P. Lincoln, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, acting assistant inspector-general; Bvt. Maj. A. M. Tyler, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, assistant commissary of musters; Maj. Chester D. Cleveland, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, ordnance officer; Surg. Redford Sharp, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, surgeon-in-chief; Bvt. Maj. Miles L. Butterfield, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, acting engineer officer; Bvt. Maj. Solomon W. Russell, Forty-ninth New York Volunteers, provost-marshal; Bvt. Maj. John Snodgrass, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and George A. Bernard, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, acting aides-de-camp; Capt. Charles G. Finney, assistant quartermaster, U. S. Volunteers; Capt. James G. Fitts, commissary of subsistence, U. S. Volunteers; Bvt. Capt. Henry E. Hindmarsh, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, judge-advocate; First Lieut. William J. Cooke, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, aide-de-camp; Capt. James T. Stuart, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in charge of division sharpshooters.

The names of officers and enlisted men recommended for promotion and reward for distinguished services and meritorious conduct in the assault at Petersburg, April 2, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, have already been forwarded. Accompanying this report is a list of the casualties that occurred in the latter battle.

April 7, marched at 7 a. m., this division being the third in order of march of the corps, by the way of Rice's Station, on the South Side Railroad, and Farmville, across the Appomattox River, going into bivouac one mile to the west of it at 9 p. m.

April 8, marched at 7 a. m., this division being second in order of march of the corps, via Cordsville and New Store, on the Buckingham Court-House plank road, going into bivouac at 9 p. m., two miles west of New Store.

April 9, marched at 5 a. m., this division being first in order of march of the corps, four miles toward Appomattox Court-House, where we halted until the Second Corps had moved out of camp, which occupied until 11 a. m., when we continued the advance. Massed within four miles of Appomattox Court-House at 1 p. m., to await the result of a conference between Generals Grant and Lee. At 5 p. m. received news of the unconditional surrender of Lee's army, which caused the wildest enthusiasm and heartfelt joy among the troops. Went into camp upon receipt of that intelligence, and remained until April 11, when, at 7 a. m., this division, being third in order of march of the corps, marched back toward Burkeville, via New Store and Cardsville, and camped near Little Willis River.

April 12, marched at 6 a. m., this division being second in order of march of the corps, via Farmville, and camped near Sandy River at 4 p. m.

April 13, marched at 7 a. m., this division being the leading division of the corps, via Rice's Station, on the South Side Railroad, to Burkeville Junction, and went into camp one mile and a half east, facing south.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK WHEATON,

Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. G. H. WHITTLESBY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,

April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to send herewith six rebel battle-flags captured by the following-named men, and under the circumstances set opposite their respective names:

Second Brigade.—Battle-flag of Savannah Guards, captured by Private Warren C. Dockum,* Company H, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, two other enlisted men having been killed while attempting its capture in the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865.

Battle-flag (regiment unknown), captured by Private Benjamin Gifford,* Company H, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, in the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865.

Battle-flag (regiment unknown), captured by Corporal Elijah A. Briggs,* Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, in the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865.

Battle-flag (regiment unknown), captured by Sergeant Wesley Gibbs,* Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, in the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865.

Third Brigade.—Battle-flag (regiment unknown), captured by Private Charles A. Taggart,* Company B, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865.

First Brigade.—Battle-flag Forty-sixth North Carolina, picked up on the picket-line by Lieutenant Brant,* Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, April 3, 1865.

---

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

In addition to the above, the following flags were delivered to corps headquarters on the day of their capture, viz:

First Brigade.—Battle-flag (regiment unknown), captured by Private Frank Fesq,* Company A, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, in the rebel works at Petersburg, April 2, 1865; delivered to Major Franklin, commissary of musters.

Third Brigade.—Battle-flag (regiment unknown), captured by Corpl. Richard Welch,* Company E, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, in the rebel works at Petersburg, April 2, 1865; delivered to Major Whittelsey, assistant adjutant-general.

Total number of flags turned in, eight.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. WHEATON,
Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELTSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 20, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following list of casualties among commissioned officers and enlisted men in my command in the action of the 6th instant.†

RECAPITULATION.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Second Brigade.....	3	11	1	36	4	50	54
Third Brigade.....	4	56	13	211	22	267	319
Total.....	7	70	14	277	26	347	373

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK WHEATON,
Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELTSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps.

A D D E N D A.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS
April 18

Maj. C. H. WHITTELTSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps:

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following list of recommendations for promotion of officers in this division for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on Petersburg, April 2, 1865,

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

† Nominal list omitted.

and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865, and the names of enlisted men deserving mention for conspicuous bravery and good service in the same engagements:

Byt. Brig. Gen. William H. Penrose, colonel Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers for distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's lines near Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Byt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin, colonel Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, to be brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers for distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's lines near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and for conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Col. Oliver Edwards, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers for distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's lines near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and for conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865. (This officer has not yet received official notice of his promotion to brigadier-general by brevet, which was dated the 19th of last September; he has commanded a brigade since the battle of Cold Harbor.) Col. Isaac C. Russell, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers for distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's lines near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and for conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865. (This officer has not yet received official notice of his promotion to brigadier-general by brevet, dated the 19th of October last.) Col. Thomas S. Allen, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, to be brigadier-general by brevet for distinguished gallantry at the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and to be brigadier-general for bravery and meritorious services at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Col. Egbert Oleott, One hundred and Twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be brigadier-general by brevet for distinguished gallantry at the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and to be brigadier-general for bravery and meritorious services at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865. The above-mentioned commanders are officers of very unusual merit, have every one of them commanded brigades in battle, and been repeatedly recommended for promotion. I cannot too highly estimate the great importance of their valued services during the assault on Petersburg and the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va.

For most valuable services and conspicuous gallantry at the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865, the following officers are recommended for promotion: Byt. Lieut. Col. George Clendenin, jr., assistant adjutant-general, to be colonel by brevet; Lieut. Col. Rufus P. Lincoln, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, and acting assistant inspector-general, to be colonel by brevet; Byt. Maj. A. M. Tyler, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, and acting commissary of musters, First Division, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Maj. Chester D. Cleveland, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, and ordnance officer, First Division, and additional aide-de-camp on the field, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Byt. Maj. Miles L. Butterfield, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, and engineer officer, First Division, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Byt. Maj. Solomon W. Russell, Forty-ninth New York Volunteers, provost-marshal, First Division, and additional aide-de-camp on the field, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Byt. Maj. John Snodgrass, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, additional aide-de-camp, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Byt. Maj. George A. Bernard, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, and additional aide-de-camp, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Bvt. Capt. Henry E. Hindmarsh, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, judge-advocate, First Division, to be major by brevet; First Lieut. William J. Cooke, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet; Capt. James T. Stuart, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, in charge of division sharpshooters, to be major by brevet.

For valuable and highly meritorious services and marked attention to the duties of their respective departments, I have the honor to recommend for promotion by brevet: Surg. Redford Sharp, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, surgeon-in-chief of this division, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet; Capt. James G. Fitts, commissary of subsistence, First Division, Sixth Corps, to be major by brevet; Capt. Charles G. Finney, assistant quartermaster, First Division, Sixth Corps, to be major by brevet; neither of these gentlemen has received any official recognition of his valuable services during the entire campaign of 1864.

For distinguished gallantry and most valuable services at the assault on the enemy's works at Petersburg, April 2, 1865, I have the honor to recommend: Capt. Crawford Allen, jr., commanding Battery H, First Rhode Island Light Artillery Volunteers, to be major by brevet; First Lieut. Walter M. Knight, Company H, First Rhode Island Light Artillery Volunteers, to be captain by brevet; Second Lieut. Anthony B. Horton, Company H, First Rhode Island Light Artillery Volunteers, to be first lieutenant by brevet.

The following recommendations for the First Brigade are made: Lieut. Col. Baldwin Huffy, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Maj. Ebenezer W. Davis, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Maj. James W. McNeely, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Maj. J. Augustus Ray, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Bvt. Maj. Charles R. Paul, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, and acting assistant adjutant-general, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Bvt. Maj. William McElhaneey, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, and acting assistant inspector-general, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. James W. Penrose, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. William H. Bird, First Delaware Cavalry, and aide-de-camp to General Penrose, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. John R. McCauley, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. Jonathan Maguire, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. Joseph R. Wells, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. W. S. Ackley, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. William Brant, jr., Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. E. B. Howard, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. John Wilson, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. John P. Grater, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. Dayton B. Flint, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. James H. Comings, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. H. Edward Lewis, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. Charles E. Grant, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. A. J. Manderville, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. Ellwood Lippincott, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Capt. John W. Goodenough, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. Samuel W. Downs, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; Second Lieut. James Phillips, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be first lieutenant by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; First Lieut. George W. Breen, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, to be captain for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.

The following recommendations for officers of the Second Brigade are made: Col. James Hubbard, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be brigadier-general by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Lieut. Col. Henry C. Fisk, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Lieut. Col. John Harper, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Maj. Augustus H. Penn, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Charles H. Woodman, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. James Deane, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. David Gordon, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Morris C. Foot, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault upon the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Maj. Edward W. Jones, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Maj. James W. Crankite, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. John S. Kidder, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. James Johnson, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Liran C. Van Scoy, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Daniel D. Jackson, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; Capt. Michael Kelly, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Gad N. Smith, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Michael Devine, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Frederick J. Volks, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Charles J. C. Ball, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Lewis Minger, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Homer S. Curtiss, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Frank B. Lowe, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Thomas J. Hassett, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Second Lieut. Charles F. Anderson, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be first lieutenant by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and distinguished services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865.

The following recommendations for officers of the Third Brigade are made: Lieut. Col. B. H. Rhodes, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Lieut. Col. Gideon Clark, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for marked gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Lieut. Col. James R. Nailer, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Maj. William C. Gray, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Maj. William Clark, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Bvt. Maj. Edwin A. Landell, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Thomas G. Colt, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general to Colonel Edwards, to be major by brevet for marked gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. William A. Wiedersheim, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, additional aide-de-camp to Colonel Edwards, to be major by brevet for marked gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Jos. W. P. Roberts, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for marked gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Albert Ivers, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for marked gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; Capt. William H. Knight, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. and Adjt. B. Theodore Northrop, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. James Colwell, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Henry C. Warner, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865; First Lieut. David S. Hassinger, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. James Dutton, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet, for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Thomas Morris, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Henry Curran, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. Archibald Hopkins, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865; Capt. J. C. Robinson, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Capt. Jonas A. Champney, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; First Lieut. and Adjt. J. S. Bradley, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; First Lieut. William C. Morrill, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; Byt. Maj. F. W. Wombacker, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; Capt. William H. Byers, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; First Lieut. and Adjt. J. B. Downing, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; First Lieut. Frank S. Halliday, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous bravery and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865; Second Lieut. John K. Dorrance, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, to be first lieutenant by brevet for gallantry in the assault on the enemy's works near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.

The following-named enlisted men of the First Brigade are recommended to the general commanding the corps, as deserving of special mention and reward for conspicuous bravery and good conduct: Sergt. Samuel D. Appleby, Company I, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, carried the colors, and was the first to enter the enemy's works, April 2, 1865; Sergt. Jasper Archer, Company D, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, carried the colors in advance of his regiment during the assault; Sergeant Jones, Company G, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, carried the colors until disabled and obliged to leave the field; Corpl. William A. Burnett, Company G, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, was wounded but remained on the field fighting; Sergt. Thomas McElbain, Company B, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, was conspicuous in his actions of encouraging the men forward; Corporal Koerner, Company E, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, helped to capture a rebel battery and fire it upon the retreating rebels, was badly wounded while so engaged; First Sergeant Sparks, Company I, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, in command of the company and gallantly led it in action; First Sergeant Moyer, Company K, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, in command of the company and gallantly led it in action; Sergt. A. C. Wilson, Company A, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, encouraging and leading the men in action; Private Henry B. Paxton, Company I, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, in advance of his comrades at the assault; Private Abraham Palmer, Company A, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, particularly distinguished himself for gallantry; Private William H. McKeen, Company A, Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, particularly distinguished himself for gallantry; Color-Sergt. Peter S. Gunderman, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous for gallantry; Private Wilson Hensel, Company G, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Corpl. James V. Hoff, Company E, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Corpl. Daniel W. Kithcart, Company E, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Sergt. Robert Holt, Company A, Second Battalion New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Corpl. David B. Husted, Company A, Third Battalion New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Sergt. Maj. Christian A. Volk, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry in leading his company; First Sergt. Richard V. Cueman, Company H, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry in leading his company; First Sergt.

George W. Grover, Company I, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry in leading his company; First Sergt. John McNamara, Company K, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in leading his company; Color-Sergt. John Prior, Company G, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, in advance of the regiment with his colors; Private John McGuire, Company F, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers; Private John Foley, Company C, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers; Private John Riley, Company K, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers; Private Jabez W. Carey, Company H, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, pioneers of the regiment, gallantry for charging ahead of their regiment and cutting the abatis.

The following-named enlisted men of the Second Brigade are recommended to the general commanding the corps as deserving special mention and reward for conspicuous bravery and good conduct: Corpl. Elijah A. Briggs, Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, for capturing a rebel battle-flag in the assault; Private George R. Walker, Company F, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, for capturing a rebel battle-flag in the assault; Corpl. Thomas Daley, Company L, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, was the first man of his regiment on the enemy's works in the assault, April 2, 1865, and, though wounded, refused to leave the field; Sergt. Wesley Gibbs, Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, capturing a rebel battle-flag in the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, Va.; Corpl. Homer S. Sackett, Company H, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, capturing without assistance the colonel and major of a Georgia regiment on the 6th instant; Private Dennis Moore, Company K, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers, assisting in the capture of Brig. Gen. Custis Lee; Private Warren C. Dockun, Company H, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, capturing a rebel battle-flag; Private Benjamin Gifford, Company H, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, capturing a rebel battle-flag; Sergt. Reilford Dustin, Company F, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, firing a captured gun upon the enemy; Private Harris S. Hawthorn, Company F, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, captured Brig. Gen. [G. W.] Custis Lee, on the 6th instant; Private Francis Sprowl, Company F, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, was the first man in his regiment in the rebel works on the 2d instant, and twice loaded and fired one of the captured pieces on the retreating enemy; Color-Sergt. Patrick Leavins, Company H, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry on the 2d instant; Corpl. Barney Farrell, Company G, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry on 2d instant; Color-Sergt. Albert J. Bannen, Company O, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assisting in the capture of rebel guns on the 2d instant; Corpl. Francis A. Wilson, Company B, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assisting in the capture of rebel guns on the 2d instant; Private Hosea B. Taylor, Company B, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assisting in the capture of rebel guns on the 2d instant; Private John McLaughlin, Company G, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assisting in the capture of rebel guns on the 2d instant; Private William R. Fox, Company A, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assisting in the capture of rebel guns on the 2d instant; Corpl. Albert W. Scott, Company O, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Corpl. Robert D. Wilson, Company C, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, conspicuous gallantry; Sergt. Maj. James S. Day, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, gallant and meritorious conduct on the 6th instant; Corpl. Albert W. Scott, Company C, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, gallant and meritorious conduct on the 6th instant.

The following-named enlisted men of the Third Brigade are recommended to the general commanding the corps as deserving special mention and reward for conspicuous bravery and good conduct: Private William Railton, Company E, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, for gallantry, being one of the first of his regiment to enter the enemy's works on the 2d instant; Color-Sergt. William J. Babcock, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, for gallantry, being one of the first of his regiment to enter the enemy's works on the 2d instant; Color-Corpl. Thomas Parker, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, for gallantry, being one of the first of his regiment to enter the enemy's works on the 2d instant; Corpl. Maurice O. Hearo, Company —, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, for gallantry, being one of the first of his regiment to enter the enemy's works on the 2d instant; Sergt. Samuel M. Bolton, Company C, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery in the assault on the 2d instant; Corpl. Richard Welch, Company E, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery in capturing a rebel stand of colors; Private Charles A. Taggart, Company B, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts, for capturing a rebel stand of colors; Corpl. S. J. Dean, Company E, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for distinguished bravery, April 2, 1865; Corpl. William McCue, Company B, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers,* for capturing a rebel stand of colors; Sergt. George W. Johnson, Company K, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for being one of the first of the regiment to enter the enemy's works and secure two pieces of artillery, April 2, 1865; Private Lewis J. Dunlap, Company F, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for being one of the first of the regiment to enter the enemy's works and secure two pieces of artillery, April 2, 1865; Private Samuel Winterbottom, Company A, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for being one of the first of the regiment to enter the enemy's works and secure two pieces of artillery; Color-Sergt. Henry Enbriken, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery, April 2, 1865; Corpl. John T. Hall, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery, April 2, 1865; Corpl. August Franz, Company A, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Sergt. A. Q. Smith, Company B, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Sergt. F. T. South, Company B, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Sergt. Angus Cameron, Company C, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Drummer George Deverney, Company C, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; First Sergt. James Young, Company D, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Color-Sergt. R. H. Langton, Company F, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Corpl. A. B. Day, Company G, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865; Sergt. R. Elwell, Company K, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, for distinguished services, April 2, 1865.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. WHEATON,

Brevet Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

---

* Probably Eighty-second Pennsylvania—see p. 945.

No. 107.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. William H. Penrose, Fifteenth New Jersey Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 5, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following partial report of the part taken by my command—First Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps—in the assault on the enemy's lines, and subsequent engagements of the same day:

On the morning of the 2d instant the brigade was formed in four lines, its left in rear and right of the Third Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps. Just before daylight the signal was given to advance, when the lines moved forward. They had gone but a short distance before the first and second lines became one, owing to the fact that the pickets which were to have advanced simultaneously with us did not, and the first line received the fire of the enemy's pickets, which was very severe. The entire command pushed on, and in a few moments parts of each regiment had possession of the enemy's lines. From some cause the entire lines took direction 200 yards to the left of the points designated, and I found my men had entered the works on the front intended to have been taken by the Third Brigade. At this point two pieces of artillery (Rodman's or ordnance rifled) were captured by Brevet Major Paul, acting assistant adjutant-general, and Capt. James W. Penrose, acting aide-de-camp, of my staff, with a few men. A guard was placed upon the guns. Some time after two companies of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers came up to the guns and wished to remove them, which Captain Penrose refused to allow them to do. They then formed around the platforms. Before those two companies came up Captain Penrose had loaded the guns, but could not find primers with which to fire them. In the meantime his attention was directed elsewhere, when the men of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts drove my guard from the guns, claiming them as their capture. As this has occurred once before I am not disposed to allow it to pass this time without notice, as the command is entitled to the credit of the capture.

One battle-flag was taken by a private of the Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, whose name has been forwarded. It is impossible to state the actual number of prisoners taken, as they were sent to the rear without guards, but I think at least 200.

But a short time elapsed before the lines were reformed, and the brigade was ordered to the support of the Second Division of this corps. They were marched in line of battle for two or three miles, when it was ordered to the right. On arriving near the point of assault I was ordered to form on the left of the Third Brigade, with the right refused. In this position we moved forward, gradually closing in around Petersburg. About 3.30 p. m. I swung my left forward, resting it on the Appomattox. During the afternoon's advance we were constantly under a severe fire of artillery, but losing but few men. Moderate skirmishing. After reaching a point one mile from the city a slight change of position to the right was made, and an order to intrench received. Though the command was in some confusion in the assault, yet in the afternoon's advance the men and officers behaved to my entire satisfaction, especially as two-thirds of them were new men, and had not been in the army three months.

To the following-named officers I am greatly indebted for their gallantry, courage, and efficiency, and respectfully recommend them for the brevet set opposite their names: Bvt. Maj. Charles R. Paul, acting assistant adjutant-general, as brevet lieutenant-colonel; Capt. James W. Penrose, acting aide-de-camp, as brevet lieutenant-colonel (both of these officers, side by side, entered the enemy's works, capturing a section of battery, and by their dashing gallantry carried the men with them); Lieut. William H. Bird, First Delaware Cavalry, personal aide, brevet major; Lieut. John E. McCauley, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, slightly wounded, personal aide, brevet major; Bvt. Maj. William McElhannay, assistant inspector-general, brevet lieutenant-colonel; Lieut. J. Maguire, aide-de-camp, brevet captain (these officers, with the other two above-mentioned, led the charge on the enemy's works, and by their magnificent conduct insured the final success). The conduct of all these officers during the entire day gave me the greatest satisfaction. Lieutenant-Colonel Hufty, commanding the Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, Major Fay, of the Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, Major Davis, commanding Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers, and Major McNeely, commanding Tenth New Jersey Volunteers, are all entitled to a brevet in a grade above their present commissions. They entered the works in the assault with their men, and pushing on drove the enemy, clearing the ground for the organization of the troops. Their conduct during the entire day met with my special approbation.

I have the honor to submit the reports of regimental commanders, which contain account of the conduct of the officers and enlisted men of their respective commands.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. PENROSE,

Brevet Brigadier-General Volunteers.

Lieut. Col. GEORGE CLENDENIN, Jr.,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 108.

Report of Lieut. Col. Baldwin Hufty, Fourth New Jersey Infantry.

HQRS. FOURTH NEW JERSEY VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with circular, First Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps, April 15, 1865, I have the honor to report the operations of my command since April 1, 1865.

On the night of April 1 we broke camp and marched to the left and front of Fort Fisher, where the brigade was massed in column of regiments—the Fortieth New Jersey Regiment occupying the first line, the Fourth New Jersey Volunteers the second line, the Tenth New Jersey Volunteers the third line; and the Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteers the fourth line; the Second Brigade on our left, and the Third on our right in echelon. We remained in this position some time before receiving the signal to advance and charge the rebel line of works in our front. At about 4.15 o'clock on the morning of the 2d we received the order to advance. Owing to the darkness, &c., much confusion occurred, and the line became broken and mixed with the Fortieth Regiment, which was still further increased by the Tenth and Fifteenth Regiments. We soon reached the rebel picket-line, where a number of prisoners were captured. Here a portion of the regiment was halted and reformed; another portion, under my command, proceeded on through the abatis in front of the rebel works and struck the breast works, meeting with very little opposition. I think I can safely claim my colors as being the first in the brigade to enter the works. In connection with a portion of the Third Brigade we cleared over a mile and a half of the works, capturing three batteries or redoubts—one of three pieces and two of two pieces each; the enemy being re-enforced obliged us to give up the two latter. The remainder of the regiment, which had been reformed, entered the breast works, and with the remainder of the brigade struck to the left. After proceeding some distance and meeting with little or no opposition the line of march was turned toward Petersburg. In the afternoon the Fourth Regiment was formed in the first line, on the left of the Fifteenth, a portion of the First Battalion acting as skirmishers. We advanced against the city with very little opposition, and camped for the night within sight of Petersburg, which place was evacuated during the night.

Much credit is due the First Battalion for their good behavior throughout; also to Lieut. William S. Ackley and Color-Sergt. Samuel D. Appleby, of the Fourth Regiment, for their bravery, both being killed inside the rebel works.

The loss in the Fourth Regiment (total), 3 killed, 18 wounded, and 1 missing; in the First Battalion, 2 killed, 9 wounded, and 1 missing.

On the morning of the 3d we marched on the River road to intercept Lee's army. On the 6th the Fourth and First Regiments were detailed as guard to wagon train, and reached the brigade in the evening. On the 7th rejoined the division and marched to Farmville. On the 8th marched to New Store. On the 9th General Lee surrendered his whole army. On the 11th, 12th, and 13th marched toward Burkeville, which place we reached on the evening of the 13th.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. HUFTY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Fourth New Jersey Veteran Volunteers.

Bvt. Maj. C. R. PAUL,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., First Brig., First Div., Sixth Corps.

ADDENDA.

HEADQUARTERS, FOURTH NEW JERSEY VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,

April 18, 1865.

Bvt. Maj. C. R. PAUL,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General:

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters First Brigade of this date, I have the honor to forward the following report of officers and men who particularly distinguished themselves by their bravery and good conduct in the battle of the 2d instant: Capt. J. R. Wells, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Lieut. W. S. Ackley, Company K, by bravery in leading charge on breast-works and battery. Lieut. William Brant, Company B, First New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Lieut. E. R. Howard, Company I, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Color-Sergt. Samuel D. Appleby, Company I, by his bravery in carrying the colors and first to cross the enemy's work. Sergt. George C. D. Powell, Company I, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Corpl. Charles Moran, Company I, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Sergt. Enoch Cordery, Company K, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Sergt. J. D. Sargent, Company K, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Corpl. Charles Dolbow, Company K, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Sergt. John A. McKenny, Company D, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Sergt. Isaac Howell, Company D, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Sergt. James Connor, Company D, by bravery and efforts to rally his men. Color-Sergt. Jasper Archer, Company D, by bravery in carrying the colors and boldly charging. Corpl. George W. Archer, Company D, by bravery in rallying his men. Corpl. Michael Boyle, Company D, by bravery in rallying his men. Corpl. William Alger, Company D, by bravery in rallying his men. Private William Dougherty, Company D, by bravery in rallying his men. Private C. J. Wilson, Company D, by bravery in rallying his men. Private William Bennett, Company D, by bravery in rallying his men. Private John McCabe, Company D, by bravery in trying to rally his comrades. Private Alexander G. Rainier, Company D, by bravery in trying to rally his comrades. Corpl. W. H. Crowley, Company G, by bravery in trying to rally his comrades. Sergt. William B. Cavalier, Company G, by bravery in trying to rally his comrades. Color-Sergeant Jones, Company G, by bravery in carrying the colors until disabled and obliged to leave. Corpl. William A. Burnett, Company G, by bravery in continuing fighting after being wounded. Sergt. Samuel B. Fisher, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. John S. Nichols, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. James H. Nugent, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. Walter W. Woodward, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. Alfred Webb, by gallantry in rallying his men. Sergt. William G. Fletcher, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Sergt. Charles H. Morton, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Sergt. Charles W. German, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. James Edgeworth, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. James Campfield, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. Jacob Van Marter, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private Amos Parsons, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private Lewis Southard, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private Anthony A. Reed, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private John Smith, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private James T. Bozier, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private Jacob Maudin, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Private Thomas Ruinear, Company G, by gallantry in rallying his men. Corpl. William O'Brien, Company K, by gallantry in rallying his men. Sergt. Thomas McElhany, Company B, First Battalion, by bravery in leading his comrades and cheering them forward. Corpl. William Little, Company A, First Battalion, by bravery in leading his comrades and cheering them forward. Corpl. Cornelius S. Abrahams, Company A, First Battalion, by bravery in leading his comrades and cheering them forward. Private William C. Smith, Company A, First Battalion, by bravery in leading his comrades and cheering them forward. Corpl. Charles Gruff, Company H, First Battalion, by bravery and good conduct. Corpl. Louis Mattour, Company E, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Sergt. Samuel B. Keeley, Company A, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Sergt. Emil Jacrin, Company A, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Corpl. Joseph Harding, Company A, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Private Charles Wood, Company A, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Private Frederick Schnieder, Company A, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Private John Lenk, Company A, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct. Sergt. John McLean, Company H, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, by bravery and good conduct.

The commissioned officers mentioned in the above list were under my own eye; as far as my knowledge extends all behaved with commendable gallantry and bravery in rallying and leading their men.

Respectfully submitted.

B. HUFFY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Fourth New Jersey Volunteers.

No. 109.

Reports of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph B. Hamblin, Sixty-fifth New York Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. GEORGE OLNDENIN, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division, Sixth Corps:

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following reports of operations of the Second Brigade in the engagements of the 2d and 6th instant.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JO. B. HAMBLIN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

HQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

Report of operations of Second Brigade in the action of the 2d instant:

The brigade left camp at 10 p. m. of the 1st instant; was formed in two lines on the right of the Sixth Army Corps, in rear of the picket-line, to front and left of Fort Fisher—the Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers, Lieut. Col. H. C. Fisk commanding, on right; the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, Colonel Hubbard commanding, on left of front line; the Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. J. Harper, the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, Bvt. Col. B. Olcott, on left of second line. At 4 a. m. of the 2d instant advanced in echelon of twenty paces to rear and right of First Brigade. Owing to the early hour and mist of morning, and the nature of the ground, the troops were in some confusion arriving at the rebel lines. A portion of the command, under Colonel Hubbard, Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery, advanced directly to the front toward the South Side Railroad, while another detachment, under Lieut. Col. H. C. Fisk, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, and Lieutenant-Colonel Harper, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, turned to the right and passed down the line of works, capturing guns and prisoners for nearly a mile from the point of entrance. A third party, under Maj. J. W. Cronkite,

One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, moved to the Boydton plank road and cut the telegraph wire. The party which moved to the right—consisting of parties of One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, under Lieutenant-Colonels Fisk and Harper—occupied and held a fort nearly a mile to the right, until nearly noon, when they were compelled to retire before a superior force of the enemy. The brigade was assembled, and remained guarding the position gained, the Sixty-fifth New York, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania, and One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers deployed as skirmishers, until about 12 m., when relieved by a division of the Twenty-fourth Corps. I was then ordered to march to support of the Ninth Corps; reported to General Parke at Fort Sedgwick; placed the brigade, under direction of General Hartranft, in the trenches of the rebel main works near Fort Mahone, where they remained until about an hour before daylight, when the whole command was deployed as skirmishers and moved toward Petersburg; assembled in suburbs of the town and marched in order through the city between 4.30 and 5 a. m., being the first organized force in the place. Learning that many deserters from the enemy were secreted in the city, Colonel Olcott, with One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, and Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was charged with the collection of prisoners. At 10 a. m. marched back to old camp for knapsacks, left behind, rejoining the division at 8 o'clock that evening.

The losses in this day's fighting, detailed reports of which have been forwarded, were: Killed, 2; wounded, 48; missing, 1; total, 51.

Five guns, 3 flags, and about 250 prisoners were captured on the 2d, and one 84-pounder and about 200 prisoners on the morning of the 3d instant.

Officers and men were so enthusiastic in the pursuit that little attention was paid to guarding or getting receipts for captured prisoners or property.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,

April 15, 1865.

Report of operations of Second Brigade in the battle of Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865:

The brigade was brought into position in two lines—the One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, Brevet Colonel Olcott commanding, on right, and Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Harper commanding, with right wing of Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Fisk commanding, on left of first line; the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, Colonel Hubbard commanding, on right, and the left wing of Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers on left of second line. Advanced across a broad swamp traversed by a deep creek; rallied the line on the opposite side preparatory to a charge. Finding a wide interval in the front of Third Brigade, on my right, moved the brigade by right flank about fifty yards, and charged up the hill under a heavy fire of musketry, deploying the second line by left flank as we advanced. The enemy were speedily driven from our front, but the troops on our immediate right being repulsed the enemy pushed forward, threatening my right flank. No supports were at hand. Brevet Colonel Olcott, commanding One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, rapidly changed front forward on his right company, and with a few men of the Third Brigade succeeded in repulsing their advance.

The Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Harper commanding, after carrying the enemy's works, pushed on until they encountered our own cavalry, while the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, Colonel Hubbard commanding, turned to the left, pushing half a mile up the road, capturing wagons, forges, battery wagons, &c. The Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Fisk commanding, was deployed skirmishing in front and on flank of our left.

The losses in this action have been reported in detail: Killed, 17; wounded, 33; missing, 1; total, 56.

Two colors, a large number (exceeding 1,000) prisoners, wagons, forges, battery wagons, and a profusion of small-arms were the results of this charge.

I beg your attention to the following statement of gallant and meritorious conduct by officers and men of this brigade:

Bvt. Col. M. Olcott, commanding One hundred and twenty-first, distinguished himself by abilities and gallantry which are beyond praise. The success of the 6th instant is largely due to the prompt and splendid manner in which he maneuvered his regiment, charging front under a heavy fire, and driving the enemy from our right flank. I earnestly recommend that he be appointed brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers.

Col. James Hubbard, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, Lieut. Col. H. C. Fisk, Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers, and Lieut. Col. J. Harper, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, displayed the highest qualities of coolness and daring, under the most trying circumstances.

Capt. Michael Kelly, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, on the 2d instant turned the guns of a captured battery on the retreating foe and fired them with great effect; he also took a battle-flag inside the enemy's works.

Capt. G. N. Smith, Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery, and Lieutenant-Munger, Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery, throughout the battle of the 2d exhibited the most daring bravery and gallantry.

The following-named officers deserve notice for meritorious conduct in the assault of the 6th instant: Maj. Edward W. Jones, First Lieut. Homer S. Curtiss, and Second Lieut. Charles E. Anderson, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery.

Maj. James W. Cronkite, Capt. John S. Kidder, Capt. James Johnson, Capt. Hiram C. Van Scoy, and First Lieut. Frank E. Lowe, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, distinguished themselves by gallant conduct in the engagement of April 2.

Captain Kidder, Captain Johnson, Captain Jackson, Capt. H. C. Van Scoy, First Lieutenant Hassett, and Adjt. F. E. Lowe, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, particularly distinguished themselves by gallantry in the engagement of the 6th instant at Sailor's Creek.

Capt. Michael Devine, Capt. Fred. J. Volks, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, on the 2d instant displayed great coolness and ability in handling their men on the Boydton plank road, where they advanced immediately after the charge.

Captain Bell, Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers, was with that portion of the brigade that went to the right on the morning of the 2d instant, and his conduct during that advance stamps him as an officer of more than ordinary merit.

Maj. Augustus H. Fenn, Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery, acting assistant inspector-general; Capt. David Gordon, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, aide-de-camp; Capt. C. H. Woodman, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. James Deane, Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery, aide-de-camp; and First Lieut. Morris C. Foot, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, aide-de-camp, rendered the most efficient services, leading the command in every advance, and throughout exhibiting the most intrepid valor.

Captain Deane turned the guns of a captured fort, and with a detachment from the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, fired them on the enemy, until no enemy was in range.

I earnestly recommend that all the above-named officers be promoted by brevet.

Corpl. Mijah A. Briggs, Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and Private George R. Walker, Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, each captured a battle-flag on the 2d instant.

Corpl. Thomas Daley, Company L, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, was the first man of his regiment on the works on the 2d instant, and though painfully wounded, refused to leave the field.

Sergt. Wesley Gibbs, Company B, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, captured a battle-flag on the 6th instant.

Corpl. Homer S. Sackett, Company H, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, without assistance, captured the colonel and major of a Georgia regiment on the 6th.

Private Dennis Moore, Company K, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, assisted in capturing Brig. Gen. Custis Lee.

Private Warren G. Dockun, Company H, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, and Private B. Gifford, Company H, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, each captured a flag.

Sergt. Redford Dustin, Company F, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, on the 2d instant, turned, loaded, and fired a captured gun upon the enemy.

Private Harris S. Hawthorn, Company F, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers, captured Brig. Gen. Custis Lee on the 6th instant.

Private Francis Sprawl, Company F, Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers, was the first man of his regiment in the rebel works on the 2d instant, and twice loaded and fired one of the captured pieces on the retreating enemy.

Color-Sergt. Patrick Leavins, Company A, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, and Corpl. Barney Farrell, Company G, bearer of the regimental flag, were very conspicuous for their gallantry on the 2d instant, after being entirely under the enemy's fire while moving to the right.

Color-Sergt. Albert J. Bannen, Company G, and Sergt. John B. Cook, Company D, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, captured one gun on the 2d instant. Corpl. Francis A. Wilson* and Private Hosea B. Taylor, Company B, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, captured one gun on the 2d instant. Private William R. Fox,* Company A, and Private John McLaughlin, Company G, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, captured one gun on the 2d instant. Corpls. Albert W. Scott and Robert D. Wilson, of Company G, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, were the first of a number of men to enter the fourth fort on the right on the morning of the 2d and captured three guns. These guns were partially disabled. They were compelled to leave them before fully doing so, and the guns were retaken by the enemy, but again captured by the Twenty-fourth Corps.

---

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

Color-Sergt. Albert J. Bannen, Company C, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, displayed great gallantry on the 6th instant, rushing ahead with the colors of the regiment while under a very heavy fire, and by his example urging the men to advance.

I earnestly recommend that a medal be awarded to each of the above-mentioned enlisted men.

For honorable mention I recommend Sergt. Maj. James S. Day and Corpl. Albert W. Scott, Company C, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for gallant and meritorious conduct on the 6th instant.

Among the killed on the 6th instant I regret to name Capt. T. C. Howland, One hundred and twenty-first New York State Volunteers; no braver or more gallant officer ever carried sword.

I have the honor to be, colonel, your obedient servant,

JO. E. HAMBLIN,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Comdy. Brigade.

---

No. 110.

Reports of Lieut. Col. Henry C. Fisk, Sixty-fifth New York Infantry.

HDQRS. SIXTY-FIFTH NEW YORK STATE VOLUNTEERS,

April 4, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders of the general commanding, I have the honor to report that on the morning of the 2d instant the colors of the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers were the first of our brigade to be planted on the enemy's works. As soon as we passed there we moved to the right, the regimental flag being in the lead, and the first in the battery of three guns that was enfilading our assaulting column from the right. In the movement to the right four guns were first reached by men of this regiment; these guns were served. Private Francis Sprowl, of Company F, was the first man in the battery, and twice loaded and fired one of these pieces at the retreating enemy.

Color-Sergt. Patrick Leavins and Corpl. Barney Farrell, Company G, bearer of regimental flag, were very conspicuous for their gallantry, often being entirely under the enemy's fire while moving to the right. I would respectfully recommend that these men be granted medals for their bravery.

Cpts. F. J. Volks, Michael Devine, and C. J. O. Ball rendered most efficient services during the assault. Captains Devine and Volks, while in charge of the skirmish line on the Boydton road, in danger of being flanked by the enemy, met the danger with coolness, and by a handsome change of front checked them. Captain Ball was with that portion of the brigade that went to the right, and his conduct during that advance stamps him as an officer of more than ordinary merit. In fact, the conduct of all was all that could be wished.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. FISK,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. CHARLES H. WOODMAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SIXTY-FIFTH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
April 14, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with Special Orders, headquarters Second Brigade, April 9, 1865, I have the honor to report the Sixty-fifth New York State Volunteers were deployed as skirmishers at the engagement known as Sailor's Creek, Va., on the 6th instant, and that no individual cases of gallant conduct of either officers or men came under my observation.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. FISK,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. CHARLES H. WOODMAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

No. 111.

Report of Bvt. Col. Egbert Olcott, One hundred and twenty-first New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 121ST NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 14, 1865.

Captain WOODMAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade:

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to forward the report of the part taken by this regiment in the engagements of April 2 and 6.

I am, captain, very respectfully your obedient servant,

E. OLCOTT,

Brevet Colonel, Commanding.

Report of the part taken by the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers in the engagement of April 2, 1865:

The brigade being in two lines, the One hundred and twenty-first New York formed the left of the second. When the order to advance was given the regiment moved rapidly forward, maintaining a good line until within about 200 yards of the enemy's works, when the second line was moved a short distance by the left flank and then forward again. This, together with the darkness and the character of the ground, divided the regiment somewhat, most of the men with the colors entering the works farther to the right than intended, capturing two guns; one of these was immediately turned upon the enemy, loaded, and fired by Sergt. Redford Dustin, Company F. Sergeant Dustin served for nearly two years in the First Massachusetts Battery, and is a skillful artilleryman. These guns were carried off, and a receipt obtained for them. The portion of the regiment engaged in taking the guns mentioned, with a part of the Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania, Second Connecticut, and Sixty-fifth New York, advanced along the enemy's works to the right for nearly a mile, capturing all the artillery in them and holding the works until ordered to join that part of the brigade to the left. The regiment in this charge captured about 200 prisoners. The regiment afterward was, with the brigade, sent to the support of the Ninth Corps, and occupied the first line of works taken from the enemy in front of Fort Sedgwick.

On the morning of the 3d the regiment formed part of the skirmish line that advanced on Petersburg, entering that city about 4.30 o'clock.

The regiment captured one 84-pounder cannon and about 200 prisoners during the morning. The casualties were 1 killed and 11 wounded; aggregate loss, 12.

Report of the part taken by the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers in the battle of Sailer's Creek, April 6, 1865:

The brigade being in two lines, the One hundred and twenty-first New York formed the right of the first, the Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania being on the left. About 4 p. m. advanced across Sailer's Creek. Remained a short time under the crest of the hill to reform, the creek being quite deep and the crossing difficult. Charged with the rest of the line, drove the enemy, capturing a large number of prisoners. Pressing forward, the enemy were found to be on the right flank of the brigade, the troops on the immediate right having been repulsed. The regiment, by order of Colonel Olcott, rapidly changed front, forming on the road that, crossing the creek, runs nearly perpendicular to the original line of battle. Further down the road, near the creek, a portion of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts were striving to hold their ground.

The One hundred and twenty-first New York having checked the enemy, who were endeavoring to get into the rear of the brigade, was ordered to charge, which it did, driving the enemy in confusion, capturing General Custis Lee and several other officers of high rank, together with two stand of colors. General Lee was captured by Private Harris S. Hawthorn, Company F, the proofs of which, there having been some controversy about the matter, accompany this report, marked A. It was near the road mentioned that Captain Howland was killed; no braver or more gallant officer ever carried sword. First Lieutenant Morton was also killed.

The casualties in the engagement were, 2 officers and 7 enlisted men killed, and 1 officer and 12 enlisted men wounded; aggregate, killed and wounded, 22.

The officers of the command displayed, without exception, great gallantry, particularly Captain Kidder, Captain Johnson, Captain Jackson, Captain Van Seey, First Lieutenant Hassett, and Adjutant Lowe. The names of the men who captured the colors are Warren C. Deckun, and Benjamin Gifford, Company H.

The regiment took at least 500 prisoners.

(Inclosure A.)

CAMP IN THE FIELD, VA.,
April 14, 1865.

Private Harris S. Hawthorn, Company F, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, being duly sworn, says, that he knows of his own knowledge that he is the first person (officer or enlisted man) who seized or captured General Custis Lee, of the Confederate Army, in the engagement of the 6th of April; and that he never lost sight or control of said General Custis Lee until he delivered him up to Colonel Olcott, commanding One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers; and that he, Hawthorn, was one of the men detailed by Colonel Olcott, on account of such capture, to conduct General Custis Lee to the headquarters of General Wheaton, commanding First Division, Sixth Army Corps.

H. S. HAWTHORN.

Subscribed and sworn to, at Malvern, near Burkeville, Va., this 14th day of April, 1865, before me.

H. M. HINDMARSH,

Lieutenant, Judge-Advocate, First Division, Sixth Army Corps.

CAMP OF 121ST NEW YORK REGIMENT,

April 11, 1865.

I hereby certify that for more than two years I have well known Harris S. Hawthorn, Company F, One hundred and twenty-first New York Regiment, as a professed Christian, and have always regarded him worthy of confidence, by the uniform consistency of his religious life. I regard his testimony on any subject as unimpeachable, and that no assurance can be stronger than his affirmation under the sanctity of an oath.

JOHN R. ADAMS,

Chaplain of 121st New York Regiment.

APPEND A.

HDQRS. 121ST REGT. NEW YORK STATE VOLUNTEERS,

April 4, 1865.

Capt. CHARLES H. WOODMAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General:

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to forward a list of prisoners captured by this command in the late engagement:

Company A .....	11	Company G .....	31
Company B .....	18	Company H .....	22
Company C .....	29	Company I .....	30
Company D .....	11	Company K .....	21
Company E .....	13
Company F .....	13	Total .....	202

Number of enlisted men of this command that entered the fort, capturing 3 guns, in front of our brigade lines, 175; number that advanced still farther to the right and captured 3 guns, 67 men. This command captured 1 gun in front of Ninth Corps on the 2d instant. I have receipts for 2 guns, 1 caisson and carriage, and about 140 prisoners.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. OLCOTT,

Brevet Colonel, Commanding.

No. 112.

Report of Lieut. Col. John Harper, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. NINETY-FIFTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLTS,

April 13, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to orders, I have the honor of making the following report of the part taken by my command in the action of the 6th instant, Sailor's Creek:

My command was placed upon the left of the One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, forming, with that regiment, the front line of the brigade. At the command "forward" we proceeded steadily (notwithstanding a severe fire of musketry, by which I sustained some loss) across the open ground until we arrived at the creek, where some little delay took place, it being difficult to cross in some parts. After crossing, however, the line was reformed, and advanced to the foot of the hill upon which the enemy were posted; here we halted, by order, for a short time, during which the line was put in good shape for the charge. Very soon the order to advance was given, when we advanced to the top of the hill, where we were met by a terrific fire of musketry which, momentarily, staggered the line (I may here mention the gallant conduct of Bvt. Col. E. Olcott, commanding the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, who, by his example, did much to gain the victory which soon followed); with a cheer, however, the men pressed forward, and after a stubborn contest forced the enemy to retire in confusion, capturing many prisoners, who were ordered to the rear. Upon gaining the woods in which the enemy had been posted I found that a number of them had made a stand upon our left flank, and were becoming very annoying. I advanced upon them with my colors and fifteen or twenty of the men of my regiment and some of the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, and after some trouble drove them into a ravine, where they raised a white flag and surrendered. We continued our onward course, exchanging shots with the flying enemy until we crossed a line of breast-works, where more of them surrendered. We advanced still farther into the open field half a mile beyond the works, where we connected with the cavalry, which had apparently just started out. Soon after this Captain Gordon, of the Second Brigade staff, met us, and informed us that the brigade was reforming in the woods to our rear. We rejoined the brigade.

I cannot but speak in the highest terms of all the officers and men of my command; one and all, they did well. I earnestly recommend Color-Sergt. Albert J. Bannen, of Company C, for his gallant conduct in rushing ahead with the colors of the regiment whilst under a very heavy fire, and by his example urging the men to advance. I think him deserving of a medal. For honorable mention I report Sergt. Maj. James S. Day and Corpl. Albert W. Scott, Company C.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

JOHN HARPER,

Lieutenant-Colonel Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Vols., Commanding.

Bvt. Capt. CHARLES H. WOODMAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade.

ADDENDA.

HEADQUARTERS, NINETY-FIFTH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 4, 1865.

Bvt. Capt. CHARLES H. WOODMAN,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General:

SIR: In obedience to orders, I respectfully submit the following report of guns captured by my command on the 2d instant on the left of the enemy's line:

In the first fort, one gun, by Color-Sergt. Albert J. Bannen, Company C, and Sergt. John B. Cook, Company D. In the second fort, one gun, by Corpls. Francis A. Wilson and Hosea B. Taylor, Company B. In the third fort, one gun, by William R. Fox, Company A, and John McLaughlin, Company G. In the fourth fort, three guns, by Corpls. Albert W. Scott and Robert D. Wilson, Company C, they being the first of a number to enter. These guns were partly disabled; they were compelled to leave them, however, before fully doing so, and they were retaken by the enemy, but again taken by the Twenty-fourth Corps.

Very respectfully,

JOHN HARPER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Report of Capt. James T. Stuart, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Sharpshooters.

HQRS. SHARPSHOOTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 17, 1865.

COLONEL: In obedience to orders, I have the honor to report the operations of my command during the recent operations of this division.

On the morning of April 2, having been ordered by the general commanding to report to General Hamblin, I was ordered to form those of my men who were armed with Spencer rifles as a skirmish line, the left joining the right of the Second Brigade, the line to be formed at an angle of about twenty-five degrees with the line of battle. The men armed with the telescope and globe rifles were ordered to remain in Fort Fisher. They were left there in charge of Lieutenant House. When the charge began the skirmish line moved forward, keeping connection with the Second Brigade, which very soon brought us in contact with the enemy's pickets; and as soon as the storming column entered the works and the Second Brigade wheeled to the right, my line conforming to their movements put me on the flank of the picket line of the enemy, the most of which I captured for the distance of about half a mile. The number captured on this line and sent to the rear was about sixty-five. As soon as the Second Brigade (which had been moving down inside the works) halted I ordered my men to make a left wheel, which brought them in front of a fort mounting three guns, and which was still occupied by the enemy, on which I ordered the line to charge, and succeeded in capturing the fort, 3 guns, 3 commissioned officers, and 25 men, who surrendered in a body as soon as my men got on the parapet of the fort. We sent the prisoners to the rear, and held the fort for half an hour, when our ammunition gave out, and I ordered my men to rejoin the Second Brigade, which was then in a fort a short distance to our left. We did not succeed in getting the captured guns to the rear, as the fort we took was commanded in the rear by an interior work, and it was impossible to get the cannon out of the fort, except by the rear. After rejoining the Second Brigade we accompanied [it] to the balance of the division. In this engagement Second Lieut. William Byron, Sixty-fifth New York, was severely wounded, and two privates were slightly wounded, but not severe enough to require medical treatment. As soon as Lieutenant House saw that the storming party had succeeded in carrying the works he moved the men armed with telescope and globe rifles to a position where they could fire on the forts that were yet in possession of the enemy, where good execution was done against the enemy's artillerists.

The command accompanied the division through all its marches to Sailor's Creek, and at that point did but little fighting, and losing no men.

In submitting the above report I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES T. STUART,
Captain, Commanding Sharpshooters.

Lieut. Col. GEORGE OLSENDRUP, Jr.,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 114.

Report of Col. Oliver Edwards, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
April 17, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the late operations:

The command moved from its camp on the night of the 1st, at 10.30 o'clock, and massed in front of Fort Fisher, where the brigade remained some time waiting for the Second Division to get into position. I then moved outside the works, marching left in front, and formed on the right of the First Brigade, Second Division, twenty-five paces echelon, in three lines, with an interval of 300 paces between each line, in the following order, from right to left: First line, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts and Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers; second line, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, and Second Rhode Island Volunteers; third line, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers. I caused a skirmish line of seventy-five Spencer rifles (all volunteers) to be deployed along my brigade front, and twenty axmen, selected from the pioneer corps. I also distributed a sufficient quantity of axes along the first line, to be used in case the axmen had trouble in removing the obstructions. The command was severely harassed by the fire of the enemy's skirmishers while forming. At 4 a. m. the line moved forward, taking up the double-quick after passing the ravine in my front, and stormed the fort in my front, together with a portion of the works on its left, successfully carrying them, capturing 10 guns, 3 battle-flags, and a large number of prisoners. I then directed a fire to be opened on the right and left flanks, for the purpose of sweeping the front of the First and Second Brigades and as much of the Second Division as possible. I caused the One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers to change front forward on first company, and to sweep the front on my right, which they accomplished, connecting with the One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteers, of the Second Brigade. My skirmishers at once pushed on to the South Side Railroad, cut the telegraph wire and tore up a portion of the track, losing heavily in doing so. I then reformed my lines on the edge of the woods in rear of the position we had taken, the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers in the meantime destroying Mahone's division hospital, some distance in advance, on the right of the plank road. I then moved to the left along the Twenty-fourth Corps front a distance of about two miles and a half and halted. I was then ordered to move back in the direction of Petersburg. My brigade skirmished toward the city for a distance of two miles, where we formed a connected line with the First Brigade, on my left, and the Second Division of the Second Corps, on my right. During this advance, and while forming my lines, the command was exposed to a severe and at times to an enfilading fire from the enemy's batteries, advantageously posted. As soon as my lines were formed I received orders to throw up a rifle-pit, covering my front, which was completed before dark. During the night the city was evacuated.

In the several marches my brigade participated in common with the rest of the division.

The loss of the brigade in the assault on the 2d instant was about 192 killed and wounded.

On the 6th my brigade led the division, following in rear of the Third Division. About 3 p. m., while in the vicinity of Little Sailor's Creek, I received orders to push forward with all possible dispatch and to form my line in column of regiments on the high ground overlooking the marsh known as Little Sailor's Creek. The regiments came up on the double-quick and formed in column as follows: Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, Eighty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, One hundred and nineteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, with the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers in column of wings in the road perpendicular to rest of the line. The formation being changed, I ordered the left wing of the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers to be put on the left of the Fifth Wisconsin, forming the first line, and the right wing to connect with the left of the Forty-ninth, forming the second line, and the One hundred and nineteenth [Pennsylvania and] Second Rhode Island Volunteers to move forward in line in rear of the second line, and the Thirty-seventh in rear of them, retaining its first formation. I moved across the creek in this order without waiting for the Third Division, and formed one line, from right to left, as follows: Fifth, Eighty-second, One hundred and nineteenth, Forty-ninth, Second, and Thirty-seventh. After passing the creek I halted the line, which had become somewhat broken by the passage of the creek, and reformed it under the crest of the hill in my front. As soon as the line was reformed the brigade moved rapidly forward and soon became heavily engaged with the enemy. At this time I was deprived of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts, on which I depended for holding my left; the Second Rhode Island Volunteers, losing its connection with the Thirty-seventh and being exposed to a severe fire from the left flank and our own batteries, were thrown into disorder and obliged to fall back, and by so doing partially exposing the left flank of the Forty-ninth, which was also thrown into disorder, but soon rallied. The Fifth, Eighty-second, and One hundred and nineteenth, though exposed to a heavy flank fire from the enemy, posted not thirty yards from them, maintained their ground, and after a severe contest, and losing heavily, drove the enemy from their position. The Thirty-seventh Massachusetts advanced at the same time with the brigade, driving the enemy slowly, but soon found both flanks exposed and a column of the enemy coming in on their left. Their left was thrown back to meet this attack, which they admirably repulsed. By this time they discovered the enemy on their right flank and some 100 yards in the rear. The regiment faced about, and a desperate hand-to-hand fight ensued. The enemy were finally forced back and they taken in flank; their line being swept by the fire of the Spencers they surrendered. Amongst the captures were Brig. Gen. Gustis Lee and a rebel stand of colors. Lieutenant-General Ewell and staff surrendered to the Fifth Wisconsin. A large number of prisoners were taken by the brigade, the number I cannot accurately state. The brigade advanced until they came up with the cavalry, on the road leading to Rice's Station, where I halted, and soon received orders to move back to the division, which I did, and went into camp for the night.

My loss was severe, amounting to 343 killed and wounded.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of the brigade; with a few exceptions it was all that I could wish. A report of the officers and men who were particularly deserving of promotion has already been forwarded.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant

O. EDWARDS,
Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. GEORGE CLENDENIN, Jr.,
Asst. Adj. Gen., First Division, Sixth Army Corps.

A D D E N D A .

HDQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,

April 10, 1865.

Maj. GEORGE CLENDENIN, JR.,

Asst. Adj. Gen., First Division, Sixth Army Corps :

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from headquarters Sixth Army Corps, of April 3, 1865, I have the honor to forward a list of commissioned officers in my command who particularly distinguished themselves for gallantry and meritorious services on the 2d and 6th of April, and who I would recommend for promotion; also the names of enlisted men, including those who captured colors, who, by their conduct on that day, are entitled to receive medals.

Col. Thomas S. Allen, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, to be brevet brigadier-general, for gallantry on April 2; to be brigadier-general, for bravery and meritorious service at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865.

Col. Isaac C. Bassett, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brigadier-general, for gallantry on April 2 and 6.

Lieut. Col. E. H. Rhodes, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, to be brevet colonel, for gallantry at the assault on enemy's works April 2.

Lieut. Col. Gideon Clark, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet colonel, for gallantry in leading his regiment at the assault on enemy's works April 2 (wounded).

Lieut. Col. James H. Neiler, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet colonel, for gallantry and meritorious service on April 2 and 6.

Maj. William C. Gray, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, for gallantry and meritorious service April 2 and 6.

Maj. William Clark, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, for gallantry and meritorious services on April 2 and 6.

Bvt. Maj. E. A. Landell, captain, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, brigade inspector, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, for meritorious services in being one of the first in the enemy's works April 2, and also to be brevet colonel for conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6.

Capt. Thomas G. Colt, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, to be brevet major, for marked gallantry April 2, 1865, and to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, for meritorious services at battle of Little Sailor's Creek, April 6, 1865.

Capt. W. A. Wiedersheim, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, to be brevet major, for distinguished services and marked gallantry on April 2 and 6.

First Lieut. J. W. P. Roberts, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain for meritorious services April 2 and 6.

Capt. Albert Ivers, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet major, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6 (wounded).

Capt. William H. Knight, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet major, for gallantry and meritorious services April 6 (wounded).

First Lieut. and Adj. B. Theo. Northrop, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6 (wounded).

First. Lieut. James Colwell, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6 (wounded).

Capt. H. C. Warner, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet major, for gallantry at the assault on enemy's works April 2.

First Lieut. and Actg. Adjt. D. S. Hassinger, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6.

First Lieut. James Dutton, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6.

First. Lieut. Thomas Morris, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6.

Capt. Henry Curran, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, to be brevet major, for conspicuous and marked gallantry April 2 and 6.

Capt. Archibald Hopkins, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brevet major, for conspicuous gallantry April 2; to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, for distinguished services April 6.

Capt. J. C. Robinson, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brevet major, for distinguished services April 2 (wounded).

Capt. Jonas A. Champney, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brevet major, for bravery and meritorious services April 2 and 6.

First Lieut. and Adjt. J. S. Bradley, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6 (wounded).

First Lieut. William C. Morrill, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for conspicuous bravery on April 2 and gallantry in capturing a general officer April 6.

Bvt. Maj. F. W. Wembacher, captain, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6 (wounded).

Capt. William H. Byers, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, to be brevet major, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6.

First Lieut. and Adjt. J. B. Downing, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry and meritorious services April 2 and 6.

First Lieut. and Actg. Adjt. F. S. Halliday, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, to be brevet captain, for gallantry on the 2d and 6th of April (wounded).

Second Lieut. John K. Dorrance, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, to be brevet first lieutenant, for gallantry on the 2d of April, 1865 (wounded).

ENLISTED MEN.

Private William Railton, Company E, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, for gallantry in being one of the first in the enemy's works April 2.

Color-Sergt. William J. Babcock, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, and Color-Corpl. Thomas Parker,* and Corpl. Maurice O. Hearn, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, for being first in the enemy's works April 2.

Sergt. Samuel M. Bolton, Company C, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery in the assault on April 2.

---

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

Corpl. Richard Welch, Company E, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery April 2, 1865, capturing a stand of colors and shooting a man at the guns, and for conspicuous bravery on the 6th of April.

Private Charles A. Taggart, Company B, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for capturing a stand of colors from enemy April 6.

Corpl. S. J. Dean, Company E, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous services April 2.

Corpl. Patrick Kelly, Company E, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for bravery and bayoneting a rebel soldier in act of shooting his commanding officer April 2, 1865.

Private William McOne, Company B, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, capturing a stand of colors April 2, 1865.

Sergt. George W. Johnson, Company K, and Sergt. William Ployd, Company B, Private Lewis J. Donlap, Company F, Private Samuel Winterbottom, Company A, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for being the first to enter the enemy's works and securing two pieces of artillery April 2, 1865.

Color-Sergt. Henry Enlriken and Color-Corpl. John T. Hall, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry April 2 and 6.

Corpl. August Franz, Company A, Sergt. A. Q. Smith and Sergt. F. T. Smith, Company B, Sergt. Angus Cameron and Drummer George Deverney, Company C, Orderly Sergt. James Young, Company D, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, Sergt. R. H. Langton, Company F, Corpl. A. B. Day, Company G, and Sergt. R. Elwell, Company K, for distinguished service April 2 and 6 in rallying the men and among the first to enter the enemy's works and killing the gunners at their guns.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. EDWARDS,
Colonel, Commanding.

---

No. 115.

Reports of Capt. Archibald Hopkins, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry.

HEADQRS. THIRTY-SEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,

In the Field, April 15, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular from headquarters Third Brigade, of April 14, 1865, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the operations of the late campaign:

In the assault on the enemy's works at Petersburg on the morning of April 2 this regiment was in the front line of the brigade, on the right of the Fifth Wisconsin. In advance of the line of battle were deployed as skirmishers seventy-five picked men and volunteers from this regiment, who covered the entire brigade front and were commanded by Capt. J. C. Robinson, assisted by Second Lieut. H. A. Cushman. At the word of command the regiment advanced rapidly, with a cheer, forced their way through two lines of abatis, over the ditch into the enemy's fort, where (after a brief but sharp conflict, the enemy's gunners standing to their pieces and firing them two or three times after some of us were in the fort) we captured 3 guns, about 40 prisoners, and a battle-flag.

Captain Robinson, in command of the skirmish line, was one of the first to reach the abatis, and was wounded there. Adj't. J. S. Bradley and First Lieut. W. C. Morrill particularly distinguished themselves by gallantry and efficiency. Corpl. Richard Welch, Company B, knocked down the rebel color-bearer, took his flag, and shot one of the gunners while in the act of discharging his piece. Corporal Kelly, of the same company, bayoneted the man who shot his commanding officer while ascending the parapet.

Our loss in the assault was 3 men killed and 3 officers and 29 men wounded.

The regiment was the first in the enemy's works.

After reforming the line, leaving Lieutenant Oushman and his company temporarily in charge of the captured guns, I joined the brigade, from which we had become separated, and moved with it toward the left. During this movement the regiment destroyed several wagons and a number of tents filled with clothing, officers' baggage, and quartermaster's property. We then moved with the rest of the command toward the right, and when near General Lee's headquarters were opened upon on the flank by a rebel battery. I moved the regiment into a sheltered position, and sent out two companies with orders to silence the guns. This they succeeded in doing and in killing so many of the horses that the entire battery—Carpenker's—was soon after taken by the Second Division, whose line in advancing covered that part of the field. That night Companies E and I were on the skirmish line and were among the first troops to enter the city of Petersburg in the morning. Soon after the regiment was allowed to march in and see the city, after which it rejoined the brigade and moved with it in pursuit of the enemy.

At the battle of Sailor's Creek the regiment, after severe double-quickening, which greatly exhausted the men, was put in position in column of wings, right in front, in rear of the Second Rhode Island. When the order to advance was given I deployed the regiment into line of battle and moved to left, so that my right joined the left of the Second Rhode Island. Just before reaching the swamp which protected the enemy's position I ordered the right company (C) to deploy so as to cover our front. They executed this movement with admirable rapidity and precision considering the nature of the ground, crossed the swamp, moved up the hill, and were soon exchanging shots with the enemy. The line was halted and reformed after crossing the swamp under cover of the hill, the crest of which was held by the enemy. We were then moved a short distance by the right flank, when the order "forward" was given. The men reserved their fire with noteworthy coolness until we were within a few rods of the enemy, who were formed in two lines of battle on the crest of the hill. They then opened with rapid volleys, advancing all the while with a yell. The enemy, unable to withstand our fire, gave back slowly at first, and soon disappeared from our front, leaving several prisoners and a caisson in our hands. I now found that we were entirely unsupported on either flank, and was about to take measures to connect with the Second Brigade, which had been on our left, when I noticed what seemed to be a heavy column of the enemy moving by the flank around our left. I hastened to that part of the line and caused it to be thrown back, after which a few well-directed volleys drove them out of sight again. At this juncture of affairs it was discovered that the enemy had moved a column through a ravine, which served to partly conceal the movement, around our right and about half the length of the regiment in our rear. We had barely time to face about when they charged us, and a desperate hand-to-hand fight with swords, pistols, and bayonets ensued. Several men were wounded with the bayonet. We did not give them an inch of ground and they were finally forced back into the ravine, where we swept the whole length of their line with such a terrible raking fire that they were unable to reply, and soon gave token of surrender. We accordingly ceased firing, when they opened fire on us, wounding Adjutant Bradley and some others. We immediately opened again with redoubled energy, and in a few moments they surrendered in earnest. More than 300 were taken and sent to the rear.

General Custis Lee, who commanded their line, surrendered and gave up his sword to Private David D. White, of Company E; and Private Charles A. Taggart, of Company B, captured their battle-flag. Corpl. Richard Welch, of Company E, was overpowered by numbers and taken prisoner in a desperate attempt to capture a battle-flag in advance of our line. He was afterward retaken.

Instances of personal gallantry were too numerous to mention. Capt. George H. Hyde and Capt. George B. Chandley were particularly conspicuous in repelling the enemy's assault, and Adjutant Bradley and Lieutenant Morrill again distinguished themselves by their determined bravery and coolness. First Sergt. E. P. Cowles, Company D, cheered on the men while lying under a tree with a severe wound through the body.

Over eighty rebel dead were afterward counted in the ravine I have mentioned.

After the severest fighting was over the One hundred and twenty-first New York formed with their colors and a few men on our right.

In conclusion allow me to say that it is a settled conviction of all engaged that had we not been armed with the Spencer rifle we should not have been able to maintain our position, but, on the other hand, all would have been destroyed or captured. There were a few exceptions to the general good behavior of the regiment, all of which were among the enlisted men, and it is my intention that they be brought to trial.

Our casualties in this engagement were 8 men killed and 3 officers and 28 men wounded.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. HOPKINS,

Captain, Comdg. Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.

Capt. T. G. COLT,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRTY-SEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

SIR: I respectfully request that the following may be appended to my report of the part taken by this regiment in the late campaign, which in the haste of preparation I unintentionally omitted:

Capt. C. L. Edwards, who had the special supervision of the right wing during both battles, showed himself cool, capable, and brave. Throughout both engagements Chaplain F. O. Morse, by his continual and immediate presence with the regiment, even when under the hottest fire, rendered the most important services to our wounded. After Adjutant Bradley was wounded I directed Second Lieutenant Nichols to act in his place, and he performed the duties of the position during the remainder of the fight most gallantly and acceptably. I also desire to mention particularly First Lieutenant Vincent, who, always cool, brave, and prompt, has rendered most valuable services from the commencement of the campaign in whatever position placed. I also desire to recommend Color-Sergt. E. D. Hooker for a medal and promotion at the first opportunity for his invariable gallantry and unflinching courage. Sergeant (now first sergeant) Shaw, of Company D, also merits particular mention for good conduct throughout, and particularly at the battle of Sailor's Creek.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. HOPKINS,

Captain, Comdg. Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.

Capt. T. G. COLT,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRTY-SEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,

March [April] 7, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to state that there were 3 officers and 28 men wounded and 8 men killed in the engagement of yesterday. The officers were Capt. Walter B. Smith, First Lieut. and Adj. John S. Bradley, and Second Lieut. Harrie A. Cushman. There were 360 officers and men, and General C. Lee, captured by my command. General Lee was captured by Private D. D. White, Company E, of this regiment, and he formally surrendered his sword to Lieut. W. C. Morrill, of this regiment, who now wears it. At least one battle-flag was captured by the Thirty-seventh Regiment, and one other is claimed, although the capture of it is claimed by another command.

Very respectfully,

A. HOPKINS,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. T. G. COLT,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 116.

Report of Bvt. Col. Baynton J. Hickman, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQRS. FORTY-NINTH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In reply to circular from headquarters Third Brigade, First Division, Sixth Army Corps, of April 14, 1865, I have the honor to forward the following report as the part taken by this regiment in the late operations, from the assault on the works in front of Petersburg to the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia by General Lee:

On the evening of April 1 the regiment was ordered to move, and about 11 o'clock we left camp and moved with the brigade toward the left, and passed through our works near Fort Fisher, and formed on the left of the One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers in the second line of battle. When the order to advance was given the regiment moved with the brigade toward Hatcher's Run, and then came back to the enemy's works in front of Fort Fisher, and moved on the left of the brigade toward Petersburg. During the night the enemy evacuated, and on the 3d the regiment moved with the brigade in pursuit of the enemy in the direction of Amelia Court-House. Nothing worthy of note occurred until the evening of April 6, when we came upon the enemy near Sailor's Creek. The Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers was formed in the second line, the One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right, and one wing of the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers on the left. We advanced, and the troops on the right and left obliqued, and this regiment filled the opening and became part of the advance line, and then advanced across Sailor's Creek and attacked the enemy in the woods. After getting within twenty yards of the woods the enemy got upon our left flank, and had then a fire in front and flank, compelling us to fall back. The same night we were detached as a guard, by order of Major-General Wright, to take charge of rebel prisoners captured in the engagement. On the 7th the regiment was sent with prisoners to Burkeville Junction. When they had been turned over, we started to rejoin the brigade, which we did on Monday, the 10th instant.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. J. HICKMAN,

Brevet Colonel, Comdg. Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Capt. T. G. COLY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 117.

Report of Col. Isaac C. Bassett, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. EIGHTY-SECOND PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers in the late operations:

On the morning of the 2d of April the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers formed the third line of battle of the Third Brigade, First Division, in the column of attack upon the enemy's works in front of Petersburg; was among the first to enter the works, rendering great assistance in defeating the enemy, and capturing some 400 prisoners and one rebel battle-flag. The regiment also participated in the capture of Petersburg. Our loss was 5 enlisted men killed and 22 wounded; total, 27.

The regiment also participated in the pursuit of the enemy until the afternoon of April 6, at Sailor's Run, when the left wing of the regiment formed the left of the first line of battle, the right wing forming the left of the second line. The attack commenced by our troops moving upon the enemy. The advance of the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers was through a deep, difficult swamp and almost impenetrable undergrowth and forest. Here the flank fire of the enemy becoming severe, changed front forward on the left and confronted the enemy within fifty yards of their position. Here the regiment did great execution, as the serious loss or vast number of the enemy's dead in our immediate front afterward indicated. Our loss during this engagement was—killed, 1 officer, 18 enlisted men; wounded, 7 officers, 73 enlisted men; total, 8 officers, 91 enlisted men.

With pleasure I recommend for honorable mention Maj. William Clark, of this regiment, who, by his gallantry, energy, and cool, clear judgment, rendered valuable service; also, Capts. Albert Ivers (Company C) and William H. Knight (Company K) for unusual bravery in leading their companies in the action, during which they were both dangerously wounded; also, Private Charles Desota (Company K), for the capture of one Confederate battle-flag.

Respectfully, yours, &c.,

I. O. BASSWELL,
Colonel.

Capt. THOMAS G. COLT,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 118.

Report of Maj. William G. Gray, One hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 119TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
Near Burkeville Station, Va., April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In conformity with circular from headquarters Third Brigade, April 15, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this command in the late campaign:

Broke camp on the evening of April 1; marched to Fort Fisher; formed on the right of second line, on the left of the fort, and at 4 a. m. on the 2d charged the enemy's works; after gaining possession of them a portion of the command formed a line facing to the right. The enemy at this time occupied the forts and batteries on the right, and were shelling the First and Second Brigades vigorously. With that portion of the command that had been previously faced to the right the forts and batteries were charged and captured—in all, seven pieces of artillery and a large number of prisoners. After holding the captured works for an hour and a half our ammunition gave out. The command was ordered to rejoin the brigade; returned to division headquarters, when I was ordered to report to General Hamblin, commanding Second Brigade, the Third Brigade being at that time on the extreme left of the line; rejoined the brigade on its return from the left, marched to the right, formed line on the left of Second Division; advanced in line to near the enemy's interior works; formed line in a road on the right of the brigade. During this movement the command was exposed to a severe artillery fire. Were relieved at 5 p. m. by troops from the Second Corps; moved to the left, formed on the right of the second line of the brigade, and remained here for the night. At 7 a. m. April 3 took up line of march, following up the enemy; arrived near Amelia Court-House on the evening of April 5; formed on the left of front line of the brigade, supporting the Second Division; moved by left of regiment to the front through the woods and thicket for about an hour; finding no enemy, returned to original camp, and at once followed the enemy; came up with him about 5 p. m.; formed on right of second line; advanced about half a mile; came upon the enemy posted in a strong position on south side of Sailor's Creek; was ordered to form on the left of Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, which was done immediately after crossing the creek. I will here state that the water and mud in the creek was waist deep, and the crossing was made under a very severe musketry fire.

After reforming the line was advanced and the enemy's position was charged; the left flank of the command was exposed to a severe flank fire, caused by not having any connection on the left, which caused a temporary panic, which was at once corrected and the line established. After the surrender of General Ewell and his corps we marched with the Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers and Eighty-second Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers to the Lynchburg road; remained a short time; returned to the division and went into camp. Started next morning at 5 o'clock; were detailed as wagon guard; marched to Farmville and halted for the night. Moved next morning at 6 o'clock; marched to near Buckingham and encamped for the night. Moved at 5 o'clock next morning; came up with the enemy at 11 a. m., and at 5 p. m. received the announcement of the surrender of General Lee and his army. Remained two days, and returned to this place (Burkeville), where we arrived on the 13th instant.

The officers and men of this command have conducted themselves gallantly through this short but hard and decisive campaign.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. GRAY,

Major, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. T. G. COLT,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 119.

Report of Lieut. Col. Elisha H. Rhodes, Second Rhode Island Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND RHODE ISLAND VOLUNTEERS,

April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command in the late operations:

On the morning of the 2d of April my regiment was formed in the second line of the brigade, in rear of the Fifth Wisconsin Volunteers, ready for the assault. When the line advanced I became separated from the main line (which swung either to the right or left), but pushed forward and crossed two lines of abatis in front of a battery of one gun. We soon reached the works and mounted the parapet, driving the enemy from the line through their company streets. First Lieut. and Actg. Adjt. Frank S. Halliday here stormed a battery of two guns, at the head of a small party, and turned the guns upon the enemy. As soon as my line was formed I changed direction to the left, and moved forward for about half a mile, crossing the plank road, and formed in line of battle, and awaited orders. I was then ordered to report, by the brigade commander, back to the works, which I did. In the subsequent movements of the brigade my regiment was not detached, but participated in them all. My loss this day was, 1 officer wounded, 2 men killed, and 9 men wounded. I claim that my colors were the first to be planted on that part of the line, and were placed on the parapet while the enemy still occupied their line.

In the presence of the enemy nothing of particular interest occurred until the afternoon of the 6th, when we met the enemy near Sailor's Creek. My regiment was formed as a support to the brigade, but in the advance were posted on the left of the Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers in prolongation of their line. Arriving at the creek we became exposed to the enemy's fire, but pushed on through the swamp, which in many places was so deep as to destroy the ammunition of my men. As soon as we were clear of the swamp I reformed my line and sent out skirmishers to develop the enemy's position. When the brigade advanced my left flank became exposed. I partly protected myself by refusing the left wing. We pressed the enemy back to the woods in our front, and when within a distance of about thirty yards received a charge of the enemy, both in front and on my left, which caused my men, after a time, to retire in some confusion. Every effort was made to rally them without crossing the swamp. My U. S. flag was captured, but quickly retaken. Captain Gleason and Lieutenant Perry were hero killed while gallantly urging their men on. At this point my regiment was somewhat scattered, but joined the brigade in the new assault which resulted so gloriously. At night we bivouacked on the field with the brigade.

For the first time under fire, I expected great difficulty with my new troops, but I cannot speak too highly of their conduct. My officers, without one exception, behaved splendidly.

My loss this day was, 2 officers killed and 4 wounded, 2 enlisted men killed and 38 wounded. My total loss in officers and men during the campaign was 58 killed and wounded. Several wounded men have since died.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. H. RHODES,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Second Rhode Island Volunteers.

Capt. T. G. COLR,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

---

No. 120.

Report of Col. Thomas S. Allen, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH WISCONSIN VOLUNTEERS,

April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular of the 14th instant, I have the honor to report:

First. That in the attack on the rebel lines near Fort Fisher on the morning of the 2d instant my regiment was placed in the front line, with the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts on my right. This line was preceded by a light line of pioneers and sharpshooters. At the signal "forward!" the line started promptly, out through the abatis in a very few moments, and soon carried the works in our front. My regiment first planted its colors on the works. Without waiting to hold captured property, although several guns were captured by my men, a flank fire was opened both to the right and left, assisting the other brigades of this and the Second Division in carrying their respective fronts. In the afternoon of the same day, and during all the following, my regiment joined in the general movement of the brigade.

Among the names especially deserving of honorable mention are those of the gallant Capt. John B. Doughty, who was killed while urging his men through the abatis; Capt. Henry Curran and Lieut. E. R. Jones did good service; Capt. Thomas Flint captured and destroyed two wagons loaded with valuable stores; Capt. William Bremmer captured and destroyed three wagons, also loaded; Lieutenant-Colonel Bull was one of the first officers to enter the works. The color-sergeant, Robert H. Langton, and color-corporal, August Franz, cannot be too highly praised for their energy and daring. Sergt. James Young, of Company D, with some fifteen or twenty men, pushed ahead to the South Side road and fired on a train of cars which was passing, and cut the telegraph wires for some distance, showing that they were the first to strike the road, since cars could not run had the road been struck previously.

Our loss this day was 14 killed and 67 wounded.

Second. In the movement of the 6th instant an attack was made on the left of the rebel line near Little Sailor's Creek. My regiment was ordered forward in line of battle, and I was instructed to guide on Third Division. The Third Division not starting in time, I pushed ahead, under orders of Colonel Edwards, down the hill and across the swamp, into which the men plunged recklessly, some of them up to their arm-pits. Having reformed the line, which had become broken by the passage of this obstacle, I threw out Company G, under command of Capt. Henry Curran, and Company C, under command of Lieut. H. R. Jones, as skirmishers. This line advanced rapidly, losing sixteen men by a fire from our left flank. I then ordered the whole line forward, suffering heavily from the same fire. The skirmishers, re-enforced by a portion of my line, swung around to the left and took the rebels in flank, causing for a moment a general stampede. Seeing a general officer and staff making to the rear and left, Captain Curran sent forward several men from his right to watch their movement. These men soon got into their rear, when, seeing further retreat useless, Lieutenant-General Ewell surrendered himself and staff to Sergt. Angus Cameron, in charge of squad, remarking that he surrendered himself and 5,000 men, and inquired for an officer; none being present at the moment he surrendered unconditionally. Soon after a squad of cavalry came up and claimed the prisoners and took possession of them. Our loss was 15 killed and 72 wounded.

The names of the six men who captured General Ewell are, Sergt. Angus Cameron, Corpl. Charles Roughan, Corpl. August Broeker, and Private John W. Davis, of Company C; Corpl. John J. Cosat and Private H. W. True, Company I.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. S. ALLIN,

Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

[Capt. T. G. COLT,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 121.

*Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. George W. Getty, U. S. Army, commanding
Second Division.*

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 17, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the Second Division in the assault on the enemy's works on the morning of the 2d instant and in the subsequent operations which resulted in the surrender of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia:

Leaving the pickets, re-enforced by the division sharpshooters, under Bvt. Maj. William H. Terrell, and the garrison of the forts, consisting of a detachment from the Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, in Fort Urnston, and the Sixty-second New York in Forts Tracy and Keone, the command moved from camp, without knapsacks, shortly after midnight preceding the 2d, filed through the breast-works and abatis by openings made for the purpose, on the right and left of Fort Welch, and were massed in columns of regiments, each brigade forming a column immediately in rear of the intrenched picket-line captured from the enemy on the 25th of March, and since held by our pickets. From this point, directly in front of Fort Welch, a ravine led straight up to the enemy's works, a distance of 600 yards. The ground, gently ascending, was partly open and partly obstructed by stumps and branches of trees. Grant's (Vermont) brigade (Second) rested its left on this ravine, and was made the directing column; Hyde's brigade (Third) was placed in the center; and Warner's (First) on the right. The First Division was in echelon in support on the right of the division, and the Third, in similar order, on the left. Axmen to cut away the abatis were placed in the front lines. It was strongly impressed upon commanders to force their way through all opposition and obstructions into the enemy's works, and the works once carried, the troops were to be halted and reformed in readiness for any emergency. About 2 a. m., while the troops were moving into position, the pickets commenced firing to cover, it is said, the movement. The enemy's pickets replied vigorously, and a number of brave officers and men were killed or wounded. The loss was heaviest in Hyde's brigade (Third), in which two regimental commanders—Lieut. Col. E. D. Holt, Forty-ninth New York, and Lieut. Col. J. W. Crosby, Sixty-first Pennsylvania—were mortally wounded. Bvt. Maj. Gen. L. A. Grant, commanding Second Brigade, was slightly wounded in the head, but, although compelled to retire for a time, resumed command at night-fall.

At 4 a. m. the gun, the signal to advance, was fired from Fort Fisher. Owing, however, to the heavy cannonading on the Ninth Corps line, the signal was imperfectly understood, but at the command the men rose to their feet, leaped over the rifle-pits, and moved forward. The lines, being massed close together, advanced successively, each moving forward as the preceding gained a distance of 100 yards. For several moments nothing was heard but the tramp and rustle of the advancing columns; but just as the enemy's picket-line was gained the silence was broken by a scattering volley. The troops instantly responded with a ringing cheer and pushed on in the face of the enemy's fire, which was now spitting along the whole line. The artillery on our left also opened, throwing case-shot, grape, and canister, most of which fell in rear of our troops. Although considerable confusion was caused by the character of the ground and the darkness of the night, resolute men from every regiment in the division rushed gallantly forward, forced aside the abatis and swarmed over the works, capturing nearly all the enemy behind them. It is impossible to determine to whom is due the honor of first entering the works, or what regiment first planted its flag upon them, but that this honor is due to the troops and colors of the Second Division there can be no doubt. The position of the division in front of the corps, having the shortest line to the enemy's works, and carrying those works in the first charge without repulse, renders it physically impossible that it should be otherwise.

Simultaneously with the assault just described, Lieut. Col. Charles A. Milliken, division officer of the day, in compliance with instructions previously given him, advanced the picket-line, which was on the right of the main attack, seized the enemy's line of picket pits, and captured therein between 400 and 500 prisoners. From this point a farther advance was made, and two forts, with three guns each, taken, one of which, known as Fort McGraw, was soon after relinquished to a strong column of the enemy, the pickets and sharpshooters having expended their ammunition. The enemy being afterward forced back by the main advance on Petersburg, the pickets and sharpshooters were withdrawn and rejoined the command about 9 p. m.

The troops, after breaking through the enemy's works, pressed forward with the greatest dash and enthusiasm, and without order or formation, until at length they were halted with great difficulty and the lines reformed at a point on the Boydton plank road over a mile from the rebel lines. The division was then moved by the left flank, and put in position in one line—Warner on the right, Hyde in the center, and Grant's (Vermont) brigade, now commanded by Bvt. Col. Charles Munde, assistant adjutant-general, on the left, with the left near the captured works, and the line extending therefrom at right angles and facing westward, or toward Hatcher's Run. A few skirmishers of the Third Division joined the left with the breast-works, and two brigades of the First Division were moving up in support of the right flank, when, the formation being completed, the line was advanced. The enemy resisted stoutly from a fort a few hundred yards in front of our left and fired several rounds of canister, but being soon outflanked and enveloped, the work was taken, with several guns and a number of prisoners, and no further resistance was made. For over two miles the line moved forward over a wooded and difficult country, capturing flags, guns, and prisoners at every step. In the eagerness of the advance many prisoners and captures were sent to the rear and turned over without proper receipts or credit being obtained for them.

Having advanced nearly to Hatcher's Run, opposite the front of the Army of the James, and the enemy having disappeared, the line was halted, reformed, and closed in to the left. The two brigades of the First Division and the Third Division soon after came up and the troops rested. About 9 a. m., it having been decided to advance on Petersburg, the troops were put in motion for that point, retracing their steps and marching in parallel columns. After passing the scene of the morning assault, the division was formed in two lines, on the left of the Twenty-fourth Corps, with the right of the division on the Boydton plank road, Munde's (Vermont) brigade on the right, Warner's in the center, and Hyde's on the left, with his left refused—and advanced under shell fire about half a mile, when a temporary halt was made. This point is about two miles from the inner lines about Petersburg. Much annoyance was experienced from the fire of a battery on the Cox road, on our left, which, frequently changing its position, completely enfiladed our lines. The shelling from front and right was also severe. Allen's (Rhode Island) battery and Harn's battery, which were attached to the division, were brought up and replied to the enemy's fire. At my suggestion General Wheaton, commanding First Division, moved his division up to extend and support the left; but observing the enemy moving guns and troops on the Cox road and endeavoring to form, I advanced the command at once, without waiting for the First Division, in order to attack before he was ready. This advance was made about noon.

The troops moved forward with great spirit, although under a very heavy fire of shell and a desultory musketry. The batteries, Harn's and Allen's, advanced in fine style with the infantry, and kept up a hot fire, and the enemy were forced rapidly back. The force manen-vering on the Cox road retired before our advance, to avoid being cut off from Petersburg, until a last stand was made at Edge Hill, Lee's headquarters, where the battery, being deserted by its support and the horses killed, was captured after a brave resistance. The enemy now took refuge behind the inner works about Petersburg. The division, much fatigued and scattered by the rapid advances and hard work of the day, was in no shape to assault the works. Accordingly the troops were collected and reformed, and posted in two lines, with the left on the Appomattox; intrenchments were erected and pickets thrown out. A desultory artillery firing closed the day's work.

The enemy having evacuated Petersburg and retreated during the night of the 2d, the following day the troops advanced westward in pursuit by the Nanosine (or River) road, the Second Division in advance, and bivouacked on Whipponeck Creek, after a march of fourteen miles. On the 4th advanced across Winticomack Creek, twelve miles; on the 5th, to near Jetersville Station, sixteen miles, and camped in two lines on the right of the Third Division, with the First Division massed in support on our right, the lines extending nearly east and west, and facing north toward Amelia Court-House, where the enemy was reported in force.

At 6 a. m. on the 6th the line was advanced by the right of regiments to the front nearly three miles toward Amelia Court-House, when the enemy being found to have retreated the troops retraced their steps, and, marching by the camp of the night preceding, crossed the Danville railroad at Jetersville Station and followed a road leading to Rice's Station on the South Side Railroad.

The division being in rear did not participate in the struggle at Sailor's Creek, although brought up and formed in line on the double-quick. After crossing the creek the division was placed in the advance, and soon after night fall moved forward about two miles, when the troops were encamped for the night. The Second Vermont Regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel Tracy, deployed as skirmishers, pushed forward nearly two miles further, until the enemy's rear guard was encountered, when a slight skirmish ensued without result.

On the 7th the command moved to Farnville, via Rice's Station, crossed the Appomattox, and bivouacked on the north side, making a march of fourteen miles.

On the 8th moved to New Store on the Appomattox Court-House plank road, fifteen miles; and on the 9th moved ten miles to the scene of the surrender of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia. Having rested during the 10th, on the 11th the command retraced their steps, marching through Farnville and Rice's Station to the present camp near Burkeville Junction, which was reached on the afternoon of the 13th.

In these operations the officers and men of the division displayed their usual gallantry, so conspicuous during the campaigns of the last year. Recommendations of those who particularly distinguished themselves will be forwarded at the earliest practicable moment.

Accompanying are reports of brigade commanders, lists of casualties, &c.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. GETTY,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

Bvt. Maj. C. H. WHITTIELSKY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Army Corps.

A D D E N D A.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 16, 1865.

Maj. C. H. WHITTEELSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters Sixth Corps:

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that during the engagements of the 2d instant the following-named enlisted men captured flags, &c.: Corp'l. Charles W. Dolloff, Company K, Eleventh Vermont, one flag; Private Theodore Mitchell, Company C, Sixty-first Pennsylvania, one flag; Private Milton Matthews, Company C, Sixty-first Pennsylvania, one flag; Serg't. Lester G. Hack, Company F, Fifth Vermont, one flag; Serg't. Charles Marquette, Company F, Ninety-third Pennsylvania, one flag; Serg't. Frank Shubert, Company E, Forty-third New York, two markers.*

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. W. GETTY,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 18, 1865.

Maj. C. H. WHITTEELSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps:

SIR: I have the honor to forward the following list of casualties in this command during the engagement of the 2d instant.†

RECAPITULATION.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Brigade .....	2	5	9	83	.....	6	103
Second Brigade .....	2	24	11	152	.....	7	196
Third Brigade .....	2	7	12	72	.....	3	96
Total .....	4	36	32	307	.....	16	505

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. W. GETTY,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 20, 1865.

Maj. C. H. WHITTEELSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps:

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from corps headquarters, I have the honor to submit the following list of officers in this command who

* All the foregoing were awarded Medals of Honor.

† Nominal list omitted.

by distinguished gallantry and meritorious services in the assault of the enemy's works and the subsequent engagements of the 2d instant are deserving of promotion; also the names of enlisted men, including those who captured battle-flags, who by their conduct on the same day are entitled to receive medals or other rewards of merit: Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. M. Warner, colonel Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, commanding First Brigade, to be brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines on the 2d instant, and in the subsequent operations of the day; also for gallantry in the attack upon the enemy's picket-line in front of Fort Fisher on the 25th of March, 1865. Col. Thomas W. Hyde, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, commanding Third Brigade, to be brigadier-general by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines on the 2d instant, and in the subsequent operations of the day; also for gallantry in the attack upon the enemy's picket-line in front of Fort Fisher on the 25th of March, 1865. Bvt. Col. Charles Mudge, assistant adjutant-general, to be brigadier-general by brevet for gallantry and meritorious services in the assault on the enemy's line on the 2d, and in the subsequent operations of the day, when in command of the Vermont brigade. Bvt. Col. Hazard Stevens, assistant adjutant-general, U. S. Volunteers, to be brigadier-general by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct throughout the whole day, and for material services rendered in forming and reforming the troops. Capt. Henry R. Murray, One hundred and forty-eighth New York Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be major by brevet for meritorious conduct on the 25th of March, and lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant and very meritorious conduct on the 2d instant. First Lieut. Charles H. Anson, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be major by brevet for distinguished services in the assault, and for great gallantry in every movement throughout the day. Bvt. Maj. James D. Duncan, One hundred and second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for very meritorious conduct during the entire day. Bvt. Maj. William H. Terrell, Forty-third New York Volunteers, commanding division sharpshooters, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for his skill and bravery in leading his men to the assault of the enemy's lines. Capt. H. J. Gifford, Forty-ninth New York Volunteers, ordnance officer, to be major by brevet for very meritorious conduct and valuable services on this and all former occasions, in supplying the troops promptly with ammunition on the battle-field and in the skirmish line. First Lieut. John S. Cornue, regimental quartermaster, One hundred and twenty-second New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for distinguished bravery in leading the assault with his regiment, which services by his position as acting assistant quartermaster were entirely voluntary. Lieut. Col. D. J. Caw, Battalion Seventy-seventh New York Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for distinguished gallantry in the first assault where he commanded and led the first line of the brigade, and contributed greatly to the successful entrance into the enemy's main line of works, where he was wounded. Capt. J. D. Clapp, Battalion Seventy-seventh New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallantry in the first assault when he was wounded while tearing away abatis. Lieut. Col. S. O. Fletcher, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for distinguished gallantry and coolness while in command of the second line of the brigade, and for materially contributing to our success in penetrating the enemy's lines and for planting his colors upon their works among the first, if not the very first. Maj. A. B. Sumner, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for special skill and judgment in leading the skirmish line during the last assault. Capt. A. Merrill, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, to be major by brevet for advancing his picket line with the assaulting column and with six men capturing sixty-nine of the enemy and recapturing several of our men whom they had taken prisoners. Lieut. Col. Robert L. Orr, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for distinguished gallantry in the assault when he was the first of his regiment in the enemy's works and for gallantry in the last assault, where he was severely wounded yet did not leave his regiment. Capt. O. A. Parsons, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallantry in the assault, where he was wounded while tearing away abatis. Lieut. Col. William H. Long, assistant adjutant-general of volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for meritorious conduct in remaining on the field during the day when unfit from illness to keep the saddle. Bvt. Maj. George H. Selkirk, Battalion Forty-ninth New York Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for coolness and bravery while putting the brigade in position under fire from the enemy's skirmish line and for gallant bravery throughout the day. Capt. George W. Bennett, Third Vermont Volunteers, for gallant and meritorious conduct throughout the whole day, to be major by brevet. Bvt. Capt. Henry C. Baxter, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct throughout the day. Lieut. Col. A. S. Tracy, Second Vermont Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for the gallant manner in which he conducted the assault of the brigade on the enemy's works in the morning. Capt. A. C. Douglass, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct in the engagement on the 25th of March, when he was severely wounded. Lieut. Col. D. C. Keller, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct on the 25th of March, when he was severely wounded. Maj. John Fritz, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct on the 25th of March, when he was severely wounded. Capt. S. C. Crawford, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct both on the 25th of March and 2d of April. Bvt. Maj. R. W. Lyon, One hundred and second Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct on the 2d instant. Capt. B. Frank Bean, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant services rendered on the 25th of March and 2d of April. Capt. P. G. Mark, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant services rendered on the 25th ultimo and 2d instant. Lieut. O. Sharpless, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant services rendered on the 25th ultimo and 2d instant. Lieut. B. F. Krieger, acting aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet for services rendered on the 25th ultimo and 2d instant. Maj. Eugene O. Cole, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for distinguished service in advancing the skirmish line of the division and capturing a fort. Capt. Charles G. Gould, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, to be major by brevet for great gallantry in mounting the enemy's works, where he received a severe bayonet wound in the face. Capt. E. W. Harrington, Second Vermont Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct in leading and cheering his men on through the whole day. Maj. William J. Sperry, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallantry in assisting to capture two pieces of artillery. Capt. George G. Tilden, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be major by brevet for distinguished services in capturing Colonel Nelson (commanding a rebel brigade), and a large number of prisoners. First Lieut. George A. Bailey, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallantry in aiding to capture two pieces of artillery and for untiring energy and good conduct throughout the day. First Lieut. John H. Macomber, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallantry in the assault of the morning, in which he received a very dangerous wound. Capt. R. L. Amesley, Battalion Forty-third New York Volunteers, to be major by brevet for bravery throughout the whole day. Capt. J. C. Sample, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault on the enemy, when he was severely wounded. Lieut. Col. Charles Keen, Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet for gallant conduct in the first charge, when he was wounded, causing the loss of leg. Capt. William L. Pettit, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct throughout the day. First Lieut. H. J. Nichols, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet and major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct both on the 25th of March and 2d of April. First Lieut. Hugh McIlwain, One hundred and second Pennsylvania Volunteers, pioneer officer, to be captain by brevet for meritorious services rendered throughout the day. First Lieut. William H. Savage, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet for gallantry and good behavior throughout the day. First Lieut. D. A. Monroe, One hundred and twenty-second New York Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, to be captain by brevet for gallantry and good behavior throughout the entire day. First Lieut. Thomas Lynch, Battalion Forty-third New York Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for bravery throughout the entire day. First Lieut. French W. Fisher, Battalion Forty-ninth New York Volunteers, to [be] captain by brevet for distinguished gallantry in the assault when he was wounded. Capt. Charles H. Bewley, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for special bravery throughout the entire day.

I respectfully recommend that medals be awarded to the following-named enlisted men: Sergt. Lester G. Huek, Company F, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, who captured the colors of the Twenty-third Tennessee rebel regiment. Corpl. Charles W. Delloff, Company K, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, who captured the colors of the Forty-second Mississippi rebel regiment. Sergt. Charles Marquette, Company E, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, who captured a rebel battle-flag. Private Milton Matthews, Company C, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, who captured the colors of the Seventh Tennessee rebel regiment; Private Theodore Mitchell, Company O, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, who captured the battle-flag of the Tennessee brigade. Sergt. Frank Shubert, Company E, Forty-third New York Volunteers, who captured two guidons of a rebel regiment. Sergt. Thomas L. McColley, Company F, Second Vermont, for general good conduct and for gallantry in carrying the brigade flag at the head of the brigade during the entire engagement; Corpl. A. A. Carter, Company D, Fourth Vermont, who recaptured an officer of the Third Division, Sixth Corps, and brought in the captors, two rebel prisoners; First Sergt. Israel Higbitt, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, who captured one of the pieces near General Lee's headquarters; Corpl. Isaac Colburn, Company D, One hundred and twenty-second New York Volunteers, for being the first man of his regiment in the enemy's line, and for shooting down a gunner while in the act of discharging a piece directed toward our assaulting column; Sergt. Frank E. Johnson, Company D, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, and Sergt. M. H. Smith, Company G, First Maine Veteran Volunteers, for capturing and destroying twenty-one of the enemy's wagons and also capturing part of the mules. The following-named enlisted men are deserving of especial honorable mention for gallant and meritorious conduct during the engagements of the 2d instant: Color-Sergt. D. W. Young, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Private E. G. Kennedy, Company C, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers; First Sergt. Orlando S. Turner, Company D, Second Vermont Volunteers; Sergt. Hoxsey C. Rogers, Company I, Second Vermont Volunteers; Private Ira Pierce, Company F, Second Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. J. E. Johnson, Company E, Third Vermont Volunteers; First Sergt. James D. Willard, Company F, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. Benjamin A. Patch, Company A, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; First Sergt. Carlos H. Rich, Company D, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Sergt. Henry McCole, Company E, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Sergt. John B. Kenney, Company C, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. William H. Eaton, Company C, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. James M. Crossman, Company E, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Private E. F. Fish, Company F, Fourth Vermont Volunteers; Sergt. Jackson, Company D, Fifth Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. Nelson E. Carle, Company A, Fifth Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. Henry H. Recor, Company A, Fifth Vermont Volunteers; Color-Sergt. Peter Begor, Sixth Vermont Volunteers; Color-Sergt. Orris Pier, Sixth Vermont Volunteers; Private William S. Jenne, Company H, Sixth Vermont Volunteers; Private Sidney Wells, Company H, Sixth Vermont Volunteers; Color-Sergt. Samuel L. Daggett, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers; Color-Sergt. Patrick Byrne, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers; Corpl. J. C. Mathews, Company A, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; Sergt. George W. Dawson, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers; Corpl. Thomas Pendergast, Company B, Forty-ninth New York Volunteers; First Sergt. Josiah S. Brown, Company H, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Sergt. Edward J. Kenney, Company B, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Sergt. Albion Syphers, Company H, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Private Delon Newcomb, Company H, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Private Alden S. Baker, Company H, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Private Peter Brackett, Company B, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. John B. Fleming, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Sergt. James A. Foss, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. J. B. Maxwell, Company F, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. John E. Yates, Company E, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. Green C. Spencer, Company C, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. T. W. Gilpatrick, Company D, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. George M. Littlefield, Company C, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. A. O. Clark, Company H, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Corpl. Richard Webster, Company K, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Private George Lamb, Company K, First Maine Veteran Volunteers; Private Asa B. Lovell, Company D, First Maine Veteran Volunteers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. GETTY,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Division.

No. 122.

Report of Lieut. Col. Charles A. Milliken, Forty-third New York Infantry, Division Officer of the Day.

HEADQUARTERS FORTY-THIRD NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 17, 1865.

SIR: I most respectfully forward the following report of the action of the picket-line of the division in the engagement of the 2d instant:

Agreeably to orders received from the corps officer of the day, about 11 p. m. of the 1st fire was opened along the picket-line to cover the formation of the corps in front of Fort Welch, which was continued until the signal for the corps to advance was given, when the pickets moved forward and occupied the picket-posts of the enemy, capturing between 400 and 500 prisoners. The pickets also were the first to enter the fort, near the Jones house, and captured three pieces of artillery, which, I have since learned, are claimed by the First Division of the corps. Having met with success so far, I ordered the line forward again, and about seventy-five men, pickets and sharpshooters, entered a work known as Fort McGraw and captured three guns. This work had to be abandoned, as the ammunition was expended and could not be procured in time to resist a column of three regiments advancing to retake it. This work could have been held had the picket-line of the First Division advanced and kept up the connection between the two divisions. The right of the line was compelled to fall back as far as the works erected by the First Brigade on the 25th of March, the enemy having re-enforced his skirmish line, and our pickets out of ammunition. Three men were taken prisoners at this time, having advanced nearly to the main line of the enemy's works. As soon as ammunition could be procured every man was furnished with 100 rounds, and the line again moved forward, retaking all the ground lost, except Fort McGraw, which had been too strongly garrisoned for a picket-line to attack with any hope of success. Troops having been thrown forward on our left and also in our rear I ordered the line withdrawn, and joined the division about 9 p. m.

I cannot speak in too high terms of praise of the bravery of the assistant officer of the day, Major Cole, Fifth Vermont Volunteers; Capt. William H. Terrell, Second Division sharpshooters; Captain Wilder, Forty-ninth New York Volunteers, and other officers and men under my command, whose names and regiments I do not know.

The casualties were very slight, and are as follows: Killed, 1; wounded, 5; missing, 4.

CHARLES A. MILLIKEN,
Lieut. Col. 43d New York Vols., Division Officer of the Day.
Maj. CHARLES MUNNIE,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division, Sixth Corps.

No. 123.

Report of Bt. Brig. Gen. James M. Warner, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
April 16, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of my command from the 2d to the 13th instant, inclusive:

The brigade broke camp about 12.30 a. m. on the 2d, leaving the Sixty-second New York Veteran Volunteers as garrison to Forts Keene and Tracy, and went into position just in rear of the old Third Division picket-line near Fort Welch. The movement was executed under fire of the enemy's pickets, occasioning, however, but one or two casualties. The brigade was formed in column of regiments on the right of the Third Brigade in the following order: The One hundred and second Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers constituted the first line, the One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers the second, the Ninety-third Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers formed the third and fourth lines, and the Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the fifth. A detachment of axmen accompanied the first line to make gaps in the abatis. At the signal from Fort Fisher the lines moved successively, having an interval of about 100 yards between regiments. The column of attack was not discovered by the enemy's pickets until their pits were nearly gained. The intervening space to their main works, owing to the darkness, the uneven and swampy character of the ground, and the artillery fire, was passed over in great confusion. A few resolute men of each brigade of the division effected a lodgment and drove the enemy from their works. In this connection especial mention is due the One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers and the One hundred and second Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers. Without much organization fragments of all commands pushed on toward the South Side road, and were with great difficulty stopped and reformed about a mile from the works. A short time sufficed to unravel and reorganize commands, when the division was moved, by Major-General Getty, in the direction of Hatchet's Run, capturing guns, wagons, and many prisoners and dispersing the already disorganized enemy, meeting with scarcely any opposition. About 9 a. m. the command was countermarched and moved rapidly toward Petersburg. Here, for the first time since penetrating the enemy's works, we encountered an organized force. As soon as the division could be formed it was advanced toward the town, my brigade occupying the center.

A force of the enemy and a battery was seen moving down the Cox road, and for a few moments enfiladed us. The battery was successively driven from position to position, but finally rested at Lee's headquarters, about two miles from the city. Here it was fought with desperation, our troops advancing upon it under a murderous canister fire. The division was at this time far in advance of any other troops, and before charging halted for an instant from sheer exhaustion, under a protecting crest within easy canister range. Advantage was taken of this momentary delay to kill the battery horses, which was so effectually done as to render it impossible to remove a single gun. This was the last point disputed beyond the inner line of works about Petersburg. Guns, wagons, prisoners, and one battle-flag attest the good conduct of the brigade.

My command participated in the subsequent movements of the division; at Sailor's Creek was in advance of the division, and formed in support to our batteries in time to witness the enemy's charge, but did not participate in the engagement.

A complete list of casualties, as well as a report of officers and men who particularly distinguished themselves, has already been transmitted.

J. M. WARNER,

Breret Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Byt. Col. CHARLES MUNDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division, Sixth Corps.

No. 124.

Report of Capt. B. Frank Hean, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. NINETY-THIRD PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLS.,
April 15, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment on April 2, 1865:

The regiment was placed in the third and fourth lines of battle by battalions, forming on the picket-line in front of Battery Gregg. At 4 a. m. the order was given to charge the enemy's works, which were carried after a short and obstinate struggle. In so doing the enemy opened with artillery and infantry, causing the first two lines to waver, bringing all lines close in mass, with the third line (Ninety-third) as a front, which was first to plant the colors upon the works. We passed on, pursuing the enemy until ordered to halt for reformation. After reforming the line was moved off to the left for connection, halted, and after some time the lines were advanced toward Hatchers Run. Received orders to return toward Petersburg. Upon our arrival the regiment was placed in line of battle, which was advanced in an oblique direction to the left, bringing the regiment immediately fronting a battery, which opened with grape and canister, the line still closing in until only a few paces intervening. While so doing Sergt. Hiram Layland, Company H, led a squad to the left of the battery to outflank it, if possible; upon arriving within a short distance of it he opened fire, shooting several horses and causing the men to desert their guns; at the same time the line in its front charged; the line passed on a short distance, when ordered to halt. Intrenchments were thrown up as night approached.

Great praise is due Sergt. Charles Marquette, Company F, for capturing a rebel color while charging the enemy's works in the morning; Sergeant Layland for gallant service, and Corpl. Jacob Reinkenberger for planting the first color upon the enemy's works in the first charge. Sergeant Layland was killed in advance of the line at the canal while picking off the rebel artillerymen. Officers and men stood nobly throughout the day.

Our casualties are as follows: Killed, enlisted men, 3. Wounded, commissioned officers, 3; enlisted men, 32—which have been previously reported.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. FRANK HEAN,
Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. E. A. TODD,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 125.

Report of Capt. Bernhard Gessler, Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. NINETY-EIGHTH REGT. PENNSYLVANIA VET. VOLS.,
April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the report regarding the part taken by the Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers in the fight of the 2d day of April.

The brigade formed in two lines of battle on the left and in front of Fort Fisher, the Ninety-eighth Regiment being the second line. About 3.30 in the morning the signal was given to advance. We reached the enemy's works, losing but a few men. Charging across the intrenchments we pursued the enemy to the edge of a wood about a mile in the rear and left of the above-mentioned works. The regiment was then deployed as skirmishers, and halted for a short time until the word was given to advance, when the entire brigade moved forward, driving the enemy across Hatcher's Run. The brigade then formed and marched back toward the left of Petersburg, formed line of battle, and charged over a swamp toward a house, under a heavy artillery fire from the left and front. About 150 yards from the house, where the enemy's batteries were in front of, they opened on us with grape and canister, but a well directed musket fire from our men and from our right forced the enemy to leave the batteries; we followed up and drove him to the outskirts of Petersburg, at which place the day's fight closed.

The officers and men behaved bravely during the entire day; although it being a very hard day's work, the men kept up with a few exceptions.

Our entire loss is 4 officers and 15 men wounded; 1 officer and 1 enlisted man have died since of their wounds.

Very respectfully,

BERNHARD GESSLER,

Captain, Comdg. Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.

Capt. EDWARD A. TODD,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, First Brigade.

---

No. 126.

Report of Maj. James McGregor, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 139TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

SIR: Agreeably to orders I have the honor to forward the following report of the part taken by the One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers during the operations against Petersburg on the morning and during the day of April 2, 1865:

About 9 o'clock April 1 orders were received from brigade headquarters to have the regiment in readiness to move at 12 o'clock that night. At [that] hour orders were received to move out on the parade ground, and soon afterward the regiment, with the brigade, moved to the left and near Fort Welch, where arms were stacked and knapsacks were unslung and piled up and left in charge of a small guard. The regiment was then moved outside the works and massed with the brigade, preparatory to the assault which was to be made upon the enemy's works at 4 o'clock that morning, the One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment being in the second line, the first line being held by the One hundred and second Pennsylvania Volunteers. At the signal gun the One hundred and second advanced to the assault, and after it had advanced about 75 to 100 paces, the One hundred and thirty-ninth was put in motion and soon reached the main body of the One hundred and second, which appeared to be in some confusion, although it did not appear that they had been repulsed. Perceiving the situation, and fearing that the One hundred and thirty-ninth would become so mixed up in the confusion that it would be impossible to preserve its organization, I ordered the color-sergeants forward with the colors and pushed on over the first works of the enemy and up to the abatis immediately in front of their main works, and finding that the abatis did not present the impediment that was anticipated, in fact, it did not require any more time to go through than it did to cross their first works, the colors, closely followed by those of the regiment who had not been lost in the confusion, soon gained the enemy's main works, behind which were discovered many rebels, who appeared only too glad of the opportunity of going to our lines. I may here state that there was scarcely a shot fired by the enemy after the regiment had reached the abatis. A short halt was made on the enemy's works for the purpose of permitting the prisoners to pass over the works, and as soon as all were over the regiment moved forward through their camp, and proceeded about half a mile, where the regiment was halted and, according to orders, skirmishers were thrown out a distance of 400 or 500 yards, but were not permitted to remain long, as the First Division of the Sixth Corps coming on the right, they pushed on and ahead of the skirmish line. I then called in the skirmishers and advanced the regiment to the edge of the woods and sent out vedettes, and remained in that position until the brigade advanced in line for a considerable distance, and then moved by the left flank toward Fletcher's Run, where a short halt was made, and then the regiment, with the brigade, moved in the direction of Petersburg, and were for awhile considerably annoyed by the enemy's batteries; but I am happy to state that no loss was sustained in the regiment until the attack was made upon the batteries near the white house, where they received about as heavy a fire as ever the regiment was under from artillery. Nearly all the loss sustained by the regiment was at this time. The regiment, with the brigade, afterward advanced, and as there did not appear to be any connection on the right, orders were received to fall back, which was done. The regiment was not engaged at any time during the day, but were permitted to enjoy that rest which they so much needed.

I can say without boasting that the colors of the One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment were the first of the division upon the main works of the enemy; at least no colors were to be seen for a considerable distance on either the right or the left of the colors of the One hundred and thirty-ninth.

I add the above remarks in justice to the two color-sergeants of the One hundred and thirty-ninth, both of whom were wounded that day.

I am deeply indebted to the following-named officers of the One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers for their assistance during that day: Capt. J. O. Sample, who was wounded late in the day; Capt. Samuel Crawford, Lieutenant Black, acting adjutant; Lieutenant Bartley, Lieutenant Boggs, Lieutenant Schwinn, and also Captain Williams, who, although not for duty, acted with the regiment during the early part of the day.

Hoping that the above will prove acceptable, I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

JAMES McCREGOR,

Major, Commanding Regiment during operations of April 2.

Capt. E. A. Todd,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 127.

*Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Grant, U. S. Army, commanding
Second Brigade.*

HQDQS. SECOND BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
Camp near Burkeville, Va., April 16, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to respectfully transmit the report of Bvt. Maj. Merritt Barbor, assistant adjutant-general, of the operations and conduct of the brigade in the engagement of the 2d instant, and respectfully request the privilege of adopting it as my own. Wounded early in the morning, I was an eye-witness to only a small portion of the operations of the day, but I have implicit confidence in the correctness of the report, and I improve this occasion to speak in high terms of commendation of the gallant and meritorious conduct of Brevet Major Barbor.

The casualties of the day were 2 commissioned officers and 24 enlisted men killed; 10 officers and 151 men wounded, and 7 enlisted men missing; in all, 196. Four of the missing men were subsequently recaptured, and one is supposed killed. A nominal list of the casualties has already been forwarded.

I also herewith transmit the names of officers recommended for promotion, and of the enlisted men recommended for medals and rewards.

The brigade joined in the pursuit of Lee's retreating army early on the morning of the 3d instant, and formed in line of battle, near Jetersville, on the evening of the 5th instant.

On the morning of the 6th instant the brigade advanced toward Amelia Court-House to attack the enemy if found in position, and subsequently returned to the camp of the previous night, and then marched in pursuit of the retreating enemy. Making a forced march of several miles, the brigade, with the brigades of the division, came up in season to support the First and Third Divisions of the corps in the engagement of Sailor's Creek. Passing rapidly over the battle-field the brigade formed in line, and soon after dark advanced about two miles and encamped for the night. The Second Vermont Regiment, being thrown forward as skirmishers, came upon the enemy's cavalry, when a slight skirmish ensued. The next day we marched to Farmville and crossed the Appomattox.

When the corps left the vicinity of Farmville on the morning of the 8th instant I was ordered to return with the brigade to Farmville and remain until relieved by General Parke. In compliance with said order I remained at Farmville and garrisoned the town until about 10 a. m. of the 10th instant, when I was relieved by General Curtin's brigade, of General Parke's command, and immediately started to join the corps. After marching several miles I received unofficial intelligence from which I was satisfied of General Lee's surrender, whereupon I dispatched a staff officer to the brevet major-general commanding division for orders, and halted the command within one or two miles of New Store. The command subsequently returned to this place with the division.

The casualties of the brigade since leaving Petersburg, as reported, are three men wounded. One of those was wounded by the accidental discharge of one of the rebel muskets with which the road was strewn in large numbers.

I am happy to be able to add that notwithstanding the activeness of the campaign and the forced marches performed, the command is in efficient condition, and ready for any service it may be called upon to perform.

I remain, colonel, respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. A. GRANT,

Breret Major-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Col. CHARLES MUNDELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure No 1.]

HEADQUARTERS VERMONT BRIGADE,
April 15, 1865.

SIR: At your request I have the honor to report the part taken by this command in the engagement of the 2d instant, which resulted in the capture of Petersburg.

The brigade moved out from camp at 11 p. m., passed through the line of works near Fort Welch, and was silently placed in position in column of regiments close up to the intrenched skirmish line captured from the enemy on the 25th of March. The order of the regiments in column from front to rear was as follows: The Fifth Vermont, Lieut. Col. R. A. Kennedy commanding; Second Vermont, Lieut. Col. A. S. Tracy commanding; Sixth Vermont, Maj. William J. Sperry commanding; Fourth Vermont, Capt. George H. Amidon commanding; Third Vermont, Bvt. Col. H. W. Floyd commanding; Eleventh Vermont, in two battalions, under command of Maj. George D. Sowles and Capt. D. J. Safford, respectively, the two being under command of Lieut. Col. Charles Hunsden. By 1 a. m. the whole command had taken position and laid down to await the disposition of the troops upon the right and left. About 2 o'clock a heavy fire was opened along the entire skirmish line, which was vigorously replied to by the skirmishers of the enemy. During this fire we were sadly grieved to learn that you had been severely wounded in the head by a minie-bullet and would require immediate treatment. The troops being in position and everything in readiness, at 4 a. m. precisely the signal gun for the assault was fired from Fort Fisher, but owing to the heavy cannonading, which had been kept up at intervals during the night, it was not understood. Soon, however, it was learned that the signal had been given, and ours being the guiding brigade, that the troops on our right and left were waiting for us to advance. The command immediately moved forward over the works of the skirmish line and pressed on steadily and silently until they had very nearly reached the first line of the enemy's intrenchments, when they were discovered by their skirmishers, who delivered a weak and scattering volley and then fled. The alarm having been given and silence no longer necessary, a cheer, that has been heard on nearly every battle-field in Virginia, went up from 10,000 brave hearts, and told the story to friend and foe that the Sixth Corps was on a charge and pushing for the main works of the enemy, about 500 yards in front. After passing over about half the distance the enemy began to pour in a well-directed musketry fire from the front and artillery fire from forts on either hand, which completely enfiladed the line and caused it to waver. This was the most critical moment throughout the entire engagement. Day was just beginning to dawn and very soon the enemy would be able to discover our precise position and movements. They had also become apprised of the point of attack and were apparently beginning to appreciate its importance, and were hastening to meet it with all the strength at their disposal.

But, to the credit of the command, the hesitation was but momentary, and the troops again pushed forward with a determination that knew no such word as fail. The remaining portion of the ground was passed over under a most withering fire of musketry, but with a gallantry that was never surpassed, and which betokened the victory subsequently won. Officers and men vied with each other in the race for the works, and all organization was lost in the eagerness and enthusiasm of the troops. The line of abatis was brushed away like cobwebs and the men swarmed over the works with yells and cheers that struck terror to the rebels flying in all directions.

In crossing the ground in front of the abatis the casualties were very numerous; Lieut. George O. French, Eleventh Vermont, was instantly killed while gallantly cheering on his men, and Lieut. G. C. Hawkins, Third Vermont, acting adjutant Fourth Vermont, very dangerously wounded while leading the men forward with an enthusiasm deserving of all praise.

Bvt. Maj. E. G. Ballou, ever conspicuous in engagements, was also wounded by a piece of shell and obliged to retire from the field, but returned during the afternoon. It is confidently believed that Capt. Charles G. Gould, of the Fifth Vermont, was the first man of the Sixth Corps who mounted the enemy's works. His regiment was in the first line of the brigade and in the charge he was far in advance of his command. Upon mounting the works he received a severe bayonet wound in the face and was struck several times with clubbed muskets, but bravely stood his ground, killing with his saber the man who bayoneted him, and retiring from the works only after his comrades came to his assistance and routed the enemy from their lines.

Two earth-works, one to the right of the ravine, containing four guns, and the other to the left, containing two guns, were here captured.

After crossing the works the brigade pushed forward to the crest of the hill in the rear, where a short halt was ordered for the purpose of reforming. The organization obtained here was very incomplete, owing to the eagerness of the troops to pursue the enemy, who were making for the woods in the rear, but with such organization as it had the brigade, turning to the left, moved forward about half a mile and halted at the edge of a dense wood to reform. The brigade was here formed in single line, in numerical order from right to left, the Eleventh connecting with the Third Division, and about half a mile distant from and inside of the enemy's works. The lines being formed the whole command pushed forward vigorously through thickets, swamps, and pine woods, soon losing all organization again in the eagerness of the men to surpass each other in the pursuit of the enemy, who were being pressed so closely that they could scarcely fire a shot, and appeared to have given up all idea of resistance, and were only desirous to be taken prisoners. In this manner the pursuit was continued for about four miles in a direction nearly parallel with the works until Bailey's house, near Hatcher's Run, was reached, where the brigade was halted for a few minutes and then moved to the left and formed in column of regiments just inside the works.

Words are inadequate to express the conduct of the troops in this second charge. Every man appeared to consider himself a host, and singly or in squads of three or four they charged upon whatever obstructions came in their paths. Bvt. Maj. E. Wales, of the Second Vermont, with two men, captured a piece of artillery, turned it upon the enemy, and the shell with which the piece was charged went bowling through the woods after the very men who had prepared the compliment for us. Major Sperry, of the Sixth, and Lieutenant Bailey, of the Eleventh Vermont, assisted by a few men, captured two pieces and turned them upon the flying rebels. Being unable to procure primers the pieces were discharged by firing a musket into the vent of the piece. In this manner twelve rounds were fired, when a section of artillery coming up the guns were turned over to its commander.

Captain Tilden, of the Eleventh Vermont, with about a dozen men, captured 2 pieces of artillery, 11 commissioned officers, and 62 enlisted men of the Forty-second Mississippi Regiment. Sergt. Lester G. Hack, Company F, Fifth Vermont, dashed into a squad of rebels who had gathered round a beautiful stand of colors, and, with a humanity as praiseworthy as his daring, knocked down the color bearer, seized the colors as they fell, and rushed on to another portion of the field. Corpl. Charles W. Dolloff, Company K, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, also captured a battle-flag, supposed to be that of the Forty-second Mississippi Regiment.

About 9 a. m. the brigade was again put in motion and moved back along the line of works, passed the point at which the lines were penetrated in the morning, and formed about three miles south of Petersburg on the left of a road leading to the city, the spires of which were plainly visible in the distance. The ground between this formation and the city consisted of a series of hills and marshy ravines, and the enemy were distinctly seen making every disposition of their troops and artillery to contest our advance.

The brigade formed in single line from right to left as follows: Eleventh, Second, Third, Fifth, Sixth, and Fourth; a skirmish line was advanced, under Captain Safford, of the Eleventh Vermont, and the command then moved forward, its right resting on the road. The enemy poured in a very heavy fire of shot and shell from a battery on our right, which completely enshrouded our lines, and a perfect hail-storm of canister from a battery of four guns planted in the garden of the Turnbull house, where General Lee had his headquarters, directly in front. Brevet Colonel Floyd, commanding Third Vermont, threw forward a few men as skirmishers, with orders to advance on the double-quick and shoot the horses of the battery to prevent its being removed. This daring feat was accomplished with perfect success, the brigade in the meantime wheeling to the left and rapidly closing in upon the guns. The commander of the battery, finding it impossible to escape with his guns, raised a white flag, when Colonel Floyd ordered the firing to cease, and pressed forward to receive his surrender. At the same time Capt. R. Templeton, of the Eleventh Vermont, with a small squad of men, came gallantly up from the right flank on the double-quick to contest with Colonel Floyd the capture of the guns. Just at this moment the skirmish line of the First Brigade of this division coming up on the left and not observing the white flag, opened fire on the battery, when the men turned and fled. The guns were immediately taken possession of and a guard from the brigade established over them.

During this charge Captain Morey, of the Second Vermont, was instantly killed by a canister-shot from this battery, and Lieutenants Humphrey and Tilson, of the Fourth Vermont, were severely wounded. They were brave officers, and were doing their duty nobly when they fell.

This was the last stand made by the enemy outside of the line of defenses immediately surrounding Petersburg.

The command moved forward to the bank of Roanoke Creek (about a mile outside of the suburbs of the city), under an enflading fire from batteries on either hand, and a desultory fire of sharpshooters posted in the inner defenses. A few of the sharpshooters of the Fourth Vermont, who were on the extreme left of the brigade, crossed the creek on a fallen tree, crept up the precipitous bank on the opposite side, and soon silenced the battery on the left.

The men being now worn out by want of sleep, having eaten nothing since the night previous, and completely exhausted by the labors of this long day, were withdrawn to a ravine to the right of the road, and the brigade reformed and moved again to the left of the Nottingham house, where it threw up intrenchments and went into camp for the night.

I then, sir, reported to you for orders at the Thrubull house, occupied during the past winter by General Robert E. Lee as his headquarters, where were established for the night the headquarters of the Vermont brigade.

After you were wounded the command of the brigade was turned over to Lieutenant Colonel Tracy, of the Second Vermont, who led the assault on the enemy's works with a gallantry that was worthy of the troops under his command. Too much praise cannot be awarded to this gallant officer for the manner in which he handled the command in that most trying of all moments—the first shock of a desperate battle. Lieut. Col. Charles Hunsdon, of the Eleventh Vermont, is also deserving of great credit, not only for gallantry in the assault, but for marked energy in assisting to reform the brigade after it had passed the enemy's works.

When it was reformed here the command was turned over to Lieut. Col. Charles Munde, assistant adjutant-general of the division, who led it in person with most conspicuous gallantry throughout all the subsequent movements. With perfect confidence that the troops under his command would follow wherever he would lead the way, he pressed forward in front of the line of battle with a perfect disregard of all danger, and by his example, as well as by the skill with which he handled the command, contributed in a very great degree to the glorious achievements that day performed by the Vermont brigade.

When the troops were moved into position for the night the command was again turned over to Lieutenant Colonel Tracy.

Captains Bouett, Sessions, and Baxter, and Lieutenant Lewis, of your staff, are entitled to the highest consideration at your hands for the manner in which they performed the arduous duties of staff officers during the day. The horses not coming up, they were obliged to be on foot, but notwithstanding all difficulties they were everywhere present throughout the entire day, cheering on the men, reforming the lines, preserving the connections of the regiments, and helping on by precept and example the operations of the day.

Sergt. Thomas L. McColley deserves particular mention for the gallantry with which the colors of the Vermont brigade were sustained in front of the foremost line throughout the entire engagement. I trust that his services will meet with suitable recognition.

The honor of being the first to break the enemy's line is confidently claimed by this brigade. Being the guiding brigade of the charging column, its position was nearest the enemy's line and most advantageous to reach the works before the troops on the right or left. The commanders of the Fifth, Sixth, and Eleventh Vermont, each claims that the colors of his command were the first planted on the works, but owing to the darkness prevailing at the time the lines were reached, and the distance between the points at which these colors were placed on the works, it is impossible to decide the delicate question. There is no question, however, that the honor belongs to the Vermont brigade.

The captures of the command during the day consist of 2 battle-flags, 19 pieces of artillery, several caissons, a large number of artillery horses, mules, harnesses, and equipments, great quantities of quartermaster's and medical stores, and several hundred prisoners. Owing to the enthusiasm of the troops and the rapidity with which the brigade was maneuvered, but little attention was given to procuring credit for the captures to which the command is entitled.

It is impossible for any one individual to do credit to all the operations of the command, on account of the extended field over which they were carried on. The troops could not be restrained from pushing out in all directions from the lines in pursuit of adventures, and in this they contributed very materially to the success of the day, not only in capturing prisoners and preventing organization of the enemy at any point, but also in destroying and capturing large quantities of means of transportation, and of stores which were of great value to the enemy.

Such as are here narrated are but the general features of the part taken by the command in the engagement for the possession of Petersburg, and it is by no means claimed that it comprises all the achievements performed on that day by the Vermont brigade.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. BARBER,

Brevet Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. L. A. GRANT.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

HQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
Camp near Burkeville, Va., April 16, 1865.

Bvt. Col. CHARLES MUNDEE,

Assistant Adjutant-General:

SIR: I have the honor to respectfully recommend the following named officers of this command for promotion for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles near Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865: Capt. and Bvt. Maj. Merritt Barber, assistant adjutant-general, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel; Capt. George W. Bonett, Third Vermont Volunteers, brigade inspector, to be brevet major; Capt. George H. Sessions, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be brevet major; First Lieut. and Bvt. Capt. Henry O. Baxter, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, aide-de-camp, to be brevet major; First Lieut. Judson A. Lewis, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, to be brevet captain; Lieut. Col. A. S. Tracy, Second Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet colonel; Capt. and Bvt. Maj. E. G. Ballou, Second Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel; Capt. and Bvt. Maj. Elijah Wales, Second Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel; Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Col. H. W. Floyd, Third Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet brigadier-general; Capt. Alonzo H. Newt, Third Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Capt. W. H. Hubbard, Third Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Lieut. and Adj. A. H. Hall, Third Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet captain; Capt. George H. Amidon, Fourth Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Capt. Charles G. Fisher, Fourth Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Maj. Eugene O. Cole, Fifth Vermont Veteran Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel; Capt. Charles G. Gould, Fifth Vermont Veteran Volunteers, to be brevet major; Maj. William J. Sperry, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel; Capt. Henry N. Bushnell, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Capt. Lyman S. Williams, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Lieut. and Adj. Hiram S. English, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet captain; Lieut. Col. Charles Hunsdon, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet colonel; Capt. R. Templeton, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; Capt. George G. Tilden, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet major; First Lieut. C. H. Anson, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet captain; First Lieut. George A. Bailey, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet captain; First Lieut. John H. Macomber, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, to be brevet captain.

I have the honor to recommend that a medal be awarded to each of the following-named enlisted men: Thomas I. McColley, mounted orderly at brigade headquarters, for general good conduct and for gallantry in carrying the brigade flag at the head of the brigade during the entire engagement of April 2; Sergt. George B. Ordway, Second Vermont Volunteers, for being the first to place his colors on a battery in the enemy's works on the morning of April 2; First Sergt. Orlando S. Turner, Company D, Second Vermont Volunteers, for being one of the first to mount the enemy's works and place his hands on the battery captured near the headquarters of General Lee; Sergt. Hoxsey O. Rogers, Company I, and Private Ira Pierce, Company F, Second Vermont Volunteers, for being among the first to enter the enemy's works on the morning of the 2d of April; Corpl. J. E. Johnson, Company E, Third Vermont Volunteers, who seized the colors of the regiment after the color bearer had been shot down and, though wounded himself, bore them at the head of the regiment the entire day; Corpl. Henry H. Recor, Company A, Fifth Vermont Veteran Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in being one of the first to enter the enemy's works and in rescuing Captain Gould, who had been bayoneted, and who was being beaten with the muskets of the enemy; Color-Sergts. Peter Begor, and Orris Pier, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, for planting the colors of the Sixth Vermont on the enemy's works the moment a foothold was gained there, and for carrying the colors to the extreme front the entire day; Private William S. Jeanne, Company H, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, for being the first man to reach one of the guns of the battery captured near the headquarters of General Lee; Color-Sergts. Samuel L. Daggett and Patrick Byrne, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, for gallant and conspicuous conduct in planting the colors upon the enemy's works, and bearing them to the front the entire day. Sergeant Byrne was seriously wounded. I also respectfully recommend a medal and a furlough of thirty days to each of the following: Sergt. Lester G. Hack, Company F, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, for knocking down the color bearer of the Twenty-third Tennessee (rebel) Regiment and capturing the colors of the same; Corpl. Charles W. Dolloff, Company K, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, for capturing the colors of the Forty-second Mississippi (rebel) Regiment.

I remain, colonel, respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. GRANT,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

No. 128.

Report of Lieut. Col. Ronald A. Kennedy, Fifth Vermont Infantry.

HQRS. FIFTH REGT. VERMONT VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
Camp in the Field, Va., April 4, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Fifth Regiment Vermont Veteran Volunteers during the engagements of Sunday, the 2d instant:

Our position at the commencement of the charge was in the front line of the brigade, it being formed in close column by regiments. About 5 a. m., at the signal from Fort Fisher, we commenced the charge; passing through the enemy's pickets, and, taking most of them prisoners, we pushed on to the main works, through two lines of abatis, and soon after took the work in our front, almost directly west of Fort Welch, with four pieces of artillery. We then turned to our left and pushed through the ravine to a small work containing two guns, Color-Bearer Jackson Sargent being the first to scale the works and plant the State colors of Vermont upon the parapet, immediately followed by Corpl. Nelson B. Carle with the national colors. The Third Division coming up, we bore toward the right, joining the rest of the brigade and passing on the left of the white house to the edge of the woods in front, where we halted to allow the regiment to assemble on the colors. The division here being formed, and moving by the flank some distance to the left, we again came to a front and charged through the woods in a southwesterly direction, skirmishing and driving the enemy before us about one mile and a half, when we halted, the brigade being still formed "close column by regiments," the Fifth retaining its original position, and were allowed to rest.

About 8 a. m., passing on to the right, we again formed our lines, facing toward Petersburg, and advanced up to the crest in view of the city; from here we made a half left wheel, charging across the ravine and on to Michael's house. Halting a moment for our lines to reform we charged again across the main road, following to the left, and in the direction of the road to near the Turnbull house, formerly occupied as Lee's headquarters. Here we were checked for a short time by a rebel battery, our men making one unsuccessful attempt to take it, after which, by the assistance of the advancing line on the right, we succeeded in quieting the battery, and, charging without firing, captured the offensive guns. We next crossed the road leading to the river and halted in the ravine beyond, and here rested until ordered to rejoin the corps on the right of the main road. We remained in this position until about 4 p. m., when moving by the left flank we returned to the east of the main road and by the side of the road leading to the river, about one mile and a half from Petersburg southwesterly, where we intrenched and remained for the night.

Our casualties, considering the formidable nature of the enemy's position, were comparatively few. On the evening of the 2d the loss was as follows: Killed, 6; wounded, 34; missing, 18. Of the missing sixteen have rejoined the regiment; the others are supposed to have been killed.

I append herewith a list of the casualties in the regiment.*

The conduct of both officers and men was exemplary in the extreme from first to last. Individual cases of daring and bravery were numer-

* Nominal list omitted.

ons, but of the most meritorious it gives me pleasure in mentioning a few: Capt. C. G. Gould, Company H, when the line advanced on the first fort of the enemy, scaled the works and entered considerably in advance of any of the rest of the command and commenced a hand-to-hand encounter, which came near costing him his life, receiving a bayonet wound in the face and bruises from clubbed muskets until released from his dangerous position by a few men of his company and Corporal Recor, of Company A. First Lieut. Robert Pratt, of Company H, also added materially to his reputation of being a soldier in every sense of the word, as well as one of the most unequalled daring. Among the enlisted men none could have done better than the bearers of the national and State standards—Jackson Sargent, sergeant of Company D, and Corpl. Nelson E. Carle, of Company A. Wherever opportunity offered, or possibility allowed, the colors of the Fifth were the first to elicit the cheers of the advancing columns, as they appeared planted defiantly upon the enemy's works.

Sergt. Lester G. Hack, Company F, also deserves special mention for the during he exhibited in capturing the battle-flag of the Twenty-third (rebel) Tennessee Infantry, when surrounded by a score of the foe, who were undecided as to the propriety of surrendering.

Among the killed during this day's sanguinary engagement we have to mourn the loss of First Sergets. Edward Brownlee, Company H, and John Smith, of Company K. They both fell in the thickest of the strife while cheering on the men of their respective companies.

In the above I have given as correctly as circumstances will allow a true statement of the part taken by the Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteers in the engagement of Sunday, the 2d instant, which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. A. KENNEDY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding the Regiment.

Capt. M. BARBER,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 129.

Report of Col. Thomas W. Hyde, First Maine Veteran Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HEADQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,

April 15, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my brigade upon the 2d of April and during the subsequent movements of the division:

At midnight preceding the 2d instant my command moved from camp; filed out to the right of Fort Welch, where had been piled the knapsacks and canteens, and took position just in rear of the picket-line of the Third Division, on the right of the Second Brigade. My column of attack was formed in four lines, each line nearly equal in numbers. The first line was composed of the Forty-ninth and Seventy-seventh New York Battalions; the second of the First Maine Veteran Volunteers; the third of the Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and the fourth of the Forty-third New York Battalion and the One hundred and twenty-second New York Volunteers. Axmen were stationed in the first line to eat away the abatis of the enemy. Regimental commanders had been carefully instructed as to the direction to be taken, and as to the location in their front of the passageway through the enemy's works and obstructions by which their pickets passed out and in. While the brigade was being put in position the pickets of the Third Division opened fire, which was replied to with vigor by the enemy, occasioning the loss of several brave officers and men. About 4 a. m. the signal gun was fired and the first line ordered forward. After they had advanced 100 yards the second advanced, the third in like manner, and the fourth after the third had got 250 yards in advance. The first line got nearly to the picket-pits of the enemy before their movement was discovered; swept over them easily, followed by the second and third. At the edge of the swamp, just in front of the enemy's abatis, they halted a moment to form again, and again swept on through the openings in the abatis and over the works. Some confusion occurred on account of the intense darkness, but the colors of the different regiments and those directly about them, guided by the fire of the enemy, went straight on to their destination. Several regiments of the brigade claim their colors as first on the works, but the darkness must leave that honor forever undecided.

After crossing the works the men pushed rapidly to the front, the colors ahead, and I succeeded in getting some 200 of the brigade in line at a point near the South Side Railroad and a mile from the works. By this time a line had been formed on a small road parallel to the works, and the brigade was got together in the center of the division, having the Second Brigade upon the left and the First Brigade upon the right. An advance was ordered by Major-General Getty and the command swung to the left and front toward Fletcher's Run, capturing many prisoners and driving all of the enemy in that vicinity not taken into the hands of other troops of ours advancing from that direction. The brigade, with the rest of the division, was then moved back to attack the inner lines of Petersburg and formed upon the left of the division. I formed the three left regiments in echelon, as orders had been given me to protect the left against a line of battle and a battery upon the Cox road, and sent out a company of the First Maine Veteran Volunteers to dislodge the battery that was already enfilading the line. This was quickly done, and the advance was hastened under a heavy artillery and scattering musketry fire. The enemy's batteries and force were driven from crest to crest till they finally halted with some determination upon a commanding position where were located General Lee's headquarters. Orders were given to move to the left and front and take the battery. At this time my three left regiments were wholly extended as skirmishers to the left and rear to protect that flank, and were along the South Side Railroad and the bank of the Appomattox. The rest of the command moved through a difficult swamp, under a heavy fire of canister, and those first over, without much regard to formation, were rushed upon the battery, which was taken by detachments from nearly every regiment in the division. The command was then moved forward till its left rested upon the Appomattox, and the enemy's artillery across the river was driven away by my skirmishers. The command from these exhaustions did not advance beyond this point. They had now been in motion some eighteen hours, and had taken guns, colors, and a great many prisoners; it would be impossible to estimate them.

The brigade marched with the division in the subsequent pursuit of Lee's army till his surrender at Oloyer Hill and till the return of the Army of the Potomac to this place (Burke's Station). Three times they were maneuvered to fight, but did not have opportunity. They were double-quickened for over a mile to get in at Sailor's Creek and were put in position as the last shots were firing.

For names of those killed and wounded and those recommended for promotion for special service, see subjoined reports.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
THOMAS W. HYDE,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Col. CHARLES MUNDEE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 130.

Report of Capt. Augustus Merrill, Company B, First Maine Veteran Infantry.

CAMP FIRST MAINE VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
April 21, 1865.

SIR: I here present a statement of facts relating to the engagement near Petersburg, Va., on the 2d instant.

After entering the enemy's works on the morning of April 2, Lieutenant-Colonel Fletcher, commanding First Maine Veteran Volunteers, ordered me to advance with a few skirmishers to ascertain the enemy's position and strength in our front. I took twenty men, deployed them as skirmishers, and advanced through the woods; came upon an old camp. Here I captured a lieutenant and three men belonging to Hill's corps; learned from them that they would make but slight resistance "this side of Hatcher's Run." When our line advanced I pressed on, meeting no opposition, picking up their stragglers and sending them to the rear, until I reached Hatcher's Run and found that they were across and in position on the opposite side. Supposing that the corps was following on in that direction, and not having very definite instructions, I determined to dislodge them if possible from their position. To my left was the bridge over which the telegraph road runs. This was defended by strong works on the other side. Near the bridge was an old wooden mill; so taking a small party of men who volunteered for the occasion, and who belonged to five or six different regiments of this corps, I moved along the run to the right through the woods, my left flank on the run. The eagerness of the men induced me to keep on some distance, when we came to an old dam, which showed signs of a crossing having been made there that morning. We immediately moved across by the left flank, the enemy firing a few shots as we crossed. It being a precarious place one man fell into the run, and came near being drowned. He came out safe, however, minus his musket. This left me fifteen armed men. With these I advanced and captured their skirmish line, firing but a few shots. Guarding these closely I moved on and soon came upon a guard carrying Capt. John Tilt, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, to the rear, whom they had captured. We captured the guard and released the captain. We then had sixty-four prisoners, mostly Virginia sharpshooters, who told of various raids made by them on our picket line during the winter, and acted as though they would like to overpower our small squad and make us go with them. I told them it was no use to resist, as we had a large force in the rear, and their whole line would be taken. Two of my men then reconnoitered the woods and came to the open field, where they found a line of battle behind their works facing the Second Corps. Their left then rested on Hatcher's Run, we being directly behind them. I then took the prisoners and recrossed the run and carried them to the rear. Three of my men remaining to watch the movements of the enemy, they captured 5 more prisoners, making our total 69. I received a receipt for 64 from the sergeant of the provost-guard, Second Division. The three men that stopped behind saw the rebels move off to their right. They then entered the works, and met the Second Corps coming in. The whole squad rejoined their command in the p. m. in front of Petersburg.

Yours, &c.,

AUGUSTUS MERRILL,
Captain Company B, First Maine Veteran Volunteers.

---

No. 131.

Reports of Brig. Gen. Truman Seymour, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
April 17, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division in the assault upon the lines of Petersburg, April 2, 1865:

The command was placed in position directly in rear of the old picket-line and in front of Fort Welch. It formed the left of the corps; the Second Brigade, Brevet Brigadier-General Keifer commanding, being on the right of the division, and the First Brigade, Col. William S. Truax, Fourteenth New Jersey Volunteers, commanding, on the left; each being in three lines. The troops were moved out of camp soon after midnight, and while forming were exposed to a severe and close fire of musketry from the enemy's picket-line, by which a number of officers and men were slain, but it was borne with great patience, until about 4 o'clock, when the firing of the signal gun from Fort Fisher let loose the corps upon the enemy's works. The men sprang forward with alacrity, jumped the picket-line, and pushed steadily forward. They were met by a sharp fire from the enemy's pickets, which was soon suppressed, and by a heavy enfilading fire of artillery from the left of our point of attack. But the men moved forward with enthusiastic cheers, forced the lines of abatis in front of the rebel works, and mounted the parapet. A hand-to-hand conflict ensued, and not a few gallant officers and men, nobly in advance, were seriously wounded, but the enemy was soon overpowered, and the works were ours. For some moments after the entrance of this division the firing continued on our right, upon the other divisions of the corps.

It is difficult to distinguish from among the many acts of conspicuous gallantry in this assault. The colors of the Tenth Vermont in the First Brigade, and of the Sixth Maryland in the Second, were honorably prominent in the advance of regiments, though they can, nevertheless, be scarcely said to have led. Major Prentiss, commanding the Sixth Maryland, was seriously, if not mortally, wounded while on the very parapet encouraging his command by his chivalric courage.

Agreeably to instructions from Major-General Wright, the division was immediately swung to the left, and advanced within and along the works, toward Hatcher's Run. Serious resistance was offered by a battery in front of the Twenty-fourth Corps position, but several of the guns already captured, served by detachments of the Ninth New York Artillery, under Maj. William Wood and Brevet Major Lamoreaux, were promptly turned upon the enemy. Major Cowan's battery came into position, a portion of the division advanced, and the battery fell [back]. In succession the whole line nearly to Hatcher's Run was swept by the division, some twenty-odd guns and many hundred prisoners, with four flags, falling into our possession.

It is proper to add that the rebel Lieut. Gen. A. P. Hill was shot toward the right of the line by Corporal Mank, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, while with a small party returning from tearing up the South Side Railroad.

The brigade commanders, Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. Warren Keifer and Col. William S. Truex, are highly commended for constant energy and skill in the management of their brigades. Their reports are inclosed, and to them I must refer for mention of the distinguishing gallantry with which many of their officers and men conducted themselves.

To the division staff I am under special obligations for assistance rendered during this engagement, and I take pleasure in naming Bvt. Maj. Andrew J. Smith, acting assistant adjutant-general; Capt. E. S. Norvell, pioneer officer, and Lieut. S. H. Lewis, acting aide-de-camp, for more than ordinary good conduct; while to Bvt. Maj. O. V. Tracy, division inspector; Bvt. Maj. J. C. Robinson, Capt. G. A. Barushaw, and Lieut. R. N. Verplanck, aides-de-camp, my thanks are also especially due.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. SKEYMOUR,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Maj. C. H. WHITEFELSBY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SIXTH ARMY CORPS,

April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command on April 6, at Sailor's Creek:

The division was in the advance on the march during that day, the Second Brigade leading. A severe day's march had already been accomplished and the men were much fatigued, when at 3 p. m. the head of the column arrived at the point near Amelia Springs, where Major-General Sheridan with a force of cavalry was menacing the flank of the enemy's line of retreat. The sharpshooters of the Second Brigade, and the One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, were immediately deployed, and advanced to the attack, followed by the remainder of the brigade upon its arrival. The road by which the enemy was retiring was seized, cutting off numerous wagons. A portion of the enemy withdrew by a cross-road leading toward the Appomattox, and commenced from two guns a severe and close fire of canister upon our advancing troops; but the skirmishers already named, supported by the One hundred and tenth Ohio and Ninth New York Artillery, pursued them promptly and soon drove them from before us. The remaining regiments of Keifer's brigade (Sixth Maryland, Sixty-seventh and

One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania), in conjunction with the First Brigade, were pushed immediately to the left upon the main route. Severe skirmishing ensued, but supported by Carroll's section of Brinckle's battery, B, Fifth U. S. Artillery, the enemy were forced a mile across Sailor's Creek, behind which he formed a strong line of battle to oppose our crossing. That portion of Keifer's brigade that had been sent on the cross-road found itself in front of the Second Corps, and it was reported to me that the staff officers who were sent to recall it were refused; at all events, it took no further part in this action. The remainder, with Truex's brigade, were formed in line. Whenton's division came up on the left, and an advance was ordered by Major-General Wright. The stream in front of us was edged with marsh waist deep; through this the command handsomely advanced. Brinckle's battery played incessantly upon the rebel lines, which, however, returned but little fire until pressed by our infantry. The contest was then very severe. The Confederate Marine Battalion fought with peculiar obstinacy, and our lines, somewhat disordered by crossing the creek, were repulsed in the first onset. But the valor of the commanding officers brought them again to the attack, and Truex's brigade somewhat overlapping the enemy's line, and wheeling to the left, delivered so severe an enfilading fire as soon made resistance impossible.

Lieutenant-General Ewell sent Major Pegram, of his staff, with a flag to surrender his forces to this brigade. The commander of the Marine Battalion surrendered to Brevet Brigadier-General Keifer, whose command captured also two battle-flags.

The magnificent behavior of the troops deserves the highest commendation. Brevet Brigadier-General Keifer and Colonel Truex, the brigade commanders, again displayed the highest soldierly qualities, and by their promptness and skill contributed greatly to the success of the day. Bvt. Maj. A. J. Smith, my acting assistant adjutant-general, was severely wounded while gallantly performing his duties as a staff officer, and to him and the members of the division staff I am indebted for able and energetic assistance. The brigade commanders have in their reports handsomely mentioned many whose services cannot be sufficiently well acknowledged in this report. Lieutenant Brinckle, commanding Battery B, Fifth U. S. Artillery, and Lieut. C. H. Carroll deserve honorable mention for the efficiency of the artillery under their command.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. SEYMOUR,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELTSEY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Corps.

ADDENDA.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,

April 3, 1865.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELTSEY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Army Corps:

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from Sixth Corps headquarters of this date, I have the honor to forward four battle-flags. The following are the names of the captors: Corpl. F. M. McMillen, Company C, and Private Isaac James, Company H, One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers; Private Milton Blickensderfer, Company E, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteers; Private George Loyd, Company A, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Volunteers (division battle-flag of General Heth).*

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
T. SEYMOUR,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
April 7, 1865.

Maj. C. H. WHITTELSEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Army Corps:

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that the following-named enlisted men captured each a battle-flag from the enemy on the 6th instant: Corpl. John Keough, Company E, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Corpl. Trustrim Connell, Company I, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. The flags have been forwarded to your headquarters.*

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
T. SEYMOUR,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

No. 132.

Reports of Col. William S. Trux, Fourteenth New Jersey Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HQERS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
April 14, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this brigade at the assault on the works in front of Petersburg, April 2, 1865, which resulted in the capture of the entire line and the evacuation of the above-mentioned city:

In accordance with instructions received from Brigadier-General Seymour, commanding the division, I moved the brigade at 12 p. m. April 1, 1865, to the position which had previously been designated for it to occupy, viz, in the rear of our picket-line, in front of Fort Welch, and on the extreme left of this corps. At about 12.30 a. m. I reached the ground and formed my brigade in three lines of battle, as follows: First line, composed of the Tenth Vermont Volunteers, Lieut. Col. George B. Damon commanding, on the right, and the One hundred and sixth New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. Alvah W. Briggs commanding, on the left, distant about twenty paces from the picket line; second line, composed of the Fourteenth New Jersey Volunteers, Lieut. Col. J. J. Janoway commanding, on the right, and the One hundred and fifty-first New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. Charles Bogardus commanding, on the left; third line, the Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. James Tearney commanding. This latter regiment was composed almost entirely of raw troops, five companies having joined it within two weeks of this movement, and most of whom had never before been under fire.

* Medal of Honor awarded to each of the men named.

The troops were placed in position without attracting the attention of the enemy, although within 150 yards of its picket-line. About half an hour after the enemy on their extreme left opened suddenly a very severe and galling picket-fire, which ran down the line to my front and which continued for nearly an hour. Under this fire my brigade remained quiet, not answering with a single shot or otherwise betraying our presence to the enemy, although a number were killed and wounded. Too much praise cannot be given to my officers for the splendid manner in which they moved their men into position and afterward controlling their commands under this severe picket-fire. At about 4.30 a. m. the signal gun to advance was fired from Fort Fisher, when I ordered the brigade to advance. Instantly a terrible fire of musketry and artillery was opened upon us by the enemy, but my men gallantly and bravely advanced at a double-quick, and in a few moments scaled the breast-works, which at this place were from twelve to fifteen feet high, driving the enemy before them and holding the position. I must here state that when the order to advance was given, and the enemy opened upon us, the Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers broke to the front, passing through the second and first lines, and became temporarily the first line. The first colors inside the works were those of the Tenth Vermont Volunteers, followed immediately by those of the One hundred and sixth New York Volunteers and Fourteenth New Jersey Volunteers.

We here captured 300 prisoners and either 5 or 6 guns. The first line, composed of the Tenth Vermont Volunteers and One hundred and sixth New York Volunteers, were instantly reformed inside the works, wheeled to the left, and charged down the line at a double-quick, the balance of the command following as they entered the works, driving and doubling up the enemy as they advanced. The next fort was seized with but little opposition, my troops capturing about 150 prisoners and 2 guns. Again advancing I ordered the brigade to charge on the next fort. The enemy here endeavored to make a stand, but my command pushed forward and compelled the enemy to evacuate it, when the fort was instantly occupied by my brigade, the first colors to enter being those of the Fourteenth New Jersey Volunteers. Here my command was joined by a small portion of the Second Brigade, which remained with me until I fell back temporarily to the second fort, when they were ordered to the right and joined their proper command. We here captured about 100 prisoners and seized 2 guns. This fort we held about twenty-five minutes, when the enemy advanced in two lines of battle, one in front of the fort and the other from the woods on the right, compelling us to fall back temporarily to the second fort above mentioned. In this charge of the enemy we lost heavily in killed and wounded, besides many prisoners, my men falling back reluctantly and contesting the ground inch by inch, but were overpowered by superior numbers. The enemy were enabled to hold this fort for some length of time, and it was not until after the arrival of a battery to our aid that we were successful in dislodging him, capturing 40 prisoners and 2 pieces cannon.

In the capture of this fort the sharpshooters of the brigade deserve especial mention in silencing the rebel guns by picking off the gunners whenever they made their appearance. A number were deployed on the left of the works in the direction of a house for this purpose. The brigade was formed in columns of regiments, and advancing on the left flank of the fort compelled its surrender. Without halting we advanced on the next fort, which was evacuated almost without a struggle, leaving in our possession four guns, caissons, and horses. Still pressing on about half a mile, we met the Twenty-fourth Corps, when a halt was ordered. At this point I was directed to counter-march my brigade and proceed in the direction of Petersburg, at the Brick Chimneys in front of Petersburg, and on the extreme left of the Ninth Corps. We remained until 4 p. m., when I was ordered to move my brigade and occupy a line which in the morning had been occupied by the enemy's pickets. Earth-works were thrown up, a picket-line established, and the troops bivouacked for the night.

The results of the day's operations may be summed up as follows:
— prisoners, 14 cannon.

A list of casualties has been forwarded.

I have every reason to be proud of the regiments composing my brigade—the Tenth Vermont Volunteers, One hundred and sixth New York Volunteers, Fourteenth New Jersey Volunteers, One hundred and fifty-first New York Volunteers, and Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers—and the coolness, judgment, and gallantry of their commanding officers, Lieut. Col. George B. Damon, Lieut. Col. A. W. Briggs, Lieut. Col. J. J. Janeway, Lieut. Col. Charles Bogardus, and Capt. James Kearney.

My thanks are also due to the field and line officers for the efficient manner in which they discharged their duties during the eventful day.

I also mention with pleasure the members of my staff, who were throughout the whole day conspicuous for prompt action, courage, and personal exposure: Capt. and Bvt. Maj. Charles H. Leonard, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. and Bvt. Maj. H. W. Day, brigade inspector; Capt. and Bvt. Maj. Charles M. Bartlett, acting aide-de-camp; Capt. Benjamin F. Miller, acting aide-de-camp.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. S. TRUMEN,
Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

HQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of my brigade from the 3d of April to the 14th of April, inclusive:

At daylight April 3 I was informed by an officer from division headquarters that Petersburg was evacuated by the enemy and that the pickets of the Twenty-fourth Corps (colored troops) had advanced into the city. My brigade was ordered to hold itself in readiness to move at a moment's notice. At 8 a. m. we broke camp, returned to our former camp for the knapsacks of the men, and then followed the road known as the River road to the south of Petersburg, and at about 6 p. m. bivouacked for the night near Sutherland's Station, on the South Side Railroad. April 4, marched out at 5 a. m., following the River road. The roads were in a terrible condition; about 9 p. m. we went into camp near ———, the men very much exhausted. April 5, moved out of camp at 4.30 a. m. and proceeded in the direction of Jetersville. At 12 m. moved in the direction of Amelia Court House, and at 7 p. m. went into camp for the night in two lines on the right of the Second Brigade, and intrenched our position. April 6, moved out at 6 a. m. by the right of regiments to the front, guiding our movements by General Keifer's brigade on our left. After marching for about three hours and finding no enemy, we took up the line of march toward Sailor's Creek, where General Sheridan held the enemy in check, and was waiting for the infantry to give him battle. After a very fatiguing march we reached the vicinity of Sailor's Creek.

By direction of General Seymour I formed my brigade in column of regiments in rear of General Keifer's brigade, with orders to conform to his movements. My brigade moved in support and in rear of Second Brigade until it reached the road which had heretofore been used by the enemy in moving trains and troops. The Second Brigade having charged across this road and pursuing the enemy still farther on, by direction of Major-General Wright I halted my brigade and wheeled it to the left, its left resting on the road. I then moved down upon the enemy's left flank, doubling them up and driving them upward of one mile, when, reaching the hill immediately in front of Sailor's Creek, I found the enemy strongly posted in rear of some works which were carried by the heavy skirmish line in my immediate front.

My brigade was here ordered to be halted by Bvt. Maj. A. J. Smith, acting assistant adjutant-general, and to await the arrival of the First Division of this corps, which was formed on my left. After the First Division had got into position my brigade was formed in two lines of battle, my left connecting with the First Division of this corps. The enemy were confronting us apparently in strong force on the opposite side of the creek or slough, on the side and crest of the next range of hills. At about 4.30, the First Division advancing, I directed my brigade to forward; the stream in my front was about seventy-five yards in width. My command moved forward bravely across the creek and morasses, through mud and water to their hips, and under a severe fire from the enemy, by which many lives were lost. The line was reformed immediately after crossing the creek, and advanced to the crest of the hill, driving the enemy before them.

I then received orders from Brigadier-General Seymour to have the brigade wheeled to the left, with orders to move upon the enemy's left and flank, then exposed to us. The lines were advanced about 100 yards, when we delivered a rapid and concentrated fire upon the enemy, when a flag of truce was presented on our right near a house, distant about 300 yards. The command was immediately ordered to cease firing, but on moving forward to gain information a severe fire from the enemy at some distance to our right was again opened upon me. I again directed the brigade to advance. At this moment Major Leonard, assistant adjutant-general, rode up to me with Major Pegram, inspector-general on the staff of General Ewell. Major Pegram was the bearer of the flag of truce, and said to me in person, "I surrender Lieutenant-General Ewell and staff and his command."

Up to this moment the firing on our left was kept up by our troops, but on word being passed down the line it ceased immediately. With Major Pegram were about thirty officers and enlisted men. I directed that they should be forwarded instantly to division headquarters. I then moved my brigade into the open field about half a mile, making a right half wheel, to oppose the enemy, who were moving to my right and rear. Here I was joined by Brigadier-General Seymour, commanding the division. My command was halted and the men allowed to cook supper. By direction of Brigadier-General Seymour I moved my brigade and occupied a position on the right and in rear of the Second Division of this corps and on the left of the Second Brigade of this division, and bivouacked for the night.

With the efficient aid of the officers of my staff—Bvt. Maj. Charles H. Leonard, assistant adjutant-general; Bvt. Maj. Hiram W. Day, brigade inspector; Bvt. Maj. Charles M. Bartruff, and Capt. Benjamin F. Miller, acting aides-de-camp—together with the untiring co-operation of the regimental officers, my brigade was never kept better in hand than on this occasion, and I am decidedly of the opinion that the heavy fire we were consequently enabled to deliver into their flanks was the means of bringing the enemy to a speedy surrender.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. S. TRUEX,
Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 133.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Hiram W. Day, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry, Brigade Inspector.

HEADQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Clover Hill, Va., April 11, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following statement concerning the movements of this brigade and the subsequent flag of truce from Lieutenant-General Ewell and surrender of his forces at the battle of Sailor's Creek on the 6th instant:

This brigade was placed in position on the right of the First Division, Sixth Army Corps, with orders to move forward with it in the attack upon the enemy. Upon the brigade moving forward I was, by direction of Col. William S. Truex, commanding the brigade, sent forward to guide the movement of the first line of battle, which was composed of two regiments. The brigade charged across the marsh in their front and reformed immediately under the cover of the pine bushes at the foot of the hill then occupied by the enemy. The first line was at once advanced to the crest of the hill, driving the enemy before it, the main body retiring to our left and to the front of First Division, Sixth Army Corps. By orders of Col. William S. Truex, communicated to me by Bvt. Maj. Charles H. Leonard, assistant adjutant-general of this brigade, the lines were at once wheeled to the left, with orders to move upon the enemy's left and flank, then exposed to us. The lines were advanced near 100 yards, the enemy rapidly falling back, when my attention was called to the appearance of a flag of truce then presented near a house to our right, distance about 300 yards. I immediately signaled the fact to Major Leonard, who directed the command to cease firing. Some men were ordered to move forward and gain information of its object; upon their advancing they received a severe fire from the enemy. At some distance to our right our lines were again immediately advanced, the enemy constantly falling back and returning but a feeble fire. A private, whose regiment and name I do not remember, came to me saying General Ewell, of the Confederate Army, wished to surrender his forces. At this moment a portion of the cavalry force charged down to and past our right flank and into the enemy's column. I at once called the attention of Major Leonard to the fact of the flag of truce and surrender. He immediately rode to the right and into the field, and met Major Pogram, inspector-general of General Ewell's staff, who said he surrendered Lieutenant-General Ewell and staff, and was ordered to come in for that purpose with a flag of truce.

Up to this moment the firing on our left was kept up by our troops, but on word being passed down the line it ceased immediately.

H. W. DAY,

Brigade Inspector.

CHAS. H. LEONARD,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

Bvt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division.

No. 134.

Report of Lieut. Col. Jacob J. Janczay, Fourteenth New Jersey Infantry.

HEADQRS. FOURTEENTH REGT. NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report, in compliance with circular dated headquarters First Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, April 10, 1865, of the operations of my command from April 2 to 9, inclusive:

At 12 p. m. April 1 moved out and formed line in rear of the pickets of our division, being the right regiment of the second line, One hundred and fifty-first New York being the left, seventy-five paces in the rear of the first line. We had been formed but a short time before the rebel pickets commenced firing, which caused some confusion at first. As soon as the firing slackened the line was all right again and remained so. About 4 a. m., the order being given to advance, the rear line commenced passing over my regiment. Brevet Major Bailey was in command of the left wing, while I the right. I was to wait until I saw the left move before I ordered the right wing forward, but as the rear line passed over my regiment, seeing some of the men moving forward on the left, I gave the order to forward. It being dark and all the lines moving about the same time the men soon got mixed up in passing over the ground to the rebel works. The greater portion of my command went into the fort near the unpainted barn outside of the enemy's works. From this fort we went to the next and then to the third. Here my regimental colors were the first to be planted on the fort, and men from the regiment the first to enter under a heavy fire. Our brigade was not able to drive the rebels from this fort, although we held a part of it for some time and had possession of their artillery, but not enough men would come up, so we were obliged to fall back to the next fort. Here we remained until batteries came up, then formed line and charged. This time my colors were the second ones in the fort. From here we participated with the movements of the brigade in advancing to near Hatcher's Run along the rebel breast-works, then marched back and formed line along the First Division picket-line, intrenched, and remained for the night.

April 3, left at 8 a. m., marched back to camp; the men got their knapsacks and marched until sunset on the Burkeville road; halted for the night in columns, battalions in mass. April 4, left at 5.20 a. m.

The regiment, leading the brigade, marched on road to Jetersville, and halted for the night at 9 p. m. in columns, battalions closed in mass. April 5, left at 3.30 a. m., marched to near Jetersville on the Danville railroad; formed line, and relieved the cavalry in second line of battle. April 6, advanced by the right of battalions to the front for about three miles; found the enemy had retreated, and formed single line, and made a forced march until 4 p. m., and came up to our cavalry fighting at Sailor's Creek. Our division was formed in columns—battalions. My regiment, being next to the rear, advanced, driving the rebels from their earth-works, wheeled to the left and guided upon the road and continued to advance about a mile. The brigade was formed in three lines; my regiment was in the second line on the right, One hundred and fifty-first New York on the left. Here we halted while our batteries shelled the enemy and advanced across Sailor's Creek, when our brigade was formed in two lines, Tenth Vermont on my right. After remaining a short time wheeled to the left, when the battle ceased by the whole force surrendering. Marched a short distance to the left; halted for the night in line of battle. April 7, left at 9 a. m. and halted for the night at Curruville, on the Richmond and Lynchburg Railroad. April 8, left at 8 a. m., my regiment leading the brigade, and halted for the night at New Store at 8 p. m. April 9, left at 6.15 a. m., marched until 1.30 p. m.; halted in a field, and here received the glorious news of the surrender of General Lee's whole army.

Casualties: Two men killed, 1 officer wounded, and 22 men wounded.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. J. FANEWAY,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. CHARLES H. LEONARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 135.

Reports of Col. Andrew N. McDonald, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry.

HQRS. 106TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,

April 9, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that the One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry left its camp on the morning of the 2d of April, 1865, and with the rest of the brigade participated in the assault upon the enemy's lines. This regiment, with the Tenth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, formed the first line of battle for the brigade and were the first to enter the enemy's lines, assisting to capture about fifteen guns and a large number of prisoners. After the main line of the enemy had been carried the regiment was reformed and wheeled to the left, advancing up the line of works, taking several batteries. The regimental colors were the first to be planted on the second battery taken from the enemy.

The loss in this regiment during the engagement was 9 enlisted men killed and 33 wounded.

The regiment participated in all the movements of the day, building a line of breast-works in front of the town of Petersburg at night.

In the operations of the day this regiment was commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Briggs, who was ably assisted by Maj. E. M. Paine, and I would most respectfully request that these officers be recommended for their gallantry and the manner in which they accomplished the duty assigned them. The line officers, without exception, were active and efficient during the entire operations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. N. McDONALD,
Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. CHARLES H. LEONARD,
Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Brig., Third Div., Sixth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS 106TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of this regiment since the morning of the 3d of April until the evening of the 9th of April, 1865:

Leaving the strong lines of works, which we threw up before the city of Petersburg on the night of the 2d, we commenced on the morning of the 3d a series of rapid and fatiguing marches, taking a westerly direction and following closely on the heels of the demoralized and retreating rebels. Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday were away with no incidents of special importance and no battles. Thursday, about 4 p. m., we came suddenly upon the enemy, when, the brigade breaking into a column of regiments, we commenced one of the finest and most successful charges in which it was ever our lot to participate. My regiment was the third line, and gallantly and steadily did it move forward, forgetting all the pains of blistered feet and cramped and stiffened limbs in the excitement of the coming contest. The enemy opened a brisk and heavy fire; still we pressed on, driving them rapidly back for nearly a mile and a half. Here the enemy, taking advantage of a strong position on the opposite side of Sailor's Creek, made a desperate stand to prevent the capture of their trains. My regiment was now placed in the first line of battle, and, moving rapidly forward, we commenced crossing the creek under a galling musketry fire from the enemy. The ground on both sides of the creek was very soft and marshy, the men frequently sinking to their hips in its miry depths. Here we had 11 men wounded, but none killed. Moving rapidly around to the right after crossing, we were soon on the enemy's left flank, when we were stopped in our gallant advance by the surrender of the enemy.

The conduct of both the officers and men of this regiment was highly meritorious. Early Friday morning we again resumed the pursuit, marching through the village of Farnville, where we camped for the night. Saturday the pursuit was kept up, and Sunday till about 2 p. m., when we halted near Clover Hill, and here received the glorious intelligence that Lee had surrendered his whole army. This regiment still remains encamped near Clover Hill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. N. McDONALD,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

[Maj. CHARLES H. LEONARD,
Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Brig., Third Div., Sixth Army Corps.]

No. 136.

Report of Lieut. Col. Charles Bogardus, One hundred and fifty-first New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 151ST NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that this regiment was formed for a charge on the rebel works in front of Fort Fisher on Sunday morning [April 2] at a quarter to 4 o'clock in the second line, with the Fourteenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers on our right. At 4.20 o'clock we started on the charge. We captured the picket-line in our front and passed into a rebel fort, capturing two of the six pieces of artillery and two caissons in the fort. We wheeled to the left, passing down the line of works, driving everything before us until we came to a fort, capturing one more piece of artillery and one more caisson, where the rebels rallied and drove us back across a swamp to the next fort and reopened the two pieces of artillery on us. We held the line across the swamp over an hour until nearly 7 o'clock, when the line was reformed and we advanced, driving the rebels from the last fort at which they made a stand. We were then halted about an hour and marched back to the front of Fort Fisher and toward night we formed line in front of Fort Keene and threw up a line of breast-works. Monday morning we were informed of the evacuation of Petersburg and marched west, crossing the South Side Railroad and taking the road between the railroad and the Appomattox River, halting for the night ten miles from Petersburg. Tuesday, April 4, commenced marching at 5 a. m., marching very slowly during the forenoon, and quite fast during the afternoon, going into camp at 9 p. m. Wednesday, April 5, commenced marching at 4 a. m., halted at 8 a. m. until 11.30, and then marched fast until 8 p. m., when we formed line near the Danville railroad between Amelia Court-House and Burkeville, throwing up earth-works.

Thursday, April 6, we advanced by the right of the regiment to the front at 7 a. m. in the direction of Amelia Court-House; we did not find any enemy and returned to the line of works at 12 m. We then started to join Sheridan at Sailor's Creek, and did so at about 4 p. m. and immediately charged the enemy in our front, driving him at every point until he was forced to surrender. In this engagement our losses were 2 killed and 4 wounded.

Friday, April 7, commenced marching at 8.30 a. m. and halted at Farmville at 3 p. m. At 8 p. m. we crossed the Appomattox River and camped for the night.

Saturday, April 8, commenced marching at 8.15 a. m.; marched about two miles, halted until afternoon, when we marched through Buckingham Institute, passed Willis Mountain, and camped at 9 p. m. at New Store.

Sunday, April 9, broke camp at 7 a. m. and marched on the road toward Appomattox Court-House, halting two hours in the forenoon and camping at 3 p. m. twelve miles from New Store, where we have remained since.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. BOGARDUS,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. C. H. LEONARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 137.

Report of Capt. James Tearney, Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS BATTALION EIGHTY-SEVENTH PENNSYLVANIA,

April 9, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with circular of this date, I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this command in the assault on the enemy's works on the left of Petersburg, Va., on the morning of April 2, 1865:

Left camp about 11 p. m. 1st instant and marched to the picket-line in front of Fort Welch, where the Third Division was massed, this command being in the third line of First Brigade. At about 4.30 a. m. the following day the order to charge was given, when the command moved forward and the enemy's line of works and forts was carried and held, driving the enemy before them and capturing a large number of prisoners and several cannon.

The following is the list of casualties: 2 commissioned officers and 6 enlisted men killed, 3 commissioned officers and 22 enlisted men wounded, and 5 enlisted men missing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES TEARNEY,

Captain, Commanding Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania.

Bvt. Maj. CHARLES H. LEONARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 138.

Report of Lieut. Col. George B. Damon, Tenth Vermont Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TENTH VERMONT INFANTRY,

Camp near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to orders received to-day, I have the honor to forward the following report of the recent operations of my command:

At midnight on the 1st instant this regiment was moved with the brigade from camp, and was formed to attack the rebel works. The regiment occupied the right of the first line, having two lines in the rear, the brigade being formed in the immediate rear of our picket-line and in front of Fort Welch. While lying upon this ground a severe fire was received from the picket of the enemy, which caused several casualties.

At 4 a. m. of the 2d instant we advanced to assault, crossing the rebel picket-line and the uneven ground beyond to the abatis before the rebel intrenchments. The regiment moved rapidly but with steadiness under fire of artillery and musketry. The line was necessarily considerably broken in penetrating the abatis, and a portion of it became wholly disconnected from the command and was not recovered until near the close of the morning's operations. We immediately mounted and entered the works over the most accessible passages, being the first to enter the intrenchments on our own front, and taking a number of prisoners, who were sent to the rear without guard, because I thought it imprudent to spare any men for that purpose, as there was then no other organization within the works on either flank or in front at the immediate point where my command entered. My command was now reformed in line of battle, and presently receiving orders through Major Day to that effect moved rapidly to the left by the flank upon a work of the enemy in that direction mounting guns, receiving artillery and musketry fire. The work was the third from that near which we entered the intrenchments. While we were advancing in this direction the work referred to was taken by some of our troops, but before we reached it they were driven from it by the enemy's musketry. We reached the fort and formed line of battle with what remained of my command in the rear of it, and partially covered by cabins there, among which were parties from the various regiments of the brigade. The enemy was well sheltered by the inequalities of the ground in front of us and by other cover, and delivered a most galling fire. The fire was returned when and where it could be done with effect, and this position was held for some twenty minutes by my command and other troops of the brigade, when, as no support had arrived, I thought it my duty to retire. We all retreated to the second redoubt, the enemy closely following and firing sharply and using the guns of the works on reaching it. Here the greater part of the division collected, and after remaining nearly an hour, perhaps, the brigade was reformed in line, of which my command was the right battalion. We now readvanced without serious opposition, and the enemy soon disappeared. We continued moving to the left until connection was made with the Twenty-fourth Corps. My command was not further actively engaged, but at about 10 a. m. moved to the right along the rebel works with other troops, and in the course of the day was placed in position on the right of the brigade, my right resting on the Vaughan road, and built earth-works.

On the morning of the 3d instant, the enemy having evacuated or been driven out of his works, we marched in pursuit, crossing the Dauville railroad nearetersville. On the afternoon of the 6th instant, the enemy being overtaken at Sailor's Creek and brought to a stand, my command, in the first disposition for attack, was the rear subdivision of the column formed by the brigade, and so advanced to the ground occupied by the artillery of the division during the action. After lying here for a short time, a new disposition being made, my command was assigned to the right of the second and rear line of battle, and the brigade advancing to the right and front to attack, my battalion moved over very difficult ground with as much steadiness and order as the nature of the country admitted, crossing the creek in mud and water hip deep. On rising the hill opposite, this admirable movement being discovered by the enemy he retreated, and the day concluded without casualty in my command.

While I cannot speak in too high praise of the conduct of both officers and men, I desire to mention, as deserving of especial consideration, Maj. Wylls Lyman, for most efficient services on the 2d and 6th instant, particularly on the 2d instant, when he was among the first to enter the enemy's works with the color-bearer of the regiment, and throughout the day used every exertion to keep up the organization of the regiment and to lead the men forward to their duty; Adj. James M. Read, who not only discharged his own special duties with the utmost skill on the 2d instant, but contributed materially to the success of the day by fighting with great gallantry and courage until he fell at the extreme front from a very severe wound, which resulted in the loss of his right leg; Corp. Ira F. Varney, Company K, color-bearer, who placed his colors within the enemy's works first on our own front, and who throughout the day combined dash with coolness and steadiness in a remarkable degree.

A tabular statement of casualties on the 2d instant is appended.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE B. DAMON,
Lieutenant Colonel, Commanding.

Brv. Maj. C. H. LEONARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 139.

Reports of Brt. Brig. Gen. J. Warren Keifer, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
Camp at Burkertille, Va., April 14, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to report the operations of this brigade on the 2d instant in the assault upon the enemy's works and in the engagement in front of Petersburg, Va.

Previous to the 2d instant my command, with the exception of the One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, occupied the line of works from Fort Fisher to Fort Gregg, inclusive of the forts named, and also Fort Welch, which was about the center of the brigade. The One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania occupied Fort Dushane, on the rear line, near the Weldon railroad. The brigade was formed for the assault to the front and left of Fort Welch about 3 a. m., in three lines of battle, with its right resting at an almost impassable swamp and ravine, which separated its right from the left of the Second Division, Sixth Army Corps. The First Brigade of the Third Division was formed upon the left of my brigade. The brigade was formed just in rear of the old intrenched picket-line of the enemy which had been taken from him on the 25th ultimo. Much difficulty was experienced in getting the troops formed, in consequence of the deep darkness and the deep swamp to be passed through, and also from a severe and annoying fire from the enemy. A number of men were killed and a number of officers and men were wounded during the formation of the troops, notwithstanding the troops preserved good order and remained cool and steady. The One hundred and tenth and One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio and Sixth Maryland Regiments were formed in the front line, from right to left, in the order named; the Ninth New York Heavy Artillery constituted the second line; and the One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, One hundred and thirty-eighth and Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiments were formed in the rear line, from right to left, in the order named.

The signal to assault the enemy's works was given, by direction of Major-General Wright, at precisely 4 a. m., by discharging a piece of artillery at Fort Fisher. Immediately after the signal was given the troops in the front line moved forward upon the enemy's outer works, which was held by a strong line of pickets, and captured them, and without halting or discharging a piece, although receiving a heavy fire from the enemy, the whole command moved upon the enemy's main works. Not even a temporary check transpired in passing through and over the double line of abatis, ditch, and strong earth-works. A hand-to-hand fight ensued within the main works, in which many gallant officers and men fell killed and wounded. The enemy in our front was soon killed, wounded, captured, or dispersed. Although the enemy had a large amount of artillery in the works in our front, we suffered but little from it. The whole of his artillery in our front fell into our hands immediately upon entering the works. This brigade assaulted the enemy's works just to the left (the enemy's right) of a salient angle in the enemy's line of works. After gaining an entrance within the works the enemy were still firing over the works to our right and upon the First and Second Divisions of the Sixth Army Corps, but in a few moments he was driven from his entire line of works in front of the corps. This brigade captured 10 pieces of artillery immediately after entering the works, for which it received receipts; also a large number of prisoners, 3 battle-flags, and Major-General Heth's division headquarters' flag. The troops of the brigade were in some confusion after entering the works, but the main body was at once directed along the enemy's fortifications to the left and upon a strong fort containing four pieces of artillery, which was soon captured. Although a number of troops of the division were hurried to this fort, yet when attacked by the enemy, owing to their unorganized condition, the troops were driven back and the fort retaken. At this juncture I directed Maj. William Wood and Brevet Major Lamoreaux, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, to place in position a four-gun battery, captured from the enemy, which they were prompt in doing, and used the guns with good effect.

---

* Shows 2 enlisted men killed and 2 officers and 44 enlisted men wounded.

A portion of the One hundred and twenty-second Ohio and One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Regiments, after passing over the works, continued directly forward across the Boydton plank road to a camp of the enemy some distance in the rear of the fortifications, where they captured a large number of prisoners. Some of the troops continued as far to the northward as the South Side Railroad and destroyed the telegraph line and tore up two rails on the South Side road. Upon their return Corpl. John W. Mauk and Private Daniel Wolford, Company F, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, became separated from the other troops. Two mounted men with pistols in their hands rode upon them and demanded their surrender, which was refused. The mounted men told them that other troops were coming upon them. The corporal and private deliberately fired upon the mounted men, the corporal killing one of them, the other escaped. The corporal and his comrade, fearing that others of the enemy were near at hand, retreated to the main body of the troops. From the manner in which it is known that Lieut. Gen. A. P. Hill was killed, there can be no doubt but what Corporal Mauk killed him. One of General Hill's staff officers, who was near him when he was shot, locates the place of his death at the same place the corporal related that he had shot an officer, before the death of General Hill was known by him.

The main body of the troops of the brigade soon retook the fort from which they had been driven, and, with the other troops of the division, swept along the enemy's fortifications to the left as far as Hatcher's Run, and small parties of the brigade, with the brigade sharpshooters, crossed it and captured a large number of prisoners.

Twelve pieces of artillery were captured during this movement to the left by the troops of the Third Division. Capt. William L. Shaw, with a small party of men, captured a four-gun battery and over fifty prisoners near Hatcher's Run. The prisoners were brought away and the guns were turned over to Brevet Brigadier-General Harris' brigade, in the Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

As the prisoners were all hastened to the rear, I am unable to approximate to the number captured by this brigade.

From Hatcher's Run the troops were hastened back to the place where the attack was first made, from whence the division was sent to the right and formed, fronting Petersburg, and upon the left and in support of the Ninth Army Corps.

Particular mention has already been made of the gallantry of officers, but it is due to Col. M. R. McClellan, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania; Lieut. Col. Charles M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio; Lieut. Col. James W. Snyder, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery; Maj. Clifton K. Prentiss, Sixth Maryland Volunteers; Majs. William and Anson S. Wood, Bvt. Maj. S. B. Lamoreaux, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, that their most brilliant services should be acknowledged here. Majors Wood and Lamoreaux, with men of the Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, were the first to turn and fire the enemy's guns upon him. Major Prentiss, Sixth Maryland, with a large portion of his regiment, was the first to penetrate the enemy's works, where, after a most bloody struggle, he fell severely, if not mortally, wounded. Five other officers of the Sixth Maryland were wounded very soon after entering the fortifications. Too much praise cannot be given the officers and men of this regiment.

So nearly at the same time were the colors of the One hundred and tenth Ohio, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania, and Sixth Maryland placed upon the enemy's works that each claims the honor of being the first.

Capt. William D. Shellenberger, One hundred and tenth Ohio, received a severe wound in the arm while advancing upon the enemy's works. Capt. H. H. Stevens, One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers, was shot dead after entering the fortifications.

Cpts. George P. Boyer, One hundred and tenth Ohio, J. W. Moffatt and C. E. Patterson, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, J. T. Bradshaw, Sixth Maryland, and Charles J. Gibson, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, are among the many who specially distinguished themselves on that day.

Sergt. Francis M. McMillen, Company C, and Private Isaac James, Company H, One hundred and tenth Ohio, and Private Milton Blickensderfer, Company E, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, each captured battle-flags. Private George Loyd, Company A, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, captured Major-General Heth's division headquarters' flag. Sergt. Judah Taylor, Company A, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, is reported by his regimental commander as having captured a battle-flag, which he gave up to two officers whose names are not known to him.

The names of many other enlisted men might in justice to them be mentioned. They have already been named in a separate report.

Capt. William L. Shaw, acting assistant adjutant-general of this brigade, and other members of the brigade staff deserve special mention for their good conduct. Capt. Harrison D. Yarnett, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Volunteers, who commanded the brigade sharpshooters, was particularly efficient and active. He showed superior skill and judgment.

My orders for the day's operations were received from and through Brig. Gen. T. Seymour, who in person accompanied the troops in the assault. Major-General Wright and Brigadier-General Seymour were present with the troops directing the operations of the day.

Copies of regimental reports are herewith transmitted.

A numerical list of casualties is hereto annexed.

I am, major, your obedient and humble servant,

J. WARREN KEIFER,

Brevet Brigadier-General Volunteers.

Bvt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

Numerical report of casualties in Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, April 2, 1865.

Regiment.	Killed.		Wounded.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
110th Ohio Volunteers.....	1	3	2	23	3	25	28
122d Ohio Volunteers.....				8		8	8
120th Ohio Volunteers.....		1	1	10	1	11	12
67th Pennsylvania Volunteers.....		2		6		8	8
138th Pennsylvania Volunteers.....			2	14	2	14	16
6th Maryland Volunteers.....		2	0	20	0	22	28
9th New York Heavy Artillery.....		4	3	60	3	65	66
Total.....	1	12	11	130	15	161	160

HQRS. SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp at Burkeville, Va., April 17, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor, as required in orders, to forward the names of enlisted men, who, by their gallantry and good conduct, deserve rewards at the hands of those in authority.

One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers.—Sergt. Maj. Osceola Lewis, who was conspicuous for bravery and meritorious conduct on the 2d and 6th instant. He rendered most valuable assistance to the commanding officer of his regiment on the days above named.

Color-Sergt. Charles R. Jones, Company C, for bravery in waving the colors of his regiment in the face of the enemy on the 6th instant, with a view to encourage the men in the attack.

Corpl. Trustrim Connell, Company I, for gallant conduct and the capture of the battle-flag of the Tenth Virginia (rebel) Infantry.

Sixth Maryland Volunteers.—Sergt. Maj. Frederick Boltze; First Sergt. John D. Hall, Company B; First Sergt. Whitfield Stansbury, Company C; Color-Sergt. Robert Spence, Company B; Color-Corpl. William J. Brown, Company K; Color-Corpl. Jesso Arnold, Company C; Corpl. John Traver, Private Josiah E. Willhide, and Private George Damuth, Company D; Sergt. John B. Bullington, Company C; Corpl. Henry Clinton, Company F; Sergt. Peter Stone, Company I; Privates Samuel F. Barrott and Albert T. Gregg, Company G; Corpl. Amos Davis, Company H; First Sergt. Samuel Kearney, Company I.

The above-named enlisted men of the Sixth Maryland are each reported by their company and regimental commanders as having been conspicuous for bravery in the charge on the 2d instant, and in the battle of the 6th instant at Sailor's Creek, Va.

Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers.—Corpl. John Keough, Company E, for gallantry in capturing the colors of the Fiftieth Georgia Regiment. Serpts. Horace P. Warfield, Company C, John Larimer, Company H, William A. Rager, Company E, William R. Black, Company G, and William Keller, Company E, are reported by their regimental commanders as having distinguished themselves by their bravery and good conduct in keeping up the men in the battle of Sailor's Creek, Va.

One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteers.—Sergt. Maj. H. S. Moses greatly distinguished himself for valuable services in leading the men to the assault, and urging them forward after a temporary repulse from a captured fort, on the 2d of April, 1865.

Sergt. B. McFarland, commanding Company D, greatly distinguished himself for his coolness and bravery and the vigor with which he led his company to the assault.

First Sergt. Alfred Zartman, commanding Company K, after entering the works pursued some flying rebels and succeeded in capturing a colonel and about one dozen others, whom he sent to the rear.

Sergt. John J. Keiser, Company E, who was one of the first to enter the works on the 2d instant, and was foremost in the pursuit of the enemy. He captured an officer and a number of men.

Sergt. Francis Cordry, Company E, was conspicuous throughout the whole engagement of the 2d instant for coolness and bravery, and persevering efforts to urge the men forward.

Color-bearers, Sergt. Samuel Gearing, Company I, and Sergt. Philip Kline, Company G, behaved with gallantry during the engagement of the 2d instant, and were among the first to plant the colors on the enemy's fortifications.

The above-named enlisted men of the One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio were omitted from a former report, in consequence of my inability to obtain reports from the regimental commander on account of his absence.

One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers.—Private Marcus Bodmer, Company D, One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers, has been just reported by the commanding officer of his regiment as being worthy of reward for meritorious conduct in the assault on the 2d instant, for the following reasons, viz: "In the assault, just as he entered the enemy's works, he captured a rebel flag, but being in hot pursuit of the enemy, and thinking the flag of but little value, while important work was going on, threw it aside, calling it only a 'rebel rag,' and continued in pursuit of the enemy, of whom it is believed he shot three."

Privates Richard Netz, Company F, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, Lewis H. Shreeve, Company A, Sixth Maryland, Oliver F. Plauk, Company B, and George W. Iekes, Company D, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, mounted orderlies at my headquarters, were each distinguished for gallantry in the battles of the 2d and 6th instant. They have shown superior gallantry on former occasions. Richard Netz, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, carried the brigade colors at the head of the troops in the attack at Sailor's Creek, on the 6th instant. I take great pleasure in recommending each for rewards.

I am, major, with high esteem, your obedient and humble servant,

J. WARREN KEEFER,

Brevet Brigadier-General.

Byt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Division, Sixth Army Corps.

HEADQRS. SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp at Burkeville, Va., April 18, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to orders, I have the honor to forward a report of movements and operations of this brigade from the 3d to the 13th of April, 1865, inclusive.

After the movements and operations of the 2d instant the brigade bivouacked for the night in front of Petersburg, Va. Early on the morning of the 3d it was ascertained that Petersburg was evacuated on the night previous by the rebel army and reports were received, which proved to be true, that Richmond, the rebel capital, was also evacuated on the same night. About 9 a. m. on the 3d this brigade, with the division and corps, commenced the pursuit of the enemy by the road in the direction of Burkeville Junction, Va. The pursuit was continued on the 4th and 5th. Just after dark of the 5th instant the brigade went into position, on the left of the corps, in two lines, near Jetersville, Va., facing Amelia Court-House, its left connecting with the Fifth Army Corps. The front line threw up slight earth-works.

Early upon the morning of the 6th instant the brigade, with the corps, advanced toward Amelia Court-House, in the vicinity of which it was known that the rebel Army of Northern Virginia had been concentrated. The troops moved forward about three miles, when information was obtained that the rebel army had withdrawn and was then moving around the left flank of our army and in the direction of Burkeville Junction. The troops were marched back by the way of Jetersville and moved upon a road which enabled the corps to strike the enemy in flank. The corps came up with General Sheridan's cavalry about 3 p. m. of the 6th instant. This brigade was in the advance of the corps; the brigade sharpshooters and the One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Regiment were rapidly deployed as skirmishers, and the other regiments formed in two lines in their rear. Without delay or scarcely a halt for the formation the whole brigade was pushed forward, as directed by Major-General Wright through Brigadier-General Seymour. During the movement I caused two companies of the One hundred and tenth Ohio to deploy to the right to protect the flank. The enemy was moving troops and trains upon a road which extended parallel to our then front. A short distance from the road upon which the enemy was marching a brisk skirmish ensued between my advance and troops of the enemy, but the road was soon gained, and a considerable number of prisoners and wagons captured. The brigade struck the main road upon which the enemy was moving at the junction of a road which led off to the right and at right angles with it. The greater part of the skirmish line—One hundred and tenth Ohio and Ninth New York Heavy Artillery—was ordered to pursue a body of the enemy which had retreated on that road. The enemy also had a section of artillery upon that road, from which they fired shell and canister shot, but without producing much damage. The troops in pursuit soon compelled the artillery to withdraw from its first position to a second. Although the troops had performed a march of over eighteen miles they eagerly pressed forward, and were in the act of making a second charge upon the artillery when orders were received purporting to come from Major-General Sheridan to halt and allow the cavalry to charge. The cavalry charge was not made. The section of artillery was very soon withdrawn, but it is believed that it was subsequently captured. The Sixth Maryland, Sixty-seventh and One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Regiments were reformed in line across the main road upon which the enemy had been moving, and at once commenced his pursuit. The rear guard of the enemy was soon overtaken and attacked; it was vigorously pressed for about one mile, to and across Sailor's Creek. The enemy being cut off from retreat by cavalry, under command of Major-General Custer, were forced to give battle, and for that purpose formed his line behind Sailor's Creek. The divisions of General Pickett, Kershaw, Custis Lee, and also the Marine Brigade, commanded by Commodore Tucker, the whole under the command of Lieut. Gen. R. S. Ewell, are known to have participated in the battle. Artillery was brought within range of the enemy and opened a destructive fire upon him. The First Brigade, Third Division, and the First Division, Sixth Army Corps, were soon upon the ground and formed for an attack. Although staff officers were sent to withdraw the part of this brigade that had been sent in pursuit of the enemy upon the other road, only a portion arrived in time to participate in the final engagement, in consequence of the refusal of officers in the Second Army Corps, which had then come up on our right, to allow them to be withdrawn from their front. An attack was ordered to be made by Maj. Gen. H. G. Wright, commanding corps, with the troops already upon the ground. A concentrated artillery fire was directed upon the enemy's center, under cover of which the troops advanced through and across the swamp, and at once charged up the steep hills upon which the enemy was posted. A severe conflict ensued as the lines of the opposing forces came together. A number of men were bayoneted on both sides. The enemy had a heavy column massed in the rear of his center, with which he charged upon our troops. Owing to the fact that our troops could only be fought in one line, the enemy succeeded in breaking through the center and gaining a momentary success. The troops on the right and left continued the advance until the enemy's column in the center was enveloped and cut to pieces and captured. The enemy was soon routed at all points, and many general officers and many thousands of prisoners threw down their arms and surrendered. The rebel Marine Brigade fought with most extraordinary courage, but was finally cut off and captured. Commodore Tucker, Commander Hunter, Captain Semmes, and about twenty-five naval officers, with the brigade, surrendered to me.

It is impossible to give the number of prisoners captured by troops of this brigade. Two battle-flags were taken from the enemy during the conflict. Corporal John Keough, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania, and Corporal Tristram Connell, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania, each captured a battle-flag.

Much gallantry and many acts of distinguished bravery were noticed during the attack. Unusual credit is due the troops for the vigorous manner in which they attacked the enemy, considering the long and tiresome march made on the same day. Lieut. Col. J. O. Hill, commanding Sixth Maryland, was captured by the enemy, but soon after persuaded his captors, including a number of officers and men, to surrender to him and come within our lines.

During the entire day's operations, Col. M. R. McClellan, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania; Bvt. Col. O. H. Buckley, One hundred and tenth Ohio; Lieut. Cols. C. M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, and James W. Snyder, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, regimental commanders, showed great skill, judgment, and bravery. Maj. William G. Williams, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, commanding Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania, was particularly gallant.

Maj. William Wood, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, while leading his battalion in a charge, received a dangerous wound from a canister shot in the face.

Majs. Anson S. Wood, S. B. Lamoreaux, and Capts. George W. Brinkerhoff, Henry J. Rhodes, and Chamney Fish, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery; and Capts. George P. Boyer, One hundred and tenth Ohio, Charles J. Gibson and Moses D. Wheeler, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, John J. Bradshaw, John G. Simpers, and Charles A. Danuth, Sixth Maryland, and Simon Diekerhoof, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Regiments, are among the many who did their duty nobly.

Capt. Harrison D. Yarnett, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio, commanding brigade sharpshooters, handled his men as skirmishers with great skill and success.

Capt. William L. Shaw, One hundred and tenth Ohio, acting assistant adjutant-general of brigade; Capt. J. P. Dndrow, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio; Capt. William H. Abercrombie, Sixth Maryland, and Second Lieut. R. W. Cook, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania, acting aides-de-camp; and Capt. J. W. Jewhurst, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery, serving upon brigade staff—were particularly active, efficient, and brave. Capt. T. J. Hoskinson, commissary of subsistence of the brigade, was conspicuous for gallantry upon the field.

Privates Richard Netz, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, and George W. Jokes, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania, mounted orderlies, accompanied me with the advance of the troops in the field attack, the former carrying the brigade flag. Their most commendable conduct should not be forgotten.

The troops were moved from the scene of the battle after dark toward Rice's Station, and bivouacked for the night about two miles and a half from the battle-ground and about three miles from Rice's Station. The remnant of the rebel army retreated, via Farmville, across the Appomattox River toward Appomattox Court-House, Va., and was closely pursued. This brigade, with the division and corps, crossed the river at Farmville about 10 p. m. of the 7th, and bivouacked for the night.

The enemy was closely followed on the 8th and 9th of April until about 2 p. m. of the 9th instant, when the troops halted about six miles from Appomattox Court-house, and were soon after informed that General R. E. Lee had surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia. The rebel army was then in our immediate front and not to exceed five miles from Appomattox Court-House, Va. The wildest enthusiasm prevailed among the troops upon being informed of the surrender.

Early on the morning of the 11th instant the brigade, with the corps, commenced the march to this place, where it arrived on the 13th instant and went into camp.

The One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio, Col. B. F. Smith commanding, was detached from the brigade on the night of the 5th of April to guard prisoners, and did not rejoin the brigade until April 15, 1865.

Detailed reports of the operations of regiments are herewith transmitted.

My orders were received from and through Brig. Gen. T. Seymour, commanding division, to whom I beg here to tender my thanks for his uniform courtesy to me.

The once defiant rebel Army of Northern Virginia being utterly vanquished, the troops are in the highest possible spirits at the prospect of an early and universal peace in our country.

I am, major, with high esteem, your most obedient and humble servant,

J. WARREN KEIFER,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. O. V. TRACY,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Division, Sixth Army Corps.

No. 110.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph C. Hill, Sixth Maryland Infantry.

HQRS. SIXTH REGIMENT MARYLAND VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to transmit the following detailed report of the operations of this command from the storming of the enemy's works south of Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, to the 13th instant, when the corps arrived at this place and encamped:

On the morning of the 2d instant we filed out of our main works and formed the center of the first battle line of the Second Brigade, the One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers on our right and the One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteers on our left. At or about 5 a. m. the command to advance was given, and the line moved forward, completely routing and capturing the entire picket-line of the enemy in our front, after which this command dashed forward and succeeded in planting the first colors on the enemy's works in our front, supported for some minutes by a small band, consisting of six officers and about twenty men, during which time Maj. C. K. Prentiss, Capt. Thomas Ocker, First Lieut. Thomas Duff, and Second Lieut. Thomas H. Goldsborough were severely wounded. The regiment being formed, we charged straight down the enemy's works, capturing many prisoners, and assisted in capturing a battery of four guns, which were immediately turned upon the flying foe. The colors of the above-named battery were surrendered to First Lieut. Samuel W. Angel, of this command. We then charged the second battery, and, in conjunction with parts of many different commands, succeeded in driving the enemy from their guns, but being unsupported were driven from their works, after a stubborn resistance, and were compelled to fall back to the battery being worked by a detachment of the Ninth New York Artillery. During this temporary reverse First Lieut. Samuel W. Angel was mortally wounded while attempting to rally his men. We again formed, with other portions of the brigade, and retook the above-named battery. While forming the line for this charge First Lieut. A. F. Rittenhouse was severely wounded in the leg. Our total loss during this engagement was, 6 officers wounded, 3 enlisted men killed, and 19 enlisted men wounded.

I take great pleasure in calling attention to the gallant and meritorious conduct of both officers and men of this command on that momentous occasion. I cannot close this report without calling your attention to the gallant and meritorious conduct of the following-named officers and soldiers on that occasion: Maj. C. K. Prentiss, Adj. J. L. Mahan, Capt. John J. Bradshaw, they being the first officers in the enemy's works; also Capt. John G. Simpers, Capt. Thomas Ocker, First Lieut. Thomas Duff, First Lieut. Samuel W. Angel, First Lieut. Charles G. Feichtner, First Lieut. A. F. Rittenhouse, Second Lieut. Thomas H. Goldsborough, Second Lieut. O. H. P. Mathias; also Color-Sergt. Daniel Tatum, Company I, Color-Corpl. William J. Brown, Company K, Color-Corpl. Jesse Arnold, Company C, for planting the first colors on the enemy's works; First Sergt. Samuel Kearney, Company I, for picking up the State colors after Corporal Brown was wounded and planting them on the enemy's fort; Private Alexander Burleigh, Company B, for shooting down a rebel engaged in hand-to-hand combat with Capt. John J. Bradshaw. There are many other instances of courage and bravery displayed by the officers and men of this command, but time and space will not permit of noticing them.

We then formed with our brigade and moved to the right of our line and took position; remained in line until the morning of the 3d, when we took up line of march with our gallant corps in pursuit of the fleeing enemy.

On the afternoon of the 6th instant, after a hard day's march, found the enemy at Sailor's Creek. This command, in connection with the One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, charged the enemy's skirmish line and drove them through the swamp across the creek, capturing a number of prisoners. We then formed for the grand charge in rear of the First Division of our corps. The command forward was given, and we plunged into the swamp, driving the enemy before us. For a short time there was a temporary reverse, owing to a portion of the line of the First Division breaking, and several of this command were captured by the enemy, including myself, but, owing to the cavalry getting in the rear of the enemy, we succeeded in escaping, capturing our captors and bringing them into our lines. The prisoners thus captured were 5 field officers, several line officers, and about 150 men. In this engagement we lost, in killed none, 4 enlisted men wounded.

I take great pleasure in calling attention to the distinguished bravery of the following-named officers and soldiers during this engagement: Capt. John J. Bradshaw, Adj. Joseph L. Mahan, Capt. John G. Simpers, Capt. Charles A. Damuth, First Lieut. Charles G. Feichtner, First Lieut. Nelson McDowell, Second Lieut. O. H. P. Mathias; also Color-Sergt. Daniel Tatum, Color-Corpl. Jesse Arnold, Sergt. Maj. Frederick Boltze, Corpl. John Traver, Corpl. William Freeze, Corpl. Joseph Baxter, Private Peter Stamp, Private Josiah E. Willhide, Company D, Sergt. John E. Bullington, Company C, First Sergt. John D. Hall, Company B, Corpl. Henry Clinton, Company F, Sergt. Peter Stone, Company I, Privates Samuel F. Barrett, Albert T. Gregg, and Nathan Tyson, Company G—for unsurpassed bravery in rushing forward into the enemy's lines and capturing many prisoners. In fact, the entire command behaved in a manner worthy of praise and admiration.

After our brigade was formed we rested for the night near the scene of our great conquest.

On the morning of the 7th took up line of march with our corps in pursuit of the enemy, nothing of importance transpiring until the afternoon of the 9th, when the Army of Northern Virginia surrendered to Lieutenant-General Grant, near Appomattox Court-House. We remained in camp rejoicing over our brilliant series of victories until the evening of the 10th, when we were ordered to guard the ammunition train back to Burkville Station, at which place we arrived on the morning of the 13th instant and went into camp.

In conclusion, allow me to say I am proud of the little band I have the honor to command, and I am sure the State and country at large has reason to be proud of such a brave and noble set of men.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully,

J. C. HILL,

Lieut. Col., Comdg. Sixth Regiment Maryland Volunteers.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 141.

Reports of Lieut. Col. James W. Snyder, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH NEW YORK ARTILLERY,
April 8, 1865.

I have the honor to report the part taken by the Ninth New York Artillery in the action of the 2d of April to be as follows:

We moved out of camp at 12 o'clock midnight to the rear of the picket-line of the Third Division and halted, the regiment forming the second line. At 4 o'clock the order to advance was given, and we moved forward under a galling fire of artillery. As we moved toward the enemy's works we left obliquely, and entered the fort in front of the left of the Third Division line, being the first to enter the work, capturing four guns, which were immediately brought to bear on the retreating foe with great effect. The guns were manned by men and officers of the regiment, and they handled them with great skill. We wheeled to the left and swept down the right of the rebel line, charging across a deep swamp, then wading to their breasts, and carried another fort, capturing two guns. The rebels rallied and charged upon us and drove us across the swamp again, where we held them for some time. The artillery, under charge of Maj. William Wood, of the regiment, dismounted one of the pieces at the first fire, which left them but one gun, which was soon silenced, when we charged again across the swamp and captured a great many prisoners. We moved on down the enemy's line for a couple of miles, when we were halted and formed, then moved down the left of the enemy's line toward Petersburg, before which we reached about 3 a. m.

To mention individual instances of bravery displayed in the battle by any single individual would be but doing injustice to others. Both officers and men did their whole duty, without a single exception; but I must speak of the field officers of my command in the highest terms: Maj. William Wood performed his duty nobly in urging the men forward to the assault, and, after carrying the works, in turning the enemy's guns upon them with telling effect; Maj. A. S. Wood was active in urging the men forward; also, Bvt. Maj. S. B. Lamoreaux performed his duty well. The line officers all behaved themselves nobly; so [did] the whole command. Lieuts. Gay A. Brown and Bigelow were wounded while charging upon the enemy's works at the head of the command. They should receive honorable mention for their gallantry.

Very respectfully,

JAS. W. SNYDER,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH NEW YORK ARTILLERY,
April 15, 1865.

I have the honor to report the following to be the part taken by the Ninth New York Artillery in the action at Sailor's Creek, April 6:

The regiment was formed in the second line, and advanced through a wood in good order. After clearing the wood it made a right wheel and moved forward about 200 yards, when it made a left half-wheel. At this time I was ordered to charge a battery that was in our immediate front in a piece of wood, which was firing shot and shell with great rapidity. We moved forward on the double-quick, and soon forced the battery to limber up and retire. They planted the battery again in a piece of woods across an open field and opened on us with a heavy fire, but our advance across the field caused it to again limber to the rear. The men were completely exhausted, having marched some eighteen miles, and receiving no rest before entering into action; if they had been fresh, we should have captured the battery without any doubt.

The men and officers behaved with their usual gallantry. I can but speak in the highest terms of the gallant conduct of Capts. George W. Brinkerhoff, Henry J. Rhodes, and Chauncey Fish. Maj. William Wood was severely wounded in the face while gallantly advancing under the enemy's fire.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. W. SNYDER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 142.

Reports of Det. Col. Otho H. Binkley, One hundred and tenth Ohio Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 110TH OHIO VOLUNTEERS,

April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteers in the assault of Sunday, April 2, 1865, upon the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, Va.

The One hundred and tenth Regiment formed the right of the front line, connecting on its left with the Sixth Maryland Regiment. The regiment was commanded by Capt. William D. Shellenberger, I being in charge of the picket-line as corps officer of the day. When the signal for the advance was fired from Fort Fisher the regiment moved forward with the balance of the line, and was one of the first to plant its colors upon the enemy's works. Before reaching the enemy's works Captain Shellenberger was severely wounded in the left arm and was compelled to retire from the field. Capt. Elem Harter was also severely wounded in the arm. Capt. H. H. Stevens was shot dead after he had gotten inside of the enemy's works and was in the act of charging a battery. Four pieces of artillery were captured by members of the regiment, 400 prisoners, and two flags. The flags were captured by Private Isaac James, Company H, and Sergt. Francis M. McMillen, Company C; the latter also captured one piece of artillery.

Capt. George P. Boyer made himself conspicuous by his activity and bravery. Adjt. William H. Harry, Lieuts. John T. Sherer, A. A. Hubbard, D. S. French, and Amos Shaul deserve great credit for the manner in which they conducted themselves during the engagement. First Sergt. John W. Hays, commanding Company A, and Sergt. Richard Pearson, commanding Company G, are entitled to mention for their good conduct during the assault, in which the latter was severely wounded. Sergt. Thomas Goe, Company D, in charge of three men, caused 130 rebels to surrender to him; among those were 3 captains and 4 lieutenants. Corpl. Keeran McKenny, Company C, was the first to reach and capture a four-gun battery. Corpl. Calvin M.

Espy, in a hand-to-hand combat, overpowered two rebels who refused to surrender to him. A great many others performed deeds of a similar character, but to mention all would occupy too much space.

The regiment in the assault had 1 commissioned officer killed and 2 wounded, 3 enlisted men killed and 22 wounded; total, 28.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BINKLEY,

Brevet Colonel 110th Ohio Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., 2d Brig., 3d Div., 6th Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS 110TH OHIO VOLUNTEERS,

April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of the One hundred and tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry from April 3, 1865:

After the assault upon the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, in which the One hundred and tenth Regiment took a prominent part, and of which I made mention in a former report, the regiment joined in the pursuit of the enemy, but did not become engaged with him until the 6th, when, near Little Sailor's Creek, we met the enemy in force. Lines were immediately formed, the One hundred and tenth Regiment constituting the right of the first line, Companies A and F being deployed as skirmishers to the right. We advanced through a narrow strip of woods, where we were met by a severe fire of shell and grape, with musketry, which caused a temporary halt; but we again advanced, still exposed to the fire of grape and canister, driving the enemy before us across a large, open field, compelling the enemy's artillery to leave its position, and capturing a number of wagons, with some ammunition. Had the men been fresh, instead of being fatigued from the day's march, I have no doubt we could have taken the enemy's battery.

In this charge the regiment was more fortunate than usual, having only one man wounded.

The regiment was, with its brigade, in pursuit of the rebel army at the time it was surrendered by the rebel general, Robert E. Lee.

The regiment then marched, with balance of the troops, to its present position.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. H. BINKLEY,

Brevet Colonel 110th Ohio Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., 2d Brig., 3d Div., 6th Army Corps.

No. 143.

Report of Lieut. Col. Charles M. Cornyn, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 122D REGIMENT OHIO VOLUNTEERS,

April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to orders, I have the honor to report that since the assault on the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, on the morning of the 2d instant, of which a report has been forwarded, I have no special mention to make of any particular members of my regiment. At the battle of Sailor's Creek my regiment was ordered out as skirmishers, where the enthusiasm and gallantry displayed by all in going in determined to succeed leaves no room for particular mention. The regiment captured full 500 prisoners, for which some have receipts, and undoubtedly would have captured the rebel's battery, which kept up a heavy fire on the advancing column, but for the interference of the cavalry who desired to charge, and I received orders to have my line halt for that purpose. The cavalry failing to go in, I ordered my line to advance; the left of my line receiving orders to bear to the left, formed the skirmish line in the front of our advancing columns, where the severe fighting took place, and sustained their character as brave soldiers.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. M. CORNYN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding 122d Ohio Volunteers.

[Capt. WILLIAM L. SHAW,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

---

No. 144.

Report of Col. Benjamin F. Smith, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 126TH OHIO VOLUNTEERS,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with instructions, I have respectfully to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the engagement of the 2d instant, in front of Petersburg:

About 1 o'clock in the morning orders were received to move out in front of our works, which I did with that portion of the regiment remaining in camp, four officers and 100 men being on picket. We moved forward and took position on the left of the second line of battle, near our picket-line. After considerable manœuvring, changing position of regiments, &c., the regiment lay under arms until shortly after 4 a. m., when the signal gun was fired and the regiment moved forward with the column. The charge was successfully made, and the enemy's lines broken, my regiment entering between two forts or redoubts, under a severe fire of musketry and artillery, capturing a number of prisoners. After breaking through the lines and swinging to the left upon the fort, the rebels fled, but rallied and succeeded in driving our men out, but they, in turn, rallying, and with the assistance of a column coming down on the rebels' flank, drove the rebels out and held the fort. The loss in this assault was, 1 officer (Lieut. and Actg. Adj. C. C. Crawford) wounded, 1 enlisted man killed, and 8 wounded.

Immediately after the capture of the rebel works the regiment moved with the column to the left a distance of about one mile, and halted. After remaining about one hour moved again to the right along the rebel works, recrossed the captured works, and took up position on the line held by the enemy's pickets before the assault in front of Fort Fisher, where we lay in support of a battery which was engaged in shelling the enemy. Remaining here until between 3 and 4 p. m., we moved still farther to the right along the same picket-line, and took up position in front of Fort Keene, where the enemy shelled us considerably, inflicting no damage. We remained in this position during the rest of the day, and in the evening were rejoined by those of the regiment still on picket. Many who were on picket in the morning charged with the column and fought with the regiment during the whole engagement.

The officers and men behaved gallantly. For cases of distinguished gallantry and meritorious conduct, your attention is respectfully invited to accompanying report.

Very respectfully,

B. F. SMITH,
Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. J. P. DUDROW,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Brig., Third Div., Sixth Corps.

No. 145.

Reports of Maj. William G. Williams, One hundred and twenty-sixth Ohio Infantry, commanding Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. SIXTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLTS.,
April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the action taken by the Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers at the assault on the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865:

The regiment was marched from its camp by the left flank, following the One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. It was formed near the picket-line of the Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, in the rear or third line of battle, ten paces from the next preceding it. At 5 a. m. the command forward was given. It moved forward in gallant style until we came to the enemy's intrenched picket-line, where considerable difficulty was experienced in crossing it, on account of men in front lying down in the works, but by the gallant conduct of the officers, the regiment was moved forward to the assault, and I am proud to say its colors were among the first planted on the enemy's works.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. G. WILLIAMS.

Major 126th Ohio Vols., Comdg. Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Vols.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,
Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., 2d Brig., 3d Div., 6th Army Corps.

HDQRS. SIXTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLTS.,
April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report, in compliance with circular dated headquarters Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, April 15, 1865, of the engagement of the 6th instant:

This regiment formed the right of the first line of battle, connecting on the left with the One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. Moving forward for a distance of about 800 yards, the skirish line driving the enemy, we halted at a road, the name of which I do not know. After laying there for a few moments we moved off by the left flank for about 200 yards, and there formed line across the road, we at this time forming the second line of battle, the first being formed by the Sixth Maryland Volunteers and One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers. We then moved down the road some distance, when my regiment (the second line) was ordered to halt and lie down; the first line continuing to advance, became engaged with the enemy. We were then ordered to advance, which we did, and guiding right soon had the regiment on the right of the road. The regiment moved gallantly forward, subject to a severe fire of musketry from the enemy, then sheltered behind some houses near and to the left of the road and a line of light works. The regiment charged forward, driving the enemy from them and capturing some prisoners. We then halted, and in a few moments reformed our lines. The First Division, Sixth Army Corps, then came up in a line of battle. We were ordered to lie down and allow them to pass over us. We then advanced in the rear of the First Division, crossing the swamp, which at this place was about twenty-five yards wide and very deep. The First Division moving by the right for some distance, we moved forward and connected with them on their left. We then advanced through the woods in line of battle, when the First Division, on our right, gave way and fell back to the swamp, which exposed our right flank, causing us to fall back about fifty yards. We again rallied, driving the enemy and capturing their line of works, together with a great many prisoners. Here we halted and reformed our line, resting for about an hour, when we moved out right in front for two or three miles, and encamped for the night.

Our loss was 2 killed and 21 wounded.

I would further add that Corpl. John Keough, of Company B, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, captured the colors of the Fiftieth Georgia.

The regiment behaved nobly during the engagement. Sergeants Horace P. Warfield, Company C, John Larimer, Company H, William A. Rager, Company E, William R. Black, Company G, and William Keller, Company I, made themselves conspicuous at all times by assisting in rallying the men.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. G. WILLIAMS,

Major 126th Ohio Vols., Comdg. Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Vols.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 2d Brig., 3d Div., 6th Army Corps.

No. 146.

Reports of Col. Matthew R. McClellan, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 138TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 2, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that my command, consisting of 12 commissioned officers and about 300 enlisted men, reported to headquarters Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Corps, about midnight 1st instant, in compliance with orders received from the brigade commander, and after some delay was formed as a part of a third line of battle, preparatory to an assault upon the enemy's works. The One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Volunteers joined me on the right and the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers on the left. The lines were established under fire of the enemy's pickets, but it was accomplished without much difficulty. At 4 a. m., at a given signal, the lines advanced in proper order, and under a sharp musketry and enfilading artillery fire, to the works. The difficulties encountered, in the shape of tangled underbrush and marshy ditches, caused some confusion, but the body of the third line came otherwise promptly forward and the colors of the several regiments were in the rebel camps almost simultaneously. After crossing the works the organization of the brigade appeared to dissolve, and bodies of men moved in all directions in pursuit of the flying enemy. My command advanced in a northwesterly direction some two miles, but, after a temporary stay, I marched the regiment back to near where the rebel line was first broken, and where I found the brigade becoming reorganized. My regiment participated in the charge upon the rebel fort last taken by this division, and several casualties occurred at that time. A few prisoners were brought in by men of this regiment, but I cannot report the number, not having received it.

Two men of Company F, this regiment, penetrated the country as far as the South Side Railroad and tore up two rails of the track. Upon their return from this work they encountered two rebel officers, who demanded their surrender. Corpl. John W. Mank, one of the men referred to, immediately shot one of the officers, and Private Daniel Wolford, Company F, discharged his musket at the other, but missed, and the rebel escaped. The men then came to the regiment and reported the affair to me. It is supposed that the officer shot by Corporal Mank was the rebel general A. P. Hill. I have the honor to commend both these men for their bravery and daring, and to ask that they be suitably rewarded.

The general conduct of the officers and men was very creditable, but, other than those above mentioned, I have none to specially recommend for promotion or other reward.

Capt. James B. Heelmer, Company A, received a severe wound in the charge upon the fort last assaulted, and behaved well. Ident. J. P. Iredell, Company K, acting adjutant, received a wound early in the engagement while aiding in forming the lines, and was compelled to leave the field.

The regiment participated in the movements of the brigade during the day, and was not further engaged.

I am pleased to report my casualties as very slight, considering the heat of the engagement; they were as follows: Wounded, 2 officers and 14 enlisted men; total, 16.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. R. McOLLENNAN,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. W. L. SHAW,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS 138TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report of operations since 2d instant:

On the 3d instant this regiment marched from the vicinity of Petersburg, Va., with the Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Corps, and started in pursuit of the retreating enemy to a point near Appomattox Court-House, Va., where, on the 9th instant, the remnant of the Army of Northern Virginia was compelled to surrender to our victorious forces. Nothing special occurred during this campaign other than the usual privations and hardships which invariably follow and attend forced and rapid marching, excepting the engagement at Sailor's Creek, April 6, in which this regiment acted a prominent part. There it formed a part of the first line of battle at the opening of the engagement, and, with the Sixth Maryland Volunteers on its left, drove the enemy to and finally across the creek and swamp known as Sailor's Creek. The very hard marching of the day from Amelia Court-House had caused considerable straggling, and not more than one-half or two-thirds of the command reached the field in time to participate in the battle. After sharing the first of the engagement I was ordered to cross the swamp, which was only accomplished with great difficulty, and soon became sharply engaged. The result of the engagement is fully known; therefore I need not discuss it.

My loss was 3 killed and 7 wounded, a very few slight injuries not being included.

The conduct of the regiment, I think, was good.

I have forwarded a complete list of casualties to your office.

After the glorious event of the 9th instant my command marched with the brigade to Burkeville, Va., where it arrived on the 13th instant. Nothing worthy of note occurred during that trip.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. R. McCLENNAN,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

[Capt. W. L. SHAW,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 147.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Andrew Cowan, First Battery New York Light Artillery, commanding Artillery Brigade.

HDQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
Burkeville, Va., April 15, 1865.

I have the honor to forward the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the operations of the army during the campaign which has resulted in the surrender of the principal army of the rebellion:

On April 1 instructions were received from headquarters Sixth Corps that the corps would assault the works of the enemy at 4 a. m. on the following morning, and five batteries of the brigade were designated to assist in the assault, viz: Battery B, Fifth U. S. Artillery, Lieut. J. R. Brincklé, commanding; Third New York Independent Battery, Bvt. Maj. W. A. Harn commanding; Battery H, First Rhode Island Artillery, Capt. C. Allen, jr., commanding; First New York Independent Battery, Bvt. Capt. O. R. Van Etten commanding; Battery G, First Rhode Island Artillery, Bvt. Maj. G. W. Adams commanding. Lieutenant Brincklé was ordered to report to Brigadier-General Seymour, Brevet Major Harn to Brevet Major-General Getty, and Captain Allen to Brevet Major-General Whetten for orders. The First New York Independent Battery and Battery G, First Rhode Island Artillery were held in reserve. At about 10 p. m. instructions were received from General Wright to open fire on the enemy's lines with all the batteries, which was accordingly done, and a moderate fire kept up for about three hours. At 2 a. m. on April 2 the batteries selected to accompany the assaulting column were relieved from their positions in the works and massed near Fort Fisher. Bvt. Maj. G. W. Adams was detailed, with a detachment of twenty men, to advance with the assaulting column, to take command of and turn the enemy's guns should the assault prove successful, the men being furnished with equipments for that purpose. A section of Captain Allen's battery, under Lieut. Walter M. Knight, advanced with General Wheaton's division in front of Fort Welch and opened fire on the enemy, doing good service. When the assault was found to have been successful Major Adams, with his detachment of cannoners, succeeded in turning some of the guns of the enemy on their retreating columns, doing good execution and assisting to demoralize them materially. Casualties, 2 enlisted men wounded.

The Third New York Battery, under Major Harn, and a section of Battery G, First Rhode Island Artillery, under Lieutenant Rich, were placed in position with the advance of the Third Division, and opened a severe fire on a point which the enemy still held, succeeding in silencing one of their batteries. The Third New York Battery advanced with the Second and Third Divisions to a point where the Twenty-fourth Corps formed a junction with the Sixth, and rendered efficient service in driving the enemy. The works of the enemy in that direction having been all carried or abandoned the troops moved in the direction of Petersburg, the Third New York Battery accompanying the Second Division, taking several positions as the enemy retreated and assisting materially in driving them from their positions. Casualties, 2 enlisted men wounded, 1 horse killed. Battery H, First Rhode Island Artillery, Captain Allen, also advanced with the troops, rendering efficient service in driving the enemy, and in one instance being exposed to an enfilading fire which he was unable to return, the enemy having rifled guns, and the distance being too great for smooth-bores. Captain Allen's loss was 3 men killed, 6 wounded, and 10 horses killed.

After the enemy's works were carried the reserve batteries were moved out in front of our works. At the request of General Gibbon a section of First New York Battery, under Lieutenant Sears, was placed in position under the fire of a rebel battery, and after firing some 70 rounds succeeded in silencing it. The whole battery was then moved up on the Boydton plank road toward Petersburg, and took position near the Whitworth house, opening fire on the enemy's infantry under severe fire from sharpshooters. The battery also opened on one of the enemy's forts, to which they replied occasionally without damage. The fire was continued until dark, expending 611 rounds ammunition, and losing 2 men wounded and 2 horses disabled.

Battery E, Fifth U. S. Artillery, Lieutenant Brincklé, moved with the Third Division after the works were carried, and took position in front of rebel works known as Fort McGraw and Battery 45, firing rapidly. Lieutenant Brincklé reports the officers and men of his command as performing their duties faithfully.

Battery G, First Rhode Island Artillery, Brevet Major Adams, advanced with the corps toward Petersburg, engaging the enemy at different times with good effect, with the loss of 1 officer and 2 enlisted men wounded. Battery A, First New Jersey Artillery, Capt. A. N. Parsons, took part in the fire upon the enemy's lines on the night of April 1 from the works on our line.

All the batteries of the command were in position and intrenched on the night of the 2d of April, with instructions to open fire on the enemy at 5 a. m. the following morning, but the enemy having evacuated the brigade moved with the corps on the River road.

Nothing of importance occurred until April 6, when the enemy was met at Sailor's Creek. All the batteries of the command were in position here, and the natural position for artillery being good, a most effective fire was kept up until the enemy was routed. Prisoners stated that it was the most terrific fire that they were ever exposed to. So many killed and wounded from the fire of artillery has seldom been seen in this war in so small a space. Battery E, Fifth U. S. Artillery, in this engagement had 2 men slightly wounded. The brigade then proceeded to within a few miles of Appomattox Court-House, and on the 9th of April had the honor of firing four salutes of thirty-six guns each in honor of the surrender of General R. E. Lee. On April 11 moved toward Burkeville, arriving there on the 13th.

The roads on the whole route from Appomattox Court-House to this point were in an awful condition, and consequently many horses of the brigade are rendered temporarily unserviceable.

The following batteries of the brigade took some part in the operations which resulted in the capture of Petersburg and Richmond, but they having been ordered to City Point, it is impossible to include them in this report: Battery H, First Ohio Artillery, Capt. S. W. Dorsey; Third Vermont Battery, Capt. R. H. Start; Fourth Maine Battery, Capt. Charles W. White; Battery E, First Rhode Island Artillery, Lieut. E. K. Parker.

The officers and men have behaved splendidly throughout the campaign. During the operations after the capture of the enemy's works April 2, the Third New York Battery, Battery H, First Rhode Island Artillery, and First New York Battery advanced from point to point with the skirmish lines of the Second Division, keeping up a severe fire upon the enemy, harassing him greatly, and preventing him from reforming his lines of battle. The batteries were maneuvered very handsomely, and their commanders are entitled to special credit for their meritorious services on that occasion. All have endeavored to do their utmost to aid in achieving the glorious successes of our corps.

I removed from the works captured April 2 twenty guns, viz: Seven light 12-pounders, brass ("J. R. A." maker); three light 12-pounders, brass (U. S.); two 12-pounder iron guns ("J. R. A." maker); three 24-pounder howitzers (U. S.); three 3-inch rifled ("T. T. S. L."); one 3-inch Blakely (—); one 10-pounder Parrott ("J. R. A."); also, nine caissons. These guns and caissons were sent to City Point April 3, in charge of Captain Start, Third Vermont Battery.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ANDREW COWAN,

Brevet Major, Commanding Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps.

Bvt. Maj. C. H. WHITTELSEY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Sixth Army Corps.

No. 148.

Report of Capt. Augustin N. Parsons, Battery A, First New Jersey Light Artillery.

BATTERY A, FIRST NEW JERSEY ARTILLERY,

April 10, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with instructions received from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps, I have the honor to report that about 10 p. m. of the 1st instant I opened fire upon the enemy's picket-line—from Fort Howard with four guns, and from Fort Wadsworth with two guns—keeping up a slow fire until about 1 a. m. of the 2d, firing fifty rounds from Fort Howard and seventy-five rounds from Fort Wadsworth. About the same time I received orders to send two guns to Fort Welch. I at once sent Lieutenant Bonin with one section, which reached Fort Welch before daylight on the morning of the 2d. At 11 p. m. same day I received orders to turn in two guns, and report to the commanding officer of the Artillery Brigade at 6 a. m. on the 3d, fully equipped for a campaign.

I have no officers nor men to mention in particular; all did their duty.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

A. N. PARSONS,
Captain, Commanding.

Lieut. BENJ. FREERBORN,
Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps.

No. 149.

Reports of Col. Capt. Orsamus K. Van Eatten, First Battery New York Light Artillery.

FIRST NEW YORK INDEPENDENT BATTERY,
Camp in the Field, Va., April 1, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the First New York Independent Battery opened fire upon the enemy from Fort Welch about 11 p. m. April 1. We kept up a continuous fire for about one hour, and then for two hours occasionally, using about 200 rounds of ammunition. After the charge was made and the works were carried, April 2, I moved out in front of the fort, left the pieces standing, using the horses for bringing off captured pieces and caissons. About 9.30 a. m. the Twenty-fourth Corps passed us, and soon after Major-General Gibbon sent a request saying it would oblige him very much if I would lead them a section. I sent Lieutenant Sears in charge of a section. He went into position under fire from a rebel fort at 10 a. m. After firing about seventy rounds they ceased to fire from the fort. About the same time, 11 a. m., General Wright wished the battery. I then took the whole battery toward Petersburg, on the Boydton plank road, to near the Whitworth house; there I opened fire upon infantry, under some fire from sharpshooters, about 12 m. After firing a few rounds I discovered some guns in a fort some 1,200 yards to my right; turned one section on the fort. On this fort and the infantry in front I continued firing until dark, having had 2 men and 2 horses wounded, and expended 611 rounds of ammunition.

I am, sir, your very obedient servant,

O. R. VAN EATTEN,
Lieut. and Bvt. Capt., Comdg. First N. Y. Independent Battery.

Lieutenant FREERBORN,
Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps.

CAMP IN THE FIELD, VA.,
April 11, 1865.

SIR: I transmit to you the part taken by the First New York Independent Battery since the evacuation of Petersburg.

April 3, we moved out on the river road with the corps; marched until 5 p. m.; parked for the night. April 4, we continued our march after the enemy until 9 p. m.; halted for the night. April 5, still continued the march until about 9 p. m. April 6, we had a hard march, and about 4 p. m. we went into position about 800 yards from the enemy, and commenced shelling them rapidly; it did not last long, as the enemy gave way, and we were soon on the move again; we expended 145 rounds of ammunition; we parked for the night soon after passing over the battle-field. April 7, at 9 a. m. we again took up the march after the retreating foe; passed through Farmville and parked for the night. April 8 found us still on the march. April 9, marched till about 12 a. m. [noon], parked, and while at this point heard the enemy had surrendered; about 5 p. m. I fired a salute of thirty-six guns, then went into park for the night. Did not move April 10. April 11 found us on the march back to Burkeville; reached here April 13, having had a hard march, with the loss of three horses.

I am, sir, your very obedient servant,

O. R. VAN ETTEN,

Lieut. and Bat. Capt., Comdg. First N. Y. Independent Battery.

Lieutenant FREIBORN,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps.

No. 150.

Report of Bat. Maj. William A. Harn, Third Battery New York Light Artillery.

CAMP IN THE FIELD, VA.,

April 10, 1865.

Report of Third New York Independent Battery:

Pursuant to orders from artillery headquarters, Sixth Corps, the battery broke camp at Fort Umston on Sunday, the 2d of April, 1865, at 3 a. m., and reported to General Getty, commanding Second Division, Sixth Corps. Took position with the battery in the enemy's works, and commenced firing; silenced one of the enemy's batteries; then went in pursuit of them, and fought them at intervals till 3 p. m.

Two men of the battery wounded—Privates James McCune, left hand; Louis Adam lost his right arm. One horse killed. Ammunition expended: 250 solid shots, 240 case-shots, 35 shells, and fired 17 rounds of ammunition captured from the enemy.

W. A. HARN,

Brevet Major, Commanding Battery.

No. 151.

Report of Capt. Crawford Allen, jr., Battery H, First Rhode Island Light Artillery.

BATTERY H, FIRST RHODE ISLAND LIGHT ARTILLERY,

Burke's Station, Va., April 16, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my battery during the recent battles between April 1 and 13 1865:

On the evening of April 1 I received orders to join the First Div of the Sixth Corps, which I did at 12 p. m. of that day. At 4.30

April 2 I moved forward with the division, and, after crossing the rifle-pits, opened upon a section of artillery which had a flank fire on our infantry. They were soon driven out, when I ceased firing, moved to the left, bringing up my caissons, and waited further orders. I then moved the battery forward with the skirmish line, and was soon engaged with one of the enemy's batteries. This battery soon had to leave its position. I followed it up until I arrived at Whitworth's house, where I went into position, the enemy placing a rifle battery in position on my left and obtaining an enfilade fire upon my battery at 1,700 yards, "being beyond my extreme range." I was ordered by Brevet Major Cowan to withdraw my guns, and went into park in rear of First Division headquarters for the night. In this day's action I lost 4 men killed and 9 wounded; also 10 horses killed. On April 6 I went into action at Sailor's Run, remaining half an hour; no casualties.

From April 1 to 13 I have fired 685 rounds of ammunition.

I have the honor to recommend to your especial notice First Lieut. W. M. Knight and Second Lieut. A. B. Horton, for their coolness and gallantry on the 2d of April.

I remain, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CRAWFORD ALLEN, JR.,

Capt., First Rhode Island Light Artillery, Comdg. Battery H.

Colonel OLIENTHENIN,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Division, Sixth Corps.

No. 152.

Reports of Lieut. John R. Brincklé, Battery B, Fifth U. S. Artillery.

BATTERY B, FIFTH U. S. ARTILLERY,

April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this battery in the operations before Petersburg on the 2d of April, 1865:

Pursuant to instructions from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps, I reported with my battery at 3 o'clock on the morning of April 2 to Brig. Gen. Truman Seymour, commanding Third Division, Sixth Corps, for duty with that division. As soon as it was ascertained that the lines of the enemy had been broken I advanced my battery to position in front of works known as Fort McGraw and Battery No. 45, which still remained in possession of the enemy, opening fire rapidly with all my guns.

Both officers and enlisted men performed their duties faithfully.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. R. BRINCKLÉ,

First Lieutenant, Fifth Artillery, Commanding Battery B.

First Lieut. BENJAMIN FREEBORN,

Adj. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, Sixth Corps.

BATTERY B, FIFTH U. S. ARTILLERY,

April 14, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in operations since April 2, 1865:

This battery, having been assigned to the Third Division, Sixth Corps, has accompanied that division in all its marches and participated in all engagements. At 4 p. m. April 6 my battery was ordered to position commanding the lines of the enemy at Sailor's Creek. I fired, under the direction of Brigadier-General Seymour, commanding Third Division, Sixth Corps, with all my guns, till the works of the enemy were carried by our troops.

My casualties in this engagement were 2 men slightly wounded.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. R. BRINCKLE,

First Lieutenant, Fifth Artillery, Commanding Battery.

First Lieut. BENJAMIN FREEBORN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 153.

Report of Maj. Gen. John G. Parke, U. S. Army, commanding Ninth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH ARMY CORPS,
July 10, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command from March 29 to April 19, 1865:

After the capture and recapture of Fort Stedman, on the 25th of March, the usual state of affairs continued on the line held by this corps, with the exception that the enemy was more than ordinarily active in strengthening his intrenchments. His works from the Appomattox to in front of Fort Sedgwick were part of the old interior line of defenses, which had been so often unsuccessfully attempted by us. At a point in front of Fort Sedgwick an outer line, a kind of spur, struck off from his main line and swept down toward Hatcher's Run in front of the left of our advance. The line held by this corps fronted the whole of this main line and about two miles of the spur. By the orders from headquarters Army of the Potomac, of March 14 and 28, ordering a grand movement of the army on March 29, I was directed to send all surplus baggage and artillery to the rear, and to be prepared to hold with this corps the then line as far as Fort Davis and the rear line from that point. This was accordingly done. I at once placed the Third Division, Brevet Major-General Hartranft commanding, at work repairing the rear line, which was much out of order. Under the skillful direction of General Hartranft this line was put in excellent condition.

At — p. m. on the 30th of March orders were received from army headquarters directing me to make an assault upon the enemy's position in my front at 4 o'clock the following morning. The point of attack was left to my decision. I had already decided that the position in front of Fort Sedgwick, on the Jerusalem plank road, was the best one for assault on the front held by this corps. This portion of the line was held by the Second Division, Potter's, and I accordingly concentrated in rear of Fort Sedgwick all of Potter's division, with the exception of pickets and the garrison of the forts, and all of Hartranft's division. But at — p. m. orders were received from army headquarters suspending the assault, and the troops were returned to their camps. No further movements occurred during March 31 and April 1.

At 4.50 p. m. April 1 I received orders from army headquarters, through Captain Worth, directing me to assault at 4 o'clock the next morning. I called my division commanders together, and, after fully examining the grounds, substantially the same arrangements for the assault were made as had been previously made for the assault ordered for the morning of the 31st. At 9.50 p. m. orders were received by telegraph from General Meade directing me to at once open with all the artillery in my front, push forward skirmishers, and follow them with columns of assault. While arrangements were being made to carry out these orders they were modified by further instructions withdrawing the orders for instant attack, and making assault contingent on developments of weakness on the part of the enemy. We opened artillery and threw forward a strong-skirmish line along the whole front. The enemy was found prepared and in full force with the exception of in front of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Brig. Gen. S. G. Griffin's, between Forts Hays and Howard, when General Griffin, by a well-planned rush, succeeded in surprising and capturing about half a mile of the enemy's picket-line, taking prisoners 8 officers and 241 men, but further movements disclosed the enemy's main line well manned and on the alert. The demonstration developed no apparent change in the force in our front either of artillery or infantry.

In accordance with instructions to carry out the original orders to assault at 4 a. m. on April 2 the captured line was abandoned. By 4 a. m. the firing had all quieted down, and the concentration of troops for the attack was well under way. To the right of the Jerusalem plank road running through Fort Sedgwick, Hartranft's division was massed in rear of the fort—Willcox's First Brigade, his left one, Col. Samuel Harriman commanding, was massed on Hartranft's right. The Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers being left in the works to hold the brigade line, Colonel Harriman was ordered to report to General Hartranft. Potter's (Second) division was massed on Hartranft's left, to the left of the plank road. At 3 a. m. I established my headquarters at Fort Rice, and at the same time Generals Potter and Hartranft formed the assaulting column between our main line and picket-line without alarming the enemy, whose picket-line was in close proximity. The assaulting force was in column of regiments in the following order: On the right of the Jerusalem plank road with left resting on the road, the Third Division, the advance regiments being the Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Cox commanding; followed by the Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Major Morrow commanding; the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania, Colonel Dodd commanding, and the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania, Lieutenant-Colonel Heintzelman commanding; the two remaining regiments of the division, the Two hundredth and Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania, were held as reserve behind the works. On the right of this column was Harriman's brigade of the First Division in the following order: Thirty-eighth Wisconsin, Colonel Birtle commanding; One hundred and ninth New York, Lieutenant-Colonel Pier commanding, and the Eighth Michigan Volunteers, Major Doyle commanding. The remaining regiments of the brigade, the Twenty-seventh Michigan and Thirty-seventh Wisconsin, remained in reserve in rear of the intrenchments. On the left of the plank road, and connecting on the right with Hartranft's division, Potter's division was formed, Griffin's brigade in the advance, supported by Curtin's brigade. Six regiments from the division were left to garrison the forts on its line. Storming parties, accompanied by pioneers provided with axes to clear away the abatis and chevaux-de-frise, preceded each column. Details of artillerymen to work any guns that might be captured were also in readiness. With the view of leading the enemy astray as to the real point of attack I directed General Willcox to make a strong demonstration on his front at 4 a. m. I judged this demonstration would most certainly deceive the enemy from the fact learned from deserters, that our main assault was expected on the Fort Stedman front. Accordingly, about 4 a. m., the artillery opened vigorously along the whole line firing for some minutes. General Willcox then promptly pushed out his skirmishers along his whole front, and was very successful in the object proposed. Colonel Bolton, commanding Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, left to hold Harriman's brigade front, captured some of the enemy's skirmishers near the Crater, and Colonel Ely, commanding the brigade next the river, not only carried their picket-line, but even about 200 yards of the main line, but the enemy concentrating upon him he was forced to retire after holding the position some little time. At about 4.30 a. m. the signal was given for the main attack in front of Fort Sedgwick, and the column moved swiftly and steadily forward. In a moment the enemy's picket-line was carried. The stormers and pioneers rushed on and under a most galling fire cut away and made openings in the enemy's abatis and chevaux-de-frise. They, now closely followed by the assaulting columns, which, undeterred by an exceedingly severe fire of cannon, mortar, and musketry from the now aroused main line, pressed gallantly on, capturing the enemy's works in their front with 12 guns, — colors, and 800 prisoners. Colonel Harriman's column re-enforced by the two reserve regiments swept up to the right until the whole of what was called by the enemy "Miller's Salient" was in our possession. Potter's column swept down to the left. This part of the enemy's line was heavily traversed, affording him a strong foothold, and he fought from traverse to traverse with great tenacity. We drove him slowly back for about a quarter of a mile when, being re-enforced, and aided by strong positions in the rear, he checked our farther progress in that direction. A most gallant but unsuccessful attempt was made to carry his rear line. The captured guns were at once turned upon the enemy, served at first by infantry volunteers, and then by details from the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery Volunteers from the batteries in the rear.

Just after we broke through the enemy's lines, and at a most critical time, I was deprived of the valuable services of Brevet Major-General Potter, who was severely and dangerously wounded. I directed Brig. Gen. S. G. Griffin to assume command of his division, and by him the division was ably and gallantly commanded during the rest of the day. It being by this time fully daylight no further attempt was made to advance, but attention was turned to securing what we had gained, and restoring the organization of the troops, unavoidably much shattered by the heavy fighting and the advance over broken ground in the darkness. This was rendered the more difficult by the great loss we had sustained in officers, especially field officers, and by the very exposed position occupied by our troops. The captured line was promptly recovered and made tenable as possible, the difficulty being increased by the forts and batteries on that line being open in the rear.

By reason of these untoward circumstances much time elapsed before I considered the troops in sufficiently good shape for another forward movement, and in the meantime I received, at 7.30 a. m., the following dispatch:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,

April 9, 1865—7.20 a. m.

Major-General PARKER:

General Meade sends, for information, the following from the lieutenant-general:
"As I understand it, Parke is attacking the main line of works around Petersburg, whilst the others are only attacking an outer line, which the enemy might give up without giving up Petersburg. Parke should either advance rapidly or cover his men and hold all he gets."

ALEX. S. WEBB,
Brevet Major-General and Chief of Staff.

At 7.45 I received the following dispatch:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
April 2, 1865—7.40.

Major-General PARKE:

The general commanding directs that you hold on to all you have got, and not to advance unless you see your way clear.

ALEX. S. WEBB,
Brevet Major-General and Chief of Staff.

About this time the enemy made an attempt to get up a charge on us, but our fire was so hot that they did not get many men outside their lines. We then held a distance of about 400 yards on each side of the Jerusalem plank road, including several forts and redans. The enemy made no further movements, with the exception of being very busy planting more guns and keeping up an incessant and murderous fire of sharpshooters, until just before 11 o'clock, when he made a heavy and determined assault on the captured line, but we repulsed him at all points with much loss. It being evident to me that the enemy was resolved to regain at all hazards the portion of their lines held by us, and nearly all my reserve being in, and learning from General Wright that he was moving toward Hatcher's Run, leaving a wide gap between us, I deemed it advisable to report the state of affairs to Army headquarters, and request re-enforcements. My request was promptly complied with, and Benham's and Cellis' brigades from City Point, and Hamblin's brigade, of the Sixth Corps, were ordered to my support. The enemy continued to make heavy and desperate attempts to recapture his lost works, but without success. But though my men stood up nobly to their work this long and wearisome struggle was beginning to tell upon them. At about 3 p. m. the enemy succeeded in regaining a few of the traverses on the left, which gave them a flank fire upon a small detached work on the left of plank road, held by one of the regiments of Curtin's brigade, and occasioned its temporary abandonment, but General Collis reporting to me with his brigade about this time I at once put him in under direction of General Griffin, and the enemy was again driven from the portion of line he had just retaken. Between 4 and 5 p. m. General Hamblin arrived with his brigade from the Sixth Corps, and I directed him to report to General Hartranft, by whom he was placed in support of the left of his line. These re-enforcements having rendered my line secure I was disposed to make another effort to drive the enemy from his position in the rear, but the exhausted condition of my troops forced me to reluctantly abandon the idea.

We accordingly strengthened ourselves as much as possible, whenever practicable transferring the enemy's chevaux-de-frise to the front of the reversed line, and on the right connecting by a cross line the extreme point we held with our main line. Desultory firing continued nearly all night. The batteries on the right fired at intervals all night at the bridge across the Appomattox.

The troops were instructed to exercise the greatest vigilance for the purpose of detecting the expected evacuation of the enemy, or any other movements of his.

At about 2 a. m. we commenced feeling their positions with skirmishers, but found their pickets still out. At about 4 a. m. we succeeded in penetrating their line at all points nearly simultaneously, capturing the few remaining pickets. Ely's brigade, of Willcox's division, was the first to enter the town, near the Appomattox, and to Colonel Ely the formal surrender of the city was made by the authorities; and at 4.28 a. m. the flag of the First Michigan Sharpshooters was raised on the court-house, and guards were posted throughout the town.

The document surrendering the city accompanies Colonel Ely's report.* General Willcox's dispatch announcing the occupation of the city was transmitted by me to the commanding general at 5 a. m.

The enemy had fired the bridge, but by the prompt efforts of our officers and troops the main structure was saved, and skirmishers were pushed across the river and picked up numbers of stragglers. Many stragglers were captured in the city and outskirts.

Receiving instructions from the major-general commanding to move in pursuit of the retreating enemy with two divisions, leaving one to garrison the city, I accordingly directed Brevet Major-General Willcox to assume command of the city, and garrison it with his division. Being directed to follow the Sixth Corps, on the River road, I moved out behind it with Griffin's and Hartranft's divisions, and kept closed onto General Wright's rear till after dark, when we camped in the vicinity of Sutherland's, some ten miles from the city.

On the next day, April 4, we moved at daylight, still following the Sixth Corps until about 3.30 p. m., when I received a dispatch from the general commanding, directing me to move over to the Cox road with my command, and continue on that road, guarding the trains and picketing the railroad up to the rear of the army. This I accordingly did, moving forward as the army moved, scouting and picketing well to the southward to guard against any incursion from that quarter, until the surrender of the rebel army, when my command was stretched from Sutherland's to Farmville. Affairs remained in this situation until the night of the 19th of April, when I received orders to move my command to Washington via City Point.

In accordance with these orders the corps was started at daylight on the 25th, and its connection with the Army of the Potomac ceased.

To my division commanders, Generals Willcox, Potter, Hartranft, and Griffin, and to Brevet Brigadier-General Tidball, chief of artillery, my thanks are due for the ability and faithfulness with which they discharged every duty imposed upon them.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of both officers and men of the corps in this closing campaign of the army. In the long and terrible struggle of April 2 they behaved with a gallantry and steadiness which reflects the greatest credit upon themselves and our arms, and are above praise.

For individual instances of good conduct I refer to the subordinate reports which are herewith transmitted.

To the members of my staff I am under great obligations for gallant and efficient service rendered me.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles G. Loring, assistant inspector-general; Bvt. Col. J. L. Van Buren; Bvt. Maj. J. B. Parke and D. A. Pell, and Capt. R. H. I. Goddard, aides-de-camp; Bvt. Lieut. Col. P. M. Lydig and Capt. John O. Youngman, assistant adjutants-general, and Capt. James S. Casey, commissary of musters, were with me during the battle of April 2, and did gallant and distinguished service.

---

* See p. 1048.

The other officers were active in the discharge of the duties of their respective departments.

A tabular statement of losses is annexed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. G. PARKE,
Major-General, Commanding.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

Tabular statement.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division .....	1	28	22	206	1	99	21	256	280
Second Division .....	10	110	37	501	3	61	50	708	818
Third Division .....	7	91	25	450	1	40	34	501	591
Artillery Brigade .....		0	1	20			1	20	27
Total* .....	18	239	85	1,220	5	150	108	1,011	1,710

ADDENDA.

HQRS. DISTRICT OF ALEXANDRIA, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
Alexandria, Va., May 29, 1865.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac:

COLONEL: I have the honor to recommend for promotion the officers here named:

Bvt. Maj. Gen. R. B. Potter, commanding Second Division, as major-general U. S. Volunteers for gallantry at the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick on April 2, 1865, in which action he was very severely wounded.

Brig. Gen. S. G. Griffin, as brevet major-general for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick on April 2, 1865, in which action, after the wounding of Brevet Major-General Potter, he commanded the Second Division.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles G. Loring, assistant inspector-general, and Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. C. Tidball, chief of artillery, as brevet major-generals for gallant and meritorious conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Bvt. Col. J. L. Van Ruren, aide-de-camp, as brevet brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. L. H. Peirce, chief quartermaster, as brevet colonel for faithful and arduous services during the campaign before Petersburg.

Surg. E. B. Dalton, U. S. Volunteers, medical director, as brevet colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct at the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. P. M. Lydig, assistant adjutant-general, as brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct at the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

* But see revised table, p. 590.

Bvt. Maj. J. B. Parke, Seventeenth U. S. Infantry, aide-de-camp, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Bvt. Maj. R. H. T. Goddard, aide-de-camp, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. J. C. Youngman, assistant adjutant-general, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865, and long and valuable services in his department.

Capt. James S. Casey, Fifth U. S. Infantry, commissary of musters, as brevet major for faithful conduct of his department and gallant services in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. J. S. Tobey, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and acting assistant quartermaster, as brevet major for eminent gallantry and good conduct throughout the war.

Capt. F. A. Stitzer, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and chief of Ambulance Corps, as brevet major for gallant and faithful services during the campaign before Petersburg.

Asst. Surg. Samuel Adams, U. S. Army, medical inspector, as brevet captain for long, faithful, and highly meritorious conduct throughout the war and for gallantry in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Lieut. L. A. Dillingham, signal officer, as brevet captain for meritorious services in the campaign before Petersburg.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. John I. Curtin, commanding First Brigade, Second Division, as brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Col. Samuel Harriman, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, brevet brigadier-general for meritorious services as commanding a brigade since September 30, 1864, and for gallant conduct in the assault on the enemy's lines before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Surg. James Harris, Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, medical director, Second Division, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for long and faithful services throughout the war.

Capt. S. S. Sumner, Fifth U. S. Cavalry, aide-de-camp, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the campaign before Vicksburg and Jackson, Miss., in June and July, 1863.

FIRST DIVISION.

Bvt. Col. Ralph Ely, commanding Second Brigade, as brevet brigadier-general for conspicuous gallantry in the assault of Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Col. James Bintliff, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general for conspicuous gallantry in the assault of Petersburg, April 2, 1865.

Col. Charles Waite, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general for conspicuous gallantry in the assault of Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Surg. M. K. Hogan, U. S. Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct in the campaign of Eastern Virginia in 1864 and 1865.

Surg. P. A. O'Connell, U. S. Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct in the campaign of South Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland, 1862; Tennessee, 1863; Virginia, 1864 and 1865.

Capt. L. Curtis Brackett, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the attack on Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and same on Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Capt. Daniel N. Holway, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious services in the actions of the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Petersburg, June 18, 1864; Weldon Railroad and Petersburg, April 2, 1865.

Capt. C. D. Browne, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. H. L. Swords, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. Sylvester Keyser, Second Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. John B. Pizer, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. Christian Rath, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. Benjamin D. Safford, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. James Galt, assistant quartermaster, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. C. M. Robins, commissary of subsistence, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865.

Capt. George Goodsell, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct before Petersburg in the winter and spring operations of 1865, and for conspicuous gallantry in action at the Pegram house September 30, 1864, where he was wounded.

Maj. R. N. Doyle, Eighth Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallantry on April 2, 1865, in the assault before Petersburg, and for promptness and efficiency as an officer on all occasions.

Capt. W. A. Norton, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the assaults upon the enemy's works on April 2, 1865, before Petersburg.

Capt. O. H. McCreery, Eighth Michigan Veteran Volunteers, brigade-inspector, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the assaults upon the enemy's works on April 2, 1865, before Petersburg.

Capt. E. Burnett, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, aide-de-camp, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the assaults upon the enemy's works on April 2, 1865, before Petersburg.

First Lieut. William P. Maxon, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, pioneer officer, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the assaults upon the enemy's works on April 2, 1865, before Petersburg.

Capt. Daniel G. Cash, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for coolness and bravery in the assaults before Petersburg on the 2d of April, 1865.

Capt. R. A. Hadwick, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for coolness and bravery in the assaults before Petersburg on the 2d of April, 1865.

First Lieut. William Kennedy, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the attack before Petersburg, Va., of April 2, 1865.

Adjt. C. E. Miltimore, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry during the campaign before Petersburg.

Capt. Charles L. Ballard, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, as brevet major for gallantry in the assault on Fort Mahone, in which he was severely wounded.

Second Lieut. Charles S. Wood, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, as brevet first lieutenant for gallantry in the attack on Fort Mahone, April 2, 1865.

Capt. John C. Boughton, Second Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the assault of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. John Hardy, Second Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the attack of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. Isaac Perrine, Second Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Maj. Samuel K. Schwenk, Fiftieth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for conspicuous gallantry before Petersburg, and in the attack on Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. Henry Thieleman, Forty-sixth New York Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. A. W. Nichols, First Michigan Sharpshooters, as brevet colonel for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865, where he was severely wounded.

Capt. Ira L. Evans, First Michigan Sharpshooters, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services during the last campaign and in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Capt. J. S. De Land, First Michigan Sharpshooters, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services during the last campaign and in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Capt. Leverette N. Case, First Michigan Sharpshooters, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services during the last campaign and in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Maj. Edwin J. Buckbee, First Michigan Sharpshooters, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for meritorious services April 2, 1865, before Petersburg.

First Lieut. Edward R. Chase, adjutant Eighth Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the assault on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. M. L. Willey, Eighth Michigan Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Capt. Robert Eddy, Sixtieth Ohio Volunteers, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry and meritorious conduct during the assault before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. William S. Matthews, Sixtieth Ohio Volunteers, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va.

Capt. Albert A. Day, Twentieth Michigan Volunteers, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry in the attack on Fort Stedman.

Second Lieut. S. C. Whiting, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, pioneer officer, as brevet first lieutenant for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg on the 2d of April and during the whole campaign.

Lieut. Col. J. H. Penterost, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, as brevet colonel for gallantry March 25, 1865, in the attack on Fort Stedman, in which action he lost his life.

Maj. George M. Randall, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, as brevet colonel for constant gallantry and devotion to duty during the whole campaign, and particular gallantry in the attack of Fort Stedman on March 25, 1865.

Capt. Charles H. Houghton, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, as brevet major for gallant conduct at Forts Stedman and Haskell March 25, 1865, Captain Houghton having received three wounds.

Capt. Joseph P. Cleary, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, as brevet major for gallant conduct at Forts Stedman and Haskell March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. W. W. McCall, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, as brevet captain for gallant conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. Charles A. Lochbrunner, Fourteenth New York [Heavy] Artillery, as brevet captain for gallant conduct at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Second Lieut. Charles A. O'Brien, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, as brevet first lieutenant for gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Maj. James Doherty, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallantry on March 25, 1865, at Fort Stedman, in which action he was mortally wounded.

Capt. Joseph P. Carter, Third Maryland Battalion, as brevet major for gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, capturing the colors of the Fifty-first Virginia Infantry.

Capt. W. S. Greenough, Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, as brevet major for gallantry before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Capt. John M. Deane, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious services in the attack upon Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. David P. Senlley, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious services in the attack upon Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. James McQuillan, [Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers,] regimental quartermaster, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious services in the attack upon Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. H. C. Joslyn, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious services in the attack upon Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Sergt. Benjamin R. Symonds (acting lieutenant), Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet second lieutenant for gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. H. A. Smith, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. B. F. Chesley, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. S. K. Goldsmith, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Capt. Thomas William Clarke, acting assistant adjutant-general, Third Brigade, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious services throughout the war.

SECOND DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. Samuel Wright, assistant adjutant-general, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for meritorious services, and especially for gallant conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Bvt. Maj. James B. Smith, Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for meritorious services, and especially for gallant conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Capt. Horatio Potter, Seventh New York Heavy Artillery, as brevet major for meritorious services, and especially for gallant conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Capt. Joseph Gottlieb, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet major for meritorious services, and especially for gallant conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Joseph A. Medica, Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, as brevet captain for meritorious services, and especially for gallant conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Edward Rose, Fifty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for meritorious services, and especially for gallant conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which he was wounded.

Capt. Charles E. Mallam, assistant adjutant-general, as brevet major for valuable services and gallant conduct on April 2, 1865.

Capt. T. Edward Ames, Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. William A. Ogden, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Second Lieut. Addams A. McDonald, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet first lieutenant for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Col. Sumner Carruth, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general, U. S. Volunteers, for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Col. A. C. Wildrick, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general, U. S. Volunteers, for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. John C. Whiton, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. I. F. Braanen, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet colonel for conspicuous and gallant conduct in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.

Capt. R. C. Cheeseman, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. G. B. Cestello, Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

Capt. M. A. Jenks, Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Albion M. Dudley, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Heman Chase, jr., Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. George F. Worcester, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. William Amman, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Thomas H. Sillyman, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

Second Lieut. Francis Affelbach, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet first lieutenant for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

Capt. Peter F. Rogers, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Henry Reynolds, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865, in which he was wounded.

Capt. L. N. Sawyer, Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

Capt. S. G. Goodwin, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct April 2, 1865.

Capt. Benjamin F. Weeks, commissary of subsistence, as brevet major for uniform meritorious conduct and especial gallantry on April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. Ira G. Wilkins, Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

First Lieut. Thomas Child, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. P. P. Bixby, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, as brevet colonel for gallant and highly meritorious conduct in command of his brigade April 2, 1865.

Maj. Samuel D. Quarles, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct on April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. B. F. Taylor, Second Maryland Veteran Volunteers, as brevet colonel for conspicuous gallantry in leading his men in two charges April 2, 1865.

Capt. Omar P. Cram, Second Maryland Veteran Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct on April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. E. L. Getchell, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, as brevet colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

Maj. George A. Bolton, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

Capt. E. S. Kyes, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Capt. Z. B. Adams, Fifty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Capt. Abijah Hollis, Fifty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Maj. Lyman E. Knapp, Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

Capt. C. W. Corey, Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. A. C. Fay, Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. C. D. Brainerd, Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. H. O. Clarkin, Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

Capt. E. O. Bowen, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Capt. Giles H. Holden, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

Capt. Levi Force, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Second Lieut. Hathaway Musgrave, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, as brevet first lieutenant for gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault of April 2, 1865, in which action he was wounded.

THIRD DIVISION.

Bvt. Maj. John D. Bertolette, assistant adjutant-general, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and distinguished services at Fort Stedman, Va., March 25, 1865; as brevet colonel for gallant and meritorious services on April 2, 1865, in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick.

Bvt. Maj. George Shorkley, captain Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, division inspector, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallantry and meritorious services at Fort Stedman, March 25, 1865, in which action he was seriously wounded; as colonel by brevet for his long, faithful, and valuable services in the inspector-general's department April 9, 1865.

Capt. Richard A. Watts, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, aide-de-camp, as brevet major for gallant and distinguished services at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865; as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services, April 2, 1865, in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick.

Capt. William H. Hodgkins, Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, assistant commissary of musters, as brevet major for valuable and distinguished services at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Capt. Prosper Dalien, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting engineer officer, as brevet major for his daring and bravery at Fort Stedman on the 25th of March, in which action he was seriously wounded.

Capt. E. P. Brown, Fourth Rhode Island Volunteers, acting division inspector, as brevet major for gallant and distinguished services before Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. T. W. Hoffman, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting engineer officer, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious service at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865; as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services on April 2, 1865, in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick.

Surg. A. P. Whelan, First Michigan Sharpshooters, surgeon-in-chief, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for his long, efficient, and valuable services in his department as surgeon-in-chief of the division since its organization.

Capt. J. K. Olley, assistant quartermaster, as brevet major for his efficient and valuable services in his department as division quartermaster since its organization.

Capt. E. B. Moore, commissary of subsistence, as brevet major for his long, efficient, and valuable services in the subsistence department of the division since its organization.

Col. C. W. Diven, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding First Brigade, as brevet brigadier-general for valuable and meritorious services rendered by him March 25, 1865.

Col. A. B. McCalmont, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general for his long and faithful services during the war, both as colonel of the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers and lieutenant-colonel commanding One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall, commanding Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet colonel for coolness, bravery, and skill displayed by him at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865; as brevet brigadier-general for valuable and meritorious services while commanding First Brigade in the assault in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Maj. Jacob Rohrer, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. F. A. Hoffman, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

First Lieut. John McWilliams, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and distinguished services in the assault upon the enemy in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. James McCamas, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting adjutant, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick.

First Lieut. B. F. Eberly, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. M. T. Heintzelman, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet colonel for his efficiency at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and for meritorious services in the attack upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Maj. Alexander Bobb, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Second Lieut. David F. Keagy, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as captain by brevet for distinguished gallantry in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet colonel for gallant and meritorious service at Fort Stedman, March 25, 1865, and for valuable services in the attack upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Maj. J. L. Ritchey, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services in the assault at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865; as brevet colonel for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Col. J. A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding Second Brigade, as brevet brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and for his meritorious services in the assault on Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. E. L. Reber, adjutant Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, Second Brigade, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious services at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and for his meritorious services in the assault on Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Col. R. C. Cox, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious services in the repulse of the enemy at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and for distinguished gallantry in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. G. M. Bastian, adjutant Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallantry in the repulse of the enemy at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and for the coolness and bravery displayed by him in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. James A. Rogers, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for distinguished gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and for gallant and meritorious services in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. R. C. Ivory, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and meritorious services in the engagement in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. S. D. Phillips, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious services in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. J. W. Rutt, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious services in the engagement in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. R. T. Wood, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and meritorious services in the engagement in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. J. J. Rees, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for distinguished gallantry and meritorious services in the engagement in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Maj. B. M. Morrow, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services in the recapture of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault upon the enemy's works in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. J. A. McCahan, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and distinguished services at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

Capt. Richard Boone, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and distinguished services in the charge at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Capt. F. B. McClellan, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet major for gallant and distinguished services in the charge at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Lieut. Morris Davis, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet captain for gallant and distinguished services in the charge at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and in the assault of April 2, 1865.

Col. William J. Bolton, Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, as brevet brigadier-general for his gallant and meritorious services during the war.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

Capt. Edward J. Jones, Eleventh Massachusetts Battery, as brevet major for meritorious services during the siege of Petersburg and for conspicuous promptness and energy in assisting in repulsing the enemy from Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Capt. A. B. Twitchell, commanding Seventh Maine Battery, as brevet major for meritorious services during the siege of Petersburg and for conspicuous promptness and energy in command of the artillery of Fort Sedgwick on April 2, 1865.

Capt. Theodore Miller, Fourth New York Artillery, as brevet major for meritorious services during the siege of Petersburg and for gallantry at the attack upon Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

Capt. David F. Ritchie, commanding Battery C, First New York Artillery, as brevet major for conspicuous gallantry and coolness on April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. William H. Rogers, First Connecticut Artillery, as brevet captain for conspicuous gallantry in the attack upon the enemy's works in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

First Lieut. George B. Ketchum, Battery C, First New York Artillery, as brevet captain for distinguished services on April 2, 1865, in the attack on Petersburg.

Second Lieut. David B. Cooper, Battery C, First New York Artillery, as first lieutenant by brevet for gallant and distinguished services in the assault of the enemy's works at Petersburg April 2, 1865.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. G. PARKER,
Major-General, Commanding.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
June 1, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General.

These recommendations are approved with the exception of that in case of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles G. Loring, whose services are believed to have been fully rewarded by the brevet commission which he now holds.

GEO. G. MEADE,
Major-General, Commanding.

HQRS. DISTRICT OF ALEXANDRIA, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
Alexandria, Va., [May 29.] 1865.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac:

COLONEL: In accordance with instructions from headquarters Army of the Potomac, I have the honor to submit the following list of enlisted men in the Ninth Corps who have pre-eminently distinguished themselves during the recent campaign, with recommendation that they be awarded medals of honor for their gallantry:

FIRST DIVISION.

1. Sergt. Elbridge H. Benham, Company I, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry during the attack on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865. Wounded in the left shoulder while mounting the parapet of the fort, but refused to go to the rear, and remained on duty the whole day.

2. Sergt. Ames Hamman, Company D, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, was among the first to enter the fort, where his coolness and daring were conspicuous, assisting in turning and firing the first gun on the enemy.

3. Sergt. William E. Gibbens, Company K, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in the assault April 2, 1865. In the darkness he became separated from his company, when he gathered a few men around him and charged down the lines to the right of the fort, capturing some twenty prisoners.

4. Sergt. Abram A. Devore, Company C, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, was among the first to enter Fort Mahone, taking several prisoners.

5. Corpl. Robert A. Lawrence, Company F, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, was one of the first to pass the chevaux-de-frise and mount the enemy's works April 2, 1865, loading and firing his gun several times after being severely wounded.

6. Corpl. Louis W. Hardwick, Company G, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, when he was severely wounded in a hand-to-hand conflict.

7. Private John A. Ford, Company H, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, was particularly conspicuous for gallantry in the assault before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, being among the foremost in removing the chevaux-de-frise in front of Fort Mahone. He fell severely wounded inside the fort.

8. Private Thomas Criswell, Company E, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, gallantly ran in advance of his company, and by an extraordinary effort succeeded in removing a portion of the chevaux-de-frise. He was among the first to mount the fort, where he was severely wounded, losing his right hand.

9. Private John Kramer, Company B, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, was among the first to enter Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, and during the day exhibited great courage and fortitude.

10. Color-Sergt. B. Campbell, First Michigan Sharpshooters, for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, planting the colors of his regiment on the works.

11. Sergt. William Wick, Company D, First Michigan Sharpshooters, was the first to enter the enemy's works in the attack of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va., and engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict with the enemy.

12. Corpl. Sidney Haight, Company E, First Michigan Sharpshooters, for conspicuous gallantry in the attack of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va.
13. Corpl. Charles M. Thatcher, Company E, First Michigan Sharpshooters, for conspicuous gallantry in the attack of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va.
14. Private A. Scott, Company K, First Michigan Sharpshooters, for repeated gallantry in the field, particularly in the attack before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.
15. Sergt. Maj. Charles H. Pinkham, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for gallantry in the assault on Fort Stedman, March 25, 1865, capturing the colors of the Fifty-seventh North Carolina Infantry.
16. First Sergt. John O'Donnell, Company A, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for gallantry during the action of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, and heroic conduct during all engagements in which the regiment has participated.
17. First Sergt. George Adams, Company G, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, for gallantry during the action at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, receiving in this action the fifteenth wound and refusing to leave his company until after the battle was over.
18. First Sergt. Charles P. Sherman, Company B, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg April 2, 1865.
19. Sergt. Charles P. Battelle, Company A, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.
20. Corpl. John Fred. Company B, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in the assault before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865.
21. Corpl. Edward Mitchell, Company D, Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteers, for gallant conduct in the assault on Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, taking some twenty prisoners.
22. Corpl. William H. Erdman, Company D, Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, being among the first to re-enter the fort and taking fifteen prisoners.
23. Private Patrick McCran, Company G, Third Maryland Battalion Veteran Volunteers, for recapturing the colors of the Twenty-seventh Georgia Infantry, and bravely assisted in releasing many of our men who had been taken prisoners.
24. Color-Sergt. Robert Kiley, Company I, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, for conspicuous gallantry during the engagement at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.
25. Sergt. James Hyatt, Company H, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, for conspicuous gallantry during the engagement at Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.
26. Private James K. Brady, Company H, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, for capturing the colors of the Twenty-sixth South Carolina Infantry.
27. Private John Wilder Bontwell, Company B, Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va., bringing off from the picket-line, under a heavy fire, a comrade who had been shot through both legs.
28. Private Carlton N. Camp, Company B, Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va., bringing off from the picket-line, under a heavy fire, a comrade who had been wounded through both legs.

29. Sergt. Lawson S. Warner, Company B, Eighth Michigan Veteran Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry during the campaign before Petersburg, especially on April 2, 1865, being one of the first to wheel into position, load, and fire one of the captured guns at Fort Mahone.

30. First Sergt. E. L. Doolittle, Company G, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, displayed conspicuous gallantry on the 2d of April in the attack and capture of Fort Mahone.

31. Sergt. Reuben D. Shaw, Company C, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, displayed conspicuous gallantry on the 2d of April in the attack and capture of Fort Mahone.

32. Sergt. Charles E. Franck, Company I, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, displayed conspicuous gallantry on the 2d of April in the attack and capture of Fort Mahone.

33. Private Payson Dunn, Company F, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, displayed conspicuous gallantry on the 2d of April in the attack and capture of Fort Mahone.

34. Private Joseph Mach-me-nom-o-nee, Company K, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers, displayed conspicuous gallantry on the 2d of April in the attack and capture of Fort Mahone.

35. Sergt. John McGregor, Company E, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry throughout the campaign, especially in the assault before Petersburg, Va.

36. Sergt. Henry A. Kichly, Company B, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry throughout the campaign, especially in the assault before Petersburg, Va.

37. Corpl. Silas Cramer, Company G, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry throughout the campaign, especially in the assault before Petersburg, Va.

38. Corpl. George Lane, Second Company Sharpshooters, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry throughout the campaign, especially in the assault before Petersburg, Va.

39. Color-Sergt. Charles Oliver, Company M, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, captured the colors of the Thirty-first Georgia Infantry in the assault on Fort Stedman, and planted his regimental colors on the fort while it was still occupied by the enemy.

40. Private Joseph B. Chambers, Company F, One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, captured the colors of the First Virginia Infantry in the assault on Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

41. Corpl. M. D. Dewire, Company A, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, in the assault on Fort Stedman March 25, 1865, captured a rebel flag-staff and part of the flag and recaptured the national camp-color staff.

SECOND DIVISION.

42. Private James Lawley, Company B, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who deserted from the enemy on the evening of January 1, 1865. On the morning of April 2, in the charge on Fort Mahone, when asked by Colonel Gowan, previous to the fall of that brave officer, what brought him there, he replied that he did not wish to be considered a coward. Although slightly wounded, and regardless of the fate that awaited him (should he fall into the enemy's hands), he remained on the field, and was one of the first to enter the captured fort.

43. Corpl. James Horan, Company C, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who urged his comrades forward and to the cannon's month and entered the rebel fort. He has belonged to this regiment ever since its organization, has always been a good and faithful soldier, and has several scars on his person from wounds received in action during this rebellion.

44. Color-Sergt. John Taylor, Company A, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who carried the colors of his regiment through Fort Mahone to the enemy's second line. The color staff was twice shot off while in his hands.

45. Private James Mullen, Company I, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who, being among the first to enter Fort Mahone, turned the enemy's gun upon them, exerted himself in every way to use it to good advantage upon the flying foe.

46. Color-Sergt. Andrew J. Goodfellow, Company A, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who by his personal valor distinguished himself in the assault on Fort Mahone.

47. Corpl. Henry Irvin, Company E, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who by his personal valor distinguished himself in the assault on Fort Mahone.

48. Private Penrose Miller, Company E, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who by his personal valor distinguished himself in the assault on Fort Mahone.

49. Color-Corpl. John Kinsey, Company B, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who by his personal valor distinguished himself in the assault on Fort Mahone.

50. Color-Corpl. David W. Rees, Company C, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who by his personal valor distinguished himself in the assault on Fort Mahone.

51. Private Edward Mills, Company I, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, who by his personal valor distinguished himself in the assault on Fort Mahone.

52. Private Frank Gravin, Company K, Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, who distinguished himself in endeavoring to rally the troops on the right of the line on the afternoon of April 2, 1865, in the performance of which he was severely wounded.

53. Sergt. Peter M. W. Baldwin, Company E, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, who in charge on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, displayed great gallantry and performed his duty nobly.

54. Sergt. Edward Starr, Company K, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, who in charge on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, displayed great gallantry and performed his duty nobly.

55. Private John Anderson, Company H, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, who in charge on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, displayed great gallantry and performed his duty nobly.

56. Private Aaron D. Hatlaway, Company G, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, who in charge on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, displayed great gallantry and performed his duty nobly.

57. Private John A. White, Company H, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, who in charge on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, displayed great gallantry and performed his duty nobly.

58. Private Edward Deten, Company I, Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, who in charge on Fort Mahone April 2, 1865, displayed great gallantry and performed his duty nobly.

59. Private Michael Noonan, Company E, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, who while carrying fixed ammunition from Fort Sedgwick on the morning of April 2, 1865, was wounded, yet refused to drop his load; having delivered it to the gunners in the captured lines, he returned to his company, and only left to have his wounds dressed when ordered by the commanding officer.

60. Private Victor Mahlstedt, Company E, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, who while carrying fixed ammunition from Fort Sedgwick on the morning of April 2 was wounded, yet refused to drop his load; having delivered it to the gunners in the captured lines, he returned to his company, and only left to have his wounds dressed when ordered by the commanding officer.

61. Sergt. Charles H. Stevens, Company D, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, who was wounded while assisting in firing one of the captured guns in Fort Mahone.

62. Private Henry A. Russell, Company E, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, who was wounded while attending to the wounded of his regiment.

63. Color-Sergt. James Jarvis, Company I, Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, who when asked by an officer attempting to rally the men to give him the colors replied that he stood by those colors, and was afterward wounded.

64. Color-Sergt. Henry E. Badger, Company E, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, for coolness and gallantry in first entering a rebel fort and planting the Stars and Stripes on one of its guns on the 2d of April, 1865, before Petersburg, Va., also for soldiery conduct throughout his service.

65. Sergt. James O. Smith, Company A, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, for gallantry during the charge on the rebel fortified line and forts before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, also for bravery as color-bearer of regiment.

66. Color-Corpl. George W. Otterson, Company G, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, for gallant conduct during the charge on the enemy's works before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, where he was wounded.

67. Sergt. Julius Voigt, Company K, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry during the charge on the enemy's lines before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865, where he was wounded.

68. First Sergt. George F. Goldthwait, Company C, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, for bravery and gallant conduct in the engagement of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va. Sergeant Goldthwait was the first to enter one of the rebel forts and was wounded while assisting in turning one of the enemy's guns upon them.

69. Sergt. Warren Boothby, Company I, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, for brave and gallant conduct in the engagement of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va. During the action he seized the colors and, amid a shower of shot and shell, planted them upon the rebel works and stood by them until the action was ended. Whenever the men wavered he would grasp the colors, wave them in the face of the enemy, and call on the men to stand by him. By his brave example and words of encouragement he contributed all possible for one in his position to do toward the success of the day.

70. Corpl. Leonard Trafton, Company A, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, first and foremost in every battle in which he was engaged, and particularly in the engagement of April 2, 1865.

71. First Sergt. Oscar S. Jennings, Company I, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line, and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

72. First Sergt. Edwin Lamberson, Company A, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line, and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

73. Sergt. George W. Mills, Company A, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

74. Sergt. A. T. Courtright, Company A, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

75. Sergt. Francis E. Thorne, Company A, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

76. Corpl. S. H. McIntosh, Company D, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

77. Corpl. Asa C. Ottarson, Company A, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

78. Private Daniel J. Hunt, Company I, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

79. Private William S. Root, Company I, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

80. Private William T. Harris, Company A, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

81. Private G. P. Taylor, Company E, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

82. Private Robert R. Ferris, Company G, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, for his steady and unflinching bravery during the assault on the enemy's position April 2, 1865. As the line advanced to the abatis, pressed on to the enemy's line and entered the works and remained there during the day, exhibiting those qualities which entitle the soldier to the highest commendation.

THIRD DIVISION.

83. Private James Decker, Company D, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. On the morning of March 25, 1865, in the affair of Stedman, Private Decker captured a flag from the enemy, but during the confusion an officer wearing the badge of the First Division, Ninth Army Corps, whose name and rank could not be ascertained, snatched the flag away from him and ran to the rear with it. This statement is certified to by the commanding officers of Companies D, C, B, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

84. Private Charles H. Keinert, Company F, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. This soldier captured a stand of rebel colors from the enemy March 25, 1865, but threw it away, saying that he would rather shoot a rebel than carry that thing. This is certified to by the commanding officer of the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

85. Private John A. Sipe, Company I, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, captured a flag from the enemy in the charge on Fort Stedman, killing the rebel color-bearer upon his refusing to surrender. The flag, however, was taken from Private Sipe by a field officer belonging to the corps, whose name and rank could not be ascertained. This is certified to by several members of the soldier's company.

86. Corpl. Frederick D. Foight, Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, orderly at headquarters Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, for conspicuous bravery displayed in carrying dispatches under fire during the affair of Stedman March 25, 1865.

87. Private Levi A. Smith, Company E, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous bravery in the affair of Stedman. After the color-sergeant had been shot down this soldier volunteered to carry the colors, which he did gallantly through the action.

88. Sergt. Elbridge Stiles, Company C, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, color-bearer, for conspicuous bravery and gallant conduct during the affair of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

89. Sergt. Edward J. Humphreys, Company O, Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, color-bearer, for conspicuous bravery and gallant conduct during the affair of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

90. Private George Dull, Company F, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for gallantry in the charge at the retaking of Fort Stedman March 25, 1865.

91. Sergeant Shontz, Company D, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for his bravery at Fort Stedman March 25, and in front of Petersburg April 2, 1865, where he commanded his company and led his men bravely on in the assault.

92. Sergt. J. H. Stephens, Company C, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for his bravery in the charges at Fort Steadman March 25 and April 2, 1865, in front of Petersburg.

93. Sergt. Henry Naber, Company C, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, color-bearer, for bravery and gallantry, carrying the regimental colors in the charge at the retaking of Fort Steadman March 25, 1865, and in the assault on the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865, when he was wounded.

94. Sergt. Daniel A. Seward, Company C, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in the repulse of the enemy at Fort Steadman March 25, 1865, and in the assault upon the enemy in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

95. Sergt. Charles H. Hgenfritz, Company E, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in the assault upon the enemy's lines in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865.

96. Private Wilbur Brown, Company H, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry in Fort Steadman March 25, and in the assault in front of Fort Sedgwick April 2, 1865; was severely wounded at the latter place.

97. Corpl. John M. Engle, Company I, Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, for conspicuous gallantry on the picket-line in front of Petersburg March 29, 1865.

98. Private Thomas Troy, Company I, Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, for distinguished gallantry during the night of April 2, 1865, in ascertaining the movements of the enemy, bringing the first reliable information of the evacuation of Petersburg, Va.

99. Sergt. Maj. J. S. McQuaid, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, for great bravery displayed in front of Petersburg April 2, 1865. This soldier, with the assistance of some of the men, turned and ran into position the captured guns and used them against the retreating rebels, under heavy fire.

100. First Sergt. James F. Johnston, Company D, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, for gallantry in front of Petersburg April 2, 1865. After the commissioned officers of the company were killed or wounded, this soldier took command of his company and rallied the men, directing their fire, until he fell severely wounded.

101. Sergt. William R. Moore, Company D, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, color-bearer, for gallantry before Petersburg April 2. This soldier was in the advance in the assault upon the works, carried the colors through the entire engagement, and was the second man to unfurl the Federal flag over the city of Petersburg.

ARTILLERY BRIGADE.

102. Sergt. David Cole, Battery C, First New York Artillery, for bravery and coolness in action, working the guns captured from the enemy and otherwise distinguishing himself for gallantry throughout the campaign.

103. Sergt. Gustavus A. Rice, Battery C, First New York Artillery, for bravery and coolness in action, working the guns captured from the enemy and otherwise distinguishing himself for gallantry throughout the campaign.

104. Corpl. Samuel T. Mallet, Battery C, First New York Artillery, for bravery and coolness in action, working the guns captured from the enemy and otherwise distinguishing himself throughout the campaign.

105. Private Hiram Webster, Battery C, First New York Artillery, for bravery and coolness in action, working the guns captured from the enemy and otherwise distinguishing himself for gallantry throughout the campaign.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. G. PARKE,
Major-General, Commanding.

---

No. 154.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report the operations of this division in the field from the 29th of March to the 9th of April, 1865, inclusive:

On the night of the 29th of March, at 10.30 o'clock, the enemy opened on my lines, stretching from Fort Morton to the Appomattox, with all their artillery of every description, and some musketry from their main lines. At about 11 o'clock the artillery lulled. I expected an advance of the enemy's troops, and was ready to receive them, but no attack was made, and a desultory firing of artillery only continued through the night. It afterward appeared, from the official reports of the enemy, that they thought we had made an attack; in fact, Major-General Gordon reported such to be the case, and that they had handsomely repulsed us. But although we were under orders from corps headquarters to be ready to attack, and I had caused to be distributed axes for cutting the enemy's abatis, yet no sort of attack was actually ordered or made on our part.

The sensitiveness of the enemy seemed to encourage our men. Preparations were made on the 31st, as well as on April 1, for a night attack opposite Forts Haskell and Steadman, Third Brigade, and at a point in front of Ely's brigade, nearer the Appomattox. Through the night of the 2d various threatening demonstrations were made along the line, and the enemy's picket-pits captured at various points, in pursuance of orders from corps headquarters, made in aid of operations being carried on on the left of the army.

At about 1 o'clock on the morning of the 2d of April orders were received from corps headquarters to mass one brigade, except garrisons, by 4 o'clock on the same morning near Fort Sedgwick, on the Second Division front, where General Hartranft was to make a real attack with his division and a brigade from each of the other divisions, while by the same order I was directed to make a vigorous demonstration along my whole division line with the rest of my troops at the same hour. Colonel Harriman was accordingly detached with staff officers who knew the road, tools, ammunition, and every possible aid, to report to General Hartranft, and this brigade was in position and formed at the moment required.

The demonstration ordered along the line began precisely at 4 by the Second Brigade, Bvt. Col. Ralph Ely; Third Brigade, Bvt. Col. G. P. Robinson, and Col. William J. Bolton, commanding Fifty-first Pennsylvania, left on the First Brigade line of intrenchments. Some of the enemy's picket-pits were captured near the old Crater by Colonel Bolton. The pickets of the Third and Second Brigades, strongly re-enforced, advanced handsomely, the artillery opened vigorously, and large portions were drawn down to oppose what they considered a real attack in force.

On the extreme right, near the Appomattox, a portion of Ely's brigade actually carried some 200 yards of the enemy's works, but our lines, two miles in length, were too much attenuated to hold the ground. Some seventy-five prisoners were secured and brought in. Three regiments were withdrawn from other points and double-quickened to the point but before it could be re-enforced the enemy recovered it.

The effect of this movement, however, on the general result was most happy, inasmuch as it contributed to weaken the enemy's line in front of Fort Sedgwick, where the real attack was completely successful. For this handsome part performed by Harriman's brigade of this division at the latter point I respectfully refer you to his own report and that of Brevet Major-General Hartranft, commanding at that part of the line.

Through the day offensive demonstrations were kept up and the batteries playing in aid of the more serious work of the day going on farther to our left. In the afternoon and evening the enemy strengthened their line opposite me, but about midnight of the 2d reports came up from Colonel Ely, commanding Second Brigade, and Col. James Bintliff, now commanding Third Brigade, by virtue of his rank, that there were signs of the enemy withdrawing from our front, leaving only their picket-line. I gave orders to the two brigade commanders to press through as soon as possible.

At about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 3d some of our parties broke through Bintliff's brigade, advanced upon Cemetery Hill, and Ely mere directly into the town with a section of Stone's battery. I gave Colonel Ely orders to take measures at once to secure order in the city. At 4.28 a. m. one of his flags, that of the First Michigan Sharpshooters, was raised on the court-house, and that of the Second Michigan on the custom-house. A few minutes later and guards were posted about the town. The enemy had fired the bridges, but with the aid of the negroes, who manned the fire-engines, our troops extinguished the flames in time to save the main structures, and skirmishers were at once pushed across the river, picking up stragglers and other prisoners.

General Benham, commanding a brigade from City Point, who had taken post the night before in rear of my lines, entered the city with me and allowed me the use of a detachment of 200 cavalry, part of which patrolled the town and part were sent across the river, on a reconnaissance, to learn the direction of the enemy's main route of retreat, which duty was performed correctly, and reported to the lieutenant-general commanding the armies, who early advanced into the town in person. In two hours, notwithstanding the presence of troops from every corps, including colored troops, Petersburg, which had been besieged by our army nearly ten months, was as quiet, and property and persons as safe as in Washington, an instance of discipline and good conduct on the part of troops unsurpassed in military history.

The number of prisoners captured on this and the following day, by scouring the country with scouting parties, was 1,045; number of muskets, 830; number of flags, 7 (forwarded to City Point, to headquarters Armies of the United States); value of quartermaster's and subsistence stores, $20,000.

The division remained in Petersburg guarding the railroad two days, when by orders from corps headquarters we moved up to Sutherland's Station, on South Side Railroad, and connecting there with the Third Division moved up along the railroad as the army advanced, until the 9th of April, when we stretched from Sutherland's to Wellville.

For details of operations of the respective regiments of the division I respectfully refer you to accompanying reports of the brigade commanders, and commend their notice of gallant officers and men to the approval of the major-general commanding the corps for brevet appointments.

Accompanying the Second Brigade report is the document of the city authorities surrendering the city of Petersburg to Colonel Ely.*

O. B. WILLCOX,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. JOHN D. BERTOLETTE,

Asst. Adjt. Gen. 9th Army Corps and Dist. of Alexandria.

ADDENDA.

Report of the number of prisoners received and stores captured by First Division, Ninth Army Corps, at Petersburg, Va., April 3, 1865.

PRISONERS RECEIVED.

From Second Army Corps .....	400
From Sheridan's command .....	125
From Ninth Army Corps .....	1,045
Total .....	1,570

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES.

Muskets .....	830
Breech-loading rifles .....	31
Spencer repeating rifles .....	3
Cavalry carbines .....	4
Bayonets .....	749
Bayonet scabbards .....	148
Cartridge-boxes .....	480
Cartridge-box plates .....	136
Cap pouches .....	168
Waist belts .....	98
Cartridge-box belts .....	44
Cartridge-box belt plates .....	5
Gun slings .....	200
Sabers .....	3
Brass (12-pounder) guns .....	a2
Limber with chest .....	a1
At Goose Neck Battery:
30-pounder Parrott guns, rifled .....	2
20-pounder Parrott guns, rifled .....	1
Sea-coast mortars .....	2
At Chesterfield:
30-pounder Parrott guns .....	2
8-inch Columbiad gun, rifled .....	1
Front of Avery House:
8-inch Columbiad gun, rifled .....	1
At Pocahontas, over the river:
Light 12-pounder .....	1
Caissons and limbers .....	4

* See p. 1048.

a Turned over by chief of artillery of Second Army Corps.

QUARTERMASTERS' STORES.

Tobacco .....	{ caddies..	14
Tobacco, smoking .....	{ boxes..	11
Snuff .....	do..	4
Tobacco .....	do..	214
Tobacco .....	hogsheds..	2
Hay forks .....		51
Rakes .....		4
Wheel hubs .....		130
Felloes .....		20
Feed cutter .....		1
Circular saw .....		1
Iron, assorted .....	pounds..	65,000
Scales .....	sets..	2
Waste .....	hules..	6
Coal tar .....	barrels..	3
Mail crates .....		3
Fanning mill .....		1
Corn shellers .....		2
Lumber .....	feet..	20,000
Grindstones .....		5
Clay pipes .....	barrels..	3
Passenger car .....		1

Lot of material and iron for cars.

Estimated value quartermaster's property, $16,452.00.

SUBSISTENCE STORES.

Bacon .....	boxes..	3
Beef .....	barrels..	47
Vinegar .....	do..	8
Soap, soft .....	do..	8
Apples .....	do..	4
Peaches .....	do..	2
Salt .....	sacks..	1,100
Rice .....	barrels..	15½
Pork .....	barrels..	60
Bacon .....	barrels..	4
Potatoes .....	do..	1
Plug tobacco .....	boxes..	23

No. 155.

Report of Col. Samuel Harriman, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HQRS. FIRST BRIG., FIRST DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,

April 10, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to instructions received from headquarters First Division, Ninth Army Corps, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my command in the assault upon the enemy's works on the morning of April 2, 1865:

Between 11 and 12 o'clock on the night of the 1st instant Bvt. Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox ordered a demonstration to be made upon that portion of the enemy's line in the front of this command. Accordingly the troops were put under arms and Lieutenant-Colonel Waite, commanding Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, was ordered to take 200 of his men and assume control of the operation on the picket-line. The Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers was moved down to the picket-line as a support; the One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers was moved to the rear of Battery Willcox and near the covered way leading to the picket-line to be used in case of an emergency. The picket-line being thus strengthened commenced firing in volleys, accompanied by cheers. Afterward, more fully to develop the strength of the enemy, two companies of the Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers were moved to the left of the Crater, the remaining five companies left near the Baxter road; several volleys were fired, accompanied by hearty cheers; the enemy's fire was such as to strengthen the belief that they had not removed any great part of their force from our front. The result of this demonstration being reported to me I ordered Colonel Waite to withdraw his troops, two companies being left to strengthen the line. During this time a heavy shelling had been kept up by both sides, resulting in no serious damage to us. About 2 a. m. orders were received from General Willeox to move the whole command, with the exception of the Fifty-first Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, to the left as far as Fort Sedgwick and to report to General Hartman for orders. This was at once done, the Fifty-first Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers being left to occupy the whole front of the brigade. Upon arriving at Fort Sedgwick, by directions of Brigadier-General Hartman, three regiments of this command were put into position to advance. The Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers took position twenty paces on the right of the Third Division of this corps, the One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers about ten paces in rear of the Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, and the Eighth Michigan Volunteers about ten paces in rear of the One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers. The pioneer corps of this brigade was formed on the right of the Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, and advanced with that regiment to cut away the abatis and chevaux-de-frise in front of the enemy's works; the Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers and the Twenty-seventh Michigan were held in reserve near Fort Sedgwick. Just at daylight the order was given to advance. The troops moved forward to the enemy's picket-line, capturing the pickets, and then with a cheer rushed forward to the assault of the main work, capturing Fort Mahone and five pieces of artillery and the entire garrison. The artillery was at once turned upon the enemy and was effectively served by the infantry until the arrival of a volunteer detachment of the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery. A detachment of the Seventh Maine Battery, commanded by Lieutenant Staples, also volunteered to work the captured guns in the fort. Lieutenant Staples and his men rendered valuable assistance during the entire day. As soon as the assaulting party had carried the enemy's works the Twenty-seventh Michigan and Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers were ordered to their support, moving to the right of the position gained by the regiments that had already advanced.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the admirable conduct of the officers and enlisted men of my command, of the admirable disposition of the troops in the fort, and of the gallant manner in which they all performed the work assigned them.

Fearing the enemy might mass their troops on the right the Eighth Michigan was moved into a detached work a little to the rear and right of the fort, where they remained until the advance of the troops the following morning. During the daytime and night this detached work was connected by a continuous line with our old picket-line; the line was built and occupied by the Eighth and Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers. Colonel Carruth, commanding Seventh Rhode Island [Thirty-fifth Massachusetts] Volunteers, and Captain Twitchell, commanding Seventh Maine Battery, rendered valuable assistance during the day by supplying the infantry troops and artillery with ammunition. While holding the position gained during the day the enemy withdrew under cover of the night, and at daylight the entire briga advanced to the outskirts of the city, where they remained until ordered by General Willcox to return to the position occupied in our old line of works.

The following extract is taken from the report of Col. William J. Bolton, commanding Fifty-first Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, left to occupy the brigade line:

Having extended my regiment the whole length of the brigade line I instructed them in case of attack to be prepared at any moment to move to any point on the line. Our casualties were during the day 1 man killed and 1 mortally wounded; this being done by our own shells. On the morning of the 1st instant, suspecting the evacuation of the enemy, I sent a scout to ascertain the truth or falsity of my suspicion. He soon returned and reported that he had penetrated to the enemy's rear line, finding one man to every forty yards of the line. I ordered the officers of the picket to advance in front of the Grater; they met with no opposition and soon gained Cemetery Hill. At this point the picket officers sent for me for the colors, which I refused to send; however, they advanced and claimed to have been in the city twenty minutes before the national colors had been placed upon any building. They also claim to have captured some fifty prisoners.

Where officers and soldiers do their duty so nobly it is a difficult matter to particularize individuals or individual actions, but I cannot pass over the name of Colonel Bintliff, who led the assault and by his gallantry inspiring his troops to heroic deeds, as also Maj. R. N. Doyle, Eighth Michigan, Lieutenant-Colonel Waite, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Green, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers. I was also ably supported in the operations of the day by Captain Brackett, aide-de-camp, First Division, whose coolness and practical views I cannot too highly commend. To Brevet Major-General Hartranft I am greatly indebted, and the success of the movement is mainly due to him for his superior knowledge and coolness in directing the operations of the day and his constant presence on the field. Maj. John D. Bertolotto, assistant adjutant-general to General Hartranft, and Captain Watts, aide-de-camp, also aided me greatly in furnishing the necessary intrenching tools and aiding me in many ways by their advice and experience. To Captain Norton, acting assistant adjutant-general, Captain McCreery, inspector-general, Captain Burnett, aide-de-camp, and Lieutenant Maxon, pioneer officer of my staff, I am under deep obligations for the prompt and efficient manner in which every order was executed and the zeal with which they labored to make the movement an entire success.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM. HARRIMAN,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., First Division, Ninth Army Corps.

---

No. 156.

Report of Col. Charles Waite, Twenty-seventh Michigan Infantry.

HDQRS. TWENTY-SEVENTH MICHIGAN INFANTRY,

April 7, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command from the night of the 1st of April, 1865, to the night of the 3d of April, 1865:

On the night of the 1st instant one commissioned officer and forty-five enlisted men were placed on picket duty with the rest resting on the

Baxter road. At 11 p. m., in obedience to orders received from the colonel commanding, I took seven companies of my regiment to the picket-line and made a demonstration on the enemy's line with the intention of ascertaining if he had weakened that part of his line. I found that no part of his force had been withdrawn at that time and so reported, and at 2 a. m. on the 2d instant received orders to withdraw my command and rejoin the brigade as soon as possible. I would here state that the Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry was formed with great promptness in my rear to support the demonstration on the Baxter road, but it did not become necessary to use them. My regiment was formed in rear of Fort Sedgwick with the balance of the brigade at 4 a. m. 2d instant to support the Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, in the assault.

At the signal for the assault I moved forward, but, being formed in the last line, was the last regiment to go over our work. Seeing that the troops in advance of me were all directing their course toward the redoubt on the left of Fort Mahone I directed my command to the right, and succeeded in scaling one line of abatis, two lines of chevaux-de-frise, and planting our colors upon the embankment of the fort, capturing three pieces of artillery and the gunners who were in the act of loading them.

The guns were immediately turned upon the enemy and used with effect until the arrival of a detachment of the First Connecticut Artillery, who took charge of them. A large quantity of shell and canister was found and expended for the benefit of the retreating enemy. In addition to the gunners a large number of infantrymen were captured, including six commissioned officers. The prisoners were sent to the rear so soon that I am unable to state the exact number captured. My regiment remained in the captured fort, fighting constantly, until 10 p. m., when we were withdrawn, and constructed a line of works connecting the right of the line captured in the morning with our picket-line. At daybreak on the 3d instant the regiment moved with the brigade into the city of Petersburg, passing over the rebel works, capturing 2 mortar batteries, one containing 2 the other 7 mortars, all dismounted. At 9 a. m. we returned to our old camp, remaining there until the 4th instant. In conclusion allow me to state that the conduct of both officers and men was all that could be asked or expected throughout the whole engagement.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHAS. WAITE,

Colonel, Commanding Twenty-seventh Michigan Infantry.

Capt. WARREN A. NORTON,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 157.

Report of Lieut. Col. Colvert K. Pier, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, commanding One hundred and ninth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 109TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
Near White Oak Hospital, April 7, 1865.

CAPTAIN: Pursuant to orders, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this regiment:

During the evening of April 1 the regiment moved to a position near Fort Hell. On the morning of April 2 the command constituted the second line of battle formed for the assault of Fort [Mahone?]. Moving forward at double-quick under a sharp musketry and artillery fire it quickly arrived at and disposed of the three lines of chevaux-de-frise and abatis surrounding the enemy's work, and pressing forward mounted the embankment of the fort, bayoneting and shooting the men at the cannon in the act of firing the same. The national flag carried by the color-guard of this regiment was the first planted on the captured work. Sixty-eight prisoners, including two commissioned officers, were secured. The cannon in the fort was, with the assistance of Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, quickly turned upon and successfully worked against the enemy. The regiment occupied the fort until the morning of the 3d, when, with the balance of First Brigade, they moved forward into Petersburg.

I am, captain, very respectfully,

O. K. PIER,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

[Capt. WARREN A. NORTON,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 158.

Report of Maj. Robert N. Roberts, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry.

HDQRS. THIRTY-EIGHTH WISCONSIN VOLUNTEERS,
April 7, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders just received, I have the honor to report that nothing outside the daily routine of picket duty before the lines held during the winter occurred in this command during the time elapsing from March 26 to the evening of April 1, 1865.

On the evening of the 1st instant, at 10 o'clock, the regiment was formed in the trenches, where it remained until 2 a. m., when it moved to the left and joined General Hartranft's division, remaining until near daylight, when a line was formed outside the trenches. Company A was detached from the regiment and placed on the right of the One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, while B company was placed upon the left of same regiment. With this disposition of the troops the order to forward and charge the enemy's lines came. The regiment moved up in good order and removing the lines of abatis scaled the works, capturing a rebel battery, and turning the guns upon the enemy. The line of works was held during the entire day and night of April 2, successfully repelling every attempt of the enemy to retake the works. During the early a. m. of the 3d the line advanced, passing over the hill, thence into the city, where the regiment remained about an hour, when it was marched back to camp, where we stayed during the balance of the day.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. N. ROBERTS,

Major, Commanding.

[Capt. WARREN A. NORTON,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 159.

*Report of Bvt. Col. Ralph Ely, Eighth Michigan Infantry, commanding
Second Brigade.*

HQRS. SECOND BRIG., FIRST DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,
April 6, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part performed by my brigade in the occupation of Petersburg:

Pursuant to instructions from General Willcox my command was disposed for a charge at 4 a. m. on the 2d instant. Two columns were formed for assault. The Second Michigan Veteran Volunteers, supported by the Twentieth Michigan Volunteers, was to assault on the left of the brigade; the First Michigan Sharpshooters, supported by the Forty-sixth New York Veteran Volunteers, was to assault on the right of the line. The Fiftieth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers and Sixtieth Ohio Volunteers were held in reserve. At 4.05 a. m. I received orders to make the best demonstration possible. I immediately gave the necessary orders, and a brisk skirmish commenced along my whole line. The First Michigan Sharpshooters, Lieutenant-Colonel Nichols commanding, advanced rapidly and occupied the rebel line, where it rests on the Appomattox. These gallant men did nobly, but they were forced back by superior numbers, with a loss of forty-one killed, wounded, and missing. The total loss of the brigade in this affair was eighty-six. Sunday evening I directed that one of my staff should remain on the line during the night and watch closely the movements of the enemy. About 1.30 a. m. I notified the commanding officers of the First Michigan Sharpshooters and Second Michigan Veteran Volunteers to hold themselves in readiness to make a demonstration on the right of my front at 4 a. m. and perhaps sooner. I received orders at 2.30 through Captain Keyser to make a demonstration immediately, as a deserter had come in on Colonel Robinson's front and reported that the rebels had all left except the picket-line. I ordered Brevet Major Lounsberry, assistant adjutant-general, to awaken the command immediately and order the First Michigan Sharpshooters and Second Michigan to report to him on the picket-line for further orders. I instructed the major to form the two regiments as quickly as possible, to throw out scouts and a heavy skirmish line and occupy the main rebel works if possible. I directed that so soon as the balance of the brigade reached the abatis after the occupation of the main works the advance should move rapidly, but cautiously, forward and plant a color upon some public building in the city.

At 3.10 a. m., all being in readiness, the advance moved rapidly forward and occupied the main works of the enemy, when the boys gave three hearty cheers, reformed their lines, partially broken by the obstacles they had passed, and pressed forward. The advance pushed forward as rapidly as was possible under the circumstances, as it was necessary to keep scouts well out in front and on the flanks.

The ground was unfavorable for rapid movement, yet the flag of the First Michigan Sharpshooters was hoisted on the court-house at 4.28 a. m., and the flag of the Second Michigan on the custom-house a few moments later.

The left of my brigade moved slowly because of the necessity of keeping connection with the troops on my left. My whole command reached the vicinity of the court-house before 6 a. m. So soon as I saw my advance leave the rebel works and proceed forward I ordered the pioneers to clear the road for artillery. Captain Stone, Fifth U. S. Artillery, followed the pioneers, and reached the court-house with two pieces just after daylight. At 4.25 a. m. Major Lounsberry was met in front of the court-house by three citizens bearing a flag of truce and a communication from the mayor and common council tendering the surrender of the town, and requesting that persons and private property be respected. But the gallant major could listen to no proposition until the "old flag" was floating from the highest point of the court-house steeple and proper pickets had been established in the vicinity, and patrols sent out to pick up stragglers, about 500 of whom we captured, many of them with arms; also 7 flags or colors. The major then assured the gentlemen that we came in the name of liberty and in the defense of the right, and that they need have no fear, for all would be well with them so long as they remained at home and conducted themselves properly. While the brigade was in the city all commands were implicitly honored and vigorously executed.

In his report the major says:

During the advance the command moved in magnificent style. The men were most completely under the control of their officers; not a man straggled, not a man left his place. The conduct of both officers and men was such as to reflect on our cause and cast a luster of glory over the profession of arms.

What was true of the First Michigan Sharpshooters and the Second Michigan also applies truthfully to the rest of the command. I enclose herewith the "original" surrender of the city.

Respectfully submitted,

I remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RALPH BIX,

Brevet-Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Bvt. Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure.]

PETERSBURG, April 3, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT,

Commanding the Armies of the U. S., or

THE MAJOR-GENERAL COMMANDING U. S. FORCES

IN FRONT OF PETERSBURG:

GENERAL: The city of Petersburg having been evacuated by the Confederate troops, we, a committee authorized by the common council, do hereby surrender the city to the U. S. forces, with a request for the protection of the persons and property of its inhabitants.

We are, respectfully, your obedient servants,

W. W. TOWNES,

Mayor.

DARCY PAUL,

CHAS. F. COLLIER.

No. 160.

Report of Capt. Albert A. Day, Twentieth Michigan Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH MICHIGAN VOLUNTEERS,

Ford's Farm, Va., April 18, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with extract from Special Orders, No. 94, dated headquarters Army of the Potomac, April 14, 1865, I would assaulting party was then withdrawn and the wounded taken from the field; 1 officer and 14 enlisted men wounded and 1 man missing. On the evening 2 enlisted men were wounded on picket in front of Fort McGilvery.

About 2 o'clock on the morning of the 3d instant the pickets reported that the enemy evacuated the line of fortifications, and were at day-break ordered to advance toward the city of Petersburg, which was promptly executed; by entering the city one man of the regiment captured a rebel battle-flag, which was delivered to Second Brigade headquarters; after a short stay at the city the regiment was sent as a scouting party across the Appomattox River near Pocahontas; by so doing 2 field pieces of artillery, 3 caissons, 30 ambulances, 10 army wagons, and about 350 rebel prisoners fell into our hands.

Remained there on picket during the following night and day until relieved on the 4th of April, when we marched to the camp ground of Second Brigade, south of Petersburg, near Cox's road.

On the 5th instant the regiment marched to Sutherland's Station, a distance of ten miles; arriving there the whole command was ordered to form a picket-line of three miles extension along Cox's road and South Side Railroad, doing picket duty there until the 9th instant, when we were relieved by the Fiftieth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and ordered to move farther south to Ford's Station, South Side Railroad, about six miles distance; guarding the South Side Railroad since that date.

List of casualties during the operations before Petersburg from the 29th ultimo to the 9th instant, both inclusive: Two men killed, 2 officers and 17 men wounded, 1 man missing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ADOLPH BECKER,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

No. 162.

Report of Col. James Bintliff, Thirty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., NINTH CORPS,
April 19, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to Special Orders, No. 94, headquarters Army of the Potomac, I have the honor to report that on the night of March 29, 1865, a severe artillery duel took place on the Third Brigade front, and it was believed that the enemy were preparing for an attack, but before morning everything had quieted again and the pickets, a part of whom had come in, were re-established.

On the night of March 31, pursuant to orders from division headquarters, 5 officers and 225 men were detailed as skirmishers and preparations made for an assault on the Spring Hill position opposite Fort Stedman. The plan was not carried out, the enemy having received information of our preparations, and on the night of April 1, 1865, similar preparations were made, the position chosen for attack being the rifle-pits lost by General Egan to the left of the pond in front of the One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers. This assault, though well prepared for, and offering fair prospects of success, was abandoned, and on the night of the 1st of April preparations were made for assaulting the same place, and in the morning of the 2d J. F. Carter, Third Maryland Battalion, with a detail of 100 men, supported by the One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, advanced and attacked, but finding the enemy in strong force and learning after a heavy skirmish that the works on our left had been carried, and that the Second Brigade had penetrated the line to our right and were in need of re-enforcements, the One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers was sent to their assistance and only a desultory skirmish fire kept up along our front. At 11 a. m. it was resolved to again attempt the enemy's line with a view of at least retaining the troops then facing us in their position, and two companies of the Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers were advanced against the works on the (our) right of Spring Hill, receiving a strong fire and stopping the further weakening of the line on our front.

At about 9 p. m. this day the undersigned assumed command of the brigade, relieving Col. G. P. Robinson, and at shortly after midnight, April 3, Colonel Robinson forwarded a report that the enemy had evacuated. I directed him to take possession of the works and move cautiously to Cemetery Hill, sending for orders to division headquarters. At 2.15 I received a report from Colonel Robinson that he was at the white house on the hill, and soon after received permission to push forward into the city. At 5 a. m. the brigade moved from its old camp and reported to the major-general commanding at the court-house at 6. After marching through the city it returned to camp and moved again at 10 a. m., crossing the Appomattox and proceeding by the Richmond turnpike toward Old Town Creek, establishing headquarters at Violet Bank.

On the morning of the 4th we again received orders to move, and recrossed the river about noon, and, taking the Cox road, moved to the old line of rebel works near Mellwaine's house, extending from the Appomattox to the plank road.

At 12 the next day the brigade moved to Sutherland's, and from there, at five minutes past midnight, April 6, again started on the Cox road, relieving the pickets of the Third Division from Poole's house, below Ford's, to a mile beyond Heasley's.

On April 8 the line of the brigade was altered to extend from Ford's to one mile beyond Wilson's. Lists of casualties accompanying this* and lists of captures of colors and guns have already been forwarded.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES BINTLIF,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. WILLIAM V. RICHARDS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 163.

Report of Capt. John M. Deane, Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry.

HQRS. TWENTY-NINTH MASSACHUSETTS VET. VOLS.,
April 18, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular from brigade headquarters dated April 17, 1865, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command from the 29th ultimo to the 9th instant, both inclusive:

On the 29th ultimo this command was encamped at Battery No. 11, before Petersburg, Va., and remained in that position until the morning of April 3, 1865, when it advanced into the city of Petersburg, crossed the Appomattox, and encamped at Violet Bank. On the 4th instant the command recrossed the Appomattox and camped on Pryor's farm. On the 5th instant moved to Sutherland's, and on the 6th to Ford's Station on the South Side Railroad, where it remained until the 12th instant.

* Embodied in table, p. 589.

The casualties from the 29th ultimo to the 9th instant were five men wounded. No guns nor colors were captured during the same period.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. DEANE,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. T. W. CLARKE,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 3d Brig., 1st Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 164.

Report of Maj. Ezra P. Gould, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry.

HDQRS. FIFTY-NINTH MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS,

April 18, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular of 17th instant from brigade headquarters, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the troops under my command:

During the week following the attack on Fort Stedman the utmost vigilance was required on our front, both to guard against any attack of the enemy and to discover and take immediate advantage of any signs of evacuation, and anything like rest was entirely out of the question, and throughout that week, therefore, the men of this command, even more than most others in the brigade, owing to our proximity to Fort Stedman, were ever sensitive to anything like an alarm, and were under arms in the trenches the greater part of every night. As early as 3 o'clock of Monday morning, the 3d instant, the fires in the city and other signs indicated an evacuation and one of the sergeants was sent by me to discover the state of affairs in our front. He returned bringing word of the desertion of the rebel works, and I immediately sent word of the same to brigade headquarters, and at 6 o'clock this regiment with the rest of the brigade entered the city. Since then we have been doing guard and picket duty around Petersburg and on the South Side Railroad.

No casualties have occurred and no captures of guns nor colors have been made during the time mentioned in circular.

EZRA P. GOULD,

Major, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers, Commanding Regt.

Lieut. M. STEWART,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Brigade.

No. 165.

Report of Lieut. Col. Joseph M. Olough, Eighteenth New Hampshire Infantry.

HDQRS. EIGHTEENTH REGT. NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLS.,

Near Beasley's House, April 18, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with circular from headquarters Third Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, dated April 17, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report:

On the 29th ultimo this regiment was on the line on the immediate right of Fort Stedman. On the evening of that day, in a demonstration made by the enemy on that portion of the line, Major Brown was killed and Lieutenant-Colonel Clough was slightly wounded; also 1 enlisted man killed and 4 wounded. The regiment remained in this position until April 3, the day of the evacuation of the lines before Petersburg.

In the demonstrations made upon the enemy's lines by the Third Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, on the 1st and 2d instant, Captain Greenough and 1 enlisted man were wounded in the trenches, and 1 man killed and 4 wounded in a line of skirmishers thrown out on the 2d instant. April 3, the regiment moved through Petersburg, crossed the Appomattox River, and moved forward on the Richmond road about two miles and encamped. On the 4th instant the command recrossed the river and moved in the direction of the South Side Railroad, which it reached at a point near Ford's Station on the morning of the 6th instant, from which time to the 9th instant, inclusive, it was guarding the railroad in this vicinity, being encamped along the road in detachments.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. CLOUGH,

Lieutenant-Colonel Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers.

Capt. T. W. CLARK,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., 3d Brig., 1st Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 166.

Report of Maj. Norman J. Maxwell, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HDQRS. 100TH PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,

April 18, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this command from the 29th ultimo to 9th instant:

Immediately on the opening of the action of 29th ultimo two companies, B and G, were sent into Fort Haskell, as per orders from brigade headquarters. On the 1st instant a detail from the regiment was ordered to report to Captain Carter for the purpose of charging the works of the enemy on Cemetery Hill. Four companies, A, F, D, and H, under command of Capt. Charles Wilson, were held in readiness to support the assault of Captain Carter. The regiment was engaged in no other active operations.

Full details of casualties, captures of colors, &c., have already been sent you.

N. J. MAXWELL,

Major, Commanding 100th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Captain CLARK, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 167.

Report of Brig. Gen. Simon G. Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division.

HDQRS. SECOND DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,

May 15, 1865.

COLONEL: In compliance with orders received from army and corps headquarters I have the honor to submit the following report:

In the action of the 20th [25th] ultimo, when the enemy assaulted and captured Fort Stedman and were repulsed by our forces, this division was not engaged. Nothing of importance occurred until the evening of the 1st of April, when orders were received from Major-General Parke, commanding Ninth Army Corps, to assault the enemy's lines the next morning at 4 o'clock, in connection with other divisions and corps who were also to attack at the same time on our right and left. It was designated that Potter's division should attack on the Jerusalem plank road, to the left of Fort Sedgwick, and that General Hartman should move with his division to the right of that fort and connect with the right of this division. Orders were immediately transmitted to brigade commanders and every preparation made for the assault. At 10 p. m. a dispatch was received directing that an attack be made at once by driving in the enemy's pickets and opening artillery fire. The Second Brigade, General Griffin commanding, was immediately advanced from the right of its position, which was about half a mile to the left of Fort Sedgwick, attacked the enemy's entrenched picket-line, and carried it for half a mile in extent, capturing eight officers and 241 men. During the execution of this movement dispatches were received directing that the original plan of assaulting the enemy's works at 4 a. m. should still be carried out. Griffin's brigade was hastily withdrawn and placed in column of attack on the Jerusalem plank road to the left of Fort Sedgwick, between our own main and picket-lines, supported by Curtin's brigade. The column was formed by regiments with a storming party of three companies from the Thirty-first Maine Volunteers in advance, flanked on either side by a corps of pioneers from each brigade to clear away the enemy's abatis to the right and left to allow the column to advance. The Seventh Rhode Island, Thirty-ninth and Thirty-sixth Massachusetts, and the Fifty-first New York, of the First Brigade, and the Ninth and Eleventh New Hampshire, of the Second Brigade, were left to garrison Forts Moikel, Rice, Sedgwick, Davis, and Alexander Hays, and Batteries Nos. 24 and 25.

At 4.30 a. m., having communicated with General Hartman and learning that all was ready, the order was given to advance. The column moved forward steadily and in good order, receiving the enemy's fire and capturing his picket-line without the slightest check. The storming party dashed forward at a run, seizing and passing through an opening in the enemy's abatis, which had previously been observed and fixed upon as our point of attack, closely followed by the One hundred and seventy-ninth New York, Thirty-first Maine, Sixth New Hampshire, Second Maryland, and the whole column, which passed forward under a deadly fire of grape, canister, and musketry in the most gallant and determined manner, carrying all before them, capturing guns and turning them upon the enemy, and sending hundreds of prisoners to the rear. The head of the column, after passing the enemy's main line of works, turned to the left and swept it for about one-fourth of a mile. The First Brigade, General Curtin, also attacked in that direction, and captured and held an isolated work called Fort Mahone, one-fourth mile to the left of the plank road; but the enemy being well posted, and bringing a heavy fire of both artillery and musketry to bear upon our troops, who had unavoidably become somewhat broken and disorganized, our further advance to the left was checked. Up to the time the charge was made the division had been under the command of Brevet Major-General Potter. Soon after the breaking of the enemy's lines that distinguished officer fell severely wounded, and I assumed command of the division, in compliance with orders from Maj. Gen. John G. Parke.

In connection with General Hartranft's division we now held possession of the captured line of works in front of Fort Sedgwick, but the enemy was fast bringing up re-enforcements, and kept up a constant and murderous fire on our troops. Many of our commanding officers were killed or wounded, and it was with the greatest difficulty anything could be done toward reorganizing our broken regiments. The Fifty-sixth Massachusetts, which had been held in reserve, was sent forward to assist in holding the works already gained, and our troops bravely resisted the fierce and repeated attacks upon our lines without yielding an inch of ground. Re-enforcements were asked for, and about 2 p. m. Brevet Brigadier-General Collis reported to me with four regiments from City Point. General Collis was immediately ordered forward to strengthen the threatened portion of the line. In moving his brigade into position, from some unexplained cause, a slight delay occurred, during which the enemy made a furious attack, recapturing a few traverses, but the Fifty-sixth Massachusetts, Second Maryland, and parts of other regiments held firm and no material part of the works was given up. General Collis charged the enemy in turn and reoccupied the disputed portion of the line. A sharp fire of musketry was kept up between the opposing parties during the evening, but no serious attack was made on either side. During the night large fires were seen and heavy explosions heard in the direction of Petersburg, and by 3 a. m. it became evident the enemy were evacuating.

Dispositions were immediately made to advance, and at daylight skirmishers were thrown out, and the whole line moved forward and entered the city without opposition. Detached parties were sent to secure the bridges across the Appomattox. They were found to be on fire, but the flames were soon extinguished and two of the bridges saved.

Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the officers and men of this command for the gallantry displayed in this daring and successful assault. Nowhere throughout the entire line were the works more formidable than in front of Fort Sedgwick, and every foot of approach was covered by the enemy's artillery. The previous attack had served to put the enemy on the alert and we were received with a most destructive fire.

The division suffered a loss of 6 officers and 109 men killed, 44 officers and 517 men wounded, and 3 officers and 96 men missing.*

Among the killed were Col. George W. Gowan, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and Bvt. Maj. P. E. Peckham, acting assistant adjutant-general First Brigade, both accomplished and gallant officers.

Soon after entering the city orders were received from Major-General Parks to be prepared to move at once in pursuit of the enemy, and Brevet Brigadier-General Collis was relieved and ordered with his command to City Point. Preparations were immediately made and early in the afternoon the division passed through the city, taking the River and Namozine roads on the right bank of the Appomattox and bivouacked that night, April 3, some ten miles from the city. The next morning the march was resumed, passing from the Namozine to the Cox road, and halting that night, one brigade at Pickett's and the other at Ford's Station on the South Side Railroad. On the 5th the First Brigade advanced to Morgansville, the Second to Wellville. On the 6th the First Brigade moved to Burkeville, the Second to Nettoway Court-

---

* But see revised table, p. 589.

House. On the 8th the Second Brigade marched to Burkeville, and on the 9th the First was sent to Farmville, remaining at those points until ordered with the corps to Washington, D. C.

In addition to the lists of names of officers recommended for promotion already forwarded, I would especially mention for brave and gallant conduct on this occasion, Col. W. M. Gregg (wounded), Lieut. Col. F. B. Doty (since died of wounds), both of the One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers; Col. Bradley Winslow (wounded), and Capt. W. R. Wallace, One hundred and eighty-sixth New York Volunteers; Adjt. Abraham Cohn, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers; Capt. Henry J. Griffin, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, and Capt. W. Clark, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, both of the brigade pioneer corps; Capt. T. P. Beals (wounded), Capt. A. D. Brock, and Lieut. W. H. Ware, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, of the storming party. Of this gallant party of 108 men, composed of Companies C, H, and I, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, 5 were killed and 32 wounded.

I inclose herewith copies of the reports of brigade commanders.

The following is the statement of the casualties in the division on the 2d of April:

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Headquarters.....			2				2
First Brigade.
45th Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.....		5	4	20	1	20	5	54
7th Rhode Island Volunteers.....	1		2	14		1	3	12
35th Massachusetts Volunteers.....		3		11				14
39th New Jersey Volunteers.....	2	15	3	74			5	80
48th Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers.....	1	18	3	57		26	4	83
58th Massachusetts Volunteers.....		4	1	17	2	16	1	37
36th Massachusetts Volunteers.....		1		4				5
51st New York Volunteers.....
Total First Brigade.....	4	38	10	200	3	63	20	301
Second Brigade.
6th New Hampshire Volunteers.....		3	1	24		3	1	30
9th New Hampshire Volunteers.....				1				1
11th New Hampshire Volunteers.....
17th Vermont Volunteers.....	1	8	3	35		2	4	45
31st Maine Volunteers.....		10	3	65		6	3	80
2d Maryland Veteran Volunteers.....		5		20		6		31
56th Massachusetts Volunteers.....		1	2	11			3	12
170th New York Volunteers.....	1	9	9	34		8	0	61
186th New York Volunteers.....		35	11	127		0	11	171
Total Second Brigade.....	2	71	20	317		33	31	421
Grand total *.....	6	109	34	517	3	96	53	722

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. G. GRIFFIN,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. JOHN D. BERTOLETTE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps.

* But see revised table, p. 589.

No. 168.

Report of Bet. Brig. Gen. John I. Curtin, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,
Farmville, Va., April 13, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with orders from Bvt. Maj. Gen. Potter, commanding Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, four regiments of my brigade were massed in column of regiments in the following order to the left of Fort Sedgwick at 3 o'clock Sunday morning, 2d instant: Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers, with orders to support the Second Brigade (General Griffin) in the assault on the enemy's works, which was made at 4.30 a. m. The column moved up in the rear of the advance, the right resting on the [Jerusalem] plank road, until reaching the picket-line, when, finding the Second Brigade had gained possession of the enemy's works in their immediate front, I changed direction to the left, charging Fort Mabone (enemy's fort) to the left of the position now held by General Griffin. The advance regiment (Thirty-ninth New Jersey Volunteers), breaking and tearing away the strong abatis and wading through mud and the deep ditch which surrounded the fort under very heavy fire of grape and musketry, gained possession of that very formidable work, taking a few prisoners and three guns.

The fort being isolated from the main works, open in the rear, and completely commanded from front and flanks, the advance was compelled to retire in some little confusion to the outer part, yet at the same time held the fort. The Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and Fifty-eighth Massachusetts Volunteers were then ordered forward, charging over and through the fort, attempting to gain possession of the enemy's second line of works, which charge was successful only so far as getting possession of the traverse and covered way leading to their main works. Holding all ground gained until finding any further attempts to gain the second line, with the disorganized and confused state in which the regiments at the time unavoidably were, would only be attended with great loss and disaster, all that could not be sheltered inside the fort were ordered to retire to the outer side. The ground gained up to this time was held until about 10 a. m., when all inside the work were ordered to retire, as they were subject to be captured. The regiments now began reorganizing on the outer part of the fort, and all possible preparation being made to hold the fort, and did hold it, inflicting a severe fire, silencing the enemy's guns, and preventing them from planting new batteries, which they repeatedly attempted until late in the day, when all but about fifty men were compelled to retire to the rear lines, in consequence of the troops in the works on my right being obliged to relinquish part of their advanced position, thereby giving the enemy a greater advantage of a flank and rear fire; a sufficient number, however, were so sheltered, and remained and held the fort for the time; they, too, were finally overpowered, and had to retire or be taken, which fate a few (about ten in number) received. Another attempt was made to hold the fort, but failed, owing to the fact that sufficient numbers could not exist in the work to resist the enemy's repeated charges.

The four regiments comprising the charging column, from the time their advance commenced and until they reached the fort, were exposed to a very galling fire of artillery and musketry, particularly at the time that they were obliged to change direction, keeping well the line and regimental organizations.

In expressing my entire satisfaction of the gallant conduct of officers and men of the regiments engaged, I refrain from mentioning any one specially. I have to mention, and deeply regret, the loss of two valuable officers, Col. George W. Gowan, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and Bvt. Maj. P. E. Peckham, acting assistant adjutant-general.

The Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, Thirty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and Fifty-first New York Veteran Volunteers, although not in the charge, rendered good service in supplying ammunition to the troops in the fort.

The command was afterward reformed on the picket-line and remained through the night of the 2d instant in support, and moved early in the morning of the 3d instant after the retreating army of the enemy.

I have the honor to report the following number of casualties occurring in this command during the engagement of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va.:

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
45th Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers .....		5	4	20	1	20	5	54	60
7th Rhode Island Volunteers .....	1		2	11		1		12	15
35th Massachusetts Volunteers .....		1		11				14	14
30th New Jersey Volunteers .....	2	15	3	71			5	80	91
48th Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers .....	1	10	3	67		25	4	93	97
68th Massachusetts Volunteers .....		4	1	17	2	10	3	37	40
30th Massachusetts Volunteers .....		1		4				5	5
51st New York Veteran Volunteers .....
Total* .....	4	38	13	200	3	63	20	301	321

I have the honor to be, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. I. CURTIN,

Bvt. Brig. Gen. U. S. Vols., Comdg. 1st Brig., 2d Div., 9th Army Corps.

Bvt. Maj. SAMUEL WRIGHT,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Division, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 109.

Report of Brig. Gen. Simon G. Griffin, U. S. Army, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,

April 2, 1865.

MAJOR: On the evening of the 1st of April I received orders from Brevet Major-General Potter, commanding Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, to be prepared to unite in a general attack on the enemy's lines the next morning at 4 o'clock. The order stated that General Hartranft would attack at the right of Fort Sedgwick, while I was to lead the assault on the part of the Second Division, with my brigade on the Jerusalem plank road, to the left of that fort, to be supported by the First Brigade, under Vyt. Brig. Gen. John L. Curtin. At 10 p. m. the same evening General Potter sent for me in haste and informed me verbally that "the programme had been changed"; that General Grant had sent orders to "attack at once," and gave me directions to attack the enemy's picket-line at the right of my brigade. The point designated was about half a mile to the left of Fort Sedgwick. I immediately advanced with six regiments to the point indicated, formed them in two lines, with one regiment in reserve, and sent forward the first line, composed of the Second Maryland, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, and Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, to carry the enemy's intrenched picket-line, which was done in a very handsome manner; 8 officers and 241 men were made prisoners, and the line was carried and held for more than half a mile in extent. Scarcely had this success been accomplished when information was received from General Potter that the original plan of a general attack on the enemy's main line at 4 a. m. had not been abandoned, but was still to be carried out, as directed in orders previously received. I immediately withdrew my troops and hastily transferred them to the Jerusalem plank road, to the left of Fort Sedgwick and about 100 yards in rear of our picket-line. The column of attack was at once formed in the following manner: Three companies of the Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, under Captains Beals and Brock and Lieutenant Ware, were selected as a storming party, with orders to push forward at a run on the plank road, pass through an opening that had been observed in the enemy's abatis, and seize the works and the guns that commanded the road. On either side of this party was a corps of pioneers from each brigade of our division, with orders to advance with the storming party and clear away the abatis to the right and left to allow the advancing column to pass through. The brigade was formed in column by battalion—that is to say, with a single regimental front, each regiment to follow its predecessor in line of battle in the following order: One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, Thirty-first Maine, Sixth New Hampshire, Second Maryland, Seventeenth Vermont, and One hundred and eighty-sixth New York Volunteers.

* But see revised table, p. 589.

The Fifty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers was held in reserve, and the Ninth and Eleventh New Hampshire were left, in compliance with orders, to garrison Fort Alexander Hays and Batteries 24 and 25.

Just at daybreak, at a preconcerted signal, the column moved forward in connection with General Hartranft's division, which joined us on our right. Nothing could exceed the coolness and intrepidity with which both officers and men, under a terrific fire, advanced to the attack. Passing our own picket-line steadily, they rushed upon the enemy's picket and main line upon the run, carrying all before them, capturing their complete line of works, with many pieces of artillery, and sending hundreds of prisoners to the rear. After seizing the line in our immediate front the head of the column turned to the left and swept the enemy's line for about one-quarter of a mile, while General Curtin's brigade, in support of mine, also attacked in that direction; the enemy, however, were well posted, and checked our farther advance to the left; and, having collected a force at that point, attacked us furiously, but our troops held the ground with the utmost determination. The Fifty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers was ordered up to hold the works at the intersection of the Jerusalem plank road, which they did with tenacity and success. At this time information reached me that General Potter was dangerously wounded, and I was ordered by General Parke to assume command of the division. Great praise is due to both officers and men for the gallantry displayed on this occasion. Nowhere on the line were the works to be stormed more formidable than at this point, but they proved no impediment to our brave troops.

I would particularly mention Lieut. Col. B. E. Taylor, Second Maryland Veteran Volunteers, for the splendid manner in which he handled his regiment, and for the pertinacity with which he held the line when sorely pressed; also Col. William M. Gregg, wounded, and Lieut. Col. F. B. Doty, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, since died from wounds; Col. Bradley Winslow, wounded, and Capt. William B. Wallace, wounded; One hundred and eighty-sixth New York Volunteers; Lieut. Col. E. L. Getchell and Maj. G. A. Bolton, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, both severely wounded; Lieut. Col. P. P. Bixby, Maj. S. D. Quarles, and Adjt. Abraham Cohn, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers; Maj. L. E. Knapp, commanding Seventeenth Vermont Volunteers, Capt. Henry J. Griffin, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, and Capt. William Clark, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, of the pioneer corps; also Capt. T. P. Bnals, wounded, Capt. A. D. Brock, and First Lieut. W. H. H. Warr, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, of the storming party. Of this gallant party of 108 men, composed of Companies O, H, and L, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, 5 were killed and 32 wounded.

I would also specially mention the following officers of the brigade staff for gallant conduct in the field: Capt. L. N. Sawyer, Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, brigade inspector; Lieut. Ira G. Wilkins, Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, acting assistant adjutant-general, wounded; and Capt. S. G. Goodwin, Sixth New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers, and Lieut. Thomas Child, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, aides-de-camp.

The following statement exhibits the losses of the brigade:

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
6th New Hampshire Veteran Volunteers.....		3	1	21		3	1	30
9th New Hampshire Volunteers.....				1				1
11th New Hampshire Volunteers.....				35		2	4	45
17th Vermont Volunteers.....	1	8	3	65		5	3	80
31st Maine Volunteers.....		10	3	20		6		31
2d Maryland Veteran Volunteers.....		5		11			0	12
66th Massachusetts Volunteers.....	1	1	2	33		8	0	51
170th New York Volunteers.....		9	0	127		0	11	171
186th New York Volunteers.....		35	11
Total*.....	2	71	29	317		33	31	421

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
S. G. GRIFFIN,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Maj. SAMUEL WRIGHT,
Asst. Adjt. Gen., Second Division, Ninth Army Corps.

* But see revised table, p. 589.

No. 170.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. John F. Hartranft, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

U. S. ARSENAL, WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, in the operations in front of Petersburg, Va., from March 30 to April 9:

On the night of March 30, in compliance with orders from corps headquarters, the First Brigade of my command, consisting of the Two hundredth, Two hundred and eighth, and Two hundred and ninth Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers, under command of Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, was massed near the Avery house, and the Second Brigade, consisting of the Two hundred and fifth, Two hundred and seventh, and Two hundred and eleventh Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers, under command of Col. J. A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, near Fort Prescott, with a view of forming an assaulting column in front of Fort Sedgwick at daylight on the following morning, but at 2.45 a. m. March 31 orders were received countermanding the movement, and the troops were accordingly sent back to their respective camps. The division was held in readiness in camp during March 31 and April 1 ready to meet any emergency.

At 11 p. m. on the night of April 1 my troops were massed in the manner heretofore mentioned, and at 3 o'clock on the morning of April 2 an assaulting column was formed in front of Fort Sedgwick, to the right of the Jerusalem plank road and between our main line of works and the picket-line. The First Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, Col. Samuel Harriman, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, commanding; consisting of the Thirty-seventh and Thirty-eighth Regiments Wisconsin Volunteers, Eighth and Twenty-seventh Regiments Michigan Volunteers, and One hundred and ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, reported to me for orders at Fort Sedgwick at 2 o'clock on the morning of April 2, in compliance with orders from Major-General Parke, commanding corps, and was put into position on the right of the Third Division.

The assaulting column was formed in column of regiments, with the left resting on the Jerusalem plank road, in the following order: Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Cox commanding; Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Major Morrow commanding; Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Dodd commanding; Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant-Colonel Heintzelman commanding. The Two hundred and ninth and Two hundredth Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers, of the Third Division, were held in reserve behind the works. Three regiments of Harriman's brigade, of the First Division, also formed in column of regiments on the right of the Third Division in the following order: Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, Colonel Bintliff commanding; One hundred and ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, Lieut. Col. C. K. Pier [Thirty-eighth Wisconsin, commanding]; Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, Maj. R. N. Doyle commanding. The Twenty-seventh Michigan and Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers were held in reserve in rear of the line of intrenchments. Strong engineer parties were formed in front of the assaulting columns. These parties were divided into squads and one squad placed on the right of each division of the leading regiments to cut away the abatis and chevaux-de-frise in front of the enemy's works.

Potter's division was formed on the left of the Jerusalem plank road and facing Fort Mahone. General Griffin, commanding Second Brigade, Second Division, was to make the advance, and my movement was to conform with his advance, and to this end one of my staff officers remained on the left of the first regiment of my assaulting column and communicated with an officer of General Griffin's command.

At 4.30 a. m., just at dawn of day, the assault was made. My command moved forward in the most handsome and gallant manner, capturing the enemy's picket-line, and advanced to his main line, carrying all his works from a point a little to the left of the Jerusalem plank road, and for a distance of 400 yards to the right of the Jerusalem plank road (the line carried by my troops was known by the enemy as Miller's Salient), capturing — pieces of artillery, 3 battle-flags, and a considerable number of prisoners. As soon as the line was carried the four reserve regiments were pushed forward to support the assaulting columns, which were much broken under the heavy fire of the enemy, and in passing through the enemy's abatis, &c. These regiments also suffered greatly from the fire of the enemy's artillery on the left of the works captured by the Second Division and from a two-gun battery of 8-inch howitzers in the rear of the lines captured.

The pioneer parties did their work most nobly and effectually; the wires connecting and binding together the sections of chevaux-de-frise were cut and the sections pulled back in the manner of opening a gate. This was very difficult to accomplish, and my men, suffering very much from the enemy's fire, grew impatient, and with a will large numbers of them seized the sections, and by main force opened passages as above indicated.

The guns captured were immediately turned upon the enemy, using their ammunition, and worked with effect by my men until artillerists, which were promptly forwarded, were sent to man them.

Seeing that further advance was impracticable, the troops being much exhausted in advancing, and the enemy still holding a strong position in the covered ways and traverses and having possession of a two-gun 8-inch mortar battery, and one 8-inch columbiad battery, I placed my troops in the most advantageous position along the line of captured works and put them to work to make them tenable. Works were also thrown up in rear of the enemy's field-works to protect the artillerists who worked the guns. The ammunition left by the enemy was soon exhausted, but the demand was promptly supplied from time to time during the day by Brevet Brigadier-General Tidball, chief of artillery, and carried to the front under severe fire by troops of Colonel Carruth, commanding Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and by detachments of my men.

Three determined charges to retake the works were made by the enemy during the day, one at 11.15 a. m., the second at 1.05 p. m., and the last at 3 p. m. In the latter charge the left of the line held by my command was forced to retire for a short time, owing to the fact that part of the works held by the Second Division were retaken by the enemy, giving him a sweeping flank fire on my left, but upon the advance of new troops on the left my men regained confidence, and the line was re-established. At 4.45 p. m. the Second Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps, Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. E. Hamblin commanding, reported to me at Fort Sedgewick and was immediately ordered to the front to support the left of my line, and, if possible, occupy part of the line farther to the left; the latter was impossible, owing to the enfilading fire of the enemy from the covered way leading from Fort Mahone, and this brigade was then held as a support to the left of my line.

Immediately after dark a skirmish line was pushed forward, and the chevaux-de-frise taken from the rear and put out in front of the line of my division. A line of works which had been commenced during the day connecting Miller's Salient with our picket-line on the right was completed and occupied, and much work was done during the night along the entire line held to put it in the most defensible position. The Two hundred and fifth, Two hundred and seventh, and Two hundred and eleventh Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers were withdrawn to our old picket-line as a reserve, and General Hamblin's troops placed in the position occupied by these regiments.

At 3 a. m. of the 3d of April I ordered the officer of the day to advance his skirmishers and feel for the enemy, and at the same time all the troops of my command were held in readiness for movement. The enemy having retired from my immediate front at 3.30 a. m., I moved my division forward in column of regiments, and at the same time ordered Colonel Harriman to move forward in the same manner on the right and General Hamblin on the left, and advanced to the suburbs of Petersburg without opposition, reaching it at a few minutes before 5 a. m. My line of skirmishers reached the city at about 4.15 a. m.

Immediately upon arriving in the city the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Dodd commanding, was sent to the river to secure the bridges and prevent them from being destroyed, and picket the river, and the Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers was sent to the left to communicate with troops of the Sixth Corps, and Colonel McCalmont, with the Two hundredth and Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was ordered to take possession of the city, but upon arriving at the court-house he was met by Colonel Ely, commanding a brigade in First Division, who claimed that the surrender of the city had been formally made to him, whereupon Colonel McCalmont withdrew his command to the outskirts of the city, where the balance of the division was stationed. I am satisfied that my skirmishers were the first Union troops in the city, and that Colonel McCalmont's brigade was the first which entered the limits of the city in a body.

I ordered Colonel Dodd as soon as relieved by troops which were to occupy the city, also Lieutenant-Colonel Frederick, commanding Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, after receiving his report that he had communicated with troops of the Sixth Corps, to return to their original camps. Harriman's and Hamblin's brigades were ordered to rejoin their respective divisions. I then marched my division to the vicinity of the Avery house and got it in readiness for immediate movement.

I cannot refrain from speaking in the highest terms of the conduct of the officers and men of my command for their brave, gallant, and heroic conduct in this engagement and for the tenacity with which they held every inch of the captured works, and met and repulsed the stout and determined charges of the enemy during the entire day. They are deserving of the greatest praise. I would call particular attention to the conduct of Col. J. A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding Second Brigade; Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanding First Brigade, and Col. Samuel Harriman, commanding First Brigade, First Division, for their promptness and energy in disposing of and advancing the columns. To Col. R. C. Cox, Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Col. James Bluff, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, who commanded the leading regiments of the charging column, and who by their bravery, skill, and determination pushed their commands through the enemy's abatis, and captured the works, I am much indebted for the brilliant success which attended this movement. Great credit is due to Col. L. A. Dodd, Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Col. R. C. Cox, Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for their energy and skill in disposing of their commands and for the determination with which they met every advance of the enemy. These regiments were on the most exposed portion of the line and were put to the severest test. To Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. E. Hamblin, commanding brigade, for the gallantry with which he led his brigade into position and for his promptness and the efficiency of his command while it remained under my orders.

The following-named officers are mentioned as having performed valuable and distinguished services: Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Maj. Jacob Rehner, First Lieut. John McWilliams, First Lieut. James McComas, First Lieut. B. F. Eberly; Two hundred and eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. M. T. Heintzelman, Maj. Alexander Bobb, Second Lieut. David F. Keagy; Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieut. Col. George W. Frederick, Maj. J. L. Ritchey; Two hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Maj. B. M. Morrow, Lieut. and Adjt. E. L. Reber, Capt. J. A. McCahan, Capt. Richard Boone, Capt. F. B. McOlenahan, and Lieut. Morris Davis; Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, First Lieut. and Adjt. G. M. Bastian, Capt. J. A. Rogers, First Lieut. R. C. Ivory, Capt. J. W. Ruff, Capt. R. T. Wood, and Capt. J. J. Rees. These officers have been recommended for brevets.

The following-named enlisted men are mentioned as having pre-eminently distinguished themselves: Private John Lilley,* Company F, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Private John C. Ewing,* Company E, and Private A. D. Harman,* Company K, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; Sergt. John H. Stephens, Company C; Sergeant Shontz, Company D, and Sergt. Henry Naber, Company C, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Sergt. Daniel A. Seward, Company U; Sergt. Charles H. Hegenfritz, Company E, and Private Wilbur Brown, Company H, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; Sergt. Maj. J. S. McQuaid, First Sergt. James F. Johnston, Company D, and Sergt. W. R. Moore, Company D, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. These men have been recommended for medals of honor. The first three of these men captured colors from the enemy.

To the officers of my staff—Bvt. Maj. John D. Bortoletto, assistant adjutant general; Capt. E. P. Brown, Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, acting division inspector; Capt. E. A. Watts, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteers, aide-de-camp; Capt. T. W. Hoffman, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting engineer officer—I am much indebted for the valuable and efficient services rendered in placing the troops in position for the assault, in carrying dispatches, in giving orders and arranging the troops to meet the repeated attacks of the enemy, and for their coolness and bravery during the entire movement.

*Awarded a Medal of Honor.

At 3 p. m. April 3 I marched with my division, supplied with rations, ammunition, &c., through Petersburg toward Burkeville along the line of the South Side Railroad, as guard to the wagon train of the army. This division moved as far as Nottoway Court-House, which point it reached April 8, and guarded different points along the line of the railroad. No active part was taken with the enemy after April 3.

I respectfully invite attention to the accompanying reports of brigade commanders.

A tabular list of casualties is appended to this report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN F. HARTRANFT,

Breret Major-General, Commanding.

Byt. Lieut. Col. JOHN D. BERTOLETTE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps.

Tabular statement.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Division staff .....			1				1		1
First Brigade.
200th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....		2	1	33		3	1	38	30
208th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....		7	1	38		1	1	40	47
209th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....	1	6	3	49		3	4	58	62
Total First Brigade .....	1	15	5	120		7	6	142	148
Second Brigade.
205th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....	2	24	6	61		5	8	118	126
207th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....		37	10	130	1		11	174	185
211th Pennsylvania Volunteers .....	3	17	4	89		21	8	127	135
Total Second Brigade .....	5	78	20	310	1	33	27	410	446
First Brigade, First Division .....	1	34	12	140		7	13	171	181
Grand total .....	8	115	38	570	1	47	47	732	770

A D D E N D A .

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,

April 3, 1865.

Lieutenant-Colonel LYDIG,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps:

COLONEL: I have the honor to transmit herewith two battle-flags captured by the Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, of this command, in the assault of yesterday. The white flag belonged to the Forty-fifth North Carolina, the other to Sixty-first Alabama. Captured, respectively, by A. D. Harman, Company K, and John C. Ewing, Company E, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. D. BERTOLETTE,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 171.

Report of Lieut. Col. William H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,
April 10, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to offer the following report of this brigade during the action of April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, Va.:

On the morning of April 2 I received orders from Major Bertollette to mass my brigade in the rear of the Avery house at 1 a. m. After remaining there two hours I was ordered to march the brigade to Fort Sedgwick, conducted by Captain Brown, of General Hartranft's staff, and to form it under cover of the works. At 4 a. m. the Second Brigade advanced. I was then ordered by Captain Brown to move my brigade in at a double-quick; this was done under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry. The brigade moved forward and captured the enemy's works with 7 pieces of artillery, and about 350 prisoners, with the same number of stand of small-arms and accoutrements. I reported to General Hartranft and asked for artillerists; about forty men being furnished, they were conducted to the forts, and after turning the guns opened a lively fire upon the enemy with their own guns. Several furious charges were made by the enemy in which they put forth every effort to retake the works, but were handsomely repulsed in each attempt. The troops of this brigade were under a heavy fire during the entire day, and at the most critical time in the action the troops on my left, which had been sent as a re-enforcement from City Point, broke and ran in confusion.

I cannot refrain here from noticing the gallantry and heroic conduct of the officers of my brigade, who cheered their own men to greater effort, and plead for those frightened on the left to "go back and stand to the works." I cannot name any particular one of my officers, as they all behaved with deliberate bravery and coolness. As soon as it began to grow dark I received orders from General Hartranft to put at least one-third of my command on picket, and to move the abatis and chevaux-de-frise (formerly used by the enemy and now in our rear) round so as to front the enemy and protect our works. This was performed under a heavy fire from the enemy.

The remainder of the command was ordered to be kept on the alert. The list of casualties in this brigade during the action has been furnished.

At 3 a. m. of the 3d instant Col. A. B. McCalmont, of the Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, assumed command of the brigade.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. H. MCCALL,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Brigade.
Maj. JOHN D. BERTOLLETTE, A. A. G., 3d Div., 9th Army Corps.

No. 172.

Report of Col. Alfred B. McCalmont, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., THIRD DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,
April 11, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor herewith respectfully to transmit the report of Lieut. Col. W. H. H. McCall, Two hundredth Pennsylvania

Volunteers, who commanded this brigade on Sunday, April 2, during the attack on the enemy's works before Petersburg and in front of Fort Sedgwick, together with the reports of the respective regimental commanders, of the operations on that day and on the morning of Monday, 3d:

I reported for duty at headquarters Third Division late on the evening of the 2d, on the expiration of my leave of absence. By order of General Hartraft, on the morning of the 3d, at 3 o'clock, I assumed command of this brigade and put the men under arms. Although many circumstances, such as the burning of buildings in Petersburg, the cessation of picket-firing, and the occurrence of explosions toward morning, rendered it probable that the enemy were evacuating the city, the matter was by no means reduced to certainty when our lines were formed before daylight for a charge on the main line of works. In compliance with orders from General Hartraft at the first signs of daylight the brigade advanced in column of regiments. A line of skirmishers, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Heintzelman, Two hundred and eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Lieut. Col. L. A. Dodd, Two hundred and eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, preceded the column a few rods. The command advanced steadily and in good order, notwithstanding the darkness, the difficult nature of the ground, and the uncertainty whether a volley from the enemy or the fire of a battery might not at any moment greet the head of the column. On reaching the highest ground it became evident that the evacuation had been accomplished. The command moved forward and occupied the city. On arriving at its central portion I observed a few men of the First Division, who had reached that point before us. Shortly afterward, at the court-house, I saw Lieutenant-Colonel Ely, to whom the formal surrender of the city had been already made. I am satisfied, however, that this brigade was the first which entered the limits of the city in a body.

Finding no convenient place to quarter my command I returned with it to the outskirts and from thence to our old camps, north of the Avery house. On going back a considerable number of prisoners were captured. These men had been concealed, as we crossed the works, by the darkness and by the windings of the fortifications. The whole number was about 100. A great many tents and some heavy pieces of artillery had been left by the enemy in the works over which we passed, but we left them in charge of the troops that had not participated in the advance.

On returning to camp the brigade was put in preparation for marching, and during the afternoon of the same day moved through Petersburg, out the Burkeville road, in rear of the trains of the army.

I respectfully refer you to the report of Lieutenant-Colonel McCall, who commanded the brigade on Sunday, and the reports of the regimental commanders for the details of operations during that day.

The list of casualties has been already furnished.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. B. McCALMONT,

Colonel 208th Pennsylvania Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. JOHN D. BERTOLETTE,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Third Division, Ninth Army Corps.

No. 173.

Report of Col. Joseph A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HQRS. SECOND BRIG., THIRD DIV., NINTH ARMY CORPS,
April 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the action of my (Second) brigade during the assault on the enemy's works on the 2d instant. My report will only embrace the action of the brigade up to 10 a. m. of the 2d, at which time I left the field by order of General Hartranft, on account of sickness, turning over the command of the brigade to Col. R. C. Cox, Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers:

At 10.30 p. m. 1st instant I received orders to mass my brigade at the camp of Two hundred and fifth and Two hundred and seventh Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteers. At 3.30 a. m. 2d instant, in compliance with orders, I moved my brigade along the Jerusalem plank road around the right of Fort Sedgwick and massed it in column of regiments directly in rear of our picket-line and in front of the fort, with the Two hundred and seventh in front, the Two hundred and fifth in its rear, and the Two hundred and eleventh in rear of the Two hundred and fifth. My left rested on the plank road. My brigade pioneer corps, under charge of Lieut. A. Alexander (pioneer officer), was distributed along the front of the leading (Colonel Cox, Two hundred and seventh) regiment. Just before daylight the order to charge was given, and my men moved hastily forward, crossed the enemy's picket-line, and advanced to the double line of chevaux-de-frise in front of the enemy's works. A murderous fire of grape, canister, and shell from the enemy had thus far met us at every step, but my pioneer corps, aided by the first regiment, cut away the obstructions, and the regimental colors were planted on the redoubt which is thrown up on the plank road. The guns in the redoubt were at once seized, and my brigade, turning to the left, captured Fort Mahone, with its guns, and a number of prisoners, and also one other fort (name not known) with a like result. Artillerymen from the rear were at once brought up to work the captured guns, and they were turned upon the enemy with good effect. My men carried ammunition for these guns from Fort Sedgwick, and as the enemy had range of the plain between the two lines many men were killed and wounded while thus engaged. The enemy made repeated efforts during the forenoon to recapture their lines, but each time they were repulsed with heavy loss. It is impossible for me to mention my losses up to that time.

To Lieut. Albert Alexander (pioneer officer), to whom was intrusted the stern duty of cutting the line of the enemy's chevaux-de-frise, belongs more credit than I can here ascribe him. He was severely wounded, and died after being taken to the rear.

Maj. B. M. Morrow, commanding Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who was severely wounded, discharged his whole duty up to the hour of his fall. I commend him to the favorable consideration of the commanding general. I much regret his loss.

To Col. R. C. Cox, who commanded the leading regiment, I owe the entire good success that attended the charge; foremost among those who scaled the enemy's works, cheering his men by his courage, preparing them to meet the many charges of the enemy to retake their lines, and thus beating them back each time with heavy losses in killed and wounded. He is deserving of the highest praise.

For the action of the brigade from 10 o'clock on 2d, the full report of casualties, and the number of guns and prisoners captured, I would respectfully refer you to Colonel Cox's report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. MATHEWS,

Colonel, Commanding Second Brigade.

Maj. J. D. BERTOLETTE,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 174.

Report of Col. Robert C. Cox, Two hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HQRS. 207TH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,

April 12, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the action of the Second Brigade from 10 a. m. 2d instant to 10 a. m. 3d instant:

I was put in command of the brigade at 10 a. m., at which time I was with my regiment in the works of the enemy, which had so shortly before been captured from them. The other two regiments were occupying the same line. The Two hundred and eleventh were mostly on the right and the Two hundred and fifth on the left. It is difficult to state the exact localities of the regiments, for while the charge was being made the men of one regiment became mixed with those of others, and the peculiar position we occupied prevented me from rectifying the matter at that time. Lieutenant-Colonel Dodd, of the Two hundred and eleventh Regiment, with part of his own and part of the Two hundred and seventh Regiment, occupied Fort Mahone, and to him and Capt. James A. Rogers, of the Two hundred and seventh Regiment, is due the honor of securing artillerymen to work the guns of the fort against the enemy, which so materially aided us in holding our position. During the day repeated charges were made by the enemy to drive us back, but each time they were met with such a determined resistance by my men that they were compelled to fall back to their second line with heavy loss. At one time during the afternoon they succeeded in driving the men of the First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, out of a fort on my left, and this recapturing gave them an enfilading fire on part of my brigade. After resisting this fire for about two hours, holding our line, part of my left was compelled to give way and fall back in disorder; but re-enforcements came up at this time and my entire line was re-established. We then held our position until after dark, when I ordered my men to move the enemy's chevaux-de-frise from our rear over the first line of the enemy's works and constructed a new line with it in our front. About 9 p. m. I received orders to establish my headquarters in rear of our old picket-line, where I remained until 2.30 a. m. the 3d instant, when, by direction of General Hartman, I moved two of my regiments to the picket-line and sent the Two hundred and eleventh to report to Colonel Harriman, commanding brigade of First Division, Ninth Army Corps. At 4.30 a. m. I received intelligence that the enemy had withdrawn from their lines and was ordered to push my two regiments forward. I did so and entered Petersburg unmolested. After waiting there about two hours I was ordered by General Hartranft back to the old camp, where I arrived about 10 a. m. and turned over the command of the brigade to Col. J. A. Mathews, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Before closing my report I cannot refrain from mentioning that all of my command, both officers and men, exhibited the highest gallantry and bravery. Each one exerted himself to the utmost to accomplish the part of the work assigned him.

My loss was very heavy. Six of the enemy's guns were captured by my men in the captured forts. The number of prisoners captured by my brigade will not fall far short of 1,000, with their arms. To determine the exact number is an impossibility.

My casualties are as follows: Commissioned officers, killed, 6; wounded, 20; missing, 1. Enlisted men, killed, 76; wounded, 310; missing, 33. Aggregate, 446.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBT. C. CON,

Colonel, Commanding 207th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

MAJ. JOHN D. BERTOLUCCI,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 175.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. John C. Tidball, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery, Commanding Artillery Brigade.

HQRS. ARTILLERY BRIGADE, NINTH ARMY CORPS,

Alexandria, Va., May 28, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor of making the following report of the operations of the artillery under my directions from the 30th of March to the 3d of April, the date of the evacuation of Petersburg by the enemy:

The artillery was stationed on that part of the line occupied by the Ninth Corps, and extended from Battery No. 5 on the Appomattox River to Fort Howard, a distance of about five miles.

The accompanying maps* show the positions of the respective batteries and forts, and the following list gives their armament:

Position.	Armament.		Troops.	Commanding officer.
	No.	Character.
Battery No. 4.....	3	30-pounder Parrotts ..	I, 1st Connecticut Ar- tillery.	Lieut. J. O'Brien.
Battery No. 5.....	3	do .....	E, 1st Connecticut Artillery.	Lieut. George F. Bill.
	4	8-inch mortars.....	do .....	do.
	2	3-inch rifles.....	34th New York Bat- tery.	Bvt. Maj. J. Ittomer.
Fort McGilvery.....	4	do .....	do .....	do.
	2	Light 12-pounders....	C and I, 5th United States.	Capt. V. H. Stone.
Battery No. 8.....	1	30-pounder Parrott.....	1st Connecticut Ar- tillery.	Lieut. C. W. Smith.
Battery No. 9.....	2	Cochans .....	do .....	Lieut. Ezra Drown.
	3	do .....	do .....	do.
	2	Light 12-pounders....	C and I, 5th United States.	Capt. V. H. Stone.

* See Plate CXVIII, Map 3 of the Atlas.

Position.	Armament.		Troops.	Commanding officer.
	No.	Character.
Battery No. 10 .....	4	8-inch mortars .....	K, 1st Connecticut Artillery.	Lieut. J. H. Casey.
	3	Cochorns .....	do .....	Do.
	2	3-inch rifles .....	14th Massachusetts Battery.	Capt. J. W. B. Wright.
Fort Steilman .....	4	Light 12-pounders .....	10th New York Battery.	Capt. E. W. Rogers.
Battery No. 12 .....	2	8-inch mortars .....	L, 1st Connecticut Artillery.	Lieut. R. Lewis.
	4	Cochorns .....	do .....	Do.
	4	Light 12-pounders .....	3d New Jersey Battery.	Lieut. W. H. H. Bingham.
Fort Haskell .....	2	3-inch rifles .....	14th Massachusetts Battery.	Rvt. Maj. C. Woerner.
Battery No. 14 .....	2	4½-inch guns .....	A, 1st Connecticut Artillery.	Capt. J. W. B. Wright.
	4	10-inch mortars .....	do .....	Lieut. H. D. Patterson.
	4	Light 12-pounders .....	do .....	Do.
Battery No. 15 .....	6	Cochorns .....	G, 1st New York Artillery.	Capt. S. A. McClellan.
Fort Avery .....	4	30-pounder Parrotts .....	Detachment 14th New York.	Capt. J. P. Cleary.
Fort Moulton .....	3	3-inch rifles .....	1st Connecticut Artillery.	Capt. W. C. Faxon.
Battery No. 18 .....	1	Light 12-pounder .....	D, Pennsylvania Volunteer Artillery.	Capt. S. H. Rhoads.
Fort Rice .....	5	do .....	9th Massachusetts Battery.	Capt. R. S. Milton.
	1	3-inch rifle .....	do .....	Do.
Battery No. 20 .....	4	8-inch mortars .....	D, Pennsylvania Volunteer Artillery.	Capt. S. H. Rhoads.
Battery No. 21 .....	2	Light 12-pounders .....	1st Connecticut Artillery.	Lieut. H. W. Loomis.
	2	3-inch rifles .....	7th Maine Battery.	Capt. A. B. Twitchell.
Fort Sedgwick .....	4	Light 12-pounders .....	D, Pennsylvania Volunteer Artillery.	Capt. S. H. Rhoads.
Battery No. 22 .....	2	3-inch rifles .....	7th Maine Battery.	Capt. A. B. Twitchell.
	2	4½-inch guns .....	B, 1st Pennsylvania Artillery.	Capt. W. McClellan.
Fort Davis .....	4	Light 12-pounders .....	1st Connecticut Artillery.	Lieut. W. S. Malouy.
	4	3-inch rifles .....	27th New York Battery.	Capt. J. B. Eaton.
Fort Alex. Hays .....	4	do .....	B, 1st Pennsylvania Artillery.	Capt. W. McClellan.
Fort Friend .....	4	do .....	5th Massachusetts Battery.	Brevet Major Phillips.
Rear of Avery House .....	2	Light 12-pounders .....	11th Massachusetts Battery.	Capt. E. J. Jones.
Rear of Fort Sedgwick .....	3	3-inch rifles .....	3d New Jersey Battery.	Rvt. Maj. C. Woerner.
Front of Avery House .....	4	Light 12-pounders .....	L, 1st New York Artillery.	Rvt. Maj. G. Brock.
	2	do .....	C, 1st New York Artillery.	Capt. D. F. Ritchie.
	2	do .....	G, 1st New York Artillery.	Capt. S. A. McClellan.
Right of Battery 14 .....	2	do .....	E, 1st New York Artillery.	Lieut. G. H. Barne.

RECAPITULATION.

4½-inch guns .....	4
30-pounder Parrotts .....	11
Light 12-pounders .....	42
3-inch rifles .....	34
Total .....	91
10-inch mortars .....	4
8-inch mortars .....	14
Cochorns mortars .....	22
Total mortars .....	40
Grand total .....	131

Opposite to these positions the enemy had in position 91 guns of various calibers, from 6-pounders to 8-inch columbiads, and 35 mortars also of various calibers, from 12-pounder Coehorns to 10-inch. Total guns and mortars, 126.

Early on the morning of March 30 the artillery upon the whole line were engaged in a furious cannonade, which had been commenced at 10 p. m. of the day previous. At this hour the enemy threw up several rockets, at which signal his artillery with musketry in addition opened and was replied to. The firing ceased about 1 a. m. of the 30th.

From this time until 10 o'clock of the 1st of April all was quiet, when, in obedience to orders from the headquarters Army of the Potomac, fire was opened by all the batteries upon our line and continued until about 1 a. m. of the 2d. This fire was replied to most vigorously by the whole of the enemy's artillery.

At 4 a. m., the hour appointed for the assault upon the enemy's works in front of Fort Sedgwick, the artillery upon the whole line promptly opened and was immediately replied to in the most vigorous manner by the enemy, and it is probable that never since the invention of gunpowder has such a cannonade taken place.

Captain Twitchell, in command of the guns in Fort Sedgwick and Battery No. 21, carried out the instructions he had received with the utmost exactitude. Firing rapidly with all his guns for an hour, at 10 o'clock on the 1st, and though at this time the enemy appeared (to some extent) to concentrate his fire on these forts, the order to fire but one gun in five minutes between 11 and 12 o'clock was not exceeded.

At 4 a. m. on the 2d all the guns in these forts opened rapidly for fifteen minutes with evident effect, ceasing in the exact time for the infantry to make the charge that carried the enemy's lines.

The enemy's front line being in our possession the guns were trained and opened on the line and redoubts in rear and a slow fire kept up during the day, except when the three charges made by the enemy on the captured works were made. Captain Twitchell then used his guns with great judgment and promptness, firing shell and case shot with the best effect. In addition to his other duties Captain Twitchell was enabled to keep the captured guns in his front constantly supplied with ammunition.

A detachment of 100 men from the First Connecticut Artillery, commanded by Lieut. William H. Rogers, accompanied the column of attack upon the enemy's works in front of Fort Sedgwick and served the captured guns throughout the day. These men were fully equipped with everything necessary to serve such artillery as would be captured. They at once seized the enemy's guns and opened fire upon him as he fell back to his second line.

During the entire day Lieutenant Rogers and his party, while exposed to all the fierce attacks of the enemy, retained possession of the captured guns, and from positions entirely uncovered from the close fire of the enemy kept up a constant fire, which besides doing great injury to the enemy inspired our own troops to hold that they had gained. These men were ably seconded by Capt. David F. Ritchie, Battery C, First New York Artillery, who early in the day occupied a small work in rear of Fort Sedgwick, but after the enemy's lines were carried it was deemed advisable to send him with his cannoners into the captured battery (No. 27), in which were three iron and two brass 12-pounder guns. Captain Ritchie led his men in a most gallant manner through the embrasures of Fort Sedgwick and across the open ground to Battery No. 27, and immediately turned with excellent judgment and effect the guns he found on the enemy. Through the whole day, notwithstanding the repeated attempts made by the enemy to retake the works, Captain Ritchie held his own, though at times unavoidably short of ammunition he encouraged his support by cheering representations and personal exposure.

A working party of sixty men detailed from field batteries and provided with the necessary tools was organized under Captain Eaton, Twenty-seventh New York Battery, to open a way through the breast-works so that artillery could pass through and follow up the success of the assaulting column. Captain Eaton executed this work admirably and advanced two of his own pieces to the open ground in front of our works, where, notwithstanding the great exposure to the fire of the enemy, they were worked throughout the entire day.

The enemy still holding rear lines of their works in close proximity it was not advisable or necessary to advance other pieces.

During the night of April 2 a constant fire was kept up from Battery No. 5 and Fort McGilvery on the bridge across the Appomattox River, over which it was supposed the enemy might be retreating. It is fair to presume that this fire was of considerable annoyance to the enemy.

Early in the morning of the 3d it was discovered that the enemy had withdrawn from their lines and were in rapid retreat. Brevet Captain Stone, Fifth U. S. Artillery, immediately followed with his battery over the skirmish line and entered Petersburg simultaneously with the infantry.

Fourteen thousand two hundred and fifty-one rounds is the amount of artillery ammunition expended during the engagement.

The operations herein detailed differ but little from the occurrences which almost daily transpired from the 17th of June, when the line of Petersburg was first taken, up to the 3d of April. During this entire time the artillery was kept constantly on the alert. Every movement of the enemy was observed, and all working parties strengthening or extending their works were at once driven under cover by the admirable practice of our artillerists. The same vigilance and practice being observed by the enemy, the result was an almost daily or nightly cannonading.

Too much praise cannot be awarded to the officers and men of the artillery for the cheerful, patient, and hopeful manner in which, under the most trying circumstances, they performed their duties.

On the 3d, Major Miller, inspector of artillery, set about collecting the field pieces and ammunition abandoned by the enemy. The following is a description of the twenty guns captured in front of the lines occupied by the corps.

No. 1.—A Parrott gun, 3-inch, manufactured by J. R. A. & Co. No. 2180. Carriage made at Washington Arsenal.

No. 2.—A Parrott gun, 3-inch, manufactured by J. R. A. & Co. No. 2170. Carriage made by Wood & Bros. New York. 1844.

No. 3.—A U. S. Parrott, 3-inch. No. 95. 1861. R. P. P. W. P. F. maker.

No. 4.—A U. S. Parrott, 3-inch. No mark.

No. 5.—A howitzer, iron, 4½-inch, manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.

No. 6.—A boat howitzer, 24-pounder, manufactured by the Ames Manufacturing Company. No. 111. 1297-98.

No. 7.—A U. S. light 12-pounder brass gun. No. 33. 1862. Manufactured by the Ames Manufacturing Company.

No. 8.—A Dablgren 12-pounder gun. No. 1817. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.; 1,220 pounds weight.

- No. 9.—A Dahlgren 12-pounder gun. No. 1818. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.; 1,260 pounds weight.
- No. 10.—A Dahlgren 12-pounder gun. No. 1802. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.; 1,250 pounds weight.
- No. 11.—A Dahlgren 12-pounder gun. No. 1797. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.; 1,245 pounds weight.
- No. 12.—A Dahlgren 12-pounder gun. No. 1814. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.; 1,255 pounds weight.
- No. 13.—A Dahlgren howitzer, 12-pounder. No. 1828. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co., 1863; 1,245 pounds weight.
- No. 14.—A Dahlgren howitzer. No. 1858. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co., 1863; 1,225 pounds weight.
- No. 15.—A 12-pounder smooth-bore gun. No. 2058. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.
- No. 16.—A 12-pounder smooth-bore gun. No. 2118. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.
- No. 17.—A 12-pounder smooth-bore gun. No number. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.
- No. 18.—A 12-pounder smooth-bore gun. No. 2126. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.
- No. 19.—A 12-pounder smooth-bore gun. No. 2126. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.
- No. 20.—A 12-pounder smooth-bore gun. No. 2054. Manufactured by J. R. A. & Co.

A large amount of ammunition was obtained. Brevet Brigadier-General Abbot collected the heavy ordnance and ammunition, and has, it is presumed, made a report of the amount to the chief of artillery, Army of the Potomac.

It was with much pleasure that, in compliance with an invitation from the major-general commanding the corps, I was enabled to recommend the under-mentioned officers for promotion by brevet: Capt. Ed. J. Jones, Eleventh Massachusetts Battery; Capt. A. B. Twitchell, Seventh Maine Battery; Capt. Theo. Miller, Fourth New York Artillery; Capt. David F. Ritchie, C, First New York Artillery; First Lieut. William H. Rogers, First Connecticut Artillery; First Lieut. George E. Ketchum and Second Lieut. David B. Cooper, C, First New York Artillery; and also to make honorable mention of Bvt. Maj. Christian Wessner, Third New Jersey Battery; Capt. John B. Eaton, Twenty-seventh New York Battery; Capt. William McClelland, Battery B, First Pennsylvania Artillery; Bvt. Capt. Val. H. Stone, C and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery; First Lieut. John J. Teller, Twenty-seventh New York Battery; Second Lieut. Mason W. Page, Fifth Massachusetts Battery; Second Lieut. Theo. Haysman, Fourth New York Artillery, all of whom did excellent service with their commands in repulsing the assault on Fort Steadman and in the assault on Petersburg on the 2d day of April, 1865.

The following named men, who pre-eminently distinguished themselves in working the guns captured from the enemy, have also been recommended as deserving the medal of honor: Sergt. David Cole, Sergt. Gustavus A. Rice, Corpl. Samuel T. Mallet, and Private Hiram Webster, Battery C, First New York Artillery.

Among all who behaved admirably on this duty these men are mentioned by their commanding officers as having behaved with distinguished bravery and coolness; their guns were only partially covered, consequently were much exposed to the enemy's fire. Sergeant Cole distinguished himself by attending to the supply of ammunition, crossing the field several times under a hot fire. Sergt. G. A. Rice was wounded. Corpl. S. T. Mallet sighted and fired the first captured gun. Private H. Webster was wounded.

Considering the very important results obtained and the stubborn resistance of the enemy, the casualties in this command were very slight, the total number being 6 men killed and 1 commissioned officer and 20 men wounded. The slight loss under so heavy a fire may be accounted for from the fact that from long experience in the positions occupied the majority of the pieces were enabled to be kept under cover.

APPENDIX.

April 3, Petersburg being in our possession, preparations were immediately made to follow the retreating enemy, and the following batteries were selected to accompany this corps: Seventh Maine, Eleventh Massachusetts, D, Pennsylvania Volunteer Artillery, Ninth Massachusetts, and Third New Jersey Batteries. It not being considered that the other batteries would be required, they were sent with the Reserve Artillery of the army to City Point, Maj. Theo. Miller being placed temporarily in command of the whole. The Second Division being the leading division of the corps, two batteries, the Seventh Maine and Eleventh Massachusetts, were attached to it and accompanied it during the march, ready for any service that might be required. Though none of the batteries were called into action after the capture of Petersburg good use was made of the horses and men of the two batteries of the division in collecting the abandoned and captured enemy's guns.

It having been reported by Captain Twitchell, Seventh Maine Battery, who had arrived with his command at Farnville, that a number of abandoned guns were in that vicinity, Maj. R. B. Ricketts was sent to find and collect them. The total number collected and placed near the railway at Burkeville was 110.

This corps being extended along the whole of the line of railway between Petersburg and Farnville, a distance of sixty-nine miles, the batteries were necessarily a long distance apart; while the Seventh Maine Battery was at Farnville, the Eleventh Massachusetts was at Burkeville, the Ninth Massachusetts at Nottoway Court-House, Battery D, Pennsylvania Artillery, at Beasley's house, and the Third New Jersey some miles nearer to Petersburg.

Orders to that effect having been received the batteries (on the morning of April 20) commenced to march back to City Point, where they arrived in good order on the 23d. The commanding officer of the Ninth Massachusetts and Third New Jersey Batteries were then ordered to report to Brigadier-General Hays, who had relieved Major Miller in command of the Artillery Reserve, and the Nineteenth, Twenty-seventh, and Thirty-fourth New York Batteries were ordered to rejoin this corps, to which they originally belonged.

Transports having been provided the six batteries were embarked at City Point for Alexandria, where they arrived on the 28th of April and near to which city they are now in park.

In closing this report of the important part taken by the artillery under my charge in the memorable siege of Petersburg, it affords me pleasure to mention the efficient, cheerful, and harmonious manner in which the members of my staff performed their respective duties. The following officers composed it: Maj. R. B. Ricketts, First Pennsylvania Artillery, assistant to chief of artillery; Capt. Theodore Miller, Fourth New York Artillery, inspector of artillery; First Lieut. Thomas Hesley, Thirty-fourth New York Battery, acting assistant adjutant-general; First Lieut. George W. Booth, Eleventh Massachusetts Battery, acting ordnance officer; Capt. Harry Brownson, assistant quartermaster; Capt. Daniel S. Tompkins, Twenty-seventh Michigan Volunteers, acting commissary of subsistence; First Lieut. Seth N. Hedges, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, acting ordnance officer, in charge of ammunition train; Surg. William Ingalls, Fifty-ninth Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, surgeon-in-chief.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. C. TIDBALL.

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. J. D. BERTOLLETTI,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Ninth Army Corps.

(Same to Bvt. Maj. Gen. Henry J. Hunt, Chief of Artillery, Army of the Potomac.)

No. 176.

Report of Capt. Adelbert B. Twitchell, Seventh Battery Maine Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTH MAINE BATTERY,

Farmville, Va., April 12, 1865.

Report of operations of the Seventh Maine Battery, Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, from March 30 to April 12, 1865:

March 30, 1865, four of my guns were in position at Fort Sedgwick and two at Battery 21. Nothing unusual occurred at that point until evening of April 1. At 10 p. m. I received orders to open immediately and fired all my guns rapidly. For an hour, from 11 o'clock until 12 m., fired slowly, one gun in five minutes. About fifty mortar shells were thrown in and about the fort the early part of the evening, wounding some three of the infantry soldiers. At 4 a. m., April 2, at the signal from Fort Avery, all my guns opened, firing rapidly for fifteen minutes. Ceased firing for a time as the infantry was gathering for the charge in our front. The rebel line was carried just before the break of day. The enemy threw shell and canister quite rapidly for a few moments, but gave too high elevation, as nearly all the missiles passed over our works.

A little after light I received a request from Colonel Harriman, commanding a brigade of the First Division, to send emponcers to the line in front of Battery 21 to work the captured guns. Lieutenant Staples immediately volunteered, as also did all the men of his section (in Battery 21) and one detachment of men from Battery D, Pennsylvania Artillery.

Lieutenant Staples, with the three detachments, went over to the captured guns and assisted in getting them in position, but returned in about an hour and a half, as plenty of men were found to work the guns, nearly 100 having come over from our batteries in park and those guns stationed in the rear line. Frequent calls being made for ammunition I sent Private Frank S. Wade to the line occupied to ascertain the number and caliber of the captured guns. He reported eight in working order, six light 12-pounders and two 3-inch. Details of men were furnished me from the infantry stationed in Fort Sedgwick, and I sent over to the front line all the ammunition needed, the men taking the ammunition up the Jerusalem plank road and delivering it to Captain Ritchie, Battery C, First New York, who distributed it along the line. After the line was taken and it was light enough to see my guns were trained and opened upon the forts and redoubts in rear of the main rebel line, and I kept up almost a constant fire the entire day.

From Fort Sedgwick we observed two or three charges by the rebels during the day, and my guns sent shell and case-shot into their ranks with effect. About 8 a. m. I ordered that one 3-inch Parrott gun of Battery D, Pennsylvania Artillery, be taken from Battery 21 and placed on the left flank of my guns in Sedgwick, which, in connection with the left gun of my battery, could cover the left flank of Curtin's brigade, Patter's division.

These guns were well served and did good service during the day in checking the rebels, constantly threatening the left flank. My men worked without intermission during the entire day of April 2 in serving their guns and in receiving and sending ammunition to the line occupied by our troops.

Lieutenants Bundy and Thorp both volunteered to go over with their men to work the captured guns, but I was satisfied that a sufficient number of artillerymen had been sent over to work all the guns, and it was necessary to keep that point on our lines well manned. Besides, I believed my guns were doing good service in Sedgwick and Battery 21.

Though several officers and numbers of men were wounded in Sedgwick during the day I am happy to state that no casualties occurred in my command.

As near as I can judge I expended about 1,000 rounds of ammunition during the night of April 1 and the day of April 2. I cannot tell how many rounds were sent over to the front line. Monday, April 3, broke camp about noon and marched through Petersburg, via Fort Sedgwick (Fort Hell), on the Jerusalem plank road; marched about ten miles beyond Petersburg and went into camp about midnight. Starting at 8 a. m. Tuesday, the 4th, marched about five miles and halted until 4.30 p. m., and encamped not far from Saw Mill Station; marched about fifteen miles. Wednesday, the 5th, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 9 p. m., marched about twenty-two miles, crossing the railroad frequently, and encamped for the night at Wellville Station. Thursday, 6th, left park about 6.30 a. m., and marched all day and until 10 p. m., when we arrived at Burkeville and went into park, having marched about twenty miles. On our way passed through the village of Nottoway Court-House, eight miles from Burkeville. Friday, 7th, moved our park about one-half mile, where we remained until Sunday, 9th, when, at 2.30 p. m., we started on the road to Farmville, marched about twelve miles and parked for the night. Monday, the 10th, resumed the march at 7 a. m. and arrived at Farmville at 9 a. m., having marched six miles.

Wednesday, the 5th, I reported with my battery to Brigadier-General Curtin, commanding First Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, and have been with the brigade since.

Respectfully submitted.

A. B. TWITCHELL,
Captain, Commanding Seventh Maine Battery.

No. 177.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Charles A. Phillips, Battery B, Massachusetts Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS BATTERY B, MASSACHUSETTS ARTILLERY,
April 5, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this battery since the 30th of March:

The guns of the battery were in Fort Alexander Hays and remained there until the 3d of April. In the forenoon of the 2d of April, in compliance with orders from General Tidball, I sent Second Lieut. M. W. Page, with two detachments of cannoneers, to Fort Sedgwick, and from there they were ordered into the rebel battery, No. 27, across the Jerusalem plank road. This battery had been garrisoned by Battery B, Sumter Artillery, Georgia Volunteers, with six light 12-pounders. Besides the men from my battery, there were detachments from Battery C, First New York Artillery; B, First Pennsylvania Artillery, and Twenty-seventh New York Battery. The gorge of the battery being open, the men were exposed to a very severe fire from sharpshooters and from one 8-inch columbiad and two 8-inch siege howitzers in Fort Virginia, about 600 yards in our front, as well as from several pieces of light artillery. These pieces were mostly silenced by noon. Lieutenant Page was wounded and obliged to leave the field about noon. We kept up a constant and apparently successful fire until night.

The behavior of the officers and men in the battery was excellent. I make especial mention of Privates Joseph Burns and Thomas Jones. These two men were sent up with dinner for men at the guns. Upon reaching the front they volunteered for a charge upon Fort Mahone, and entered it among the first. They afterward returned to Battery 27 and helped work the guns. Private Joseph Burns was here severely wounded in the arm.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. A. PHILLIPS,

Brevet Major, Comdg. Battery B, Massachusetts Artillery.

Lieutenant HEASLEY,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Artillery Brig., Ninth Army Corps.

No. 178.

Report of Capt. Richard S. Milton, Ninth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH MASSACHUSETTS BATTERY,
April 9, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: Agreeable to instructions received, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this command during the action before Petersburg, April 1 and 2:

Five guns of my battery were in position at Fort Rice, between the Norfolk railroad and the Jerusalem plank road, and one at Battery 18 on the Norfolk railroad. During the night of the 1st instant became engaged about 11 p. m., on the enemy's line, at 1,000 yards distance, to the right and left of Fort Rice. At 12 m. the firing slackening on the right I ceased firing. Firing was again resumed about 6 a. m. of the 2d instant upon the enemy's batteries, which had an enfilading fire upon the lines taken by our troops. The firing was kept up during the greater portion of the day with seeming good effect, as the enemy's fire gradually slackened and finally ceased.

During the action 149 rounds of ammunition were expended.

No casualties were experienced in the command.

During the operations of the two days sixty men of my battery were detailed as pioneers to remove obstacles in front of batteries advancing into the enemy's lines. The detail was under the immediate command of the commanding officer of the Twenty-seventh New York Battery.

Respectfully submitted.

R. S. MILTON,

Captain Ninth Massachusetts Battery.

Lieutenant HEASLEY,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brig., Ninth Army Corps.

---

No. 179.

Report of Capt. Edward J. Jones, Eleventh Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS ELEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS LIGHT BATTERY,

In the Field, at Burkeville Station, Va., April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In response to General Orders, No. 12, I have the honor to report that my command occupied Fort Friend, and the ground on its right and left flanks, covering a portion of our lines in front of Petersburg, during the period referred to in said order, i. e., 30th March ultimo to 3d April, day of the evacuation of Petersburg, and from 9 o'clock on the evening of the 30th ultimo to the morning of the 3d instant, when we were ordered forward with the Second Division. My command were at their posts ready for action, but no favorable opportunity presented itself for us to engage the enemy.

I have the honor to be, captain, your obedient servant,

EDWARD J. JONES,

Captain Eleventh Massachusetts Light Battery.

Capt. CHARLES E. MALLAM,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Artillery Brig., Ninth Army Corps.

---

No. 180.

Report of Capt. Joseph W. B. Wright, Fourteenth Battery Massachusetts Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTEENTH MASSACHUSETTS BATTERY,

Near City Point, Va., April 5, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to make the following report of operations of this command from March 31, 1865, to date:

The right section of this command was in position in Battery 10, the left section in Battery 14. On the night of April 1 both sections commenced action at 11 o'clock and continued during the night. During the 2d of April the right section continued in action, by direction of Maj. T. Miller, inspector of artillery, Ninth Army Corps, to prevent the enemy moving troops from our right to the left; was also engaged in supporting a charge made by the Seventeenth Michigan Regiment. The left section was engaged in shelling the Mound Fort, and whenever in sight the enemy's columns in their attempts to retake the captured works in front of Fort Hell, occasionally throwing shells into Petersburg. During the night of April 1 the battery threw 230 shells into the enemy's lines, and on the 2d, 245 shells. Both sections of battery came out of positions during the forenoon of 3d, to camp near Meade's Station.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. B. WRIGHT,

Captain, Commanding Fourteenth Massachusetts Battery.

Lieut. T. HEASLEY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Artillery Brigade.

No. 181.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Christian Woerner, Third Battery New Jersey Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD NEW JERSEY BATTERY,

Petersburg, Va., April 5, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the operations of my battery from March 30 to the evacuation of Petersburg as follows:

On March 30 four guns of my battery were in position in Fort Haskell, and two in reserve in the caisson camp; nothing worthy of remark has occurred on that day about Fort Haskell. On the 1st instant, according to directions received, I opened and kept up a steady fire from the four guns in Fort Haskell on the enemy's works on Cemetery and Spring Hills from 11.30 p. m. until 2 a. m. of 2d instant, and from 4 to 9 a. m. of the 2d instant; not a single shot was fired from the enemy's works in response. From 1 to 5 p. m. of 2d instant I kept up fire against a mortar battery of the enemy near Fort Mahone, who were shelling the forts captured by our troops. From 5 p. m., April 2, to the evacuation of this town nothing worthy of record has occurred in Fort Haskell. The two guns of my battery in camp were held in reserve near the Avery house from the night of the 1st till the morning of the 3d of April, prepared for any service.

No casualties have occurred during the above mentioned time in my battery, and the expenditure of ammunition during the same time was as follows: 74 rounds of solid shot; 215 rounds of spherical case; 9 rounds of shell.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHRISTIAN WOERNER,

Brevet-Major U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Lieut. THOMAS HEASLEY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 182.

Report of Capt. David P. Ritchie, Battery C, First New York Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS BATTERY C, FIRST NEW YORK ARTILLERY,

April 5, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular dated headquarters Artillery Brigade, Ninth Corps, April 4, 1865, I have the honor to transmit the following report of the part taken by my battery in the action resulting in the capture of Petersburg, including the time between the 30th ultimo and the morning of the 3d instant:

My battery occupied the small work in rear of Fort Sedgwick, and up to the morning of the 2d my men had been constantly employed in repairing the embrasures, ramps, platforms, &c., the fort being almost useless when I entered it. At about 5 o'clock on the morning of the 2d instant I received an order from Brevet Major Ricketts to take my cannoners into the rebel works, which had then just been captured, and man such rebel guns as I might find there. I immediately marched my four detachments of cannoners at double-quick through one of the front embrasures of Fort Sedgwick, across the plain directly up the Jerusalem road to the rebel fort, immediately in front of Fort Sedgwick, and which was numbered by the enemy, Battery 27. I found in this work five 12-pounder rebel guns, three iron and two brass, one of the former, and one of the latter were partially disabled, but in the course of the day both were put in working order. The remaining three were at once manned and worked with good effect on the enemy's line. There were between 200 and 300 rounds of ammunition in the fort, all of which I used on the enemy's batteries.

The guns were much exposed to the enemy's fire, but the men behaved splendidly, working the guns with great accuracy and rapidity, and finally silencing the enemy's battery in Fort Virginia which consisted of two 8-inch siege guns. This battery was not more than 500 yards distant, and annoyed us severely with grape, during the early part of the day.

Soon after taking possession of the rebel guns the enemy brought seven pieces of light artillery into position on different parts of his rear line. These together with a rifle battery about 900 yards to the right opened on us to cover a rebel charge, which was partially successful. We were also under a heavy mortar fire all day. After expending nearly all the rebel ammunition in the fort I was supplied by the way of Fort Sedgwick, and was at no time entirely out, although obliged several times to cease firing so as not to exhaust the supply. It was very difficult to get ammunition up to the work, as the space intervening between Fort Sedgwick and the captured fort was covered by the enemy's sharpshooters and skirmishers, and was also swept by the enemy's artillery. Most of the ammunition had to be brought up one or two rounds at a time. In the course of the fight one of the guns was disabled by the breaking of the cap squares, another was burst open at the re-enforce, apparently from a defect in the manufacture. At no time during the fight were there less than three guns in working order, and most of the time there were five.

The fight was a most exhausting one, the men having been at their posts nearly all of the previous night and without anything to eat till near noon, when I had coffee brought up for them. It was necessary to maintain a constant fire, as the enemy improved every cessation to open on us with their batteries and musketry, yet the cannoners labored at their pieces even after they were almost exhausted. The guns were only partially covered by a small traverse, which sheltered the men when not firing.

The casualties in my battery during the day amounted to but four, two killed and two wounded.

The general conduct of my officers and men was most praiseworthy. When ordered to cross the plain to the enemy's work in the morning not one faltered, even some of the infantry whom their officers were vainly endeavoring to urge forward, took courage when they saw the artillerymen charging past them with nothing but hand spikes and rammer staves and jumped up and went forward.

I cannot do justice without mentioning the names of my officers, First Lieut. George E. Kotehum and Second Lieut. David B. Cooper. Both behaved with coolness and gallantry and performed excellent service.

My First Sergt. David Cole displayed great coolness and courage by attending to the supply of ammunition, crossing the field several times under a hot fire. Other enlisted men who particularly distinguished themselves were Sergt. Gustavus A. Rice (wounded), Corpls. Samuel T. Mallet (who sighted and fired the first gun), George S. Bennett, and Jacob S. Cole; Privates Cleary, Mooney, Webster (wounded), and Thompson. Quite a number of my cannoners were new men, but soon became veterans in conduct.

During the day I was reinforced by ten men with a sergeant and corporal, from Battery B, First Pennsylvania, under charge of First Lieutenant Rice; about a dozen men with a sergeant and one or two corporals from the Twenty-seventh New York Battery, under First Lieutenant Toller, and two detachments with their non-commissioned officers, under charge of Second Lieutenant Pago, from the Fifth Massachusetts Battery. Captain McClelland, of B, First Pennsylvania, was present part of the day and rendered good service. Captain McClelland and Lieutenant Pago were slightly wounded.

To all the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of Battery B, First Pennsylvania, Twenty-seventh New York Independent Battery, and the Fifth Massachusetts Battery, who assisted to work the guns in the rebel fort, too much praise can scarcely be awarded. I have mentioned them in the order in which they came to the fort, and I would further mention particular instances of gallantry and coolness, but will leave this for the officers of the respective batteries.

Between 3 and 4 p. m. the rebels made a charge and nearly succeeded in recapturing the fort, on account of the inexcusable retreat of quite a large number of the infantry which occupied the fort. The infantry for a short time prevented the working of the guns, by running over the cannoners at their posts, but enough stuck to their guns to soon get them working again, and the panic was finally checked, but not till after an exhibition of the most disgraceful cowardice and inefficiency on the part of many of the officers of the one-year regiments. There appeared to be a total lack of discipline in some of the regiments. It is my opinion that any time during the forenoon the enemy could have been driven out of the second line of works by a vigorous charge.

The arrival of General Collis' brigade and their good conduct in charging up to the fort at the time of the panic contributed to restore the courage of our troops and to check the enemy's advance.

It is impossible to give the exact number of rounds fired from the captured guns during the day, but I have set the approximate figure at 1,800 rounds.

About 4 p. m. Bvt. Maj. C. A. Phillips, Fifth Massachusetts Battery, came up to the fort and by virtue of his rank assumed command, remaining until the morning of the 3d instant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. F. RITCHIE,

Captain, First New York Artillery, Commanding Battery C.

Lieut. THOMAS HEASLEY, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 183.

Report of Capt. Angell Matthewson, Battery E, First New York Light Artillery.

HDQRS. BATTERY E, FIRST NEW YORK ARTILLERY,
April 22, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by my battery in the recent operations:

During the day of the 29th ultimo the battery lay on a hill to the left and rear of Fort Stedman until about 11 p. m., when Lieutenant Barse, commanding in my absence, received an order from Major-General Ord's chief of staff to immediately place one piece in Battery No. 13, to the left of Fort Haskell, the firing being very heavy from both sides at the time. This gun remained until after daylight on the morning of the 30th, when it was withdrawn. During the engagement of the previous evening Private William D. Gilmore was severely wounded in the right leg and left foot by the enemy's shell. About 10 o'clock on the evening of the 30th one section of the battery was placed in Battery No. 13, by order of General Tidball, commanding artillery of the Ninth Corps, where said section remained until the afternoon of the 3d instant, engaging the enemy during the night of the 1st and the day of the 2d instant. About 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the 3d instant this section was withdrawn by order of General Tidball and the battery got in readiness to move to City Point, where it arrived about 9 p. m.

Résumé.—Casualties: Private William D. Gilmore, wounded, March 29, 1865, in front of Petersburg, Battery No. 13.

Ammunition expended: Solid shot, 10; shell, 8; case shot, 20. Total, 47 rounds.

I am, lieutenant, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ANGELL MATTHEWSON,

Captain, First New York Artillery, Commanding Battery E.

Lieut. FORD. MORRIS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Artillery Brigade.

No. 184.

Report of Lieut. George H. Barse, Battery E, First New York Light Artillery.

HDQRS. BATTERY E, FIRST NEW YORK ARTILLERY,
April 6, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with circular from headquarters Artillery Reserve, Army of the Potomac, dated April 5, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report:

At 10 o'clock on the night of the 30th ultimo I received an order from Brevet Brigadier-General Tidball to place a section of my battery in Battery No. 13. Upon the receipt of the order I directed Second Lieut. C. Humphreys to take the right section and proceed to Battery No. 13, which order was promptly executed. During the night of the 1st instant it took an active part in the heavy cannonading in front of Petersburg, and was engaged during the day following. My left section was not engaged during the three days. On the afternoon of the 3d instant I was ordered to withdraw my guns from the works and prepare to move to City Point, Va.

The only casualty in the battery was one man severely wounded.

I am, lieutenant, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. H. BARSE,

First Lieutenant, First New York Artillery, Comdg. Battery B.

Lieut. W. M. HAYCOCK,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Artillery Reserve.

No. 185.

Report of Capt. Samuel A. McClellan, Battery G, First New York Light Artillery.

HQRS. LIGHT BATTERY G, FIRST NEW YORK ARTILLERY,
City Point, Va., April 7, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In accordance with circular, headquarters Artillery Reserve, Army of the Potomac, April 5, 1865, I have the honor to make the following report:

About a quarter before 10 p. m. Saturday, April 1, 1865, I received orders from General J. C. Tidball, chief of artillery, Ninth Army Corps, to report in person at his headquarters. On arriving there I was ordered, upon hearing the report of a signal gun to be fired from Fort Avery about 10 o'clock, to open on the enemy with the two sections of the battery in Fort Morten, and also send the section which I had in park, under the command of a lieutenant, to a position on a rise of ground between the Avery house and the railroad bridge. I sent Lieutenant Millot with the section to the Avery house, and went myself to Fort Morten, opening in accordance with the above order, the enemy soon replying, principally with their mortar batteries, many of their shells bursting in the fort. I kept up a continuous fire until about 1 a. m. April 2, when I was ordered by Major Ricketts, assistant chief of artillery, Ninth Army Corps, to cease firing, and to open again as vigorously as possible at 4 a. m. About 3.30 a. m. Lieutenant Hensley, acting assistant adjutant-general, Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, ordered me to reserve my fire until our infantry had gained all the advantage they could by a charge to be made by them at 4 a. m. in front of Fort Sedgwick, and then to open with all the guns I could bring to bear upon the enemy's works. About 4.30 a. m. I observed the enemy open with the guns in my front on our troops in front of Fort Sedgwick, who had charged the enemy's works and taken them. I immediately opened upon them with all the guns I could bring to bear, including the 32-pounders in the fort, when they again opened a very heavy fire upon us with their mortars, which was replied to by the 10-inch mortar battery in Fort Morten. I kept up an incessant fire until about 8.30 a. m., when the enemy slackened theirs to an occasional shot, and I changed mine further to the left, where the enemy was throwing shell and canister into our troops. At this time I received orders from General Tidball to send two detachments of cannoneers, in charge of a lieutenant, to report to Captain Twitchell, in Fort Sedgwick, to work rebel guns. I kept up my fire upon the enemy's works during the day until about 6 p. m.

The enemy's fire was very accurate, many of their shells bursting in the fort, but fortunately without killing or wounding a man. There was one shell (eight-inch) that did not burst; it struck in the middle of a gun detachment, burying itself in the ground. Had it burst it must have killed or wounded ten or twelve men, as they were standing very close together.

Officers and men deserve great credit for their steadiness and coolness during the engagement. I expended during the engagement 410 rounds of ammunition.

Respectfully, yours,

S. A. McCLELLAN,

Captain, First New York Artillery, Commanding Battery.

Lieut. W. M. HAYCOCK,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Artillery Reserve.

No. 186.

Report of Bvt. Maj. George Breck, Battery L, First New York Light Artillery.

HQRS. BATTERY L, FIRST NEW YORK ARTILLERY,

April 22, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with instructions, I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command since its separation from the Fifth Army Corps, in the actions before Petersburg:

On the 29th of March my battery, under command of Lieut. D. M. Perine, was ordered to report to Bvt. Maj. C. A. Phillips, commanding the batteries detached from the Fifth Army Corps. The battery moved into position on the line occupied by the Ninth Army Corps in front of the Avery house, in rear and on the left of Fort Morton. It remained in this position inactive till the morning of April 2, at which time an assault was made upon the enemy's works, resulting in the capture of four forts, a number of guns, and prisoners. The four gun detachments under command of Lieutenant Deitz (during the temporary absence of Lieutenant Perine) were ordered to advance and work the guns abandoned by the enemy. This was promptly done, the men being led on a double-quick, exposed to a severe fire of musketry and artillery which the enemy was pouring into the captured works from forts on either flank and in rear of them. Arriving at one of the forts the guns were found manned by others who had preceded the men of Battery L for the same purpose. They then advanced to another of the captured works, found one gun, but were unable to work it in consequence of the gun implements being destroyed. They then proceeded to another and found that occupied and manned also. After remaining awhile in this work and finding the guns efficiently served Lieutenant Deitz returned with the men to the battery, which, under command of Lieutenant Perine, engaged the enemy whose guns were still directed at our forces in the line of captured works. A desultory firing was kept up till sunset with apparent good effect, as the enemy's artillery was silenced whenever my battery engaged him. During the night Petersburg was evacuated, and on the following day my command fell back into camp. On the 6th of April I was ordered to proceed to City Point and encamp.

Number of rounds expended in action, 115; casualties, none.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. BRECK,

Bvt. Major, Commanding Battery L, First New York Artillery.

Lieut. FORD MORRIS,

Acty. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brig., Fifth Army Corps.

No. 187.

Report of Capt. Edward W. Rogers, Nineteenth Battery New York Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS NINETEENTH NEW YORK BATTERY,
May 6, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of the Nineteenth New York Battery from March 30 until the capture of Petersburg:

On March 30 four guns of the battery were in Fort Stedman and two in reserve. The section in reserve was not employed during the time mentioned. During the days and nights of March 30 and 31 the cannoners were kept at their posts almost without intermission, opening fire upon the enemy at different times as circumstances dictated. On the night of April 1, at about 11 o'clock, I opened my guns on the enemy's lines by direction of the general commanding Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps, keeping up a steady fire for some time. During the entire night we kept on the alert and fired at intervals. Before daylight on the morning of the 3d instant it was discovered that the enemy had evacuated his works during the night.

There were no casualties in my battery during these operations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. W. ROGERS,

Captain, Commanding Nineteenth New York Battery.

Capt. CHARLES E. MALLAM,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 188.

Report of Capt. John B. Eaton, Twenty-seventh Battery New York Light Artillery.

HDQRS. TWENTY-SEVENTH NEW YORK BATTERY,
Near Fort Davis, April 4, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: In compliance with circular just received, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of my battery during the engagement of the 2d instant, which resulted in the evacuation of Petersburg:

On the evening of April 1 the right and left sections of my battery, commanded by First Lieutenants Moore and Teller, were in Fort Davis, the center section, under Second Lieutenant Phillips, was in park. On that evening I was directed by Brevet Brigadier-General Tidball to be prepared, in case the attack contemplated to be made on the following morning succeeded, to cut a passage through our works and advance Lieutenant Phillips' section in front of the line to support and follow up the advantage that might be gained. A working party from the Ninth Massachusetts Battery having been furnished me I had the section under cover just in the rear of Battery No. 21, with the working party ready to clear a passage for it, soon after the opening of the cannonade which immediately preceded the assault. The moment I perceived that the charge had been successful I opened a road through the parapet and abatis on the right of Battery No. 20, and Lieutenant

Phillips brought out his guns at a trot, going into position some distance in front of the abatis in fine style about 5 a. m. We were at once subjected to a fire of musketry as well as that from several of the enemy's batteries, which latter, however, were rendered of comparatively little effect by the fire to which we subjected them.

In the meantime Lieutenant Teller had volunteered with two gun detachments to cross over to the rebel Battery No. 27 (formerly known to us as Fort Mahone), and assist in working the captured guns, while Lieutenant Moore remained in command of the four guns in Fort Davis. Later in the day Lieutenant Moore advanced two pieces outside the fort down the Jerusalem plank road, and performed efficient service in checking the fire of a rebel battery which was firing into our troops in Battery 27. One of his men was slightly wounded.

Lieutenant Teller remained with his men in Battery 27 until late in the afternoon. During a part of the day they were engaged in a hand to hand fight with the rebels, and one man was shot through the face. The remainder of the party returned to our line in safety, when their services were no longer required. I remained during the day with the section of Lieutenant Phillips in front of the line.

The guns and men were exposed to the fire of the enemy without the slightest protection, but no casualties occurred, and I withdrew the pieces within the abatis at 5.30 p. m. by direction of General Tidball.

My officers all showed great gallantry and coolness. Lieutenant Teller very narrowly escaped death from a shell, and both Messrs. Moore and Phillips had several narrow escapes from injury.

I have the pleasure of reporting no casualties except the two above mentioned.

I remain, lieutenant, very respectfully,

JNO. B. EATON,

Captain, Commanding Twenty-seventh New York Battery.

Lieut. THOMAS HEASLEY,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 189.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Jacob Roemer, Thirty-fourth Battery New York Light Artillery.

HQDQS. THIRTY-FOURTH NEW YORK INDEPENDENT BATTY.,

City Point, Va., April 4, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor, in accordance with circular received April 4, 1865, to report the part taken by this command in the engagements of April 1, 2, and 3, before Petersburg, Va.:

April 1, in position four pieces in Fort McGilvery, and left section in Battery No. 5. Fort McGilvery had been heavily attacked during the night of March 31. It was garrisoned by the Forty-sixth New York Veteran Volunteer Infantry Regiment, four pieces Thirty-fourth New York Independent Veteran Volunteer Battery, and one section Fifth U. S. Artillery, light 12-pounders. Fired 405 rounds, one man wounded (Corporal Fuller). Direction of fire at the enemy's line with good effect. April 2, during the day at Cemetery Hill, where the enemy's batteries were playing on our troops, where I tried my utmost to disturb their artillery fire on our line, and I also directed some of my fire toward the city on the burning warehouses during the night of the 2d, to assist our troops to advance toward the city, which they successfully accomplished by drawing the enemy's fire.

Fired eighty-eight rounds from Fort McTillyery. Fired the last shot at 3.40 a. m. April 3, 1865. One man wounded (Corporal Geiffin).

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JACOB ROEMER,

Bvt. Maj., Comdg. Thirty-fourth New York Independent Battery.

Lieutenant HEASLEY,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Artillery Brig., Ninth Army Corps.

No. 190.

Report of Capt. William McClelland, Battery B, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery.

SEABOARD POINT, VA., April 7, 1865.

Report of operations of Battery B, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, in front of Petersburg, Va., on April 1, 2, and 3, 1865.

First. Position of the battery, &c.: Two sections in Fort Davis in charge of Lieutenants Rice and Pennypacker, and one section in Battery 22, in charge of Captain McClelland; Lieutenant Gardner in charge of caissons, camp, &c., and Lieutenant Geary on leave of absence.

April 1, 10 p. m., I received orders to report in person at Artillery Brigade, Ninth Army Corps headquarters, there receiving orders from General Tidball, chief of artillery, Ninth Army Corps, to open fire on the enemy's works at a given signal, which was given about fifteen minutes subsequently. A moderate fire was kept up for about an hour from the two guns at Battery 22, when orders were received to cease firing until 4 o'clock next morning, at which time firing was resumed from the two guns at Battery No. 22 and three in Fort Davis, which was chiefly directed on Fort Mahone. At about 7 a. m., at the request of a staff officer, whose name I did not learn, I sent Lieutenant Rice with two gun detachments to assist in working the guns in the fort on the Jerusalem plank road, captured by our advance. I left the section at Battery No. 22 in charge of sergeant and accompanied Lieutenant Rice. On the way between the picket lines our man, Sergeant Swisher, was wounded by a piece of shell. I came back to Fort Sedgwick twice, the first time to hurry up ammunition and the last time to remove a section from Fort Davis to Fort Wright, by order of General Tidball, Lieutenant Pennypacker in charge. A sergeant was placed in charge of the two remaining guns in Fort Davis, firing occasionally on account of the fires between Fort Davis and the works not yet in our possession. In a charge made by the enemy during the afternoon to recapture their lost line Corporal Gilkey was killed whilst sighting one of the pieces and Sergeant Gridle so severely wounded that he died a short time after. A short time after Corporal Summers, while sighting his gun in Fort Wright, was severely wounded by a piece of shell. I make mention of these non-commissioned officers on account of the bravery displayed by them, as well as all the detachments from the several batteries manning the guns, who should receive the credit of holding that portion of the line and preventing its recapture, the infantry support falling back or getting into the ditch in front of the fort.

It affords me great pleasure to report the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Rice. He never for a moment left his post, at times greatly exposing himself in attempting to rally the infantry and their officers.

Major Phillips, Fifth Massachusetts Battery, Captain Ritelle, First New York, and Lieutenant Rice advanced one piece with a prolonge beyond the line and fired several rounds before our lines were advanced.

The next morning (3d) received orders from General Tidball for the battery to be withdrawn and parked.

About 1,200 rounds of ammunition were fired, exclusive of what was fired from the captured guns.

W. MCCLLELLAND,

Captain, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, Comdg. Battery B.

---

No. 191.

Report of Capt. Samuel H. Rhoads, Battery D, Pennsylvania Light Artillery.

HQRS. BATTERY D, PENNSYLVANIA VOL. ARTILLERY,

April 5, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations from March 30 to morning of April 3:

Nothing of importance occurred on the 30th and 31st ultimo. About 11.30 p. m. on the 1st instant opened fire from all the guns of the battery, and continued until about 100 rounds were expended, then ceased until our forces charged the enemy's works, on the morning of the 2d instant, when all the guns opened. After daylight I took the three guns out of Fort Meikel and placed them in rear of the infantry quarters, on the left of the fort, and kept on firing, with short intermissions, until dark. The fire of these three guns was directed principally upon the enemy's batteries, from in front of Fort Rice to Cemetery Hill, and upon their front line and covered ways, from which their infantry fired between these points. The fire of the piece in Fort Rice was directed upon the same points. The section in Battery 21, in charge of Lieutenant Sailor, was fired from that work until 9 a. m., when one piece was moved to Fort Sedgwick. Both these guns were worked, with short intermissions, all day.

The three guns in Fort Meikel fired 628 rounds during the night of the 1st, and on the 2d instant the gun in Fort Rice fired 37 rounds, and the section in and near Fort Sedgwick expended, as near as possible to ascertain, 250 to 300 rounds.

About daylight on the 2d a detail of seven men, in charge of a gunner, was sent to one of the captured forts to assist in working the guns captured from the enemy. After being there about one hour the detail returned to Battery 21. One of the captured guns, in charge of the corporal and manned by infantry, fired about sixty rounds. The remainder of the detail were distributed among other guns to assist the infantry. About noon another detachment was sent to work the guns in a fort our forces attempted to capture. The men went over to the charging force, but, as they failed to capture the work, the men returned to the section after the failure.

I am, lieutenant, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL H. RHOADS,

Captain, Commanding Battery D, Pennsylvania Vol. Artillery.

Lieut. THOMAS HEASLEY, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

69 R R--VOL XLVI, PT I

No. 192.

*Report of Lieut. Valentine H. Stone, Batteries C and I, Fifth U. S. Artillery.*CAMP OF BATTERIES C AND I, FIFTH U. S. ARTILLERY,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 1, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with circular received this day from headquarters Artillery Brigade, Ninth Corps, I have the honor to report that on the 1st instant my battery was stationed, one section in Fort McGilvery and one in Battery No. 9. At 10.30 p. m. I received a circular requiring the battery commanders in the brigade to report at once in person to the chief of artillery, Ninth Corps. Upon doing so I was advised by the general commanding the brigade to go at once to my battery and open fire upon the enemy's line. I did so, commencing to fire at 11 p. m. I continued firing until 2 a. m. on the 2d instant; the enemy's fire moderately heavy, but showing evidently that they did not have the same amount of artillery in my front that they had on the 25th ultimo. At 3.15 a. m. the 2d instant I received an order from chief of artillery, Ninth Corps, to be in readiness to open fire at 4 a. m., to wait for the signal to be given by the firing from Fort Avery. Promptly at the time mentioned above the battery opened and fired until sometime after daylight, the artillery fire from the enemy being much heavier than during the night. During nearly the entire day the battery, in pursuance of orders, kept slowly and deliberately firing upon the enemy, firing about once in every five minutes, but we were unable during the [day] to get any response whatever from the enemy, one or two shots from a mortar towards sundown being all the artillery fired, and a stray shot or two from the sharpshooters once in a great while being all the musketry return they would make.

At 3.30 a. m. on the 3d instant I could see from Fort McGilvery (a bright fire being at that time burning in Petersburg) a body of men going over the breast-works of a fort of the enemy's in my front. Thinking it might be the enemy evacuating I opened on them with spherical case, but upon my firing one round they called back to us, "don't fire! don't fire!" I at once concluded that it must be our picket-line advancing. I requested permission of Brevet Colonel Ely, commanding the brigade of infantry occupying that portion of our line, if he advanced his brigade, to advance with one section of my battery at the same time. He granted my request. I immediately sent an orderly to my caisson camp to bring up the limbers of the guns. After a short time I dispatched another orderly. Becoming impatient at the delay I started for my camp, it being about one mile distant. Upon arriving there I found my limbers about ready to start; I brought them to the front at a gallop. Upon limbering up the section in Fort McGilvery (leaving the remaining section and the caissons in reserve in charge of Lieutenant Huysman) I proceeded up the road between Fort McGilvery and Battery 9, a small pioneer party cutting off a little of the top of the breast-works sufficient to enable me to get over. Under the circumstances I moved to the front in the direction of Petersburg in as rapid a manner as possible, arriving inside of the city at 4.15 a. m. When I got to the center of the city I found a portion of Brevet Colonel Ely's brigade awaiting me. Advancing a square farther I found a brigade of the Sixth Corps, commanded by Brevet Brigadier-General Hamblin, coming down the other end of the street. I galloped rapidly forward turning the corner of the street immediately in front of the brigade of the Sixth Corps, thus bringing them in rear of the advance of the Ninth Corps. I then posted my section and started forward with my orderly to see if I could cross the bridge over the Appomattox. When within a hundred yards of it I saw five rebel infantry with muskets (a picket-guard that was too late to cross as the bridge was burning). I charged upon them, calling on them to surrender; they did so, the five of them, laying down their muskets after a little hesitation, surrendered to myself and orderly, our arms consisting of my saber. We found the bridge too far gone to save. I was fired upon by some persons from a house close by. The horse of my orderly was shot.

I had not gone the length of a square before I picked up fourteen more prisoners, all of whom I turned over to an infantry officer who came up. I then with a small party of infantry charged upon the house from which the shots came, but I was unable to find the man who fired. I took possession of the house, which was a cotton factory containing some one hundred and forty bales of spun yarn and fifty bales of cotton. Placing a guard over the premises I then reported my section to General Willcox, commanding the artillery. He ordered me to bring up the whole of my battery, and baggage, and afterward to go into camp near Colonel Ely's brigade on the Cox road about one mile from Petersburg, where I remain at present. There was no other artillery except my battery in Petersburg before 10 a. m.

I would take this opportunity of mentioning Lieut. C. C. MacConnell, Fifth U. S. Artillery. He was in charge of the section in Fort McHilvery. I was so short of horses in the battery that I could not at the time permit him one to ride. He double-quickened it on foot into the city. During the engagements of the past few days he has acted with great coolness, bravery, and gallantry, and I think that he has fairly earned a brevet for his conduct upon this occasion, to say nothing of his previous services.

Lieut. Theo. Haysman, Fourth New York Artillery, temporarily attached to the battery, did excellent service.

Bugler Andrew R. Muller, Battery C, Fifth U. S. Artillery, deserves great credit for the extraordinary coolness and bravery shown by him while carrying orders for me, passing to and fro from the front repeatedly under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry.

Sergeants Martin Malloy and Patrick Doherty, Battery I, Fifth U. S. Artillery, deserve credit for the skill with which they managed their guns and for the correctness of their firing.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

VAL. H. STONE,

First Lieutenant, Fifth U. S. Artillery, Comdg. Battery C and I.

ACTG. ASST. ADJT. GEN., ARTILLERY BRIGADE, NINTH CORPS.

No. 193.

Report of Brig. Gen. Charles H. T. Collis, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Independent Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS INDEPENDENT BRIGADE,

April 19, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that in obedience to orders from headquarters, Army of the Potomac, my command moved from City Point to Meade's Station on the morning of the 2d of April, arriving at that point at 1 p. m., where I met it, and relieved Colonel Tiffin, who was in command during my absence. It consisted of four regiments of infantry, as follows: Sixty-eighth and One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Twentieth New York State Militia, and Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers. From Meade's Station I moved to the Avery house and reported to Major-General Parke, whom I found in Fort Rice. I was ordered by General Parke to move to Fort Sedgewick and report to General Griffin. Arriving at Fort Sedgewick at 2 p. m. I was ordered by General Griffin to move my command as judiciously as possible into the front line held by his troops, and avail myself of the first opportunity to force the line the enemy then held. While forming my brigade in the picket-line in front of Fort Sedgewick I discovered that some of our troops on our right of Fort Mahone were breaking and falling back in confusion under a heavy fire of musketry. I immediately charged with my command and succeeded, under a fierce artillery and musketry fire, in driving back the enemy and reoccupying the line. Fort Mahone was still held by the enemy and I made dispositions to pass to its rear and assault it in reverse. This proposition I communicated in writing to General Griffin, and asked that a brigade might be ordered to support me. At about 4.30 p. m. I received permission in writing from General Griffin to make the assault and was informed that Handlin's brigade, of the Sixth Corps, was moving up to my support, and that the Two hundred and eighth and Two hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Regiments would also support me.

Having completed my arrangements and being about to move forward I received a communication from General Griffin directing me not to assault, as upon consultation it was deemed imprudent at present, but to strengthen my left and hold fast to what I had. I immediately countermanded the orders for assault and occupied my time during the remainder of the day in throwing up an intrenched line on my left flank, from Fort Mahone towards Fort Sedgewick. This work was performed by the Sixty-first Massachusetts (Colonel Walcott), under a severe fire from the sharpshooters in Fort Mahone.

At 2 a. m. on 3d instant the enemy's fire having ceased and a staff officer from General Hartman's headquarters (I believe) having informed me that desertors gave information of the evacuation of the line, I assaulted Fort Mahone, but found it deserted. I at once moved forward toward Petersburg in line of battle, the Zoaves being deployed as skirmishers, and notified General Parke of my movements, requesting that the troops on my right and left be directed not to fire upon my troops. At 4 a. m. I received an order from General Parke not to be too hasty, as a general advance was ordered for 5 a. m. I then halted until daylight, at which time I found that troops on my right and left were pressing forward. My skirmishers were then thrown forward at double-quick, and I resumed my forward movement, arriving at Petersburg shortly after 5 a. m., my skirmishers being the first troops in the city from the west end.

The One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers found in the hands of the enemy a U. S. national flag belonging to some regiment unknown, which flag I now have in my possession. Arriving at Petersburg and hearing that Campbell's bridge across the Appomattox River was on fire I pushed forward at double-quick with the Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, and although we succeeded in extinguishing the flames the bridge fell in about fifteen minutes after our arrival.

At 10 a. m. I received orders from General Parke to return to City Point with my command, at the same time receiving his warm congratulations and thanks for the gallant behavior of my brigade.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the admirable conduct of my officers and men, and when it is taken into consideration that they marched from City Point to Fort Sedgwick without a halt, and were then thrown against the enemy during a retrograde movement of some of our own troops, I congratulate myself upon being a participant in the work.

The First Massachusetts Cavalry, of my brigade, was on picket duty at Prince George Court-House.

I attach hereto a list of casualties.*

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES H. T. COLLIS,
Brevet Brigadier-General.

Col. GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

APPENDIX.

HEADQUARTERS INDEPENDENT BRIGADE,
April 21, 1865.

Col. G. D. RUGGLES,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

COLONEL: In reply to your letter of the 18th instant asking that I "present at the earliest moment practicable the names of officers of my command who, in my judgment, have by meritorious services in the recent campaign rendered themselves worthy of promotion to the rank of major-general and brigadier-general, as well as of those of all grades who for the same reasons are held by me as deserving of promotions by brevet," I have the honor to transmit the following recommendations:

1. Col. Charles F. Walcott, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be promoted to brigadier-general by brevet for gallant and meritorious services rendered on the 2d of April in the assault on the enemy's works west of the Jerusalem plank road.

2. Lieut. Col. E. W. Stone, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to the rank of colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious services rendered upon the same occasion, and for his energy and perseverance in constructing a covered way near Fort Mahone under a severe fire of the enemy.

3. Maj. James G. C. Dodge, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in leading his regiment on the 2d instant against the enemy's works (the regiment being left in front). This officer has been twice wounded in action and, although a cripple, has insisted upon remaining in the service, notwithstanding advice to the contrary from his physicians. His character upon the occasion referred to was of the most conspicuous character. The conduct of the three officers above-mentioned came under my immediate observation and I can safely say had great influence upon our success.

4. Capt. Benjamin C. Shermer, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for meritorious conduct in taking charge of his regiment during the absence of his superior officers, reorganizing it and turning the works of the enemy so as to adapt them to our own defense.

* Embodied in table, p. 590.

5. Capt. Alfred S. Newlin, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant services rendered the brevet brigadier-general commanding as acting aide-de-camp. This officer after the brigade had occupied the enemy's main line organized and brought up to its support the fragments of several regiments of the Ninth Corps. He has in previous engagements been distinguished for his gallantry.

6. First Lieut. and Quartermaster James Hartley, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on the rebel works in front of Petersburg on Sunday, April 2. Though by reason of his position as quartermaster not called upon to take an active part in the operations nor to participate in the assault, he yet did both, and by his coolness and bravery rendered essential services to the commanding officer of his regiment and myself. So marked were his services that they were made the subject of a general order from these headquarters.

7. First Lieut. Benjamin Vaughan, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant conduct in refusing to leave the field after receiving a severe wound through the right shoulder early in the action, and remaining with his command for several hours thereafter and until the enemy's fire had ceased.

8. First Lieut. Edward H. Merrill, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant conduct in promptly leading his command into a very dangerous position near Fort Mahone, which the regiment was ordered to occupy and hold at all hazards.

9. First Lieut. Henry W. Howard, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant conduct in superintending the construction under fire of a line of works to cover the left flank of the line captured from the enemy and for his fearless conduct in very rapidly leading a line of skirmishers along the enemy's works to feel their position on the night of the 2d and 3d of April, at a time when it was unknown whether or not the line was still held by the enemy.

10. First Lieut. Henry T. Johns, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for taking the regimental colors from the color-sergeant, who had fallen from exhaustion, and gallantly keeping them in their proper position.

11. Second Lieut. Frank T. Palmer, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be first lieutenant by brevet for meritorious conduct in relieving Lieutenant Merrill from the dangerous position which was held by the left of the regiment when Lieutenant Merrill had exhausted his ammunition, and for the remarkable bravery and energy which he displayed in holding the position.

12. First Lieut. Isaac P. Gragg, Sixty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, to be captain by brevet for gallant conduct in carrying orders along the line.

13. Capt. Michael Fulmer, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, to be major by brevet for gallant services in leading his command in an assault until severely wounded in the head near the ditch of the enemy's works.

14. Capt. M. Snyder, Twentieth New York State Militia, to be major by brevet for gallantly leading his regiment during the temporary absence of his colonel in the assault on the enemy's works on the Jerusalem plank road on 2d instant.

I have the honor to recommend that all these appointments, if approved by the major-general commanding, take effect from April 2, 1865.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES H. T. COLLIS,
Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

---

No. 191.

Report of Col. Charles F. Walcott, Sixty-first Massachusetts Infantry.

HDQRS. SIXTY-FIRST REGT. MASSACHUSETTS VOL. INFTRY.,
City Point, Va., April 5, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that the Sixty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, in obedience to orders received from Brig. Gen. H. W. Benham, commanding defenses of City Point, Va., moved to the outer defenses and took position in rear of Battery No. 3 at 8.15 a. m., April 2, 1865, where they remained until twenty minutes of 10 a. m., when, in obedience to orders received from Colonel Tippin, of the Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, temporarily commanding Independent Brigade, they moved to Meade's Station, arriving there at five minutes to 1 p. m. The regiment was immediately moved to Fort Sedgwick by the order of General C. H. T. Collis, commanding brigade, where they remained until 2 p. m., when, in obedience to orders from General Collis, they charged up the Jerusalem plank road, and, turning to the left, gallantly carried a line of rebel breast-works, the outer works of the rebel Fort Mahone, which had previously been carried by a brigade of the Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, but lost again just before the charge of the regiment. A slow fire was kept up from the rebel second line of works and from behind the works on our left, which was replied to by us till about midnight. At 3.30 p. m. orders were received by me from General Collis to be in readiness to participate with the brigade in an assault on the rebel line to the left, which orders were subsequently countermanded by General Collis at about 4.30 p. m. At 2.30 a. m. on the 3d of April General Collis ordered me to feel the rebel line upon the left by skirmishers supported by the regiment. First Lieut. Henry W. Howard was placed by me in charge of twenty-five skirmishers and advanced along the rebel line for about 1,500 yards, meeting with no opposition. On the evacuation of the rebel line having been reported to General Collis he immediately took steps toward moving on Petersburg, and soon after 4 a. m. the brigade was in motion; the town was entered at daylight and the regimental colors planted on the court-house; the regiment moved through the city at the double-quick, under the direction of General Collis, in pursuit of the enemy, whose rear guard was leaving as we entered. On reaching Campbell's bridge it was found to be burning very furiously, evidently having been covered with inflammable materials. In spite of every exertion on the part of General Collis and my officers and men to extinguish the flames, in which attempt some of the men were seriously burned, the bridge fell in about ten minutes after reaching it; a few of my men had passed over. Fortunately, though several of my men were on the bridge at the time of its fall, no lives were lost. At 10.30 a. m., by command of General Collis, the brigade moved to its former station at City Point, arriving there about 3 p. m.

During the charge on the rebel line the regiment suffered a heavy loss in the death of Second Lieut. Thomas B. Hart, a most excellent officer. First Lieut. Benjamin Vaughan was severely wounded in the right shoulder, but refused to leave the field.

The loss of the regiment in enlisted men was 4 killed and 29 wounded.

I have the honor to inclose a corrected list of the casualties in the regiment.*

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. F. WALCOTT,

Colonel, Comdg. Sixty-first Massachusetts Vol. Infy.

Capt. J. M. SCHOONMAKER,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Independent Brigade.

No. 195.

Report of Col. Jacob B. Hardenbergh, Eightieth New York Infantry (Twentieth Militia).

HEADQRS. TWENTIETH REGIMENT NEW YORK STATE MILITIA,
City Point, Va., April 5, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the movements and operations of my command on the 2d and 3d instant:

In obedience to orders received from Brig. Gen. H. W. Benham I moved, at 8 a. m. on the 2d instant, to the outer line of defenses to this place, and was placed in that part of the works just to the left of City Point and Petersburg Railroad. Remaining there about one hour I received an order from General H. W. Benham to move immediately to Meade's Station and await further instructions. Arriving at Meade's Station about 1 p. m., General H. W. Benham directed that the command move to the Avery house, just to the right and rear of Fort Sedgwick, commonly known as Fort Hell, where an officer would be found who would designate what position in the works we should occupy. This was the last order of any kind received from Brig. Gen. H. W. Benham. Before arriving at the Avery house an order was received from Bvt. Brig. Gen. C. H. T. Collis to move the command to Fort Sedgwick. Upon arriving there General Collis directed the command to report to Brigadier-General Griffin, whose headquarters were in Fort Sedgwick. Upon reporting General Griffin immediately directed that the command move to a work captured from the enemy in the morning and known as Battery No. 27, or Fort Damnation. In order to do this an open field had to be passed over which would subject the command to a very heavy fire from the enemy, as it was entirely commanded by his guns. The movement was promptly and admirably executed, with the loss of but three men wounded. Directly after the work designated by General Griffin was occupied by us we assisted in repelling a very desperate assault made upon it by the enemy. Almost an unceasing musketry fire was kept up with the enemy until quite late in the evening, when it died away as if by mutual consent, and we rested on our arms until about 4.45 a. m. the next morning, when orders were received from General Collis directing this command to support the skirmish line about to move in the city of Petersburg. We arrived in the city about half an hour afterward, and immediately the regimental colors were hoisted upon the house of William Cameron. I think I can safely say that this was the first American flag that floated over the city after the foul rebel rag ceased to wave there. The command remained in the city until about 12 m., when orders from General Collis were received to move to City Point. Our camp was reached about 4 p. m.

* Embodied in table, p. 590.

I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of my officers and men. No instance of misbehavior occurred, and each seemed to vie with the other in doing his whole duty.

This is gratifying, especially on account of the fact that there were only four line officers present, and a very few of the old men. Most of the officers and a majority of the old men had been detailed on other duties.

The greater part of the men present were new men who were never before under fire.

The officers present with the regiment were Captains Snyder, Hoysradt, France, and Woodworth, and Adjutant Masten, all of whom behaved with much gallantry. Captain Snyder, during a temporary absence on my part, the first day was in command of the regiment.

It is but justice to the men to state that the order to march to Meade's Station came very unexpectedly, and they were unprovided with haversacks, canteens, and overcoats; that they marched twelve or fourteen miles on a dusty road, a portion of the way on a double-quick, and endured fatigue, hunger, and cold without a murmur.

The following is a list of the casualties:*

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. HARDENBERGH,
Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. J. M. SCHOONMAKER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 196.

Report of Col. Andrew H. Tippin, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS, SIXTY-EIGHTH REGT., PENNSYLVANIA VOLS.,
City Point, April 6, 1865.

CAPTAIN: On the morning of the 2d instant I received an order from brigade headquarters to move my command to the outer defenses of this post and take a position which would be assigned me in the works. Subsequent to moving I received a verbal order from General Patrick, through one of his staff, to take command of the brigade (Independent) and report with it to General Benham, who had command of the works. I immediately did so, and positions were assigned the different regiments of the brigade in the fortifications. In a very short time after I was ordered by General Benham to proceed with the brigade and report with it to him at Meade's S<sup>t</sup> railroad, each regiment to take the nearest route to that then position in the works. I did so, and again reported to General Benham at the station with the regiments which accompanied me on the route I took. I was then ordered on to Fort Mifflin, where I met Brovet Brigadier-General Collis, the immediate brigade, he having preceded the command to that point. I immediately reported to him, and he assumed command, conducting the operations thenceforward.

* Embodied in table, p. 590.

Returning to my regiment and taking charge of it I shortly afterward received an order from General Collis to advance my command in the direction of the enemy's works. I immediately did so. In crossing the field in front of the enemy's line of works I fell in endeavoring to cross a deep ditch, seriously injuring myself and was completely disabled for the balance of the day. I lay there until some time in the night, suffering severely.

Lieutenant-Colonel Winslow succeeded me in the command of the regiment, and his report will fully detail its further operations.

During the night I again went forward to the works and remained until morning, but did not take command, owing to my feeble condition.

Respectfully submitted.

A. H. TIPPIN,
Colonel, Commanding Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers,
Capt. J. M. SCHOONMAKER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 197.

Report of Lieut. Col. Robert E. Winslow, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQRS. SIXTY-EIGHTH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
April 6, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this regiment in the recent operations before Petersburg:

Early on the morning of the 2d instant the command was ordered by Brigadier-General Benham to occupy the line of works constituting the outer defenses of City Point, the position assigned us being between Fort Craig and Fort Abbott, north of the telegraph road. About 10 a. m. of the same date we were ordered by Brigadier-General Benham to march to Meade's Station. That point reached we were placed in Fort Sedgwick, from which we were ordered by Brigadier-General Collis, who had then assumed the command, to charge the enemy's works immediately in our front. The charge was made in connection with the rest of the brigade. This regiment was forced a little to the left of the line in consequence of obstructions and deep ditches, but we carried the works a little to the left of Fort Malone, capturing two pieces of artillery in the works. There we lay the remainder of the day and the night, receiving no further orders. During the night six rebel deserters came into my line whom I sent under guard to the rear. At daylight of the 3d, seeing the right of the brigade advancing in the direction of Petersburg, and receiving no orders, I immediately ordered an advance also and followed. With the rest of the brigade we returned to camp, which we reached about 6 p. m.

A list of casualties has been forwarded.*

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. E. WINSLOW,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Comdg. Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers.
Capt. J. M. SCHOONMAKER,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

* Embodied in table, p. 590.

No. 198.

Report of Capt. John K. Waterhouse, One hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQDQS. COMPANY F, 114TH REGT. PENNSYLVANIA VOLS.,

April 6, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report that the regiment, under command of Capt. H. M. Eddy, was ordered to report to General Benham, commanding outer fortifications, City Point, Va., about 8 a. m., the 2d instant. About 11 a. m., the 2d instant, the regiment was ordered to Mende's Station and reported to General Collis. The regiment stacked arms near the Avery house, awaiting orders, and was ordered about 2 o'clock to Fort Sedgwick by General Collis, and deployed in line of battle on the left of Fort Sedgwick. We were subsequently ordered to advance over the line of breast-works by Brevet Brigadier-General Collis to reach Battery Gregg, which the rebels threatened to retake. In doing this we charged over the line of breast-works immediately in front of Fort Sedgwick, the field being enfiladed by the defenses of Fort Mahone, in possession of the rebels, who kept a murderous fire upon our line, killing and wounding thirty officers and men, among whom was Captain Eddy, commanding the regiment. At the same time many of our troops, belonging to the Ninth Corps fled to the rear at the advance of the rebels, the greater part of the regiment with the colors having safely reached the inside of Fort Gregg, compelling the rebels to run back under cover of Fort Mahone, and kept a continual fire upon the rebel fortifications upon our front and left flank. I took position with my company on the outer and left of Fort Gregg behind a traverse and remained until about 10.30 p. m., when I rejoined the rest of the regiment inside of the fort. Then finding myself the superior officer present I assumed command of the regiment. The firing of the enemy ceased soon after, which led to the impression that some movement on the part of the enemy was on foot. The sky began to be illuminated by fires in the direction of the city. About 4 o'clock General Collis ordered me to have the regiment ready to move at a moment's notice and suspend all firing while a reconnaissance was made on Fort Mahone, which was found deserted at 4.30 a. m. I then deployed the regiment as skirmishers, by order of General Collis, who informed us that an advance was to be made on the enemy's line and to direct the advance in the direction of the fires and to retreat firing if we should meet with too strong opposition. General Collis at the same time ordered the colors of the regiment to remain with the rest of the troops. At 4.45 a. m., precisely, we advanced and reached the outskirts of the city before daylight, without meeting with any opposition. We could not raise our colors over the city, having left them with the rest of the troops by order of General Collis.

The regiment behaved splendidly during these operations. A national color of a regiment was found deserted by its regiment in Fort Gregg and sent to General Collis by the regiment.

Captain Crawford remained in the rear and did not rejoin the regiment until its return to City Point. Lieutenant Watson remained in the rear with several men of the regiment and returned to Fort Sedgwick to see after some rations, without authority, and rejoined the regiment at 4.30 a. m. 3d instant, on the skirmish line. Captain Richardson was absent in the evening of the 2d instant, but rejoined the regiment about 3 a. m. 3d instant. The regiment remained in Petersburg about two hours, having had nothing to eat for twenty-four hours on its march to City Point, where we arrived about 5 p. m. 3d instant.

The list of killed and wounded are as follows:*

I am, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JOHN R. WATERHOUSE,

Capt., Comdg. Company F, 114th Pa. Vols., City Point, Va.

Lieut. AUGUSTUS W. FIX,

Acting Adjutant, 114th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

No. 199.

Reports of Maj. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry.

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,

Five Forks, White Oak Road, April 2, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to make the following report of our operations of yesterday:

At daylight yesterday morning I moved out with all the cavalry against the enemy's infantry in front of Dinwiddie Court-House. On our advance they fell back rapidly in line of battle. This sudden withdrawal was in part due to the advance of Ayres' division of the Fifth Corps from the Boydton plank road. General Ayres was unable to get into the enemy's rear in time to attack as expected owing to the darkness and bad roads, but his movement was sufficient to turn the enemy from the Five Forks road and force him to cross Chamberlain's Bed. Custer's and Devin's divisions of cavalry, under General Merritt, followed up the enemy with a gallantry that I have never seen exceeded, charging their infantry and driving them from two lines of works, capturing prisoners from Pickett's and Johnson's infantry divisions as well as from the enemy's cavalry. The enemy made a last stand at the Five Forks behind a strong line of earth-works along the White Oak road. After forcing them to this position I directed General Merritt to push his dismounted cavalry well up to the enemy's works and drive in their skirmishers and make the enemy believe that our main attack would be made on their right flank. In the meanwhile I had ordered up the Fifth Corps to within a mile of the Five Forks on the Dinwiddie Court-House road, for the purpose of attacking the enemy's left flank and rear. Between 4 and 5 o'clock, in accordance with these dispositions, the Fifth Corps moved out across the White Oak road, swinging round to the left as they advanced, and struck the enemy in flank and rear. Simultaneously with this attack the cavalry assaulted the enemy's works in front in compliance with my orders to General Merritt, and the result of this combined movement was the complete rout of the enemy with the loss of 5 pieces of artillery and caissons, a number of their wagons and ambulances, and I think at least 5,000 prisoners and several battle-flags. Gregg's brigade, of General Crook's cavalry division, operated upon our extreme left, skirmishing with the enemy's The two other brigades of this division remained in the Dinwiddie Court-House guarding the trains and the crossings of the r. I ordered General Mackenzie's division of cavalry, which reported to me in the morning, to the White Oak road by the way of J. Boissacut's house, with instructions to advance in the direction of Five Forks. When the Fifth Corps reached the White Oak road General Mackenzie joined their right and in the attack swept round over the Ford's Church road, cutting off this avenue of retreat to the enemy. After the enemy broke our cavalry pursued them for six miles down the White Oak road.

* Embodied in table, p. 590.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,

Major-General.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. GRANT,

Commanding Armies of the United States.

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,

May 16, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following narrative of the operations of my command during the recent campaign in front of Petersburg and Richmond, terminating with the surrender of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox Court-House, Va., on April 9, 1865:

On March 26 my command, consisting of the First and Third Cavalry Divisions, under the immediate command of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, crossed the James River by the bridge at Jones' Landing, having marched from Winchester, in the Shenandoah Valley, via White House, on the Pamunkey River.

On March 27 this command went into camp near Hancock's Station, on the military railroad, in front of Petersburg, and on the same day the Second Cavalry Division, which had been serving with the Army of the Potomac, reported to me, under the command of Maj. Gen. George Crook.

The effective force of these three divisions of cavalry was as follows: General Merritt's command, First and Third Divisions, 5,700; General Crook's command, Second Division, 3,300; total effective force, 9,000.

With this force I moved out on the 29th of March, in conjunction with the armies operating against Richmond, and in the subsequent operations I was under the immediate orders of the lieutenant-general commanding. I moved by the way of Reams' Station, on the Weldon railroad, and Malone's Crossing, on the Rowanty Creek, where we were obliged to construct a bridge. At this point our advance encountered a small picket of the rebel cavalry, and drove it to the left across Stony Creek, capturing a few prisoners, from whom and from my scouts I learned that the enemy's cavalry was at or near Stony Creek Depot, on the Weldon railroad, on our left flank and rear. Believing that it would not attack me, and that by pushing on to Dinwiddie Court-House I could force it to make a wide detour, we continued the march, reaching the Court-House about 5 p. m., encountering only a small picket of the enemy, which was driven away by our advance.

It was found necessary to order General Custor's division, which was marching in rear, to remain near Malone's Crossing, on the Rowanty Creek, to assist and protect our trains, which were greatly retarded by the almost impassable roads of that irry section.

The First and Second Divisions went into camp, covering the Vaughan, Flat Foot, Boydton plank, and Five Forks roads, which all intersect at Dinwiddie Court-House, rendering this an important point, and from which I was expected to make a cavalry raid on the South Side Railroad, and thence join General Sherman or return to Petersburg, as circumstances might dictate. However, during the night the lieutenant-general sent me instructions to abandon the contemplated raid and act in concert with the infantry, under his immediate command, and turn the right flank of Lee's army if possible.

Early on the morning of the 30th of March I directed General Merritt to send the First Division, Brigadier-General Devin commanding, to gain possession of the Five Forks, on the White Oak road, and directed General Crook to send General Davies' brigade of his division to the support of General Devin. Gregg's brigade, of Crook's division, was held on the Boydton plank road, and guarded the crossing of Stony Creek, forcing the enemy's cavalry, that was moving from Stony Creek Depot to form a connection with the right of their army, to make a wide detour, as I had anticipated, on the roads south of Stony Creek and west of Chamberlain's Bed—a very fatiguing march in the bad condition of the roads. A very heavy rain fell during this day, aggravating the swampy nature of the ground, and rendering the movements of troops almost impossible. General Merritt's reconnaissance developed the enemy in strong force on the White Oak road, in the vicinity of the Five Forks, and there was some heavy skirmishing throughout the day.

Next morning, March 31, General Merritt advanced toward the Five Forks with the First Division, and, meeting with considerable opposition, General Davies' brigade, of Crook's division, was ordered to join him, while General Crook, advancing on the left with the two other brigades of his division, encountered the enemy's cavalry at Chamberlain's Creek, at a point a little north and west of Dinwiddie, making demonstrations to cross. Smith's brigade was ordered to hold them in check, and Gregg's brigade to a position on his right. The advance of the First Division got possession of the Five Forks, but in the meantime the Fifth Army Corps, which had advanced toward the White Oak road from the Vaughan road, was attacked and driven back, and withdrawing from that point, this force of the enemy marched rapidly from the front of the Fifth Corps to the Five Forks, driving in our cavalry advance, and moving down on roads west of Chamberlain's Creek, attacked General Smith's brigade, but were unable to force his position. Abandoning the attempt to cross in his front, this force of the enemy's infantry succeeded in effecting a crossing higher up the creek, striking General Davies' brigade, of the Second Division, which, after a gallant fight, was forced back upon the left flank of the First Division, thus partially isolating all this force from my main line covering Dinwiddie Court-House. Orders were at once given to General Merritt to cross this detached force over to the Boydton plank road and march down to Dinwiddie Court-House and come into the line of battle. The enemy, deceived by this movement, followed it up rapidly, making a left wheel and presenting his rear to my line of battle. When his line was nearly parallel to mine, General Gibbs' brigade, of the First Division, and General Irvin Gregg's brigade, of the Second Division, were ordered to attack at once, and General Ouster was directed to bring up two of his brigades rapidly, leaving one brigade of his division with the trains, that had not yet reached Dinwiddie Court-House. In the gallant attack made by Gibbs and Gregg the enemy's wounded fell into our hands, and he was forced to face by the rear rank and give up his movement, which, if continued, would have taken in flank and rear the infantry line of the Army of the Potomac. When the enemy had faced to meet this attack, a very obstinate and handsomely contested battle ensued, in which, with all his cavalry and two divisions of infantry, the enemy was unable to drive five brigades of our cavalry, dismounted, from an open plain in front of Dinwiddie Court-House. The brunt of their cavalry attack was borne by General Smith's brigade, which had so gallantly held the crossing of Chamberlain's Creek in the morning. His command again held the enemy in check with determined bravery, but the heavy force brought against his right flank finally compelled him to abandon his position on the creek and fall back to the main line immediately in front of Dinwiddie Court-House. As the enemy's infantry advanced to the attack, our cavalry threw up slight breast-works of rails at some points along our lines, and when the enemy attempted to force this position, they were handsomely repulsed and gave up the attempt to gain possession of the Court-House. It was after dark when the firing ceased, and the enemy lay on their arms that night not more than 100 yards in front of our lines.

The commands of Generals Devin and Davies reached Dinwiddie Court-House without opposition by way of the Boydton plank road, but did not participate in the final action of the day.

In this well-contested battle the most obstinate gallantry was displayed by my entire command. The brigades commanded by General Gibbs and Colonels Stagg and Fitzhugh, in the First Division, Generals Davies, Gregg, and Smith, in the Second Division, Colonels Pennington and Capelhart, in the Third Division, vied with each other in their determined efforts to hold in check the superior force of the enemy, and the skillful management of their troops in this peculiarly difficult country entitles the brigade commanders to the highest commendation.

Generals Crook, Merritt, Custer, and Devin, by their courage and ability, sustained their commands and executed the rapid movements of the day with promptness and without confusion.

During the night of the 31st of March my headquarters were at Dinwiddie Court-House, and the lieutenant-general notified me that the Fifth Corps would report to me and should reach me by midnight. This corps had been offered to me on the 30th instant, but very much desiring the Sixth Corps, which had been with me in the Shenandoah Valley, I asked for it, but on account of the delay which would occur in moving that corps from its position in the lines in front of Petersburg it could not be sent me. I respectfully submit herewith my brief account of the operations of the day, the response to which was the ordering of the Fifth Corps to my support and my command, as also the dispatch of the lieutenant-general notifying me of his action. I understood that the Fifth Corps, when ordered to report to me, was in position near S. Dabney's house, in the angle between the Boydton road and the Five Forks road. Had General Warren moved according to the expectations of the lieutenant-general, there would appear to have been but little chance for the escape of the enemy's infantry in front of Dinwiddie Court-House. Ayres' division moved down the Boydton plank road during the night, and in the morning moved west by R. Boissac's house, striking the Five Forks road about two miles and a half north of Dinwiddie Court-House. General Warren, with Griffin's and Crawford's divisions, moved down the road by Crump's house, coming into the Five Forks road near J. Boissac's house between 7 and 8 o'clock on the morning of the 1st of April. Meantime I moved my cavalry force at daylight against the enemy's lines in my front, which gave way rapidly, moving off by the right flank, and crossing Chamberlain's Creek. This hasty movement was accelerated by the discovery that two divisions of the Fifth Corps were in their rear, and that one division was moving toward their left and rear.

The following were the instructions sent to General Warren:

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,
Diwiddie Court-House, April 1, 1865—1 a. m.

Major-General WARREN,
Commanding Fifth Army Corps:

I am holding in front of Diwiddie Court-House, on the road leading to Five Forks, for three-quarters of a mile, with General Custer's division. The enemy are in his immediate front, lying so as to cover the road just this side of A. Adams' house, which leads out across Chamberlain's land or run. I understand you have a division at J. Boisseau's; if so, you are in rear of the enemy's line and almost on his flanks. I will hold on here. Possibly they may attack Custer at daylight; if so, attack instantly and in full force. Attack at daylight anyhow, and I will make an effort to get the road this side of Adams' house, and if I do you can capture the whole of them. Any force moving down the road I am holding, or on the White Oak road, will be in the enemy's rear, and in all probability get any force that may escape you by a flank attack. Do not fear my leaving here. If the enemy remains I shall fight at daylight.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General.

As they fell back the enemy was rapidly followed by General Merritt's two divisions—General Devin on the right and General Custer on the left; General Crook in rear. During the remainder of the day General Crook's division held the extreme left and rear and was not seriously engaged.

I then determined that I would drive the enemy with the cavalry to the Five Forks, press them inside of their works, and make a feint to turn their right flank, and meanwhile quietly move up the Fifth Corps with a view to attacking their left flank, crush the whole force, if possible, and drive westward those who might escape, thus isolating them from their army at Petersburg. Happily, this conception was successfully executed. About this time General Mckenzie's division of cavalry, from the Army of the James, reported to me, and consisted of about 1,000 effective men. I directed General Warren to hold fast at J. Boisseau's house, refresh his men, and be ready to move to the front when required; and General Mckenzie was ordered to rest in front of Diwiddie Court-House until further orders. Meantime General Merritt's command continued to press the enemy, and by impetuous charges drove them from two lines of temporary works, General Custer guiding his advance on the Widow Gilliam's house and General Devin on the main Five Forks road. The courage displayed by the cavalry officers and men was superb, and about 2 o'clock the enemy was behind his works on the White Oak road, and his skirmish line drawn in. I then ordered up the Fifth Corps on the main road, and sent Brevet Major Gillespie, of the Engineers, to turn the head of the column off on the Gravelly Church road, and put the corps in position on this road obliquely to and at a point but a short distance from the White Oak road and about one mile from the Five Forks. Two divisions of the corps were to form the front line, and one division was to be held in reserve, in column of regiments, opposite the center. I then directed General Merritt to demonstrate as though he was attempting to turn the enemy's right flank, and notified him that the Fifth Corps would strike the enemy's left flank, and ordered that the cavalry should assault the enemy's works as soon as the Fifth Corps became engaged, and that would be determined by the volleys of musketry. I then rode over to where the Fifth Corps was going into position, and found them coming up very slowly. I was exceedingly anxious to attack at once, for the sun was getting low, and we had to fight or go back. It was no place to intrench, and it would have been shameful to have gone back with no results to compensate for the loss of the brave men who had fallen during the day.

In this connection I will say that General Warren did not exert himself to get up his corps as rapidly as he might have done, and his manner gave me the impression that he wished the sun to go down before dispositions for the attack could be completed. As soon as the corps was in position I ordered an advance in the following formation: Ayres' division on the left, in double lines; Crawford's division on the right, in double lines; and Griffin's division in reserve, behind Crawford; and the White Oak road was reached without opposition.

While General Warren was getting into position I learned that the left of the Second Corps of the Army of the Potomac, on my right, had been swung around from the direction of its line of battle until it fronted on the Boydton road and parallel to it, which afforded an opportunity to the enemy to march down the White Oak road and attack me in right and rear. General Mackenzie was therefore sent up the Crump road with directions to gain the White Oak road if possible, but to attack at all hazards any enemy found, and if successful then march down that road and join me. General Mackenzie executed this with courage and skill, attacking a force of the enemy on the White Oak road and driving it toward Petersburg. He then countermarched and joined me on the White Oak road just as the Fifth Corps advanced to the attack, and I directed him to swing round with the right of the infantry and gain possession of the Ford road at the crossing of Hatcher's Run. The Fifth Corps on reaching the White Oak road made a left wheel and burst on the enemy's left flank and rear like a tornado, and pushed rapidly on, orders having been given that if the enemy was routed there should be no halt to reform broken lines. As stated before, the firing of the Fifth Corps was the signal to General Merritt to assault, which was promptly responded to, and the works of the enemy were soon carried at several points by our brave cavalymen. The enemy were driven from their strong line of works and completely routed, the Fifth Corps doubling up their left flank in confusion, and the cavalry of General Merritt dashing on to the White Oak road, capturing their artillery, and turning it upon them and riding into their broken ranks so demoralized them that they made no serious stand after their line was carried, but took to flight in disorder. Between 5,000 and 6,000 prisoners fell into our hands, and the fugitives were driven westward, and were pursued until long after dark by Merritt's and Mackenzie's cavalry for a distance of six miles.

During this attack I again became dissatisfied with General Warren. During the engagement portions of his line gave way when not exposed to a heavy fire, and simply from want of confidence on the part of the troops, which General Warren did not exert himself to inspire. I therefore relieved him from the command of the Fifth Corps, authority for this action having been sent to me before the battle, unsolicited.

When the pursuit was given up I directed General Griffin, who had been ordered to assume command of the Fifth Corps, to collect his corps at once, march two divisions back to Gravelly Church, and put them into position at right angles to the White Oak road, facing toward Petersburg, while Bartlett's division (Griffin's old) covered the Ford road to Hatcher's Run. General Merritt's cavalry went into camp on the Widow Gilliam's plantation, and General Mackenzie took position on the Ford road at the crossing of Hatcher's Run.

I cannot speak too highly of the conduct of the troops in this battle and of the gallantry of their commanding officers, who appeared to realize that the success of the campaign and fate of Lee's army depended upon it. They merit the thanks of the country and reward of the Government. To Generals Griffin, Ayres, Bartlett, and Crawford, of the Fifth Corps, and to Generals Merritt, Custer, Devin, and Mackenzie, of the cavalry, great credit is due, and to their subordinate commanders they will undoubtedly award the praise which is due to them for the hearty co-operation, bravery, and ability which were everywhere displayed.

At daylight on the morning of April 2 General Miles' division, of the Second Corps, reported to me, coming over from the Boydton plank road. I ordered it to move up the White Oak road toward Petersburg and attack the enemy at the intersection of that road with the Claiborne road, where he was in position in heavy force, and I followed General Miles immediately with two divisions of the Fifth Corps. Miles forced the enemy from this position and pursued with great zeal, pushing him across Hatcher's Run and following him up on the road to Sutherland's Depot. On the north side of the run I overtook Miles, who was anxious to attack, and had a very fine and spirited division. I gave him permission, but about this time General Humphreys came up, and receiving notice from General Meade that General Humphreys would take command of Miles' division, I relinquished it at once, and firing the Fifth Corps by the rear (I afterward regretted giving up this division, as I believe the enemy could at that time have been crushed at Sutherland's Depot) I returned to Five Forks and marched out the Ford road toward Hatcher's Run.

The cavalry had in the meantime been sent westward to cross Hatcher's Run and break up the enemy's cavalry, which had collected in considerable force north of that stream, but they would not stand to fight, and our cavalry pursued them in a direction due north to the Numozone road.

Crossing Hatcher's Run with the Fifth Corps, the South Side Railroad was struck at Ford's Depot, meeting no opposition, and the Fifth Corps marched rapidly toward Sutherland's Depot, in flank and rear of the enemy opposing Miles as he approached that point. The force of the enemy fled before the Fifth Corps could reach them, retreating along the main road by the Appomattox River, the cavalry and Crawford's division, of the Fifth Corps, engaging them slightly about dusk.

On the morning of the 3d our cavalry took up the pursuit, routing the enemy's cavalry and capturing many prisoners. The enemy's infantry was encountered at Deep Creek, where a severe fight took place. The Fifth Corps followed up the cavalry rapidly, picking up many prisoners and five pieces of abandoned artillery, and a number of wagons. The Fifth Corps, with Crook's division of cavalry, encamped that night (the 4th) at Deep Creek, on the Numozone road, neither of these commands having been engaged during the day.

On the morning of the 4th General Crook was ordered to strike the Danville railroad between Jetersville and Burke's Station, and then move up toward Jetersville. The Fifth Corps moved rapidly to that point, as I had learned from my scouts that the enemy was at Amelia Court-House, and everything indicated that they were collecting at that point. On arriving at Jetersville, about 5 p. m., I learned without doubt that Lee and his army were at Amelia Court-House.

The Fifth Corps was at once ordered to intrench, with a view to holding Jetersville until the main army could come up.

It seems to me that this was the only chance the Army of Northern Virginia had to save itself, which might have been done had General Lee promptly attacked and driven back the comparatively small force opposed to him and pursued his march to Burkeville Junction. A dispatch from General Lee's chief commissary to the commissary at Danville and Lynchburg, requiring 200,000 rations to be sent to meet the army at Burkeville, was here intercepted.

So soon as I found that the entire army of the enemy was concentrated at Amelia Court-House, I forwarded promptly all the information I obtained to General Meade and the lieutenant-general.

On the morning of April 5 General Crook was directed to send General Davies' brigade to make a reconnaissance to Paine's Cross-Roads on our left and front, and ascertain if the enemy was making any movement toward that flank to escape. General Davies struck a train of 180 wagons, escorted by a considerable force of the enemy's cavalry, which he defeated, capturing five pieces of artillery. He destroyed the wagons and brought in a large number of prisoners. Gregg's and Smith's brigades, of the Second Division, were sent out to support Davies, and some heavy fighting ensued, the enemy having sent a strong force of infantry to attack and cut off Davies' brigade, which attempt was unsuccessful.

During the afternoon, and after the arrival of the Second Corps at Jetersville (which General Meade requested me to put in position, he being ill), the enemy demonstrated strongly in front of Jetersville against Smith's and Gregg's brigades, of Crook's division of cavalry, but no serious attack was made.

Early on the morning of April 6 General Crook was ordered to move to the left to Deatonsville, followed by Custer's and Devin's divisions, of General Merritt's command. The Fifth Corps had been returned to the command of General Meade at his request. I afterward regretted giving up the corps.

When near Deatonsville the enemy's trains were discovered moving in the direction of Burkeville or Farmville, escorted by heavy masses of infantry and cavalry, and it soon became evident that the whole of Lee's army was attempting to make its escape. Crook was at once ordered to attack the trains, and if the enemy was too strong one of the divisions would pass him, while he held fast and pressed the enemy and attack at a point farther on, and this division was ordered to do the same, and so on, alternating, and this system of attack would enable us finally to strike some weak point. This result was obtained just south of Sailor's Creek and on the high ground over that stream. Custer took the road, and Crook and Devin coming up to his support, 16 pieces of artillery were captured and about 400 wagons destroyed and many prisoners taken, and three divisions of the enemy's infantry were cut off from the line of retreat.

Meantime Colonel Stagg, commanding the Michigan brigade, of the First Division, was held at a point about two and a half miles south of Deatonsville, and with this force and a section of Miller's battery, which shelled the trains with excellent effect while Colonel Stagg demonstrated to attack them, thus keeping a large force of the enemy from moving against the rest of the cavalry and holding them until the arrival of the Sixth Corps, which was marching to report to me. I felt so strongly the necessity of holding this large force of the enemy that I gave permission to General Merritt to order Colonel Stagg's brigade to make a mounted charge against their lines, which was most gallantly done, the men leaving many of their horses dead almost up to the enemy's works.

On the arrival of the head of the Sixth Corps the enemy commenced withdrawing. Major-General Wright was ordered to put Seymour's division into position at once, and advance and carry the road, which was done at a point about two miles or two miles and a half from Deatonsville. As soon as the road was in our possession Wright was directed to push General Seymour on, the enemy falling back, skirmishing briskly. Their resistance growing stubborn a halt was called to get up Wheaton's division, of the Sixth Corps, which went into position on the left of the road, Seymour being on the right. Wheaton was ordered to guide right, with his right connecting with Seymour's left and resting on the road. I still felt the great importance of pushing the enemy, and was unwilling to wait for Getty's division, of the Sixth Corps, to get up. I therefore ordered an advance, sending word to General Humphreys, who was on the road to our right, requesting him to push on, as I felt confident we could break up the enemy. It was apparent, from the absence of artillery fire and the manner in which they gave way when pressed, that the force of the enemy opposed to us was a heavy rear guard. The enemy was driven until our lines reached Sailor's Creek, and from the north bank I could see our cavalry on the high ground above the creek and south of it, and the long line of smoke from the burning wagons. A cavalryman, who in a charge cleared the enemy's works and came through their lines, reported to me what was in front. I regret that I have forgotten the name of this gallant young soldier.

As soon as General Wright could get his artillery into position I ordered the attack to be made on the left, and sent Colonel Stagg's brigade of cavalry to strike and flank the extreme right of the enemy's line. The attack by the infantry was not executed exactly as I had directed, and a portion of our line in the open ground was broken by the terrible fire of the enemy, who were in position on commanding ground south of the creek. This attack by Wheaton's and Seymour's divisions was splendid, but no more than I had reason to expect from the gallant Sixth Corps. The cavalry in rear of the enemy attacked simultaneously, and the enemy, after a gallant resistance, were completely surrounded and nearly all threw down their arms and surrendered. General Ewell, commanding the enemy's forces, and a number of other general officers fell into our hands, and a very large number of prisoners. I have never ascertained exactly how many prisoners were taken in this battle. Most of them fell into the hands of the cavalry, but they are no more entitled to claim them than the Sixth Corps, to which command equal credit is due for the good results of this engagement.

Both the cavalry and the Sixth Corps encamped south of Sailor's Creek that night, having followed up the small remnant of the enemy's forces for several miles.

In reference to the participation of the Sixth Corps in this action, I desire to add that the lieutenant-general had notified me that this corps would report to me. Major McClellan and Lieutenant-Colonel Franklin, of General Wright's staff, had successively been sent forward to report the progress of the corps in coming up; and on the arrival of Major-General Wright he reported his corps to me, and from that time until after the battle received my orders and obeyed them; but after the engagement was over, and General Meade had communicated with General Wright, the latter declined to make his report to me until directed to do so by the lieutenant-general.

On the 7th instant the pursuit was continued early in the morning by the cavalry, General Crook in the advance. It was discovered that the enemy had not been cut off by the Army of the James, and, under belief that he would attempt to escape on the Danville road through Prince Edward Court-House, General Merritt was ordered to move his divisions to that point, passing around the left of the Army of the James. General Crook continued the direct pursuit, encountering the main body of the enemy at Farmville and again on the north side of the Appomattox, where the enemy's trains were attacked by General Gregg, a sharp fight with the enemy's infantry ensued, in which General Gregg was unfortunately captured. On arriving at Prince Edward Court-House I found General Mackenzie, with his division of cavalry in the Army of the James, and ordered him to cross the bridge over the Buffalo River, and make a reconnaissance to Prospect Station, on the Lynchburg railroad, and ascertain if the enemy were moving at that point. Meantime I heard from General Crook that the enemy had crossed to the north side of the Appomattox, and General Merritt then moved on and encamped at Buffalo Creek, and General Crook was ordered to recross the Appomattox and encamp at Prospect Station.

On the morning of the 8th Merritt and Mackenzie continued the pursuit to Prospect Station, and Merritt's and Crook's commands then moved on to Appomattox Depot, a point on the Lynchburg railroad, four miles south of Appomattox Court-House. Shortly after the march commenced, Sergeant White, one of my scouts, notified me that there were four trains of cars at Appomattox Depot loaded with supplies for General Lee's army. Generals Merritt and Crook were at once notified, the command pushed on briskly for twenty-eight miles. General Crook had the advance, and, on nearing the depot, skillfully threw a column in rear of the trains and captured them. Without halting a moment he pushed on, driving the enemy (who had reached the depot about the same time as our cavalry) in the direction of Appomattox Court-House, capturing many prisoners and twenty-five pieces of artillery, a mule train, and a large park of wagons. General Devin coming up in on the right of Ouster. The fighting continued till after dark, the enemy being driven to Appomattox Court-House. I at once notified the lieutenant-general, and sent word to Generals Ord and Gibbon, of the Army of the James, and General Griffin, commanding the Fifth Corps, who were in rear, that if they pressed on, there was now no means of escape for the enemy, who had reached "the last ditch."

During the night, although we knew that the remnant of Lee's army was in our front, we held fast with the cavalry to what we had gained, and ran the captured trains back along the railroad to a point where they would be protected by our infantry that was coming up.

The Twenty-fourth and Fifth Corps and one division of the Twenty-first Corps arrived about daylight on the 9th at Appomattox Depot. I consulted with General Ord, who was in command of these corps, and moved to the front, near Appomattox Court-House, and just as the enemy's cavalry force was attacking the cavalry with the intention of breaking through our lines, I directed the cavalry, which was dismounted, to fall back gradually, resisting the enemy, so as to give time for the infantry to form its lines and march to the attack, and when this was done, to move off to the right flank and mount. This was done, and the enemy discontinued his attack as soon as he caught sight of our cavalry. I moved briskly around the left of the enemy's line of battle, and was falling back rapidly, heavily pressed by the advance of the infantry, and was about to charge the trains and the confused mass of the enemy, when a white flag was presented to General Custer, who had the advance, and who sent the information to me at once that the enemy desired to surrender.

Hiding over to the left at Appomattox Court-House I met Major-General Gordon, of the rebel service, and Major-General Wilcox. General Gordon requested a suspension of hostilities pending negotiations for a surrender then being held between Lieutenant-General Grant and General Lee. I notified him that I desired to prevent the unnecessary effusion of blood, but as there was nothing definitely settled in the correspondence, and as an attack had been made on my lines with the view to escape, under the impression our force was only cavalry, I must have some assurance of an intended surrender. This General Gordon gave, by saying that there was no doubt of the surrender of General Lee's army. I then separated from him, with an agreement to meet these officers again in half an hour, at Appomattox Court-House. At the specified time, in company with General Ord, who commanded the infantry, I again met this officer, also Lieutenant-General Longstreet, and received from them the same assurance, and hostilities ceased until the arrival of Lieutenant-General Grant.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,

Major-General.

Brig. Maj. Gen. JOHN A. RAWLINS, Chief of Staff.

[Enclosure No. 1.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY,

Dinwiddie Court-House, March 31, 1865.

Lieutenant-General GRANT, Comdg. Armies of the United States:

The enemy's cavalry attacked me about 10 o'clock to-day, on the road coming in from the west and a little north of Dinwiddie Court-House. This attack was very handsomely repulsed by General Smith's brigade, of Crook's division, and the enemy was driven across Chamberlain's Creek. Shortly afterward the enemy's infantry attacked on the same creek in heavy force, and drove in General Davies' brigade, and, advancing rapidly, gained the forks of the road at J. Boisson's. This forced Devin, who was in advance, and Davies to cross to the Boydton road. General Gregg's brigade and General Gibbs' brigade, who had been toward Dinwiddie, then attacked the enemy in the rear very handsomely. This stopped the march toward the left of our infantry, and finally caused them to turn toward Dinwiddie and attack us in heavy force. The enemy then again attacked at Chamberlain's Creek, and forced Smith's position. At this time Capehart's and Pennington's brigades, of Custer's division, came up, and a very handsome fight occurred. The enemy have gained some ground, but we still hold in front of Dinwiddie, and Davies and Devin are coming down the Boydton road to join us. The opposing force was Pickett's division, Wise's independent brigade of infantry, and Fitzhugh Lee's, Rosser's, and W. H. F. Lee's cavalry commands. The men have behaved splendidly. Our loss in killed and wounded will probably number 450 men. Very few were lost as prisoners. We have of the enemy a number of prisoners. This force is too strong for us. I will hold out to Dinwiddie Court-House until I am compelled to leave. Our fighting to-day was all dismounted.

P. H. SHERIDAN,

Major-General.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

DABNEY'S MILLS, March 31, 1865—10.05 p. m.

Major-General SHERIDAN:

The Fifth Corps has been ordered to your support. Two divisions will go by J. Boisseau's and one down the Boydton road. In addition to this I have sent Mackenzie's cavalry, which will reach you by the Vaughan road. All these forces, except the cavalry, should reach you by 12 to-night. You will assume command of the whole force sent to operate with you, and use it to the best of your ability to destroy the force which your command has fought so gallantly to-day.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

[Inclosure No. 3.]

Numerical list of casualties in the First, Second, and Third Divisions of Cavalry, commanded by Maj. Gen. P. H. Sheridan, from the 28th day of March to the 9th day of April, 1865.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division.....	5	23	32	166	5	50	42	244
Second Division.....	9	91	46	438	12	231	67	760
Third Division.....	6	60	28	251	1	85	35	342
Total*.....	20	170	106	855	18	321	141	1,340

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General, U. S. Army.

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,
Petersburg, Va., April 20, 1865.

APPENDIX.

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,
Petersburg, Va., April 19, 1865.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: I have the honor to bring to the notice of the War Department the gallant conduct of the following-named officers, and respectfully request that they be promoted or brevetted an additional grade: Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, for distinguished service as chief of cavalry on the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River from February 27 to March 27, 1865, and for meritorious and gallant services at the cavalry engagements at Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, the battle of Five Forks April 1, 1865, the pursuit of the enemy to Bevil's Bridge, including the cavalry engagement at Tabernacle Church, April 5, 1865, the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and the cavalry engagements at Appomattox Depot and Appomattox Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865, and for the energy and skill displayed throughout the entire campaign, to be major-general of volunteers.

* But see revised table, pp. 591, 592.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. George A. Custer, commanding Third Cavalry Division, to be promoted to the rank of major-general of volunteers for distinguished services and gallant conduct at the battle of Waynesborough March 2, 1865, and untiring skill and energy displayed in the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River; for the personal gallantry and high ability exhibited in fighting and maneuvering his command at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, Five Forks, Va., April 1, cavalry engagement at Tabernacle Church April 5, battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, Appomattox Depot and Appomattox Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865, and in the pursuit of the forces of the rebel army from Five Forks to Bovill's Bridge, on the Appomattox River, and from Jetersville to Appomattox Court-House.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. I. Gregg, colonel Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade, Second Cavalry Division, to be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers for gallant and meritorious services at the cavalry engagements at Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, the cavalry pursuit from Five Forks to Burkeville and Jetersville, and for the cavalry engagement at that point April 5, 1865, and at the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, at the cavalry engagement on the north side of the Appomattox River near Farnville, Va., during which he was captured whilst gallantly fighting his brigade.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. C. H. Smith, colonel First Maine Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade, Second Cavalry Division, to be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers for highly distinguished services at the battle of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, the cavalry pursuit from Five Forks to Burkeville, to Jetersville, the cavalry engagement near Jetersville April 5, 1865, the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and at Appomattox Court-House April 9, 1865.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. James W. Forsyth, lieutenant-colonel and assistant inspector-general Cavalry Corps, my chief of staff, to be brigadier-general of volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the cavalry campaign from Winchester, Va., to the James River, at the cavalry engagement March 31, 1865, at Dinwiddie Court-House, Va., for conspicuous bravery at the battle of Five Forks April 1, 1865, and at Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and during the engagements at Appomattox Depot and Court-House on the 8th and 9th instant, and for industry, energy, and ability displayed throughout the entire campaign.

Col. H. Capehart, First West Virginia Cavalry, commanding brigade, Third Cavalry Division, to be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers for the zeal and energy displayed by him in the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River, for gallantry at the cavalry engagement at Waynesborough, and for distinguished services at the cavalry engagements at Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, battles of Five Forks April 1, and Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, the cavalry engagements at Appomattox Depot and Appomattox Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865, and during the pursuit of the rebel army from Five Forks to Appomattox Court-House.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. William Wells, colonel First Vermont Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade, Third Cavalry Division, to be brigadier-general of volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the cavalry expedition from Winchester to the James River, and at the battles of Five Forks and Sailor's Creek April 5 and 6, 1865, and Appomattox Depot and Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865, and for the energy displayed in the pursuit of the rebel army from Five Forks to Appomattox Court-House.

Col. Charles L. Fitzhugh, Sixth New York Cavalry, commanding Second Cavalry Brigade, First Cavalry Division, to be brigadier-general of volunteers for the gallantry, energy, and ability displayed by him during the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River, and at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and Appomattox Court-House April 9, 1865, and during the pursuit of the rebel army from Five Forks to Appomattox Court-House.

Col. P. Stagg, First Michigan Cavalry, commanding First Brigade, First Cavalry Division, to be brigadier-general of volunteers for zealously and gallantly leading and fighting his brigade during the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River, and at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, Five Forks April 1, 1865, Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and Appomattox Court-House April 9, 1865, and for his unwearied exertions during the pursuit of the rebel army from Five Forks to Appomattox Court-House, Va.

Bvt. Col. George A. Forsyth (major Eighth Illinois Cavalry), acting aide-de-camp on my staff, to be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers for highly distinguished services on the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River, and for untiring energy and conspicuous gallantry at the cavalry engagements of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, and at the battle of Five Forks April 1, 1865, the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and cavalry engagements at Appomattox Depot and Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865. Colonel Forsyth is one of the finest young officers in the service, and has fairly won the promotion asked for him.

Lieut. Col. E. W. Whitaker, First Connecticut Cavalry, [acting] assistant inspector-general Third Cavalry Division, to be brevet brigadier-general of volunteers for gallantry and skill displayed in turning the enemy's left flank at Waynesborough March 2, 1865, and for gallantry and uniform good conduct at the battles of Five Forks April 1 and Appomattox Station April 8, 1865, and throughout the entire campaign.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. W. Redwood Price, special inspector of cavalry, to be colonel by brevet for gallant and meritorious services at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, Five Forks April 1, 1865, Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and during the cavalry engagements at Appomattox Station and Court-House on the 8th and 9th of April, 1865. Lieutenant-Colonel Price acted throughout the entire campaign from Dinwiddie Court-House to the final capture of the rebel army with remarkable energy and ability.

I desire to make special mention of the valuable services of Maj. H. H. Young, Second Rhode Island Infantry, chief of my scouts, during the cavalry expedition from Winchester, Va., to the James River. His personal gallantry and numerous conflicts with the enemy won the admiration of the whole command. In the late campaign from Petersburg to Appomattox Court-House he kept me constantly informed of the movements of the enemy and brought in prisoners from brigadier-generals down. The information gained through him was invaluable. I earnestly request that he be made a lieutenant-colonel by brevet.

Brig. Gen. Truman Seymour, commanding Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, to be major-general of volunteers by brevet for the ability and energy which he displayed in handling his division at the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865. His gallantry and valuable services in this engagement fully entitle him to promotion.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. Oliver Edwards (colonel Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry), commanding brigade, Sixth Army Corps, behaved with conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and is justly entitled to his promotion to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers. General Edwards fought his command at this battle with an ability and persistency that fairly entitles him to this reward.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin (colonel Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers), commanding brigade, Sixth Army Corps, First Division. This officer fought his command with such rare ability at the battle of Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865, that he is justly entitled to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers.

Capt. Andrew J. McGonnigle, assistant quartermaster U. S. Volunteers, and acting chief quartermaster on my staff, behaved with the greatest gallantry during the campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, particularly at Cedar Creek, in which battle he was severely wounded whilst leading a brigade of infantry. It was owing to his personal exertions during the morning of the 19th of October, 1864, that I am mostly indebted for the saving of the transportation of the army. Captain McGonnigle accompanied me from Winchester, Va., to the James River on the cavalry expedition from February 27 to March 27, 1865, and took part in the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, Five Forks April 1, 1865, Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and in the engagements at Appomattox Station and Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865. For his industry and zeal in the discharge of his duties as quartermaster and meritorious services in the field, I have to request that he be made captain and assistant quartermaster in the U. S. Army. Captain McGonnigle was wounded a second time at the battle of Five Forks April 1, 1865.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General, Commanding.

CAVALRY HEADQUARTERS,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1865.

Hon. B. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to bring to the notice of the War Department the gallant conduct of the following-named officers, and to recommend them for promotion as hereinafter stated:

Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs to be major-general of volunteers by brevet for gallant and meritorious services while commanding the regular cavalry brigade at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, Five Forks April 1, Sailor's Creek April 6, and at Appomattox Depot and Court-House April 8 and 9, 1865, as well as for his services on the James River raid.

Col. N. B. Sweitzer, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, to be brigadier-general of volunteers by brevet for meritorious and distinguished services at the battles of the Opequon, Cedar Creek, and the cavalry engagement at Tom's Creek, in the Shenandoah Valley, and for services in the Department of Washington during the past winter.

Francis T. Sherman, Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, acting as inspector-general upon my staff, to be brigadier-general of volunteers by brevet [sic] during the cavalry expedition from Winchester to the James River from February 27 to March 27, 1865, and for distinguished services at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, Five Forks April 1, Sailor's Creek April 6, and Appomattox Court-House April 9, 1865.

Col. J. L. Thompson, First New Hampshire Cavalry, to be brigadier-general of volunteers by brevet for distinguished and meritorious services at the battle of Waynesborough, March 2, 1865, and for taking all the prisoners through safely from that point to Winchester, and while performing this duty repelling an attack from and finally defeating the rebel General Rosser with a force quite equal to his own, reaching his destination with more prisoners than he started with.

Lieut. Col. W. P. Robeson, Third New Jersey Cavalry, to be colonel by brevet for gallantry at the battles of Five Forks April 1, Sailor's Creek April 6, and Appomattox Depot April 8, 1865.

Capt. L. W. Barnhart [Sixth] Michigan Cavalry, to be major by brevet for meritorious and distinguished services throughout the entire campaign in front of Richmond and Petersburg, and for especial gallantry at the battle of Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865.

Maj. Joseph O'Keefe, Second New York Cavalry, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for distinguished and meritorious services on the raid from Winchester to the James River, and for great gallantry at the battle of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, and at the battle of Five Forks April 1, 1865, at which place he was very severely wounded while leading his regiment in a dismounted charge upon the enemy's works.

Capt. Mason A. Stone, First Vermont Cavalry, to be major of volunteers by brevet for distinguished services at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, Five Forks April 1, and Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and throughout the pursuit and final capture of the rebel army from Five Forks to Appomattox Court-House.

First Lieut. Vanderbilt Allen, U. S. Engineers, to be major, U. S. Army, by brevet for distinguished services on the raid from Winchester to the James River from February 27 to March 27, 1865, and for meritorious conduct at the battle of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, and great gallantry at the battle of Five Forks April 1, as well as for general good conduct and energy displayed throughout the entire campaign from Petersburg to the final surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox Court-House April 9, 1865.

First Lieut. Carlo A. Woodruff, Second U. S. Artillery, to be major, U. S. Army, by brevet for distinguished services on the James River raid and at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, Five Forks April 1, Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, and throughout the pursuit of the rebel army from Five Forks to Appomattox Court-House.

Asst. Surg. Henry A. Du Bois, U. S. Army, to be major, U. S. Army, by brevet for distinguished services throughout the campaign from Petersburg to the final surrender of the rebel army at Appomattox Court-House, and also for his services during the James River raid and during last summer's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley.

First Lieut. Thomas W. Custer, Sixth Michigan Cavalry, to be major of volunteers by brevet for distinguished conduct at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, Five Forks April 1, Sailor's Creek April 6, 1865, at which latter place he leaped his horse over the enemy's works, being one of the first to enter them, and captured two stand of colors, having his horse shot under him and received a severe wound.

Capt. G. A. Gordon, Second U. S. Cavalry, to be lieutenant-colonel, U. S. Army, by brevet for distinguished services during the cavalry expedition to the James River during the month of May, 1864; at the cavalry engagements of Todd's Tavern, Yellow Tavern, Haw's Shop, Cold Harbor, also at Trevilian, Danbury Cross-Roads, and throughout the cavalry campaign of last year with the Army of the Potomac.

Capt. E. M. Baker, First U. S. Cavalry, to be major, U. S. Army, by brevet for gallant and meritorious services at the battles of Dinwiddie Court-House March 31, 1865, Five Forks April 1, 1865, Sailor's Creek April 6, Appomattox Depot and Appomattox Court-House April 8 and 9, and for energy and zeal displayed in the James River raid from February 27 to March 27, 1865.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General, U. S. Army.

---

No. 200.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry, Army of the Shenandoah.

HDQRS. CAVALRY OF THE ARMY OF THE SHENANDOAH,

April 20, 1865.

GENERAL: During the day of March 28 the command remained at Hancock's Station, in front of Petersburg, being supplied with rations and forage. It marched on the morning of the 29th in the rear of the cavalry of the Army of the Potomac to within a mile of Dinwiddie Court-House, the men, as usual, carrying on their horses five days' rations, thirty pounds of forage, and forty rounds of ammunition. The roads were in a horrible condition, and it was found impossible for the wagon train to reach the point made by the cavalry during the day; in fact, the wagon train did not get up until the third day, it being necessary to corduroy almost the entire road over which the march was made. The Third Division, General Custer, was ordered to remain with the train and guard it, as the enemy's cavalry was known to be on its flank in the neighborhood of Stony Creek Depot.

March 30, the First Division, General Devin, was moved toward the Five Forks from Dinwiddie Court-House, to a point about two miles from the town, near Boisseau's house, where the roads fork. From this point a reconnaissance was sent out on each road. The force on the road to the White Oak road (Colonel Leiper, Sixth Pennsylvania, commanding) met the enemy's pickets a short distance out, and drove them in on the reserves. The force under Major Morris, Sixth United States, which went on the road to the Five Forks, had not proceeded more than three miles before it accomplished a like work. Both reconnaissances developed the enemy's infantry, and each in the lively skirmishing which took place was conducted with great spirit, the officers and men giving an earnest, in the manner in which they fought, of the good work that might be expected of them in the future. The division encamped near Boisseau's house, picketing the advanced positions gained during the day.

March 31 at 9 a. m. the pickets were re-enforced and an advance was made. The enemy resisted strongly, and, in his turn, advanced. His force consisted of Pickett's and Johnson's divisions of infantry, since ascertained to have been over 14,000 strong, and all the enemy's cavalry. The First Division was pressed back slowly but steadily, the men and officers behaving magnificently, contesting every inch of ground and inflicting a very severe loss upon the enemy. General Davies' brigade, of Crook's division, having reported for temporary duty, was ordered to act upon the flanks of the enemy, who at the same time that he attacked in Davies' front also attempted to force a passage of the ford on the Chamberlain Bed, in Crook's front, near Dinwiddie Court-House. General Davies was, however, pushed rapidly in toward the forks of the road, which it soon became apparent the enemy in overwhelming force was trying to gain and that all the resistance the cavalry could offer could not prevent. As part of the First Division was well advanced on the White Oak fork of the road, it was impossible to withdraw it toward Dinwiddie Court-House, and Generals Devin and Davies were ordered to retire fighting toward the Boydton plank road, while General Gibbs was withdrawn toward Dinwiddie Court-House, forming connection with Crook's left. All this was done without confusion, and with a loss to the enemy, as has been ascertained, of at least four to our one. General Devin was ordered to form his command after retiring toward the Boydton plank road, and instructed to attack the enemy in flank and rear if he continued to push toward Dinwiddie Court-House. General Davies, however, assumed command of the entire force, and marched it by the Boydton plank road to Dinwiddie Court-House, forming a junction with the rest of the cavalry at dark. In the meantime the Third Division, which had been sent for, arrived, and, in conjunction with the Reserve Brigade and General Crook's command, formed line of battle in splendid style, ready to receive the enemy, who appeared in great force in our front. Some very spirited fighting occurred, but night coming on the enemy did not press his advance.

The fighting this day on the part of the cavalry was excellent. The enemy was very severely punished, and though by superior numbers he succeeded in forcing us, the movement to the rear was conducted without confusion. The ground on which the fighting took place was very heavy, and for the most part densely wooded; when it was open, it was impossible for a single horseman to cross, owing to the nature of the soil and the heavy rains which had just fallen.

General Custer was charged with the duty of holding the lines during the night, while General Devin was camped in easy supporting distance.

April 1, early in the morning an advance of the Third Division showed that the enemy had withdrawn a short distance from our front during the night. The Third Division was ordered to dismount, the country being impracticable for mounted operations, and move with its left resting on Chamberlain's Bed, toward the Five Forks. The First Division was ordered to move, mounted, to its old position near Boissseau's house and form connection with the Third Division, press the enemy in the same direction (toward the Five Forks). The infantry (Fifth Corps), which had formed a junction and was under the orders of the major-general commanding, was to move up on our right flank toward the White Oak road. The cavalry pressed the enemy back to his intrenchments at the Five Forks, which intrenchments ran parallel to the White Oak road. It was a great source of satisfaction to our gallant men to drive the enemy, outnumbering us as he did, over the same ground from which he had forced us the day before. Every man fought with a will, and not until the enemy's breast-heights, glistening with bayonets, were within fifty yards of our front, did the brave cavalrymen, baptized with the blood of fifty battles, cease the advance, and then only for a moment. The time was occupied in supplying the commands with ammunition and resting the men, who had marched and fought on foot for miles. Word was received from the major-general commanding that the infantry would attack the enemy's works on our right in a very short time, and that the cavalry must co-operate. In anticipation of this orders had been issued for the division and brigade commanders to charge the works in our front so soon as the infantry fire was heard. It could not have been earlier than 3 o'clock when the infantry fire opened. The cavalry, without a moment's hesitation, rushed into close quarters with the enemy, who, having fought the cavalry all day, evidently had concentrated their strength on the works immediately opposed to us. The enemy's artillery in the works commenced firing rapidly, but owing to the woods obscuring the view where the cavalry line was operating, this fire was necessarily inaccurate and not very destructive. A hotter musketry fire than on this day has seldom been experienced during the war. Fortunately for us the enemy, firing from breast-works, aimed high, else the casualties in the command must have been very much greater. General Custer was directed to keep one brigade mounted, in order to make the most of a pursuit when the enemy was dislodged from his works. Every thing worked well. The right of Pennington's brigade, which was thrown into some confusion on account of a deficiency in ammunition, was soon restored, and, the desired ammunition supplied, the attack was presented and soon crowned with success, Fitzhugh's brigade, of the First Division, mounting the works in the face of the enemy, tearing down their colors and planting the brigade standard over two pieces of artillery, which, together with nearly 1,000 prisoners, remained substantial indication of the prowess of this gallant brigade and its accomplished commander. Never did men obey the behests of a commander better, and never were orders given with more judgment or their gallant execution indicated by a better example. Colonel Fitzhugh is entitled to the greatest praise for this day's work. In thus speaking of this brigade it must not be imagined that all did not do well. These headquarters, situated at the connection between the two divisions, saw more of the two brigades (Fitzhugh's and Pennington's) mentioned above than of the others, but in passing along the lines during the battle it was observed that all were doing nobly. No shirking, no straggling, comparatively, was noticed. The reports of division commanders will, it is thought, do justice to all. The results of the day—two of the enemy's best and strongest infantry divisions, together with all his boasted cavalry broken, captured, or routed—are just cause for congratulations, and the cavalry, already famous in the history of the war for the brilliancy of its success, feels proud to share with the infantry of the Army of the Potomac the glory of striking the blow that decided the fate of the Army of Northern Virginia—a blow that made the great heart of the Northern people pulsate with a holy satisfaction.

April 2, the command marched from its camp near the battle-field by the Little White Oak road to a point on the South Side Railroad midway between Ford's and Sutherland's Depots. Here a force of rebel cavalry was met, but retired without offering any resistance to the tearing up of the track. As the occupation of the railroad was secure the advance brigades were ordered to move forward across the road toward Scott's Forks, some five miles north of the railway. An order received from the major-general commanding directing this march ~~commenced~~ it commenced. During the march to this point General division reported to the command and was assigned its column. The cavalry in our front (W. H. F. Lee's) opposed on time to time at points favorable for resistance, building barricades of rails and logs, but he was easily dislodged and driven by the advance back to the fork of the road where the road we marched on intersected the one pursued by the enemy's infantry and trains. Here a spirited fight took place, in which the First Division was engaged with the enemy's infantry. The enemy used his artillery freely. Night fell before the entire command could be got up and in position to attack the enemy, who was strongly posted behind barricades, which, as was found the following morning, extended for miles. General Gregg's brigade, which reported to the command temporarily, together with the rest of the command, was put in camp for the night, during which a connection was formed with the infantry of the Fifth Corps, which had marched up from Sutherland's Depot.

April 3, the command moved forward at daylight and occupied the forks which the enemy had abandoned during the night. The Third Division was ordered to take the advance on the Namozine road in pursuit of the enemy. It was soon after followed by the First Division. General Mackenzie's command was ordered toward the point from which the enemy marched, to pick up the stragglers and others cut off by our movement. In the pursuit numbers of prisoners were captured, together with five guns, by the Third Division. Wells' brigade had a spirited fight with Barringer's brigade of rebel cavalry, routing, dispersing, or capturing the entire command, including the rebel general himself. After marching and fighting over twenty miles the enemy's infantry was found in strong position on Deep Creek, where he had destroyed all the bridges and obstructed the fords, which naturally were very bad and deep. The command encamped for the night at this point. It here became apparent that the enemy were moving to Amelia Court-House with a view to concentrating at that point. In addition to the column which had been pursued during the day on the south side of the Appomattox, large bodies of infantry and trains could be plainly seen on the north side of the river moving toward Beville's and Goode's Bridges over the Appomattox, where the crossing was effected and the junction of the two wings of the rebel army made.

April 4, the march was resumed at 6 a. m., the enemy as usual having made a night's march and disappeared from the front. General Mackenzie's command, which rejoined the column, immediately busied itself with clearing the obstructions from the best ford on Deep Creek, the energetic commander superintending the work. It was intended to cross the entire command at this ford, but after General Mackenzie had crossed it was found that the ford, which was very deep and muddy, was impassable for wheels and impracticable for mounted men. The other two divisions, with all the wagons, were therefore marched to the south side, thus flanking the main stream and crossing its headwaters. The advance reached Beaver Dam Creek at sunset. Here the enemy's infantry was found, his main body being at Amelia Court-House. Some skirmishing ensued, in which the enemy, intrenched as usual, used his artillery. The command was ordered in camp at dark, having determined the position of the enemy's army. In the meantime General Mackenzie, who, after crossing Deep Creek, was ordered to march on Amelia Court-House, reached a point within less than two miles of Amelia Court-House, on a different road from that pursued by the First and Third Divisions. He also found the enemy in force and engaged them with success. At 10 p. m. of this day orders were received from the major-general commanding for the command to move to Jetersville. In less than half an hour the column was on the road, and at daylight on the 5th the head of it had arrived at the point designated. During the 5th of April the command remained at Jetersville, taking position en the right of the infantry with a view to repel a threatened attack of the enemy. General Mackenzie, remaining at his position near Amelia Court-House, reported being engaged more or less during the entire day.

April 6, moved the command at 6 a. m. in the direction of Deatonville. It was soon discovered that the enemy, with his trains, was pushing toward Farmville. The cavalry pressed forward on the flanks of the enemy's route, attacking the column and wagon train at different points, in conjunction with General Crook's command. An attack of the First Brigade, First Division, on the train, which was right gallantly made, having exhibited the enemy to be in great force on the road near Sailor's Creek, Generals Custer and Devin were ordered to move parallel to the enemy's line of march and attack the train and impede the march of the column wherever practicable. This order was obeyed with alacrity by both divisions. General Crook's command was in the meantime operating in the same manner. The First Brigade (Stagg's) of the First Division remained with Miller's battery at the point where the train was first attacked. The battery did excellent service in shelling the enemy's train, practicing on it with wonderful accuracy. Stagg's brigade operated with the Sixth Corps at Sailor's Creek, performing most important service, capturing over 300 prisoners. General Custer succeeded in striking the enemy's train at a point less strongly guarded than at others where it had been attacked and in surprising a park of three batteries of the enemy's artillery. The enemy, concentrating, attacked the Third Division in force, when the First moved rapidly to its assistance, both divisions holding the enemy in check. This movement on the part of these two divisions, assisted on the left by Crook's division of cavalry, cut off three divisions of the enemy's infantry, the entire rear guard of his army, and finally, in conjunction with the movement of the Sixth Corps in the enemy's rear, resulted in the capture of the entire force, including eight general officers and many stand of colors and arms. To continue the operations of the day the First Division was again moved to the left and advanced rapidly in the direction of the firing of the Twenty-fourth (Gibbon's) Army Corps. It soon came up with the rear of the retreating rebel infantry, which made a front in the direction of the advance. It soon became apparent that the Army of the James was not operating with vigor against the enemy, and as darkness came on the command was ordered into camp.

April 7, marched at 6 a. m. on the flank of the infantry, directing the movement to Prince Edward Court-House. Encamped at Spring Creek, four miles toward Prospect Station.

April 8, marched at 6 a. m. through Prospect Station toward Appomattox Court-House. The Third Division, in advance, met with no opposition until it arrived near Appomattox Station. Here the enemy's advance column was struck, moving on the Lynchburg road toward Danville. The enemy's army was in force at Appomattox Court-House. Artillery, prisoners, and wagons were here captured by the Third Division, which rushed into the enemy's lines, carrying all before them. Three trains of cars were also taken by this division, loaded with subsistence stores for Lee's army. The First Division was brought up rapidly, and, deploying dismounted on the right of the Third Division, assisted materially in the captures. This division was advanced within a short distance of Appomattox Court-House, being posted across the road on which the enemy was attempting to move, and effectually destroying his chance of making a night's march in retreat, as he intended to do as on former occasions.

It is impossible to overestimate the value of this day's work. The enemy's supplies were taken, as it were, out of their mouths. A strong force, they knew not how strong, was posted along their line of retreat at a point where they did not expect opposition. Night was upon them; tired, dispirited, and starving they lay at our feet. Their bravest soldiers, their hardiest men, gave way when they heard the noise of battle far in the rear, and the night of despair fell with the night of the 8th of April darkly and terribly on the Army of Northern Virginia.

April 9, at daylight the command was in readiness to move. General Crook relieved the First Division in the position which it had occupied during the night. This division was ordered to move to the right. The enemy advanced against General Crook's front in heavy force. The cavalry was forced back by overwhelming numbers. General Custer was immediately ordered to move up with his division. The cavalry retired slowly, but of necessity. Soon the Twenty-fourth Corps took up Crook's line on the left of the First Division, and the Fifth Corps deployed in rear of General Devin. So soon as the heavy columns of the enemy discovered we had infantry in position he abandoned his evidently formed idea of forcing the road of his retreat, and retired precipitately toward the valley, where his wagon train was parked. The cavalry, now disengaged, was thrown rapidly to the right, taking possession of the high ground on the enemy's left within a short half mile of his camp. There every disposition was made for an attack. The rebel army was at our mercy. The artillery played rapidly for a few moments, when a flag of truce sent from the enemy's lines silenced forever the noise of battle between the Union and rebel armies of Virginia.

April 10, the command marched at 8 a. m. for Burke's Station, under the immediate command of General Custer. The undersigned, having been appointed one of the Union commissioners to arrange the details of surrender, remained at Appomattox Court-House until the 12th instant.

Thus were concluded the labors of the campaign—a campaign, so far as cavalry is concerned, which has scarcely a parallel in history. Never did men behave better; never endure more uncomplainingly the severest of hardships. No task was too severe; no danger too imminent for the cavalry to encounter or overcome. The gallant, daring, and rapid execution of the brave commander of the Third Division, united with the sure, steady, and unchangeable courage and bearing of the commander of the First Division, have accomplished a work which must shed glory on the Union cavalry for all time to come.

In making up this record it was impossible to enter into details with reference to the different commands or officers without extending it to a very great length. The attention of the major-general commanding is respectfully invited to the reports of division commanders transmitted herewith; they will necessarily enter more largely into particulars. The exceptions to those throughout the command who have given the most complete satisfaction are very few. It is enough glory to be associated with such men—a double glory to have commanded them.

To my staff I owe especial thanks; one and all, they performed their duties at all times with judgment, energy, and indefatigable zeal. I commend them to the attention of the major-general commanding.

W. MERRITT,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding Cavalry.

Brigadier-General FORSYTH,

Chief of Staff, Headquarters Cavalry.

71 R R—VOL XLVI, PT. I

No. 201.

Report of Brig. Gen. Thomas C. Devin, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST CAVALRY DIVISION,

April —, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division from March 29 to April 9, 1865, inclusive:

The division—consisting of First Brigade, Col. Peter Stagg, First Michigan Cavalry, commanding; Second Brigade, Col. Charles L. Fitzhugh, Sixth New York Cavalry, commanding, and Reserve Brigade, Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs, commanding—marched from camp in front of Petersburg on the morning of March 29, encamping the same night near Dinwiddie Court-House.

On the morning of March 30 the division advanced to feel the enemy's position, and was disposed as follows: The Second Brigade was massed two miles in front of the Court-House, at the intersection of the Brooks road with that to Five Forks, one regiment of this brigade in advance to the Boydton plank road; the First Brigade massed at Boisseau's house, with a regiment advanced across Gravelly Run toward the White Oak road; two regiments of the Reserve Brigade were advanced upon the direct road to the Five Forks, while the two remaining regiments were thrown out upon the right flank to communicate with the advance of the First Brigade. The whole line formed nearly a semicircle, radiating from the position occupied by Second Brigade. During the day demonstrations were made upon different points of the front, and it was ascertained that the enemy in force occupied the White Oak road and the Five Forks. About 3 p. m. Major Morris, with 150 men of Fifth and Sixth U. S. Cavalry, had pushed the enemy to within three-fourths of a mile of the Five Forks, when he was suddenly surrounded by overwhelming numbers and was forced to cut his way out, losing three officers and a number of men. The First U. S. Cavalry and two regiments of the Second Brigade were at once ordered to his support, and another attempt made to carry the position; but the enemy advancing a strong line of infantry, the command was ordered to retire and encamp a short distance in rear. The position at Five Forks was difficult of approach for cavalry, the front being covered by a swamp and heavy woods.

On the morning of March 31 the First Brigade was advanced, as on the previous day, and the enemy in force were found occupying the White Oak road. The Reserve Brigade was massed at the intersection of the Brooks road, and the Second Brigade was dismounted and advanced toward the Five Forks. It was now ascertained from prisoners captured that the Forks were occupied by Pickett's division of infantry and at least a division of cavalry, and Colonel Fitzhugh was ordered to hold his position and communicate on his left with Davies' brigade, of Second Division. At this time the Second Brigade occupied the apex of a triangle, the left of which was held by Davies' brigade and the right by Stagg's brigade, of First Division. One mile in front of the Second Brigade and across Chamberlain's Swamp were the Five Forks, the direct road to which was held by the Second Brigade. It will thus be seen that Colonel Fitzhugh's position was far in advance of the other lines, necessarily retired by the conformation of the ground. About 2 p. m. heavy firing was heard upon the left of Second Brigade, and immediately after I received a pressing request for support from Colonel Janeway, of Davies' brigade. I at once ordered a regiment of First Brigade to his relief, and on proceeding to that part of the line found the troops retiring precipitately. Finding it impossible to rally them, Major Dana, of the division staff, was sent to order Colonel Fitzhugh to move his brigade by the left flank and take up General Davies' position, leaving a regiment to hold the Five Forks road. This disposition was promptly effected and the enemy's advance checked. At this time a heavy line of infantry moved down the direct road from Five Forks and drove in the Sixth New York, which had been left to hold that front; part of a regiment of First Brigade was pushed in in support of the Sixth, and the enemy was checked, but only for a moment. At the same time the left of the Second Brigade was outflanked, and a heavy line emerged from the woods on its front. In a few minutes the brigade would have been surrounded. I ordered Colonel Fitzhugh to retire and connect with First Brigade. While this was being effected the rebel cavalry charged down the road through their infantry lines, but the stubborn valor and well-directed fire of our men repulsed them on each occasion. Twice the brigade was obliged to halt and charge the enemy while retiring. On reaching the point where I had left the First Brigade I found it had been forced back by the rapid advance of the enemy on our left, who then occupied its position and had cut us off from the cross-roads. Colonels Fitzhugh and Stagg were at once ordered to fall back across the country in the direction of the Brooks road, in accordance with orders from General Merritt, should we be unable to connect with the left. The men retired in order, showing such a front as prevented the rebel cavalry (which now hovered in force upon their right flank) from charging them. A line was now formed in front of the plank road and the led horses (which had been sent toward the left of our infantry) were brought up. I was about to push down the Brooks road and endeavor to connect with the Reserve Brigade, when General Davies (who had joined the division with a portion of his brigade) assumed command, and directed me to march to Dinwiddie Court-House by the plank road. On reporting at Dinwiddie Court-House I was ordered to march to Crump's farm, where the division encamped.

At the time that the First and Second Brigades were forced to retire on the right, the Reserve Brigade (which was massed at the intersection of the Brooks road), with Miller's section of battery, became hotly engaged with the advancing enemy. The brigade was dismounted, and in a brilliant charge drove the exulting foe nearly half a mile; but, as on the right, the heavy masses of the enemy soon pressed back the gallant handful of men. At dark the brigade was relieved by the Third Division. While engaged the section of battery rendered most valuable service in checking the enemy's advance.

On the morning of April 1 the division, nothing daunted by the repulse of the two previous days, again moved toward the stubbornly contested battle-ground of the Five Forks. Colonel Stagg, with the First Brigade, met the enemy as usual at Chamberlain's Swamp, and an infantry line was immediately developed, showing that the position was not to be taken without a hard fight. The whole of the Second Brigade was now dismounted, and Colonel Fitzhugh was ordered to cross the swamp, gain a position on the opposite side, and cover the crossing of the First Brigade mounted. The movement was gallantly effected under a heavy fire, and the First U. S. Cavalry and First and Sixth Michigan Cavalry were crossed on the left of the brigade, while the Fifth Michigan was crossed upon the right to cover that flank. The Reserve Brigade was thrown out upon the right and rear in the direction of the White Oak road. A charge was now ordered to gain the wood in front of the Forks. The Second Brigade, flanked by the cavalry, gallantly advanced at the charging step, and, driving the enemy clear through the woods, developed a strong line of breast-works, covering the Forks and filled with masses of infantry. In this advance the cavalry charged up to within twenty yards of the works, and the dismounted men of the Second Brigade captured and dragged off prisoners from the breast-works. Captain Ham, of Seventeenth Pennsylvania, was mortally wounded at this point. But the work was too strongly held for our line to carry, and the brigade was forced to retire to the wood. The line was thus held until 4.30 p. m., when a brigade of Third Cavalry Division having connected upon our left, and the Fifth Corps advancing to attack the enemy's right flank, the whole division was dismounted and ordered to advance and again charge the enemy's works. Captain Lord, First U. S. Cavalry, was ordered to keep his regiment mounted and in readiness to charge should the enemy's line be broken. The whole line advanced under a terrible fire from the enemy's works; but the regiment on the right of Third Division giving way, the Third Division was halted and reformed. On the second charge the troops on our left again fell back; but notwithstanding this defection, the division pressed forward, the enemy's works were carried after an obstinate struggle, the right was connected with the left of Fifth Corps, the front of the division changed to the left, and the enemy pursued for two miles. As the works were carried Captain Lord was ordered to charge with his regiment, and gallantly responded, clearing the breast-works at a bound, and charging far in advance of the division. In carrying the position we captured on our own front 1,000 prisoners, 2 battle-flags, and 2 guns. Thanks to the friendly cover of the woods, which extended to within less than forty yards of the enemy's works, our loss was comparatively light, except in officers. In some regiments every squadron commander was killed or wounded.

With regard to the conduct of officers and men it is sufficient to state that under the hottest fire not a straggler could be seen along the whole line—every man was in his place and at his work. The division encamped upon the battle-field.

On the morning of April 2 the division marched on the White Oak road, and turning to the right struck the South Side Railroad midway between Ford's and Sutherham's Stations. General W. H. P. Lee's division of rebel cavalry was found in position at this point. Skirmishers were advanced and the division placed in readiness for a fight, but a few rounds from Miller's section of battery were sufficient to induce the enemy to retire with precipitation. The railroad was then torn up, ties burnt, and rails heated and bent. The division then advanced, and turning to the left at Cox's road again came up with Lee's cavalry. Fitzhugh's (Second) brigade, in advance, dismounted and rapidly drove the enemy from one position to another, until, at 5 p. m., we met the rebel infantry in heavy force at Scott's Cross-Roads. A heavy fire of musketry and artillery was at once opened upon the Second Brigade. The First Brigade was dismounted and deployed in support of the Second. Miller's section was placed in position on the road, and by its rapid and effective fire materially assisted in repulsing several attempted charges of the enemy's infantry line on our position. The Reserve Brigade was disposed (mounted) on the flank and in support of the battery. The enemy was finally driven to the shelter of the barricades he had erected covering the cross-roads, from which it was impossible to dislodge him with our limited force. The force opposed to us consisted of Pickett's and Johnson's divisions of infantry and Lee's division of cavalry. At night-fall the command was retired half a mile and encamped, the front being held by the Reserve Brigade and one regiment of First Brigade. During the night the enemy made several attempts to feel our line. Capt. J. H. Bell, of the Second Brigade staff, rendered meritorious service at this point by opening communication with General Sheridan, at Sutherland's Station. Communication was also opened with Crawford's division, of Fifth Corps, which had advanced upon the Nanosine road within a mile of our position. At day-break the lines were advanced, but the enemy had retired.

On the morning of April 3 the division marched in rear of the Third Division by the Nanosine road to Deep Creek, and encamped.

On the morning of April 4 the division crossed Deep Creek, between the Fifth and Second Corps, and, turning to the right, marched to Drummond's Mill, on Beaver Pond Creek. At this point the First Michigan Cavalry was ordered to reconnoiter toward Bevil's Bridge. The division then crossed the creek and immediately met the enemy's infantry (Pickett's and Johnson's divisions) in heavy force, covering the road to Amelia Court-House. The First and part of the Second Brigade was at once dismounted, and led horses sent over the creek. Heavy skirmishing ensued and the position was held until 10 p. m., when the division was ordered to march to Jetersville, on the Danville railroad. After a long and exhausting night march the command reached Jetersville about noon of the 5th, and was placed in position on the left of the Third Division. On being relieved by the Second Corps the division was marched to the rear of the army and encamped.

On the morning of April 6 the division marched in the direction of Deatonsville, following Third Division; soon after the enemy's train was reported to be moving upon the road to Rice's Station, on the South Side Railroad, and the division was ordered to cross the country and attack. The country was broken, intersected with ravines and ditches, but in a very few minutes the division struck the flank of the train, only to find it covered by a heavy force of infantry and artillery in position; moving still farther to the left the same result was obtained. Learning that the Third Division had pushed in on the left of the Second, I moved rapidly toward the left of the Third, hoping to strike the train at a vulnerable point. As I was passing to the rear of Third Division I received an urgent message from General Custer, stating that he had struck and captured part of the train and was hard pressed. On joining him I found it necessary to bring up the division on a gallop, and form on his right, in order to hold the ground across Sailor's Creek and secure his captures. The division succeeded in checking the enemy's advance, and was soon after ordered to the extreme left. The division had scarcely reached its new position when it was found necessary to return to the support of the Third Division, which had been forced back. The enemy being checked, the division was again ordered to the extreme left, and succeeded in reaching the road within two miles of Rice's Station. It was now dark, but the command pushed on and soon struck the enemy's rear guard. They were pushed rapidly forward, until, at the crossing of (upper) Sailor's Creek, we found Mahone's division of infantry in position, with artillery covering the crossing. On attempting to force a crossing the enemy opened a heavy fire of musketry, shell, and canister at short range, and, in accordance with instructions, the division was retired one mile, and encamped at 12 p. m.

I had omitted to state that on first moving to the left the First Brigade and section of battery had remained upon the extreme right and rendered efficient service. Colonel Stagg, in a brilliant charge on the flank of Sixth Corps, captured 300 prisoners. Miller, with Fuger's section, made great havoc in the train by his splendid practice.

At daybreak on the morning of the 7th the division marched on in pursuit of the enemy. It was now ascertained that he had turned to the right in the direction of Farmville, and the command advanced upon that road. I soon after was ordered to countermarch and move in the direction of Prince Edward Court-House, from whence, after a short halt, the division marched to Buffalo Creek and encamped.

On the morning of April 8 the division marched in rear of Third Division to Prospect Station, thence by Walker's Church to Appomattox Station. While en route Lieutenant Trimble, of the division staff, with a regiment of the First Brigade, was ordered to make a reconnaissance to Oak Bank Ford, on the Appomattox, and ascertain whether the enemy were crossing. The reconnaissance was a success, establishing the fact that the enemy's column was marching along the north bank of the Appomattox. On arriving near the station, General Custer was found to be engaged with the enemy's advance, and the First and Second Brigades of the division were dismounted and pushed in on his right. The enemy fell back rapidly to Appomattox Court-House where, being heavily re-enforced, they again advanced and occupied the woods in front of Clover Hill.

At daybreak on the morning of 9th instant Colonel Fitzhugh, with Second Brigade, was about to advance upon the direct road to Appomattox Court-House, when he was relieved by Smith's brigade, of Second Division. On the previous night I had reconnoitered a road on the enemy's left flank leading in the direction of the Court-House. Colonel Fitzhugh was now ordered to advance upon this road and the whole division ordered to mass upon the enemy's left. Heavy firing had at this time commenced on front of Second Division. The command was now moved to the right and well to the front of Second Division, when the enemy was discovered advancing in two heavy lines of battle. Fuger's section of Miller's battery was at once placed in position, and opened a rapid and effective fire; the First Brigade was dismounted and advanced through the woods on the enemy's left; Fitzhugh (who was by this time two miles in advance upon the right) was recalled, and ordered to connect upon the right; and every exertion was made to effect a diversion in favor of General Crook and hold the position until the arrival of our infantry. The heavy masses of the enemy soon forced back the Second Division, and a strong line was now advanced upon the First Division. We were shortly forced back, and, after a hard fight, pushed across the road, Fuger's section remaining in position until the enemy's line was within 100 yards. The Third Brigade having come in the whole line was now dismounted and horses retired; barricades were being erected, and every preparation made to hold the crest in rear, when the Fifth Corps arrived and advanced in line of battle. The division was now ordered to mount and move to the extreme right. As it was requisite to lead the horses far to the right, in order not to retard the advancing line of Fifth Corps, a slight delay occurred in mounting, but the division was ready to take up its position (the Reserve Brigade being already engaged) at the time hostilities were ordered to cease. On that night the command encamped on the field, and on the next day marched to Prospect Station.

Throughout the series of engagements preceding the surrender of the Confederate army the conduct of officers and men was admirable. When at times forced back and overwhelmed by largely superior numbers the command retired in order, and a line could be reformed at any moment. From the nature of the country most of the fighting was dismounted—a most fatiguing and arduous duty for cavalry.

The brigade commanders were prompt. Brigadier-General Gibbs, with his decimated command, rendered on several occasions valuable service. The gallant and determined stand of his brigade while holding an important position near Dinwiddie Court House (March 31) is fast in the memory of all. Colonels Stagg and Fitzhugh fought their brigades with coolness, judgment, and gallantry, and, though at times hotly pressed by heavy masses of the enemy, brought off their commands with slight loss.

The division staff—Major Dana, assistant adjutant-general, Captains Bean and Halberstadt and Lieutenants Trimble, Hill, and Brown—rendered me valuable assistance on all occasions. Lieutenant Wiggins, signal officer, volunteered his services on all occasions, and at Five Forks rendered gallant and efficient service as aide-de-camp. I would respectfully recommend him to the department for promotion. Major King, quartermaster, Captain Hale, commissary, Captain Malone, ordnance officer, and Doctor Clarke, surgeon-in-chief of division, performed their duties with zeal and efficiency.

Among officers of the division conspicuous for gallant services in the late engagements, Lieut. Cols. G. R. Maxwell, First Michigan; Briggs, of Seventh Michigan; Vinton, Sixth Michigan; Hastings, Fifth Michigan, and Captain Crooks, First Michigan—all of First Brigade; Major Morris, and Captains Lord, Dean, and Leib, of Reserve Brigade; and Colonel Durand, Majors White, Smith, and Captains Blunt, Cating, and Bell, of Second Brigade, deserve special mention.

The division captured during the several engagements, from March 30 to April 8, inclusive, 1,434 prisoners of war, 112 of whom were officers; of those about 1,000 were captured in the battle of Five Forks; 2 guns and 4 battle-flags were also captured.

Reports of casualties have already been forwarded.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. C. DEVIN,

Brigadier-General Volunteers, Commanding Division.

Capt. E. M. BAKER,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Cavalry.

No. 202.

Report of Brig. Gen. Alfred Gibbs, U. S. Army, commanding Reserve Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY RESERVE BRIGADE,
Camp near Nottoway Station, April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: In compliance with instructions from headquarters First Cavalry Division, Cavalry Corps, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of this brigade from the time of leaving Petersburg, March 29, to the 9th of April, inclusive:

The brigade—consisting of the First, Fifth, and Sixth United States and Second Massachusetts Cavalry, in all 437 enlisted men, with 20 officers—left camp in front of Petersburg March 29 at 8 a. m. Marched via Reams' Station, and camped near Dinwiddie Court-House. On the 30th moved early, brigade being in advance, skirmishing all day with enemy in vicinity of Dinwiddie Court-House. The Fifth and Sixth U. S. Cavalry, under Maj. R. Murray Morris, Sixth U. S. Cavalry, commanding, were sent up the road toward the Five Corners to feel and find the enemy. The Second Massachusetts, Col. C. Crowninshield, were sent up plank road to the right, while Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Colonel Leiper, were sent up toward White Oak road and midway between the two before mentioned, with orders to communicate with columns on their respective flanks. All the columns soon felt the enemy, driving their vedettes in upon their supports, and these, in turn, upon their reserves. Major Morris gallantly drove in the large force opposed to him and held his position within a short distance of Five Forks until overpowered by numbers he fell back, losing 3 officers and 20 men. The Second Massachusetts and Sixth Pennsylvania also met the enemy whom they were unable to drive, but firmly held their position. They were relieved by First Brigade and First U. S. Cavalry and two regiments of the Second Brigade, under Colonel Fitzhugh, and again occupied position near Five Forks. At sunset the whole force was withdrawn and camped near the junction of roads before mentioned.

* Embodied in table, p. 591.

On the morning of the 31st moved toward Dinwiddie Court-House, and about 1 p. m. took position in the woods at another fork of plank road, the left connecting with Brigadier-General Gregg, and right being directed to connect with the other brigades of the division; this, however, was never effected. Dense masses of enemy's infantry pressed down the road and entirely cut off these two brigades from us; although few in numbers the brigade desperately held its ground for over two hours, disputing every inch of ground until, finally doggedly yielding, when the whole line was driven back by Pickett's division of infantry, losing 5 officers killed and captured and 15 men. Captain Miller's battery, Fourth Artillery, did good service on hill in front of the town. Lieutenant Thompson, aide-de-camp on my staff, was severely wounded, and Major Morris, Sixth U. S. Cavalry, also with me, had his horse killed by my side. Brigade camped that night near Crump's house.

April 1, moved forward through Dinwiddie Court-House and participated in attack on enemy's works near Five Forks. About 2 p. m. the whole line moved gallantly forward upon the enemy's breast-works, the whole brigade being on foot except First U. S. Cavalry, which, under Capt. R. S. O. Lord, gallantly charged the flying masses of the enemy with reckless fury far beyond the advance of rest of brigade. At 5 p. m. the whole line was ours, with large number of prisoners, arms, and other material. In this most desperate conflict I have again to record the loss of 2 officers killed and wounded and 14 men. On the 2d of April the Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, detailed for temporary duty at the headquarters cavalry brigade, moved toward South Side Railroad, of which it destroyed half a mile of track, and moved west, overtaking enemy's infantry near Exeter Mills. Skirmished with enemy until dark; bivouacked on the skirmish line. On the 3d moved in rear of Third Division to near Deep Creek, but did not meet enemy that day. April 4, overtook enemy's infantry and relieved the other brigades on picket; moved out again at 10 p. m. and marched all night, via Dennisville, and reached Jeffersonville (Jetersville?), on the Danville railroad, at 2 p. m.; formed on left of division and remained in line of battle until dark, when brigade was moved over to right and camped in rear of infantry.

On the 6th moved out and attacked enemy's train at Sailor's Creek; after a stubborn fight, slowly advancing, the brigade was withdrawn and moved to left, and about 10 p. m. drove in the pickets of rear of Mahone's division of infantry. While watching enemy were attacked and sharply shelled, losing four men, and bivouacked in the woods half a mile in rear. On 7th moved through Prince Edward Court-House, the advance being at Prospect Station, on Virginia South Side Railroad. No engagement during the day. On the 8th marched through Prospect Station and Walker's Church to near Appomattox Station; met Third Cavalry Division engaged with enemy, and went on its right; skirmished till 10 p. m., and picketed with whole brigade on the right front and across Appomattox Court House road.

On the memorable 9th of April attacked enemy dismounted, on the Appomattox Court-House road. The Fifth U. S. Cavalry were sent in mounted and down a road (on the left) in their front, but were met by a brigade of enemy's infantry, and retired with a loss of four men. The brigade was then mounted and ordered to charge on the right of General Custer's command, which was done in rapid style; but on arriving on the extreme right I was informed that a flag of truce of surrender had passed within our lines, and hostilities were ordered to be suspended. The brigade camped for the night at a wood near Martin's house, one mile in rear of Appomattox Court House.

I have the honor herewith to inclose a nominal list of the officers killed, wounded, and captured, and a numerical list of enlisted men killed, wounded, and missing.*

To the officers of my staff, the commanders of battery and regiments, and to the officers and men of the command generally, my most hearty thanks are due for the unwavering gallantry, fortitude, courage, and pertinacity with which they sustained the fatigues and hardships of this memorable campaign, the exercise of which only could have enabled them to take the distinguished part that they have done. It will always be a source of pride to them to feel that they, too, were in Sheridan's army in the campaign of 1865.

I am, major, your obedient servant,

ALFRED GIBBS,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Maj. A. E. DANA,
Assistant Adjutant-General, First Cavalry Division.

No. 203.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. George A. Custer, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
April 15, 1865.

SIR: The following is a brief summary of the operations of my command since the 29th of March last:

My division left its camp near Petersburg on the morning of the 29th of March. From this date until our arrival within four miles of Dinwiddie Court-House, on the evening of the 31st, we were employed as escort for the trains of the entire command. On the afternoon of the 31st a staff officer from the major-general commanding the cavalry conveyed me an order to move two of my brigades rapidly forward to Dinwiddie Court-House, leaving one brigade as escort for the trains. The two brigades designated moved forward at the trot. Upon reaching Dinwiddie Court-House the head of the column was halted, and I reported for orders to the major-general commanding, who directed me to place my command in position to support and relieve the Second Cavalry Division, then engaged and being driven back. Most of my command were dismounted and placed behind a hastily constructed barricade. Lord's battery of horse artillery, which had been ordered to report to me, was also placed in position. The attacking force of the enemy proved to be infantry. Several vigorous efforts were made to displace us from our position. A strong line of the enemy's infantry, formed across the road leading to Five Forks, was charged by portions of the First and Third Brigades, and driven handsomely until their supports were reached and they were enabled to make a stand. No further demonstration was made upon either side. My command bivouacked within short range of the enemy's line of battle. In anticipation of an early attack the next morning my command slept upon their arms, but daylight disclosed to us the retreat during the night of the enemy. The march was resumed early next day in the direction of Five Forks, connection being made with the Fifth Corps at a point about two miles distant from Dinwiddie Court-House. My command then left the road leading direct to Five Forks and moved across the country parallel to the White Oak Creek. No opposition from the enemy was encountered until the advance had nearly reached the road leading from Five Forks across White Oak Creek. A brief skirmish ensued for the possession of this road, which resulted in the enemy being driven back in the direction of Five Forks, we pursuing until communication was restored upon our right with the left of the First Division. The enemy had evidently resolved to oppose our further advance with the greatest determination. Heavy lines of earth-works were discovered, extending for miles in either direction along our front. In advance of these were strong barricades of rails, logs, and other obstructions. Every point seemed to be strongly manned with infantry and artillery. Repeated charges by portions of my command at various points showed the enemy to be in heavy force. At one time my entire command was dismounted and fighting as infantry in the woods skirting along the enemy's front. Nothing was accomplished in this manner. About one hour and a half before dark a staff officer informed me that the major-general commanding had placed the Fifth Corps in position to assault the enemy's left. The First Cavalry Division had been dismounted and were to attack in the center, while my command was to engage the enemy on his right, keeping up the connection with the First Cavalry Division. An examination of the ground in front and on the enemy's right seemed to favor a movement by a mounted force against the enemy's right and rear. With this object in view I deployed the First Brigade dismounted, Colonel Pennington commanding, along the entire line held by my division. The Second and Third Brigades, commanded, respectively, by Colonels Wells and Caphart, were mounted and moved opposite the extreme right of the enemy, and waited the opening of the general assault before advancing to turn the enemy's right flank. As soon as the firing on the line held by the Fifth Corps indicated the inauguration of the attack the Second and Third Brigades were moved at a gallop against the right of the enemy's line of battle. To cover the movement and to draw the fire of the enemy's batteries in front

* Embodied in table, p. 591.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bliss, of the Eighth New York Cavalry, was directed to charge with his regiment upon the enemy's batteries. Without a hope of successfully carrying the enemy's position Lieutenant-Colonel Bliss gallantly led his regiment up to the very muzzles of the enemy's guns, at the same moment exposed to a terrible cross-fire from the enemy's infantry posted in rifle-pits and behind barricades within easy range. Although suffering a heavy loss in men and horses and compelled to retire the object of the charge was accomplished. Before the enemy could shift the position of his batteries my columns had pushed past the extreme right of his line and were moving rapidly to place themselves directly in rear of his position. Although this movement was almost entirely under the view of the enemy it was so rapid he was unable to prevent it. W. H. F. Lee's division of cavalry was discovered to be moving upon us. Portions of each command moved simultaneously to the attack. For some time success was varied and uncertain. My line was then facing in the same direction toward which that of the enemy had faced two hours before, the enemy being between my command and the line of battle of the Fifth Corps and First Cavalry Division. The gradual nearing of the firing indicated that the enemy's left was being forced back. This fact had its influence on the position of the enemy with whom we were engaged and aided us in effecting a total rout of the entire force of the enemy. The retreat of over 5,000 of the rebels was then cut off, and this number was secured as prisoners of war. Besides these the loss in killed and wounded was very heavy. The First Connecticut Cavalry, belonging to the First Brigade, was the first regiment to gain the enemy's works, and succeeded in capturing two pieces of artillery, which were at once turned upon the retreating foe. The pursuit was maintained over a distance of six miles and only ended on account of the darkness. Returning from the pursuit at a late hour my command encamped on the battle-field.

Soon after daylight the following morning the pursuit was taken up, the command moving toward the South Side Railroad—one brigade crossing the latter at Ford's Station, the other two brigades crossing at a point between Ford's and Sutherland's Stations. But little skirmishing was had with the enemy during the day. The entire command encamped that night near the intersection of the Sutherland Station road and the Namozine road. On the morning of the 3d moved on the road leading to Amelia Court-House. The enemy was found posted at the crossing of Namozine Creek, having destroyed the bridge and erected strong breast-works on the opposite bank. Under a heavy canister fire from one of our guns a force of dismounted men were thrown across the creek some distance and flanked the enemy from his position. After removing the felled trees and other obstructions from the ford my entire command crossed and began a vigorous pursuit of the enemy. He was not permitted to make any decided stand until near Namozine Church, when about one brigade of his cavalry charged my advance and endeavored to break it. Colonel Wells, commanding the advance brigade, repulsed the charge with the Eighth New York Cavalry alone. At Namozine Church the enemy divided his forces—Fitzhugh Lee's division moving toward Amelia Court-House, W. H. F. Lee's division taking the road leading to Bevil's Bridge, across the Appomattox. I directed Colonel Wells, with his brigade, to pursue the former, while Colonel Capohart, commanding Third Brigade, was ordered to pursue the latter. Colonel Pennington, commanding First Brigade, was directed to send one regiment in support of each brigade, holding the remainder of his brigade in reserve at the cross-roads. A running fight then ensued on both roads, the enemy being driven at the gallop before a vastly inferior force. Prisoners, guns, and battle-flags were captured all along the line of retreat. After crossing Sweat House Creek the enemy were re-enforced by six brigades of infantry. Here a desperate struggle took place, which gave a temporary check to our farther advance. As soon as the brigade in rear had reached the ground another advance was ordered, but the enemy had not waited to receive it. It was found impossible to again overtake him that day. The command encamped on Sweat House Creek. From this point we marched to Jetersville, on the Danville railroad, reaching the latter point at 7 a. m. of the 5th. Leaving Jetersville at 6 a. m. of the 6th we marched to Harper's farm, on Sailor's Creek, where we charged and routed the forces guarding the enemy's wagon train, capturing over 300 wagons. While engaged in securing and destroying this train two divisions of rebel infantry, commanded by Generals Kershaw and Custis Lee, the whole under command of Lieutenant-General Ewell, attacked my command with a view to recapturing their train. After a severe engagement, during which my command was several times driven back, the enemy's line of battle was broken by a charge of the Third Brigade, supported by a portion of the First. The enemy was driven from his breast-works in great confusion. Thousands of his men were captured on the spot, others surrendered after a short pursuit. Besides these advantages already gained we secured a strong position in rear of that of the enemy's force engaging the Sixth Corps, which eventually compelled the surrender of the entire force of the enemy engaged on that part of the field. Lieutenant-General Ewell and six other general officers were captured at this point by my command. In addition, we captured 15 pieces of artillery and 31 battle-flags. After the pursuit had ended my division encamped upon the battle-field.

From Sailor's Creek we moved, on the 7th and 8th, without opposition until we reached Appomattox Station, where we surprised the enemy and captured three large trains of cars loaded with rations for the rebel army. The locomotives being in good running order the trains, with their contents, were run back to a point of safety, in the direction of Farmville. Learning that the enemy was moving a large train upon the road from Appomattox Court-House across the Lynchburg railroad I ordered the entire division forward to attack. The train was found to be guarded by about two divisions of infantry, in addition to over thirty pieces of artillery, all under command of Major-General Walker. Most of the enemy's guard were placed in position and their fire concentrated upon the road over which it was necessary for me to advance. The enemy succeeded in repulsing nearly all our attacks, until nearly 9 o'clock at night, when by a general advance along my line he was forced from his position and compelled to abandon to our hands twenty-four pieces of artillery, all his trains, several battle-flags, and a large number of prisoners. Our loss was slight. Our advance reached Appomattox Court-House that night and charged into the camp of the rebel army.

The following morning my command was moved toward Appomattox Court-House, about which point the entire rebel army was massed. Moving at a rapid gait and under a heavy artillery fire I placed my command upon the extreme right of our army, which was then moving to the attack of the enemy's position. Driving back his skirmishers, we had almost gained possession of his trains, when a staff officer of General Longstreet came galloping into our lines under a flag of truce, requesting a suspension of hostilities. After making a proper disposition of my force either to repel or make an attack the truce was agreed to until instructions could be received from the proper authority. The result is already known.

The rapidity with which battle followed battle in the late campaign, each time resulting in a glorious victory for our arms, has prevented me from going into detail. A mere reference to each important engagement is all that has been attempted in this report.

During the brief period of ten days my command captured in open battle 46 pieces of artillery and 37 battle-flags. This of itself is the best evidence I could wish to offer of the gallantry and heroism displayed by this division.

Respectfully submitted.

G. A. CUSTER,

Brevet Major-General, Comdg. Third Cavalry Division.

Brevet Major-General MERRITT,

Acting Chief of Cavalry.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION,

May 20, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded.

In justice to the Second Brigade of the First Division, Colonel Fitzhugh commanding, it is stated that the two pieces of artillery captured at the Five Forks by the cavalry are claimed as captured by his brigade. The infantry, I hear, also claims to have captured these guns. They were, I think, without doubt, captured by Colonel Fitzhugh's command, which conducted itself with pre-eminent gallantry on this most important occasion. The undersigned was there and saw it.

W. MERRITT,

Major-General, Commanding Cavalry.

APPENDIX.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,

Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 9, 1865.

SOLDIERS OF THE THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION:

With profound gratitude toward the God of battles, by whose blessings our enemies have been humbled and our arms rendered triumphant, your commanding general avails himself of this his first opportunity to express to you his admiration of the heroic manner in which you have passed through the series of battles which to-day resulted in the surrender of the enemy's entire army. The record established by your indomitable courage is unparalleled in the annals of war. Your prowess has won for you even the respect and admiration of your enemies. During the past six months, although in most instances confronted by superior numbers, you have captured from the enemy in open battle 111 pieces of field artillery, 65 battle-flags, and upward of 10,000 prisoners of war, including 7 general officers. Within the past ten days, and included in the above, you have captured 46 pieces of field artillery and 37 battle-flags. You have never lost a gun, never lost a color, and have never been defeated, and notwithstanding the numerous engagements in which you have borne a prominent part, including those memorable battles of the Shenandoah, you have captured every piece of artillery which the enemy has dared to open upon you. The near approach of peace renders it improbable that you will again be called upon to undergo the fatigues of the toilsome march, or the exposure of the battle-field, but should the assistance of keen blades, wielded by your sturdy arms, be required to hasten the coming of that glorious peace for which we have been so long contending, the general commanding is proudly confident that in the future, as in the past, every demand will meet with a hearty and willing response. Let us hope that our work is done, and that, blessed with the comforts of peace, we may soon be permitted to enjoy the pleasures of home and friends.

For our comrades who have fallen, let us ever cherish a grateful remembrance. To the wounded and to those who languish in Southern prisons, let our heartfelt sympathies be tendered.

And now, speaking for myself alone, when the war is ended and the task of the historian begins; when those deeds of daring which have rendered the name and fame of the Third Cavalry Division imperishable, are inscribed upon the bright pages of our country's history, I only ask that my name may be written as that of the commander of the Third Cavalry Division.

G. A. CUSTER,
Brevet Major-General.

---

No. 201.

Report of Col. Alexander C. M. Pomington, Third New Jersey Cavalry, commanding First Brigade.

HQRS. FIRST BRIGADE, THIRD CAVALRY DIVISION,
Nottoway Court-House, Va., April 15, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my brigade since the 29th of March last, when the command started upon the recent campaign:

Left camp on the Petersburg and Norfolk Railroad on the morning of March 29, in company with the division, and camped that night, or rather bivouacked, west of Rowanty Creek. Moved forward the next day about noon with my brigade, by order of General Custer, and halted and camped about four miles from Dinwiddie Court-House. Being some distance in advance of the camps of the other portions of the division, I threw out pickets for my own protection, and sent back details to corduroy the road for the passage of the wagon train, which was causing considerable delay to the column. Took my place in the column the following day, marching in rear of Colonel Capenhart's brigade, which had the advance. On reaching Dinwiddie Court-House I received instructions from General Custer to move up rapidly to the front at a trot and to support General Smith's brigade, which was falling back on the left of the road. When about forming my command on the left of the road, I received an order from General Sheridan, through a staff officer, to put my men in on the right of the road; this I did, advancing the Second Ohio and Third New Jersey Cavalry. The First Connecticut had not yet reached the ground, and the Second New York, which had been sent forward with dispatches the night before, was guarding the Boydton plank road at its crossing with Stony Creek. The Second Ohio Cavalry and Third New Jersey advanced at a charge, dismounted, across the field, but the enemy developed a vastly superior force of infantry, and after a sharp skirmish, in which they lost 3 officers and 18 men wounded, these regiments were obliged to fall back. I reformed the line upon a crest on the right of the main road, connecting on my left with the Third Brigade, Colonel Capehart commanding, threw up breast-works, and remained till following morning, when it was ascertained that the enemy had left our immediate front.

About 9 a. m. April 1 I formed my brigade in line of battle, holding the Second Ohio in reserve and connecting on my left with the Third Brigade; moved toward Five Forks, following the course of Chamberlain's Bed. Very few of the enemy were met until we reached the vicinity of Five Forks, when the enemy were discovered in force with infantry, cavalry, and artillery. I had formed near this point a connection on my right with First Michigan Cavalry, of First Brigade, First Division, Lieutenant-Colonel Maxwell commanding, but it was not until I had engaged the enemy that I found, on consulting with Lieutenant-Colonel Maxwell, the First Michigan did not connect with my regiment on its right, and that he, Lieutenant-Colonel Maxwell, intended to draw off his regiment and endeavor to form connection with First Division. He withdrew his regiment and I withdrew my line from the view of the enemy, not deeming it prudent to advance with my right flank so much exposed. Moving my brigade by the right flank, I succeeded in connecting with the left of Colonel Fitzhugh's brigade, of First Division, which brigade was also dismounted. I omitted to state that my own as well as Colonel Capehart's brigade were dismounted from the time the advance was ordered. On making connection my right rested on a wood road leading to Five Forks, and the left of Colonel Fitzhugh's brigade rested on the same road. Both commands were formed in a very thick piece of woods, almost impenetrable for horsemen, and which extended to the enemy's line of works at Five Forks. My line was about 600 yards from that of the enemy. I ordered the command to throw up log breast-works and awaited orders. I had previously been informed that the Fifth Army Corps was to make an attack at Five Forks by the way of White Oak road, and while awaiting this attack one of General Custer's staff officers rode up and told me the general desired to see me. I found him on a road which made an acute angle with that upon which my right rested, the angle being at Five Forks; the left of my line rested on or near this road. The general directed me to send for my led horses, which were some distance in our rear, and upon their arrival to mount my brigade and follow the other two brigades of the division, with which he was about moving to attack the enemy's right. I had already sent two staff officers for my led horses, and I now sent another. While still conversing with the general, a heavy fire of musketry indicated that the infantry attack had commenced. I expressed my opinion to the general that there appeared to be heavy firing on the front of my line; he assured me that the firing was not on my line, and a moment after rode away. He had scarcely gone when one of my staff officers, who had been left on the other road, rode up at a gallop and informed me that General Merritt had ordered the line forward and that the brigade was engaged. I mounted my horse and with all haste repaired to the spot and arrived just as my line had fallen back, the causes assigned being that the First Division had failed to keep up proper connection; that everything had disappeared from the left of the line, there being no connection, and that the men were nearly out of ammunition. I again advanced the line, and through the kindness of Major Dana, assistant adjutant-general, First Cavalry Division, who furnished me with a mounted detail, I succeeded in procuring a supply of ammunition, which was delivered and distributed to the men on the line of battle, while heavily engaged; by Capt. A. C. Houghton, Second Ohio Cavalry, and acting aide-de-camp, and Lieut. James Moffitt, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, both of my staff. They both deserve credit for the zeal and energy displayed by them in the performance of this duty. I desire in this connection to mention Private Alexander Gibbs, of Company H, Second Ohio Cavalry, and orderly for Capt. A. C. Houghton, who was intiring in his efforts to supply the men with ammunition, and displayed considerable gallantry in riding along the line of battle distributing it. After repeated charges the brigade carried the breast-works in its front, the First Connecticut Cavalry taking two pieces of field artillery (3-inch rifles); one of the pieces was captured by Major Goodwin, and the other by Lieutenant Lanfare.*

The following are the casualties in the brigade in this engagement, viz: 2 officers killed, 9 officers wounded; 47 enlisted men wounded, 7 enlisted men killed.

Marched with the division across the South Side Railroad next day and camped near Nanosine Creek. The following day, April 3, marched in rear of the division, the Second and Third Brigades being engaged all day in a running fight with the enemy. From Nanosine Church I sent forward to the support of the Third Brigade the Third New Jersey and the Second New York Cavalry, by order of General Ouster. These regiments were engaged near Sweet House Creek at the last stand made by them during the day, and sustained the following casualties, viz: 4 enlisted men killed, 3 officers and 21 enlisted men wounded. I reached the point where the command was engaged with the remaining regiments of the brigade just as the enemy were pressing one regiment, already engaged, back with considerable vigor. I formed line to cover their falling back, but did not become engaged, the enemy not seeming inclined to advance any further. Made a reconnaissance toward Deep Creek bridge to ascertain the whereabouts of the enemy after dark, but received orders to return to camp after having advanced about three miles. Marched with the division to Jetersville on the night of 4th of April, reaching it about 7 a. m. on the 5th, crossed Danville railroad and formed line with the division on left of infantry, and about 3 p. m. moved to the right and encamped.

Broke camp at 6 a. m. on April 6, and marching in advance of the division to Harper's farm, on Sailor's Creek, charged the enemy's wagon train with the entire brigade, encountering only a line of skirmishers, all of which was captured, together with about 300 wagons, about 800 mules and horses, and 10 pieces of artillery. The wagons were destroyed or rendered unserviceable subsequently, when the enemy in strong force under General Ewell advanced to relieve their train, my command participating in the affair which resulted in the capture of General Ewell and his command. The following are the captures made by my brigade during the day, viz: 190 commissioned officers (including Generals Kershaw, Du Bose, and Hunter [Huntton]), 1,834 enlisted men, 11 battle-flags, 10 pieces of artillery, 2 caissons, 1 limber, and 800 mules and horses; about 300 wagons were captured and destroyed or rendered unserviceable.

The brigade marched with the division on the 7th and 8th, and on evening of 8th, being in advance, captured three trains of cars, with locomotives attached, loaded with supplies, at Appomattox Station, and participated in the engagement which took place subsequently, capturing 6 pieces of artillery, 100 prisoners, and 50 mules. Formed my brigade on road leading from Appomattox Court-House to Appomattox Station, and remained until all the captured wagons and artillery had been removed, and then moved to near the railroad and encamped.

* Awarded a Medal of Honor.

In the morning of April 9 moved with the division, and remained all day formed on the right of the army, while the flag of truce was pending, which resulted in the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia. Marched on the 10th to Prospect, and thence to Nottoway Court-House, Burkeville, reaching it April 13.

During the time embraced in this report my brigade has captured 18 pieces of artillery, 11 battle-flags, about 2,500 prisoners, including 3 generals and 190 commissioned officers, 2 caissons, 1 limber, about 300 mules, with their teams, 3 trains of cars, with their locomotives, loaded with supplies. The Second Ohio Cavalry destroyed about 2,000 stand of arms. The casualties since leaving Petersburg are as follows, viz: Officers killed, 23 officers wounded; 21 enlisted men killed, 97 enlisted men wounded.*

All men and officers have behaved with great gallantry throughout the campaign. The regimental commanders—Col. A. M. Randol, commanding Second New York; Col. Brayton Ives, commanding First Connecticut Cavalry; Lieut. Col. William P. Robeson, commanding Third New Jersey Cavalry; and Albert Barnitz, commanding Second Ohio Cavalry—deserve especial commendation for marked gallantry in action for the energy and skill with which they handled their regiments. My thanks are due to my staff officers for the promptness and zeal displayed by them in delivering orders. Those who were under fire died uniformly with marked bravery.

The following are the names of those composing my staff: Capt. Charles H. Miller, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. R. B. Lawder, Second Ohio Cavalry, acting assistant inspector-general; Capt. A. C. Lighton, Second Ohio Cavalry, acting aide-de-camp; Lieut. Ray T. Clon, Second New York Cavalry, acting aide-de-camp; Lieut. O. B. Zoegel, Third New Jersey Cavalry, acting aide-de-camp; Lieut. S. Hinman, First Connecticut Cavalry, acting aide-de-camp; Surg. G. Earlbot, First Connecticut Cavalry, surgeon-in-chief.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. O. M. PENNINGTON,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Captain BARNHART,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Division.]

No. 205.

Order of Maj. James Bliss, Eighth New York Cavalry, Second Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,

April 17, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this regiment since March 27:

On the 27th and 28th ultimo were encamped at Hancock's Station. On the 29th ultimo moved out in morning to Rowanty Creek and remained in line of battle, saddled, all night. 30th, toward evening moved about three miles and camped for night. Remained until evening of 31st, when ordered to assist wagon train in getting to the front, which occupied all night. Got train through on morning 1st [instant] and went to front, and in afternoon became engaged with Pickett's rebel division of infantry, and lost several men killed and wounded; about twenty horses were killed. Camped about 11 p. m. Morning 2d instant moved out and crossed South Side Railroad; about six miles came upon the enemy near Namozine Creek and camped for night. 3d instant, marched at 6 a. m.; after crossing the creek took the advance and met the enemy at Namozine Church passing several caissons wagons, &c., on road abandoned by enemy; had severe fight; drove the enemy in great confusion; our loss quite severe; came up to Johnson's rebel division infantry, when we were obliged to halt; moved on road to right and joined the division at Doctor Taylor's farm and encamped. April 4, moved at 8 o'clock about eighteen miles; went into camp at 5 p. m.; ordered out 11 p. m., and marched all night to join General Sheridan's forces; halted at 8 a. m., and formed line of battle on left of Fifth Corps; at 2 o'clock were relieved by Second Corps and moved two miles to right and encamped for night. April 6, went on reconnaissance to Amelia Court-House, regiment in advance, picking up numerous stragglers on way; found the enemy had left, burning 98 caissons and abandoning large quantities of ammunition; joined the division at Harper's farm 9 p. m. and camped. April 7, moved through Prince Edward Court-House to four miles beyond and camped. April 8, moved at 6 a. m. and marched until evening, when came upon enemy near railroad; had severe fight, drove the enemy, and took part in capturing trains of cars, wagons, guns, &c.; moved back three miles and went into camp about 12 o'clock. April 9, moved out at 8 a. m.; regiment deployed as skirmishers on left of division; skirmished about an hour, when flag of truce was received and operations ceased; collected regiment, and encamped on right of Appomattox Court-House. April 10, moved to Prospect Station and camped. April 11, moved to Rice's Station and encamped. April 12, moved to near Burkeville and encamped. April 13, moved to Nottoway Court-House and encamped. April 14, 15, and 16, remained at Nottoway Court-House.

* But see revised table, p. 591.

Very respectfully, &c.,

JAS. BLISS,

Major Fifth New York Cavalry, Commanding.

[Capt. J. J. McVEAN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.]

No. 206.

Report of Col. John J. Coppinger, Fifteenth New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Near Nottoway Station Court-House, Va., April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to orders from headquarters Second Brigade, I have the honor to report the operations of this regiment since March 27, 1865, as follows:

The command reached camp near Petersburg, Va., on the 27th day of March, 1865; remained there for two days. Proceeded on the morning of the 30th of March, 1865, to Stony Creek Cross-Roads, and performed picket duty until the night of the 31st of March, 1865, when part of the regiment was detailed to lay corduroy and assist in lifting out wagons that were stuck in the mud.

April 1, at about 11 a. m. reached Dinwiddie Court-House, Va.; rested in vicinity of Court-House until 1 p. m.; proceeded then to the front (Five Crossings), on the left of our line, under command of colonel Second Brigade. Our regiment being in advance, was ordered to take down the fences in front of the enemy's works (consisting of log and rail fortifications, with batteries behind them) and to throw out skirmishers, after which the regiment was ordered to charge the works. We were twice repulsed with some loss; rallied and charged the third time, under a heavy cross fire of the enemy's musketry and artillery, in a different direction, more to the left, being more successful; we drove the enemy in disorder, thereby capturing a number of prisoners; proceeded about two miles to the front, and after dispersing the enemy returned and encamped upon the battle-ground.

Our casualties were as follows: 5 killed, 27 wounded, 5 missing.

April 2, marched in the direction toward Appomattox River, distance about twelve miles; went into camp about 7 p. m.; heavy firing during the evening and night. The next morning the enemy disputed our advance at Nemozine Church; we charged and captured a number of prisoners and horses. First Sergt. John McGough, Company A, was killed here.

April 3, at night went on picket at Five Cross-Roads, distance about twenty miles from Nemozine Church, and by aid of Major Young, chief of scouts, captured and brought into our lines General Barringer and part of his staff, the regiment being detached from the brigade at the time. April 4, marched thirty-one miles; encamped near Amelia Court-House; broke camp about 11 p. m., and reached Jetersville next day, making fifteen miles.

The following day the regiment went with the brigade on a reconnaissance to Amelia Court-House, and joined the division near Harper's farm same night.

April 7, reached neighborhood of Prospect Station and went on picket until morning of April 8; marched by Prospect Station and Prince Edward Court-House in direction toward Appomattox Court-House; struck railroad about 6 p. m.; heard heavy skirmishing and artillery firing, and were ordered to charge the enemy through the woods, the first and part of the second battalions being deployed as skirmishers in an open field to our right. The enemy continued to throw shell and canister. We then were ordered to advance, driving the enemy and capturing a number of prisoners, guns, caissons, wagons, and ambulances. A portion of the regiment charged up as far as Appomattox Court-House, where the enemy was found in force, thus rendering necessary for our troops to return to camp near railroad.

Casualties on the night of the 8th: 2 killed, 5 wounded, and 1 missing. Among the killed was Lieut. Col. Augustus I. Root, who was shot about fifteen rods from [the] Appomattox court-house while gallantly performing his duty in the extreme advance.

April 9, at about 8 a. m. struck camp near railroad and moved with the Third Cavalry Division upon a line almost parallel with the enemy's line for a distance of about one mile and a half, part of this time under fire of the enemy's artillery, to a point opposite and near Appomattox Court-House, when a flag of truce of the enemy made its appearance in front of our column, which soon returned to the enemy's lines after having a conference with Major-General Custer. A skirmish with Hampton's cavalry on the right now took place; we drove the enemy. Our loss on the morning of the 9th was 1 killed and 3 wounded.

Total loss of Fifteenth New York Cavalry since March 27, 1865: Killed, 9; wounded, 35; missing, 6.*

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN J. COPPINGER,

Colonel Fifteenth New York Cavalry, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. J. J. McVREAN,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Brigade, Third Division.

No. 207.

Report of Lieut. Col. Josiah Hall, First Vermont Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST VERMONT CAVALRY,

April 16, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the regiment since the 27th ultimo:

On the 27th and 28th remained in camp in front of Petersburg. The 29th we moved out from before Petersburg, marched all day toward the left, and encamped near Hatcher's Run. The 30th, it being a very rainy day, we marched but a short distance, assisting, however, during the entire day, the wagon trains by repairing the road, &c. The 31st remained in camp until 12 m., while we again repaired the roads. At 12 m. moved out, repairing and building roads, and encamped late on the Vaughan road.

On the 1st of April left the train to rejoin, with the brigade, the division; participated in the fight near the Five Points; captured several prisoners, losing 5 men wounded, and several horses killed; followed up the enemy until a late hour, when we went on picket for the balance of the night. April 2, moved out at 9 a. m. toward the railroad. We held the advance, met the enemy, and drove them; remained on picket and skirmish line while the rest of the division was destroying the railroad. At 1 p. m. moved again; crossed the railroad at Poplar Station and encamped for the night. April 3, moved out early toward George's Creek, where the enemy was found disputing the crossing. We drove him by flanking him, and kept up a lively march until we reached Namozine Church. Here we were strongly engaged with the enemy; charged and drove him eight miles, capturing 100 prisoners, 100 horses, 1 gun, several ambulances, &c., losing 2 men killed and 6 wounded. Encamped this night near Deep Creek. April 4, crossed Deep Creek, marched all day and encamped ten miles from Amelia Court-House; moved out from this place at 12 the same night and reached Jeter's Station at 9 a. m. the following day. April 5, moved to the left of the Fifth Corps; remained in line of battle all day; at 5 p. m. moved back about two miles and encamped for the night. April 6, moved to the right, marched all day and encamped near Sailor's Creek. April 7, moved out early, passed through Prince Edward Court-House and encamped near Chickentown. April 8, marched hard all day; reached Appomattox Station at 6 p. m.; had a severe fight with the enemy; captured 6 guns, 12 wagons, 7 ambulances, and many prisoners, losing 1 man killed, 9 wounded, and several horses killed. April 9, we moved out early toward the enemy; charged the left of the enemy's line, capturing several prisoners and horses, losing 2 men wounded, and several horses killed; were charging the enemy when the order came to stop firing, as they had given indication of a surrender; remained in line of battle all day on Clover Hill, where we encamped for the night. April 10, moved back, marching all day, and encamped near Prospect Station. The 11thth marched all day, and encamped near Rice's Station. The 12thth marched all day; reached Burke's Station and encamped for the night. April 13, marched all day; reached within one mile of Nottoway Court-House and encamped. On the 14th, 15th, and 16th remained in the same camp.

* But see revised table, p. 591.

I have the honor to be, respectfully,

J. HALL,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. M. A. STONE,

Acting Assistant Inspector-General.

No. 208.

Report of Maj. Gen. George Crook, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, Army of the Potomac.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
April 18, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report the operations of the Second Cavalry Division, Army of the Potomac, during the campaign which ended with the capitulation of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia on the 9th instant.

On the 29th ultimo the Second Cavalry Division—composed of three brigades, commanded, respectively, by Brig. Gen. H. E. Davies, Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. I. Gregg, and Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles H. Smith—left its old encampment in front of Petersburg and marched to Dinwiddie Court-House. Gregg's brigade being in the advance skirmished with small bands of the enemy's cavalry after he crossed the Rowanty Creek until he reached the Court-House. The next day he lay in camp, Davies' brigade going to support General Merritt in the vicinity of Five Forks. The next morning the enemy made a demonstration in Merritt's front, when Smith's brigade was posted at Chamberlain's crossing of Stony Creek, and Davies' brigade at another crossing of the same creek, about one mile above, while Gregg's brigade was held in reserve. At 11 a. m. the enemy made quite a fierce attack on Smith, who repulsed them very handsomely with severe loss. I might here state that the country in the vicinity of the creek was covered with a dense pine thicket, so that cavalry could only fight to advantage on foot. At about 1 p. m. the enemy anticipated our attack on them by their infantry forcing a passage both above and below Davies, cutting him off from Smith. Gregg was now ordered to attack the enemy, which he did very gallantly, causing his temporary falling back up the creek. Davies being compelled to fall back by overwhelming numbers fought his way back stubbornly, eventually working his way around to our right, and joining the division just after night-fall on the Vaughan road. Shortly after the attack on Davies' brigade the enemy made another furious attack on Smith with artillery and cavalry. He very gallantly repelled all their attacks until evening, when his ammunition was exhausted; he was compelled to fall back. Gregg's ammunition being about exhausted was also compelled to fall back in front of their infantry, who were now advancing down the road toward the Court-House. The enemy not advancing farther than the junction of the two roads, the division went into camp for the night on the Vaughan road, some three miles from Dinwiddie. Nothing but occasional skirmishing occurred on the march from Dinwiddie Court-House to Jetersville. We arrived at the latter place on the 4th instant.

The next morning Davies was ordered to make a reconnaissance to the left. He made a handsome capture of guns, prisoners, &c. (for particulars see his report). I went with the other two brigades to assist in reaching camp with his captives. The enemy attacked his rear guard just beyond Amelia Springs, but was repulsed. Gregg's brigade coming up at this juncture both brigades fell back as soon as the road became clear, Davies' brigade in the advance. Soon it was reported the enemy had attacked the advance guard guarding the captures, when Smith's and Davies' were sent at once to repel this attack, which was done very handsomely, allowing the captures to reach camp safely. The fighting continued all along my front until near night-fall, when the enemy desisted. The division then went into camp for the night at Jetersville, picketing the country in our front.

On the morning of the 6th the division moved on the Pride's Church road for Deatonsville. Ascertained that the enemy were moving through the latter place on the Jamestown road. Attempted to cut their train from the road crossing the Genito road at Atkinson's, but found this road strongly guarded by both infantry and cavalry. Moved across the country and struck the road on which the enemy were moving still farther to the left, and to the left of General Merritt's command. Found the enemy strongly posted on a high eminence, behind temporary breast-works. I sent Gregg's brigade to the left dismounted, who took possession of and held the road. Smith's brigade was also dismounted and on Gregg's right, while Davies' brigade, mounted, was on the field in front of their works. After these arrangements were completed a general assault was made, the dismounted men on the left turning and going over their works, while Davies made one of the finest charges of the war, riding over and capturing their works and its defenders. The enemy on the right, who were thus cut off from retreat, surrendered and were taken by different parties.

On the 7th moved on the Farnville road; skirmished with enemy's cavalry at different points [on] the road; came in sight of the enemy's rear guard just across the river at Farnville. I crossed the river at this point. General Gregg's brigade, being in the advance, made an attack on the enemy, was repulsed, and General Gregg taken prisoner; the command of this brigade devolved upon Col. S. B. M. Young, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry. By instructions we recrossed the river and marched to Prospect Station, where we encamped for the night.

On the 8th marched to Appomattox Station. General Mackenzie's division was assigned to my command to-day. After dark I was ordered to send a brigade to hold the road leading from Appomattox Court-House to Lynnhburg. Smith's brigade was sent; he selected a good position near the Court-House. The enemy made no demonstration during the night, but the next morning, at a very early hour, he moved a very heavy line against him, which he held in check until General Mackenzie got up and went in on Smith's left; Davies was sent on a reconnaissance to the left, while Colonel Young's brigade was held in reserve. (See accompanying reports of operations during the day.) At about 9 a. m. the enemy made a strong attack on my front and flanks with a large force of infantry, while their cavalry attacked my rear. Mackenzie and Smith were forced to retire by overwhelming numbers until relieved by the infantry. When we reorganized and were getting ready to go to the front an order for cessation of hostilities reached me. For particulars of the operations of my brigades when acting separately from the division I respectfully refer you to accompanying brigade reports.

I regret to report the loss of many gallant officers and men. Included in this number, and who came under my personal observation, were Col. H. H. Janeway, First New Jersey Cavalry, who lost his life while heroically rallying his men; also Maj. H. S. Thomas, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, who lost his leg while gallantly leading his regiment in a charge at the battle of Jetersville, on the 5th instant. In them the service lost two of its brightest ornaments. For the many acts of gallantry performed that did not come under my personal observation, I would cheerfully indorse the special notices and recommendations of my subordinate commanders.

I cannot close this report without mentioning the marked good conduct of the command during the whole campaign, and my special indebtedness to my brigade commanders—Brig. Gens. H. E. Davies, Mackenzie, Gregg, and Smith—and to my battery commanders—Lieuts. J. H. Lord and S. H. Kinney—for their gallantry, cordial support, and the skillful manner in which they handled their commands. Also to the members of my staff for their gallantry and valuable assistance, and the cheerful alacrity with which they performed their duties, viz: Majs. H. C. Weir, assistant adjutant-general, Charles Treichel, assistant commissary of musters, H. E. Tremain, aide-de-camp, C. Taylor, acting assistant inspector-general; Captain Moore, aide-de-camp, William Harper, provost-marshal, A. H. Bibber, acting aide-de-camp; Lieut. C. S. Roberts; and Dr. E. J. Marsh, surgeon-in-chief.

Accompanying please find numerical list of casualties of the division.*

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE CROOK,

Major-General Volunteers, Commanding Second Division.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. J. W. FORSYTH,
Chief of Staff, Cavalry.

No. 209.

Report of Brig. Gen. Henry E. Davies, Jr., U. S. Army, commanding First Brigade.

HQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., CAVALRY CORPS,
Nottoway Court-House, April 14, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of my command from the 28th of March to date:

On the morning of the 29th of March the brigade broke camp near Petersburg and marched, via Malone's Bridge, to Dinwiddie Court-House, and there camped for the night on the Boydton plank road.

* Embodied in table, p. 592.

On the following day, in the morning, a reconnaissance went out under Major Snyder, Tenth New York Cavalry; communicated with the left of the infantry force. In the afternoon of the 30th the brigade moved out on the road leading to Five Forks, and reported to Brevet Major-General Merritt, whose forces were engaged at that point. The brigade did not go into action, but stood until dark ready to act, though not called on. That night I encamped near the house of J. Boisseau, on the left of the road, picketing out on my left flank.

On the morning of the 31st of March a reconnaissance, sent out under Captain Craig, First New Jersey, discerned the presence of Johnson's division of the enemy's infantry and W. H. R. Lee's division of cavalry on my left and front. Later in the day I was ordered to move my brigade to the rear and left flank to support General Smith's brigade, heavily engaged with the enemy on the road crossing Chamberlain's Creek. I at once moved in that direction, and the road being impassable for mounted troops, took my men down, dismounted. I rode on in advance, and on reaching General Smith's learned that he had succeeded in repulsing the enemy and was not at that time in need of assistance. I immediately returned toward my former position, countermarching my command as I met it in the road, and hearing the sounds of heavy firing on my own picket-line directed them to return to their former position at the double-quick. I found that my pickets at a bridge over Chamberlain's Creek were attacked by an overwhelming force of the enemy and driven back, and that the enemy had succeeded in crossing a large body of troops, consisting of nearly the whole of Pickett's division of infantry. My brigade coming up at once engaged the enemy, but after a severe struggle were driven back, having, however, saved their led horses, which at one time were almost within the enemy's grasp. I fell back to the road leading from Dinwiddie Court-House to Five Forks, where I reformed my line, connecting my right with the First Division, and endeavoring to open communication on my left with rest of Second Division. My men fought bravely, but the overwhelming superiority in numbers of the enemy enabled him to turn my left flank and cut me off entirely from our cavalry on that flank. I then fell back across the country to the Boydton plank road, skirmishing as we retired, followed for some distance by the infantry and subsequently by the cavalry. On reaching the Boydton plank road I found there one mounted regiment of the First Division (Sixth Michigan), the commanding officer of which made a vigorous demonstration and checked further pursuit. On the plank road I reformed my brigade, and night coming on, and the road being securely picketed by the First Division, which had also fallen back to that point, I moved to Dinwiddie Court-House, where my led horses had been sent when the engagement became heavy, and went into camp for the night near that point.

In this action I met with a severe loss in killed and wounded and lost a few prisoners. In view of the large force the enemy brought into the field I fully believe all that was practicable was done, and that my brigade accomplished all that could have been expected from it.

On the 1st and 2d of April the brigade remained in camp near Dinwiddie Court-House, guarding the trains of the corps. On the night of the 2d I moved from Dinwiddie Court-House, in rear of the train, to the point where the Claiborne road crosses Hatcher's Run, and there went into camp. On the 3d of April the brigade moved, via Sutherland's Station, across Namozine Creek, to Wilson's plantation; here the command camped for the night. On the 4th of April the brigade moved to Jetersville and there took up a position, expecting an engagement, and camped for the night at that point.

On the morning of the 5th I moved out from camp under instructions to make a reconnaissance on the enemy's rear and ascertain the position of his trains. Passing through Amelia Springs I moved to Paineville and there learned that General Lee's wagon train was passing a point about four miles from that town. I immediately moved down at the trot, sending the First Pennsylvania Cavalry, my advance, ahead at the gallop, and they succeeded in striking the train just as a piece of artillery had been placed in position to repel my advance. Before the piece could be loaded my men, charging through a deep swamp, were upon them and at once captured the artillery and men belonging to the battery and scattered the train guard at that point, of about 400 men, in all directions. I sent two regiments (First Pennsylvania and Twenty-fourth New York) at once to the right, along the length of the train, directing them to capture all animals and prisoners and destroy all wagons, as owing to the condition of the road and the exhausted state of the teams I did not deem it practicable to bring off the wagons. The First New Jersey I kept near the point where the train was first attacked, to act as a reserve and support and to reconnoiter to the left, and to the Tenth New York I gave the charge of the prisoners, guns, &c., captured, with directions to return with them to Jetersville as soon as they were collected. The commanding officers of these regiments each executed the orders given them with fidelity and zeal, and in a short time I was on my return to Jetersville with 5 guns, 11 flags, 320 white prisoners, an equal number of colored teamsters, and over 400 animals, captured from the enemy, leaving behind me 200 blazing ammunition and headquarters wagons, caissons, and ambulances. Shortly after leaving Paineville, on my return, Gary's brigade of rebel cavalry, acting as escort to the train, attacked my rear guard and kept up a running fight with my command as far as Amelia Springs, where I formed my brigade and held the enemy in check until relieved by the Second Brigade of the division. I then rode to the head of my column and found that halted, and that the enemy had obtained possession of the cross-roads in my front, where the road from Amelia Springs to Jetersville intersects that from Amelia Court-House. A regiment of the Third Brigade at that point, with the First Pennsylvania and a portion of the Tenth New York, handsomely repulsed the enemy and drove him from the cross-roads, and I had the satisfaction of bringing safely into camp the whole of the captured property, not losing one prisoner, animal, or gun, in spite of the desperate efforts made by the enemy to retake them. In the afternoon my brigade again went into action to repel an attempt made by the enemy to reach Jetersville from Amelia Springs, and though much reduced in strength by the large number of men required to guard prisoners and take charge of the captured property successfully resisted every attack made by the enemy, and made several mounted charges with great gallantry.

On the 6th of April the brigade moved out with the division and took part in the attack made on the enemy's infantry and train at Sailor's Creek. A very spirited and dashing reconnaissance of the position was made by the First New Jersey, which was of great assistance in the attack. When the order to attack was given the Twenty-fourth New York, Tenth New York, and First New Jersey charged in line, mounted, and with great gallantry, under a heavy fire, followed by the First Pennsylvania as support. The charging regiments behaved admirably, keeping their line perfectly, and, leaping the breast-works, drove the enemy in confusion, capturing many prisoners; then charging right on up the hill they came upon the enemy's wagon train, which they followed up for some distance, destroying many wagons and capturing many prisoners. In this engagement 750 prisoners, 2 guns, and 2 flags were captured and turned over to Captain Harper, division provost-marshal. Some 300 prisoners were inadvertently turned over to another command by the officer in charge, and two guns captured by the Twenty-fourth New York, which they were unable to bring off at the time, were taken by some other command.

On the morning of the 7th the brigade moved through Farnville, and crossing the Appomattox in rear of the Second Brigade formed and checked the enemy advancing, after having driven in that command. Night coming on the brigade was withdrawn and marched to Prospect Station on the Lynchburg railroad.

On the 8th the brigade moved to the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House and there camped for the night.

On the 9th the brigade moved out on a reconnaissance around the enemy's right; but while on the road, hearing that the remainder of the division had been attacked in heavy force, I made a demonstration in that direction and repulsed a cavalry force moving toward the left and rear of our army. Afterward, having been joined by the Second Brigade, I attacked the enemy's cavalry in my front, and was driving them rapidly when orders directing a suspension of hostilities was received. From that time there is nothing of interest to report, the command having moved from Appomattox Court-House to the present camp by easy marches and unopposed.

I have to regret the loss of many brave and gallant officers of rank in the brigade. Colonel Janeway, of the First New Jersey Cavalry, fell while gallantly charging at the head of his regiment in the action of April 5, near Jetersville. No better or braver officer has ever fallen on the field of battle. Colonel Newberry, Twenty-fourth New York, fell severely wounded in the thickest of the fight near Dinwiddie Court-House, March 31, while leading his regiment in action, displaying signal courage. Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, Twenty-fourth New York, was mortally wounded while in command near Amelia Springs, April 5. Lieutenant-Colonel Scovv, Tenth New York, was severely wounded in the action at Dinwiddie Court-House, March 31, and fully deserves honorable mention for good conduct. Major Hart, First New Jersey, and Major Doran, Twenty-fourth New York, both fell in the same action—the former killed, the latter mortally wounded. Brave and true soldiers, they did their duty to the last, and fell as they lived, honorably and with distinction. Major Thomas, commanding First Pennsylvania, was severely wounded while leading his command in a charge at Jetersville, April 5, and has lost a leg from the injury he received. Of this officer I cannot speak too highly. Foremost in every fight, brave and daring, yet possessed of most excellent judgment, his loss is irreparable; in every action he was distinguished. The success of the attack on the train at Pineville is greatly due to him, and in the subsequent movements of that day his services were most valuable. I respectfully ask that the brevets of lieutenant-colonel and colonel may be granted to him dating from April 5, as a slight recognition of his merit and deserving.

Of all the officers and men serving with the command I am able to speak in the highest terms. Among so many who have done well it is difficult to discriminate. The enlisted men distinguished by capturing flags have already received the reward of their valor, and a list has been forwarded of those otherwise particularly remarkable for good conduct.

I desire to mention Colonel Avery, Tenth New York, who has ably commanded his regiment in every action, and rendered most important service in guarding and bringing into camp the prisoners and property captured on the 5th of April; Major Snyder, Tenth New York, temporarily in command of the Twenty-fourth New York, for leading his regiment not only gallantly but in good order in the charge on the enemy's works at Snilor's Creek, April 6; and Captain Craig, First New Jersey, for good conduct in all the actions of the campaign and for valuable service rendered in several reconnaissances he has commanded.

The officers of my staff have rendered most valuable service, and are all deserving of high praise for their courage, zeal, and efficiency.

The reports of casualties have been already rendered.* I annex copy of receipt from Captain Harper, division provost-marshal, of prisoners and property turned over to him from this command:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS,
OFFICE OF PROVOST-MARSHAL,
April 14, 1865.

Received from the provost-marshal First Brigade, Second Division, Cavalry Corps, during the campaign from March 29, 1865, to April 14, 1865:

Date.	Location.	Captures.
		Character.	Number.
April 5	Pennville.....	Prisoners of war.....	320
		Colored teamsters.....	310
		Battle-flags.....	11
		Guns and canteens.....	6
		Casualties.....	1
April 6	Snilor's Creek.....	Mules.....	310
		Prisoners of war.....	750
		Battle-flags.....	22
		Guns.....	2

WM. HARPER,
Captain and Acting Provost-Marshal, Second Division, Cavalry Corps.
Casualties in First Brigade, Second Division, Cavalry Corps.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.....		2	1	6		1	3	7	10
1st New Jersey.....	2	6	7	36	4	30	13	73	88
24th New York.....		4	6	30	1	33	6	67	73
10th New York.....		14	6	38		14	6	68	72
Battery A, Second Artillery.....				1				1	1
Total.....	2	20	10	111	6	78	22	216	244

Respectfully submitted,

H. E. DAVIES, JR.,
Brigadier-General Volunteers, Commanding.

Maj. H. O. WEIR,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

* Embodied in table, p. 592.

No. 210.

Report of Maj. Walter R. Robbins, First New Jersey Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST NEW JERSEY CAVALRY,
Bladensburg, Md., May 25, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the operations of this regiment from the 28th of March, to date:

On the morning of March 29 the regiment broke camp near Petersburg, and, in connection with the brigade, moved out on the Reams' Station and Dinwiddie Court-House road, crossing Rowanty Creek at Malone's Bridge. The cavalry arrived at and occupied Dinwiddie Court-House that night. Colonel Janeway was ordered to move out on the Flat Foot road and hold it for the night, which he did. On the 30th the brigade moved up on the Five Forks road to the support of General Merritt, but did not become engaged.

On the morning of the 31st Captain Craig, Company A, commanding first squadron, who was picketing on the mill road leading to Chamberlain's Creek, took a portion of his reserve and cleverly passed through the rebel cavalry vedette line, surprised and captured an infantry picket reserve of the enemy and brought them into our lines, without any loss to his command. For this bold and skillful act Captain Craig is deserving of great praise. From these prisoners it was learned that the divisions of the rebel Generals Pickett and Bushrod Johnson were in our front. After receiving this information Colonel Janeway directed Major Hart to strengthen and extend the picket-line. Colonel Janeway then ordered me to move out with my battalion and make a reconnaissance on the left and ascertain if the enemy was moving around in that direction. In doing this I found the old Scott road, leading across Chamberlain's Creek, to be entirely open, thus giving the enemy a splendid opportunity to move his troops between the brigades of Generals Davies and Smith. Feeling the importance of this road, I left Captain Hick with Companies K, L, and M to cover it, while I pushed farther to the left with Company H, Lieutenant Killey commanding, communicated with General Smith, and ascertained from him that the enemy were quiet in his front. I then returned to the old Scott road and moved my battalion down to the ford on Chamberlain's Creek, dismounted, sent my horses to the rear, caused a breast-work of rails to be made, and communicated the importance of the road and what I was doing to Colonel Janeway. The colonel came down and approved of the course I had taken, and ordered me to remain and hold the ford. About this time the enemy made a spirited attack on the lines of Generals Gregg and Smith, and vainly endeavored to drive them from their position. Meanwhile they pushed two brigades of infantry down to the ford and engaged my command, which was holding it. The firing soon became sharp and vigorous. We had great advantage in position, being behind works and on much lower ground than the enemy, who were without any covering and at easy range. Many of the enemy fell before our withering fire; among the number was General Ransom. Seeing that we were not to be forced from our position in this manner, they passed one brigade to our right (which met Major Hart's battalion) and one to our left, enveloped our flanks, and charged the Third Brigade in our front. The battalion, I am proud to say, remained at their post and kept up the firing until the enemy were within fifteen yards of them. Hopes of longer holding the ford could not be entertained. The order was then given to fall back, which was done, first in a broken and confused line, but was quickly formed and placed in position to cover the left flank of the Tenth New York Cavalry, which had been ordered to our support some time before. This regiment, after delivering two or three volleys, went rapidly to the rear, leaving my battalion to cover their shameful retreat. The enemy were in strong force and moved rapidly against us, and my men could do nothing but keep up a running fight until we passed through Colonel Janeway's lines, who, with the first and second battalions and a Michigan regiment, was gallantly holding the enemy in check. Major Hart, with the first battalion, had been sent out to my support, but meeting the brigade of the enemy which had moved on my right was unable to get to me. Hart fought his command, as he always did, with signal courage, great skill, and telling effect upon the enemy. It was his last fight. He was shot dead in his saddle; the bullet entered his right cheek and passed through the spinal column. Colonel Janeway, with his own and a Michigan regiment, with detachments from other regiments, slowly retired before the overwhelming force of the enemy to the road leading from Dinwiddie to Five Forks, where he connected his left with the remainder of the brigade. The enemy here changed his direction and operated wholly on the left, forcing the whole Cavalry Corps back to Dinwiddie Court-House. Here we remained for the night, the enemy in pistol-shot distance.

The casualties this day were as follows: Maj. James H. Hart, killed; First Lieut. J. Killey, captured; First Lieut. and Acting Commissary of Subsistence O. W. Camp, captured; 3 enlisted men killed, 6 enlisted men wounded, and 4 captured.

Early the next morning the enemy was pushed back, his forces routed, and many prisoners taken. On the 1st and 2d of April our brigade remained in camp near Dinwiddie Court-House, guarding the trains of the corps. On the night of the 2d we moved from Dinwiddie Court-House, in the rear of the trains, to the Claiborne road, in the vicinity of Hatchett's Run, bivouacked for a few hours, and then (the morning of the 3d) pushed on, crossing the South Side Railroad at Sutherland's Station. We marched that day to Wilson's plantation on the Namozine road, where we encamped for the night. The line of march was resumed early the next morning, the 4th, on a road running parallel to the one Lee was retreating on. We arrived at Jetersville, on the South Side Railroad, about 4 p. m. It was expected that the enemy would be found in force at this place; nothing, however, was found, and the cavalry was ordered to bivouac for the night. Pursuant to orders received from the brigade headquarters, Captain Craig, with Companies A and B, reported to General Davies, who instructed him to push down the Amelia Springs road and ascertain if any force of the enemy was there. Captain Craig obeyed his instructions to the letter, returned, and reported having captured 22 infantry soldiers, 38 horses, and a number of mules, all of which he brought into camp. From these prisoners it was learned that Lee with his army was at Amelia Court-House. At 3 o'clock on the following morning our brigade was moving toward that place. Arriving at Paine's Cross-Roads General Davies learned that the enemy's wagon train was but a short distance off. Pushing rapidly on we soon struck the advance guard, consisting of one brigade of cavalry, one regiment of infantry, and a battery of artillery. General Davies at once charged and routed this force, captured a large number of prisoners, 5 pieces of artillery, 180 wagons, 340 horses and mules. The wagons were all burned; the prisoners, artillery, and animals were all brought off. In this charge five battle-flags were captured by the following-named officers and men of this regiment: Capt. Samuel Craig, Company A; First Sergt. George W. Stewart, Company B; Private Lewis Locke, Company A; Private Christian Streile, Company I. After the capture of the wagon train, &c., General Davies directed Colonel Janeway to move up on a road to the left, and hold it until he got well to the rear all captured property, prisoners, &c. Through some mistake no orders were received by Colonel Janeway to retire. Ascertaining that everything had recrossed the stream he wisely withdrew, but on arriving at the bridge he found it in possession of the enemy. Captain Brooks, with Companies H and K, made an elegant charge and drove the enemy from the bridge, and held the road leading to it while the remainder of the regiment crossed. Captain Hick, with Companies L and M, now formed the rear guard. Arriving at Paineville the regiment was ordered to remain there half an hour and hold the roads while the captured property was being taken off. The enemy now began to show himself in large numbers in our front and on both flanks. I was directed by Colonel Janeway to take Company H, strengthen and assume command of the rear guard. The enemy pressed us vigorously, making several charges, which were, with one exception (the last one), handsomely repulsed. The enemy routed us in their last charge and drove us back to a detachment of the regiment which had been formed for our support. This detachment made a splendid charge and checked the enemy, which enabled us to withdraw to where the remainder of the brigade was formed. In this charge the gallant Brooks, captain of Company K, was taken prisoner and sabered by General Gary after he had surrendered. A number of the men were also wounded. The enemy here displayed a much larger force than our own—they lapped both our flanks and engaged us sharply in our front; but the regiment, with brave, skillful Janeway in command, unflinchingly stood their ground and used their Spencer carbines with telling effect upon the enemy.

It would be useless for me to particularize the actions of any officer or man—they all performed their duty in their usual manner as soldiers; but the conduct of Surgeon Willis was so different from medical officers generally that I can not pass it by without notice. He was in the thickest of the fight, and was of great service to Colonel Janeway in conveying orders and rallying men from the different regiments, taking them to the skirmish line, remaining there himself, and encouraging them on. We were relieved by the Second Brigade of our division, when we retired to a point near Amelia Springs, and we remained at this place till 2 p. m., when we were again ordered into action.

Colonel Janeway was ordered by General Davies to support two other regiments in a charge; these regiments were repulsed in the charge and driven back to their support. Colonel Janeway immediately ordered a charge, in leading which our brave gallant colonel was shot through the head and died almost instantly. This cast a gloom over the whole regiment. His superior we never knew; a brave skillful officer, a courteous gentleman, a true, earnest patriot, qualities which have endeared him to every officer and man of the regiment. We held the line until after dark, when we were relieved and ordered back to Jetersville.

The casualties of the day were as follows: Col. Hugh H. Janeway, killed; Capt. Joseph Brooks, Company K, wounded, and prisoner; First Lieut. and Adjt. James T. Clancy, wounded; Second Lieut. James S. Metlor, Company D, prisoner; Second Lieut. William Wilson, Company G, prisoner; 1 enlisted man killed, 8 wounded and 21 prisoners.

We bivouacked at Jetersville that night, and moved out at 10 a. m. the following day. Generals Merritt and Ouster had captured and burned a large number of wagons near Sailor's Creek. They were heavily engaged with the enemy when we came up. The Cavalry Corps was formed to charge the enemy; this regiment formed the connection on the extreme right of the Second Division with General Custer's division (Third). In front of our regiment was a plain open field where the enemy had a good line of rifle-pits. I received orders from General Davies to charge this line of works. I expected the whole line would charge at the same time. I moved on their line of works at once; the troops on my right, instead of charging the enemy, were being pushed back. The regiment acted splendidly, but it was impossible for us to make any impression on the enemy's line. General Custer's division, on my right, and a portion of our brigade, on my left, was giving way. The fire from the enemy was terrible. Lieutenants Ford and Metler and many of the men were wounded; horses were dropping fast. I was forced to retire, which I did by moving the regiment to the right, in order to place them under cover of a rising piece of ground. Major-General Crook and others complimented the regiment very highly for the gallant manner in which they conducted themselves. I received orders from General Davies to bring the regiment in its original place in line. I understood afterward that the order given for the regiment to charge was rather premature. Some two hours later a simultaneous charge was made by the Sixth Corps and the cavalry. This was probably the grandest cavalry charge of the war. General Ewell with nearly all his corps was captured, besides a large number of cannon. In this charge I suffered the temporary loss of Captain Hughes, Company G, commanding the second battalion. He fell from his horse wounded through the head. He is a brave, capable officer, and I could ill spare him. In going to the rear he discovered two pieces of artillery, which the enemy unable to move off had secreted in the woods. He collected some dismounted men, and with a team of mules brought them off. First Lieutenants Johnson, commanding Company H, and Carty, commanding Company I, charged and captured two light field pieces from the enemy. Captain Craig, as usual, had his horse shot. We encamped on the battle-field that night.

The casualties of the day were as follows: Capt. William Hughes, Company G, wounded; First Lieut. Thomas H. Ford, Company D, wounded; Second Lieut. James S. Metler, Company D, wounded; with 7 enlisted men wounded and 2 missing.

The line of march was taken up early on the morning of the 7th, and the enemy pushed rapidly to Farmville and across the Appomattox River. Here they made a stand and enticed the Second Brigade of our division into a beautifully-laid trap, which resulted in their complete rout. This brigade came back in great confusion, and but for the timely order of General Davies would have swept a portion of this regiment along with them. The general, seeing the state of affairs, directed me, through Captain Lebo, of his staff, to move rapidly to the left of the road, and there form and check the enemy, which order was executed to his satisfaction. The action of the regiment upon this occasion gave great confidence to the troops in rear, who were following us in the line of march. The brigade was formed in line and the enemy held by us until dark, when we were relieved by the infantry. Lieutenants Watts and Fay were wounded during the day. That night we marched to and encamped at Prospect Station, on the Lynchburg railroad.

The casualties of this day were as follows: Second Lieut. Charles Watts, Company E, wounded; Second Lieut. Lawrence Fay, Company F, wounded; 3 enlisted men killed, 6 wounded, and 4 prisoners.

On the 8th we marched to Appomattox Depot, on the Lynchburg railroad. The regiment was not engaged that day. Four trains of cars loaded with supplies for Lee's army were captured at the depot.

On the morning of the 9th our hearts were gladdened by the intelligence that the enemy were now headed off, we being in possession of the road on which Lee was retreating, and that if we could hold this road until our infantry came up Lee and his army could not possibly escape. The bright, smiling faces which could be seen in the regiment told plainly that for their share of the work we could depend upon them. General Davies was covering a road on the right of Lee's army. The remainder of our division was fighting on our right. The general, learning that the enemy were driving them, ordered me, through his very efficient aide-de-camp, Lieut. Robert Henry, Company A of this regiment, to take the regiment, find and engage the enemy's flank, favoring as much as possible the brigades of Smith and Gregg, who were being so vigorously pushed. Captain Craig, who had the advance in this movement, reported a rebel cavalry brigade moving toward us in an oblique direction, and apparently coming from General Davies' front, and with the intention of cutting us off. I immediately sent Captain Beekman, with the remainder of his battalion, Companies G and I, to strengthen Craig and throw out a strong skirmish line. At the same time, Captain Hick, commanding Third Battalion, was directed to move to the left and rear and remain there as a support. Taking Captain Brower, with his battalion, I maneuvered till I succeeded in getting between the enemy and the remainder of the brigade. Captain Beekman at the same time changed direction to the left, keeping his skirmishers between Brower and the enemy. Hick was then brought down to Brower's position. The ever ready Henry, of General Davies' staff, coming down, requested him to inform the general what I was doing and what was opposing me; learning it, he sent the Twenty-fourth New York Cavalry down to report to me and orders to fall slowly back and connect my skirmish line with that of the infantry on my right and rear. All this was performed with the loss of one man killed—Lemuel O. Smith, private, Company E. The infantry relieving us, we were ordered still farther to the left, when we again engaged the enemy, and, for the last time, Captain Beekman, with the first battalion, was sent out on the skirmish line. An irregular and harmless fire was kept up for some time. Finally the skirmish line of the brigade was ordered to charge the enemy, supported by the regiments. The enemy were quickly driven in confusion from their position. The successful charge had hardly terminated before orders were received for hostilities to cease. The order was immediately followed by a flag of truce from General Crook to the commanding general of the rebel forces in front of our lines, informing him that Generals Grant and Lee were having an interview, and arranging the terms of surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia to General Grant.

In this last engagement I cannot speak in too high terms of Captains Beekman and Cause. Beekman so maneuvered a portion of his command as to destroy the left of the enemy's skirmish line, by driving it pell-mell into the road for Cause to make his last charge, and a gallant and successful one it was.

Second Lieut. R. Darnstadt, Company I, we claim to be the last officer wounded in the combined armies operating against Lee's forces.

Our cavalry division was the last to receive orders for a cessation of hostilities. The last flag of truce sent out was through our brigade lines. Lieutenant Darnstaedt received a painful but not dangerous wound in the head after the truce had passed our lines.

Hostilities ceased, and the terms of the surrender agreed upon. We bivouacked that night on the battle-field, and our hearts were made glad by the appearance of Captain Brooks, who had just been released from captivity.

On the morning of the 10th we commenced our return march to Petersburg. On the night of the 10th, while we were encamped at Prospect Station, we had the pleasure of receiving back our captured comrades, First Lieuts. Joseph Killey and C. W. Camp. These officers, before the surrender, managed to make their guard prisoners, and escaped with them into our lines. We arrived at Petersburg on the 18th day of April.

In this eventful campaign the regiment in every engagement bore itself with conspicuous gallantry. The conduct of the officers in every instance was such as to elicit the praise of every one. Adj. James T. Clancy throughout the whole campaign rendered me most efficient service. His conduct in the action of April 5 called forth the commendation of Major-General Crook and several of his staff officers. On this day, while gallantly charging with a detachment of the regiment, he received a painful saber wound in the hand. He declined to leave the field in this and subsequent battles. Great credit is due to Captain Hughes for our final success in the afternoon engagement of April 5.

On the 6th of April First Lieut. Thomas H. Ford received a wound in the left breast by a glancing shot, prohibiting the use of his bridle arm and the wearing of a saber-belt, but he remained with and took an active part in all the battles of the regiment.

The following non-commissioned officers and privates received medals of honor from the Secretary of War for gallantry in the campaign: First Sergt. George W. Stewart, Company B; Sergt. Aaron B. Tompkins, Company G; Sergt. David Southard, Company C; Charles E. Wilson, color-sergeant, William Porter, sergeant, Company H; Charles Titus, sergeant, Company H; John Wilson, sergeant, Company L; William B. Hooper, corporal, Company L, and private Christian Streile, Company I. In these medals of honor the soldier received a token which is of more value than anything which could be given him. They stamp the recipient a brave, faithful soldier, a man to be honored and revered.

Sergt. Maj. William T. Allen, Sergt. Samuel Walton, Company A; Sergts. Charles Kriselmier and John Tynon, Company B; Sergts. William R. Branson, Culver Marshall, and Chester Merritt, of Company C; First Sergt. John H. Warner, Company D; Sergts. John Shield, William Russell, and John Fogarty, Company E; Michael Williams and Edward F. Wanner, sergeants of Company G; John Brookbank and William Hndson, sergeants, Company H, and Corpl. Philip Kiospies, Company H; Corples. Joseph Marsh and Francis Brown, of Company K; Sergts. George W. McPeck, Aaron H. White, William S. Booth, and William H. Powell, Company K; Sergt. William R. Stout and Corples. John McKenna and James Brady, Company L; Sergts. John H. Dunc and James M. Tildman, of Company M, and Corpl. John B. Easton, of Company M—are all worthy of mention. They are well known in the regiment for their good conduct in this memorable campaign.

We remained in camp near Petersburg until the morning of the 24th of April, when, in connection with the Cavalry Corps, we took up our line of march to Danville, Va., to operate against the rebel General

Johnston's army. After a march of five days we reached Boston Bridge Station, on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, where we learned that Johnston had surrendered his army to General Sherman. We encamped there for the night, and on the following morning commenced our return march for Petersburg, arriving there on the 3d day of May. The regiment was not engaged during this march.

In this, as well as in the previous campaign, we are indebted to Lieut. Robert Henry, Company A of this regiment, and aide-de-camp to Brevet Major-General Davies, for many good services he rendered the regiment. In all engagements of this regiment, when possible, he was sure to be with us, and with his courage and zeal won the admiration of both officers and men.

On the morning of the 10th of May we broke camp and commenced our march for Alexandria, via Richmond and the Orange and Alexandria Railroad. We arrived at Alexandria on the morning of the 16th of May. On the 21st we marched to Bladensburg, Md. On the 22d we had the pleasure of receiving our State colors. On the 23d we took part in the grand review. The regiment was complimented by many for the neat uniform dress and soldierly appearance of its officers and men and for its precision in marching. We are now encamped near Bladensburg, Md.

The health of the regiment is good.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WALTER R. ROBBINS,

Major, Commanding First New Jersey Cavalry.

Brig. Gen. R. F. STOCKTON,

Adjutant-General State of New Jersey.

No. 211.

Report of Col. Samuel B. M. Young, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade.

HQRS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., CAVALRY CORPS,

April 14, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to instructions from division headquarters, I have the honor to report that this command left camp near Petersburg, Va., on the morning of 29th of March, 1865, arriving at Dinwiddie Court-House, without opposition, and bivouacked for the night. It rained all night, and next day brigade remained in bivouac.

On the morning of the 31st First Brigade (General Davies) and Third Brigade (General Smith) were attacked by the enemy's cavalry and Pickett's division of infantry on Chamberlain's Red. First Brigade was driven back by a superior force of the enemy beyond the road leading from Dinwiddie to Five Forks, obtaining possession of said road. At this juncture the Second Brigade, which had been supporting Third Brigade (General Smith), was ordered to attack the enemy (then driving General Davies) in the flank and rear. In order to carry out this order the command was moved across the country about one mile in direction of the firing indicating the point at which General Davies was pressed. The Fourth, Sixteenth, and Eighth Pennsylvania were dismounted, no enemy being in sight, and pushed forward in the direction of the heavy firing; soon they encountered Pickett's division of infantry advancing in line of battle. A hot engagement immediately ensued, in which the enemy were driven back and held in check until the ammunition was exhausted. A number of prisoners were captured and sent to the rear. The position was held until the brigade was ordered to retire; the enemy followed closely in line of battle. A new line was formed and they were checked and held until dark, when the command retired beyond the Boydton plank road and bivouacked for the night.

April 1, the brigade not actively engaged, but watching the flank. April 2, brigade marched from White Oak road via Ford's Depot, on South Side Railroad, and joined General Merritt's command near Namozine road. April 3, drew rations and forage; marched to Namozine Creek. April 4, marched on the flanks of the infantry, and reported to General Sheridan at 2 a. m. on the 5th. At 3 a. m., same date, General Davies moved out and struck the enemy's train on the Paineville road, destroying wagons, capturing artillery, flags, &c., and being heavily attacked this brigade was ordered out to his support. When his command was withdrawn this brigade was attacked by the enemy's cavalry and one division of Anderson's infantry, and lost heavily, the enemy obtaining possession of the field.

On the 6th the brigade, taking the advance, struck the enemy's train near Deatonville, but were quickly checked by Gordon's corps. We were then withdrawn and participated in the battle at Sailor's Creek. The brigade, being dismounted, was the first to strike and fire the enemy's wagon train, and capturing two pieces of artillery which had been abandoned and thrown into the swamp by the enemy.

On the 7th the brigade, marching in rear, arrived at Farmville, and crossing the Appomattox, took the advance on the Buckingham Court-House road and struck the enemy's train two miles from Farmville, but was driven back by Rosser's division of cavalry and Gordon's infantry. General Davies coming up at this juncture the enemy were checked by him on the right and by the reformation of the Second Brigade on the left. The loss of the Second Brigade was severe; General Gregg and two of his staff were captured; and here that noble officer, Major Mays, of the Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, fell mortally wounded; Lieut. Col. J. K. Robison, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, also was wounded in the charge. At dark the brigade was relieved by General Smith, and, following the First Brigade, marched to Prospect Station, and encamped at 2 a. m. on the 8th. At 9 o'clock this brigade took the advance, and marched via Pamplin's Station and formed junction with First and Third Divisions near Appomattox Station, and encamped for the night.

On the 9th was ordered out to the main Lynchburg road to support General Smith and General Mackenzie, who were being forced back by the enemy's infantry. Smith was retiring by the right and Mackenzie by the left oblique, and the enemy, taking advantage, charged one regiment of cavalry through the interval, and came up on my rear, and that instant the Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, who had been ordered to a new position, met and charged them in column, effectually routing them, killing the color-bearer and capturing the colors of Fourteenth Virginia Cavalry. At the same time the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, who had been dismounted, were double-quickened around by the rear and drove the enemy out of the woods. At the same time the enemy attacked my left flank, but were held in check by the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry until the infantry, who were close at hand, relieved my command. Not finding the division commander, I reported to General Davies, who was engaging the enemy on the road in the direction of Lynchburg, and was ordered to join him with my command. The brigade was massed on the left of the road and pushed forward at a trot, when orders were received to halt and cease firing. General Davies sent flag of truce and a cessation of hostilities was agreed upon. The command lay in the order in which it was halted until the morning of the 10th, when it marched to Prospect Station; camped for the night. 11th, marched to Sandy Creek; 12th, to Burkeville; 13th, to Nottoway Court-House, where the brigade is now encamped.

I cannot speak too highly of the conduct of the officers and men of the command. I forbear mentioning the names of any officers lest I do injustice to others, as all conducted themselves in the most gallant manner. To the members of my staff am I specially indebted for valuable services.

For report of casualties sustained in campaign please see report furnished this date.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. M. YOUNG,
Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Maj. H. C. WEIR,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division, Cavalry Corps.

Casualties in Second Brigade, Second Division, Cavalry Corps.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.		Aggregate.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
Brigade headquarters.....					1		1		1
21st Pennsylvania.....		4	1	21	3	60	4	97	161
10th Pennsylvania.....		9	5	38		4	5	51	50
8th Pennsylvania.....		0	2	15	1	5	3	50	52
4th Pennsylvania.....	2	7		37		7	0	51	57
Total.....	2	20	12	144	5	85	19	258	277

No. 212.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Charles H. Smith, First Maine Cavalry, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIGADE, SECOND CAVALRY DIVISION,
April 15, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part performed by the Third Brigade since the 29th ultimo:

At that date the brigade broke camp in the morning and moved with the division to Dinwiddie Court-House, where it remained until the morning of the 31st, one regiment being kept on picket. At 10.30 a. m. the 31st, the Second New York Mounted Rifles, on picket, were attacked and the brigade was moved out for support. The Second New York Mounted Rifles and Sixth Ohio Cavalry were ordered to dismount and take position on the left bank of Little Stony Creek at which the enemy seemed to retire. One battalion of the First Maine was ordered to cross the creek and reconnoiter for the enemy. It effected a crossing without opposition, but as soon as it deployed and began to advance it was met by strong lines of the enemy, both mounted and dismounted, and driven back in confusion, the men seeking refuge among the led horses and fording the stream up to their necks. The enemy pursued in hot haste, plunged into the stream in heavy force, both mounted and dismounted, with such recklessness that some were drowned, drove back the two regiments posted on the bank and effected a lodgment on our side. At this juncture the two remaining battalions of the First Maine and the Thirteenth Ohio were ordered to dismount and deploy, the First Maine on the left of the road in the open field, the Thirteenth Ohio on the right of the road in the woods. As the line advanced the two regiments that had been driven back rallied, and the whole brigade charged, broke the enemy and drove him in confusion and with considerable loss across the stream. In this charge my leg was struck with a bullet, passing through my horse, proving death to the horse but safety to me. The gallant conduct of the First Maine Cavalry in this charge is deserving especial mention.

The entire brigade was then put in position along the bank of the creek dismounted, where it constructed a slight breast-work with rails and such other material as was at its command. At 5.30 p. m. the enemy opened briskly with four pieces of artillery, and the brigade suddenly discovered that it was confronted by Pickett's division of infantry. The brigade maintained its ground under the hottest fire of which the enemy was capable, losing heavily all the while, till nearly dark, when it ran entirely out of ammunition, in consequence of the train being delayed by the bad roads, and was forced to fall back to the main road leading from Dinwiddie Court-House to Five Forks, where it reformed and intimidated the advance of the enemy by presenting a good front, without a cartridge. Had a less determined resistance been made on the bank of the creek, and the strong force of the enemy been allowed to gain possession of the main road above referred to, the result must have proved quite disastrous to our cause that day.

The following is a list of the casualties for the day: Capt. Benjamin F. Metcalf, Thirteenth Ohio; Capt. Eli Morse, Second New York Mounted Rifles; and Lieut. James E. Stayner, First Maine Cavalry, killed. Maj. Paul Chadbourne, Capt. H. C. Hall, Lieut. L. M. Comins, and Lieut. H. D. Fuller, First Maine Cavalry; Lieut. C. W. Flagler and Lieut. W. A. Crapser, Second New York Mounted Rifles; Capt. B. F. Kling, Adjt. H. G. Brown, and Lieut. J. W. Humick, Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry; and Captain Shattuck, Sixth Ohio Cavalry, wounded; 18 enlisted men killed, 123 wounded. The First Maine alone lost in this engagement 88 killed and wounded.

The enemy was severely punished during the engagement. Colonel McNeill, Fifth North Carolina, was killed; Colonel Cheek,* First North Carolina, and Colonel Savage, of the Fifteenth Virginia, were wounded, besides many commissioned officers of lower grades. Many prisoners were captured, including 1 major and 2 captains.

In the evening the brigade was remounted and moved back to Cat-Tail Creek and bivouacked.

April 1, it relieved the Reserve Brigade in guarding the train and picketing the rear of the army. April 2, conducted train to Dinwiddie Court-House and marched to Hatcher's Run in the direction of Sutherland's Station. April 3, moved at daylight, crossed the South Side Railroad at Sutherland's Station, and later in the day resumed the march westward toward the Danville railroad till 1 a. m. the 4th instant. Bivouacked a few hours, and started at 4 a. m. the morning of the 4th instant. Marched rapidly via Dennisville to a point on the Danville railroad, a few miles east of Burkeville Junction. By order of the major-general commanding the division a detachment of the First Maine was sent to tap the railroad. Toward evening marched to Jeter's Station, dismounted, threw up a breast-work of rails and awaited till dark to resist an expected attack. Bivouacked for the night. April 5, moved out at the gallop on the Pineville road to the support of the First and Second Brigades. The enemy was maneuvering to recapture some prisoners and artillery from the First Brigade. At one point a strong force was timely repulsed by a gallant charge of the Second New York Mounted Rifles. At another point the Thirteenth Ohio charged and captured a battle-flag. The whole brigade became considerably engaged till dark, when a strong detail was made for picket and the rest withdrawn.

* Reference is probably to Lieut. Col. W. H. H. Cowles, who was wounded and captured.

April 6, marched with the division till about 11.30 a. m., parallel to and in sight of Lee's train most of the time. The Second Brigade, having the advance, charged the train guard and were repulsed, amidst considerable confusion. I deployed the First Maine and Sixth Ohio Cavalry on the right of the road, the Thirteenth Ohio on the left of the road, and kept the Second New York Mounted Rifles in the road in column. The First Maine and Sixth Ohio advanced to the support of the Second Brigade, and charging through a thicket, almost impassable to mounted men, two companies of the First Maine succeeded in breaking through the guard and reaching the train, but only to be driven back, with severe loss. The Second Brigade was then withdrawn from the right of the cross-road by which we approached the train, and I caused the Thirteenth Ohio to be removed from the left to the right of the road and the line to be extended by the formation of the First Maine and Sixth Ohio in succession. The line thus formed was about to advance, when I was ordered by the major-general commanding division to fall back. In this affair, Capt. John A. Heald, First Maine Cavalry, was killed, and Capt. J. W. Freese, slightly, and Adj. T. Little, First Maine Cavalry, severely wounded.

Later in the day the division attacked the enemy at another point. The Second New York Mounted Rifles was detained to guard the rear. The Thirteenth Ohio was sent to destroy a portion of the enemy's train of fifty or seventy-five wagons, which was accomplished effectually. The First Maine and Sixth Ohio were kept dismounted, and charged with the line when it was ordered to advance, thus doing their part in breaking up and thoroughly routing the enemy. The Thirteenth Ohio being mounted, charged on the left, making many captures, among which was Brigadier-General Corse and staff. In this engagement Lieut. J. W. Poor, First Maine Cavalry, was severely wounded.

April 7, the pursuit was resumed in the morning, the Third Brigade in advance. Marching rapidly we soon overtook the rear of the retreating column, and skirmishing commenced. At Briery Creek considerable resistance was offered, but a crossing was soon effected by means of the repeating rifles of the First Maine, when the whole brigade charged across and drove the enemy back, pressing him very closely till we reached Farmville. At this time Lieutenant-Colonel Clark, Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry, conducted the advance very gallantly. An orderly sent to halt the advance, and seeing an organized body of the enemy just in front of the Thirteenth Ohio mistook it for our advance, and riding up to it presented the compliments of the general commanding, with orders to halt. He was taken prisoner, and did not report the execution of this order till the evening of the 9th instant, after the surrender of General Lee with his army.

When we approached the town of Farmville the enemy were making all haste to get his rear guard across the river. The brigade was ordered to charge, and did so in the most fearless manner. In this charge the First Maine bore the brunt, and dashing through the town drove out a superior force of the enemy opposing obstinate resistance. In this charge the colonel of the Twenty-fourth Virginia was captured.

In the evening of the same day the command marched to Prospect Station.

April 8, marched, via Pamplin's, to Appomattox Station. At 9 p. m. I received orders from the major-general commanding division to move with my brigade onto the main road leading from Appomattox Court-House to Lynchburg, and hold it against the approach of the enemy. I reached the road by a march of about two miles, and at a point two miles and a half from the Court-House. Feeling the importance of gaining as much ground as possible to enable me, in case of an attack, to make a fight till notice could be given and re-enforcements got up, I advanced down the road cautiously, feeling my way, at midnight, till I encountered and drove in the enemy's pickets within half a mile of the Court-House. There I ordered a section of 3-inch guns—Lieutenant Lord, Battery A, Second U. S. Artillery—into position, dismounted three regiments—the First Maine, Sixth Ohio, and Second New York Mounted Rifles—threw up breast-works of rails, and waited till daylight, without blankets or fires.

At daylight the enemy advanced to attack, and then the advantage of the position that I had obtained by pushing forward during the night became apparent. My command was posted on a ridge or kind of plateau higher than any point at the enemy's command. Consequently, when his first attack was met by a rapid and vigorous firing from the section of artillery and a brisk fire from the skirmish line, being unable to ascertain the strength of our position, except by direct assault, he desisted at the time and delayed about two hours in maneuvering, driving in my mounted men from the flanks, &c., before he attempted to advance in force. I am of opinion that had the position I held been left for the occupation of the enemy he would have discovered my strength and continued his march at daylight, gained full possession of the road and extended his left beyond our right, thus, perhaps, producing a material difference in the results of the day. By the delay of these two hours our forces were got into position, so that when my command retired before the enemy, advancing in force, he was received at "Ready, aim, fire," and the career of the Army of Northern Virginia was brought to an end.

In this last engagement Lieutenant Cooper, Thirteenth Ohio, was killed, and Lieutenant Arnold, Second New York Mounted Rifles, wounded.

I have submitted a special report of prominent meritorious cases.

I here append a numerical list of casualties, and express my satisfaction at the patience, endurance, bravery, and good will of the entire command.

Command.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
1st Maine Cavalry.....	2	21	7	100	.....	12
6th Ohio Cavalry.....	.....	3	1	16	.....	3
13th Ohio Cavalry.....	2	4	3	43	1	25
2d New York Mounted Rifles.....	1	5	2	24	1	28
Total.....	5	33	14	183	2	68

Total casualties: 21 officers and 284 men, being 25 per cent. of the command.

I desire to make favorable mention of Capt. J. H. Harmony, Capt. Levi H. Dagget, Lieut. George T. Jewett, and Lieut. Orlando N. Ferry, members of my staff, for their strict attention to their duties and efficient service throughout the campaign.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. H. SMITH,

Brevet Brigadier-General Volunteers, Commanding.

Maj. H. C. WEIR,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Cavalry Division.

No. 213.

Report of Maj. Gen. Edward O. C. Ord, U. S. Army, commanding Army of the James.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE JAMES,
Richmond, Va., April 26, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to orders from the lieutenant-general commanding, I took Turner's and Foster's divisions, of Gibbon's corps, Birney's division, Twenty-fifth Corps, and Mackenzie's cavalry division, and placed them on the left front of the Petersburg defenses, by a march of thirty-six miles. This was done secretly, and although my lines were within rifle shot of the rebels and I had to cross two bridges overlooked by them, the movement was not, as I afterward learned from rebel officers, even suspected. As the success of our movement depended in a great measure upon its secrecy I will detail the measures I took to attain that end. Some days before the intended movement I withdrew quietly most of the forces required for it, and, after a demonstration on the right with them, placed them in camps where they could not be seen or heard; the remainder of my command I kept in motion, changing camps frequently. Pickets for several nights previous to the move were detailed only from the regiments to remain behind. On the night of the movement, and for some time afterward, the camps of the troops taken were kept lighted and tents standing, bands playing calls as usual. The bridges across which my troops had to pass were the day before covered with moist straw and compost, and no changes were shown in any part of my lines visible to the enemy. Before leaving the lines near Richmond, anticipating that General Grant would turn the enemy out of Petersburg and that Lee would evacuate Richmond, I gave General Weitzel written instructions how he had best march his men into Richmond so as to avoid the rebel torpedoes, a line of which covered their intrenchments. On reaching the left part of the enemy's works to the west of Petersburg my command was placed on the ground between the Sixth and Second Corps, and by direction of the lieutenant-general we pushed forward, drove in the enemy's outposts and pickets, capturing several hundred men, and established our line within 400 yards of the rebel works; this cost me several hundred men and officers, and took till the night of the 1st of April. Much patience, endurance, and pluck were displayed by the men.

Mackenzie's cavalry was sent on 31st of March to cover the Fifth Corps trains, afterward to report to General Sheridan. On the night of the 1st April having received orders to break through the enemy's line if an opportunity occurred and I could get my batteries under cover, or to co-operate with the Sixth Corps if they could carry out their orders and get in I did both. On my left we carried the enemy's line with Harris' brigade, and I sent two divisions to General Wright's assistance, who had called on me for aid. My commanders had directions, after the enemy's line near Hatcher's Run and on my front was carried, to form line of battle on their right, facing Petersburg, and to move rapidly up to such other intrenchments as they might find, and take them. This order did not reach all the commanders. Generals Gibbon, Foster, Turner, and Birney, however, all moved toward the enemy, driving them from successive positions toward Petersburg. General Wright's forces were met coming toward Hatcher's; the latter forces were faced about, connected with mine, and moved up to the enemy's second double line, which, being covered with heavily detached and isolated forts, made it necessary that they should be stormed. Forts Gregg and Baldwin in my front were attacked—the former by part of Foster's division, aided by part of Turner's division, and the latter by Harris' brigade, Turner's division. Fort Gregg was defended with desperate courage worthy a better cause, and for nearly half an hour after our troops had gained the parapet the rebels fought hand to hand. The place was not taken until a large part of its garrison were killed or wounded. For the details of gallant deeds here and elsewhere I must refer to Generals Foster's and Turner's reports and those of brigade commanders.

I afterward learned that on this day the enemy moved a portion of their forces from the north side of the James, which forces they had held there until now in the belief that I still remained there with the whole of the Army of the James, and after Petersburg was taken they expressed great surprise at finding my troops in their front. So much for secrecy.

That night the enemy evacuated Petersburg and Richmond and began their retreat toward Danville, and the lieutenant-general put my column in pursuit as the left wing and along the line of the South Side Railroad, and the men marched well. At Blacks and Whites I left Birney's division to guard the railroad. The evening before reaching Burkeville Junction—which we did on the morning of the 6th about 10 o'clock—I learned from General Sheridan that Lee's army had halted near Amelia Court-House; that our cavalry and a corps of infantry were in its front, and if all pushed up it would probably be captured. As Lee appeared to be aiming for either Danville or Lynchburg, Lieutenant-General Grant directed me to cut the bridges in his front, and wait orders at Burkeville, which it was important to hold. To cut the high bridge near Farmington [Farmville] I dispatched two small regiments of infantry and all my headquarters escort, the only cavalry I had, under Colonel Washburn, Fifth [Fourth] Massachusetts Cavalry, before daylight in the morning, with orders to push as rapidly as the exhausted condition of men and horses would permit, for the bridge, make a reconnaissance when near there, and, if not too well guarded, to burn it, returning at once with great caution.

After they had left, on the morning of the 5th [6th], about 9 or 10 a. m., I received a dispatch by courier from General Sheridan that Lee's army had broken away from him and were making, apparently, direct for me, at Burke's Junction. My command was immediately put in position to meet them, but it seems they turned off and took the road toward Farmville. Apprehending that my bridge-burning party might meet a force of Lee's cavalry sent southward to hold this bridge I had, before receiving Sheridan's dispatch, sent General Theodore Read, my chief of staff, and the most gallant and reliable officer I had at hand, to conduct the party, cautioning him to reconnoiter the country well before he moved up to the Farnville bridge; and after I received General Sheridan's dispatch I sent the next best staff officer I had to caution Read that Lee's army was in his rear, and he must return by pressing on, crossing the Appomattox and going around by Prince Edward Court-House. The last officer was driven back by Lee's cavalry. Read overtook Washburn's small party, took the cavalry into Farnville and examined the country, returned to the infantry, and was pushing for the bridge when the advance cavalry of Lee's whole army overtook them within two miles of the bridge. Here, about noon, the gallant Read drew up his little band of 80 cavalry and 500 infantry, rode along the front of his ranks, inspired them with all his own daring, and began the battle with an army in his front. Charge after charge was made by the handful of cavalry, led by the chivalrous Washburn, who captured more rebels than he had men; but Read fell mortally wounded, then Washburn, and at last not an officer of that cavalry party remained alive or unwounded to lead the men, and not until then did they surrender. But, as I learned afterward, this stubborn fight in his front led General Lee to believe that a heavy force had struck the head of his column; he halted his whole army, began intrenching, issued what was called a standing order, so that not long afterward Sheridan's cavalry and the Sixth Corps did overtake and strike him, and swept his lines for some two miles.

I left Burkeville for Farnville with my forces as soon as I found the direction which the rebels were taking, orders to that effect having been sent me, but I had done it when they reached me, with the intention of intercepting them in front or striking them on their flank. Found them heavily intrenched near Rice's Station. My column was developed, skirmishers moving up when night came on. That night they again broke for Lynchburg. Here the colored division overtook the main column, and we pushed after in three columns—Birney's, Foster's, and Turner's—to strike them at Farnville, my command still being the left wing and held ready to cut off all retreat toward Danville. At Farnville the rebels had some seven trains of supplies which had come down from Lynchburg to meet them, but we were upon their flank and rear as they marched into Farnville. The railroad here passed to the south of the Appomattox, the main road to Lynchburg to the north of it, the two roads coming nearly together again at Appomattox Court-House, so that General Lee, not being able to hold Farnville long enough to get the food and clothing off the trains, sent them up to Appomattox by rail, while he took the Lynchburg road around to the north, so as to strike the supplies at Appomattox; but General Grant was too quick for him, dispatching Sheridan with his cavalry to go around and head them at Appomattox at once (the trains of provisions were all captured or driven back), and dispatching my command on the heels of Sheridan, with directions to me to pick up Griffin's corps, then pushing from Prince Edward toward Appomattox, and with both corps to attack Lee on the head and front.

I marched my men from daylight on the 8th until 10 a. m. on the 9th of April, except three hours, and deployed my two corps across the head of the valley just as Lee's advance was pushing out of it, for, in spite of Sheridan's attempts to hold him, our cavalry were falling back in confusion before Lee's infantry. We were barely in time. General Lee would not believe General Gordon when the latter told him Ord's army was in his front, so General Gordon told me after the surrender; but we soon deployed and went in—Gibbon on the left, at double-quick, with Foster's and Turner's divisions, in beautiful style, and the colored troops also at the double-quick, under those commanders, with the Fifth Corps, under Griffin; thus covering all the valley that led toward Lynchburg and adjacent hill-sides, and our skirmishers were driving in the enemy's, so that, seeing no escape, General Lee sent the white flag forward, which met me at the Fifth Corps front, with a request for cessation of arms until he could meet General Grant and confer on the terms. As I knew that a surrender had been called for, and terms asked for and made known, I knew this second request meant acceptance, and the bugles were sounded to halt. The cheer of final success and of an end to our hardships went up with a will from hill-side to hill-side, and the rebels laid down our arms that night—it is to be hoped never to take them up again except in defense of our common country.

I do not think the troops could have behaved better; their hard night marching and their cheerfulness under hard work all the time, their stubborn fighting at Petersburg and every time we struck the retreating rebels, proved that the whole army was inspired with but one determination—to hunt the rebels down and whip them into surrender, and they did.

Respectfully,

W. O. C. OLD,
Major-General Volunteers.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN A. RAWLINS,
Chief of Staff.

APPENDIX.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA AND ARMY OF THE JAMES, June 1, 1865.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: I respectfully recommend the following promotions for gallant conduct in the field:

Brig. Gen. R. S. Foster, U. S. Volunteers, to be major-general by brevet, from 31st March, 1865.

Brig. Gen. R. S. Mackenzie, U. S. Volunteers, to be major-general by brevet, from 31st March, 1865.

Col. Albert M. Barney, One hundred and forty-second New York Infantry Volunteers, to be brigadier-general by brevet, from January 15, 1865; Fort Fisher.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. Peter S. Michie, U. S. Volunteers, to be brigadier-general U. S. Volunteers and brevet major U. S. Army, from March 30, 1865.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. John W. Turner, U. S. Volunteers, to be major-general, from 31st March, 1865.

Maj. H. B. Scott, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel U. S. Volunteers, from 31st March, 1865.

Lieut. Col. F. L. Manning, [One hundred and forty-eighth New York] Infantry Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Maj. H. G. Brown, aide-de-camp, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet, from March 31, 1865.

Maj. J. C. Paine, Signal Corps, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Surg. A. B. Mott, U. S. Volunteers, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Asst. Surg. Morris J. Asch, U. S. Army, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Asst. Surg. A. A. Woodhull, U. S. Army, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Asst. Surg. J. W. Hayward, U. S. Volunteers, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Capt. Charles B. Atchison, Third U. S. Infantry, ——— and aide-de-camp, to be major by brevet, U. S. Army, from 31st March, 1865.

Byt. Lieut. Col. Placidus Ord, assistant adjutant-general, U. S. Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet, from 29th October, 1864.

Capt. T. G. Welles, aide-de-camp, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Lieutenant Hanberg, Twenty-third Regiment U. S. Colored Infantry, to be captain by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Capt. W. R. King, U. S. Engineers, to be brevet major, from April 9, 1865.

Capt. W. H. Male, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Capt. Fred. Martin, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Capt. William H. Walling, One hundred and forty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, to be brevet major, from January 15, 1865; gallant conduct at Fort Fisher.

Colonel Donohoe, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, to be brevet brigadier-general, from September 27, 1864.

Lieut. Col. John Coughlin, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, to be brevet colonel, from April 9, 1865.

For meritorious and distinguished services:

Brig. Gen. George H. Gordon, U. S. Volunteers, to be major-general by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Col. Joseph Roberts, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to be brigadier-general by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Asst. Surg. Ely McClellan, U. S. Army, to be major by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Byt. Lieut. Col. S. S. Seward, aide-de-camp, U. S. Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Lieut. Col. E. W. Smith, assistant adjutant-general, U. S. Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Lieut. Col. John B. Howard, assistant quartermaster, U. S. Volunteers, to be colonel by brevet, from April 9, 1865.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

R. O. O. ORD,
Major-General, U. S. Volunteers.

[First Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1865.

Approved and respectfully forwarded to the Secretary of War.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

[Second Indorsement.]

JUNE 5, 1865.

Approved.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

No. 214.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Peter S. Michie, U. S. Army, Chief Engineer.

ENGINEER OFFICE,
HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,
Richmond, Va., May 12, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the engineering operations of the Army of the James during the campaign commencing March 27 and ending April 9, 1865:

My engineer force consisted of two battalions: First New York Volunteer Engineers, each of four companies, commanded by Bvt. Brig. Gen. James R. Hall, colonel First New York Volunteer Engineers; two companies heavy artillery, acting pontoniers; one company infantry, acting pontoniers, commanded by Capt. James W. Lyon, Fourth Rhode Island Volunteers, chief pontonier Army of the James. Two companies of engineers and about one-half of the pontoniers were ordered to report to Bvt. Capt. W. R. King, U. S. Engineers, assistant engineer, for duty with General Weitzel's command. Captain King was placed in charge of engineer operations north of the James, who reports operations briefly as follows, viz:

Marched into Richmond with engineer troops on 3d of April and aided in stopping progress of the fire. Began to build a defensive line, until the news of Lee's surrender stopped its progress. Built pontoon bridge across the James River, connecting Richmond and Manchester. The engineer force with the moving column of the army marched generally thus: Two companies, commanded by a field officer, to repair roads in advance, and the remainder following the leading division of infantry. There was a trail train of ten wagons, which followed the reserve engineer force. During the entire march General Hall reports having repaired and built twelve bridges and over twenty miles of road.

Pontoons.—The pontoon trains moved generally with the headquarters trains, and kept well up, causing no delay. The train consisted of fifteen canvas boats and four trestles, or 380 feet of bridge material, comprising in all a train of thirty-two wagons, including eight wagons for forage, one for spare chess, and one forge.

Topography.—My force consisted of Lieutenants Buckland and Brown, First New York Volunteer Engineers, and Lieutenant Hamburg, Twenty-third U. S. Colored Troops, who preceded the column, and obtained information respecting roads and other matters useful to the army.

On the 29th of March we occupied the left of old intrenched line of the Army of the Potomac in front of Hatcher's Run. On the 30th of March a new line was established by the advance of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, the rebel pickets being driven back into their intrenchments. During the night an advance of 400 yards was made, and a strong position secured—Finner's division connected with the Second Corps by a bridge built across Hatcher's Run by my pontoniers; Foster was on his right; and Birney's division, of the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, connected Foster with the left of the Sixth Army Corps, still in their intrenched line. The ground here was difficult to move over, being covered with brush and scrub timber, and so spongy from recent rains that it would not bear a horse. A line of intrenchments was constructed and a position secured for a battery of artillery, which commanded the rebel batteries in front, and which afterward ended in the advance of our troops on the morning of the 2d of April.

On the 2d I went, by your direction, to establish a line of defense, if it became necessary, and reported to General Gibbon. Finding that the success gained by our forces was complete I ordered the engineer troops to move at once, following the infantry. By direction of General

Gibbon I assumed command of two batteries of artillery belonging to the Sixth Corps and left in the old entrenched line, and used them against the enemy, who had thrown strong garrisons into Forts Gregg and Baldwin behind their line of continuous works. This prevented their retreat or re-enforcement, and as occasion offered I pushed them nearer and nearer, using them until the capture of the works by our forces. Capt. Henry A. Vezin, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, assistant engineer, was with me and did excellent service during this part of the engagement. During the afternoon, by order of General Gibbon, I posted the troops of General Birney's division so as to make a connection from General Seymour's (Sixth Army Corps) division, on the right, to Turner's (Twenty-fourth Army Corps), on the left. During the night detachments of engineers were put to work building batteries along the line, according to your order. Nothing of importance occurred as regards this branch of the service during the rapid march which was made after the rebel army. At Farmville we had the honor of having our pontoon trains first up, so that we were enabled to pass over the trains and artillery of the Second and Sixth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac, although the pontoon trains of that army were better equipped, lighter loaded, and possessed other advantages over the pontoon trains of our army. The whole engineer command behaved with great credit, and though they were small in numbers they have never been called on in vain. Their duties have been performed quietly, yet effectively and promptly.

I beg leave to mention favorably Brevet Brigadier-General Hall, colonel First New York Volunteer Engineers, who has been untiring in his efforts to carry out my orders and wishes; Lieutenant Franks, Company K, First New York Volunteer Engineers, for zeal and faithful performance of duties; and Lieutenant Buckland, for valuable assistance in the topographical department.

I beg leave to submit to your favorable consideration the following recommendations for promotion, viz: Bvt. Capt. William R. King, U. S. Engineers, to be brevet major, U. S. Army, to date from April 9, 1865, for eminent services as engineer officer during this campaign. To his ability we owe many improvements in our works, which have reflected credit upon the profession. Capt. Henry A. Vezin, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, U. S. Volunteers, acting assistant engineer, to be brevet major, U. S. Volunteers, to date from January 1, 1865, and brevet lieutenant-colonel, U. S. Volunteers, to date from April 9, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services as my assistant during this campaign, and for gallant conduct on the 2d of April, 1865. Capt. James W. Lyon, Fourth Rhode Island Volunteers, chief pontonier Army of the James, to be brevet major, U. S. Volunteers, to date from February 1, 1865, for excessive energy in the organization of his trains for the campaign, and for excellent service with his bridges during the recent freshets of the James River; to be brevet lieutenant-colonel, U. S. Volunteers, to date from April 3, 1865, for meritorious services in forwarding his trains under difficulties greater than that of all others, so that our army was enabled to aid two corps of the Army of the Potomac to cross the river at Farmville to follow in close pursuit of the enemy. Capt. Charles B. Parsons, First New York Volunteer Engineers, to be brevet major, U. S. Volunteers, to date from April 9, 1865, for meritorious services during the campaign. Second Lieut. Joseph Morris, One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, to be brevet first lieutenant, U. S. Volunteers, to date from April 1, 1865, for meritorious services and energy displayed as acting assistant quartermaster, engineer department, in the equipment of trains, which enabled us to move so readily.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers,

Chief Engineer Department Virginia and Army of the James.

Major-General ORD,

Comdg. Department of Virginia and Army of the James.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,

June 2, 1865.

The recommendations for promotion to brevet major and first lieutenant of Capt. William E. King, U. S. Engineers; Capt. H. A. Vezin, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, U. S. Volunteers; Capt. J. W. Lyon, Fourth Rhode Island Infantry Volunteers; Capt. Parsons, First New York Volunteer Engineers; Second Lieut. Joseph Morris, One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, are approved and cordially recommended.

E. O. C. ORD,

Major-General, Commanding.

No. 215.

Reports of Maj. Henry B. Scott, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry (unattached).

HQRS. FOURTH REGIMENT MASSACHUSETTS CAVALRY,

Near Richmond, Va., April 24, 1865.

I have the honor to transmit for the information of Your Excellency a report* of the engagement at High Bridge, Va., on the 6th instant, of a detachment of this regiment with the cavalry of General Lee's army.

This engagement, although disastrous to the regiment in the loss of three excellent and very gallant officers killed and five officers wounded, has redounded greatly to the credit of the regiment and the State. Several rebel officers with whom I conversed after their capture spoke of it as the most gallant fight of the war. The numerous saber wounds given and the great mortality among the officers is good evidence of this, and the fact that Colonel Washburn, with less than seventy men, almost held his own against three brigades of cavalry, with the infantry of Lee's army supporting them, needs no comment. I leave the two regiments of infantry under Colonel Washburn's command out of the consideration, because it is generally conceded that their behavior was not creditable. I think there is no doubt that if the whole regiment had been under Colonel Washburn's command we should have a different result to the engagement, and General Lee's surrender been hastened two days. I am happy to inform Your Excellency that the colors of the regiment were not captured; at the suggestion of Surgeon Garvin they were burned by the color-sergeant, Thomas Hickey.

* See No. 216, p. 1168.

I would respectfully suggest, if the matter has not already received your attention, that a new set of colors be sent the regiment, and three company guidons for Companies I, L, and M, which, unfortunately, were captured when all the officers and men were killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. I shall have the honor to forward nominations for the vacancies caused by the deaths in battle as soon as I am advised by Colonel Washburn, who is now at home.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

H. B. SCOTT,

Major, Commanding Regiment.

His Excellency JOHN A. ANDREW,

Governor of Massachusetts.

HEADQUARTERS, FOURTH REGIMENT MASSACHUSETTS CAVALRY,

Near Richmond, Va., May 9, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to forward, for the information of the major-general commanding the department, the inclosed report of the fight at High Bridge, Va., on the 6th ultimo, made by Lieutenant Lathrop, the senior officer of the regiment remaining unhurt.*

I respectfully ask your attention to the fact that of eleven officers engaged but three escaped uninjured, three officers being killed dead on the spot and five severely wounded, one of whom, Colonel Washburn, has since died, and ask that some official notice of their gallantry, as evidenced by their wounds, may be taken. I may add that all of these wounds are saber cuts or shots received at close quarters. The following officers were severely wounded, and merit brevets: Col. Francis Washburn, since died; Lieut. Col. Horatio Jenkins, jr., pistol wound in arm; Captain Caldwell, in thigh; First Lieutenant Belcher, saber cut; Second Lieutenant Thompson, in abdomen. Captain Goddard, Captain Hodges and Lieutenant Davis were killed on the spot while displaying especial gallantry. All of the officers and men of the command behaved admirably and deserve praise. The discrimination has been made in recommending brevets in favor of those who are, and have been, suffering from wounds.

I am, colonel, with great respect, your obedient servant,

H. B. SCOTT,

Major, Commanding Regiment.

Bvt. Col. ED. W. SMITH,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Department.

No. 216.

Report of Lieut. Joseph H. Lathrop, Adjutant Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS, FOURTH REGIMENT MASSACHUSETTS CAVALRY,

Camp Lee, Va., April 25, 1865.

MAJOR: Being the senior officer of the Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry escaped uninjured from the fight near High Bridge, Va., on the 6th, I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of the cavalry during that day:

On the morning of April 6 a detachment of thirteen officers and seven men of the Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, under of Colonel Washburn, left Burkeville to co-operate with the 9th Pennsylvania and One hundred and twenty-third Ohio in burning a long railroad bridge over the Appomattox River, a mile from Farmville. We proceeded quietly until, when some two miles of our destination, the advance guard was fired at by a few mounted rebels. The cavalry then pushed forward to hold the bridge, while the infantry followed slowly. A few minutes later we came to a small stream, the bridge over which had been burned up, and on a hill just beyond were about thirty rebel cavalry. They commenced firing as soon as the head of our column came in sight. The advance guard, under Lieutenant Davis, dashed forward, laid the charge up the hill, and drove the enemy for more than a mile from Farmville, they were re-enforced and made a stand. We fought with them for half an hour or more, when they opened on us with artillery, and we gradually fell back, hearing our infantry firing furiously in our rear.

* See next, post.

The fight took place at about noon in a small strip of woodland nearly opposite the bridge, the country adjacent being very rough and such that it was impossible for cavalry to work to any advantage. When we reached the scene of action the infantry were deployed and a line of fence just inside the woods, while a few rods beyond was a line of dismounted rebel cavalry engaging our infantry at short range. Immediately on our arrival Colonel Washburn held a consultation with General Read, and at once determined to charge the enemy. The squadron on the brow of the hill we moved forward in four files, at a trot, until beyond the right flank of our infantry, wheeling to the left, by fours we charged into the woods. The charge was eminently successful, the enemy scattering in every direction, and we captured a number of them. The squadron was then re-formed, and we charged back into the woods, meeting a large force of rebel cavalry who had come up during our first charge. The men fought desperately hand to hand, but the conflict only lasted a few minutes, for, overpowered by numbers and all the officers being disabled or killed, many of our men surrendered. Some tried to cut their way out, but it was useless. The guidons of Companies I, L, and M were captured, but the regimental flag was burned by Color-Sergeant Smith when he found that escape was impossible. Our whole force, consisting of infantry and cavalry, numbered about 800 men, while the troops we fought were General Rosser's division of cavalry, with Fitzhugh Lee's and Longstreet's infantry within supporting distance.

The enemy's loss was much greater than ours, but our cavalry suffered severely, particularly in officers; of 11 who went into the fight,

5 were killed, 5 wounded, and 3 taken prisoners. Our surgeon and his assistants remained in the rear with the wounded and were captured after the action was over.

Officers and sixty enlisted men were taken prisoners and remained in the hands of the enemy until the 9th instant, when General Grant rendered his army at Appomattox Court-House.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. LATHROP,

First Lieutenant and Adjutant Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry.

H. B. SCOTT,

Commanding Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry.

R R—VOL. XLVI, PT. I

No. 217.

Report of Maj. Gen. George L. Hartstaff, U. S. Army, commanding Defenses of Bermuda Hundred.

PORT HURON, MICH.,
October —, 1865.

GENERAL: In accordance with your request, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command while under your command, from the 19th of March, 1865, to the time when you were relieved from the command of the Department of Virginia:

Having reported to you for assignment to duty, in accordance with instructions from Lieutenant-General Grant, I was, by your order, assigned to the command of the line and troops between the James and Appomattox Rivers called the "Bermuda Hundred front." I assumed the command March 19. It was the most important part of our line, since it was the only point which directly threatened the enemy's communication between Petersburg and Richmond, every other point being protected by either the James or the Appomattox Rivers. The command consisted principally of artillery and was, in round numbers, about 5,000 effective for duty (I am without any data and can give only approximations from memory) and was organized into a mobile division, to act as infantry, if necessary, and an immobile brigade of heavy artillery, the division being commanded by Bvt. Maj. Gen. E. Ferrero and the brigade by Bvt. Brig. Gen. H. L. Abbot. This force was so small and the importance of the line it was to guard so great, that it required the most constant and careful watchfulness, and made duty very hard and onerous. It is the most trying duty a soldier is called to perform, and yet it was most faithfully attended to. When a part of the Army of the James moved across to operate with the Army of the Potomac General Weitzel, commanding the Twenty-fifth Corps, was, although a junior to me, left in charge of the line held by the Army of the James. Understanding the reason of this to be because of General Weitzel's intimate knowledge of the lines, the troops, and the country, while my knowledge of each was very limited, I very cheerfully acquiesced and obeyed General Weitzel's orders as willingly as though he were my senior.

A day or two before the evacuation of Petersburg I received a dispatch from General Grant that Mahone's division of the rebel army, which had been holding the line in my front, was at Burgess' Mills, in front of our left. I replied that the division was still in my front. Later I received another dispatch that there was strong reason to believe that some portion, at least, of that division had been detached. I then, in accordance with directions, through General Weitzel, made demonstrations to develop the enemy, and, failing in this, I gave to General Ferrero the instructions appended, marked A. My report through General Weitzel, marked B, gives the result. The loss, as afterward ascertained, was, I believe, eighty-four, including thirty-four prisoners, most of whom were soon recaptured.

The assaulting column in this movement, led by Major Campbell, of the Tenth New York Heavy Artillery, behaved splendidly, Major Campbell, who was wounded, being entitled to marked credit.

On the morning of the 3d of April, I think, the rebel line in my front was evacuated. I immediately moved a force to the railroad and found there that Petersburg was evacuated. Advancing then rapidly up the railroad toward Richmond I learned, on arriving at Chester Station, that Richmond also was evacuated. I succeeded in capturing 200 or 300 prisoners, stragglers principally, from the retreating army, and returned to camp, leaving a force at Chester Station. Directions meantime had arrived from General Grant to connect my pickets with those of the Army of the Potomac on Swift Creek; but, as the position I held was already some miles in advance of that line, I informed the general commanding of the fact, and maintained my original position. The next day I received instructions to proceed to Petersburg with a portion of my force and occupy the city and defenses, still holding with a small force the Bermuda Hundred line. Soon afterward the line of the South Side Railroad, from Sutherland's Station to and including City Point, was placed under my command. My command was not afterward engaged in active operations of any kind. It fluctuated a great deal in size and duties, but, without any data at hand, I am unable to give dates and details. I remained in Petersburg during the time you continued to command the Department of Virginia. I had neither precedent nor, until you returned to Richmond, instructions in the management of the negro or other questions under my control, but from first to last there was no trouble in my district, and I left it quiet and prosperous.

I am very sorry I must make this report so general in its statements, and submit it asking due allowance and consideration for the circumstances under which it is made.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,

Asst. Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, late Major-General Vols.

[General E. O. C. ORD.]

[Inclosure A.]

HEADQUARTERS DEFENSES OF BERMUDA HUNDRED, VA.

General WEITZEL:

I have just sent the following instructions to General Ferrero:

GENERAL: If the enemy has not replied to our fire on our right and center you had better send out a column to attack and capture their picket-line at that point, if possible. If this develops the fire of their batteries in force let the column withdraw; if not, push any successes you may obtain, even to the capture of their main line, holding the remainder of your command ready to support the attacking column. We must not let the enemy leave our line without our knowing it. If at any time or in any manner in the course of executing the above directions you learn positively of the continuance of the enemy in force on any part of this line, do not push the reconnaissance any farther, as the object of the movement will then be accomplished. Do this as soon as possible.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,

Major-General.

[Inclosure B.]

HEADQUARTERS DEFENSES OF BERMUDA HUNDRED,

April 2, 1865.

General WEITZEL:

My demonstrations this morning resulted in developing the enemy in force along his line. They were driven from their picket-line for more than half a mile with ease, and six of their pickets captured. Our advance was then opened upon by artillery throughout the whole of their line which bore upon it. Having heard from the prisoners that their line was still held in force by Mahone's division, the troops were ordered to withdraw. The enemy followed with a strong line of infantry to their picket-line, which they re-occupied. List of casualties not yet known.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Major-General.

ADDENDA.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HQRS. DEFENSES OF BERMUDA
No. 39. } HUNDRED, VA., ARMY OF THE JAMES,
April 3 [2], 1865.

To the troops engaged in the reconnaissance this morning the major-general commanding tenders his warmest thanks and his high appreciation of their services. The promptness with which they got in readiness and moved when ordered to the attack, their celerity in capturing the picket-line of the enemy, and the steadiness with which when ordered they retired under a heavy artillery fire, and in the face of a strong infantry force, prove the possession by them of the qualities of a soldier and merit the highest praise. It was considered of the utmost importance by the lieutenant-general commanding the army to determine positively whether the enemy in our front had been changed or weakened, and when all other means had failed no recourse was left but to develop his line and strength by the armed reconnaissance which you have so gallantly and successfully made.

By command of Major-General Hartsuff:

J. M. HOWARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 218.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Edward Ferrero, U. S. Army, commanding Infantry Division.

HEADQUARTERS INFANTRY DIVISION,
Defenses of Bermuda Hundred, April 2, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that, in accordance with instructions received from the general commanding, I attacked the enemy's line at a point in front of Redoubt Carpenter this morning at 4.30 o'clock. The attacking column was taken from Colonel Kibbe's brigade. The First Battalion of the Tenth New York Artillery, under command of Maj. J. B. Campbell, lead the advance. He succeeded in carrying the enemy's picket-line, three-quarters of a mile in length, and holding the same until the Second Battalion, Tenth New York Artillery, under command of Maj. S. R. Cowles, re-enforced the line. The enemy opened their batteries in front and on both flanks, [and,] aided by the infantry, made the position acquired almost untenable. The object of the reconnaissance being accomplished the command fell back to its original position.

I would state that the troops engaged behaved most splendidly, and returned in perfect order, guided by Major Campbell, under a very severe fire of artillery and musketry. Major Campbell deserves great praise for his gallantry and coolness, also for the ability he displayed in the handling of his troops. Wounded in the arm himself, yet not relinquishing his command until he saw his men safe to our lines.

Our loss will amount to about forty, as far as I can learn. A detailed report of casualties will be forwarded at the earliest moment.

The enemy were behind strong works, which were fully manned by infantry and artillery.

We captured six prisoners, and on retiring destroyed the abatis in front of the picket-line.

Very respectfully,

EDW. FERRERO,
Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Maj. J. M. HOWARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Defenses of Bermuda Hundred.

APPENDIX.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HEADQUARTERS INFANTRY DIVISION,
No. 4. } Defenses of Bermuda Hundred, Va.,
April 2, 1865.

The general commanding desires to express his admiration for the gallant manner in which the troops of the Tenth New York Artillery carried the picket-line of the enemy this morning. It was necessary that the presence and strength of the enemy should be developed, and the result was a success. To the officers engaged he tenders his hearty thanks for their co-operation in carrying out his orders. The conduct of Maj. J. B. Campbell is worthy of the highest praise, for the cool and skillful manner in which he advanced his line, and in withdrawing it under a heavy fire of artillery and musketry, while suffering himself from a wound in the arm. With such an officer to lead success must follow.

By command of Brevet Major-General Ferrero:

GEO. A. HICKS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 219.

Report of Maj. Gen. John Gibbon, U. S. Army, commanding Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FOURTH CORPS,
Richmond, Va., April 21, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this corps, commencing on the 27th of March and ending to-day:

On the night of 27th of March Foster's and Turner's divisions were withdrawn from the north side of the James River. The movement commenced at dark, Devens' division being left in charge of the line of works. The troops marched all night and all the next day, getting into camp near Fort Siebert about sundown on the 28th, performing one of the most remarkable marches on record, with very few stragglers. On the 29th my troops took up the position vacated by the Second Corps, the left resting on Hatcher's Run near the Armstrong house. On the 30th Turner's division was moved across Hatcher's Run to take position on the right of the Second Corps, and the next day crossed to the north side of Hatcher's Run, driving the enemy's pickets into his works, capturing many of them and connecting with Foster, who also moved forward, capturing several hundred prisoners.

On the 1st of April a battery was put up on Turner's line, taking in reverse a portion of the enemy's line on the south side of Fletcher's Run and in front of the Second Corps. Every arrangement was made for an assault in the morning to co-operate with the Sixth and Ninth Corps on our right. Birney's division, of the Twenty-fifth Corps, was placed under my orders on the 30th, and occupied a portion of our line.

At daylight on the 2d all our preparations were made for assault, two brigades each of Turner's and Foster's divisions being massed in rear of our line. At 6.50 a. m. an order was received from Major-General Ord directing me to send all my available force to the support of the Sixth Corps, which had broken through the enemy's line near Fort Welch. I at once ordered the whole of Foster's division and two of Turner's brigades to move to the right, and almost immediately afterward Harris' brigade, of Turner's division, carried the enemy's line in front of them, and, pushing forward Birney's division, we occupied the enemy's line and met the Sixth Corps coming down from the right, sweeping everything before them. Harris' brigade was now pushed up toward Petersburg, followed by that portion of the Sixth Corps which had come down the line and by Birney's division. On reaching the vicinity of Fort Welch, where the Sixth Corps had broken through, I found Foster already in line of battle perpendicular to the enemy's old line and confronting two strong works, Forts Gregg and Baldwin, which the enemy had erected to protect his right of the town. Harris' brigade was formed on Foster's left, and as soon as they arrived Turner's two other brigades were formed in rear of Foster. As the Sixth Corps came up it went into position, two divisions on my left and one on my right, and as soon as they reached within supporting distance Foster's line was ordered to charge the works in its front. The troops moved steadily and rapidly forward, under a very heavy fire of both artillery and musketry, and gained Fort Gregg, to find it surrounded by a deep, wide ditch partially filled with water and flanked by a fire from both right and left. Turner's two brigades were pushed rapidly up in support from the second line, whilst Harris at the same time rushed against Fort Baldwin. The enemy made a most desperate resistance, and it was not until Fort Gregg was almost entirely surrounded and our brave men had succeeded in climbing upon the parapet under a most murderous fire, that the place was finally taken by the last of several determined dashes with the bayonet, Harris and a portion of the First Division at the same time carrying Fort Baldwin. This assault, certainly one of the most desperate of the war, succeeded by the obstinate courage of our troops, but at a fearful cost. Fifty-five of the enemy's dead were found inside Fort Gregg, whilst my own loss during the operations of the day, most of which occurred around these two forts, was 10 officers and 112 men killed and 27 officers and 565 men wounded. We captured 2 pieces of artillery, several colors, and about 300 prisoners.

On the 3d the corps marched toward Burke's Station, reaching that point, distance fifty-two miles, late on the night of the 5th, and at 11 a. m. the next day resumed the march toward Farmville to head off Lee's forces, which were trying to get round our left flank toward Danville. After marching eight or ten miles we came upon the enemy intrenched at Rice's Station, and at once made preparations to attack him, but before our troops could get into position and drive in the enemy's pickets night put an end to the operations, and when we moved forward at daylight the next morning the enemy had gone. We had, however, the satisfaction of knowing that our threatening position in the vicinity of the Danville road prevented his making use of it, and being pursued toward Farmville he retreated across the Appomattox at that point, burning the bridges behind him.

At 5 a. m. on the 8th the corps started up the Lynchburg road after Sheridan's cavalry and followed by the Fifth Corps. The troops, learning of the presence of the enemy before them and that the cavalry needed assistance, pushed forward with a will, marched until nearly 12 o'clock, dropped down alongside the road for a three hours' sleep, and were again under way at 3, cheering at the sound of the locomotives captured by Sheridan. By General Ord's direction I was to throw my force across the road leading from Appomattox Court-House to Lynchburg. As we approached the designated point the firing, which at first appeared to be merely that of a skirmish line, rapidly increased and neared the road upon which my troops were moving. Foster was moved up at a double-quick, formed across the road, and his line pushed forward at once with as much rapidity as was permissible by the retreating bodies of cavalry. In the meantime the firing seemed to gain so rapidly toward our right that I deemed it best to face Turner to the right and push him forward on Foster's right, instead of throwing him on his left, as originally intended, to check the advance of the enemy. These maneuvers were rapidly performed, and as soon as our infantry opened fire the enemy fell back, and on our reaching the cleared ground in sight of the Court-House information was received that negotiations were going on for the surrender of Lee's army and that hostilities had ceased.

From this time till the 17th I was engaged in receiving the surrender of Lee's army and removing the public property to Farmville. On the 12th Mackenzie's cavalry and Turner's division were sent to take possession of Lynchburg, where a large quantity of public property was taken possession of and either used, removed, or destroyed. On the 17th the command started to return. It reached Burkeville on the 19th, left there on the 21st, and reached here to-day.

In all these operations it is a matter of pride and pleasure to refer to the conduct of my troops. Their behavior under fire was admirable, and their marching, both by night and day, drew forth praises from the highest sources. By their rapid marching they twice succeeded in throwing themselves across the path of Lee's retreating forces, and by their firm stand there aided materially in the grand final result of the campaign.

I desire to call especial attention to the energy and zeal displayed by my division commanders, Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. W. Turner and Brig. Gen. R. S. Foster, who were untiring in their efforts and gallant in their conduct on the field. Their reports, together with that of Brig. Gen. Charles Devens, whose division remained on the north side of the James and was the first to enter the city of Richmond, are inclosed, and their recommendations for promotion cordially indorsed. The reports of the three battery commanders who accompanied my command are also inclosed. Captain Elder fired the last shots at the retreating cavalry near Appomattox Court-House.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN GIBBON,

Major-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

Bvt. Col. ED. W. SMITH,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the James.

RECAPITULATION.

Troops.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.		Total.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
First Division .....	3	67	17	419	1	19	21	505
Independent Division .....	14	46	34	300			14	385
Sharpshooters .....				18				18
Artillery .....		1		1				2
Total* .....	6	114	50	777	1	19	30	910

Total casualties, 916.

JOHN GIBBON,
Major-General of Volunteers, Commanding Corps.

APPENDIX.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HONORS, TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
No. 41. } In the Field, Va., April 4, 1865.

With great satisfaction the major-general commanding congratulates his gallant command upon the successful operations of the past few days. The Twenty-fourth Army Corps has demonstrated that with a well organized, disciplined force, no military achievement is impossible. The marching has been superior to anything of the kind heretofore witnessed, and the desperate assault upon Fort Gregg, the last of the enemy's strongholds around Petersburg, entitles the command to a place alongside their late gallant comrades of Fort Fisher. Your commander is proud of you.

By command of Maj. Gen. John Gibbon:

EDWARD MOALE,
Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FOURTH CORPS,
Richmond, Va., June 2, 1865.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General U. S. Army, Washington:

GENERAL: I have the honor to recommend the following-named officers of my staff for brevet commissions:

Lieut. Col. A. B. Lawrence, chief quartermaster, to be brevet colonel for faithful services during the late campaign.

Maj. C. C. Abell, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery, chief of artillery, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

Bvt. Maj. T. E. Lord, Third New York Volunteers, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

Capt. H. P. Gerrish, assistant quartermaster, to be brevet major for faithful services during the late campaign.

Capt. D. P. Barnard, One hundred and thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, to be brevet major for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

* But see revised table, pp. 594, 595.

Capt. C. W. Wells, One hundred and eighteenth New York Volunteers, to be brevet major for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

First Lieut. J. F. Streeker, Fortieth Massachusetts Volunteers, to be brevet captain for faithful services during the late campaign.

Capt. H. A. Vezin, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet major for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

Capt. Charles E. Thomas, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, to be brevet major for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

First Lieut. Sheldon Leavitt, jr., Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, to be brevet captain for gallant and distinguished services during the late campaign.

All to date from the 9th of April, 1865, the day of the surrender of Lee's army.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN GIBBON,

Major-General of Volunteers, Commanding Corps.

---

No. 220.

Report of Lieut. Frederick J. Amsden, Signal Corps, U. S. Army.

HEADQUARTERS SIGNAL DETACHMENT, 24TH ARMY CORPS,

Richmond, Va., May 1, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report for the month of April, 1865:

The headquarters signal detachment, consisting of myself and three enlisted men, increased on the 10th to five, had been with the headquarters Twenty-fourth Army Corps in all its movements during the month. If I had been allowed to take more of my detachment when the campaign opened it could have been used very efficiently.

On the 1st I was placed in charge of the signal station near the ruins of the Armstrong house, headquarters First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, where we remained until the next morning, when, our troops having broken the enemy's line in front, I moved the station with headquarters Twenty-fourth Army Corps. Our forces pressed on toward Petersburg, and the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, by a desperate assault, captured Forts Gregg and Baldwin, in the enemy's interior line of works. Headquarters were established at a house near by on the Boydton plank road, where I established a signal station, connecting with the Army of the Potomac signal tower, on the old front of the Sixth Army Corps. The next morning (3d) the enemy evacuated Petersburg, and the Twenty-fourth Army Corps immediately moved on the Cox road, down the South Side Railroad, toward Burkeville Junction, passed through Sutherland's Station, and bivouacked for the night about three miles beyond. Here I discovered a train of cars farther down the railroad. Upon reporting it to Major-General Gibbon, commanding corps, he ordered some of his staff to take the headquarters escort, the orderlies, &c., and ascertain what it consisted of, &c. Upon reaching the train we found an engine and three box-cars, containing ten or twelve wounded rebels. The locomotive was disabled, but the cars were good. We moved on the next day (4th), passing through Ford's Station, Wilson's Station, and reached Nottoway Court-House at 2 p. m. on the 5th. Here I established a station of observation upon one of the churches. We reached Burkeville Junction at 10 p. m. same day; moved on to Rice's Station the next day, where we met the enemy, and quite an engagement ensued. I established a station of observation in a tree near our line of battle, which commanded a very good view of the enemy's hastily constructed line of breast-works. The detachment rendered very good service at this place by reporting to the general commanding the number of guns in position, the movements of troops, &c. Reached Farmville the next day (7th), and remained over night. Here another station of observation was established. Moved on the next day (8th), passed through Prospect Station, and arrived near Appomattox Court-House about 8 a. m. on the 9th. Here we found the enemy driving the cavalry and making a desperate effort to escape by the road leading from the Court-House to Lynchburg. The First and Second Divisions, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, were immediately brought forward at a double-quick and formed across this road. They moved forward then and pressed the enemy back until about 10.30 a. m., when notice was received of a cessation of hostilities.

Information was received that a portion of the enemy, in anticipation of a surrender, were leaving, and I was ordered to establish a station of observation in a high tree near by; not being able to get onto the tree I established the station on a Mr. Tibbs' house, from which a very good view of the enemy's camp was had. I could ascertain nothing in regard to the reported movement. The station was abandoned about 3 p. m., official news of the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia having been received. We remained in camp at Appomattox Court-House (Major-General Gibbon, commanding Twenty-fourth Army Corps, having been assigned to the duty of settling everything consequent to the surrender) until the morning of the 17th, when we started for Burkeville Junction, passing through Evergreen Station, Pamplin's Station, Prospect Station, Farmville, and arriving at Burkeville Junction about 8.30 a. m. on the 19th. Remained at Burkeville Junction until the morning of the 22d, when we received orders to report at Richmond, Va. We started at 5 a. m. on the 22d; passed through Jennings Ordinary Station, Jetersville, Five Forks, Amelia Court-House; crossed the Appomattox River at Goode's Bridge, Swift Creek; passed through Gregory's, Manchester, and arrived in Richmond, Va., about 2.30 p. m. on the 23d. Twenty-fourth Army Corps headquarters were established on the 25th on Ford's place, Richmond, where the detachment has been ever since.

Frequently on the route Major-General Gibbon has called upon me to observe with the telescope certain points which he wished examined. I have endeavored to make myself as useful as possible, and think the general is perfectly satisfied with the work accomplished by the detachment accompanying headquarters.

The reports of the greater portion of this detachment, which was on duty with the Third Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, and relieved from duty with this detachment on the 25th, will probably be forwarded to the chief signal officer of the department direct.

I had but three enlisted men with me, one of whom was driving the team, until the 10th, when two more were reported.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRED. J. AMSDEN,

Second Lieutenant, Signal Corps, U. S. Army.

Major J. C. PAINE,

Chief Signal Officer, Department of Virginia.

No. 221.

Reports of Brig. Gen. Robert S. Foster, U. S. Army, commanding First Division.

HQDQs. FIRST DIVISION, TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
In the Field, Appomattox Court-House, Va.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, from March 27 to April 10, 1865:

Pursuant to orders from the major-general commanding, at 5 p. m. March 27 my command broke camp, on the New Market road, on the north bank of James River, and during the night and following day moved across the James and Appomattox Rivers to a point about four miles from Hatcher's Run, where we bivouacked for the night. On the morning of the 29th the command occupied the line of works from Fort Sampson, on the right, to Hatcher's Run, on the left, vacated by the Second Army Corps. On the 30th, with some skirmishing, I advanced the Third Brigade, Colonel Dandy, in connection with General Turner's division on my left. On the morning of the 31st I advanced my skirmish line, supported by the division—the First Brigade, Colonel Osborn, on the right; the Fourth, Colonel Fairchild, in the center; and the Third, Colonel Dandy, on the left—driving the enemy from their intrenched picket-line into their main works, capturing about 325 prisoners, and establishing my line in close proximity to their works. Brisk skirmishing was kept up during the whole day.

April 1, at 4 a. m. the enemy charged on the front of the Third Brigade, driving in their pickets and reaching our temporary rifle-pits with their colors, but were handsomely repulsed by that brigade, who captured about thirty prisoners, and immediately re-established their lines. During the night of the 1st I sent out scouts, and ascertaining that the enemy had moved a portion of their troops toward our left I made disposition of my command to assault the enemy's works at daylight on the 2d, but the order was afterward countermanded.

At about 8 a. m. on the 2d, pursuant to orders, I moved to the right through the enemy's works, which had been penetrated by the Sixth Army Corps, relieving General Hamblin's brigade of that corps, which moved to the left toward Hatcher's Run, I moving with my command in line of battle—the First Brigade, Colonel Osborn, on the right; the Third, Colonel Dandy, in the center; and the Fourth, Colonel Fairchild, on echelon on the left—inside the captured works in the direction of Petersburg, driving the enemy before me from several lines of works until we arrived at the strong double lines of forts around that city, into which works the enemy retired, Forts Gregg and Baldwin being on my immediate front. At about 1 p. m., pursuant to orders, I directed an assault upon Fort Gregg, which was gallantly made, and resulted in the capture of the work, with two guns and the entire garrison of 250 officers and men. The fighting on both sides at this point was the most desperate I ever witnessed, being a hand-to-hand struggle for twenty-five minutes after my troops had reached the parapet. Fifty-seven of the enemy's dead were found inside the work. Several regiments of the command claim the honor of first planting their colors on the work; but where all did so well and the difference is so slight I find it impossible to decide who is entitled to it. A portion of General Turner's division came up during the assault and rendered efficient service. Brevet Brigadier-General Harris' brigade, of General Turner's division, was ordered to report to me just previous to the assault, and was formed on my left and advanced to the deserted camp in front of Fort Baldwin. Had there not been a wide gap between the left of Harris' brigade and the Sixth Army Corps, which would have exposed my left flank, the garrison of Fort Baldwin could have been captured. This fort was evacuated by the enemy as soon as Gregg was surrendered, and was occupied by the Eleventh Maine, of the Third Brigade, followed by portions of the Fourth Brigade and Harris' brigade. Immediately on the surrender of Fort Gregg, Capt. Charles Sellmer, acting assistant inspector-general of my staff, entered the work and turned its guns on the retreating forces from Fort Baldwin. At night I established a strong picket-line in front of the captured forts, and my command bivouacked in their rear.

On the morning of the 3d it was discovered that Petersburg was evacuated. I advanced my picket-line to the works and awaited orders. At this place Light Battery B, First U. S. Artillery, Captain Elder, and Light Battery A, Fifth U. S. Artillery, Lieutenant Muhlenberg, were assigned to my command. At 8 a. m. my command moved on the Cox road down the line of the South Side Railroad, General Turner's division in the advance, and bivouacked that night in line of battle about three miles beyond Sutherland's Station, General Turner's division being on my left; distance marched about thirteen miles. April 4, moved at 6 a. m. in the advance, bivouacked in line of battle at Wilson's Station, having marched fifteen miles. April 5, moved at 6 a. m., General Turner's division in advance, and bivouacked at 11 p. m. near Burkeville, having marched about thirty miles. April 6, at 6 a. m. moved through Burkeville and formed a line of battle, the right resting on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, the left on the Lynchburg Railroad, throwing a strong picket-line in front. At 12 o'clock noon, pursuant to orders, I moved with my command down the Farmville road, leaving my picket-line undisturbed, and pushed on in the advance. At the Genito road the Third Brigade, Colonel Dandy, was sent down that road to the right to connect, if possible, with the cavalry of General Sheridan's command, and the rest of the command moved forward. On reaching Rice's Station I found the enemy in force, and formed in line of battle—Colonel Fairchild's (Fourth) brigade on the right, his right resting at a house about 200 yards to the right of the Farmville road; Colonel Osborn's (First) brigade on the left, his left extending across the railroad a short distance beyond the Phillips house; Elder's battery (B), First U. S. Artillery, was placed in position on the left of the Farmville road. After forming, I pushed my line forward, under a heavy skirmish fire, as far as practicable, finding the enemy in a strong position. General Turner's division arriving, formed on my left. Receiving information that the enemy were moving to my right, I sent the Sixty-seventh Ohio, Colonel Voris, of the First Brigade, to the right of the Fourth Brigade. About 9 p. m. the Third Brigade, Colonel Dandy, having communicated with General Sheridan's cavalry, reported and was placed in reserve in rear of the Phillips house, in support of Anthony's battery. In this position the troops bivouacked for the night.

April 7, at daylight it was discovered the enemy had withdrawn, and, pursuant to orders, I at once moved forward on the Farmville road until I reached Bush River, when a strong skirmish line of the enemy was found intrenched on the hills on the opposite bank to dispute our passage. The First Brigade, Colonel Osborn, was formed in line of battle on the left of the road, and, preceded by a strong skirmish line, advanced in connection with some of the cavalry and drove the enemy from their position, when I again advanced in column and bivouacked outside the town. Colonel Dandy's (Third) brigade and one section of Elder's light battery were sent forward to the crossing of the Appomattox, and did not return to the command until the following morning. At Fawnville Colonel Doubleday's brigade, Birney's division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, was ordered to report to me for duty. At 5 a. m. April 8 I moved forward, General Turner's division in the advance, marching until midnight, when the command bivouacked about four miles from Appomattox Court-House, having marched about thirty-two miles. At 3 a. m. on the 9th the division moved forward in the advance; at daylight a short halt was made for coffee, when the cavalry becoming engaged we moved forward rapidly to their support, the last half mile being at double-quick, we arriving at the Lynchburg road just as the cavalry were retreating in confusion. By my directions Colonel Osborn, First Brigade, formed his command in line of battle on the right of the Lynchburg road with the greatest promptness, although broken up three times by the lead horses of the cavalry, and, in pursuance of orders from the major-general commanding, advanced his line without supports and with both flanks exposed; his men went forward with the greatest enthusiasm, checking the enemy and forcing them back. In the meantime Colonel Dandy's (Third) brigade and Colonel Fairchild's (Fourth) brigade were hurried forward and formed—the Third Brigade on the left of the First, and the Fourth on echelon in support of the First Brigade. The Eighth Maine, of the Fourth Brigade, was pushed forward on the right of the First Brigade, capturing one gun. At this time I experienced considerable inconvenience in consequence of the conflicting orders given to my artillery by the chief of artillery of the corps, he detaining Elder's battery, which I had ordered into a position, when it would have been of service to me had it got up in time. As my line advanced the enemy continued retreating. Receiving constant information that the enemy were moving to my left, I took the Fourth Brigade from the support of the First and put it on the left and gradually moved with my whole line in that direction until, just as I reached the Bent Creek road, I received information of a cessation of hostilities, which resulted in the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia. Doubleday's brigade while moving in the rear of the column was attacked in flank and obliged to form a line of battle parallel with the road and drive the enemy back, which they did and joined the command near the Bent Creek road. Elder's battery was placed in position about half a mile from the Bent Creek road and fired a few shots at the retreating enemy.

I do not consider it egotistical to say, to this division is due the credit of preventing the enemy from gaining possession of the Lynchburg road (their only line of retreat), and of being among those who struck the last blow against the Army of Northern Virginia.

Too much cannot be said in praise of both officers and men of the division for the cheerfulness with which they have endured the fatigue attendant upon the long and rapid marches, and for the almost entire absence of stragglers from the command. All seemed to feel the importance of our movements, and to do their utmost to insure their success.

I have already forwarded the names of meritorious officers deserving promotion, but cannot close without again expressing my obligations to my brigade commanders for their prompt co-operation in a and for the gallant conduct displayed by them in action.

House. To the promptness of Colonel Osborn in putting his brigade into position and attacking the enemy on the morning of the 9th of April, after the cavalry were forced back, is due the credit of preventing the enemy from gaining the Lynchburg road, their only line of retreat. Colonel Osborn has been frequently recommended for promotion to brigadier-general. Col. George B. Dandy, One hundredth New York Volunteers, commanding Third Brigade, fought his brigade splendidly at Fort Gregg, also at Appomattox Court-House, and deserves promotion. Col. H. S. Fairchild, Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, commanding Fourth Brigade, displayed both energy and gallantry at Fort Gregg and Rice's Station, as well as rendering efficient service at Appomattox Court-House. He is worthy of promotion and has been before highly recommended. All my brigade commanders deserve well of their country for the zeal and promptness displayed during this campaign. I would call the attention of the major-general commanding particularly to Capt. Charles Sellmer, acting assistant inspector-general, of my staff, for conspicuous gallantry on the 2d of April, at Fort Gregg, when he went mounted between Fort Gregg and Fort Whitworth under a most murderous fire of musketry and artillery, carrying my orders and sending reinforcements to Fort Gregg. As soon as the latter fort was captured he entered it and turned the enemy's guns on their retiring forces. He also displayed conspicuous gallantry both at Rice's Station and Appomattox Court-House. He is extremely worthy of promotion to major by brevet. Capt. F. A. Sawyer, Forty-seventh New York Volunteers, assistant commissary of munitions, of my staff, has displayed unusual energy and ability together with conspicuous gallantry, and well deserves to be brevetted. Maj. P. A. Davis, assistant adjutant-general, of my staff, has displayed his usual gallantry and ability together with his indomitable energy, and his presence was at all times where it was most needed. I would recommend his promotion by brevet. Surg. A. C. Barlow, Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers, chief medical officer, Capt. T. H. Byrnes, Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, acting ordnance officer, Capt. George W. Waddle, One hundred and forty-eighth New York Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, Capt. Theodore J. Curtis, Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers, acting aide-de-camp, First Lieut. W. H. H. Frye, Eleventh Maine Volunteers, aide-de-camp, and Capt. Robert Curruthers, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, assistant provost-marshal, were all attentive to their duties and rendered valuable assistance to me.

When all were striving to do so well I find great difficulty in selecting particular cases and have mentioned only those that came under my own observation.

I think I am fully justified in saying that the First Division has, under all circumstances, assisted in gaining a reputation for the "Red Heart" and Twenty-fourth Army Corps that is creditable to themselves and to the major-general commanding.

I am, very respectfully,

R. S. FOSTER,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

[Undersecretary.]

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
Richmond, Va., April 25, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded. Approved.

JOHN GIBBON,
Major-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

No. 222.

Report of Col. Thomas O. Osborn, Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS, FIRST BRIG., FIRST DIV., 2d ARMY CORPS,
Appomattox Court-House, April 11, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to forward the following report of the operations of this brigade since leaving the north bank of the James:

The brigade, preceded by battalion of sharpshooters, under command of Captain Curtis, moved from camp on the New Market road at 6.45 p. m. March 27, 1865, crossing the James River, at Deep Bottom, at 11 p. m.; crossed the Appomattox, at Broadway Landing, at daylight, halting about two hours a mile beyond for breakfast. Marched during the day toward Hatcher's Run, on the left, bivouacking for the night near Humphreys' Station. At 4 a. m. March 29, 1865, moved forward and relieved General Miles' (First) division, of the Second Army Corps, occupying his entire division front.

At 3 p. m. on the 31st of March, the Third and Fourth Brigades of this division being engaged on our left, our pickets were strongly re-enforced, in accordance with orders of the brigadier-general commanding, and a brisk skirmish was commenced with the enemy's pickets, which continued about two hours, drawing heavy re-enforcements to their lines. But two of our men were wounded, one of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers and one of the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers, both slight.

Being relieved by a brigade of colored troops April 1, 1865, at 7 p. m., I moved my brigade to the left in accordance with orders, reporting to the brigadier-general commanding. Arriving on the ground designated my command was placed in readiness to charge. In the meantime, by direction of General Foster, I sent six men forward to ascertain, if possible, the strength of the enemy and the nature of the ground and obstructions intervening between our forces and the enemy's works, which was satisfactorily accomplished, the scouts giving full and reliable information.

At 5 o'clock on the morning of the 2d of April I ordered forward one regiment of my command—the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers—by direction of the general commanding, to support the Third Brigade, which was skirmishing with the enemy. At 6 a. m. I withdrew the regiment, and in accordance with orders from the brigadier-general commanding I moved left in front to the ground of the Sixth Army Corps, some four or five miles to the right. Nearing the front of the Sixth Corps, and word having been received that the enemy were reoccupying a portion of the line of works from which they had been driven early in the morning, the command "double-quick" was given. Passing through the lines of the Sixth Corps, the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers being in advance, I threw them forward as skirmishers, while the other regiments of the brigade were thrown into position in echelon, in the following order: The One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right, their right resting on the line of rebel works, the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers in the center, the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers being on the left. At once pressing rapidly forward we drove the enemy from their positions, capturing some 25 prisoners, with 2 pieces of artillery, and, turning these guns upon the enemy, moved forward until we gained the hill immediately in front of Fort Gregg and the chain of forts in the interior line of defenses of Petersburg, which we found to be strongly defended by artillery and infantry. At this point I halted my brigade and prepared to charge the fort. The Third and Fourth Brigades moving up, formed on my left at 12.15 p. m. At 1 p. m. orders were received to move forward and carry the enemy's works. I moved my command forward about half the distance, in quick time, at right shoulder shift arms, and having passed a deep and difficult slough, gave the command charge, when the brigade, with cheers, swept up the ascent at the double-quick, under a terrible fire of grape, canister, and minie-balls tearing through the ranks. The Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, moving straight forward, struck the front and the angle of the fort on the left, and next the angle on the road; the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers striking the angle on the road; the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers and One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers striking this angle and the angle still farther on the right, swept around to the rear, striving to gain an entrance, but it was found to be an inclosed fort, admirably constructed for defense. The men rushed into the moat and clambering up the extreme slope fought hand-to-hand across the parapet with the enemy, who stubbornly refused to surrender although surrounded on all sides. The fighting lasted twenty-four minutes when we finally burst over the parapets, and the fort was ours. The redoubt on the right of the fort was also carried in the charge by a portion of the skirmish line of the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers, assisted by two companies of the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers which had been detached for this purpose, capturing a number of prisoners, together with two cannon and five caissons.

In this assault upon Fort Gregg, Capt. Patrick O'Murphy and First Lieut. Robert McMillan, One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, were killed, as also First Lieut. William M. Lamb, Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. Capt. O. M. Eddy and Captain Ansell, Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers, Lieutenant Neal, Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, Captain Gregory and Captain Bippers, Lieutenants Williams, Patton, and Ellison, One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Captain Hitchcock and Lieutenant Murray, Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers, were wounded. The One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers lost 14 enlisted men killed and 60 wounded; the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers, 3 enlisted men killed and 25 wounded; the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, 19 enlisted men killed and 44 wounded; the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers, 7 enlisted men killed and 54 wounded.

At 8 a. m. on the morning of the 3d of April the brigade moved at the head of the division, the right in front, and marched toward Lynchburg, bivouacking for the night about eighteen miles distant from Petersburg. On the 4th instant reached Wilson's Station, halting at Ford's Station for dinner. On the 5th, after a long and tedious march of twenty-five miles, marching by way of Nottoway Court House, we arrived at Burke's Station at 11 p. m.

At 1 p. m. on the 6th of April we marched, in accordance with orders, toward Rice's Station; arriving there we found the enemy in heavy force throwing up intrenchments at the station to oppose us. In accordance with orders from the general commanding, throwing forward skirmishers, I formed line of battle and moved forward the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers and One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, a little to the left and in advance of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, which was held in reserve, its right resting upon the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers upon the right of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, the railroad intervening, and connecting with the Fourth Brigade on our right. I advanced my line as far as the Phillips house, nearly one mile southeast of the station, under a severe shell and musketry fire, driving back the enemy. Halting at this point, we remained during the night, sleeping upon our arms. In this engagement Lieutenant-Colonel West, of the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers, and Capt. Oliver C. Gregory, of the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, were wounded. The One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers lost, in wounded, 3 enlisted men; the Sixty-second Ohio, 13 enlisted men; the Sixty-seventh Ohio, 7 enlisted men.

At 6 a. m. the 7th of April, advancing upon the enemy's works and finding them abandoned, my brigade moved out, taking the advance, following closely after the enemy, our skirmishers, under command of Lieut. Col. R. P. Hughes, of the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, constantly engaging their rear, taking several prisoners. Crossing Sandy River, where General Crook's cavalry division came up on our right, we moved forward to Bush River, where we found the enemy inclined to dispute the passage. By direction of the general commanding, I formed line of battle—the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers on the right, its right resting upon the left of the road, the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers in the center, the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers on the left, the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers supporting—and moved forward to the bank of the river. The river being impassable except at the bridge, the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, being on the right, was immediately thrown across the river, moved to the top of the hill, the enemy falling back before them; moving across with the remainder of the brigade, we arrived at Farmville at 5 p. m., and encamped for the night on the west side of town.

At 6 a. m. April 8 the march was resumed, bivouacking at 12 o'clock (midnight), having marched a distance of thirty-seven miles.

Moving forward again at 3.30 a. m. on the 9th of April we halted at 6 a. m. for breakfast. At 7 o'clock heavy skirmishing being heard in advance in the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House my brigade moved rapidly forward to the scene of action. Arriving on the ground at the double-quick the cavalry falling back in confusion and having thrown out a portion of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers as skirmishers, and throwing my brigade forward into line—the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers on the right, the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers in the center, the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers on the left, the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers in reserve—I charged upon the enemy, giving the notice that the old Twenty-fourth Army Corps was again in the front. Moving forward at the double-quick I soon gained the edge of the woods, where I halted until the Third Brigade, coming up, extricated my left (which had become enveloped), when I again advanced, driving the enemy from the field, capturing one heavy piece of artillery. Changing direction by the left flank, in accordance with orders, I was passing the enemy's right when I was ordered to halt, word having been received that the Army of Northern Virginia had surrendered to the Armies of the United States.

In this engagement the One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers lost 5 enlisted men killed and 20 wounded; the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, 1 commissioned officer and 6 enlisted men wounded; Sixty-seventh Ohio, 1 enlisted man killed and 6 wounded; Sixty-second Ohio, 18 enlisted men wounded and 2 commissioned officers and 38 enlisted men captured.

A consolidated report of casualties is herewith transmitted.

Consolidated report of casualties of First Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Regiment.	Killed.		Wounded.		Missing.
	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.	Officers.	Men.
39th Illinois Volunteers.....	1	19	12	50
65th Ohio Volunteers.....		8		63
190th Pennsylvania Volunteers.....	12	20	6	80		1
62d Ohio Volunteers.....		4	1	50	2	38
Total.....	13	51	19	265	2	39

Of the endurance and patience of the officers and men of this command during the tedious marches and of their heroism and gallantry upon every battle-field I cannot speak too highly.

I cannot close this report without speaking in high terms of the officers of my staff—Captain Childs, Captain Denny, Lieutenant Dowd, and Lieutenant Ripple—for their heroic conduct.

I have the honor to be, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. O. OSBORN,

Colonel Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers,

Comdg. First Brig., First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

Maj. P. A. DAVIS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 223.

Report of Capt. Homer A. Plympton, Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry.

HQRS. THIRTY-NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,

In the Field, Va., April 14, 1865.

LEUTENANT: In accordance with circular from headquarters First Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, dated April 14, 1865, I have the honor to herewith submit the operations of my command since leaving the north of the James.

Started from camp the evening of 27th of March, 1865; marched all night, crossing both the James and Appomattox Rivers; arrived at the Second Army Corps encampment March 29, 1865, relieving part of that corps. Left camp the evening of the 2d [1st] instant; marched to the left on Hatcher's Run; prepared for a fight. April 3 [2] was ordered to support Sixth Army Corps, and during the day made, with our division, a charge on Fort Gregg, within the enemy's line. Lost 16 killed, 45 wounded. Took up the line of march the 4th [3d] instant along with the army.

At a skirmish near Appomattox Court-House, April 9, 1865, there was 1 commissioned officer and 6 enlisted men wounded.

There has been but very little straggling during the late march.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HOMER A. PLYMPTON,

Captain, Thirty-ninth Illinois, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. LEE ROY DOWD,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 221.

Report of Col. Abner C. Voris, Sixty-seventh Ohio Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-SEVENTH OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,
In the Field, near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 11, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the regiment as such was not engaged with the enemy till the morning of the 2d of April, having made its movements in connection with the brigade, and that at no time since the 2d instant to this date has it been detached from the brigade, except on the evening of the 6th instant, when it was ordered to re-enforce Colonel Fairchild's brigade, which it did by supporting his skirmish line of the extreme right of our position in the fight of the 6th instant. In the assault on Fort Gregg the regiment assaulted the angle next the road, and passed round to the rear of the fort by its front on the road. Being too lightly supported, the men were compelled to take to the ditch, which to the rear was so deep with water that it was impossible to pass through it to the salty-port, which was attempted by my order, the water in that part of the ditch being so deep that the men could not wade through it.

My officers and men behaved with great gallantry, and were among the very first to reach the work. This I know, for I was personally present with them.

On the morning of the 9th instant seven companies were engaged, the other three being on detached duty. The casualties of the regiment in killed and wounded amount in the aggregate to seventy-three, detailed reports of which have already been transmitted.*

Perhaps I can say in no better terms of the conduct of the regiment than to say that it fully sustained its former reputation for the work for which it was organized.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. VORIS,
Colonel, Commanding.

Lieut. LE ROY DOWN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General

No. 225.

Report of Col. James O. Iriseoc, One hundred and ninety-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 199TH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 11, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this regiment during the operations of the army since the 27th ultimo:

At 7 o'clock on the evening of that date the regiment marched with the rest of the command from camp on the New Market road, crossing the James and Appomattox Rivers at Deep Bottom and Broadway Landing, respectively. Halted soon after daylight on the 28th ultimo about two hours, then marched the whole day toward Hatcher's Run, and bivouacked for the night near Humphreys' Station, in rear of the Second

* See p. 594.

Army Corps. Moved out next morning at 4 o'clock and occupied a portion of the line previously held by the First Division, Second Corps. The command remained in this position until the evening of the 1st instant, the men being constantly under arms, one-third of the effective strength on picket, skirmishing continually with the enemy.

At 7 p. m. April 1 the regiment moved to the left, near Hatcher's Run, and lay during the night under arms, expecting to assault the enemy's strong works at daylight. About 5 o'clock on the morning of the 2d instant marched back with great rapidity toward the right, and passing through a portion of the enemy's line that had been carried by the Sixth Corps, found ourselves about two miles to the south and rear of Petersburg, the enemy still holding possession of a chain of inclosed works, well defended by infantry and artillery, the latter keeping up a brisk shell fire without doing us any damage. It was now about 9 a. m., and, under directions from Col. T. O. Osborn, I formed line of battle facing north, my right resting on the line of works carried by the Sixth Corps, the Sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers on my left and the Sixty-second Ohio deployed as skirmishers in front. The line advanced rapidly, the enemy retiring to the shelter of his strong works, and leaving behind in their hasty two 12-pounder Napoleon guns and about twenty-five prisoners. Having advanced about half a mile the command halted, by order of Colonel Osborn, until the rest of the division could get in position. About this time Lieutenant-Colonel West, Sixty-second Ohio, sent back word he was getting out of ammunition, and requested me to strengthen his right. I sent forward Company F, under Capt. I. E. Myers, for that purpose, and shortly afterward, by Colonel Osborn's direction, sent Capt. W. C. Craven's company (K) to the same point to dislodge some of the enemy's sharpshooters, who were becoming very troublesome. Our line now rested at a point about 800 yards distant from Fort Gregg, a very difficult swamp between us and the fort, and the whole intervening space swept by the enemy's musketry and artillery fire. About noon we received orders to attack and carry the fort, and the whole line advanced in good style. The ground in front of the southeast salient of the work forms a perfect natural glacis for about 300 yards; passing over this space my regiment suffered its severest loss—canister, shot, and minie bullets tore through the ranks, yet not a man faltered. I was struck down by a glancing ball about seventy-five yards from the work, and although I lost but a moment in recovering myself, the men were already in the moat and clambering up the exterior slope; were fighting hand to hand across the parapet, the enemy refusing to surrender, though surrounded on all sides. This sort of thing lasted nearly twenty minutes, when we finally burst over the parapet and the fort was ours.

In this affair Capt. Patrick O'Murphy and First Lieut. Robert McMillan were killed; Captains Gregory and Bippers and Lieutenants Williams, Patton, and Ellison were wounded; 14 enlisted men killed and 60 wounded, several of whom have since died.

Having carried their principal work by assault, the enemy immediately evacuated the redoubt on the left, and during the night abandoned their entire line, leaving Petersburg in our possession.

At 8 o'clock on the morning of the 3d the command marched toward Lynnhurst and bivouacked for the night, north of the road, about eighteen miles from Petersburg. Marched next day, the 4th instant, to Wilson's Station, halting at Ford's Station for dinner. On the 5th marched, via Nottoway Court-House, to Burke's Station, arriving after a long and tedious march of twenty-five miles at 11 p. m. The following morning formed line of battle west of the station, and about 1 p. m. marched toward Rice's Station, where we found Gordon's corps in line and throwing up intrenchments to oppose us at the station. I formed line of battle on the left of the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers and advanced a short distance, driving in the enemy's sharpshooters, under a severe musketry and shell fire; halted at the Phillips house, about one mile southeast of the station, and remained under arms during the night. In this skirmish Capt. Oliver C. Gregory and three enlisted men were wounded.

During the night the enemy retired, and we followed after daylight, our skirmishers, under Lieut. Col. B. P. Hughes, being constantly engaged and taking several prisoners. At Sandy River General Crook's cavalry division came up on our right, and advancing to Bush River we found the enemy inclined to dispute the passage. Under Colonel Osborn's directions I formed my regiment in line on the left of the road and advanced to the river, with the Sixty-second Ohio Volunteers on my left and the Thirty-ninth Illinois supporting. Having received permission from Colonel Osborn I crossed the river and formed line on the left of the cavalry. I then deployed Companies B and I, under Captains Craven and Blanchard, to cover my left and front, and receiving an order from Major-General Crook to charge I advanced in line to the edge of the woods on top of the hill in my front, the enemy falling back before my skirmishers. At this point I received an order from General Foster to remain where I was. In about half an hour the rest of the brigade moved up, and the column marched without further opposition to Farmville, arriving about 5 p. m., and camped for the night west of the town. At the crossing of Bush River I lost 1 enlisted man killed and 4 wounded.

Next morning, the 8th instant, marched at 6 a. m., and at midnight halted a short distance from Appomattox Station until 4 a. m. of the 9th instant. The men were very much fatigued, weary, and foot-sore, yet not a murmur was uttered as they fell in again for the march, none of them having had breakfast and but a few had had anything to eat since noon of the previous day, as they were too tired after their thirty miles march to do anything save sink down beside their gun stacks and take the short sleep allowed them. Pushing on for a couple of miles, the command halted for breakfast, and again moved forward rapidly, passing at double-quick through Sheridan's cavalry camps. We arrived on the extreme left in time to check what seemed very like a rout of a brigade of cavalry; coming into line very quickly, though much encumbered by demoralized cavalymen breaking through my ranks, I charged, under Colonel Osborn's orders, with the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers on my right, the Sixty-second Ohio on the left, and the Sixty-seventh Ohio in reserve. The men advanced with great ardor through the woods for about one-third of a mile, until we reached the open ground. Here I endeavored to check the regiment until the enemy's line could be developed by our skirmishers, but the excitement was so great that my regiment and the Thirty-ninth Illinois could not be halted, until a discharge of canister from a battery 300 yards in front brought them to their senses. I gave the order to lie down, and at that moment another battery, about 400 yards on my right, poured in an enfilade fire with spherical case. In a minute or two I lost 5 enlisted men killed and 20 wounded. The enemy fired a few rounds, and were beginning to get a most accurate range, which would have had a murderous effect on my men, when Colonel Osborn directed me to withdraw behind a crest in the edge of the woods. The enemy, perceiving this movement, redoubled his efforts, and the bursting of case-shot from his guns, together with musketry fire from the left, for a time rendered it impossible to reform the whole regiment. Two companies, B and K, under Captains Craven and Beckels, did not hear the order to fall back, and advancing as skirmishers compelled the enemy to withdraw his artillery, these companies actually capturing one 20-pounder gun, while the rest of the command was retiring. Having reformed the balance of the regiment, under orders from General Foster I again advanced and found no enemy. Changing direction to the left the command moved about 600 yards in that direction, when intelligence was received that General Lee had surrendered. Since then the regiment has held in its present camp, and is now in, if possible, better fighting condition than when it left the front of Richmond.

I have the honor to submit herewith a list of casualties.*

Of the heroism and endurance of the officers and men of this regiment I cannot speak too highly; a noble spirit of emulation seemed to actuate the entire command. I desire particularly to mention Lieut. Col. R. P. Hughes; his gallantry in action and unwearied services on the march entitle him to the highest praise. First Lieut. Oliver Sprout distinguished himself at Fort Gregg by seizing the colors of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Regiment, when the color-bearer was shot down, and was the first, in my opinion, to plant the stars and stripes on the parapet.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

J. C. BRISCOE,

Colonel, Commanding 199th Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Lieut. Lie Roy Dowd, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 220.

Report of Col. George B. Dandy, One hundredth New York Infantry, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., FIRST DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
Before Lynchburg, Va., April 11, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this brigade since leaving its encampment before Richmond on the 27th ultimo:

A few hours before marching I received an order detaching temporarily from the brigade the Two hundred and sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, leaving me the Eleventh Maine, the One hundredth New York, and the Tenth Connecticut Volunteers. Starting about dusk we crossed the James River, at Deep Bottom, during the night and the Appomattox, at Point of Rocks, at daybreak. A few miles beyond this point the brigade was halted and the men allowed to repose a short time, when the march was resumed and continued until near dark, when the command was halted for the night about four miles distant from Hatcher's Run. The next morning we occupied the deserted encampment of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Second Corps.

About noon of the 30th ultimo I received an order from General Foster to turn out the brigade in light marching order and advance to connect with Turner's division, across Hatcher's Run. This was accomplished in about two hours with some difficulty, the rain falling heavily and the roads and streams all being flooded. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill, Eleventh Maine Volunteers, with a portion of his regiment deployed as skirmishers, had the advance, supported on the right by the One hundredth New York, on the left by part of his own regiment, that portion of the Tenth Connecticut not on picket being in the center. Brisk skirmishing ensued until dark, the enemy retiring within his works. The brigade was then withdrawn a few rods to the rear and a log breast-work constructed in line with the work constructed by General Turner.

* Embodied in table, p. 591.

The following was the loss during the day: Lieut. William W. Bell, of my staff, and orderly taken prisoners. One hundredth New York Volunteers—Lieutenant Cornell and 5 enlisted men wounded. Eleventh Maine Volunteers—3 enlisted men wounded.

On the morning of the 31st General Turner advanced his lines, and after some severe skirmishing drove the enemy on his front within his works, Lieutenant-Colonel Hill with the skirmishers of the Third Brigade co-operating; and about 3 p. m., by direction of General Foster, I changed my front to connect again with Turner, and after some sharp firing advanced within 500 yards and in full view of the rebel line of breast-works. Here our skirmishers were exposed until dark to the fire of the enemy's sharpshooters. The following were the casualties: Eleventh Maine Volunteers—10 enlisted men wounded. Tenth Connecticut Volunteers—Captain Brown killed, Lieutenant Naidhart and 8 enlisted men wounded.

Immediately after dark, by direction of General Foster, I commenced the construction of breast-works in my front, connecting with those of Turner's division. Under the superintendence of Capt. Frank Hawkins, of my staff, a substantial work of logs, without abatis, was completed before 3 a. m., and the pickets under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel Hill, Eleventh Maine Volunteers, division officer of the day, were also protected by French rifle-pits constructed for each post. The pickets were about thirty yards in front of our main line and on the edge of a deep ravine, the opposite bluff of the ravine having been occupied by the enemy's outposts at dusk, rendering our farther advance without a conflict impracticable.

Having received instructions from General Foster to turn out my command under arms the next morning at 4 a. m., I directed Captain Stowits, acting assistant adjutant-general, at 3.30 a. m., to get the troops under arms, and went myself to the breast-works a few minutes before 4 o'clock to place them in position. The following disposition had been ordered: The Eleventh Maine distributed behind the works; the One hundredth New York in echelon on the right, and the Tenth Connecticut in a similar position on the left flank. While waiting for the Eleventh Maine to arrive on the ground I heard the yell of the rebels as they advanced at a charge toward the work, sweeping aside the pickets in their path. There was no time to lose, and I at once ordered Lieutenant-Colonel Goodyear to bring the Tenth Connecticut at the double-quick to the work. The heads of the Eleventh and Tenth arrived on the ground together and just as the enemy were gaining a foot-hold on our parapet. Had the troops been fairly in line the rebel battle-flag that floated for a few seconds defiantly on the crest of our little work would never have gone back, and the whole attacking force must have been cut to pieces or captured. As it was, the enemy was repulsed and fell back in confusion. I immediately ordered Colonel Hill to re-establish his pickets, which was done promptly and with a small force, the enemy retiring before his advance. The following were the casualties: Eleventh Maine Volunteers—Major Baldwin and Lieutenants Norris and Ireland wounded, 1 enlisted man killed and 4 wounded, Lieutenant Bunker and 10 enlisted men taken prisoners. Tenth Connecticut Volunteers—1 enlisted man killed and 5 wounded. The enemy suffered severely in killed and wounded and lost over fifty prisoners. Captain Nichols, of the One hundredth New York, was captured by the enemy on the picket-line, but succeeded in effecting his escape with the loss of his sword and pistol.

During the day I attempted to strengthen the breast-work and construct abatis, but the working parties suffered heavily from the enemy's sharpshooters, and it was deemed best to discontinue the work until night. After dark, under the superintendence of Lieutenant-Colonel Hill and Major Dandy, a strong abatis was placed in front of the work and our defenses strengthened. At about 11 p. m., under instructions from General Foster, I called for volunteers to act as scouts, with the view of ascertaining the practicability of an assault on the enemy's works. Capt. Grafton Norris and twelve enlisted men of the Eleventh Maine performed this difficult and dangerous duty to my entire satisfaction, advanced close to the enemy's defenses, and described accurately their construction and the nature of the approaches.

On the morning of the 2d of April I was directed to strengthen my skirmish line and make a demonstration upon the enemy's lines. I deployed my battalion of sharpshooters along the line, and advanced it briskly shortly after dawn, but was met by a destructive fire from the hostile works, relieving all doubts of the strength of enemy in that quarter. Captain Maxfield, in command of the line of skirmishers, reported to me at this time that it was impracticable to advance farther. At about 9 a. m. I was directed to move the brigade to the right, leaving the skirmish line in position. The brigade was immediately withdrawn and directed to march with the division to the relief of the Sixth Corps, which had been engaged with the enemy the previous night. A march of less than two hours brought us in sight of a formidable line of works defended by two rows of palisading and abatis. These works had been carried the previous night by the Sixth Corps. Beyond and in sight of these fortifications the inner defenses on the south of Petersburg were visible, the tall spires of the city looming up in the background. In front of the inner line and equi-distant from each other were three inclosed forts armed with artillery and infantry. From these forts the enemy threw shells among us as we advanced to take our position in front of their works. The Eleventh Maine, being in advance, was directed to throw out skirmishers and take a position near a smoken road leading to Petersburg and intersecting the line of forts in our front. The One hundredth New York and Tenth Connecticut were successively deployed into line on the right of the Eleventh Maine as they arrived on the ground. The brigade line of skirmishers was now pushed forward, and caused the enemy, who had formed line of battle in our front, to retire within the forts. The First Brigade, Colonel Osborn commanding, was at this time deployed on my right, and the Fourth, Colonel Fairchild, was on my left and rear as support. The troops being in position, General Foster informed me that the First Division would assault the forts, and gave me the following instructions, viz:

If General Seymour should commence the assault on the right, to follow the First Brigade; if General Turner should commence the assault on the left, to charge with him.

At this time the Eleventh Maine was in the sunken road before referred to, a position affording good shelter from the enemy's sharpshooters. Just before the assault I directed Captain Hawkins to order him to connect with the One hundredth New York. This order, for some reason, was not obeyed, and shortly after Colonel Hill, without any orders from me, moved his regiment to the left and forward behind some log huts that had previously been used by the rebels as a camp, and facing Fort Baldwin. Soon after the assault commenced, and I directed the One hundredth New York, Maj. J. H. Dandy commanding, and the Tenth Connecticut, Col. E. D. S. Goodyear commanding, upon the central work—Fort Gregg. This was a completely inclosed work; stockaded in the rear, with loop-holes for musketry, and manned with a full garrison and two pieces of artillery. The assault was commenced at a distance of from 200 to 300 yards from the works, and was made at the double quick, without a halt, under the most terrific fire of musketry and artillery I have ever witnessed. Many of our brave men went down, but the work was reached without faltering. The commanding officers of both regiments were placed hors de combat, Lieutenant-Colonel Goodyear being severely wounded and Major Dandy killed, the latter on the parapet of the work. The First Brigade came up with us on the right and inclosed the work, but the moat was so deep and wide that it was impossible to cross at that point. The garrison, although surrounded, refused to surrender and continued to fire upon our men, while from Fort Baldwin a destructive fire was also poured in upon the backs of our troops exposed in that direction. At this juncture I sent Captain Hawkins to General Foster for re-enforcements, and was promptly supplied with two regiments from the Fourth Brigade. With this re-enforcement the garrison was overpowered, after fighting on the parapet and about the fort twenty-five minutes after the fort was surrounded. I forbear to describe the scene inside that work after the surrender, but I think at least one-fourth of the entire garrison was killed in the assault. With the surrender of Fort Gregg, Fort Baldwin was evacuated and taken possession of by Turner's division, the Eleventh Maine going in with that command.

The casualties for the day were as follows: Tenth Connecticut Volunteers—Lieut. Col. E. D. S. Goodyear, Capt. James H. Linsley, Capt. Braiuerd Smith, First Lieut. Walter P. Hovey, Second Lieuts. Ed. J. Smith, Andrew F. Jones, and Frank G. Otis and 72 enlisted men wounded, and 10 enlisted men killed. One hundredth New York Volunteers—Maj. J. H. Dandy and 11 enlisted men killed, and First Lieut. Albert York and 40 enlisted men wounded. Eleventh Maine Volunteers—3 enlisted men killed and 25 enlisted men wounded.

That night the brigade bivouacked near the captured forts, buried the dead, and cared for the wounded. With the morning came the news of the evacuation of Petersburg and Richmond and their occupation by our colored troops.

April 3, the march to Burkeville was commenced, and that point reached on the night of April 5. On the 6th the One hundredth New York was detached to guard the wagon trains, and 200 men detailed for picket and left at Burkeville. The remainder of the brigade was moved forward about 11 a. m. When about three miles on the road I received instructions to detach the brigade from the main column and communicate, if possible, with General Sheridan's forces. This was accomplished during the day, and the brigade rejoined the command at Phillips' house shortly after dusk. The enemy had been constructing rifle-pits, but abandoned them during the night and continued his retreat toward Lynchburg. Our command followed in pursuit at day-break, reaching Farmville about 12 m. April 7. The enemy's rear guard had passed through the place in sight of our advance. The corps bivouacked here for the night, except my brigade, which, with a section of Elder's horse battery, was ordered to proceed to the Appomattox, a distance of six miles, and hold the bridge across that stream. I advanced cautiously, with skirmishers and flankers out, and reached the bridge without opposition at about 9 p. m. The bridge had been burned and was completely destroyed. We found no infantry on our side the stream, but Rosser's cavalry was in some force on the other side. Bivouacking here for the night, I joined the command on the Lynchburg road at 9 a. m. on the 8th, bringing in a few prisoners, including Lieut. R. M. McIntosh, of the Twenty-fifth Virginia Battalion. From that point the brigade marched with the division constantly, night and day, bivouacking within a mile of the Lynchburg railroad on the night of April 8. We had now by hard marching reached a point about 100 miles from Petersburg on the Lynchburg road. The men were foot-sore, weary, and hungry, but I heard no word of complaint.

At 3 o'clock on the morning of the 9th the command was again under arms. Sheridan had just captured three large trains of supplies for Lee's army. That army was making desperate efforts to escape to Lynchburg by the main road to that city. Sheridan's cavalry had reached that road, and the First Division was ordered forward to support him. As we neared the ground the rebel infantry charged the cavalry, which broke in confusion and left our line on the road to withstand the shock. The First Brigade was formed for a charge by General Foster, and as soon as my brigade could pass Elder's battery, which was done at the double-quick, I commenced to form on the left. The Eleventh Maine, being in the advance, should have been first in position, but for some reason the commanding officer of the Tenth Connecticut, who received his orders after the commanding officer of Eleventh Maine, was first in line. While I was forming the brigade the Eleventh Maine moved off with the First Brigade, as I understand by order of General Foster, leaving me the Sixty-second Ohio in its place. I then advanced my command as rapidly as possible, following the First Brigade, until the latter, under a severe enfilading fire of grape and canister, fell back, the rebels about the same time retiring in confusion. No man of the Third Brigade fell back without orders, and the conduct of both officers and men was all that could be desired. The right flank of the Eleventh Maine having become exposed by the falling back of a portion of the First Brigade, the enemy got in its rear and captured a number of prisoners, including Lieutenant-Colonel Hill, who had been previously wounded. After being rifled of his personal effects he was allowed to return.

In this affair I cannot award too much praise to the officers of the brigade staff. Capt. Frank Hawkins, acting assistant inspector-general, and Captain Stowits, acting assistant adjutant-general, rendered me in very difficult circumstances the most valuable assistance. They were constantly exposed to a heavy fire from the enemy's artillery, but both miraculously escaped. Lieut. Fred. T. Mason, Eleventh Maine, aide-de-camp, was severely wounded by a shell while receiving my orders, and is now in hospital. His conduct was everything that could be desired. Surg. T. M. Lancy, chief medical officer of the brigade, Capt. Angelo Crape, commissary of subsistence, and First Lieut. W. H. H. Andrews, brigade quartermaster, were prompt and efficient in the performance of their respective duties, and all in turn rendered me valuable assistance.

The casualties for the day are as follows: First Lieut. Fred. T. Mason, aide-de-camp, wounded. Eleventh Maine Volunteers—Lieutenant-Colonel Hill and 25 enlisted men wounded, 5 enlisted men killed, Captain Maxfield and 17 enlisted men prisoners. Tenth Connecticut Volunteers—Lieutenant Newell, acting adjutant, taken prisoner.

General Lee, a few hours after this action, surrendered his entire Army of Northern Virginia at the point where the First Division fought its last engagement. The brigade is now reposing after its toils and privations. I would enlarge more particularly upon the gallantry of those who survive, but my report is already long, and my views have been conveyed to you in my letter of recommendation for promotions.

I cannot forbear saying a word in praise of the recruits of this brigade. No veterans could have done better, whether in marching or fighting. The baptism of fire and blood through which they have passed entitles them to the new name of "Veterans of the First Division."

Our comrades who have fallen have perished nobly on the altar of their country's liberty: "after life's fitful fever, they sleep well."

I have the honor to subjoin the aggregate losses of the brigade, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, from the 30th day of March, 1865, to the 9th day of April, 1865, inclusive: Officers—killed, 2; wounded, 15; prisoners, 4. Enlisted men—killed, 31; wounded, 190; prisoners, 28.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. B. DANDY,

Colonel New York Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

MAJ. P. A. DAVIS,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

---

No. 227.

Report of Capt. Francis G. Hickerson, Tenth Connecticut Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS, TENTH INFANTRY CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,
Near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report of the actions and losses of the Tenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers during the campaign just ended:

On the 26th [27th] of March, 1865, orders were received to break camp on the north side of the James River and be in readiness to move in heavy marching order at dusk. In compliance with said order we moved at about 7 p. m. to the rear, crossing the James River at Deep Bottom and the Appomattox River at Point of Rocks, passing well in rear of our lines at Petersburg to the left at Hatcher's Run, Va. We remained in camp there until March 29, when most of the regiment went on picket in the morning and the remainder were ordered out in the afternoon to take part in opening the campaign. There were no casualties on this day, the regiment being held in reserve. March 30, we moved forward to take our position in line and built slight breast-works; about noon moved farther to the left. For the casualties of the day I respectfully refer to accompanying list.* March 31, we remained in the same position, with no casualties. April 1, we took part in repulsing an assault of the rebels on our lines. April 2, the regiment moved from our lines at Hatcher's Run, Va., and taking part in the assault on Fort Gregg, lost very heavily, as shown by the accompanying list of casualties.* In this engagement Lieut. Col. E. D. S. Good-year was severely wounded, and the command of the regiment devolved upon me. April 3, we moved from before Petersburg with the brigade. Having taken part in the march, following yourself, it would be useless for me to give it more than passing notice. The regiment was in no engagement until April 9, when General Lee was forced to surrender, with his command.

---

* Shows 1 officer killed and 1 officer and 3 men wounded.

In conclusion, I cannot speak in too high terms of the conduct of both officers and men in the engagement named, as well as on the march. Very many of the men refused to give up, although their feet were very badly blistered, and braved it through the entire march.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. G. HICKERSON,

Captain, Commanding Tenth Connecticut Volunteers.

Capt. GEORGE H. STOWITS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant General, Third Brigade.

---

No. 228.

Report of Capt. Henry C. Adams, Eleventh Maine Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS ELEVENTH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,

In the Field, Va., April 11, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of movements of the Eleventh Maine Volunteers since leaving camp, north of the James, Monday evening, March 27, 1865:

The regiment left camp under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Hill, and marched until Tuesday evening, halting at different times for a short time. We encamped a few miles west of the Weldon railroad. Wednesday morning we moved out and occupied a portion of the camp vacated by the Second Army Corps. At this place 394 men, properly officered, were detailed for picket. I went in command of the detail, Major Baldwin being brigade officer of the day. Our pickets relieved the pickets of the Second and Third Brigades, Second Division, Second Corps. Thursday morning we were relieved by the Tenth Connecticut Volunteers, and returned to camp. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill was detailed as division officer of the day, leaving Major Baldwin in command of the regiment. About noon we were ordered to the front in light marching order. We advanced and formed a line to the right of Hatcher's Run, the left of the Eleventh connecting with the right of the Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, but resting a short distance in advance. About dark we fell back on a line with the Second Division, and lay under arms all night. Soon after daylight Friday morning, axes having been obtained, twenty men were put to work felling trees under direction of Major Baldwin, he intending to erect breast-works. Heavy firing commencing on the skirmish line, the men were ordered to fall in, leaving the breast-works unfinished. About 9 a. m. four companies—A, Captain Rolfo; B, Lieutenant Brady; G, Lieutenant Bunker; and H, Captain Maxfield—were ordered out to support the skirmish line. They remained until 4 p. m., when they were relieved by Companies C (Captain Norris), D (Lieutenant Perkins), F (Lieutenant Scott), and G (Captain Scammon). They remained on the line until dark, when they were relieved by a regular picket detail. Our casualties during the day were 10 men wounded. Our picket detail this evening was 150 men and four officers.

---

* Shows 11 men killed and 7 officers and 73 men wounded.

At a few minutes past 4 Saturday morning the enemy attacked our pickets and drove them in. Our regiment, having but just formed in line, was ordered forward by Major Baldwin. He had but just given the command when he fell dangerously wounded in the shoulder by a musket ball. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill took command of the regiment at once, although he had not been relieved from duty as division officer of the day. He ordered the regiment forward to the breast-works which had been erected during the night. The pickets came in on the left and reported that the picket-line of the Second Division had not fallen back. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill immediately sent Companies C and G out to reoccupy the pits vacated by our pickets, which was done without opposition, the enemy having fallen back to their works. A portion of the regiment remained on the picket-line during the day until relieved by a detail toward night. The rest lay in line in rear of the works. Our loss during the twenty-four hours ending Saturday evening was, 2 commissioned officers and 4 enlisted men wounded and 1 enlisted man killed, 1 commissioned officer and 16 enlisted men taken prisoners.

Sunday, April 2, we formed in line at 4 a. m., and stood in line until daylight. Soon after this we were ordered to the right with the rest of the brigade. We moved a few miles to the right, and passed through the outer line of works in front of the Sixth Corps. We formed a line of battle and advanced to the Petersburg plank road, by order of Colonel Dandy. After arriving at the position designated Lieutenant-Colonel Hill deployed Companies A and B as skirmishers. They advanced on the double-quick to the road across the hill which leads down in front of Fort Gregg, the regiment following as soon as possible. We remained there but a few moments. Captain Sellmer came up and ordered us farther to the right. We marched across the hill by the right flank, under a terrific artillery and musketry fire, and halted in rear of a high bank, which sheltered us from the enemy's fire. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill soon ordered the regiment to move across the open field upon Fort Baldwin. We advanced to some old barracks a little to the left of the fort and remained there, our men preventing the sharpshooters from firing. The enemy soon gave up the fort, companies A and B being among the first to enter the works.

As soon as it was known that both Forts Baldwin and Gregg had surrendered, the regiment was ordered to join the brigade near the latter fort, where we remained until Monday morning. Our loss Sunday was 3 men killed and 25 wounded.

Monday morning, the 3d, we started with the rest of the troops on the march toward Burkeville, marching with nothing unusual occurring, until Thursday afternoon the Eleventh was sent to communicate with a portion of General Sheridan's forces. They marched two miles and a half, meeting with no opposition, and found the cavalry vedettes; returned immediately, joined the brigade, and moved to the front. That evening the regiment was ordered to support a battery. Friday morning, the enemy having fallen back, we advanced and marched through Farmville, encamping near the town. About 3 p. m. we moved forward on the Lynchburg road; Companies A, B, D, and E were deployed as skirmishers; advanced about six miles, meeting with no opposition, and halted at the Appomattox River, where the bridge was burned. Saturday morning we moved back to the Lynchburg road and joined the division. Marched all day until 12 o'clock midnight; encamped near the South Side Railroad. At 3 a. m. moved out of camp and advanced some three miles, halted and got breakfast; we soon moved forward and came into action on the double-quick. Captain Norris formed line, under direction of General Foster, Lieutenant-Colonel Hill being absent looking for a position. We advanced, intending to join the left of the First Brigade, but did not, as they moved forward before the Eleventh formed in line, and by the time it got up with it on a line the regiment next to the Eleventh gave way and could not be found. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill ordered the regiment forward and we advanced across the field to within thirty rods of the enemy's battery under a very heavy fire. We remained there until we were flanked both on the right and left by the enemy. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill was wounded before he had got to the extreme front; many of our men were captured some ways in rear of our colors while going to the rear after the order was given to fall back. We finally got back into the road in front of a regiment of the First Brigade, and formed a line to the left, under direction of Colonel Osborn, commanding First Brigade. Colonel Dandy soon ordered me to place the regiment on a line with the Tenth Connecticut Volunteers, which was done. The command forward was soon given, when we moved forward and advanced through the woods into the open field. As soon as we arrived there it was understood that General Lee had surrendered. We formed and moved by the right flank into the woods, advancing to the road near which we are now encamped.

Our losses during the day were 5 enlisted men killed and 26 wounded. Lieutenant-Colonel Hill was wounded. Captain Maxfield and 24 enlisted men were missing, supposed to be prisoners; of these Captain Maxfield and twenty men have returned, whether as paroled prisoners or not is not known.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. ADAMS,

Captain, Eleventh Maine Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. GEORGE H. STOWERS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 229.

Report of Capt. Edwin Nichols, One hundredth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 100TH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

In the Field, April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report, for the information of the brigade commander, the part which the One hundredth New York Volunteers has taken in the recent operations against Petersburg and the rebel army under General Lee, viz:

After dark on the evening of March 27, 1865, the First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, of which the One hundredth Regiment forms part, broke camp before Richmond, Va., and took up its march to the southward. That night we crossed the James River, and rested for an hour or so on the hill in rear of Jones' Landing, until our wagon train came up, when we again resumed our march, and at daybreak crossed the Appomattox on the pontoon at Broadway Landing and marched till about noon, when we were halted and an opportunity given to the men to make coffee; this accomplished, we started again and marched until dark, when we were halted for the night near Hatcher's Run. At 6 o'clock the next morning, March 29, we were again on the march; passing down our front line of march to the extreme left we relieved the Second Corps, which was removed to a position outside the works and still farther to the left. During this march, which was a very severe one, there were but six men left the ranks, and three of these were excused by the surgeon. Arriving at our destination the regiment was immediately ordered on picket to relieve the picket of the Second Corps.

During the day and night of the 29th everything was quiet on our front, but heavy cannonading and musketry was heard on the left. On the morning of the 30th of March the pickets were relieved by a new detail. At noon of this day the regiment was ordered out under arms; we advanced across Hatcher's Run and held a position at a point to the left of the old Chimneys, where General Foster established his headquarters. About 5 o'clock of this day an advance was ordered along our whole division front for the purpose of establishing a new line; this was handsomely accomplished by our pickets, who drove the enemy into their rifle-pits, with a small loss. The One hundredth Regiment lost in this affair 1 officer and 5 men wounded. We held the ground gained during the night in this assault, and at 9 o'clock the next morning, March 31, the picket-line, which had been strengthened by a detachment of sharpshooters armed with Spencer rifles, was again ordered to advance and drive the enemy from their pits into their main line of works. This was accomplished with small loss on our part. We drove the enemy from their pits into their main line of works, and held the position gained. We captured on the line in front of the One hundredth Regiment about thirty prisoners, without the loss of a single man of this regiment.

At 4 o'clock of the morning of the 1st of April the enemy made an attempt to recover their lost ground. They attacked our picket-line, but were handsomely repulsed. The men of the One hundredth New York Volunteers held their ground and fought nobly. In passing down the line I was taken prisoner at a point where the enemy had succeeded in breaking through, but afterward escaped and returned to the picket-line, when I ordered the two posts on the left of the One hundredth to swing back in order to prevent the enemy from flanking the brigade on our right. These two posts, together with the whole line, were afterward retaken and held.

We captured on the line held by the One hundredth 8 prisoners, and wounded 2 or 3 others. Great praise is due to Capt. Edward L. Cook, commanding the pickets of the One hundredth Regiment, for the courage and coolness exhibited by him on this occasion, reserving his fire and concealing his position until the enemy were close upon him, when he poured such a volley into them that drove them back in considerable disorder.

On the night of the 1st of April we were employed in placing a strong abatis in front of our position and in rear of our picket-line, from the right of the Tenth Connecticut to the open field on our right.

On the morning of the 2d of April we left our position at Hatcher's Run and marched to the front of Petersburg; a considerable part of this march was accomplished at a double-quick. Arriving at our designated position we were ordered to make an assault upon a strong work known as Fort Gregg. About 12 o'clock we pushed forward steadily, under a heavy fire of cannon and musketry, until arriving within a few hundred yards of the fort, when we reformed the regiment and advanced at a double-quick, led by our brave major, Dandy, who by his heroic example had succeeded in animating the men with a more than ordinary degree of fearlessness; before a terrible fire of musketry and canister we pressed on in advance and planted the first stars and stripes on the ramparts of the fort. Major Dandy led us to the fort, but arriving there he was instantly killed while attempting to pass to the rear of the fort in search of an entrance to the fort. Our loss in this charge was as follows, viz: Killed, 1 officer, 11 men; wounded, 1 officer, 40 men.

On the 3d of April we started from Petersburg and marched in a direction parallel with the South Side Railroad, halting and bivouacking about 5 o'clock in the evening. We started at 8 o'clock in the morning and marched in a direction similar to that of the previous day, and halted at 6 p. m. near the South Side Railroad. 5th, started at 7 o'clock, marched till 11 o'clock and camped near Burkeville Junction. The marching this day was very severe in its nature, both as regards the weather and the distance. 6th, we were detached as guard to the corps wagon train, and from this stage until joining the brigade on the evening of the 9th instant nothing of interest occurred.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN NICHOLS,

Captain, 100th New York Volunteers, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. GEORGE H. STOWITS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 230.

Report of Col. Harrison S. Fairchild, Eighty-ninth New York Infantry, commanding Fourth Brigade.

MAJORS, FOURTH BRIG., FIRST DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
In the Field, Appomattox Court-House.

MAJOR: In pursuance to your instructions dated April 13, 1865, I have the honor to report:

This brigade left Deep Bottom, where it was encamped, on the evening of the 27th of March, crossed the James and Appomattox Rivers, and continued our march without interruption, arriving at Humphreys' Station at about 10 a. m. March 29. I was ordered by the general commanding to relieve General Mott's division with my brigade, and occupy his entire line and relieve his pickets. I detailed 610 privates, 87 non-commissioned officers, and 23 commissioned officers, with Col. J. B. Murray, One hundred and forty-eighth New York Volunteers, as brigade officer of the day, in command of the line. On the morning of the 30th of March the enemy attacked the pickets of the Third Brigade and a portion of my line on the left occupied by the Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania and One hundred and forty-eighth New York Volunteers. The Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania advanced gallantly through an open field, and established a new line near the enemy's works. At evening the balance of the brigade was ordered out of the trenches, and formed line of battle at right angles with the intrenched works, connecting with General Birney's right. On the morning of the 31st I re-enforced my picket-line with 100 men. The picket-line of this brigade charged the enemy's pickets, capturing their rifle-pits and 280 prisoners, mostly North Carolina troops. On the afternoon of the 31st two regiments of colored troops of General Birney's division were ordered to report to me. They were placed in line in rear of this brigade, and 700 men, properly officered, detailed from these two regiments for fatigue duty. They immediately commenced throwing up breast-works, the balance forming in line, connecting with General Birney's troops. My brigade was then relieved, excepting the picket-line, and returned to camp.

April 2, this brigade was ordered to fall in and march toward the lookout to support General Wright, of the Sixth Corps, who had penetrated the enemy's lines. We marched in the following order: First Brigade, Colonel Osborn; Third Brigade, Colonel Dandy; and Fourth Brigade. I was ordered to support First and Third Brigades and General Harris, of General Turner's division. When approaching Fort Gregg and Baldwin I formed and advanced in line of battle within 200 yards of Fort Gregg, when orders were sent to send a supporting force to assist Colonel Dandy's (Third) brigade and Colonel Osborn's (First) brigade to carry the fort. I immediately detached the Eighty-ninth New York, under command of Major Tremain, and One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers, under command of Major Kalt (Colonel McNary, of this regiment, being brigade officer of the day in command of the picket-line, and who had not come up). The two regiments advanced most gallantly, under a heavy fire, and deployed on the left of the fort, the Eighty-ninth leading. The officers and men of these regiments were first to enter the fort, and placed their colors on the parapet. The Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania, on the left, advanced and occupied Fort Baldwin.

In this engagement I lost two efficient and brave officers—Maj. F. W. Tremain, Eighty-ninth New York, and Lieut. Edward Reilly, acting adjutant One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers.

Before daylight on the morning of the 2d, while the Sixth Corps were engaged, the picket-line of my brigade, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel McNary, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers, advanced inside the abatis and laid down under the enemy's works, and as the Sixth Corps advanced they charged the works, capturing 300 prisoners, one six-gun battery, horses, harness, and appurtenances, two battle-flags, all of which was turned over to the provost-marshal of the Sixth Corps.

On the morning of the 6th [3d] of April commenced the march toward Burkeville and Lynchburg. No incident occurred until we had passed Burkeville and had arrived at Rice's Station. This brigade leading the column, the Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania was deployed as skirmishers, flankers, and advanced guard. We found the enemy had made a stand at this point. By order of the general commanding division I immediately deployed this brigade, advanced and engaged the enemy, driving their skirmishers back and holding the position. Scouts were sent out during the night to discover their position, and the Sixty-seventh Ohio, Colonel Varis commanding, was ordered to report to me, who were deployed to protect my right flank. During the night I advanced the left of my line 200 yards toward the enemy's works, and intrenched the entire line of my brigade front. On the morning of the 7th it was discovered that the enemy had evacuated their position and was in retreat. This brigade advanced in line of battle to their works and occupied them. We then marched toward Appomattox Court-house, arriving between 8 and 9 a. m. on the 9th instant. The march being too rapid for the enemy he was obliged to make a stand at this point. This brigade participated in the action. The Eighth Maine Regiment, of this brigade, under command of Capt. E. H. Reynolds, was detached, by order of the general commanding, to support the First Brigade, Colonel Osborn, and was in the advance of all troops of this division when General Lee surrendered, capturing one piece of artillery.

I inclose a list of casualties* of this brigade and the reports of regimental commanders, which give the details and incidents of the march, and who make mention of officers and men of their commands, which, with this report, is respectfully submitted.

I desire to make mention of officers and men of my brigade whose bravery and gallantry came under my immediate notice. Major Tremain, commanding Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, and killed at Fort Gregg; Actg. Adjt. J. E. Northrup, Eighty-ninth New York, who asking who would follow him into the fort, three privates responded, and they went in together, followed by the troops of both regiments; also Maj. H. Kutt, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers, commanding, and Acting Adjutant Reilly, killed in the action. The officers and men of these two regiments did nobly. Also the members of my staff—Lieut. J. B. Palmer, acting assistant adjutant-general; Captain Hewett, acting assistant inspector-general; Lieutenant Horn, acting aide-de-camp. Captain Hewett was wounded at the fight at Rice's Station, and was obliged to leave the field. Lieutenant Palmer and Lieutenant Horn performing the staff duties, they acquitted themselves nobly, being at all points of the line under fire, displaying great courage and coolness during the engagement of the brigade. Lieutenant Palmer being taken sick on the march, on the 8th instant, Lieutenant Horn was the only staff officer in the action of the 9th.

Too much praise cannot be given to both officers and men of this command for promptness and cheerfulness in enduring the fatiguing marches, and to the commanders for keeping their men well in hand, with no straggling of any account on the march.

I am, major, very respectfully,

H. S. FAIRCHILD,
Colonel, Commanding.

Maj. P. A. DAVIS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 231.

Report of Lieut. Col. Edward A. True, Eighth Maine Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,
Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 13, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the Eighth Maine Volunteers since leaving Deep Bottom, Va.:

The regiment broke camp on the morning of the 27th ultimo; bivouacked near brigade headquarters during the day. At night took up the march, arriving at near Hatcher's Run the following night. On the morning of the 29th relieved troops of the Second Corps. Remained near Hatcher's Run four days. During this time the greater portion of the regiment was on picket. There was some picket firing. The pickets of the Eighth Maine and One hundred and forty-eighth New York (on the left of the Eighth Maine) charged the enemy, on the 31st ultimo, capturing the entire line of pickets in their front. The enemy's pickets in front of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York to reach their main line were compelled to pass toward their right to a point opposite the Eighth Maine, it being impossible to cross the moat at any place directly in their rear. They were about to make their escape at this point when the Eighth Maine by swinging to the left and charging upon them made them prisoners, between their intrenched picket-line and their main works. The number of prisoners sent to the rear by this regiment was about 125. The enemy's picket-line was strongly intrenched and behind a line of abatis. No captures were made on our right.

---

* Embodied in table, p. 594.

On the morning of the 2d instant proceeded with that part of the regiment not on picket toward the right of the line about one mile, passed through one line of the enemy's works captured that morning, and after maneuvering for a while advanced to the attack upon Fort Gregg, the One hundred and fifty-eighth New York on my right and the Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania on my left. We were halted when within about 200 yards of the fort, and remained in this position until it surrendered. Here Lieutenant Young, acting adjutant, and Lieutenant Shurtleff were severely wounded. The remaining portion of the regiment rejoined us that night, and the following morning we started on the march toward Lynchburg. Arrived at Burkeville Junction, on the South Side Railroad, on the night of the 5th. Being temporarily detached from the regiment on other duty, I turned over the command to Capt. B. H. Reynolds on the 6th instant.

I am unable to speak in fitting terms of the excellent conduct exhibited by both officers and men, whether on the march or in battle. In the march from Deep Bottom to Hatcher's Run many companies stacked every musket with which they left camp; and during all the marching while I was in command, with a very few exceptions, there was an entire absence of struggling. Captains Parker and Wiley, and Lieutenant Murray, commanding companies, deserve mention, not only for bravery, but also for the excellent manner in which they have handled their commands. Private O. T. Roberts, Company E, displayed great gallantry in charging the enemy at Hatcher's Run, and has kept with his company, and been among the foremost in every fight since, although suffering from a wound received on the 31st ultimo, and from which he has not yet recovered.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
E. A. TRUE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Eighth Maine Volunteers.

Col. W. M. McARTHUR,
Commanding Eighth Maine Volunteers.

---

No. 232.

Report of Capt. Edward H. Reynolds, Eighth Maine Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH MAINE VOLUNTEERS,
Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 13, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the Eighth Maine Volunteers, while under my command from the 6th instant, when Lieutenant-Colonel True, then in charge of the regiment, was temporarily detached, until the 9th instant, when I was relieved:

Early in the afternoon of the 6th instant the regiment took up the line of march in the direction of Lynchburg. At a distance of seven miles or thereabouts, the rear of the enemy being overtaken, a general skirmish occurred, in which the regiment sustained a loss of 2 killed and 4 wounded. The regiment remained in nearly the same position during that night, erecting breast-works for protection. On the 7th the march was resumed and continued through Farmville to the outskirts of the town, where the regiment remained until the morning following, when the march was resumed and continued uninterruptedly until 12 o'clock at night, requiring the greatest endurance and fortitude in those that performed it. At 3 o'clock in the morning the march was again resumed and continued until about 9 o'clock in the forenoon to the vicinity of Appomattox Court House. Here the Eighth Maine was in advance of all the troops on that part of the line at the surrender of Lee.

All officers and men of the regiment behaved nobly.

One piece of artillery was captured by the regiment, while the casualties were only 6 wounded.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. H. REYNOLDS,
Captain, Eighth Maine Volunteers.

Col. WILLIAM M. McARTHUR,
Commanding Eighth Maine Volunteers.

---

No. 233.

Report of Capt. William Dobie, Eighty-ninth New York Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTY-NINTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
In the Field, Va., April 13, 1865.

SIR: In accordance with orders I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this command:

The regiment broke camp at Deep Bottom, Va., March 27, 1865, and marched to or near Humphreys' Station, and there remained until the 2d instant, when we again broke camp and marched to and participated in the attack upon Fork Gregg, which was captured by our forces with a loss of 1 commissioned officer killed, 1 wounded, and 3 enlisted men killed and 10 wounded. The regiment camped on the field the same night, and marched the next morning, April 3, to Ford's Station, on the South Side Railroad, and halted for the night. April 4, marched at 5 a. m. on the road toward Lynchburg, halting for the night at or near ——— farm. April 5, marched at 6 a. m., halting for the night at Burkeville Junction. April 6, marched at 8 a. m., overtook and engaged the enemy near Bird's [Rice's] Station, and in taking a position the regiment lost 1 man killed and 11 wounded. We remained on the field that night, during which time the enemy fell back. At daybreak we resumed the march, halting for the night at Farmville. April 8, marched at 7 a. m. to Appomattox Station, a distance of upward of thirty miles, arriving at that place at 12 a. m., and then marched to Clover Hill, at which place, the enemy having surrendered, we went into camp.

I do not deem it necessary to make special mention of any of the officers or men, as all have acted with their usual gallantry.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. DOBIE,

Captain, Commanding Regiment.

Captain ROOP,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 234.

Report of Col. John B. Murray, One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry.

HQRS. 148TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,

In the Field, Va., near Appomattox Court-House, April 14, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report as follows, in compliance with instructions received from headquarters Fourth Brigade, First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, April 12, 1865, viz:

This regiment broke camp at Deep Bottom, Va., on the 27th of March, 1865; formed with the brigade at 10 a. m. At 9 a. m. took up the line of march, forming on the left of the Fourth Brigade. Crossed the James River at Deep Bottom at 11 p. m., and halted at Jones' Landing until 3 a. m. of the 28th, when we again resumed the march, crossing the Appomattox River at daybreak. Continued the march until 8 p. m., passing Petersburg to the left; halted for the night in rear of the Ninth Corps line. Resumed the march again at 4 a. m. of the 29th, following the line of the Second Corps to the left of Petersburg for about three miles. Halted at 9 a. m., and relieved the One hundred and twentieth New York State Volunteers, being a portion of the Second Corps. Sent 120 men forward at once on the picket-line; the remainder of the regiment occupied the camp of the One hundred and twentieth New York Volunteers. At 7 p. m. of the 30th of March the remainder of the regiment went out as reserve for the picket-line, where we lay upon our arms until 5 p. m. of the 31st, when we returned to the works. The picket-line, 120 strong, advanced at 8 a. m. on the 31st, under my personal command as brigade officer of the day, to within 200 yards of the enemy's works, capturing their entire picket-line in our front, consisting of 125 men of the Forty-sixth and Forty-eighth North Carolina Battalions. From this position a sharp fire was kept up through the day.

The casualties on this occasion were as follows, viz.*

During April 1 the regiment was under arms at the works, 120 men on the picket-line. At 7 a. m. of the 2d marched to the right about two miles to the breach in the enemy's works in front of the Sixth Corps. After passing to the rear of the enemy's works we moved to the right in the direction of Petersburg; were support to the charging column upon Forts Gregg and Baldwin, where the casualties were, viz.†

At 4 a. m. the picket-line, in command of Henry Parsons, captain Company H, advanced and captured the enemy's works in their front, together with about 300 prisoners, 1 six-gun battery, the horses, harness, and appurtenances thereto belonging, 1 battle-flag (the colors of the Eighth Mississippi Regiment), and other property, which was duly turned over to the provost guard of the Sixth Corps. The loss was one killed, viz: George L. Matthews, private, Company A. At 11 a. m. the pickets rejoined the regiment, and at 5 p. m. the regiment moved into Fort Baldwin, which we occupied until 4 a. m., April 3, when we again resumed the march, which we continued until 8 p. m., when we halted for the night near the South Side Railroad. On the 4th my command was detailed as guard to the First Division wagon train; camped for the night at the park of the train; joined the brigade at 9 a. m. April 5 and continued the march during the entire day.

---

* Nominal list (omitted) shows 1 officer and 3 enlisted men wounded.

† Nominal list (omitted) shows 4 enlisted men wounded.

April 6 [5?], resumed the march at 4 a. m. and reached Burkeville at 11 p. m., where we camped for the night. Left Burkeville at 10 a. m. April 7 [6?]; marched to Rice's Station, which we reached at 3 p. m., at which place we came up with the enemy and engaged him. Our losses were as follows, viz: Caleb G. Jackson, second lieutenant, Company I, killed; James Tuttle, private, Company B, wounded. At dark my line was thrown forward some 500 yards to the crest of the hill, and the regiment was engaged during the night in intrenching in that position. On the 8th (the enemy having retreated during the night) we moved forward at 5 a. m., and continued the march along the South Side Railroad until 11 p. m., when a halt was made for the night. At 3 a. m. April 9 moved forward again, and at 7 a. m. engaged the enemy near Appomattox Court-House. Here the enemy found himself so hardly pressed by the superior marching and fighting qualities of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, that after feeling of our front, and realizing that we were there, he proposed a surrender, which was duly executed and carried out by turning over his arms, colors, and property to the Fifth Corps, who arrived upon the ground just in time to receive the same, while we, who really prevented his escape, lay in our present position waiting for something to turn up, where we have remained up to this date.

Too much credit cannot be given to the officers and men of this command for the gallant manner in which they, together with their comrades of the brigade and corps, have entered the fight and endured the march. Where all have done so well it would be invidious to attempt to mention any one individual.

I am, captain, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. MURRAY,
Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. S. C. ROOP,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 235.

Report of Lieut. Col. William H. McNary, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Infantry.

HEADQRS. 158TH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS,
Near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 14, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In compliance with orders from headquarters Fourth Brigade, I have the honor to report that this regiment left Deep Bottom, Va., on the evening of March 27 at 8 p. m., and marched, halting to rest several times, until we arrived near Humphreys' Station. On March 29, at 9 a. m., at this place more than one-half of the command was on picket duty until we left on April 2 at 5 a. m. The regiment was in line of battle several times ready for action, but no casualties occurred except on the picket-line. Sergt. John Moriarty, acting lieutenant, Company K, was killed—shot through the head—and Capt. Ed. Gillen, Company G, was seriously wounded in the head, and four privates wounded, all on the 31st of March. A horse belonging to the acting adjutant was killed near the picket-line. On April the 2d the regiment marched with the division and was ordered, together with the Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, to assist the Third Brigade in charging Fort Gregg. First Lieut. Ed. Reilly, of Company A, acting adjutant, a brave and fearless officer, was killed instantly—shot through the head. Our loss in this engagement was 10 killed and 26 wounded, 3 of whom have since died. Among the killed were Color-Corps. James A. Kilburn, Company C, and Joseph B. Simpson, Company C, and Corpl. Jacob Day, Company I.

After this engagement we chased General Lee's army, and on the 6th of April, near Rice's Station, we met his pickets, and after a stubborn fight of some two hours we silenced their fire. Our loss here was 2 corporals and 10 privates wounded. We again met the enemy near Appomattox Court-House and assisted in repulsing them. Our loss in this engagement was 1 officer wounded, Capt. William A. Furey, by a spent ball, hit on the neck.

Our whole loss since leaving Deep Bottom, Va., is 11 killed and 44 wounded, 3 of whom have since died; total, 55, as follows.*

The officers and men of this regiment have all behaved nobly. At the storming and capture of Fort Gregg, this regiment, together with the Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, advanced in the face of a very heavy front fire, and after a bloody and determined resistance on the part of the enemy the fort was carried at the point of the bayonet. We all sincerely regret the loss of our acting adjutant, Lieutenant Reilly, as gallant an officer, and true to his country, as ever faced the foe.

Among those who deserve favorable mention for gallantry on this occasion are Maj. Hyron Kalt, Capt. Jacob David, Acting Lieut. Thomas Meagher, and Color-bearer Sergt. James Howard,† Company K. Sergeant Howard carried the colors in advance of the line of battle, and had the staff shot off while planting it on the parapet of the fort. After Color-Corporal Simpson, who carried the State colors, was killed, Lieutenant Perkins, of Company D, picked them up and carried them into the works. The staff of the State colors and both flags bear many marks of the enemy's fire. Private Richard Coltan, of Company H, was the first man of the regiment on the work, and died a soldier's death.

All deserve praise, and where so many brave officers and men tried to do their duty and do it so well it is quite impossible to make a distinction. I commend them all to my superior officers.

Respectfully submitted,

Your obedient servant,

WM. H. McNARY,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. S. C. Root,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

* List omitted.

† Awarded a Medal of Honor.

No. 236.

Report of Capt. George H. Hill, Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry.

HQRS. FIFTY-FIFTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLRS.,

In the Field, Va., April 13, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of this regiment since leaving Deep Bottom, Va., as required by circular from headquarters Fourth Brigade, dated April 12, 1865:

March 27, took up the line of march from brigade headquarters, Deep Bottom, Va., at 8 p. m.; crossed the James and Appomattox Rivers, and continued the march in the direction of Humphreys' Station, Va., where we arrived at 10 a. m. March 29, and went into camp. March 30, Captain Hammer, in charge of our picket-line advanced it through an open field and under a heavy fire, establishing himself on a new line close to the enemy's rifle-pits. Two men from this regiment killed and 1 officer and 14 men wounded. March 31, Captain Moore took charge of our forces on picket-line and advanced his line, capturing the enemy's rifle-pits and all his picket force on our front, about 150 men, including two commissioned officers. Three men of this regiment wounded.

April 2, Lieutenant Sorber, in charge of our picket-line, advanced in connection with the balance of the line, driving the enemy from their works and capturing from them a stand of colors; advanced inside the enemy's main works toward Petersburg, and rejoined the regiment (which had advanced in the same direction) near Fort Baldwin. The regiment then supported the assault upon Forts Gregg and Baldwin, which were taken, when we occupied Fort Baldwin. One officer from this regiment killed and 1 officer and 4 men wounded. April 3, took up the line of march toward Lynchburg, Va.; marched thirteen miles. April 4, marched fourteen miles along South Side Railroad toward Lynchburg. April 5, marched till noon in same direction; stopped two hours and a half at Blacks and Whites Station, to guard forks of roads, until General Birney came up. Relieved by a portion of his command and resumed the march; arrived at Burkeville that night, having marched twenty-seven miles. April 6, marched seven miles, during five of which this regiment was on duty as skirmishers and flankers; met the enemy near Rice's Station and engaged him until dark, having nine men wounded. April 7, marched ten miles to Farmville and bivouacked to wait for rations. April 8, marched twenty-eight miles still in the same direction, toward Lynchburg; halted at 12 o'clock at night. April 9, resumed the march at 3 a. m.; marched two miles, halted, and took our position in line of battle. At 7 a. m. moved forward one mile and formed a new line of battle. Skirmished with and drove the enemy one mile and a half through woods most of the way; bivouacked in front of him while negotiations were pending. At 4 p. m. received the intelligence that General Lee had surrendered, and went into camp near Appomattox Court-House, where we still remain.

The following is the list of casualties in this regiment.*

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. H. HILL,

Captain, Comdg. Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Capt. S. C. ROOF,

Acty. Asst. Adj. Gen., 4th Brig., 1st Div., 24th Army Corps.

---

* Nominal list (omitted) shows 1 officer and 4 men killed and 2 officers and 29 men wounded.

No. 237.

Report of Brig. Gen. Charles Devens, U. S. Army, commanding Third Division.

HEADQUARTERS, THIRD DIVISION, TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
AND TROOPS TEMPORARILY ATTACHED,
Richmond, Va., April 3, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that I was informed this morning at about 3.30 o'clock that the enemy were evacuating Richmond, by two deserters. This information I at once telegraphed to the headquarters of Major-General Weitzel, ordered all of my command to get under arms at once and be ready to pursue the enemy, and further ordered the picket-line to be advanced as soon as it was light enough to see. As soon as time enough had elapsed for these deserters to reach headquarters, I received an order from there to get under arms at once, and afterward an order to advance by the New Market road at 6 a. m. with my cavalry on the Darbytown road. At about 5.15 a. m. Captain Bruce reported to me that he had occupied the entire rebel works in front of my division, taking possession of a large number of guns and tents. I telegraphed to headquarters that the rebel line in front of my division was occupied and no enemy in sight. I waited until 6 a. m., and then moved my entire division, my picket-line being used as skirmishers. On reaching the point where the Osborne road joins the New Market road a body of troops, understood to be part of the Thirty-sixth U. S. Colored Troops, from the Twenty-fifth Corps, interposed in the road between my skirmish line and my column, which was proceeding on the road, and there remained until my skirmish line was halted by a small party of our cavalry, where it was also halted, and my column passed. By direction of Major-General Weitzel I occupied the town with one brigade and stationed the two others on the outside of the town.

The body of cavalry referred to as halting my skirmish line had passed through that line, after it had occupied the rebel works, and moved rapidly toward Richmond. One man of Ninth Vermont Volunteers was killed by the explosion of a torpedo in crossing the rebel line of works.

One hundred or 200 prisoners (stragglers) were taken on the road by the skirmish line, and about fifty guns, abandoned, taken possession of by them.

The hospitals at the entrance to the town were found filled with rebel sick and wounded, but the number I am not able to state.

Colonel Adams, with his cavalry, on arriving at the city, was directed to picket the roads leading to Richmond with his own regiment, Fifth Massachusetts Cavalry, and the other regiments of his command were ordered to assist the First Brigade, Third Division, in restoring order in the city, which, having been fired by the infamous vandalism of the retreating enemy, was in some confusion.

I inclose the report of Captain Bruce, staff officer of the picket-line, who directed its movements as skirmishers.

Captain Hart, ordnance officer of the Artillery Brigade annexed, was directed to take charge of collecting all the cannon taken, and Captain Brydon, ordnance officer of this division, was directed to take charge of and collect all scattered small-arms that could be found on the lines or within the city.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. EDWARD MOALE, A. A. G., 24th Army Corps.

No. 238.

Report of Capt. George A. Bruce, Thirteenth New Hampshire Infantry, Officer of the Pickets.

HIDGHS, THIRD DIVISION, TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
April 4, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of my tour of duty as officer of the night for the pickets for April 2 and 3, 1865:

I was out several times during the middle of the night, but could discover nothing unusual, excepting a bright fire which appeared to be a long distance south of Richmond, and in the course of an hour died out. At 3.30, morning of April 3, as I was preparing to go to the picket-line, two deserters from the Tenth Virginia Battalion came in and reported that the enemy had evacuated the line on our front. By direction of the general commanding I went to the commanding officers of the First and Second Brigades, with instructions to have their commands in readiness to move at once, and then to the picket-line with instructions to advance flat as soon as we could see. By this time large fires were visible in the direction of Richmond and south of it. There were no lights on the rebel picket-line. In a few moments there was a terrific explosion, probably the blowing up of a gun-boat on the James, followed by others, heard more or less distinctly, in quick succession. While it was yet dark I sent out a corporal and three men to go as far as the vedette line of the enemy, who reported that the line was vacated. Lieutenant-Colonel Bamberger, general officer of the day, rode to the right of our lines, and I to the left, with orders for the whole line to advance, commencing the movement from the center. It was just the gray of dawn as our skirmishers advanced, and when arrived at the picket-line of the enemy, where we halted, and word was sent to the general commanding, I was first able to distinguish with tolerable clearness the enemy's fortifications, and noticed that their tents were still standing. As soon as the order could be communicated the skirmish line was in motion, and advanced to the abatis in front of the rebel works and then by the flank over their fortifications by the paths the rebel pickets used, to escape danger from their torpedoes. The skirmishers were formed a few hundred yards beyond the works, when I reported in person the occupation of the rebel fortifications in front of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps. Private Duncan, of the Ninth Vermont Volunteers, was the first man to mount the parapet. There were ten guns in the forts along the left of our line and many more to the right, which I could not see.

After reporting I returned to the front, when I noticed that the pickets of the Twenty-fifth Corps were advancing to the works on their front. Our skirmishers were at once set in motion, following the Osborne pike, picking up rebel stragglers quite frequently. We had moved about two miles when General Wild and staff overtook us with about a company of colored soldiers marching by the flank, who passed the supports to our skirmishers, who were also marching by the flank. I sent word to the officer in charge of the reserve to move past the colored troops, which they did, and for the skirmishers to advance more rapidly. At the second line of fortifications there were a large number of heavy guns, over which sentinels from the skirmishers were posted. I should judge that about thirty guns were taken on the left of our line and guards placed over them. As soon as we came to the suburbs of the city I found that the town had already been occupied by Major Stevens with a few cavalry, and a sentinel posted on the road to halt all troops at that point. Major Stevens had passed our skirmish line about half an hour after we had occupied the reserve works. Here I waited until the arrival of the whole division, when the town was regularly occupied by one brigade of the division.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. A. BRUCE,

Captain, Thirteenth New Hampshire Vols., and Judge-Advocate.

Capt. GEORGE W. HOOKER,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 239.

Report of Maj. Charles Warren, Eleventh Connecticut Infantry, First Brigade.

HQRS. ELEVENTH REGIMENT CONNECTICUT VOLUNTEERS,
Near Camp Jackson, Richmond, Va., April 7, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report relative to the movements of the Eleventh Connecticut Volunteer Infantry since the advance on Richmond, Va., from near Signal Hill, Va., April 3, 1865:

Early on the morning of the 3d of April, 1865, a bright fire could be seen in the direction of Richmond, Va., increasing rapidly, followed by bright flashes and explosions. Those signs of an evacuation were immediately followed by orders from brigade headquarters to strike tents and be ready to move. The brigade (First Brigade, Third Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, of which this regiment formed a part) was formed in mass on the New Market road, and immediately advanced toward the rebel capital, preceded by a line of skirmishers. The first line of rebel works was cautiously passed without opposition, and then commenced the race for Richmond. Lines of rebel works were passed at a double-quick until the spires of the city that we had read of for four years came in view, the national banners were unfurled, bands struck up "Rally 'Round the Flag," when cheer upon cheer from our soldiers rent the air, and the city of Richmond was entered in triumph by the national army about 8.30 a. m. The men were received by the white people with a good deal of enthusiasm, but our reception by the colored people was a perfect ovation. The rear guard of the enemy passed up Main street just ahead of our advance. Many prisoners have been picked up in the city. After stationing guards over magazines, arsenals, and other important places the Eleventh Regiment was sent to aid in putting out the fire which the rebels had kindled and which was fast sweeping the city to destruction. The fire being checked the regiment was detailed as provost guard for the city, which duty they continue to perform.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES WARREN,

Major, Commanding Eleventh Connecticut Volunteers.

Brig. Gen. H. J. MORSE,
Adjutant-General State of Connecticut.

No. 240.

Report of Bvt. Maj. Gen. John W. Turner, U. S. Army, commanding Independent Division.

HQRS. SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
In Camp, near Richmond, Va., April 26, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this division from the 27th of March, when I left my position at Deep Bottom on James River, to the 25th of April on my arrival in the city of Richmond:

In obedience to the orders of the major-general commanding, the division crossed James River at Deep Bottom at dark on the evening of the 27th, and went into camp as a reserve to the First Division on the left of our line of intrenchments at Hatcher's Run about noon on the 29th. The next morning at 5 o'clock the division crossed Hatcher's Run and went into position in line of battle, its left connecting with the right of the Second Corps at Dabney's Mill, its right resting near Hatcher's Run. It moved forward during the day in conjunction with the Second Corps, crossing Hatcher's Run, and at night General Harris' brigade on my left rested on Hatcher's Run, Colonel Potter's brigade on the right of my line connecting with General Foster's division, Colonel Curtis with his brigade being in reserve. During the day Lieut. F. A. C. Judd, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, my aide-de-camp, was severely wounded while with me reconnoitering the enemy's position.

The next morning (the 30th) General Harris and Lieutenant-Colonel Potter were ordered to drive in the enemy's picket-line in front of their respective positions, in order to develop his position. This was very gallantly done; the enemy's entire picket-line was either captured or driven within his works, and our own was established within 400 yards of the enemy's works, enabling us to completely silence his artillery on this part of his line and giving us a very important advantage. Much credit is due to Captain Gandy, Fifteenth West Virginia Volunteers, who had charge of General Harris' skirmish line, and Lieutenant-Colonel Kellogg, One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, who had charge of Lieutenant-Colonel Potter's line during the attack. General Foster took up the attack and established his line in a corresponding position to that of the Second Division.

The 31st of March and 1st of April was employed in strengthening my position and establishing a battery on my right, which opened early in the morning of the 2d. During the night of the 1st and morning of the 2d, in obedience to orders received direct from Major-General Ord, I massed Colonel Curtis' and Colonel Potter's brigades on the right of Colonel Dandy's brigade, of the First Division, in preparation for an assault which, however, was countermanded before morning by Major-General Gibbon. Shortly after daybreak I directed General Harris to advance a strong skirmish line up to the enemy's works to ascertain if he was not leaving, of which I had strong suspicions, which was accordingly done. Lieutenant-Colonel Kellogg, of the One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, of the First Brigade, [who] had been left on the skirmish line with his regiment, under General Harris' orders, when Lieutenant-Colonel Potter's brigade was moved off during the night, advanced with his regiment with General Harris' line. This line, after some slight resistance, carried the enemy's works, capturing 2 guns, 3 battle-flags, and some prisoners. Before General Harris had reached the enemy's line I received an order to send two brigades to our signal tower near Fort Gregg in support of the Sixth Corps, which I was then informed had broken the enemy's lines. I accompanied these two brigades (the First and Second), and subsequently in the afternoon formed them in support of Foster's division, which immediately after my arrival moved to the assault of Fort Gregg, an important outwork to the enemy's defenses around Petersburg. Colonels Curtis and Potter moved in close support to the First Division, and joined hands with Foster's troops in the desperate struggle which took place for the possession of Fort Gregg. After nearly half an hour of desperate fighting this work was carried, but with the loss of many brave officers and men of this division.

I would respectfully refer the major-general commanding to the reports of Colonel Curtis and Colonel Potter for the names of those officers and men who distinguished themselves for gallantry in this attack.

Immediately after the capture of Fort Gregg, an adjoining work of the enemy's, Fort Baldwin, was carried by General Harris, who reported to me shortly after, with its garrison, some sixty in number, including its commander. For the operations of General Harris' brigade during the day, while from under my command, I refer you to his report.

My division just before night-fall was put into position to the right of Fort Gregg, with Anthony's battery on my right center. The next morning the evacuation of Petersburg was announced.

The movement to Burkeville was commenced early on the morning of the 3d, my division taking the lead on the Cox road. I arrived at Burkeville on the night of the 5th, the division having marched some thirty miles in the last day's march. Early the next morning the One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, under Lieutenant-Colonel Kellogg, and the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Lieutenant-Colonel Moulton, were detached, by order of the major-general commanding, on an expedition to High Bridge, the railroad crossing to Sandy Creek, and I regret to state were compelled to surrender during the day, having been surrounded by an overwhelming force of the enemy, not, however, before making a gallant resistance. These men were afterward paroled after the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox Court-House.

About noon on the 6th the division moved from Burkeville out on the Farmville road, following General Foster's division. The enemy was met at Rice's Station, and I went into position on the left of Foster's division; considerable skirmishing ensued, when night-fall put an end to the operations for the day.

Early next morning the enemy was found to have abandoned his position, and the movement was continued on to Farmville. At 5 a. m. of the 8th I moved out on the Lynchburg road and following General Sheridan's cavalry all day went into camp about 10 p. m. near Appomattox Station, having marched some twenty-eight miles, the men coming into camp in good order, and with but little straggling. I was on the road again at 3 o'clock next morning, and after advancing some four or five miles was ordered into line on the right of General Foster, near the Appomattox Court-House road leading to Lynchburg. The enemy were again met at this point and had just gained some little advantage over the cavalry; they were, however, easily pushed back, and on advancing into the open ground in the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House the enemy were found to have fallen back behind that place. Hostilities had ceased, and negotiations for the surrender of his entire army had commenced.

Remaining in camp at this place until the 12th I was ordered to Lynchburg with my division and Mackenzie's cavalry. General Mackenzie entered Lynchburg the same day, and my division followed the next. Immense quantities of military stores were found, all of which were destroyed, except what were required for own use, and what subsistence stores were turned over to the destitute citizens; over 5,000 prisoners were paroled. I left Lynchburg on the 16th, arriving at Appomattox Court-House the same day, and on the 17th moved for Burkeville, where the division arrived on the 19th. On the 22d we commenced our return march for Richmond, which place the division entered on the 25th.

I desire to bear testimony to the good conduct and patient endurance while on the march, and valor on the battle-field, of the officers and men of this division. To the brigade commanders—Brig. Gen. T. M. Harris, U. S. Volunteers, commanding Third Brigade; Col. William B. Curtis, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers, commanding Second Brigade; and Lieut. Col. A. Potter, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, commanding First Brigade—great praise is due, and I earnestly recommend them to the major-general commanding for his favorable consideration.

My staff officers—Capt. C. H. Hurd, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. I. A. Rosekrans, commissary of subsistence; Capt. J. L. C. Amee, assistant quartermaster; Capt. J. S. Gibbs, U. S. Colored Troops, aide-de-camp; Surg. R. B. Clarke, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, surgeon-in-chief; Capt. George Macomber, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers; Capt. H. L. Karr, One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteers, judge advocate; Capt. T. Mallory, One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteers, provost-marshal; Capt. J. F. Welch, One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteers, commanding pioneer corps; First Lieut. J. R. Bretneman, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers, acting ordnance officer; Second Lieut. Jere Horton, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, assistant commissary of musters—by their efficient and zealous aid have rendered me most valuable services, and they have my warmest thanks for their attention to their duties and earnest desire to carry out my orders.

Inclosed please find the reports of the brigade commanders.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. W. TURNER,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. W. MOALM,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

No. 241.

Reports of Lieut. Col. Andrew Potter, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Infantry, commanding First Brigade.

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., INDEPENDENT DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,

In the Field, April 2, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the following part taken by my command in the action of this day:

The One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry was left on the skirmish line at Hatcher's Run, and did not join me in time to take part in the action here. It, however, did good service there, the account of which I hereby annex.*

* See No. 242, p. 1219.

I moved with the One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Infantry from Hatcher's Run about 8 a. m.; came onto the field in front of Fort Gregg, a very strong position held by the enemy. My command supported General Foster's division, of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, advancing with him as he advanced. I found some rebel pickets behind an intrenched line, who annoyed my flank at first. I advanced by an oblique movement to the right, and then by a left half-wheel succeeded in placing one regiment of my command on the southern front of the fort. This gave me a direct fire on this front, and an enfilading one on the westerly front. We advanced rapidly without firing till we reached a road some fifty yards from the fort, when we lay down and poured in a rapid and accurate fire. We suffered severely in reaching this point, but once there had the best of it. After lying here some twenty-five minutes and succeeding in a great measure in silencing the enemy's fire, we charged the works and placed our colors on the parapet among the first. The attack was gallantly made and most stubbornly resisted. The enemy refused to yield till we were fairly within their works. My loss was 1 commissioned officer and 16 men killed, and 63 men wounded. The members of my staff rendered me most efficient aid. Words of praise are unnecessary in speaking of the conduct of either officers or men; the result of their courage speaks sufficiently for them. The fort was found to contain 56 dead rebels, 2 rifled 3-inch guns with caissons and ammunition, some 250 prisoners with arms and equipments.

It gives me great pleasure to forward so good an account of the doings of Lieutenant-Colonel Kellogg, commanding One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The two guns taken by him were taken from General Milroy at Winchester. The colors of regiment were taken at the same time. The flags are old offenders, and furnish their own history.

Respectfully submitted.

A. POTTER,

Lieut. Col. Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Infantry, Comdg. Brigade.

Capt. C. H. HURD,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Independent Division.

HDQRS. 1ST BRIG., INDEPENDENT DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,

In the Field, April 4, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that on the night of April 2 I placed the One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry on picket in front of my brigade. I instructed Lieutenant-Colonel Teters, commanding, to post his vedettes well up to the enemy's works. He reports that at about 4 a. m., finding that the enemy had abandoned the works, he advanced a portion of his skirmish line into the fort. He found about sixty stand of arms and a small quantity of tobacco. He was in the works before the artillery opened.

Respectfully submitted.

A. POTTER,

Lieut. Col. Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Infantry, Comdg. Brigade.

Capt. C. H. HURD,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

77 R R—VOL XLVI, PT I

HDQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Richmond, Va., April 25, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the part taken by my command in the several actions which occurred after leaving Petersburg until the surrender of the enemy's forces at Appomattox Court-House, April 9:

In obedience to orders received from division headquarters, I ordered the One hundred and twenty-third Ohio, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Kellogg, to report at those headquarters at 5 a. m. April 6. The regiment with other troops was sent to High Bridge, which crosses Bush Creek in the vicinity of Farmville. When within half a mile of the bridge they were attacked in the rear by the enemy, who was near with his whole force. A sharp engagement at once began, which was continued till every round of ammunition was expended. The men fought splendidly, driving the enemy back nearly a mile. There was no thought of surrendering till the ammunition gave out, when they were compelled to yield and the whole regiment became prisoners.* A few subsequently escaped. The balance were subsequently paroled by General Lee at the time of his surrender. In this action the regiment had 1 officer, Capt. J. F. Randolph, and 6 men wounded. The rest of the command moved with the division from Burkeville about 11 a. m. the same day, striking the enemy at Rice's Station in the afternoon of the 6th. I immediately sent forward three companies as skirmishers, who were sharply engaged with the enemy's line till dark. My loss was 1 man killed and 5 wounded. The enemy left during the night, the pursuit being resumed at daylight next morning. April 7, we encamped at Farmville. April 8, we reached the railroad near Appomattox Court-House, having marched nearly thirty miles that day. Early on the morning of the 9th we moved out and soon came upon the enemy at said court-house. The brigade was formed in line of battle, connecting with the Third Brigade on the right and the Second on the left. Two companies were sent forward as skirmishers, the brigade following in line of battle. Though under fire the brigade was not actively engaged, the enemy retreating faster than we could follow. When near Appomattox Court-House hostilities were suspended. The enemy's force was soon after surrendered by General Lee. We remained in camp till April 12, when we moved to Lynchburg. After destroying the stores at this point we returned to Burkeville, and from thence reached this place April 25, 1865, being just one month since we broke camp on the James.

I cannot conclude this, I hope, last report without bearing testimony to the uniform good conduct of the brigade while on the march and in battle. They have marched cheerfully and without murmuring, and have fought without a suspicion of defeat. Soldiers animated by such feelings are invincible.

I have the honor to be, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. POTTER,
Lieut. Col. Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Vol. Infantry, Comdg.
 [Capt. C. H. HURD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.]

*The number captured is not of record, and they are not included in table, p. 595.

No. 242.

Report of Lieut. Col. Horace Kellogg, One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS 123D OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY,
In the Field, April 2, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report as the part taken by my regiment in the action of to-day:

The command occupied the skirmish line, where it did good execution in silencing the enemy's guns. At 8.30 o'clock I saw that the rebels were leaving their works in great haste, and at the same time a white flag was seen close to their works. I immediately ordered my regiment forward on the double-quick, and had the satisfaction of seeing my regimental colors planted on the enemy's works in advance of all others.

The result of the movement was the capture of 200 prisoners, 2 brass 12-pounders, 3 caissons, about 500 stand of small-arms, and 2 of the enemy's battle-flags. My loss was one man slightly wounded.

I cannot speak in too high praise of the conduct of the officers and men of my command. It was everything that could be desired. After resting my command a short time and collecting the captured property I proceeded to rejoin the brigade.

Respectfully submitted.

HORACE KELLOGG,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding 123d Ohio Volunteer Infantry.
Lieut. THOMAS W. RIPLEY,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 243.

Reports of Col. William B. Curtis, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, commanding Second Brigade.

HDQRS. 2D BRIG., INDEPENDENT DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
April 3, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken in the assault and capture of Battery Gregg, near Petersburg, Va., on the 2d instant, by the Second Brigade, composed of the Twelfth West Virginia, Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania, and the Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers:

This brigade formed the left of the line and was the first to mount the parapets and enter the work, capturing the entire garrison of 300 men, 56 of the number being killed. The colors of the Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers were the first planted upon the parapets, and the color-bearer, Private Joseph R. Logsdon, Company C, was shot down just as the flag-staff was fixed in the ground. Three pieces of artillery were taken in the fort, and immediately turned upon the enemy in another quarter. Capt. William A. Smiley, Company D, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers, received the surrender of Lieut. Col. J. H. Duncan, who commanded the fort. James P. Ryan, color-sergeant, Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was killed in the act of planting his colors. Two rebel flags were captured, one each by Privates J. W. Johnston, Company B, and Charles A. Reeder,* Company

*Awarded a Medal of Honor.

G, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteers. Maj. Nathan Davis, Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, nobly led on in the charge after being severely wounded, and was killed after climbing the parapet. Second Lieut. Joseph Caldwell, Company G, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, was one of the first to enter the fort, where he was instantly killed with a bayonet.

The resistance of the enemy was desperate. Those who were foremost in entering the fort were shot down or bayoneted, and several were killed on the top of the parapet in the act of leaping inside. The officers and men of the entire command acted with the greatest bravery.

Altogether, the number of prisoners taken by this brigade amounted to 440 men, as reported by the provost guard. Part of them were captured on the skirmish line.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WM. B. CURTIS,

Colonel, Commanding.

Capt. C. H. HURD,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Independent Division.

HEADQ. 2D BRIG., INDEPENDENT DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,

April 25, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to your orders, I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the operations of the army since 2d instant:

April 3, began march on the Lynchburg road, arriving at Burkeville on the 5th; distance fifty-three miles. On the 6th the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers started at 4 o'clock in the morning on an expedition to High Bridge, five miles east of Farnville, Va., where it was captured after a sharp affair with the enemy.* At 12 m. same day the brigade, comprising the Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Infantry and one company of Twenty-third Illinois Infantry only (four companies were left on duty at Burkeville, Va.), marched with the division to a point seven miles on the Lynchburg road, where it was formed in line of battle, with the division forming the left of the line, and was immediately employed to extend the skirmish line, but did not become engaged. On the 7th moved to Farnville, Va., seven miles. On the 8th marched all day and part of the night, reaching a point west of Appomattox Court-House, in front of General Lee's army, early in the morning on the 9th instant (distance thirty-two miles), and formed line on the left of the division. Excepting the skirmish line, was not actually engaged, though under the fire of the enemy's artillery; no casualties. April 12, commenced march to Lynchburg, reaching there on the 13th; distance twenty-six miles. On the 15th set out from Lynchburg, arriving at Burkeville on the 19th; distance seventy miles. April 22, left Burkeville, Va., and on the 24th arrived near Richmond, Va.; distance fifty-eight miles.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. B. CURTIS,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. C. H. HURD,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

*The number captured is not of record and they are not included in table, p. 595.

No. 244.

Reports of Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Harris, U. S. Army, commanding Third Brigade.

HDQRS. 3D BRIG., INDEPENDENT DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
In the Field, April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by my command, consisting of the Tenth, Eleventh, and Fifteenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry Regiments, in the operations of the 2d instant on Hatcher's Run and in front of Petersburg:

Under orders of the general commanding the Independent Division, I assaulted the works of the enemy, at about 7 o'clock in the morning, at the point where his lines begin to refuse on the north bank of Hatcher's Run, striking them at the fort which defends the angle and from that to the run, a distance of about 300 yards, and carried them successfully without loss on my part, capturing 2 guns, 3 battle-flags, 1 captain, 1 lieutenant, and 28 men, the greater portion of the defending force making good their retreat whilst my men were struggling through a very dense difficulty slashing in front of these works, and those who remained surrendering as soon as my men entered the works.

The One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under Lieutenant-Colonel Kellogg, serving temporarily under my command, having the shortest line in the advance upon the fort, succeeded in securing two of the flags, and is entitled to a large share of the honors of the occasion. We were here met by a staff officer belonging to the Sixth Corps, who came galloping up about the time my men had obtained full possession of the fort. That corps, having broken through the enemy's works some three miles on our right, and taking him on the flank, had put him to confusion, meeting my command at that point. My command was reformed within twenty minutes, the One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry remaining behind in the captured works. I advanced at once within the enemy's works toward their left, preceded by the First Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, General Foster, a portion of the Sixth Corps also forming as we advanced and marching in a parallel column on our left, meeting with no opposition until within about a mile of the outer chain of forts on the south side of the town of Petersburg, where the enemy had disposed his forces to resist our farther progress. At this point I received an order from Major-General Gibbon direct to support General Foster, who had formed in line of battle a little in advance of me, and at once formed my command into a supporting line a short distance in his rear. I then joined General Foster in reconnoitering the enemy's position in order to be informed as to my surroundings and to receive his suggestions as to the manner in which I could most effectually carry General Gibbon's orders into effect.

At General Foster's suggestion I moved my command by the flank to his left, and here encountering a sharp fire from the enemy's skirmishers and sharpshooters, as well as experiencing a good deal of annoyance from his shells from a battery that almost enfiladed my column from the left, I changed direction by the right flank and advanced in line a short distance, where I gained cover in a shallow ravine, and here halted and rested my command, now considerably fatigued by a long and rapid march. Shortly after gaining this cover General Foster moved his division first by the left and then by the right flank, and took a position immediately in rear of my line for the purpose of cover and rest. Immediately after gaining this position I threw forward my skirmishers and sharpshooters, the latter armed with the Spencer rifle, and drove the enemy's advance line some distance, and as soon as my men were rested a little I started on a charge for Fort Whitworth, situated obliquely to my right at a distance of about 600 yards. My command advanced in gallant style, the men cheering and shouting as they ran, and notwithstanding they encountered a perfect storm of rifle-balls from the garrison of the fort (the enemy's guns having been removed) as also from skirmishers and sharpshooters on my left, succeeded in making a lodgment behind a cluster of small buildings, in which a regiment of the enemy had been lately quartered, at a distance of from 150 to 100 yards of the fort, with a comparatively small loss.

Finding myself now quite in advance of any portion of our lines, I here waited for them to advance, as I could not go farther without receiving an enfilading fire from Fort Gregg, situated about 600 yards to the right of Fort Whitworth, and being also at the same time under the necessity of respecting somewhat the movements of a line of the enemy with a section of artillery that had commenced to form in a position that menaced my left, and apparently for the purpose of taking advantage of my position. During my stay here my command was engaged in pouring a perfect storm of balls into the fort, and succeeded in completely silencing the garrison. I now had the satisfaction of seeing General Foster moving by a right oblique upon Fort Gregg, and the First and Second Brigades, of the Independent Division, under General Turner, coming up against it on his right, and at the same time also to see a division of the Sixth Corps and a battery advancing against the force on my left. I now only waited for this force to advance sufficiently to protect me in an advance, and during this time a most desperate conflict was going on for the possession of Fort Gregg, which finally ended in our favor. I could no longer wait for the advance of our forces on my left, as the garrison of Fort Whitworth had commenced to leave. Our final charge was now made, my command making an entrance only in time to secure a portion of the garrison. I captured, however, 1 colonel, 1 captain, 2 lieutenants, and 65 men. In addition to these, we found 2 dead and 2 wounded men in the fort. A portion of my command pursued the retreating force, secured a few more prisoners, and a few were picked up by my skirmishers, raising the number to about eighty-five in all. That portion of my command which advanced beyond Fort Whitworth captured a small redoubt about 200 yards in advance, thus completing the possession of the outer defenses of Petersburg. After resting my command an hour in the fort I proceeded to join the division, by the direction of the general commanding, on the right of Fort Gregg, thus closing the day's operations.

The officers and men of my command, almost without exception, displayed great gallantry, endurance, and determination, whilst many rendered themselves conspicuous by their courage and intelligence. Without being invidious I may mention particularly Major Ayers, commanding the Eleventh West Virginia Volunteers, who though a young man, and having risen from the ranks within the last eight months, has shown himself on all occasions on which he has been tried worthy of especial notice as a most promising young officer, and I beg leave to recommend him for promotion to colonel by brevet, in order that he may continue to command the regiment. Lieutenant-Colonel King having been absent on leave during all the operations in which his regiment has been engaged since his promotion, he, consequently, not having enjoyed an opportunity to prove his ability to command as has Major Ayers. Lieutenant-Colonel Holliday, commanding the Fifteenth, and Captain Coburn, commanding the Tenth West Virginia, are also worthy of especial mention, the former for bravery bordering on recklessness, the latter for coolness, good judgment, and alacrity in obeying orders. Captain Kirkpatrick and Lieutenant Minter, each commanding a company of sharpshooters, are deserving of especial commendation, and lastly my thanks are due to Captain Gandy and Lieutenants Lazear and Rallyson for their prompt, cheerful, and intelligent performance of their duties as staff officers. Accompanying please find list of casualties.*

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
T. M. HARRIS,
Brigadier-General.

Capt. C. H. HURD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIG., INDEPENDENT DIV., 24TH ARMY CORPS,
April 25, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with your circular of the 24th instant I have the honor to state that the operations of my command, consisting of the Tenth, Eleventh, and Fifteenth West Virginia Infantry Regiments, since my report of the 2d instant, have consisted principally in marches, it having marched from Petersburg, via Burkeville Junction, Farmville, and Appomattox Court-House, to Lynchburg, and thence, via Appomattox Court-House, Burkeville, and Amelia Court-House, to Richmond, a distance of over 200 miles.

My command was engaged in a skirmish with a force thrown out by General Lee for the protection of the flank of his retreating army on the evening of the 6th instant, in the vicinity of High Bridge, on the South Side Railroad, and again on the morning of the 9th instant, about a mile west of Appomattox Court-House.

My casualties in these skirmishes were one wounded, viz, Private John Smith, Company F, Eleventh West Virginia, in shoulder.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
T. M. HARRIS,
Brigadier-General.

Capt. C. H. HURD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 245.

Report of Capt. George T. Anthony, Seventeenth Battery New York Light Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTEENTH NEW YORK BATTERY,
TWENTY-FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
Richmond, Va., April 25, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to report the operations of my command since March 26 ultimo, on which date I broke camp in obedience to orders from your headquarters and took post at Deep Bottom, Va.:

Soon after dark Monday, April [March] 27, I crossed the James at Deep Bottom, following Turner's division, crossing the Appomattox at * Shows 10 men killed and 6 officers and 100 men wounded.

Broadway Landing, reaching the front of Petersburg before daylight on the morning of the 28th; distance marched about fifteen miles. Moved at 9 a. m. same day to headquarters Army of the Potomac, going into camp about one mile beyond for the night. 29th, moved at daylight, reaching the lines of the Second Corps at a point where they crossed the Vaughan road near Hatchers Run, where, by direction of Maj. C. C. Abell, chief of artillery Twenty-fourth Corps, I placed my battery in position, two sections upon the left and one section upon the right of said road. March 31, relieved from position upon Vaughan road and ordered to report to Brigadier-General Foster, commanding First Division, who was about to advance our lines. Battery not engaged.

At 1 a. m. April 1 ordered by Maj. C. C. Abell to move my battery out to a position on General Foster's front, near some standing chimneys, where General Hall, of the engineers, was constructing a work for my guns. When near the position with my battery at 2 a. m., met General Hall, who reported to me that the work could not be built on account of the condition of the earth. This statement was reported by me in person to Major Abell, when he directed me to bring my battery back within the lines. Nine o'clock of same day was directed to place a section in position upon General Turner's front. The work intended for the guns was not completed until 2 a. m. of the 2d, when my guns were put in. This work was nearly parallel to and distant about 700 yards from the left face of a salient in the enemy's lines, the angle of which terminated in a redoubt mounting four guns.

At daybreak a dense fog covered the enemy's lines and did not lift until 6.30 o'clock, when a column of the enemy's troops were seen moving out of the sally-port of the redoubt toward their left. I immediately opened fire upon the column at the entrance to the work, cutting off further egress therefrom. A few well-directed shots caused the display of a white flag at the sally-port. Firing ceased, and the troops of Turner's division immediately advanced and took possession of the lines. At 1 p. m. orders were received to move my battery up toward Petersburg on the line and inside of the works held by our forces in the morning. I reached the rear of Petersburg and my guns were placed in position at the right of Fort Gregg. Soon after its surrender and during the night, earth-works thrown up for their protection and orders received to open upon the enemy at daylight the following morning; before the time for executing which order it was announced that Petersburg had been evacuated. At 8 o'clock of the 3d I moved westward, following Turner's division, halting for the night after a march of about twelve miles. April 4, marched seventeen miles to Wilson's Station upon the South Side Railroad. April 5, marched to Burkeville Junction; distance twenty-five miles. April 6, left Burkeville soon after noon, [marched] to the vicinity of Rice's Station, eight miles hence, where the enemy were found intrenched. At about sunset I placed a section of my battery in position upon the Phillips plantation, near the mansion, and at that time the extreme advance of our skirmish line, and distant not more than 400 yards from the enemy. Fire was opened and kept up with good effect until darkness made it necessary to cease firing. During the night the balance of the battery was brought up and intrenched and an infantry line established seventy yards in front of my position.

On the morning of the 7th it was found that the enemy had left our front and an immediate advance made. It being impossible to follow the line of Turner's division I turned off to the right, following Foster's division, crossing the Appomattox upon the road bridge above the High (or railroad) Bridge and joining Turner's division at Farmville at 4 p. m. April 8, moved upon the Lynchburg road at daylight, resting after a march of more than thirty miles at a point upon the railroad between Pamplin's and Appomattox Stations, at 12 midnight. Moved again at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 9th, with Turner's division, to the headquarters of Major-General Sheridan and near Appomattox Station, where the column halted for breakfast, and I was directed by order of General Turner to park my battery "in the open field and near the road in a place and manner to allow of the most convenient movement of the whole, or a part of it, as circumstances should demand, and await orders." I remained there until the infantry of the corps had all moved out of the open field and into the woods and were being followed by the Fifth Corps, when without further orders I followed Turner's division across the railroad, turning to the right upon the road leading to Appomattox Court-House, halting at a point where our line of battle crossed said road. No further orders were received from General Turner, but by direction of Major Abell, chief of artillery, I moved up the road to within 200 yards of the court-house about 11 a. m., and soon after hostilities had ceased. Remaining in camp at Appomattox Court-House until the morning of the 17th, at 10 a. m. we moved with Foster's division on the road to Burkeville; marched eighteen miles. April 18, moved at 5 a. m.; marched twenty miles. April 19, moved at 5.30 o'clock; marched fifteen miles, arriving at Burkeville at 1 p. m. Left Burkeville April 22, taking the Amelia Court-House road; marched eighteen miles. April 23, moved at 5 a. m.; marched twenty miles. April 24, moved at 4.45 o'clock, arriving in rear of Manchester opposite Richmond. April 25, crossed the James River at 10 o'clock to this place.

I have no casualties to report. I have to report the loss of twenty-two horses upon the march. The march was very severe, but the loss of animals arose from the impossibility of securing to them regular feed and water. It gives me pleasure to add that officers and men of my command have performed all the duties and endured the hardships of the march with a cheerfulness and alacrity worthy of the cause and the country they serve.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. T. ANTHONY,

Captain, Commanding Seventeenth New York Battery.

Lieut. D. W. BURDICK,

Actg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Artillery Brigade, 24th Army Corps.

No. 246.

Report of Capt. Samuel S. Elders, Battery B, First U. S. Artillery.

HQRS. HORSE BATTERY B, FIRST U. S. ARTILLERY,
Near Richmond, Va., April 26, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by Horse Battery B, First U. S. Artillery, in the operations of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps after leaving the north side of the James River, Va.:

On the 27th of March the battery left camp near Deep Bottom, on the north side of the James River, Va., and marched to the extreme left of the line, in rear of Petersburg, Va. April 2, engaged the enemy, and same evening advanced to near Petersburg by the Boydton plank road, the enemy retreating before the army. April 3, 4, and 5, following the enemy up on the line of the South Side Railroad. April 6, engaged him at Rice's Station, Va. April 7 and 8, in pursuit of the enemy. April 9, engaged the enemy at Appomattox Court-House, Va., the engagement ending in the surrender of Lee's Army of Northern Virginia. April 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, remained at Appomattox Court-House. April 17, commenced the march for Richmond, stopping at Burkeville Junction about forty hours.

Casualties: 1 man killed and 1 wounded.

Loss in material: Horses killed and worn out, 34; mules worn out and abandoned, 2.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
SAML. S. ELDER,

Captain, First U. S. Artillery, Commanding Battery B.

Major C. C. ABELL,

Chief of Artillery, Twenty-fourth Army Corps.

---

No. 247.

Report of Lieut. Charles P. Muhlenberg, Battery A, Fifth U. S. Artillery.

RICHMOND, VA., April 26, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report the operations of Battery A, Fifth U. S. Artillery, commencing March 27, 1865, and ending April 25, 1865, the date of the arrival of my battery at this post.

March 27, broke camp near First Division headquarters, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, at dusk, crossed James River during the night, and the Appomattox at daylight the following morning. March 29, took up position vacated by batteries of the Second Army Corps. Took up position on the evening of April 1 in front of interior line of defenses of south side of Petersburg. Marched with First Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, to vicinity of Appomattox Court-House, nothing of note incident to battery transpiring. April 9, battery in position; left and center sections engaged with the enemy's extreme right. April 17, left Appomattox Court-House for Burkeville; road heavy; animals suffering severely. April 22, left Burkeville for Richmond; road good; animals not diseased recuperating.

I have no casualties in action to report. My losses have been 5 men (4 by desertion, 1 by accident), and 27 horses by disease and exhaustion.

Of the conduct of the men of the battery, composed of regulars of various periods of enlistments, and volunteers of different organizations, I can speak in terms of highest commendation.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. P. MUHLENBERG,
First Lieutenant, Commanding Battery.

Maj. C. C. ABELL,

Chief of Artillery, Twenty-fourth Corps, Army of the James.

No. 248.

Report of Maj. Gen. Godfrey Weitzel, U. S. Army, commanding detachment Army of the James.

HQRS. 25TH ARMY CORPS, ARMY OF THE JAMES,

In the Field, Va., April 17, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to report as follows the operations of the detachment of the Army of the James, while under my command, from the 28th ultimo to the 13th instant:

Nothing unusual occurred until Saturday night, the 1st of April, when it was believed that some of the enemy's forces were leaving in front of Bermuda Hundred. I therefore directed an attack, which was made by Maj. Gen. G. L. Hartsuff early on Sunday morning, April 2. He succeeded in carrying the enemy's picket-line and developing the full force of the enemy, which was found not to have been diminished. During that day, however, about 1,400 rebel infantry, 300 cavalry, and a light battery had been seen passing down the turnpike and railroad toward Petersburg. From this and other sources of information I felt the enemy were weakening in my front north of the James, and believing that they would continue to do this during the night (to some extent at least) I ordered preparations for attack in the morning. I subsequently received orders from Lieutenant-General Grant not to attack in the morning unless I felt perfectly certain of success, as he would be able in a day or two to send me more troops, and thus make it certain. I, however, kept wary, in preparation and on strict alert, and at about 3 o'clock it was evident that the enemy was abandoning my immediate front. I ordered the troops to be awakened to get their breakfast, and gave orders for movement at daylight, and at the same time ordered the picket-line to move forward at once to feel the enemy's position.

General Devens, commanding the Third Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, was the first to report to me (at about 5 o'clock) that his picket-line had full possession of the enemy's works in his front. Before day-break I felt pretty well convinced that the enemy were evacuating Richmond, and therefore as soon as day dawned I sent Maj. A. H. Stevens, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, and Maj. E. E. Graves, aide-de-camp, both of my staff, with forty of my headquarters cavalry, belonging to Companies E and F, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, to receive the surrender of the city, and to direct the authorities and citizens to cause all liquor to be destroyed and to preserve order until my troops arrived. At daybreak I started General Kantz's (First) division, Twenty-fifth Corps, up the Osborne pike, General Devens' (Third) division, Twenty-fourth Corps, up the New Market road, and the cavalry under Col. O. F. Adams, jr., Fifth Massachusetts Cavalry, up the Darbytown and Charles City roads, and directed them all to halt at the outskirts of the city until further orders. I then rode ahead of the troops along the Osborne pike and entered the city hall, where I received the surrender at 8.15 a. m. Majors Stevens and Graves had entered a little after 7 a. m. I found the greatest confusion, pillaging and disorder reigning, and the city on fire in several places. I immediately set every one to work to restore order and to assist in subduing the fires. I succeeded in doing this at about 2 p. m., by which time a large and valuable portion of the city had been consumed. I ordered in, immediately after my arrival, a brigade of Devens' division, under Brevet Brigadier-General Ripley, as provost guard, and ordered all the rest of the troops into position along the inner line of redoubts around the city.

Ripley's brigade were, of course, of vital importance in restoring quiet and subduing the fire. From that time until relieved by the major-general commanding I was mainly engaged in restoring the wheels of government, and in taking care of the destitute in the manner directed by him. The first troops to reach the city were the two companies (E and H) of the Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry who were the escort to Majors Stevens and Graves, and their guidons were the first national colors displayed over the city. Next came the pickets of the Twenty-fourth Corps. After that, as I was in the city and not on the outskirts, I do not know what came, and is a matter of dispute, both divisions claiming the credit.

During all these operations I had the hearty and zealous co-operation of every officer under me.

I desire particularly to mention Brig. Gen. Charles Devens and Brig. Gen. George F. Shepley. They both, by most untiring vigilance, labor, and alertness, assisted me in the highest degree, and both particularly distinguished themselves in the above respects, and I earnestly recommend both for the brevet of major-general. Both have good claim to it, from length of faithful service in their present rank.

My casualties during these operations were about 90, of which 10 were killed, 40 wounded, and 40 captured by the enemy.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. WETZEL,

Major-General, Commanding.

Lieut. Col. E. W. SMITH,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Department of Virginia.

No. 249.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Richard H. Jackson, U. S. Army, commanding Second Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 28, 1865.

COLONEL: In obedience to instructions from department headquarters of the 24th instant I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my division since leaving the north side of the James. As I did not take command of the division until the 10th instant its operations prior to that date are contained in the reports of the brigade commanders, which are very full, and are herewith inclosed.

On the 10th instant, at Appomattox Court-House, I was appointed to command this division, and was ordered to march to Petersburg. I commenced the march on the 11th instant and arrived near the present encampment on the 17th instant. The march from Appomattox Court-House to this place was performed under unusual difficulties. The roads to Burkeville Junction were in very bad order, and the horses and mules in the supply and brigade trains and the battery attached were the worst I have ever seen in the army; they were hardly able to move the empty wagons. In this connection I think it proper to state that the animals were without forage when I started from Appomattox Court-House, and that no provision was made by the chief quartermaster for supplying them along the line of march, in fact the train must have been entirely forgotten by him. On my own solicitation I received one day's forage from the chief quartermaster of the Army of the Potomac at Burkeville Junction.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. JACKSON,

Brevet Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Bvt. Col. E. W. SMITH,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Department of Virginia.

ADDENDA.

HDQRS. SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

Camp Lincoln, Va., May 11, 1865.

Maj. D. D. WHEELER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Twenty-fifth Army Corps:

MAJOR: I have the honor to bring to the notice of the major-general commanding us worthy of promotion by brevet in the army the following-named officers:

Maj. Lewis S. Barnes, Ninth U. S. Colored Troops, division inspector, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for highly meritorious services since his connection with this division and for his ability, energy, and faithful conduct since its organization to the present time. As this promotion is well deserved I earnestly hope it will be made.

Surg. C. P. Heichhold, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, chief medical officer of the division, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for highly meritorious services during the last campaign in Virginia against the rebels.

Col. James Shaw, jr., Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, commanding First Brigade, to be brigadier-general by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Col. W. W. Woodward, One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, commanding Third Brigade, to be brigadier-general by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Col. L. F. Haskell, Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops, to be brigadier-general by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct in action April 2 and 9, 1865.

Maj. Thomas Wright, Thirty-first U. S. Colored Troops, to be lieutenant-colonel by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Capt. William V. Smith, Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct in the attack on Fort Gilmer September 29, 1864. Captain Smith is now suffering from wounds received in that action.

Capt. Thomas McCarty, Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, to be major by brevet for gallant and meritorious conduct in the attack on Fort Gilmer September 29, 1864.

Capt. Charles L. Rice, Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, brigade inspector, to be major by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Capt. Frank F. Newland, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, to be major by brevet for gallant services in action April 2 and 9, 1865, and for meritorious conduct during the whole of the recent campaign.

Capt. Fred. A. Chapman, Twenty-ninth U. S. Colored Troops, to be major by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Capt. Ira H. Evans, One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, brigade inspector, to be major by brevet for gallant services in action on the 2d and 9th of April, 1865, and for meritorious conduct during the last seven months.

Capt. Marshall H. Twitchell, One hundred and ninth U. S. Colored Troops, to be major by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

Capt. Charles Kireker, One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, to be major by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

First Lieut. Francis H. Taggart, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, to be captain by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

First Lieut. William H. Brooks, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, to be captain by brevet for conspicuous gallantry in action October 13, 1864, to be major by brevet for gallant services in action on the 2d and 9th days of April, 1865, and for meritorious conduct during the last seven months.

First Lieut. M. T. Kelly, One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, to be captain by brevet for meritorious services during the recent campaign from March 27 to April 9, 1865.

First Lieut. James M. Lyon, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops, to be captain by brevet for meritorious services during the last seven months and for gallant conduct in action April 2 and 9, 1865.

The services of Col. E. Martindale, Eighty-first U. S. Colored Troops, are believed to have been of great value during the rebellion. Although not having served under my immediate command I think that his claims for promotion should be considered. I therefore respectfully recommend, if it meets the views of the major-general commanding, that he be nominated for promotion by brevet to the rank of brigadier-general.

I respectfully invite the attention of the major-general commanding to the letter of Col. James Shaw, jr., of April 20, 1865, advocating the promotion of Surg. C. P. Heickhold, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, and to my own indorsement of May 2, 1865, on that letter, which is herewith inclosed.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. JACKSON,

Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

No. 250.

Report of Surg. Charles P. Heickhold, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, Surgeon-in-Chief.

HEADQUARTERS MEDICAL DEPARTMENT,
SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
In the Field, near Petersburg, Va., April 25, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the medical department of this division in the recent campaign of the armies operating against Richmond:

When the division was ordered to march from Chaffin's farm on the 27th ultimo, I was furnished by Surg. W. A. Conover, medical director, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, the following transportation: Nineteen two-horse ambulances, three medical supply teams, two teams for forage, one Autenreith wagon; four ambulances additional joined us near Ford's Station, making a total of twenty-three ambulances. The division was well equipped and in good physical condition. The Anteucreith wagon was well stored with medicines and hospital supplies, and the teams laden with tent flies, blankets, &c., sufficient to provide for the sick and wounded in any emergency which was likely to arise. I several times provided hospital accommodations for several hundred patients, but happily they were not needed. The casualties in the division were as follows: Wounded, officers, 1; men, 30; total, 31. Killed, men, 4. Aggregate loss, 35. There were treated on the march on account of sickness, officers, 23; men, 185; total, 208; with the following result: Returned to duty, officers, 19; men, 89; total, 108. Of the sick and wounded there were sent to the following places, to be forwarded to general hospital: To Humphreys' Station, 14; to field hospital Twenty-fourth Army Corps, 6; to Warren's Station, 11; to Wilson's Station, South Side Railroad, 55; to Burkeville Junction, 33; to field hospital Twenty-fifth Army Corps, 8; total, 127. With the sick and wounded left at Wilson's Station, I left an assistant surgeon, with 1 field pannier, 2 hospital tent flies, 1 ambulance, and 400 rations, and wish to direct your attention to the fact that Surgeon Ainsworth, U. S. Army, took from the assistant surgeon in whose charge I had left them the ambulance, flies, and pannier, and I have not been able to find any trace of him or the property he so unauthorizedly took away.

Taking into consideration the fact that the greater portion of the command is composed of men who had never endured the hardships of a campaign, I am highly gratified with the manner in which they passed through this one. In an experience of more than three years I never witnessed greater powers of endurance. There was no struggling, and the men were constantly in the best of spirits. The command is now in good sanitary condition. The medical officers of this division discharged their duties faithfully, but I am particularly indebted to Surg. L. H. Gragny, of the One hundred and ninth U. S. Colored Troops, and Surg. William H. Egle, of the One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, for their zeal in caring for the sick and wounded. To Chaplain Johnson, One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, I am also under deep obligations for his untiring attention and care in providing for their wants, thus placing him in strong contrast with the other chaplains of the division.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. P. HEICHHOLD,

Surgeon Eighth U. S. Colored Troops,

Surgeon-in-Chief Second Division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps.

Capt. IRA H. EVANS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 251.

Report of Lieut. Dilceyn V. Purington, Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, Acting Assistant Quartermaster.

OFFICE ACTING ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER,
SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS,

April 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In obedience to orders from the brevet brigadier-general commanding I have the honor to submit the following report of the transactions in my department during the recent campaign:

I took charge of the quartermaster's department of this division on the 27th of March, in obedience to orders from Brigadier-General

Birney, to act for Capt. A. T. Atwood, assistant quartermaster, who was away on leave of absence for thirty days. The number of teams required by the division at the time I took charge of the quartermaster's department to complete the allowance in accordance with General Orders, No. 37, headquarters Armies of the United States, was eighteen. There were procured during the day, viz: From the ambulance officer, Second Division, three wagons with teams complete; from Capt. F. Crain, assistant quartermaster, First Division, fifteen wagons. The wagons and teams received from Captain Crain were in a most miserable condition. The mules were poor and weakly. Thirteen of these teams were put with the supply train, and loaded with, on an average, 1,700 pounds weight. The march of the night of the 27th was an extremely wearisome one, the train moving a distance of only four miles during the whole night. The train crossed the Appomattox River at daylight on the morning of the 28th, and moved on toward Pitkin's Station. At 11 a. m., while the engineers were repairing the road, I ordered the teams to be unhitched from the wagons, watered, and fed. For this I was censured by Lieutenant-Colonel Howard, chief quartermaster, Army of the James, but my explanation of the condition of the teams was satisfactory. The march was resumed and continued to Humphreys' Station without any unusual occurrence other than frequent stopping of teams, breaking of harness, &c. At Humphreys' Station the teams were rested two days. Several mules had died or given out so as to be worthless, and in consequence many of the six-mule teams were reduced to four mules. This was particularly the case with the teams received from Captain Crain; the first night's march had completely jaded them. At this place the supply and forage trains had been refitted. The march was resumed on the 2d [3d] of April by the Cox road. This road at a point near Sutherland's Station had become nearly impassable. The trains of the Sixth Army Corps were passing at the same time with the trains of this division. I was from 6 p. m. on the 2d [3d] to daylight on the 3d [4th] crossing this place.

After feeding and watering the teams the march was resumed. During the morning Lieutenant-Colonel Lawrence, chief quartermaster Twenty-fourth Army Corps, then acting chief quartermaster Army of the James, sent Captain Alberger, assistant quartermaster, to assist me in getting the train along. This favor was highly appreciated as the brigade quartermasters had to exert themselves sufficiently to get the teams of their respective brigades along. Early in the day a corporal who was acting as wagon-master reported that one of the teams I had received from Captain Crain had stalled in the rear of the train, and was then about a mile in the rear. His report was that the mules were completely exhausted, and it was doubtful if the team could get along even after the wagon was emptied. As the remainder of the wagons were loaded, I ordered him to abandon the pork, and come on with the wagon. The corporal reported to me at Farmville, on our return from Appomattox Court-House, that he had used every exertion to get the team along, but the team had become so worn out as to be unable to draw the empty wagon, and his forage and rations running out he had left it on the road. This wagon was sent for, but had been taken by some unknown person.

The train of this division arrived at Burkeville Junction on the night of the 6th and encamped near the station. About 10 p. m. I received an order from Major-General Ord, commanding Army of the James, a copy of which is herewith annexed, to furnish Lieutenant Olcott, commanding Battery M, First U. S. Artillery, with eighteen horses and a six-mule team complete without wagon. By a verbal order from Colonel Lawrence I was directed to select these animals from among the best in the train. This took the animals from six wagons, and the best that I had. The morning of the 7th I was ordered to follow the train of the Twenty-fourth Corps, and to take my wagons all along if possible. Several horses and mules were sent to me to enable me to get them along, but they were nearly all broken-down animals and had never been worked together. A guard was left with them and under the general direction of the acting assistant quartermaster First Brigade. The next day on our arrival at Farmville I was ordered by Lieutenant-Colonel Lawrence, acting chief quartermaster, to send all the unserviceable wagons to Burkeville with the animals. The number of the wagons sent was sixteen. These, in addition to the six left at Burkeville, making twenty-two, were to remain at Burkeville to recruit their strength. Three of these I was obliged to leave in camp in the neighborhood of Burkeville, under the charge of Lieutenant Brown, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, who had been ordered there for the purpose of taking charge of unserviceable wagons. The march from Appomattox Court-House to Petersburg was arduous in the extreme, a great deal of rain falling during the time occupied in making it, this making the roads muddy and heavy. Fortunately the wagons were loaded light, and by order of the brevet brigadier-general the loads were equalized throughout the train.

The First Brigade was furnished with five additional wagons, the Second Brigade with six, and the Third Brigade with four. The unserviceable train from Burkeville was left under the charge of Lieut. M. S. Towne, regimental quartermaster, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops, with directions to march by easy stages to Petersburg. He reported to me within forty-eight hours after the arrival of the main train. The teams of the division were not out of forage during the entire march, and only for a few days were the rations reduced below the authorized allowance. A forage train was placed at the head of the train daily and foraging parties sent in advance to scour the country in search of grain, which was generally found. The wagon train of this division was not in a condition to participate in such marches as we were called upon to make.

On the 27th of March, when I took charge of the division, there were in the supply train fifty-three teams and in the ammunition train twenty teams. Of these seventy-three teams not more than forty could be called serviceable. It became evident during the early part of the march that there had been a lack of energy in those who had previously had charge of the train. Wagon-masters and teamsters had been accustomed to do as they chose, and during the whole march I was obliged to personally superintend the hitching of teams.

I have now ten wagons, for which I have no serviceable animals. Requisition has, however, been made for them, and it is to be hoped that they will soon be obtained. With those and the means of transportation which I have estimated to be drawn in May, the train will be put in the best possible condition.

The total loss of mules during the march was 79; the total loss of horses was 31.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. V. PURINGTON,

Lieut. and Regtl. Q. M. Seventh U. S. Colored Troops,

and Acting Assistant Quartermaster.

Capt. I. H. EVANS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

78 R R—VOL. XLVI, PT I

No. 252.

Report of Capt. Henry F. Hawkes, Commissary of Subsistence, U. S. Army, Chief Commissary.

HEADQRS. SECOND DIVISION, TWENTY-FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Petersburg, Va., April 28, 1865.

SIR: In accordance with Special Orders, No. 77, paragraph 3, headquarters Department of Virginia, Army of the James, before Richmond, Va., March 18, 1865, I reported for duty as commissary of subsistence of this division on the 26th of March. By orders received from Bvt. Col. M. P. Small, chief commissary of subsistence, Army of the James, I was directed to have four days' marching rations in the haversacks of the men and eight days' rations in the train, but owing to the insufficiency of transportation, and after having, through the personal exertions of Col. M. P. Small, procured fifteen additional wagons for the supply train, I was unable to fully comply with the order, and when we broke camp and commenced our march on the 27th of March the troops had four days' in haversacks and seven days' in the train. By anticipating contingencies that might arise and by procuring supplies as opportunity offered, notwithstanding the deficiency and poor quality of the transportation, which was constantly decreasing by the death of animals and abandonment of wagons, I have been enabled during the entire campaign to issue full marching rations to the troops of this command. In addition to this I have issued 7,000 rations of bread and 2,800 rations each of coffee, sugar, and salt, to Confederate prisoners, and have in addition transferred to other commands, to supply their deficiencies, 18,462 rations of coffee and 11,820 rations of sugar, besides the small stores forming a component part of the ration. During the entire march from the James River to Appomattox Court-House and return to this camp, the troops of this division have had issued to them full marching rations, and have not been a day without food except in individual cases when they have wasted or squandered the rations issued to them.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. F. HAWKES,

*Captain and Commissary of Subsistence of Volunteers,
Chief Commissary of Subsistence, 2d Division, 25th Army Corps.*

Capt. IRA H. EVANS,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 253.

Report of Col. James Shaw, jr., Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, commanding First Brigade.

HEADQRS. FIRST BRIG., SECOND DIV., 25TH ARMY CORPS,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to make the following report of the movements of this brigade during the last campaign:

On the 27th of March the Seventh, One hundred and ninth, and One hundred and sixteenth Regiments U. S. Colored Troops (One hundred and fifteenth U. S. Colored Troops remaining in camp, having a few days before been removed from Fort Burnham and lines in its vicinity that we had occupied during the winter to a position a mile in the rear), broke camp at dark, crossed the James and Appomattox Rivers, and marched to the extreme left of the lines of the Army of the Potomac, near Hatcher's

Rum, where we arrived at noon on the 29th instant. On the 30th we changed our position, but still remained in the works. On the 31st our lines were advanced to within a few hundred yards of the rebel works and I was ordered to form for an attack. These orders (given by General Birney) were countermanded, and during that day and the following one (April 1) we remained in the same position, being shelled occasionally by the enemy, but without result.

Early in the morning of April 2 heavy firing was heard on our right and we again formed for attack, but the lines of the enemy had been broken by the Sixth Army Corps, their right had been turned by the Second and Fifth Corps and the cavalry, and they were deserting the works in our front. We advanced, crossed the lines in our front, and, moving to the right, joined the Sixth Army Corps, who had swept the works from their own front to this point. Halting here for a few moments, we then marched toward the city, which was being closely invested by our troops; took up a position on the right of the division, connecting with the Third Division, Sixth Army Corps, under command of General Seymour.

In this position we rested for the night. Early next morning (April 3) I received information that the city was being evacuated and orders to advance. Deploying a portion of the Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, I advanced on their works, found them entirely deserted, and continued the march toward the city, which I entered with the skirmish line at 5.30 a. m. An hour or two later we were again on the road in pursuit of Lee; marched on the Cox road, and halted for the night near Sutherland's, ten miles from the city.

April 4, marched at 4 a. m., but by some mistake the division had taken the Nanoxine instead of the Cox road, and being delayed we marched but seven miles during the a. m. Here I was detached from the division and ordered to return to Sutherland's with the Seventh and One hundred and ninth U. S. Colored Troops (the One hundred and sixteenth being ordered to report to Colonel Woodward, commanding Third Brigade), and hold that point until the arrival of the First Division, Ninth Army Corps, under General Willeox.

Returning as ordered, I remained until the evening of April 5, when General Willeox arrived and I started to rejoin my division, then two days' march ahead. At Burkeville I halted for rations and orders and was detained several hours; yet on the 9th I reported to General Turner (General Birney having been relieved) at Appomattox Court-House, having made ninety-six miles in four days, and that without a straggler. We were an hour or two too late to witness the surrender of General Lee and his army, but had done our best to be in time.

On the 10th I received orders to report to Brevet Brigadier-General Jackson, and on the 11th started on our return to Petersburg, which we reached on the evening of Monday, April 17.

The brigade was not at any time actively engaged, though always ready and often expecting it.

The officers and men of my command have during this short campaign, by their endurance of hardships, hard marches, and short rations, shown the true spirit and fortitude of the soldier; they have each and all my hearty thanks.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES SHAW, Jr.,

Colonel Seventh U. S. Colored Troops, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. IRA H. EVANS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 254.

Report of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Ulysses Doubleday, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops, commanding Second Brigade.

HQHS. SECOND BRIG., SECOND DIV., 25TH ARMY CORPS,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by this brigade in the campaign just ended:

Breaking camp March 27 at dusk, we marched by way of Varina and Broadway Landing to Humphreys' Station, near which we encamped on the 29th. The next afternoon, with two regiments, the Forty-first and One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops, I reported to General R. S. Foster, commanding First Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, then engaged with the enemy. My troops were held in reserve till dark, when they assisted in throwing up breast-works on the ground won during the day. The next morning, with the Eighth and Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops, I reported to General Turner, near Hatcher's Run, remaining in reserve until the next afternoon, when we rejoined this division. On the 2d of April we advanced inside of the abandoned lines of the enemy to a point south of Petersburg, near Battery No. 45, which, by direction of General Birney, I prepared to storm. He soon after ordered me to place my men so that the enemy could see them, which was done, and they were consequently exposed for more than an hour to the fire of eleven pieces of artillery, which was only prevented from being very destructive by the want of skill on the part of the gunners and their firing mostly solid shot. When skirmishing was kept up till dark.

At daylight on the 3d the Eighth U. S. Colored Troops planted its colors on the works abandoned during the night by the enemy. The rest of the brigade soon followed, and after marching through the town, started the same morning in pursuit of the rebel army, moving on the Cox road to Blacks and Whites, and thence by way of Burkeville to Farmville, where on the 7th the brigade was temporarily attached to General Foster's division of the Twenty-fourth Corps.

On the 8th a forced march of thirty miles was made. Moving before daylight of the 9th, a position was taken on the Lynchburg road, near Appomattox Court-House, up which the command moved at 7 a. m., at which time the artillery and cavalry skirmishers were warmly engaged. These last, with their supports, were speedily driven in and pressed in a panic-stricken mob along my line, through which they vainly tried to break. The rebel infantry followed them so closely that Major-General Sheridan ordered me to stop them. Forming the Eighth and Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops in line, I advanced against the rebel line, which no sooner perceived us than it fell back in disorder, closely followed by my skirmishers, who drove it for half a mile. Soon after I rejoined General Foster's division, which we found advancing on the enemy's right, but negotiations for the surrender of the rebel forces having begun, no more fighting occurred. On the 10th I reported with my command to Bvt. Brig. Gen. R. H. Jackson, commanding this division, and on the 11th commenced the march to our present camp, near which we arrived on the 17th instant.

I have every reason to be satisfied with the conduct of both officers and men, but desire to especially mention Capt. Frank E. Newland, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops, who on two occasions, while in command of the skirmish line, engaged the enemy with skill and success and showed himself a brave officer. My regimental commanders—Col. L. F. Haskell, Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops; Col. and Bvt. Brig. Gen. S. C. Armstrong, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops; Lieut. Col. James Givin, One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops; and Maj. Theo. C. Glazier, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops—by their coolness under fire and good management of their regiments, proved themselves most valuable officers. Lieutenants Morgan, Brooks, Lyon, and Schively, of my staff, conducted themselves at all times most bravely and creditably.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

ULYSSES DOUBLEDAY,

Brevet Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Commanding.

Capt. I. H. EVANS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 255.

Report of Col. Samuel C. Armstrong, Eighth U. S. Colored Troops.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH U. S. COLORED TROOPS,

Near Petersburg, Va., April 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the Eighth U. S. Colored Troops in the late campaign:

The regiment crossed the James River at Varina Landing March 29 [28], 1865; the following day marched to Hatcher's Run, and there encamped before the defenses of Petersburg. On the 31st was ordered as a support to General Turner's provisional division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps. The day after massed for an attack on the defenses of Petersburg. On the morning of the 2d entered the outer line of works, which had been abandoned by the enemy, and marched at once to the interior and principal line protecting the city; massed for an attack on one of the main forts; sent forth Captains Newland and Camp with their companies as skirmishers, who advanced handsomely and close up to the enemy's works, driving their skirmishers, this under a brisk fire of musketry and shells. The order for attack was countermanded. Early on the morning of the 3d the regiment was deployed as skirmishers, with orders to press the enemy's works and ascertain if they were still present and develop their strength. The line advanced just before daylight and found the enemy's works abandoned; took possession of three pieces of artillery and several caissons and wagons left in the works. Captain Camp, Company I, was first to enter the line, immediately followed by Major Pell. The regiment was at once advanced on and into Petersburg, receiving a number of deserters and a most cheering and hearty welcome from the colored inhabitants of the city, whom their presence had made free. Same day (3d) marched to Sutherland's Station, on the Cox road. The day after was train guard. On the 5th, 6th, and 7th made severe marches. Reported to General Foster on the 8th, and made a long and most exhausting march of thirty-five miles. April 9, moved out of camp at 3 a. m., and shortly afterward were ordered to the support of Sheridan's cavalry, which was retreating in disorder and attempting to break through our line. Formed line of battle; arrested the progress of the enemy. Captain Newland at once deployed his company as skirmishers, and assisted in driving back the enemy's skirmishers and line of battle. Soon after marched to another position on the left, where it remained to April 11. On that day marched for Petersburg, arriving at the defenses of the city April 17, 1865.

It is impossible to name any officers as having specially distinguished themselves, all were so zealous and efficient in the discharge of their duties.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

S. C. ARMSTRONG,

Colonel Eighth U. S. Colored Troops.

Lieutenant LYON,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 256.

Report of Col. Jewellyn F. Haskell, Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops.

HEADQUARTERS FORTY-FIRST U. S. COLORED TROOPS,

April 20, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops in the operations resulting in the capture of the rebel Army of Northern Virginia and the return of the regiment to Petersburg:

At dusk on the 27th of March the regiment took its place in the brigade column, and, marching all night, halted at 7.30 a. m. near Birney's Station for several hours on the morning of the 28th, and bivouacked near Hancock's Station at 8 p. m. On the 29th the regiment marched to Humphreys' Station, where it bivouacked at 2 p. m. On the 30th the regiment moved out to the rifle-pits at 7 a. m., and back in a heavy rain. At 3.30 p. m. passed through the rifle-pits and formed line at 4 p. m. at the edge of the woods in our front. At dark moved to the rear of Colonel Woodward's brigade, where 500 men were detailed from the regiment to throw up rifle-pits in our front, from which duty they returned at 1.30 a. m. on the 31st. At daybreak moved back to the first position of yesterday afternoon. It rained hard this morning. From 9.30 a. m. till 12 m. there was brisk skirmishing in our front. The regiment was relieved by the Eighth U. S. Colored Troops at 11 a. m., and moved to the rear, remaining in reserve until 1 p. m., when I moved to the right and commenced a line of rifle-pits at the point where Colonel Fairchild's brigade lay. At 6 p. m. the regiment was relieved by the One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops. The regiment was paid during the night, and returned to the line at 5 a. m. April 1. At 9 a. m. moved to the right near the place I left last night, and cut a road through the slashing to division headquarters, and continued work on the rifle-pits, remaining here all night. On the 2d instant, at 8 a. m., moved to the left, and at 8.30 a. m. entered the enemy's works in our front, which they had just abandoned, then moved to the right inside their works toward Petersburg. At 12.45 p. m. formed in line on the right of the Cox road. At 1.15 p. m. moved to the right, passing the fort captured by the Twenty-fourth Corps, and at 2 p. m. formed line, unslung knapsacks, and prepared to charge Battery No. 45, in our front, and lay here under a shell fire for two hours, when we moved back a little and bivouacked for the night.

On the 3d the men were awakened at 3 a. m., and at 4.30 a. m. followed the Eighth U. S. Colored Troops (which advanced as skirmisliers) toward the fort in our front, and finding their works abandoned by the enemy I entered them, and turning to the right marched into Petersburg, leaving guards to protect all inhabited houses, by order of General Birney. At 6.15 a. m., having passed through the city, halted close to the river. Started again at 7.30 a. m., and, moving out by the Cox road, bivonacked at 7 p. m. eleven miles from Petersburg. On the 4th the regiment started at 4 a. m., marched all day, and just after dark bivonacked near Spain's house. On the 5th the regiment was detailed as train guard, and started just after daylight, reaching Blacks and Whites Station at 2.30 p. m., where we bivonacked for the night. On the 6th, starting at 4.45 a. m., at 8.30 a. m. passed through Nottoway Court-House; at 3 p. m. halted at Burkeville one hour for dinner, then marched toward the front till 8.30 p. m., when we bivonacked not far from the High Bridge. On the 7th the regiment was up at 3.30 a. m.; started for the front at daylight; at 6 a. m. halted on General Turner's left; at 8 a. m. moved forward, and at 8.30 a. m. forded Sandy River; at 10 a. m. crossed another considerable stream, moved to the left in the rain, and stood in it three hours while the other troops were crossing a little stream on logs, and at 5 p. m., after a hard march without dinner, reached Farmville, where we bivonacked for the night. My men were very much fatigued by this day's march.

On the 8th the regiment was up at 2.30 a. m.; at 6.30 a. m. passed through Farmville and joined General Foster's division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps; halted two hours for dinner near Prospect Depot. At 5.30 p. m. passed through Walker's Church, and leaving here marched till 1.30 a. m. on the 9th instant, when we halted for supper till 3 a. m. near Appomattox Court House, when we moved to the front, halting at General Sheridan's headquarters at 5 a. m. for two hours, then moving to the front. We had not marched far before the cavalry, on our right flank (as we marched), were driven in, and the regiment, facing by the rear rank, advanced in line through the strip of wood the cavalry had left, then lay down, and sent A. and one platoon of F Company to the front as skirmishers. They advanced, driving the enemy from the fields in our front, and crossing them, they held the edge of the woods on the further side for an hour, until ordered to rejoin the regiment, when relieved by General Turner's skirmishers. They behaved very handsomely. At 9.30 a. m. moved to the left and formed part of the second line of General Foster's division, and followed the movements of his first line until 11 a. m., when we heard that General Lee had surrendered, and moving a little to the right remained here all night. April 10, remained in camp all this rainy day. On the 11th, starting at 5 a. m., passed through Appomattox Court-House at 6 a. m.; at 6 p. m. bivonacked at Prospect Depot. On the 12th, starting at 7 a. m., at 3 p. m. passed through Farmville in the cadenced step, and bivonacked near the High Bridge at dark. On the 13th, starting at 8 a. m., we bivonacked at 7 p. m. about nine miles from Burkeville. On the 14th, starting at 7.30 a. m., at 11 a. m. passed through Burkeville, and at 6 p. m. bivonacked two miles and a half from the junction. On the 15th, starting at 7 a. m., in a heavy rainstorm, at 1.45 [p. m.] we passed through Nottoway Court-House, and at 4 p. m. bivonacked five miles from this little town. On the 16th, starting at 7.45 a. m., we bivonacked at 6.30 p. m. at Ford's Station. On the 17th Major Cheney and six companies of the regiment were detailed as train guard. Starting with the other four companies at 7.45 a. m., I bivonacked near the signal tower, just inside our old lines, three miles from Petersburg, at 7.30 p. m.

Both officers and men deserve my hearty commendation for their excellent soldierly behavior upon these long and often very fatiguing forced marches, notwithstanding the loss of much sleep and frequently being on short rations, as well as upon the several occasions when the regiment was under fire.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEWELLYN F. HASKELL,
Colonel Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops.

Lieut. JAMES M. LYON,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 257.

Report of Maj. Theodore C. Glazier, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops.

HEADQUARTERS FORTY-FIFTH U. S. COLORED TROOPS,
In the Field, Va., April 18, 1865.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of the Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops during the late campaign, ending April 17, 1865:

On the 25th [27th] of March, 1865, the regiment broke camp near Fort Harrison, Va., and marched to a position southwest of Petersburg. On April 3, at 5 a. m., it entered Petersburg, having been shelled slightly by the enemy on the previous day, with a loss of but four wounded, one seriously. The march was resumed the day following and continued until the 9th, when Lee surrendered. Nothing of interest occurred on the return march.

The officers and men, with but one exception in the former grade, behaved as well during the march to and from the place of surrender as could reasonably be expected under the circumstances.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
THEO. C. GLAZIER,
Major, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. JAMES M. LYON,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

No. 258.

Report of Lieut. Col. James Givin, One hundred and twenty-seventh U. S. Colored Troops.

HEADQUARTERS 127TH U. S. COLORED TROOPS,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 22, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken by the One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment U. S. Colored Troops in the recent active campaign:

On the afternoon of Wednesday, March 29, 1865, the regiment was for the first time drawn up in line of battle, with a prospect of engaging the enemy on the west side of Hatcher's Run, and in support of Foster's division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps. Skirmishing continued throughout the night, but the regiment was not engaged. At night a detail of 500 men was engaged in throwing up breast-works. At daylight again formed line, and at 9.30 a. m. 30th was relieved by the Forty-fifth U. S. Colored Troops and ordered to the rear to rest, but before reaching camp was ordered, with the Forty-first U. S. Colored Troops, to the right to relieve Colonel Fairchild's brigade, Twenty-fourth Corps. Here threw up another line of works, connecting with the line thrown up the night previous and perpendicular to the old line of the Army of the Potomac. At night slept on arms, and on the 31st resumed strengthening line of works. April 1, remained in same position. April 2, entered rebel works, moved up to Battery 45, and formed for charge on right of brigade with one "group of fours" from each company advanced as skirmishers. In this position the regiment sustained a severe fire, but owing to inaccuracy of the rebel marksmen only three men were wounded, none killed. The position of the regiment being considered by the brigadier-general commanding division (on personal inspection) too much exposed, he ordered me to place it in a safer position, when I advanced about 100 yards to the foot of a hill. After remaining in this position for some time the brigade was withdrawn.

At daylight on the 3d moved with the division through the enemy's works at Battery 45 and entered Petersburg, thence out the Cox road to the intersection of the South Side Railroad. April 4, marched to Wilson's Station; April 5, to Blacks and Whites; April 6, to Rice's Station. April 7, by a circuitous route entered Farmville. April 8, marched day and night, and at daylight arrived in front of the rebel army near Appomattox Court-House. April 9, was ordered to guard the ammunition train of the Twenty-fourth Corps (to which at that time the brigade was attached); convoyed it close to the skirmish line until the enemy surrendered.

During this very severe march regimental commanders had a fine opportunity of judging of both officers and men. The majority of the officers of this regiment proved themselves worthy of the trust reposed in them. The services of Capt. E. N. Willard, who acted as major, were invaluable; although sick he did not leave his post until after the surrender. Captains Tinkham and Stanfield, Lieutenants Markley, Harding, and Stewart deserve special mention. The men, though short of rations and almost worn out with fatigue, moved on without a murmur as long as there was an enemy to follow, and proved themselves to be a body of men upon whom the Government can safely rely in her hour of peril.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES GIVIN,

Lieut. Col. 127th U. S. Colored Troops, Commanding Regiment.

Lieut. JAMES M. LYON, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 259.

Report of Col. William W. Woodward, One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, commanding Third Brigade.

HQRS. THIRD BRIG., SECOND DIV., 25TH ARMY CORPS,
Near Petersburg, Va., April 27, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report the operations of my command from the date of moving from the north bank of the James River.

In accordance with instructions from Second Division headquarters, the Twenty-ninth and Thirty-first U. S. Colored Troops were in line in readiness to march at sunset the 27th of March, 1865. The Tenth and Twenty-eighth U. S. Colored Troops, with the two first-mentioned regiments, composed the Third Brigade, the two latter regiments remaining on the old line on the north bank. At precisely sunset I marched with my command—the Twenty-ninth and Thirty-first U. S. Colored Troops—to Varina Landing, there forming a junction with the balance of the division, continuing the march throughout the night. The morning found us in the vicinity of the defenses around Petersburg. The moving of troops and the activity of the entire army convinced me at once that we were to take a part in what resulted in the last great struggle for the overthrow of Lee's army. Resting six hours, we continued our march toward the left of our line till late on the 28th ultimo, when we halted near Robertson's. The 29th and 30th we still continued moving toward the left of our lines, and finally halted and took position beyond Hatcher's Run, deployed and connecting with General Foster's division, Twenty-fourth Corps, on his right, and Colonel Dandy's brigade on his left. I at once ordered a strong skirmish line to connect with Foster and Dandy. The enemy's line retreated after a few shots, and the line was established. Under the direction of an engineer a line of works was at once constructed so as to connect the important points, thickly wooded, the clearing being very much exposed to the shells from the guns of the enemy. In this position the troops rested for the night without interruption, except the picket-firing, which was kept up throughout the night.

The morning of the 31st ultimo the enemy's skirmish line advanced a few rods, seemingly intent on regaining the lost ground in my front. I immediately ordered the Twenty-ninth Regiment, Colonel Royce commanding, forward, deployed to support the line and drive the enemy back. This regiment moved forward handsomely and took the position ordered, but the skirmish line maintained their position. The entire day was occupied in keeping the enemy in their main works, which was done principally by the skirmish line and sharpshooters, under the command of Captain Porter, of the Twenty-ninth Regiment. His line advanced to within a few feet of the enemy's abatis, and kept up such an accurate fire that they dare not show their heads on their line. At night-fall my command was relieved by the First Brigade, Second Division. I retired under cover and encamped for the night.

On the afternoon of the 1st of April was ordered back on the old line to relieve a brigade of the Sixth Corps. On the morning of the 2d instant, at 4 o'clock, was ordered forward in haste, as the enemy was evacuating; moved on speedily as possible through the enemy's main line; advanced and took position near Fort Gregg, supporting a battery by the Thirty-first Regiment, Colonel Ward commanding. This regiment, although exposed to the enemy's fire of solid shot, took their position with the greatest coolness. The enemy's guns in the immediate vicinity of Fort Gregg being silenced, the battery advanced without support and the Thirty-first retiring to former position. At 3 o'clock moved to the right around Fort Gregg, and took position near Budd's residence. At this point the One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, Lieutenant Colonel Laird commanding, belonging First Brigade, reported to me. I assigned him to position on my left connecting with General Turner's command. My line was ordered to get a more favorable position. The skirmish line advanced, without any resistance the enemy's line retired to their main works. At this point I connected with Colonel Doubleday, commanding Second Brigade, on his right, and was exposed to a shell fire from Battery 45. Was preparing to advance upon the enemy's works at 6.30, when the order was countermanded. The troops rested for the night, except the party detailed to construct a new line.

April 3, at 4 a. m. were again in motion, advancing toward Battery 45; passed through their line, the skirmish line of the enemy retiring in my front without firing a shot. The head of my column arriving in Petersburg at 5.10 a. m., I was ordered forward immediately in pursuit of Lee; moved on the Cox road; continued the march uninterrupted (except the fatigue and hunger incident to marches of such a character). This a. m. the One hundred and sixteenth U. S. Colored Troops, Colonel Laird commanding, was ordered to report to First Brigade.

April 4, at Wilson's the One hundred and sixteenth again ordered to report to me. The 5th, 6th, and 7th, with long and fatiguing marches, bring us to Farnville. At this point I was ordered, with my command, to report to Brevet Major-General Turner, commanding Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps. The march of the 8th instant brings us near Appomattox Court-House; encamped near South Side Railroad. Early a. m. of the 9th instant in motion, moving toward Appomattox Court-House; arriving near that place my command was ordered on the left of General Foster's division, to connect with his right. A staff officer of General Gibbon informed me the enemy were massing on our left, evidently intending to flank us. The double-quick was ordered, the troops advancing splendidly, but was soon checked by General Custer's division of cavalry crossing the road parallel to me. As soon as possible moved to position, deployed, and advanced in line—One hundred and sixteenth on the right, Thirty first the left, and Twenty-ninth the center. The line advanced in splendid order, driving the enemy's line of skirmishers back to their main line. Their right gave way as we advanced. Their whole [line] receded into a dense woods in their rear, which was soon evacuated by them. We had advanced one mile. Orders were received that a flag of truce was received asking a suspension of hostilities. The terms having been agreed upon went into camp near the court-house. April 10, was ordered to report to Brevet Brigadier-General Jackson, who had been assigned to command Second Division. April 11, was ordered to move back to Petersburg; arrived there the 17th instant.

During this short but very successful campaign the troops endured the privations, fatigue, and hunger with a commendable spirit.

The casualties of the command are 6 killed, 9 wounded. Although very often exposed to the enemy's fire, their practice was generally inaccurate and only occasionally any harm was the result.

I beg leave to call the attention of the general commanding to the promptness and efficiency of the regimental commanders in executing my orders at a time valor and courage must have been required, and, with few exceptions, the unwearied labor and zeal of all the officers of the command. I also desire to bear testimony to the promptness and skill of the officers of my staff in their untiring labors to promote the interest of the command, and in conveying orders with accuracy and haste when and where required; also to the good conduct generally of the enlisted men of the command, during a period of severe marching, and reduction of rations, amounting to almost absolute destitution.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. W. WOODWARD,

Colonel 116th U. S. Colored Troops, Commanding Brigade.

Capt. I. H. EVANS,

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Second Division.

No. 260.

Report of Brig. Gen. Ranald S. Mackenzie, U. S. Army, commanding Cavalry Division.

HDQRS. CAVALRY BRIGADE, ARMY OF THE JAMES,
Near Richmond, Va., May 8, 1865.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command during the late campaign:

The command left camp near New Market road on the 28th of March, and was composed as follows: The First Brigade, under the command of Col. R. M. West, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, consisted of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry and Company G, Twentieth New York Cavalry; the Second Brigade, under the command of Col. S. P. Spear, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, [consisted of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, First Maryland Cavalry, and Battalion First District of Columbia Cavalry. The remaining companies of the Twentieth New York Cavalry and the dismounted men of the whole command were left in camp, all under the orders of Lieut. Col. D. M. Evans, Twentieth New York Cavalry, who was ordered to report to Maj. Gen. Godfrey Weitzel, commanding forces. The command which started in the campaign numbered 54 officers and 1,629 enlisted men. The march was continued till early on the morning of the 29th, when the command bivouacked near Varina Station, on the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad; and moving again about 8 a. m. continued the march to the vicinity of Humphreys' Station, where the command went into camp, but was ordered the same evening to proceed to the crossing of the Rowanty, in the vicinity of Reams' Station, and guard the trains of the Army of the Potomac assembled there. The command remained on this duty till the 1st of April, when orders were received from Lieutenant-General Grant, through Major-General Ord, to proceed at once to Dinwiddie Court-House and report to Major-General Sheridan. The command moved about 3.30 a. m. and reported as ordered. I was directed to move by a cross-road to the White Oak Swamp road, at a point about three miles to the right of Five Forks, to take possession of the White Oak road. This was done after a sharp skirmish, in which two companies of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry made a very handsome charge, dislodging the enemy, much superior in numbers to the charging party, from breast-works. Three valuable officers were lost in this charge—Major Monroe, Captain Lancaster, and Lieutenant Mathews; Col. S. P. Spear, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, commanding Second Brigade, was also wounded about the same time. The enemy were dispersed, and shortly afterward the command, with the exception of a battalion of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry which was left to picket the right flank, was moved down the White Oak road in the direction of Five Forks. The First Maryland Cavalry, in advance, was just about charging down the road, when the infantry of the Fifth Corps made their appearance and instructions were received from General Sheridan to move on their right flank. The command was moved rapidly on the right of this infantry, and soon reached the right and rear of the enemy's line, the enemy giving way without much resistance. A large number of prisoners were captured and turned over to the infantry. Captain Rich's squadron of the First Maryland Cavalry were in the advance and charged handsomely through thick woods, mounted. The Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry also charged mounted, and behaved very well. We went into camp for the night on the battle-field.

Moved the next morning to Gravelly Ford, on Hatcher's Run, and after skirmishing with the enemy, strongly posted on the opposite bank, were ordered to proceed to Ford's Station; crossed Hatcher's Run and moved in the direction of the Namozine road, reporting to General Merritt; went into camp for the night near the Namozine road.

On the 3d instant the command moved to the Appomattox, at two points—the lower at Leonard's Mills, the other three miles higher up the stream—picking up about 300 prisoners and taking 4 guns, the guns and most of the prisoners being captured by Major Baker's command of the First District of Columbia Cavalry. Here a battalion of the First Maryland Cavalry, under the command of Major Von Koerber, were temporarily detached as the escort of General Sheridan. This command took a number of prisoners while so detached. The command after reaching Leonard's Mills retraced its steps to the Namozine road and moved to the vicinity of Deep Creek.

On the 4th of April the division moved in advance, crossing Deep Creek. After a sharp skirmish, in which the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry and the First District of Columbia Cavalry were principally engaged, reached Five Forks, about a mile from Amelia Court-House, near which point, after a sharp skirmish, the First Maryland Cavalry having the advance and taking the most active part, we went into camp. I received information from many and different sources that the main body of General Lee's army was at this time at or in the immediate vicinity of Amelia Court-House, and during the night received orders from General Sheridan to remain where I was, to be watchful and demonstrate, but not push the enemy. This was done to the best of my ability. On the 5th and during the afternoon I made a demonstration with Colonel Evans' brigade, which caused the enemy to attack with a strong force of infantry, but without their inflicting any damage beyond the loss of a few men.

I have reason to believe that the enemy were considerably delayed in their movements by our skirmishing at Amelia Court-House, and during our skirmishing they there destroyed a large amount of ammunition and other ordnance property, caissons, limbers, &c.

On the 6th, 7th, and 8th the command moved by rapid marches through Jetersville, Burkeville, and Prince Edward Court-House to Appomattox Station. At Prince Edward Court-House the advance had a slight skirmish and took some thirty prisoners. The advance consisted of the First District of Columbia Cavalry and a part of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

On the morning of the 9th the command, now consolidated into one brigade, was moved to the left of General Crook's division at a point about one mile and a half from Appomattox Court-House and immediately on the road to Lynchburg. The command was during this time properly reporting to Major-General Ord, I having, in compliance with orders, reported to him on the 6th instant, but as many miles intervened usually between this command and the other troops of the Army of the James, I acted generally under orders of Major-General Sheridan, and on this occasion, by his direction, under those of Major-General Crook. By his directions I sent the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry some distance to the left of the road to guard the left flank. Soon afterward the enemy attacked. I was ordered by General Crook, through one of his staff, to withdraw slowly when it became necessary, as it would be, he stated, very soon. The enemy had for some time been moving a column of cavalry to our left and rear, while he attacked with infantry in front. There would have been no trouble in repulsing the enemy from our immediate front, but the attack came so soon after our arrival that the connection which I had commenced establishing between my right and General Crook's left could not be made. The Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, the First District of Columbia Cavalry, and the First Maryland Cavalry were dismounted and formed in line across the road, and after some sharp firing were slowly withdrawn down the road. A section of Battery M, First U. S. Artillery, which had been doing excellent service, was sent to the rear. Colonel Evans was directed previous to the withdrawal of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry to take his men down the road, mount them as soon as possible and return. Some unauthorized person, however, moved the colonel's horses such a long distance to the rear that he was much delayed in remounting his men, and the same mentioned individual sent Lieutenant Olecott, with one piece of his section, down a road to the left as we fell back, where this piece was captured by the enemy, who, finding a line on the road which they could not readily break, pushed round the flanks and came upon this gun in a narrow road in the woods, several hundred yards in rear of the line, but to the left retiring. The other piece of this section was never captured. About this time the Twenty-fourth Corps arrived, and the command was extricated from a very dangerous position.

In conclusion, with reference to this skirmish I will state that I withdrew much more slowly before a very much superior force of the enemy than I otherwise should have done, from my knowledge that it was very important that the road should be held till our infantry arrived, which I knew must happen early in the day.

Immediately after the arrival of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps I was directed to move my command down the road from Appomattox Court-House to Lynchburg, in the direction of Lynchburg, to assist General Davies, who was at that time strongly pressed by the cavalry referred to as having passed round my left flank. After some skirmishing, and when we were about to attack the enemy, news was brought of the suspension of hostilities. We remained in the vicinity of Appomattox Court-House until the 12th of April.

On the evening of the 10th Lieutenant Fitzpatrick, with eight enlisted men of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, was sent to Lynchburg. On the 11th he returned, bringing with him a delegation of citizens to see about the surrender of the place. When he entered the place there were about 3,500 rebels there; quite a number of company organizations. On the 14th of April the command moved to Lynchburg, when the place was formally surrendered to this command. There was there a large amount of military stores, which fell into the hands of this command, and was turned over by Lieutenant-Colonel Stratton, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to Lieutenant-Colonel Potter, Thirty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers of General Turner's division, when the infantry arrived on the following day. Among the material were 56 field pieces, 6 heavy guns, 40 mortars, 75 caissons, 15,000 muskets, and a large quantity of ammunition, commissary and quartermaster stores.

While the command was at Lynchburg a squadron of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, under Captain Elliott (temporarily detached), secured 30 prisoners, 1 battle-flag, and 36 gun carriages and caissons in the vicinity of Red Oak Church. Leaving Lynchburg on the 16th the command moved, via Burkeville and Goode's Bridge, to Richmond, where it arrived on the 24th of April.

In conclusion I cannot speak too highly of the good conduct of the officers and enlisted men of the command during the entire campaign. I desire to call the attention of the department commander particularly to the names of Col. A. W. Evans, commanding the First Maryland Cavalry; Maj. J. Stannard Baker, commanding First District of Columbia Cavalry; Lieut. Col. Franklin A. Stratton, commanding Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry—all zealous, capable, and brave officers. I also take this opportunity of stating that, as far as I have been able to ascertain, no blame should be attached to Lieut. E. W. Olcott, Battery M, First U. S. Artillery, for the loss of the piece belonging to his section. He behaved very handsomely while in action, and his piece was, as before stated, lost by his being directed on a wrong road. I have before taken occasion to call the attention of the department commander to the services of Col. Robert M. West, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

I inclose a list of officers who, in my opinion, deserve promotion by brevet. Full list of casualties has already been forwarded.*

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
RALPH S. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers.

Bvt. Col. ED. W. SMITH.

(Inclosure.)

HDQRS. CAVALRY BRIGADE, ARMY OF THE JAMES,
Near Richmond, Va., May 7, 1865.

Bvt. Col. E. W. SMITH,
Assistant Adjutant-General:

COLONEL: I have the honor to forward the names of the following officers, belonging to this command, for whom I request promotion by brevet for services rendered during the past campaign: Maj. James M. McFarlan, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet lieutenant-colonel for gallant conduct at Amelia Court-House April 4, 1865. Capt. Ephraim P. Ring, Company A, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battle of Five Forks, Va., April 1, 1865. Capt. John S. Nimmon, Company D, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battle of Five Forks, Va., April 1, 1865. Second Lieut. Alexander Skilton, Company G, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet first lieutenant for gallant conduct at Five Forks, Va., April 1, 1865. Capt. H. W. Paul, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet major for gallant and meritorious conduct at Gravelly Ford, Va., April 2, 1865, and at Amelia Court-House, Va., April 5, 1865. First Lieut. P. Byron Stokes, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet captain for personal gallantry and meritorious conduct April 1, 1865, during the engagement for possession of the South Side Railroad. Second Lieut. Terrence Fitzpatrick, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, to be brevet first lieutenant and brevet captain for personal gallantry in the engagement near Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 9, 1865, and for bravery and good judgment displayed by him while commanding a scouting party of eight men of his regiment in penetrating the enemy's country from Appomattox Court-House, Va., as far as Lynchburg, Va., and receiving from the inhabitants of that town a tender of submission to the national authority April 10 and 11, 1865.

* Embodied in table, p. 597.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RANALD S. MACKENZIE,

Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding Brigade.

Additional: I have already recommended for promotion Col. Robert M. West, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry. If full promotion cannot be given him, I earnestly request that he may receive the brevet rank of brigadier-general, to date from April 1, 1865, for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battle of Five Forks, Va.

No. 261.

Report of Col. Robert M. West, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, First Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,

Near Richmond, Va., April 29, 1865.

SIR: I respectfully submit herewith a brief synopsis of the operations of this regiment during the late campaign.

Left camp near New Market Heights, Va., at dusk on the evening of March 28, 1865, crossing the Appomattox and James Rivers; arrived in camp late at night near Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad; strength, 21 officers and 545 enlisted men. At this camp Company G, Twentieth New York Cavalry, reported to me, having come up during the night from New Market Heights; strength of company, fifty-three aggregate. March 29, at 8 o'clock, marched to the left of the Petersburg lines, and encamped within those lines. Evening of same day resumed march and moved to a position in rear of the army, and near Reams' Station, on the Weldon railroad, where we bivouacked and remained doing picket duty until April 1. Left camp at 4 a. m. and marched to General Sheridan's command, near Dinwiddie Court-House. Took up position in support of a battery there; remained about one hour; resumed march, struck the enemy on White Oak road in about three hours; dismounted and had some skirmishing, capturing two prisoners. The Fifth Corps coming up, the regiment was mounted and taken into action on the right of our infantry, striking the enemy's left and rear. The regiment charged mounted (Company G, Twentieth New York Cavalry, participating) through the woods. The enemy gave way, threw down their arms, and fled. We captured many prisoners. Camped for the night on the battle-ground.

April 2, remained in vicinity of yesterday's fight, guarding Gravelly Ford, and skirmishing heavily with the enemy until noon, when march was resumed. Crossed South Side Railroad at Sutherland's Station; joined General Merritt's command; turned to the right; marched toward Petersburg until about 10 p. m., and encamped. April 3, marched at daylight; reached the Appomattox River, at Leonard's Mills, at about 10 a. m., in search of stragglers from the rebel forces driven from South Side Railroad; picked up eight; turned about and marched in direction of Amelia Court-House; encamped at about 9 p. m. April 4, resumed march at daylight; reached Deep Creek about 8 a. m.; found a force of the enemy's cavalry on the opposite side. There dismounted to fight; enemy disappeared. Crossed Deep Creek and continued in direction of Amelia Court-House; found the enemy strongly posted within one mile of that place; skirmished sharply with them; bivouacked for the night. April 5, remained engaging the enemy's attention at Amelia Court-House, reconnoitering and skirmishing sharply. April 6, marched at daylight to Jetersville, arriving about 9 a. m.; moved out a short distance, following General Sheridan's cavalry, then turned back and marched to Burkeville Junction, arriving at about 4 p. m.; bivouacked near that point for the night. April 7, marched at 4 a. m. for Prince Edward Court-House, arriving about noon. Guarded the roads there and skirmished slightly with the enemy for about two hours. Resumed march, reaching Buffalo Creek at about 5 p. m.; bivouacked for the night. Company G, Twentieth New York Cavalry, was here detached from my command. April 8, crossed Buffalo Creek at 4 a. m., and marched toward Appomattox Court-House, via Prospect and Pamplin's Stations, on Lynchburg railroad; passed and bivouacked beyond Appomattox Station. April 9, marched at sunrise toward Appomattox Court-House. In one hour came up with Sheridan's cavalry, heavily engaged with the enemy. Went in on the left; were repulsed and retired, meeting the Twenty-fourth Corps coming up. Went in on our left and rear, under General Davies; continued skirmishing heavily with the enemy until a truce was sounded between the two armies. Remained bivouacked on the battle-ground until April 12.

April 10, Lieutenant Fitzpatrick with eight enlisted men were detached. April 11, Lieutenant Fitzpatrick and party returned, reporting that they had been to Lynchburg, and that the civil authorities proposed to surrender the place.

April 12, marched to Lynchburg, which was occupied without opposition. Remained at Lynchburg until April 16. Commenced the return from Lynchburg; bivouacked at Appomattox Station that night. April 17, bivouacked at Prospect Station. April 18, bivouacked near Farmville. April 19, 20, and 21, bivouacked near Burkeville Junction. April 22, bivouacked at crossing of Appomattox River. April 23, bivouacked fifteen miles from Richmond. April 24, entered Richmond, and encamped on Mechanicsville turnpike, near Chickahominy River.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROB. M. WEST,

Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Maj. AUGUSTUS H. FENN,

Actg. Asst. Adjt. Gen., Cavalry Brigade, Army of the James.

No. 262.

*Report of Maj. J. Stannard Baker, First District of Columbia Cavalry,
Second Brigade.*

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CAVALRY,
Camp near Richmond, Va., April 26, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this command from March 28 to April 24, 1865, as follows:

March 28, left camp on north side of James and moved to the south side of the Appomattox, in the direction of Hancock's Station, encamping near Reams' Station. Moved camp on the morning of the 31st of April at 3 o'clock as rear guard, with four days' rations and two days' forage, marching in the direction of Dinwiddie Court-House. Meeting the enemy beyond that place we went into action, charging on the right as the infantry moved forward, capturing a large number of prisoners. April 2, engaged the enemy at Rowanty Creek, driving them; had one man wounded severely and one slightly, one horse lost from shot wound. April 3, went into action near Appomattox River, capturing four pieces of artillery, without resistance, and a large number of prisoners. April 4, engaged the enemy's cavalry near Appomattox River, skirmishing on the flank and rear of the column during the day, and at Amelia Court-House had a sharp action with the enemy. Casualties of the day, 1 Lieutenant (Lieutenant Clark) wounded and 1 horse killed. April 5, moved down the Danville railroad, skirmishing with the enemy's pickets and driving them, camping near Amelia Court-House. April 6, moved to Burkeville Junction without meeting the enemy and encamped at that place at night. April 7, moved in the direction of Prince Edward Court-House, driving the enemy's pickets on the way, charging them and the stragglers to the Court-House, capturing thirty-eight prisoners, with casualties. April 8, marched from near Prince Edward Court-House to the neighborhood of Appomattox Court-House without an engagement and went into camp. April 9, moved out from camp about daylight, engaging the enemy's pickets about 7 a. m., holding them until ordered to form a new line to the rear of our position, being heavily pressed by rapidly increasing numbers of the enemy, skirmishing all the time with unknown numbers until about noon, when orders to cease firing were received. Flag of truce and surrender of Lee announced. Went into camp near the field of final action. April 10, on picket duty near Appomattox Court-House. April 11, remained in camp; party out foraging in charge of Lieutenant Betts obtained a fair supply without trouble. April 12, took the line of march for Lynchburg, as advanced guard, at 5 a. m., and arrived at that city about noon; the entire command placed on duty guarding public property and as patrols and street guards. April 13, command relieved from duty by infantry of the Twenty-fourth Army Corps about 2 p. m., and moved to north side of the James and encamped about one mile from the city. April 14 and 15, remained in camp. April 16, moved off at 8 a. m. as rear guard of the brigade; took the line of march in the direction of Appomattox Court-House; arrived at the former camp-ground and then went into camp for the night near Appomattox Court-House. April 17, took the line of march at 11 a. m. en route on the Farmville road, and arrived at Prospect Station about 11 p. m.; received two days' rations and one day's forage. April 18, moved from camp at 12 m.; a squad of men, in charge of Lieutenant Betts, sent out on foraging duty; arrived at Farmville in the evening about 4 o'clock; received five days' rations and two days' forage; resumed march and camped four miles from Farmville for the night. April 19, moved from camp as advance guard in the direction of Burkeville Junction about 11 a. m., arriving at the camp-ground, four miles from Burkeville, on the Richmond road, at about 7 p. m. April 20 and 21, remained in camp. April 22, took line of march in the direction of Richmond, Va., at 5 a. m.; camped that night near Goode's Bridge, on the Appomattox River. April 23, moved out from camp, marching in the direction of Richmond about sixteen miles and camped for the night. April 24, moved at 5 a. m., arriving at Richmond about 1 p. m., passing through the city; camped on this ground between 2 and 3 p. m.

I have pleasure in stating that our loss in men and property is light, considering the amount and character of duties performed during the period embraced in this report, being for several successive days almost continuously engaged in conflict with the enemy, our loss being only 1 officer severely wounded, 1 man severely wounded and 1 slightly, with 2 horses killed.

It is almost impossible to accurately locate by name the numerous places in which the command was brought into action, nor yet the exact time, as we have been many hours at a time engaging the enemy without the means of knowing the hour commencing or ending the engagement.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. STANNARD BAKER,

Major, Commanding First District of Columbia Cavalry and Detachment of Twentieth New York Cavalry.

Maj. A. H. FENN,

Acolg. Asst. Adj. Gen., Cavalry Brigade, Army of the James.

No. 263.

Report of Col. Andrew W. Evans, First Maryland Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MARYLAND CAVALRY,
CAVALRY BRIGADE, ARMY OF THE JAMES,
Camp near Richmond, Va., April 29, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the First Maryland Cavalry in the recent campaign in Virginia:

The regiment, forming then a part of the Second Brigade, Cavalry Division, under Colonel Spear, left camp near New Market road on the evening of March 28, and bivouacked early the next morning at Hancock's Station, in front of Petersburg. The march was continued to a point on the old stage road from Petersburg to Dinwiddie Court-House near Arthur's Swamp, where it remained until the morning of April 1, when the regiment, with the rest of the division, was moved to the front, and was in position on the extreme right of General Sheridan's forces at the battle of Five Forks (Dinwiddie). In connection with this affair might be mentioned the very prompt and energetic conduct of Capt. Henry C. Erich in pushing the flying enemy and picking up prisoners, acting under the immediate orders of the brigadier-general commanding.

Upon the 2d instant the regiment marched across the South Side Railroad, and upon the 3d secured a number of prisoners near the Appomattox River. On this day the squadrons of Captains Erich and Fowler, forming half the regiment, under Major Von Koerber, were detached, and, until the 6th, when they rejoined us at Burkeville, formed the escort of Major-General Sheridan. While thus acting a very gallant charge was made by Captains Erich and Fowler into Jetersville, capturing a number of prisoners.

On the 4th of April the remainder of the regiment, having the advance of the division, moved to Five Forks, Amelia County, then held by the enemy. Captain Hancock, with Lieutenant Good, had the advance guard and immediately charged and drove from that position a superior force of the rebel cavalry. Captain Hancock divided his command in making this charge, taking himself one road and Lieutenant Good another. The latter was recharged by the enemy and lost one or two men. The remainder of the regiment (being, in fact, but one squadron), with the Eleventh Pennsylvania and First District of Columbia Cavalry, was in the act of forming in a field about a mile in rear when orders were received to charge immediately to meet a supposed attack of the enemy upon our left flank. This charge, from the nature of the ground and obstacles (fences and wood), as well as from the hurry which was insisted upon, was almost necessarily one "as foragers." No enemy was met and the regiment was reformed at the Forks. This position was held in part by the First Maryland Cavalry against the infantry skirmishers of the enemy, with some loss, until relieved in the evening by the First Brigade. There is reason to believe that the main body of Lee's army was then in or near Amelia Court-House, only a mile and a half distant; that they were considerably flurried by this demonstration upon our part, and that they, in consequence, destroyed a large quantity of their ordnance.

The Second Brigade spent the night of the 4th in bivouac at the junction of the Dennisville road with the road from Deep Creek to Amelia Court-House and with the road from Avery's Church to Jetersville, and by the latter, on the afternoon of the 5th, it was moved to demonstrate upon the Richmond and Danville Railroad. The road was struck at a point about three miles west of Amelia Court-House, where it passed near the top of a hill, having upon this side a slope, nearly clear, with a running stream, crossed by two bridges, at the foot, and on the farther and upper side a rather dense growth of oak and chestnut timber. Only a small squad of the enemy was first observed, who disappeared into the wood, and a few men running a hand-car upon the railroad. The First Maryland Cavalry was in our advance, and a line of skirmishers, dismounted, from the squadron of Captain Hiteshaw, under the superintendence of Lieutenant-Colonel Counsellman, went up to and occupied a point on the road without opposition. Captain Hancock's squadron, further to the left and mounted, was subsequently moved to their support. Without adverting to the movements of other regiments of the brigade, it will be sufficient to observe that the enemy suddenly advanced from the wood across the road against Lieutenant-Colonel Counsellman's line with a large body of infantry (at least, a brigade) in mass, with a strong skirmish line in front. I had myself been charged with the superintendence of the whole affair upon our part, but was in effect relieved by the brigadier-general commanding, who gave orders direct to the regimental commanders, in two instances, at least, countermanding my own. This is not now mentioned by way of complaint, but as explanatory of my share in the day's work. The two squadrons of the First Maryland Cavalry were unsupported, and the force of the enemy (believed to have been Pickett's division) was far superior to our whole brigade. Finding my skirmish line retiring before them, and hearing that First Sergeant Castle and one or two other men of Captain Hiteshaw's squadron had been left near the railroad unsupported, I directed that officer to dismount and send forward a platoon of their relief, which was done. Early in this affair Lieutenant Campbell, with a platoon of Company E, dismounted, had been posted to hold a bridge over the stream, then supposed to be the only one. He was subsequently moved over to the support of the skirmish line by Lieutenant-Colonel Counsellman, who speaks in high terms of his spirited conduct and that of his men, particularly of First Sergeant Brandt, who was captured. This was before anything more than the skirmish line of the enemy could be observed. As this platoon itself became hotly engaged immediately, I directed Captain Hancock's whole squadron to be dismounted and sent up to their support, which order was, however, countermanded by the brigadier-general commanding. Captain Hiteshew, with a part of his command, finally came off safely, but Sergeant Castle was taken prisoner, and several other men were lost. The appearance and advance of the enemy in force pushed back the whole brigade, which terminated the engagement.

On the 6th, 7th, and 8th the regiment, with the rest of the division (now consolidated into a brigade), moved by long and rapid marches through Jetersville, Burkeville Junction, and Prince Edward Court-House to a position near Clover Hill, in Appomattox County, where, on the morning of the 9th, it became engaged with the enemy upon the left of General Crook's cavalry division. The whole regiment, dismounted, and leaving the horses in a wood, had position directly upon the south side of the high road leading from Appomattox Court-House to Lynchburg, about a mile and a half distant from the former place, which was held by the enemy and which we faced. After a short time of fighting it was ordered to remount. At about the same moment the enemy, with a view of developing our infantry, charged upon the whole front and upon both flanks of our line, and the cavalry was compelled to retire. Unfortunately all the horses of my regiment were found to have been moved without authority; they were only discovered after much search, scattered over the fields south of the road and some were even taken several miles distant. I succeeded in collecting and mounting a portion of the regiment, and led it through a very dense growth of small wood which intervened between the Lynchburg road and the place where the horses were found. A narrow wood road afforded a passage through a portion of this thicket, which necessarily lengthened the column very much. The rear of it thus became involved with the enemy and several men were cut off, while it was impossible for the advance to participate. The regiment was, as quickly as practicable, formed in an adjoining field, which the enemy did not come near, and the approach of the infantry of the Twenty-fourth Corps at this moment checked their farther advance. No other movements of the regiment occurred of sufficient importance to be recorded, and the surrender of Lee's army upon this day may, I presume, be considered as the close of the active campaign.

I feel obliged to speak in great praise of the able services of Lieutenant Colonel Counselman, and, in fact, of all the officers of the regiment, who, with their respective commands, did themselves great credit throughout the campaign.

The regiment took the field upon March 28 with 13 officers and 347 enlisted men.

Losses were as follows: April 1, Five Forks (Dinwiddie), 2 enlisted men wounded, 1 prisoner; April 3, Burgess' Mill, 1 enlisted man wounded (by guerrillas); April 4, Five Forks (Amelia), 1 enlisted man killed, 1 enlisted man mortally wounded; April 5, Danville road, 2 enlisted men wounded (1 mortally), 14 prisoners; April 5 [9], Clover Hill, 1 enlisted man killed, 1 officer and 9 enlisted men wounded, 5 enlisted men prisoners.

Summary: Killed and mortally wounded (since died), 4 enlisted men; wounded, 1 officer and 14 enlisted men; missing (prisoners), 19 enlisted men

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. EVANS,

Colonel First Maryland Cavalry.

ACTING ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL,

Headquarters Cavalry Brigade, Army of the James.

Various narrow escapes (though of trifling importance) may be mentioned as showing something of the nature of some of the engagements. Captains Erieh, Philapy, and Hiteshew, at Clover Hill, on the 9th, were at close quarters with the enemy. The acting adjutant, Lieutenant Lockett, there received a ball through the hat, and Second Lieutenant McCullough was knocked down by a rail thrown by an exploding shell. Lieutenant Farrington was wounded in this affair severely. Near the Danville railroad, on the 5th, Acting Second Lieutenant Gibson had his horse shot under him.

All, or nearly all, the prisoners captured from us were recovered by the surrender of Lee's army. No correct record of prisoners taken from the enemy could be kept, as nearly all were immediately turned over. Between 65 and 70 are known to have been turned over by Major Von Koerber's command while detached.

A. W. EVANS,
Colonel First Maryland Cavalry.

---

No. 264.

Report of Lieut. Col. Franklin A. Stratton, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS ELEVENTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
Near Richmond, Va., April 29, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of operations of this regiment during the late campaign:

Breaking up the winter's camp on the north side of the James on the evening of the 28th of March, the command during the night crossing the James at Varina and the Appomattox at Point of Rocks, moved to the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad, in the rear of the lines of the Army of the Potomac. The following day the regiment proceeded to Reams' Station, at which point it remained, with the division, until 3 o'clock on the morning of the 1st of April, when the march was resumed. The command proceeded to Dinwiddie Court-House and from there took the road leading into the White Oak road, the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry having the advance. At 1 p. m., about half a mile from the White Oak road, we struck the enemy's pickets, and pushing on soon developed a considerable force strongly posted in rifle-pits in the edge of a wood along the road named, with an open field in their front. Major McFarlan, commanding the advance battalion, deployed Captain Menzies' squadron (Companies G and H) on the right and left of the road, mounted, and Captain Elliott's squadron (Companies F and B) farther to the right and left, in the woods, dismounted. The remaining six companies were then ordered up under Major Skelley, temporarily in command of the regiment, to support the advance battalion. As soon as formed, about a quarter of a mile from the enemy's line, Major Monroe, with two squadrons (Companies A, B, K and C), was directed to charge the enemy's position, which was promptly done, the general commanding the division charging at the head of the column. The squadrons moved at first on the left of the road, and then crossing it obliquely struck the left of the enemy's position, charging over the works into the road and driving the enemy out in confusion; meantime Lieutenant Meekins, with Company I, had dislodged the left of the enemy's line, and Captain Riug, with part of his company, gallantly charged the enemy for a considerable distance along the White Oak road to the left. Captain Elliott pushed his dismounted men rapidly across the road into the wood, driving the enemy for some distance. Major Skelley supported the attack with Captain Nimmon's squadron (Companies D and M), moving up at a gallop on the right of the line. The rebels were completely dispersed at every point. Their number, as afterward ascertained, was 600, double the number of my regiment.

We have to mourn the loss in this charge of Major Monroe and Lieutenant Mathews, mortally wounded, and Captain Lancaster, killed, all brave and gallant officers, who fell gloriously while leading their men to the attack. Lieutenant Wolfe was taken prisoner, having pushed out too far on the left. Our loss otherwise was not heavy.

The command during the afternoon took part with the Fifth Corps in its right flank movement at the Five Forks which resulted so disastrously to the enemy. A considerable number of prisoners were captured by the regiment and turned over to the infantry.

The regiment moved with the division on the 2d, 3d, and 4th to the vicinity of Amelia Court-House. At Deep Creek we attacked the rebel rear guard, strongly posted, and after half an hour's skirmishing drove them out with considerable loss, having only one man wounded on our side. On the 4th, upon nearing the Court-House, Major McFarlan, commanding the advance battalion, met and charged the enemy's cavalry outposts, driving their skirmish line back upon their infantry support. He was followed up in the charge by the remainder of the regiment, which was ordered forward by Colonel Evans, commanding the brigade. Only two or three men were lost. The next day I supported the First Maryland Cavalry in its attack on the enemy at the railroad, to the left of the Court-House. Two or three men were slightly wounded in this affair. Moving thence, via Burkeville, to Prince Edward Court-House, on the 7th, we there, in conjunction with Major Baker's battalion, captured a considerable number of rebels, including one or two officers. The following day we marched to the vicinity of Appomattox Station, on the South Side Railroad, and on the morning of the 9th moved out to the main road from Appomattox Court-House to Lynchburg, about a mile westerly from the Court-House, this regiment having the advance. Captain Nimmon's squadron was deployed, dismounted, and pushed across the road to develop the enemy's position. I moved the remainder of the regiment into the wood on the left, dismounting four companies, under Major Skelley, holding Captain Ring's squadron in reserve, mounted, and sending Captain Tripp with his squadron to watch our left. About twenty minutes after Captain Nimmon commenced skirmishing I discovered the enemy pushing out about a brigade of infantry from the wood on our right and moving down the slope at right angles with our line. Changing front to the right, I opened fire with some effect, but receiving orders in a few minutes to fall back retired slowly toward the main road. Before reaching it, however, I was directed to deploy again, about 200 yards in front of the road, to protect the left flank, which I did. Captain Ring's squadron and one squadron under Lieutenant Cook were formed in line on the main road to repel the enemy, who were following closely our dismounted men, retiring under their orders to fall back. The enemy's cavalry being reported moving to our left and rear, I sent Major McFarlan to move the led horses as his judgment might direct for their safety. This duty he creditably performed, and afterward had the horses ready for mounting as soon as wanted by me.

While affairs were in this position Davies' brigade, dismounted, aided by our dismounted men, repelled the attack of the enemy on this road. At this moment some of the rebel cavalry dashed in upon our rear, and were met and checked by such men as could be brought up in time. Almost at the same time our infantry, a part of the Twenty-fourth Corps, advanced in line from the woods in our rear, sweeping back the head of the column of rebel cavalry, and pushing beyond us toward the Court-House soon left us in the rear. During this cavalry attack Captain Ring made a dashing charge on a superior force of cavalry in our rear with some effect, although I had no men at hand mounted to support him. Receiving orders to mount the regiment I did so without delay, and, under orders, moved down the road about a mile westerly to meet the rebel cavalry, there posted across the road. Before any decisive operations were commenced at this point orders to suspend hostilities were received. Although a portion of the engagement was quite sharp this morning I lost but one man killed and three or four wounded.

From this place, on the evening of the 9th, I detached Captain Elliott's squadron to search for artillery supposed to be abandoned by the enemy in the vicinity of Red Oak Church. A copy of his report has already been forwarded, from which it will be seen that he captured 60 prisoners, 54 pieces of field artillery, 36 gun carriages and caissons, and 1 battle-flag.

On the 12th the command marched to Lynchburg and occupied the town about 4 p. m. Upon entering the place I received orders to take command of the troops in the place, consisting of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry and Major Baker's battalion, and to take possession of and destroy all public property. These orders were carried out as far as possible during the evening. The next day I turned over the command and the captured property to Lieutenant-Colonel Potter, of General Turner's division, of the Twenty-fourth Corps. Very large amounts of military stores were found here, comprising ordnance and ordnance stores of every kind, quartermaster's property, a large amount of subsistence stores, 25 locomotives, many cars, and much other railroad property, and much property of a miscellaneous nature. This property was all turned over by me to Lieutenant-Colonel Potter as stated. I found here 56 field pieces, 6 heavy guns, 41 mortars, 7 forges, 75 caissons and gun carriages, 15,000 muskets, several hundred sabers, and a large quantity of ammunition.

Including the guns, &c., captured on the 9th, at Red Oak Church, the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry has captured and taken possession of and delivered to the proper officers 110 field pieces, 41 mortars, 6 heavy guns, 111 caissons and carriages, a large amount of ordnance stores, 1 battle-flag, and many prisoners.

Leaving Lynchburg on the 16th the regiment marched with the brigade to Burkeville, and thence, via Goode's Bridge, to Richmond, at which place it arrived on the 24th instant.

I cannot speak too highly of the soldierly conduct of both officers and men of the regiment during this brief campaign. I have heretofore recommended several officers for promotion and others as deserving honorable mention, but their service, under the eye of the commanding general, has enabled him to judge of their merits.

FRANKLIN A. STRATTON,

Col. Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, Comdy. Regiment.

IS H. FENN,

Adj. Gen., Mackenzie's Cav. Brig., Army of the James.

No. 265.

Report of Capt. Thornton J. Elliott, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

NEAR LYNCHBURG, VA., April 15, 1865.

SIR: In obedience to orders received I reported with my squadron, consisting of Companies F and B, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to Major Abell, chief of artillery, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, at Appomattox Court-House, April 9, 1865. On the following day (10th) I proceeded to Red Oak Church, capturing in that vicinity as follows: 60 rebels, who surrendered under a flag of truce; 54 pieces of artillery, brass and iron field pieces; 1 battle-flag; 36 gun carriages and caissons. The cannon were mostly buried or secreted. In addition to the above there was a large amount of ammunition, many wagons, caissons, forges, and sets of harness which had been destroyed by the enemy.

From April 10 to 12 engaged in extracting and removing cannon. Received orders the 13th to report to my command at Lynchburg, Va., at which place I arrived on the morning of the 14th instant.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THORNTON J. ELLIOTT,

Captain, Commanding Squadron, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Lieutenant-Colonel STRATTON,

Commanding Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

P. S.—The foregoing property was turned over to the proper authorities.

T. J. ELLIOTT,
Captain.

No. 266.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services under Resolution of Congress, No. 43, approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of Act of Congress approved March 3, 1863.

Name.	Rank and organization.	Date.	Awarded for—1865.
Allen, Almer P. ....	Corporal, Company K, 30th Illinois Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Anderson, Thomas. ....	Corporal, Company I, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 8	Capture of unknown rebel flag at Appomattox Station, Va.
Apple, Andrew O. ....	Corporal, Company I, 12th West Virginia Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Barber, James A. ....	Corporal, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 3	Gallantry in action at Petersburg, Va.
Benjamin, John F. ....	Corporal, Company M, 2d New York Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of battle-flag of 9th Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Bennett, Orrin. ....	Private, Company D, 11th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Blakenesderfer, Milton.	Corporal, Company E, 126th Ohio Infantry.	Apr. 3	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Bonebrake, Henry G. ....	Lieutenant, Company G, 17th Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Bunn, Hugh P. ....	Captain, Company B, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Bentz, William, Jr. ....	Lieutenant, Company B, 1st New Jersey Veteran Battalion.	Apr. 3	Capture of battle-flag of 46th North Carolina at Petersburg, Va.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services, &c.—Continued.

Name.	Rank and organization.	Date.	Awarded for—
Brest, Lewis F. ....	Private, Company D, 57th Pennsylvania Infantry.	1865. Apr. 11	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Brewer, William J. ....	Private, Company C, 2d New York Cavalry.	Apr. 4	Capture of engineer's flag, Army of Northern Virginia, in Virginia.
Briggs, Elijah A. ....	Corporal, Company B, 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery.	Apr. 2	Capture of battle-flag at Petersburg, Va.
Bringle, Andrew. ....	Corporal, Company F, 10th New York Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Gallantry in action at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Calhoun, Ivers S. ....	First sergeant, Company M, 2d New York Cavalry.	Apr. 11	Capture of flag of 8th Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Cary, James L. ....	Corporal, Company G, 10th New York Cavalry.	Apr. 9	Daring bravery and arduous marches in a campaign at ———, Va.
Chapman, John. ....	Private, Company B, 1st Maine Heavy Artillery.	Apr. 4	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Clapp, Albert A. ....	First sergeant, Company G, 2d Ohio Cavalry.	Apr. 11	Capture of battle flag of 8th Florida Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Connell, Trustin. ....	Corporal, Company I, 138th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 11	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Coreoran, John. ....	Private, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 2	Gallant and meritorious conduct in the assault upon the works in front of Petersburg, Va.
Cummingham, Francis M.	First sergeant, Company H, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of battle flag of 12th Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Curtis, Josiah M. ....	Second Lieutenant, Company J, 12th West Virginia Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Custer, Thomas W. ....	Second Lieutenant, Company B, 9th Michigan Cavalry.	Apr. 2 and 4.	Capture of two flags at Round Church and Sailor's Creek, Va.
Davidsler, John A. ....	Sergeant, Company A, 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Fisher's Cross-Roads, Va.
Davis, Thomas. ....	Private, Company C, 2d New York Heavy Artillery.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
DeLayle, Hiram A. ....	Sergeant, Company I, 11th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Doekun, Warren C. ....	Private, Company H, 121st New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of Savannah Guards at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Doloff, Charles W. ....	Corporal, Company K, 11th Vermont Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Donaldson, John. ....	Sergeant, Company I, 4th Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Appomattox Court-House, Va.
Edwards, David. ....	Private, Company H, 16th New York Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Elliott, Alexander C. ....	Sergeant, Company A, 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Fisher's Cross-Roads, Va.
Embs, Charles D. ....	Private, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 2	Gallant conduct in action at Petersburg, Va.
Evans, Corin D. ....	Private, Company A, 1st Indiana Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 26th Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Evans, Ira H. ....	Captain, 116th U. S. Colored Troops.	Apr. 2	Distinguished bravery at Hatcher's Run, Va.
Everson, Adolph. ....	Private, Company D, 185th New York Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Ewing, John C. ....	Private, Company E, 21th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Fernald, Albert E. ....	First Lieutenant, 20th Maine Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Fesq, Frank. ....	Private, Company A, 40th New Jersey Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag of 18th North Carolina at Petersburg, Va.
Fisher, Joseph. ....	Corporal, Company G, 61st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Distinguished gallantry in the battle of Petersburg.
Fowl, George W. ....	First Lieutenant, Company E, 88th New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Fox, William R. ....	Private, Company A, 95th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Bravery in action at Petersburg, Va.
Funk, West. ....	Major, 121st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 9	Capture of flag of 48th Virginia at Appomattox Court-House, Va.
Gardner, Charles N. ....	Private, Company E, 32d Massachusetts Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Janlmer, Robert J. ....	Sergeant, Company K, 84th Massachusetts Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Gibbs, Wesley. ....	Sergeant, Company B, 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services, &c.—Continued.

Name.	Rank and organization.	Date.	Awarded for—1865.
Gifford, Benjamin.....	Private, Company H, 121st New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Gould, Charles G.....	Captain, 5th Vermont Infantry.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in the assault and capture of Petersburg, Va.
Gridbou, James H.....	Lieutenant, Company G, 2d New York Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 12th Virginia at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Gridluy, James.....	Colonel 140th New York Infantry.	Apr. 1	Conspicuous bravery in the battle of Five Forks, Va.
Hack, Lester G.....	Sergeant, Company F, 5th Vermont Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Haggerty, Asa.....	Private, Company A, 61st New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Harsoun, Amel D.....	Corporal, Company K, 211th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Havron, John.....	Sergeant, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in action at Petersburg, Va.
Hawkins, Gardner C.....	First Lieutenant, Company E, 3d Vermont Infantry.	Apr. 2	Distinguished gallantry at the battle of Petersburg, Va.
Haynes, Asbury F.....	Corporal, Company H, 17th Maine Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Highy, Charles.....	Private, Company F, 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. —	Capture of flag in Virginia.
Highland, Patrick.....	Corporal, Company D, 23d Illinois Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Hillman, Henry.....	Corporal, Company M, 2d Ohio Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Holmes, William T.....	Private, Company A, 3d Indiana Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 27th Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Hopner, William B.....	Corporal, Company L, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Mar. 31	Gallantry in action at Chamberlain's Creek, Va.
Hamilton, William M.....	Commissary-sergeant, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Howard, James.....	Sergeant, Company K, 168th New York Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Hughes, John.....	Corporal, Company L, 2d Ohio Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 38th Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Hunter, Charles A.....	Sergeant, Company E, 34th Massachusetts Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
James, Isaac.....	Private, Company H, 10th Ohio Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Jordan, Abraham.....	Corporal, Company A, 3d Indiana Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Kane, John.....	Corporal, Company K, 100th New York Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Kanes, Augustus.....	Corporal, Company H, 15th New York Heavy Artillery.	Apr. 4	Capture of battle-flag at Five Forks, Va.
Kearny, Samuel P.....	Private, Company B, 24th New York Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of battle-flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Kearney, John.....	Corporal, Company E, 67th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of battle-flag of 56th Georgia at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Kitchell, Joseph.....	Private, Company B, 2d West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 6th North Carolina Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Kilmer, Henry.....	Private, Company E, 46th New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of battle-flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Knight, Jacob.....	First Lieutenant, Company G, 7th Maryland Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of battle-flag at Five Forks, Va.
Landis, James P.....	Chief bugler 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Paine's Cross-Roads, Va.
Lane, Morgan D.....	Private, Signal Corps, U. S. Army.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of gun-boat Nanamoni near Jeteraville, Va.
Lansford, Aaron S.....	First Lieutenant, Company B, 1st Connecticut Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 11th Florida Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Larmer, Smith.....	Corporal, Company G, 2d Ohio Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of General Kershaw's headquarters at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Lewis, Samuel B.....	Corporal, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in action at Petersburg, Va.
Lilley, John.....	Private, Company F, 205th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of battle-flag at Petersburg, Va.
Loyd, George.....	Private, Company A, 122d Ohio Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of division battle-flag of General Mehl at Petersburg, Va.
Lumley, William.....	Captain, Company G, 50th New York Infantry.	Apr. 7	Gallant and meritorious services at Farnville, Va.
Lutes, Franklin W.....	Corporal, Company D, 111th New York Infantry.	Mar. 31	Capture of flag of 41st Alabama at Petersburg, Va.
McCauslin, Joseph.....	Private, Company D, 12th West Virginia Infantry.	.....	Gallantry in action. (Issued May 2, 1865.)

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services, &c.—Continued.

Name.	Rank and organization.	Date.	Awarded for—
McElhany, Samuel O. ....	Private, Company A, 2d West Virginia Cavalry.	1865, Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
McGraw, Thomas. ....	Sergeant, Company B, 23d Illinois Infantry.	.....	Gallantry in action. (Issued May 2, 1865.) Do.
McKee, George. ....	Color-sergeant, Company D, 89th New York Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
McMillen, Francis M. ....	Sergeant, Company C, 116th Ohio Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 6th Tennessee Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
McWhorter, Walter F. ....	Commissary-sergeant, Company E, 3d West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 2	Capturing the colors of the 8th Mississippi Regiment at Hatchers Run, Va.
Mungom, C. Richard. ....	Private, Company H, 148th New York Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Marquette, Charles. ....	Sergeant, Company F, 3d Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Bravery in the storming of Petersburg, Va.
Mathews, John C. ....	Corporal, Company A, 61st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag of 7th Tennessee at Petersburg, Va.
Matthews, Milton. ....	Private, Company C, 61st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Mentzer, John W. ....	Sergeant, Company D, 5th Michigan Infantry.	Apr. 2	Distinguished conduct in action at Petersburg, Va.
Merrill, Augustus. ....	Captain, 1st Maine Volunteer Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 24th Battalion Virginia Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Miller, Frank. ....	Private, Company M, 2d New York Cavalry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
Mitchell, Theodore. ....	Private, Company C, 61st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in action at Petersburg, Va.
Midhoun, Archibald. ....	Sergeant, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 46th Virginia at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Morris, William. ....	Corporal, Company E, 5th Michigan Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Mundell, Walter J. ....	First sergeant, Company G, 146th New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Murphy, Thomas J. ....	Private, Company A, 1st Maryland Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Gallantry in action at Appomattox Court House, Va.
Myers, William H. ....	Captain, Company C, 1st Connecticut Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Neville, Edwin M. ....	Lieutenant, Company B, 86th New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag near Amelia Springs, Va.
Nowman, William H. ....	Serjeant, Lieutenant Company H, 6th Michigan Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of two flags at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Norton, Elliot M. ....	Lieutenant, Company M, 1st New York (Lincoln) Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Norton, Llewellyn P. ....	Sergeant, Company L, 10th New York Cavalry.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in action at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Orr, Robert J. ....	Major, 61st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Distinguished gallantry in the assault upon the enemy's lines at Petersburg, Va.
Parker, Thomas. ....	Corporal, Company B, 2d Rhode Island Infantry.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in action at Petersburg and Sailor's Creek, Va.
Payne, Irvin C. ....	Corporal, Company M, 2d New York Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of Virginia State colors at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Pierce, James K. ....	Sergeant, Company F, 13th Ohio Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Palms Cross Roads, Va.
Phillips, Josiah. ....	Private, Company B, 148th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Sutherland's Station, Va.
Pluman, George J. ....	Sergeant, Company C, 1st New York (Lincoln) Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of the Sumter Heavy Artillery at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Porter, William. ....	Sergeant, Company H, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Gallantry in action at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Potter, George W. ....	Private, Battery G, 1st Rhode Island Light Artillery.	Apr. 2	Gallantry in the assault of Petersburg, Va.
Read, Morton A. ....	Lieutenant, Company D, 8th New York Cavalry.	Apr. 8	Capture of flag of 1st Texas Infantry at Appomattox Station, Va. (Issued April 11, 1867.)
Reeler, Charles A. ....	Private, Company G, 12th West Virginia Infantry.	.....
Richardson, William R. ....	Private, Company A, 2d Ohio Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Gallant and meritorious conduct at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Rhldell, Rudolph. ....	Lieutenant, Company I, 81st New York Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.

Medals of Honor awarded for distinguished services, &c.—Continued.

Name.	Rank and organization.	Date.	Awarded for—
Sargent, Jackson.....	Sergeant, Company D, 5th Vermont Infantry.	1865. Apr. 2	Distinguished conduct in action as color-bearer at Petersburg, Va.
Seymour, Edwin F. ....	Captain, Company K, 1st New York (Lincoln) Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Schmitt, George W. ....	Blacksmith, Company M, 24th New York Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Paine's Cross-Roads, Va.
Schmitt, Charles.....	Chief bugler, Company M, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of the Sumter Flying Artillery at Appomattox, Va.
Scott, John Wallace....	Captain, Company D, 157th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Shahan, Barbara.....	Corporal, Company A, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 76th (I) Georgia at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Shapford, William ....	Private, Company A, 3d Indiana Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Shields, Bernard.....	Private, Company E, 2d West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of the Washington Artillery at Appomattox, Va.
Shipley, Robert F. ....	Sergeant, Company A, 11th New York Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Shupp, George J. ....	Private, Company E, 191st Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 1	Do.
Shurtell, Frank.....	Sergeant, Company K, 6th New York Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of two markers at Petersburg, Va.
Shumens, John.....	Private, Company D, 2d New York Heavy Artillery.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Southard, David.....	Sergeant, Company C, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Sava, Joseph B. ....	Schiller, Company H, 8th New York Cavalry.	Apr. —	Capture of flag in Virginia.
Spear, William J. ....	Major, 6th Vermont Infantry.	Apr. 2	Distinguished conduct in the battle of Petersburg, Va.
Stewart, George W. ....	First sergeant, Company E, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Paine's Cross-Roads, Va.
Stewart, Joseph.....	Private, Company G, 1st Maryland Infantry.	Apr. 1	Capture of flag at Five Forks, Va.
Strelle, Christian.....	Private, Company L, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. —	Capture of flag in Virginia.
Taggart, Charles A. ....	Private, Company B, 37th Massachusetts Infantry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Thomas, Hampton S. ....	Major, 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Conspicuous gallantry at the battle of Amelia Springs, Va.
Thompson, Freeman C. ....	Corporal, Company F, 116th Ohio Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Titus, Charles.....	Sergeant, Company H, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Gallantry in action at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Tunnicliffe, Aaron B. ....	Sergeant, Company G, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Gallantry in action in Virginia.
Tucker, Allen.....	Sergeant, Company F, 10th Connecticut Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Tucker, Jacob R. ....	Corporal, Company G, 4th Maryland Infantry.	Apr. —	Gallantry in the final and successful assault upon Petersburg, Va.
Von Mure, Joseph.....	Private, Company G, 116th Ohio Infantry.	.....	Gallant conduct in battle. (Issued May 2, 1865.)
Warfel, Henry C. ....	Private, Company A, 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of Virginia State colors at Paine's Cross-Roads, Va.
Welch, Richard.....	Corporal, Company K, 47th Massachusetts Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Petersburg, Va.
White, Adam.....	Corporal, Company G, 11th West Virginia Infantry.	Apr. 2	Capture of flag at Hatchet's Run, Va.
Wilson, Charles E. ....	Sergeant, Company A, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Gallantry in action as color-bearer at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Wilson, Francis A. ....	Corporal, Company B, 65th Pennsylvania Infantry.	Apr. 2	Bravery in action at Petersburg, Va.
Wilson, John.....	Sergeant, Company L, 1st New Jersey Cavalry.	Mar. 31	Gallantry in action at Chamberlain's Creek, Va.
Winogar, William W. ....	Lieutenant, Company B, 1st New York Dragoons.	Apr. 1	Capture of battle-flag at Five Forks, Va.
Worrell, William H. ....	Scout, General Sheridan's headquarters.	Apr. —	Capture of headquarters flag of Brigadier-General Barringer, commanding brigade of North Carolina cavalry in Virginia.
Woods, Daniel A. ....	Private, Company K, 1st West Virginia Cavalry.	Apr. 6	Capture of flag of 18th (I) Florida Infantry at Sailor's Creek, Va.
Young, Andrew J. ....	Sergeant, Company E, 1st Pennsylvania Cavalry.	Apr. 5	Capture of flag at Paine's Cross-Roads, Va.

APPENDIX.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, July 22, 1865.

Corpl. JACOB R. TUCKER,

Company G, Fourth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry :

The sum of $460 was sent to me by patriotic citizens to be presented as a reward for gallantry to the soldier who should first raise our flag over Richmond. As Richmond was not taken by assault, I have concluded that the donors' wishes will be best carried out by dividing the sum between three soldiers most conspicuous for gallantry in the final and successful assault on Petersburg.

You have been selected by Maj. Gen. Charles Griffin, commanding the Fifth Army Corps, as entitled to this honor on behalf of that command, and I herewith present to you $153.33, as one-third of the original sum.

It affords me great satisfaction to receive from your commanding general such unqualified testimony of your gallantry and heroism in battle, and to be the medium of transmitting to you this recognition of the worth of your services in defense of our common country.

U. S. GRANT,

Lieutenant-General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, July 22, 1865.

Sergt. DAVID W. YOUNG,

One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers :

The sum of $460 was sent to me by patriotic citizens to be presented as a reward for gallantry to the soldier who should first raise our flag over Richmond. As Richmond was not taken by assault, I have concluded that the donors' wishes will be best carried out by dividing the sum between three soldiers most conspicuous for gallantry in the final and successful assault on Petersburg.

You have been selected by Maj. Gen. H. G. Wright, commanding the Sixth Army Corps, as entitled to this honor on behalf of that command, and I herewith present to you $153.33, as one-third of the original sum.

It affords me great satisfaction to receive from your commanding general such unqualified testimony of your gallantry and heroism in battle, and to be the medium of transmitting to you this recognition of the worth of your services in defense of our common country.

U. S. GRANT,

Lieutenant-General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, July 22, 1865.

Sergt. THOMAS MCGRAW,

Company B, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers :

The sum of $460 was sent to me by patriotic citizens to be presented as a reward for gallantry to the soldier who should first raise our flag over Richmond. As Richmond was not taken by assault, I have concluded that the donors' wishes will be best carried out by dividing the sum between three soldiers most conspicuous for gallantry in the final and successful assault on Petersburg.

You have been selected by Maj. Gen. John Gibbon, commanding the Twenty-fourth Army Corps, as entitled to this honor on behalf of that command, and I herewith present to you $153.33 as one-third of the original sum.

It affords me great satisfaction to receive from your commanding general such unqualified testimony of your gallantry and heroism in battle, and to be the medium of transmitting to you this recognition of the worth of your services in defense of our common country.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant-General.

---

No. 267.

Reports of General Robert E. Lee, U. S. Army, commanding Army of Northern Virginia.

HEADQUARTERS,
March 29, 1865. (Via Petersburg. Received 1.45.)

Enemy are reported to have crossed Hatcher's Run at Monk's Neck Bridge with infantry and cavalry, moving toward Dinwiddie Court-House.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. J. C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Secretary of War, Richmond.

---

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES,
March 29, 1865. (Received 11.15 p. m.)

The enemy crossed Hatcher's Run this morning at Monk's Neck Bridge with a large force of cavalry, infantry, and artillery, and to-night his left extended to Dinwiddie Court-House. Gregg's cavalry advanced a mile and a half on Ford's road toward the South Side Railroad. General Anderson moved out from his position and struck his column near the intersection of the Quaker road and Boydton plank road, but did not succeed in driving him back.

R. E. LEE.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR,
Richmond.
(Copy sent to the President.)

---

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
April 1, 1865.

SIR: After my dispatch of last night I received a report from General Pickett, who, with three of his own brigades and two of General Johnson's, supported the cavalry under General Fitz Lee near Five Forks, on the road from Dinwiddie Court-House to the South Side road. After considerable difficulty, and meeting resistance from the enemy at all points, General Pickett forced his way to within less than a mile of Dinwiddie Court-House. By this time it was too dark for further operations, and General Pickett resolved to return to Five Forks to protect his communication with the railroad. He inflicted considerable damage upon the enemy and took some prisoners. His own loss was severe, including a good many officers. General Terry had his horse killed by a shell and was disabled himself. General Fitz Lee's and Rosser's divisions were heavily engaged, but their loss was slight. General W. H. F. Lee lost some valuable officers. General Pickett did not retire from the vicinity of Dinwiddie Court-House until early this morning, when, his left flank being threatened by a heavy force, he withdrew to Five Forks, where he took position with General W. H. F. Lee on his right, Fitz Lee and Rosser on his left, with Roberts' brigade on the White Oak road connecting with General Anderson. The enemy attacked General Roberts with a large force of cavalry, and after being once repulsed finally drove him back across Hatcher's Run.

A large force of infantry, believed to be the Fifth Corps, with other troops, turned General Pickett's left and drove him back on the White Oak road, separating him from General Fitz Lee, who was compelled to fall back across Hatcher's Run. General Pickett's present position is not known. General Fitz Lee reports that the enemy is massing his infantry heavily behind the cavalry in his front. The infantry that engaged General Anderson yesterday has moved from his front toward our right, and is supposed to participate in the operations above described. Prisoners have been taken to-day from the Twenty-fourth Corps, and it is believed that most of that corps is now south of the James. Our loss to-day is not known. A report from Staunton represents that the Eighth Corps passed over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from the 20th to the 25th ultimo. General Hancock is at Harper's Ferry with 2,000 men. One division of the Nineteenth Corps is at Winchester, with about 1,000 cavalry. The infantry at Winchester have marching orders, and all these troops are said to be destined for General Grant's army. The enemy is also reported to have withdrawn all his troops from Wolf Run Shoals and Fairfax Station, and to be concentrating them at Winchester.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE,
General.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR,
Richmond.

HEADQUARTERS,

April 2, 1865. (Via Petersburg. Received 10.40 o'clock.)

I see no prospect of doing more than holding our position here till night. I am not certain that I can do that. If I can I shall withdraw to-night north of the Appomattox, and, if possible, it will be better to withdraw the whole line to-night from James River. The brigades on Hatcher's Run are cut off from us; enemy have broken through our line and intercepted between us and them, and there is no bridge over which they can cross the Appomattox this side of Goode's or Beaver's, are not very far from the Danville railroad. Our only chance, in concentrating our forces, is to do so near Danville railroad, and endeavor to do at once. I advise that all preparation be made for moving Richmond to-night. I will advise you later, according to circumstances.

R. E. LEE.

C. R. INRIDGE.

HEADQUARTERS,

April 2, 1865. (Received 4.55 o'clock.)

I think the Danville road will be safe until to-morrow.

R. E. LEE.

General J. C. BRECKINRIDGE, Secretary of War, Richmond.—
PETERSBURG, April 2, 1865.

(Received 7 o'clock.)

It is absolutely necessary that we should abandon our position to-night, or run the risk of being cut off in the morning. I have given all the orders to officers on both sides of the river, and have taken every precaution that I can to make the movement successful. It will be a difficult operation, but I hope not impracticable. Please give all orders that you find necessary in and about Richmond. The troops will all be directed to Amelia Court-House.

R. E. LEE.

General J. C. BRECKINRIDGE, Secretary of War, Richmond.—
NEAR APPOMATTOX COURT-HOUSE, VA.,

April 12, 1865.

MR. PRESIDENT: It is with pain that I announce to Your Excellency the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia. The operations which preceded this result will be reported in full. I will therefore only now state that, upon arriving at Amelia Court-House on the morning of the 4th with the advance of the army, on the retreat from the lines in front of Richmond and Petersburg, and not finding the supplies ordered to be placed there, nearly twenty-four hours were lost in endeavoring to collect in the country subsistence for men and horses. This delay was fatal, and could not be retrieved. The troops, wearied by continual fighting and marching for several days and nights, obtained neither rest nor refreshment; and on moving, on the 5th, on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, I found at Jetersville the enemy's cavalry, and learned the approach of his infantry and the general advance of his army toward Burkeville. This deprived us of the use of the railroad, and rendered it impracticable to procure from Danville the supplies ordered to meet us at points of our march. Nothing could be obtained from the adjacent country. Our route to the Roanoke was therefore changed, and the march directed upon Farmville, where supplies were ordered from Lynchburg. The change of route threw the troops over the roads pursued by the artillery and wagon trains west of the railroad, which impeded our advance and embarrassed our movements. On the morning of the 6th General Longstreet's corps reached Rice's Station, on the Lynchburg railroad. It was followed by the commands of Generals R. H. Anderson, Ewell, and Gordon, with orders to close upon it as fast as the progress of the trains would permit or as they could be directed on roads farther west. General Anderson, commanding Pickett's and B. R. Johnson's divisions, became disconnected with Mahone's division, forming the rear of Longstreet. The enemy's cavalry penetrated the line of march through the interval thus left and attacked the wagon train moving toward Farmville. This caused serious delay in the march of the center and rear of the column, and enabled the enemy to mass upon their flank. After successive attacks Anderson's and Ewell's corps were captured or driven from their position. The latter general, with both of his division commanders, Kershaw and Custis Lee, and his brigadiers, were taken prisoners. Gordon, who all the morning, aided by General W. H. F. Lee's cavalry, had checked the advance of the enemy on the road from Amelia Springs and protected the trains, became exposed to his combined assaults, which he bravely resisted and twice repulsed; but the cavalry having been withdrawn to another part of the line of march, and the enemy massing heavily on his front and both flanks, renewed the attack about 6 p. m., and drove him from the field in much confusion.

The army continued its march during the night, and every effort was made to reorganize the divisions which had been shattered by the day's operations; but the men being depressed by fatigue and hunger, many threw away their arms, while others followed the wagon trains and embarrassed their progress. On the morning of the 7th rations were issued to the troops as they passed Farmville, but the safety of the trains requiring their removal upon the approach of the enemy all could not be supplied. The army, reduced to two corps, under Longstreet and Gordon, moved steadily on the road to Appomattox Court-House; thence its march was ordered by Campbell Court-House, through Pittsylvania, toward Danville. The roads were wretched and the progress slow. By great efforts the head of the column reached Appomattox Court-House on the evening of the 8th, and the troops were halted for rest. The march was ordered to be resumed at 1 a. m. on the 9th. Fitz Lee, with the cavalry, supported by Gordon, was ordered to drive the enemy from his front, wheel to the left, and cover the passage of the trains; while Longstreet, who from Rice's Station had formed the rear guard, should close up and hold the position. Two battalions of artillery and the ammunition wagons were directed to accompany the army, the rest of the artillery and wagons to move toward Lynchburg. In the early part of the night the enemy attacked Walker's artillery train near Appomattox Station, on the Lynchburg railroad, and were repelled. Shortly afterward their cavalry dashed toward the Court-House, till halted by our line. During the night there were indications of a large force massing on our left and front. Fitz Lee was directed to ascertain its strength, and to suspend his advance till daylight if necessary. About 5 a. m. on the 9th, with Gordon on his left, he moved forward and opened the way. A heavy force of the enemy was discovered opposite Gordon's right, which, moving in the direction of Appomattox Court-House, drove back the left of the cavalry and threatened to cut off Gordon from Longstreet, his cavalry at the same time threatening to envelop his left flank. Gordon withdrew across the Appomattox River, and the cavalry advanced on the Lynchburg road and became separated from the army.

Learning the condition of affairs on the lines, where I had gone under the expectation of meeting General Grant to learn definitely the terms he proposed in a communication received from him on the 8th, in the event of the surrender of the army, I requested a suspension of hostilities until these terms could be arranged. In the interview which occurred with General Grant in compliance with my request, terms having been agreed on, I surrendered that portion of the Army of Northern Virginia which was on the field, with its arms, artillery, and wagon trains, the officers and men to be paroled, retaining their side-arms and private effects. I deemed this course the best under all the circumstances by which we were surrounded. On the morning of the 9th, according to the reports of the ordnance officers, there were 7,892 organized infantry with arms, with an average of seventy-five rounds of ammunition per man. The artillery, though reduced to sixty-three pieces, with ninety-three rounds of ammunition, was sufficient. These comprised all the supplies of ordnance that could be relied on in the State of Virginia. I have no accurate report of the cavalry, but believe it did not exceed 2,100 effective men. The enemy were more than five times our numbers. If we could have forced our way one day longer it would have been at a great sacrifice of life, and at its end I did not see how a surrender could have been avoided. We had no subsistence for man or horse, and it could not be gathered in the country. The supplies ordered to Pamplin's Station from Lynchburg could not reach us, and the men, deprived of food and sleep for many days, were worn out and exhausted.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE,
General.

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS.

APPENDIX.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HQS. ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
No. 9. } April 10, 1865.

After four years of arduous service, marked by unsurpassed courage and fortitude, the Army of Northern Virginia has been compelled to yield to overwhelming numbers and resources. I need not tell the brave survivors of so many hard-fought battles, who have remained steadfast to the last, that I have consented to the result from no distrust of them. But, feeling that valor and devotion could accomplish nothing that could compensate for the loss that must have attended the continuance of the contest, I determined to avoid the useless sacrifice of those whose past services have endeared them to their countrymen.

By the terms of the agreement officers and men can return to their homes and remain until exchanged. You will take with you the satisfaction that proceeds from the consciousness of duty faithfully performed; and I earnestly pray that a merciful God will extend to you his blessing and protection.

With an increasing admiration of your constancy and devotion to your country, and a grateful remembrance of your kind and generous considerations for myself, I bid you all an affectionate farewell.*

R. E. LEE,
General.

No. 268.

Organization of the U. S. Forces, commanded by General Robert E. Lee.

[Compiled from reports of operations and parole lists.]

PROVOST GUARD.

Maj. D. B. BRIDGEMAN.

1st Virginia Battalion, _____.

44th Virginia Battalion, Company B, _____.

ESCORT.

39th Virginia Battalion, Capt. Samuel B. Brown.

ENGINEER TROOPS.

Col. THOMAS M. R. TALCOTT.

1st Regiment, _____.

2d Regiment, _____.

* See also version of this order as telegraphed April 14, 1865, by Hon. E. B. Washburne to Hon. E. M. Stanton, Part III, p. 744.

FIRST ARMY CORPS.

Lieut. Gen. JAMES LONGSTREET.

PICKETT'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. GEORGE E. PICKETT.

Stuart's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE H. STUART.

9th Virginia, Capt. John P. Wilson, Jr.
 14th Virginia, Maj. William D. Shelton.
 38th Virginia, Col. George K. Griggs.
 53d Virginia, Capt. Henry Edmunds.
 57th Virginia, Lieut. Col. William H. Ramsey.

Corse's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. MONTGOMERY D. CORSE.*
 Col. ARTHUR HERBERT.

15th Virginia, Maj. Charles H. Clarke.
 17th Virginia, Col. Arthur Herbert.
 29th Virginia, Lieut. John A. Conson.
 30th Virginia, Col. Robert S. Chew.
 32d Virginia, Capt. Samuel W. Armistead.

Hutton's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. EPPA HUTTON.
 Maj. MICHAEL P. SPENSARD.

8th Virginia, _____.
 18th Virginia, Lieut. Charles H. Wilkinson.
 19th Virginia, _____.
 28th Virginia, Maj. Michael P. Spensard.
 56th Virginia, Capt. John W. Jones.

Terry's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM R. TERRY.
 Maj. WILLIAM W. BENTLEY.

1st Virginia, _____.
 3d Virginia, _____.
 7th Virginia, _____.
 11th Virginia, _____.
 24th Virginia, Maj. William W. Bentley.

FIELD'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. CHARLES W. FIELD.

Perry's (late Law's) Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM F. PERRY.

4th Alabama, Lieut. Col. Lawrence H. Scruggs.
 15th Alabama, Col. Alexander A. Lowther.
 44th Alabama, Lieut. Col. John A. Jones.
 47th Alabama, Capt. Eli D. Clower.
 48th Alabama, Maj. John W. Wigginton.

Anderson's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE T. ANDERSON.

7th Georgia, Col. George H. Carmichael.
 8th Georgia, Col. John R. Towers.
 9th Georgia, Maj. John W. Arnold.
 14th Georgia, Capt. William H. Ramsey.
 59th Georgia, Col. Jack Brown.

Bonning's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. HENRY L. BENNING.

2d Georgia, Capt. Thomas Clafflin, Jr.
 15th Georgia, Maj. Peter J. Shannon.
 17th Georgia, Maj. James B. Moore.
 20th Georgia, _____.

Gregg's Brigade.

Col. ROBERT M. POWELL.

3d Arkansas, Lieut. Col. Robert S. Taylor.
 1st Texas, Col. Frederick S. Bass.
 4th Texas, Lieut. Col. Clinton M. Winkler.
 5th Texas, Capt. W. T. Hill.

Bratton's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. JOHN BRATTON.

1st South Carolina, Col. James R. Hugood.
 5th South Carolina, Col. A. Coward.
 6th South Carolina, Col. John M. Steedman.
 2d South Carolina (Rifles), Col. Robert B. Bowen.
 Palmetto (South Carolina) Sharpshooters, Capt. Alfred H. Foster.

* Captured April 6.

† Disabled March 31.

KERSHAW'S DIVISION.*

Maj. Gen. JOSEPH B. KERSHAW. †

*De Bose's Brigade.*Brig. Gen. DUDLEY M. DE BOSE. †
Capt. J. F. ESPY.16th Georgia, Lieut. William W. Montgomery.
18th Georgia:

Capt. J. F. Espy.

Lieut. Gideon J. Lasseter.

24th Georgia, Capt. J. A. Jarrard.

3d Georgia Battalion Sharpshooters, ————.

Cobb's (Georgia) Legion, Lieut. W. G. Stued.

Phillips (Georgia) Legion, Lieut. A. J. Reese.

*Humphreys' Brigade.*Col. WILLIAM H. FITZ GERALD.
Capt. GWIN R. CHERRY.

13th Mississippi, Lieut. W. H. Davis.

17th Mississippi, Capt. Gwin R. Cherry.

18th Mississippi, Lieut. John W. Gower.

21st Mississippi, Lieut. Benjamin George.

*Simms' Brigade.*Brig. Gen. JAMES P. SIMMS.
Capt. GEORGE W. WALDRON.

10th Georgia, Lieut. John B. Evans.

50th Georgia:

Capt. George W. Waldron.

Lieut. Hillary W. Cason.

51st Georgia, Capt. H. R. Thomas.

53d Georgia, Capt. R. H. Woods.

ARTILLERY. ‡

Brig. Gen. EDWARD P. ALEXANDER.

Haskell's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. JOHN C. HASKELL.

North Carolina Battery, Capt. Henry G. Flander.

North Carolina Battery (Ramsay's), Lieut. Jesse F. Woodard.

South Carolina Battery, Capt. Hugh R. Garden.

Virginia Battery (Lankin's), Lieut. Fletcher T. Massie.

Hayer's Battalion.

Maj. TYLER C. JORDAN.

Louisiana Battery (Moody's), Lieut. George Poindexter.

South Carolina Battery (Pickling's), Lieut. B. L. Purse.

Virginia Battery (Parker's), Lieut. Edwin S. Wooldrige.

Virginia Battery, Capt. John Donnell Smith.

Virginia Battery (Taylor's), Lieut. John H. Weddell.

Virginia Battery, Lieut. James Woolfolk.

* During the retreat Kershaw's and G. W. C. Lee's divisions, with other troops the defenses of Richmond, were commanded by Lieut. Gen. Richard S. Ewell.

† Captured April 6.

‡ The artillery of the army was commanded by Brig. Gen. William N. Pendleton.

SECOND ARMY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. JOHN B. GORDON.

GRIMES' (late RODES') DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. BRYAN GRIMES.

Battle's Brigade.

Col. EDWIN L. HOBSON.

3d Alabama, Capt. Cornelius Robinson, jr.

5th Alabama:

Col. Edwin L. Hobson.

Capt. Thomas M. Riley.

6th Alabama, Maj. Isaac F. Culver.

12th Alabama, Capt. Coleman D. Ross.

61st Alabama, Capt. Augustus B. Fennin, jr.Grimes' Brigade.

Col. DAVID G. COWARD.

32d North Carolina, Capt. P. C. Shuford.

43d North Carolina, Capt. Wiley J. Cobb.

45th North Carolina, Col. John R. Winston.53d North Carolina, Capt. Thomas E.
Ashcraft.

2d North Carolina Battalion, ———

Car's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM R. CON.

1st North Carolina, Maj. Louis C. Lar-ham.

2d North Carolina, Maj. James T. Seales.

3d North Carolina, Maj. William T.
Kinnell.4th North Carolina, Capt. John B. Por-cino.6th North Carolina, Lieut. Col. William A. Johnston.30th North Carolina, Capt. David C. Allen.Cook's Brigade.

Col. EDWIN A. NASH.

4th Georgia:

Col. Edwin A. Nash.

Capt. John M. Shiver.

12th Georgia, Capt. Josiah N. Beall.

21st Georgia, Capt. Edward Smith.

4th Georgia, Capt. John A. Tucker.

(Georgia Battery (Patterson's), ———)

*Archer's Battalion.**

Lieut. Col. FLETCHER H. ARCHER.

3d Battalion Virginia Reserves, Capt. Joseph A. Rogers.

4th Virginia Battalion, Capt. A. B. Morrison.

EARLY'S DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. JAMES A. WALKER.

Johnston's Brigade.

Col. JOHN W. LEA.

5th North Carolina:

Col. John W. Lea.

Capt. James M. Taylor.

12th North Carolina, Capt. P. Durham.

20th North Carolina, Lieut. Archibald P. Lawhon.

23d North Carolina, Capt. Abner D. Peace.

1st North Carolina Battalion, Sharpshooters, Lieut. R. W. Wondruff.

Lewis' Brigade.

Capt. JOHN BEARD.

6th North Carolina, Capt. Joseph H.
Dickey.21st North Carolina, Capt. John H. Miller.

54th North Carolina, ———, ———.

57th North Carolina, Capt. John Beard.

Walker's (late Peyram's) Brigade.

Maj. HENRY RYD DOUGLAS.

13th Virginia, Capt. George Cullen.

31st Virginia, Maj. William P. Cooper.

49th Virginia, Capt. William D. Moffett.

52d Virginia, Capt. Samuel W. Paxton.

58th Virginia, Lieut. Robert L. Walrond.

* Temporarily attached during the retreat.

GORDON'S DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. CLEMENT A. EVANS.

Evans' Brigade.

Col. JOHN H. LOWE.

13th Georgia, Lieut. Col. Richard Maltbie.
 26th Georgia, Capt. James Knox.
 31st Georgia, Capt. Edward C. Perry.
 38th Georgia, Lieut. Col. Philip E. Davant.
 60th Georgia, } Col. Waters B. Jones.
 61st Georgia, }
 9th Georgia Battalion Artillery, Sergt. Horace L. Crauford.
 12th Georgia Battalion Artillery, Capt. Samuel H. Crump.
 18th Georgia Battalion Infantry, Capt. George W. Stiles.

Terry's Brigade.

Col. TITUS V. WILLIAMS.

2d Virginia, Capt. Joseph J. Jenkins.
 4th Virginia, Capt. Hamilton D. Wade.
 5th Virginia, Capt. Peter E. Wilson.
 10th Virginia, Lieut. Col. D. H. Lee Martz.
 21st Virginia, Col. William A. Witcher.
 23d Virginia, Lieut. Col. John P. Fitzgerald.
 25th Virginia, Maj. Wilson Harper.
 27th Virginia, Capt. Franklin C. Wilson.
 33d Virginia, Capt. Henry A. Herrell.
 37th Virginia, Capt. John A. Preston.
 42d Virginia, Lieut. James L. Tompkins.
 44th Virginia, Maj. David W. Anderson.
 48th Virginia, Col. Robert H. Dungan.

Fork's Brigade.

Col. EUGENE WAGGAMAN.

1st Louisiana, ———, ———.
 2d Louisiana, Capt. A. S. Blythe.
 5th Louisiana, Lieut. Hiram Baxter.
 6th Louisiana, Maj. William H. Manning.
 7th Louisiana, ———, ———.
 8th Louisiana, Capt. Louis Prados.
 9th Louisiana, ———, ———.
 10th Louisiana, ———, ———.
 14th Louisiana, ———, ———.
 15th Louisiana, Col. Edmund Pendleton.

ARTILLERY.

Brig. Gen. ARMISTEAD L. LONG.

Braxton's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. CARRER M. BRAXTON.

Virginia Battery (Carpenter's), ———.
 Virginia Battery (Cooper's), ———.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. William W. Hardwick.

Cutshaw's Battalion.

Capt. C. W. FRY.

Alabama Battery (Reese's), ———.
 Virginia Battery (Carter's), Lieut. Lucian D. Robinson.
 Virginia Battery (Montgomery's), ———.
 Virginia Battery (Fry's), Lieut. William A. Deas.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Asher W. Garber.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Lorraine F. Jones.

Hardaway's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. ROBERT A. HANDAWAY.

Virginia Battery (Dance's), Lieut. John R. Bagby.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Archibald Graham.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Charles B. Griffin.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Benjamin H. Smith, jr.

Johnson's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. MARMADUKE JOHNSON.

Virginia Battery (Glutter's), Lieut. Lucius McIntosh.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. John G. Pollock.

Lightfoot's Battalion.

Virginia Battery (Caroline Artillery),

Virginia Battery (Nelson Artillery),

Virginia Battery (Snary Artillery), ———.

Stark's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. ALEXANDER W. STARK.

Louisiana Battery (Green's), ———.

Virginia Battery, Capt. David A. French.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Andrew D. Armistead.

THIRD ARMY CORPS.*

Lieut. Gen. AMBROSE P. HILL,†

PROVOST GUARD.

5th Alabama Battalion, Capt. Wade Ritter.

HETH'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. HENRY HETH.

Davis' Brigade.

Brig. Gen. JOSEPH R. DAVIS.

1st Confederate Battalion, Capt. Anthony B. Bartlett.
 2d Mississippi, _____
 11th Mississippi, _____
 26th Mississippi, _____
 42d Mississippi, _____

Cooke's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. JOHN R. COOKE.

15th North Carolina, Col. William H. Yarborough.
 27th North Carolina, Lieut. Col. Joseph C. Webb.
 46th North Carolina, Col. William L. Saunders.
 48th North Carolina, Col. Samuel H. Wallcup.
 55th North Carolina, Capt. Walter A. Whitted.

MacRae's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM MACRAE.

11th North Carolina, Col. William J. Martin.
 26th North Carolina, Lieut. Col. James T. Adams.
 44th North Carolina, Maj. Charles M. Stedman.
 47th North Carolina, _____
 52d North Carolina, Lieut. Col. Eric Erson.

McComb's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM MCCOMB.

2d Maryland Battalion, Capt. John W. Forsch.
 1st Tennessee (Provisional Army), Maj. Felix G. Buchanan.
 7th Tennessee, Lieut. Col. Samuel G. Shepard.
 14th Tennessee, Maj. James H. Johnson.
 17th Tennessee, } Col. Horace Rundy.
 23d Tennessee, }
 25th Tennessee, }
 41th Tennessee, }
 63d Tennessee, _____

WILCOX'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. CADMUS M. WILCOX.

Thomas' Brigade.

Brig. Gen. EDWARD L. THOMAS.

14th Georgia, Col. Richard P. Lester.
 35th Georgia, Col. Bolling H. Holt.
 45th Georgia, Col. Thomas J. Simmons.
 49th Georgia, Maj. James B. Duggan

Lane's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. JAMES H. LANE.

18th North Carolina, Maj. Thomas J. Wooten.
 28th North Carolina, Capt. T. James Linebarger.
 33d North Carolina, Col. Robert V. Cowan.
 37th North Carolina, Maj. Jackson L. Best.

McGowan's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. SAMUEL MCGOWAN.

1st South Carolina (Provisional Army), Lieut. Col. Andrew P. Butler.
 12th South Carolina, Capt. J. C. Bell.
 13th South Carolina, Col. Isaac F. Hunt.
 14th South Carolina, Lieut. Col. Edward Croft.
 Orr's (South Carolina) Rifles, Lieut. Col. James T. Robertson.

Seales' Brigade.

Col. JOSEPH H. HYMAN.

13th North Carolina, Lieut. Col. E. Benton Withers.
 16th North Carolina, Col. William A. Stowe.
 22d North Carolina, Col. Thomas S. Galhaway, Jr.
 31th North Carolina, Lieut. Col. George M. Norment.
 38th North Carolina:
 Col. John Asldford.
 Lieut. Col. George W. Flowers.

* Attached to First Corps April 2, after death of General Hill.

† Killed April 2.

MAHONE'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. WILLIAM MAHONE.

Forney's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM H. FORNEY.

8th Alabama, Lieut. Col. John P. Enrich.
 9th Alabama, Maj. James M. Crow.
 10th Alabama, Maj. Louis W. Johnson.
 11th Alabama, Capt. Martin L. Stewart.
 13th Alabama, Capt. Samuel Sellers.
 14th Alabama, Capt. John A. Terrell.

Weisiger's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. DAVID A. WEISIGER.

6th Virginia, Col. George T. Rogers.
 12th Virginia, Maj. Richard W. Jones.
 16th Virginia, Lieut. Col. Richard O. Whitehead.
 41st Virginia, Lieut. Col. Joseph P. Minecro.
 61st Virginia, Col. Virginius D. Groner.

Harris' Brigade.

Brig. Gen. NATHANIEL H. HARRIS.

12th Mississippi, Capt. A. K. Jones.
 16th Mississippi, Lieut. Col. James H. Duncan.
 19th Mississippi, Col. Richard W. Phipps.
 48th Mississippi, Col. Joseph M. Jayne.

Sorrel's Brigade.

Col. GEORGE E. TAYLOR.

3d Georgia, Lieut. Col. Claiborne Sued.
 22d Georgia, Capt. George W. Thomas.
 48th Georgia, Capt. Alexander C. Planders.
 64th Georgia, Capt. James G. Brown.
 2d Georgia Battalion, Maj. Charles J. Moffett.
 10th Georgia Battalion, Capt. Caleb F. Hill.

Finegan's Brigade.

Col. DAVID LANG.

2d Florida, Col. Walter R. Moore.
 5th Florida, _____.
 8th Florida, Maj. Thomas E. Clarke.
 9th Florida, _____.
 10th Florida, Col. Charles F. Hopkins.
 11th Florida, _____.

ARTILLERY.

Brig. Gen. R. LINDSAY WALKER.

McIntosh's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. WILLIAM M. OWEN.

Alabama Battery (Hurt's), Lieut. George A. Ferrell.
 Louisiana Battery, Capt. Edward Owen.
 Maryland Battery (Chew's), _____.
 Virginia Battery (Chamberlayne's), _____.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Berryman Z. Price.
 Virginia Battery (Donald's), Lieut. William T. Wilson.

Poague's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. WILLIAM T. POAGUE.

Mississippi Battery (Richards'), Lieut. John W. Yeargain.
 North Carolina Battery, Capt. Arthur B. Williams.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Charles F. Johnston.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Addison W. Utterback.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Nathan Penick.

Thirteenth Virginia Battalion.

Otoy Battery, Capt. David N. Walker.
 Ringgold Battery, Capt. Crispin Dickenson.

Richardson's Battalion.

Lieut. Col. CHARLES RICHARDSON.

Louisiana Battery, Capt. R. Prosper Lamby.
 Virginia Battery (Moore's), _____,
 Virginia Battery (Grandy's), _____.

Pegram's Battalion.

Col. WILLIAM J. PEGRAM.
 Lieut. Col. JOSEPH MCGRAW.

South Carolina Battery, Capt. Thomas E. Gregg.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. George M. Cayce.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Thomas Elliott.
 Virginia Battery (Bruder's), Lieut. James E. Tyler.

ANDERSON'S CORPS.

Lieut. Gen. RICHARD H. ANDERSON.

JOHNSON'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. BUSHNOD R. JOHNSON.
 Brig. Gen. WILLIAM H. WALLACE.*

Wise's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. HENRY A. WISE.

26th Virginia, Maj. William K. Porvin.
 31th Virginia, Col. John Thomas Goode.
 46th Virginia, _____.
 59th Virginia, Col. William B. Tabb.

Wallace's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM H. WALLACE.

17th South Carolina, Capt. E. A. Crawford.
 18th South Carolina, Lieut. Col. W. B. Allison.
 22d South Carolina, Col. William G. Burt.
 23d South Carolina, Lieut. Col. John M. Kinloch.
 26th South Carolina, Maj. Ceth S. Land.
 Holcombe (South Carolina) Legion, _____.

Moody's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. YOUNG M. MOODY.

41st Alabama, Col. Martin L. Stansel.
 43d Alabama, Maj. Willson J. Mims.
 59th Alabama, Maj. Lewis H. Crumpler.
 60th Alabama, Col. John W. A. Sanford.
 23d Alabama Battalion, Maj. Nicholas Stallworth.

Ransom's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. MATTHEW W. RANSOM.

24th North Carolina, _____.
 25th North Carolina, Col. Henry M. Rutledge.
 35th North Carolina, Maj. Robert E. Petty.
 49th North Carolina, Maj. Charles Q. Petty.
 56th North Carolina, Col. Paul E. Faison.

* In command April 9.

ARTILLERY.

Col. HILARY P. JONES.

Mount's Battalion.

Georgia Battery, Capt. C. W. Slaten.
 North Carolina Battery (Cumming's),
 Lieut. Alexander D. Brown.
 North Carolina Battery (Miller's), ———
 Virginia Battery (Young's), ———

Stribling's Battalion.

Virginia Battery (Dickerson's), ———
 Virginia Battery (Marshall's), Lieut. T.
 Marshall Archer.
 Virginia Battery (Macon's), ———
 Virginia Battery (Sullivan's), Lieut. William S. Archer.

Cole's Battalion.

Mississippi Battery (Bradford's), ———
 Virginia Battery (Richard G. Pogram's),
 Virginia Battery (Wright's), ———

Smith's Battalion.

Capt. WILLIAM F. DRENT.

1st Maryland Battery, Lieut. John Gale.
 Virginia Battery (Johnston), Lieut.
 Thomas R. Adams.
 Virginia Battery (Noble), Lieut.
 Robert J. Braswell.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. John W. Drewry.
 Virginia Battery, Capt. Thomas Kevill.

CAVALRY CORPS.

Maj. Gen. FITZHUGH LEE.

FITZHUGH LEE'S DIVISION.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS T. MUNFORD.

Payne's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM H. PAYNE.*
 Col. REUBEN B. BOSTON.†

5th Virginia, Col. Reuben B. Boston.
 6th Virginia, ———
 8th Virginia, ———
 36th Virginia Battalion, ———

Munford's Brigade.

1st Virginia, Col. William A. Morgan.
 2d Virginia, Lieut. Col. Cary Breckinridge.
 3d Virginia, ———
 4th Virginia, Col. William B. Wooldridge.

Gary's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. MARTIN W. GARY.

7th Georgia, Capt. William H. Barrroughs.
 7th South Carolina, Col. Alexander C. Haskell.
 Hampton (South Carolina) Legion, Lieut. Col. Robert B. Arnold.
 24th Virginia, Col. William T. Robins.

W. H. F. LEE'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. WILLIAM H. F. LEE.

Barringer's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. RUFUS BARRINGER.‡

1st North Carolina, ———
 2d North Carolina, ———
 3d North Carolina, ———
 4th North Carolina, ———

Beale's Brigade.

Capt. SAMUEL H. BURT.

9th Virginia, ———
 10th Virginia, ———
 13th Virginia, ———
 14th Virginia, ———

* Wounded March 30.

† Killed April 6.

‡ Captured April 3.

Roberts' Brigade.

Brig. Gen. WILLIAM P. ROBERTS.

4th North Carolina, _____.
16th North Carolina Battalion, _____.

ROSSER'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. THOMAS L. ROSSER.

*Dearing's Brigade.*Brig. Gen. JAMES DEARING,*
Col. ASHER W. HARMAN.7th Virginia, _____.
11th Virginia, _____.
12th Virginia, Col. Asher W. Harman.
35th Virginia Battalion, _____.*McAusland's Brigade.*16th Virginia, _____.
17th Virginia, _____.
21st Virginia, _____.
22d Virginia, _____.

ARTILLERY.

Lieut. Col. R. PRESTON CHEW.

Breathed's Battalion.

Maj. JAMES BREATHED.

Virginia Battery (P. P. Johnston's),
Virginia Battery (Shoemaker's), _____
Virginia Battery (Thomson's), _____*Chew's Battalion.*Virginia Battery (Graham's), _____
Virginia Battery (McGregor's), _____

G. W. C. LEE'S DIVISION.

Maj. Gen. G. W. CUSTIS LEE.†

Barton's Brigade.Crutchfield's Brigade.

Col. STAPLETON CRUTCHFIELD.*

Tucker's Naval Battalion.‡

EWELL'S RESERVE CORPS.

Lieut. Gen. RICHARD S. EWELL.†
Lieut. Col. THOMAS J. SPENCER.

NOTE.—The following battalions of artillery, borne on the return of the Army of Northern Virginia for January 31, 1865, are not enumerated in the Appomattox parole lists, viz: Cabell's, of the First Corps; Nelson's, of the Second Corps; Lane's and Eshleman's, of the Third Corps; and Sturdivant's, of Anderson's corps.

* Killed April 6.

† Captured April 6.

‡ Attached.

No. 269.

Tabular statement of officers and men of the Confederate Army paroled at Appomattox Court-House.

[Compiled from parole lists.]

Command.	Officers.	Enlisted men.	Aggregate.
GENERAL HEADQUARTERS.
General Lee, staff, and escort .....	11	85	96
Staff corps .....	58	155	183
Total .....	69	242	281
INFANTRY.
FIRST CORPS.
Lieutenant-General Langstreet and staff .....	10		10
Pickett's division:
Major-General Pickett and staff .....	14		14
Curse's brigade, Col. A. Herbert .....	72	202	274
Huntton's brigade, Maj. M. P. Spessard .....	17	140	157
Stewart's brigade, Brigadier-General Stewart .....	40	358	404
Terry's brigade, Maj. W. W. Bentley .....	31	142	173
Total Pickett's division .....	120	611	1,031
Yield's division:
Maj. Gen. Charles W. Yield and staff .....	9		9
Anderson's brigade, Brigadier-General Anderson .....	62	895	957
Banning's brigade, Brigadier-General Banning .....	70	733	803
Benton's brigade, Brigadier-General Benton .....	130	1,418	1,548
Perry's (late Law's) brigade, Brigadier-General Perry .....	61	892	953
Texas brigade, Col. R. M. Powell .....	61	553	614
Total Yield's division .....	462	4,491	4,953
Kershaw's division:
and staff .....	4	13	17
Tim Bosc's brigade, Capt. J. F. Basy .....	32	325	357
Hamphreys' brigade, Capt. G. B. Cherry .....	20	231	251
Simms' brigade, Capt. G. W. Wahlron .....	14	178	192
Total Kershaw's division .....	58	747	805
Total First Corps .....	656	6,140	6,796
SECOND CORPS.
Major-General Gordon, staff, &c.* .....	28	115	143
Grimes' (late Rodde's) division:
Major-General Grimes and staff .....	13	5	18
Battle's brigade, Col. B. L. Hobson .....	33	331	364
Clark's brigade, Col. E. A. Nash .....	28	323	351
Cox's brigade, Brigadier-General Cox .....	31	521	552
Grimes' brigade, Col. D. G. Coward .....	34	496	530
Archer's battalion .....	18	62	80
Total Grimes' division .....	172	1,727	1,899
Early's division:
Brigadier-General Walker and staff .....	11	1	12
Johnson's (R. D.) brigade, Col. J. W. Lea .....	30	433	463
Lewis' brigade, Capt. John Beaul .....	26	421	447
Walker's (late Pegram's) brigade, Maj. H. K. Douglas .....	42	202	244
Total Early's division .....	109	1,117	1,226
Gordon's division:
Brigadier-General Evans and staff .....	10		10
Evans' brigade, Col. J. H. Lowe .....	51	700	751
Perry's brigade, Col. T. V. Williams .....	67	477	544
Yule's brigade, Col. E. Waggaman .....	28	315	343
Total Gordon's division .....	156	1,512	1,668
Total Second Corps .....	485	4,571	5,056

* Provost guard, carriers, escort, and hospital attendants included.

Tabular statement of officers and men of the Confederate Army, &amp;c.—Continued.

Command.	Officers.	Enlisted men.	Aggregate.
INFANTRY—Continued.
THIRD CORPS.*
Staff and provost guard .....	28	110	147
Hell's division:
Maj. Gen. H. Hell and staff .....	15		15
Caulk's brigade, Brigadier-General Caulk .....	70	400	469
Davis' brigade, Brigadier-General Davis .....	21	54	75
MacRae's brigade, Brigadier-General MacRae .....	42	400	442
McComb's brigade, Brigadier-General McComb .....	64	426	489
Total Hell's division .....	202	1,370	1,572
Mahone's division:
Major-General Mahone and staff .....	13	1	14
Flanagan's brigade, Col. D. Laug .....	64	411	505
Fornoy's brigade, Brig. Gen. W. H. Furnoy .....	72	880	952
Harris' brigade, Brig. Gen. N. H. Harris .....	33	380	413
Surrell's brigade, Col. G. E. Taylor .....	71	602	1,033
Welsiger's brigade, Brigadier-General Welsiger .....	78	583	661
Total Mahone's division .....	331	3,266	3,537
Wilcox's division:
Major-General Wilcox and staff .....	12		12
Lane's brigade, Brigadier-General Lane .....	56	514	570
McGowan's brigade, Brigadier-General McGowan .....	69	708	807
Seaham's brigade, Col. Joseph H. Hyman .....	92	827	719
Thomas' brigade, Brig. Gen. E. L. Thomas .....	57	456	513
Total Wilcox's division .....	286	2,505	2,681
Total Third Corps .....	817	7,000	7,837
ANDERSON'S CORPS.
..... and staff .....		24	24
Johnson's division:
Maj. Gen. B. H. Johnson and staff .....	10		10
Ellint's brigade, Brigadier-General Wallace .....	12	508	630
Mumby's brigade, Brigadier-General Mumby .....	63	515	578
Ransom's brigade, Brigadier-General Ransom .....	41	391	436
Wise's brigade, Brigadier-General Wise .....	72	628	699
Total Anderson's corps .....	218	2,020	2,277
Ewell's command, Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Spence .....	10	275	284
Total Infantry .....	2,295	20,114	22,810
CAVALRY.
Major-General Fitzhugh Lee and staff .....	0	1	7
Fitz Lee's division:
Gary's brigade, Col. A. C. Haskell .....	61	773	833
Payne's brigade .....	0	82	82
Wickham's brigade .....	10	177	187
Total Fitz Lee's division .....	77	1,031	1,108
W. H. F. Lee's division:
Maj. Gen. W. H. F. Lee and staff .....	7	1	8
Barringer's brigade .....	2	21	23
Beale's brigade, Capt. S. H. Burt .....	22	152	174
Roberts' brigade, Brig. Gen. W. P. Roberts .....	6	85	93
Total W. H. F. Lee's division .....	30	260	293
Lomax's division:
Jackson's brigade .....		0	0
Total Lomax's division .....		0	0

*Attached to First Corps after death of A. P. Hill.

Tabular statement of officers and men of the Confederate Army, &c.—(Continued.)

Command.	Officers.	Enlisted men.	Aggregates.
CAVALRY—Continued.
Rosser's division:
Major-General Rosser and staff.....	98	1	99
Desiring's brigade, Col. A. W. Harmon.....	4	95	101
McCausland's brigade.....	1	26	27
Total Rosser's division.....	15	122	137
Total cavalry.....	134	1,426	1,560
ARTILLERY.
GENERAL HEADQUARTERS.
Brigadier-General Pendleton and staff.....	12	13	25
FIRST ARMY CORPS.
Brig. Gen. E. P. Alexander and staff.....	14	30	47
Haskell's battalion, Lieut. Col. John C. Haskell.....	15	139	154
Huger's battalion, Maj. T. C. Jordan.....	21	307	328
McIntosh's battalion, Lieut. Col. W. M. Owen.....	14	208	222
Pouge's battalion, Lieut. Col. William T. Pouge.....	17	279	296
15th Virginia Battalion, Capt. D. N. Walker.....	2	10	12
Richardson's battalion, Capt. R. Prosper Jemtry.....	4	77	81
Total First Army Corps.....	84	1,110	1,200
SECOND ARMY CORPS.
Brig. Gen. A. T. Long and staff.....	8	22	30
Carter's command, Col. T. H. Carter.....	2	4	6
Braxton's battalion, Lieut. Col. Carter M. Braxton.....	7	10	17
Christman's battalion, Capt. C. W. Fry.....	12	199	211
Hardaway's battalion, Lieut. Col. R. A. Hardaway.....	10	382	401
Johnson's battalion, Lieut. Col. M. Johnson.....	8	135	143
Lightfoot's battalion, Asst. Surg. J. B. Cuckley.....	1	20	21
Stark's battalion, Lieut. Col. A. W. Stark.....	11	154	165
Total Second Army Corps.....	68	641	1,072
ANDERSON'S CORPS.
Col. H. P. Jones.....	4	1	5
Blount's battalion.....	3	21	24
Chiles's battalion.....		37	37
Stridling's battalion.....	2	8	10
Total Anderson's corps.....	7	67	74
MISCELLANEOUS.
Smith's battalion, Capt. W. F. Dement.....	14	252	266
Total artillery.....	184	2,392	2,576
Miscellaneous troops.....	160	1,307	1,460

RECAPITULATION.

General headquarters.....	69	212	281
Infantry.....	2,235	20,114	22,349
Cavalry.....	134	1,426	1,560
Artillery.....	184	2,392	2,576
Miscellaneous troops.....	160	1,307	1,460
Grand total.....	2,781	25,450	28,231

*Officers whose paroles are signed by Rosser included.

†Cabell's, King's, Lane's, Nelson's, Pegram's, and Sturdivant's battalions, borne on return for January 31, 1865, are not accounted for by the paroles.

‡Composed of detachments of engineers, invalids, naval brigade, provost guards, etc.

Report of Brig. Gen. William N. Pendleton, U. S. Army, Chief of Artillery.

HQRS. ARTILLERY CORPS, ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
April 10, 1865—Day after surrender.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of the artillery under my command from the 1st day of April to the present time. Much to my regret it has to be made without possible access, as it will be seen from the circumstances of the case, to special reports from those superior officers of this important arm—General A. L. Long, chief of artillery, Second Corps; General E. P. Alexander, chief of artillery, First Corps; and General R. L. Walker, chief of artillery, Third Corps:

Owing to demonstrations of the enemy on the right of our lines near Petersburg on the morning of the 1st April, I ordered seven guns of Poague's battalion, which had been held in reserve near Howlett's, to march to Petersburg, and on the night of the 1st, by direction of the commanding general, I ordered the remainder of the battalion down; at the same time ordered the guns which had arrived during the day to proceed on the road toward the right, so as to be out of sight of the tower by dawn. Those guns were used with good effect near Mr. Turnbull's house (General Lee's headquarters) on the morning of the 2d, where the enemy had unexpectedly massed a heavy force against the opposite portion of our line and succeeded in breaking it, and then sweeping down toward the city, captured a number of men and guns along the line. While these guns were well contesting the ground and holding the enemy in check, Lieutenant-Colonel Pongue arrived with the remainder of his guns, and rendered admirable service in retarding the heavy advance of the enemy until such troops as remained could be withdrawn into the interior line. Three pieces with Major Brander were placed on the north side of the Appomattox, so as to annoy the left flank of the enemy and prevent him from crossing. On the line and to the right of the Cox road were placed four pieces of the horse artillery under Lieutenant-Colonel Chew and Major Breenhead. The enemy had by this time, 12 o'clock, fully established his line from Fort Gregg to the Appomattox River.

In the fighting attendant upon these operations various batteries of the Third Corps were captured. The conduct of officers and men was worthy of all praise, and that of the drivers and supernumeraries of the artillery, who had been by General Walker armed with muskets, deserves special mention. Those in Fort Gregg fought until literally crushed by numbers, and scarcely a man survived.

In the meantime the firing on Colonel Jones' front, east of the city, had been severe. During the night of the 1st the fire from mortars and guns was incessant, and the men were very much exposed throughout the 2d. I saw Colonel Jones on the line about 3 o'clock, and found his pieces so disposed as effectually to prevent any attempt of the enemy to improve the advantage already gained at the Rives' Salient.

I was at Battery 45 during the day, and directed its guns against units of the enemy moving down the valley toward the Weldon road. The officers in charge of this part of the line deeming an obvious, I ordered two pieces of artillery to strengthen the as to orders from the commanding general, I ordered the all the guns at 8 p. m. This was accomplished with great success, and although the difficulties on Colonel Jones' line were very great, he succeeded in withdrawing all but about ten, which for the most part were not provided with horses, and not intended to be removed. Several mortars were also brought off. Every piece that was abandoned was first disabled. After making all necessary arrangement with regard to this movement, and seeing all the guns safely across the river, about 2 a. m. on the 3d I moved on by the Hickory road, marching all night.

The march on the 3d was fatiguing, and very slow, on account of the immense number of carriages with the army. At night I bivouacked on the roadside about nine miles from Goode's Bridge.

I reached Amelia Court-House on the morning of the 4th, and immediately proceeded to make arrangements for reducing the artillery with the troops to a proportionate quantity, and properly to dispose of the surplus. These arrangements were at last effected; and on the 5th General Walker moved to the right and west of the line of march of the army, having in charge all the artillery not needed with the troops. Ninety-five caissons, mostly loaded, which had early in the winter been sent to the rear from Petersburg, were here destroyed.

Moving on past Amelia Springs, by 10 o'clock the next morning (6th) we reached Rice's Station, on the South Side Railroad. Our troops here went into line, and I chose positions for guns commanding the Burkeville road and sweeping the ground to its left. On this line there was heavy skirmishing during the evening, but no attack by the enemy. The enemy's cavalry meanwhile having attacked our wagon train about two miles back on the road, I (happening to be with the commanding general when he received information of this) was requested by him to see what could be done to prevent any further loss in that quarter. On the way I met a few wearied men of Harris' brigade, and taking from them some twenty volunteers proceeded with them to the road where the train had been attacked. While attempting to rescue some of the property most valuable, I discovered a line of the enemy in a thick pine wood, and supposing it to be but a small body I arranged for an attack upon them [with] one of General Cooke's regiments, which had just reported to me in consequence of a message previously sent to the commanding general. This regiment was unable to hold its ground, and fell back some half a mile on the same road, until re-enforced by two regiments of cavalry. They then again moved forward, but after regaining the original advanced position the infantry was recalled by General Cooke, and the cavalry, by my direction, fell back with some few prisoners they had secured. The enemy meantime had fired our train to prevent us from saving anything. The enemy now seemed disposed to quiet, and nothing apparently remaining to be accomplished by the small force with me, I directed it slowly to withdraw toward our main body near the station, and returned myself in that direction. Not long after the enemy made a sudden rush, and succeeded for a time in running over our small cavalry force, and threatening the unprotected rear of our line; our cavalry regiment, however, speedily rallied and charged in turn, and inflicted merited punishment upon their greatly outnumbering assailants. Shortly after night closed our guns were withdrawn, and we moved on the Farmville road, reaching Farmville early on the morning of the 7th.

As we were leaving Farmville by the bridges there crossing the Appomattox, the enemy pressed up close after our rear guard, and guns were placed in position and used to good purpose on the heights north of the river. Guns were again used with effect a mile or two farther on, when General Gordon (then commanding Second Corps, with the justly honored General A. L. Long, his chief of artillery) pressed back the enemy's line near the road along which all our wagons were passing, so as to allow these to get well on their way. This position was held all day, and it was not until midnight that the column moved on the road toward Buckingham Court-House. In spite of the terrible roads quite a long march was effected, and the evening of the 8th saw the head of our column near Appomattox Court-House. I pushed on in person to communicate with General Walker, and found him with his command parked about two miles beyond the Court-House on the road to Appomattox Station; South Side Railroad. While I was with him an attack wholly unexpected was made by the enemy on his defenseless camp.* To avert immediate disaster from this attack demanded the exercise of all our energies. It was, however, at once effectually repelled by the aid especially of the two gallant artillery companies of Captains Walker and Dickenson, under command of the former, which, being at the time unequipped as artillerymen, were armed with muskets as a guard. They met the enemy's sharpshooters in a brush-wood near, and enabled a number of General Walker's pieces to play with effect while the remainder of his train was withdrawn. After a sharp skirmish this attack seemed remedied, and I started back, having received by courier a note requesting my presence with the commanding general. When I had reached a point a few hundred yards from the court-house, the enemy's cavalry, which had under cover of dusk gained the road, came rushing along, firing upon all in the road, and I only escaped being shot or captured by leaping my horse over the fence and skirting for some distance along the left of that road toward our column then advancing, and until I reached a point beyond where the enemy's charge was checked. While these operations were in progress there was much noise of engines upon the South Side Railroad. From this circumstance, and from the enemy's using artillery in the attack above described, I became satisfied that the attacking body, which had at first seemed to me small, was a large and accumulating force, and the inference became inevitable that General Walker and his guns must be, if they had not already been, captured. These facts and inferences were reported to the commanding general on my reaching his headquarters about 1 a. m. of the 9th.

Movements at daylight confirmed all that had been thus inferred. The enemy was found in heavy force on our front, and dispositions were promptly made for a fierce encounter. The artillery participated with alacrity, with cavalry and infantry, in a spirited attack upon the enemy's advancing columns, and promptly succeeded in arresting their advance. Two guns were captured from the enemy and a number of prisoners taken; but in spite of this the conviction had become established in the minds of a large majority of our best officers and men that the army, in its extremely reduced state, could not be extricated from its perilous condition, surrounded by the immense force of the enemy, and without subsistence for men or animals, unless with frightful bloodshed, and to scarcely any possible purpose, as its remnant, if thus rescued, must be too much enfeebled for efficient service. In view of these convictions, known of in part by him, and of all the facts before his own mind, the commanding general, before the battle had raged extensively, made arrangements for arresting hostilities. By the respective commanders-in-chief main principles of our surrender were then agreed upon, and as soon thereafter as practicable articles in detail were adjusted by a commission of officers on both sides. Those serving under General Lee's appointment were General Longstreet, chief of First Corps, General Gordon, chief of Second Corps, and the general chief of artillery. In accordance with stipulations thus adjusted, the artillery was withdrawn, as were the other troops, and it was, as soon as practicable, in due form turned over to the enemy. Of 250 field pieces belonging to the army on the lines near Richmond and Petersburg, only sixty-one remained, and thirteen caissons.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. N. PENDLETON,

Brigadier-General and Chief of Artillery.

Lieut. Col. W. H. TAYLOR,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 271.

Report of Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Kershaw, U. S. Army.

CAMDEN, S. C., October 9, 1865.

MAJOR: On the morning of Monday, the 3d of April last, I moved, in obedience to the orders of Lieutenant-General Ewell, from my position on the lines near Fort Gilmer through Richmond to Mayo's Bridge, reporting in person to Lieutenant-General Ewell.

Under his orders I detached two battalions to suppress the mob then engaged in sacking the city. Arriving at the bridge I found it in flames, and rapidly passed my command over to Manchester, informing General Ewell of the facts. By the efforts of some boatmen the flames were arrested before they had rendered the bridge impassable. By the time the infantry had passed, the large mill above the Danville depot—and too far distant from it to have been ignited by the burning of the latter—was observed to be on fire, the smoke being first seen to issue through the roof in all parts of it, and then the windows on all sides, indicating that it had been set on fire in the interior. As much of the conflagration which ensued was caused by the burning of this building, the circumstance has been deemed of sufficient importance to be stated here, in order to remove the erroneous imputation that the conflagration resulted from the action of the authorities.

A few miles from the river the command united with that of General Custis Lee and moved in the direction of Amelia Court-House. Learning that all the upper crossings of the Appomattox were impassable, on Tuesday the command moved to the railroad crossing, and by night had succeeded in passing the river with the entire train. The next day the rear of the Petersburg army was overtaken at Amelia Court-House, and marching all night the command arrived at Amelia Springs a little after sunrise the next day. From this point Gordon's corps marched in the rear. About 10 o'clock the command reached a point where the wagon train was moved to the right upon a cross-road which intersected that upon which the troops moved at right angles. Here the column was posted to resist the cavalry of the enemy—Merritt's and Custer's divisions—which attacked at that point, and repulsed several charges upon different parts of the line. They were held at bay until the last of the train had passed the point attacked, when I was directed to follow the movement of General Custis Lee's division. Before my troops left the ground Gordon's advance appeared, while his rear was engaged with the enemy. I was not informed that Gordon would follow the wagon train as he did, and was therefore surprised on arriving at Sailor's Creek to find that my rear was menaced. As the troops in my front had halted, I detached Humphreys' brigade, commanded by Colonel Fitz Gerald, and Gary's dismounted battalion, under Lieutenant-Colonel Barham, to take position near the house occupied as a hospital by Pickett's division, to cover my crossing Sailor's Creek. Upon arriving at the top of the hill on the south side of the creek, I was informed by General Ewell that the enemy had possession of the road in front of General Anderson, and that we were to hold the enemy in check while that officer attempted to open the way. My command then consisted of only three brigades—Humphreys', Simms' (Brig. Gen. J. P. Simms commanding), and Du Bose's brigade (Brig. Gen. D. M. Du Bose commanding)—and the dismounted cavalry already mentioned; the whole at that time amounted to less than 2,000 effective men. Du Bose was placed in the edge of the wood, with his right resting on the road; Simms, on the left of the road, a little in advance. General Lee's division was on the left of the road, his right occupying a line in front of Du Bose, his left on the same line, or nearly so. In the meantime the enemy attacked and overpowered Humphreys and the dismounted cavalry, forcing them back to my position. They were formed at once on the left of the road, and Simms was moved farther to the right. The enemy planted batteries near the hospital and swept our position at short range, and under cover of the fire the Second and Sixth Corps attacked us. Both in his (General Lee's) front and my own they were repulsed, with loss, on every advance, but pressed on constantly with fresh troops, extending all the while to our left. During this attack I received from General Anderson a message, through Capt. S. D. Shamon, aide-de-camp, to the effect that he had commenced his movement, and hoped to be successful if I could hold out a few moments longer. Sending him an encouraging reply, I continued to resist the enemy for some time, hoping to hear from General Anderson that the way was open. Unfortunately his attempt had failed, and the enemy made his appearance in rear of Simms' brigade at the same time he was engaged in front and flank. That officer attempted to extricate his command, but found it impossible to do so without confusion, as he was attacked on all sides. This condition of things being discovered by the other troops, all fell back toward the rear and left. I kept up something of a skirmish as the command retreated; but after moving some 400 yards I discovered that all who had preceded me had been taken by the Yankee cavalry, who were in line of battle across the road. I then directed the men about me and the members of my staff to make their escape in any way possible. I discovered afterward that but one had succeeded, as the enemy had completed the circle around our position when General Anderson's line was broken. My losses in killed and wounded must have been considerable, but I have no means of estimating the number.

The conduct of the officers and men of the command under these trying circumstances is beyond all praise, and worthy the reputation of these veteran regiments. On no battle-field of the war have I felt a juster pride in the conduct of my command.

I beg leave expressly to include in these just encomiums the little command of Lieutenant-Colonel Barham, and especially that officer.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. KERSHAW.

MAJ. CAMPBELL BROWN,
Richmond, Va.

No. 272.

Report of Brig. Gen. James H. Lane, U. S. Army.

APPOMATTOX COURT-HOUSE, April 10, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report that on the night of the 1st of April four regiments of my brigade, with intervals between the men varying from six to ten paces, were stretched along the works between Battery Gregg and Hatcher's Run in the following order from right to left: Twenty-eighth, Thirty-seventh, Eighteenth, Thirty-third [North Carolina Infantry], the right of the Twenty-eighth resting near the brown house in front of General MacRae's winter quarters, and the left of the Thirty-third on the branch near Mrs. Banks'.

The enemy commenced shelling my line from several batteries about 9 o'clock that night; the picket-lines in my front opened fire at a quarter to 2 the following morning. The skirmishers from McGowan's brigade, who covered the works held by my command, were driven in at a quarter to 5 o'clock. My line was pierced by the enemy in strong force at the ravine in front of the right of the Thirty-seventh, near General McGowan's headquarters. The Twenty-eighth, enfiladed on the left by this force and on the right by the force that had previously broken the troops to our right, was forced to fall back to the plank road. The enemy on its left took possession of this road, and forced it to fall still farther back to the Cox road, where it skirmished with the enemy and supported a battery of artillery, by order of Brigadier-General Pondleton. The other regiments fought the enemy between McGowan's winter quarters and those occupied by my brigade, and were driven back. They then made a stand in the winter quarters of the right regiment of my command, but were again broken, a part retreating along the works to the left and the remainder going to the rear. These last, under Colonel Cowan, made a stand on the hill to the right of Mrs. Banks', but were forced back to the plank road, along which they skirmished for some time, and then fell back to the Cox road, where they supported a battery of artillery, by order of Lieutenant-General Longstreet. That portion of my command which retreated along the works to the left made two more unsuccessful attempts to resist the enemy, the last stand being made in the Church road leading to the Jones house. It then fell back to Battery Gregg and the battery to its left, but under Major Wooten and assisted by a part of Thomas' brigade it soon after charged the enemy, by order of Major-General Wilcox, and cleared the works as far as the branch on which the left of the Thirty-third rested the night previous. Here we were rejoined by Colonel Cowan, and we deployed as skirmishers to the left of the Church road and perpendicular to the works, but did not hold this position long, as we were attacked by a strong line of skirmishers, supported by two strong lines of battle. A part of us retreated to Battery Gregg, and the rest to the new line of works near the dam. Battery Gregg was subsequently attacked by an immense force, and fell after the most gallant and desperate defense. Our men bayoneted many of the enemy as they mounted the parapet. After the fall of this battery the rest of my command along the new line was attacked in front and flank, and driven back to the old line of works running northwest from Battery 45, where it remained until the evacuation of Petersburg. We were here rejoined by the Twenty-eighth, under Captain Linebarger.

On the afternoon of the 3d we crossed the Appomattox at Goode's Bridge, bivouacked at Amelia Court-House on the 4th, and on the 5th formed line of battle between Amelia Court-House and Jetersville, where our sharpshooters, under Major Wooten, became engaged. Next day, while resting in Farmville, we were ordered back to a fortified hill to support our cavalry, which was hard pressed, but before reaching the hill the order was countermanded. We moved rapidly through Farmville, and sustained some loss from the artillery fire while crossing the river near that place. That afternoon we formed line of battle, facing to the rear, between one and two miles from Farmville, and my sharpshooters were attacked by the enemy. During the night we resumed our march, and on the 9th, while forming line of battle, we were ordered back and directed to stack our arms, as the Army of Northern Virginia had been surrendered.

My officers and men behaved well throughout this trying campaign, and superiority of numbers alone enabled the enemy to drive us from the works near Petersburg. Colonel Cowan, though indisposed, was constantly with his command and displayed his usual gallantry, while Major Wooten nobly sustained his enviable reputation as an officer.

We have to mourn the loss of Captains Nicholson, Fain, McCauley, and Long, and other gallant officers.

Capt. E. J. Hale, jr., assistant adjutant-general, and First Lieut. E. B. Meade, aide-de-camp, were constantly at their posts, displaying great bravery, and giving additional evidence of their efficiency as staff officers.

I am unable to give our exact loss at Petersburg. I surrendered at this point 56 officers and 484 men, many of the latter being detailed non-arms bearing men, who were sent back to be surrendered with their brigade.

The Seventh [North Carolina], the other regiment of my command, is absent in North Carolina on detached service.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES H. HANIE,
Brigadier-General.

Maj. JOSEPH A. ENGELHARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

---

No. 273.

Report of Maj. Gen. Bushrod R. Johnson, U. S. Army.

HEADQUARTERS JOHNSON'S DIVISION,
April 10, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with instructions, I submit the following report of the operations of my division from the 28th [29th] of March to the 9th of April, 1865:

On Tuesday [Wednesday], the 28th [29th] of March, 1865, the cavalry having reported the enemy advancing in force with cavalry, artillery, and infantry on the Quaker (or military) road, west of Hatcher's Run, I was ordered by Lieut. Gen. R. H. Anderson to move my command down the road, attack them, and drive them back to the Vaughan road. As I was drawing out my command the cavalry informed me that the enemy were retiring beyond Gravelly Run. I therefore did not expect to encounter them until I reached the line of the run. I advanced Wise's brigade in line of battle, stretching across the Quaker road, and moved Wallace's, Moody's, and Ransom's brigades, in the order named, by the flank in rear of Wise's brigade. Upon entering the skirts of the woods, south of the forks of the Boydton plank road and the Quaker road, Wise's brigade came under the fire of the enemy's skirmishers and charged forward until they encountered and drove back a short distance a line of battle posted with artillery. The engagement was commenced at 3.20 p. m. In a few moments a portion of Wise's brigade, on the Quaker road, was driven back from the woods to the open ground, and, by direction of Lieutenant-General Anderson, who had arrived on the ground about the time of the charge of Wise's brigade, I sent forward Wallace's brigade to the support of the part of Wise's brigade still contesting the ground with the enemy. Finding that the left of Wise's brigade had encountered a battery, which they had well-nigh captured, and were very hardly pressed, I directed Brigadier-General Moody to move his brigade up on the left of Wise's and Wallace's, but before this movement could be carried out, Wallace's brigade, with Wise's (save Colonel Goode's (Thirty-fourth) regiment, which had moved to the Boydton road to operate with the cavalry on the enemy's left), was repulsed by a heavy fire from the left. Lieutenant-General Anderson now directed my division to be withdrawn, at about 5 p. m., and to take position across the Boydton plank road in the margin of the woods north and east of the Bevell house. In this position we remained until dusk, when, by direction of General Anderson, pickets were left in front and the division retired into the breastworks adjacent to Burgess' Mill and west of Hatcher's Run. Our losses were about 250 men, mainly from Wise's and Wallace's brigades. Capt. Harvey B. Jones, assistant adjutant-general, Gracie's brigade was

On the afternoon of Wednesday (Thursday), the 29th (30th) of March, Ransom's and Wallace's brigades were detached and moved, with three brigades of General Pickett's division, on the White Oak road to Five Forks.

On the morning of Thursday, the 30th of March, Brigadier-General Hunton, of Pickett's division, reported to me with his brigade for duty with my command. In the evening of this day the enemy's skirmishers made their appearance in the open field east of Halter Butler's house and south of the White Oak road. This position was to the right of that portion of the works occupied by our troops. By instruction of General Lee, I believe it was, I threw Colonel Stansel's regiment, of Moody's brigade, out of the works on the White Oak road, and established a line of skirmishers south of the road, fronting those of the enemy. I was advised that it would not be desirable to make a vigorous attack at that point at that time, as it might be better not to draw attention to it then, but to attack the enemy there at a later period, if it proved to be the left flank of his infantry.

At about 11 a. m. on the 31st of March, finding the enemy in two lines in the field west of Halter Butler's house, I at once ordered out Hunton's brigade, and notified Lieutenant-General Anderson and Major-General Heth that I would make an attack as soon as I could form my line of battle. While forming this line, Brigadier-General McGowan, of Wilcox's division, reported to me with his brigade. My line was formed with McGowan's brigade on the right, Moody's brigade, commanded by Colonel Stansel, of the Forty-first Alabama Regiment, in the center, and Hunton's brigade on the left. Having ascertained that an admirable movement might be made on the enemy's left flank, I had ordered McGowan's brigade to move behind a woods for that purpose; but this movement had only commenced when I discovered that the enemy were advancing. I immediately ordered my command to advance and meet the enemy's attack. The movement was handsomely and gallantly made, and Brigadier-General McGowan, in advancing, moved on the enemy's flank, as proposed, for a preparatory movement. The enemy's line immediately gave way, and my command followed up their advantage in a most spirited manner. By 2 p. m. the enemy were driven about one mile and a half to a position west of a branch of Gravelly Run, which skirts the Boydton road in vicinity of the bridge on that road over the latter stream. In this position the enemy's line, in strong force, was formed on vantage ground. During this advance Wise's brigade was moved out on the left of Hutton's brigade, by order of General Lee, and gallantly participated in the fight; but encountering a superior force, and having its left flank exposed, its left was driven back. For the operations of Wise's brigade on this day you are referred to the report of the brigade commander. The next brigade on the right, that of General Hutton, repulsed (with the aid of the right of Wise's brigade) three charges by the enemy. The operations on the left of Hutton's brigade caused that brigade to close to the left, and Moody's brigade was compelled to extend both to the left and right, in order to cover the enemy's line in its front. Our troops persistently continued to fight, but were unable to advance, and orders were first sent to hold the position they had gained. It, however, became evident that our troops were being exhausted, and needed re-enforcements, of which there was none available. Lieutenant-General Anderson now ordered my command to be withdrawn to the enemy's line of rifle-pits, thrown up by his skirmishers south of the White Oak road during the previous night. This position was occupied by my command, save Wise's brigade, which retired into the breast-works when the enemy advanced in strong force and with great spirit. In occupying this line Moody's brigade was shifted by force of circumstances to the left of Hutton's brigade, and occupied an angle from which a connection was made with the regular rifle-pits for the skirmishers in front of our fortifications. The enemy's attack fell with force upon this angle, and carried it, and all our forces were then, at about 5 p. m., drawn into the main breast-works, where they lay during the night, with pickets well out on the White Oak road and to the right and left of it. The losses of the enemy were heavy, including about 470 prisoners. Our losses were about 800, including killed, wounded, and prisoners.

On Saturday morning, the 1st of April, the enemy disappeared from the vicinity of the White Oak road, and it was discovered that they had moved toward the right. At 4 p. m. heavy firing was heard in the vicinity of Five Forks. At 5.45 I received orders from Lieutenant-General Anderson to move with Wise's, Moody's, and Hutton's brigades to Church Crossing, on the South Side Railroad, and at 6.30 p. m. was in motion. At 2 a. m. on the 2d of April we arrived at the crossing. Heavy artillery firing was heard all night in direction of Petersburg. About 12 m. we moved from the crossing on Church (or Ford's) road toward Namozine bridge. At 3 p. m. reached Namozine road; cavalry skirmishing all the way in our rear. By 11 a. m. we learned that the lines at Petersburg had been broken, and that the enemy's cavalry, pressing toward South Side Railroad, had reached it at Jarratt's Station. Between 5 and 6 p. m. Major-General Fitzhugh Lee, commanding cavalry, in my rear, requested me to form my command to meet the enemy, who were heavily pressing him. A handsome line was formed, and hasty barricades of rails were thrown up on the high ground about one mile and a half south of Namozine Creek. The enemy charged about 6.30 p. m., and were repulsed by artillery and infantry fire. They renewed the charge three times, the last at about 8 p. m., and were repulsed each time, without any loss on our part. At about 11 p. m. we commenced crossing the Namozine Creek, leaving Hinton's brigade to cover the passage. By 2 a. m. on the 3d the whole command had crossed, including the cavalry.

On Monday, the 3d of April, we moved at 6 a. m. and took the right-hand road at Namozine Church. After making an unpleasant passage of a small creek about two miles from the church, I received orders from Lieutenant-General Anderson (who had gone in advance on the previous day) to take the left-hand or Namozine road at Namozine Church, in order to cross Deep Creek at Brown's Bridge, the creek being impassable at the lower bridge. General Anderson at the same time sent instructions for the cavalry to follow the same road. I consequently took a left-hand road to cross a distance of two miles to the Namozine road. As we approached the latter road I sent forward Major Foote, assistant adjutant-general, to reconnoiter it and to see if the enemy or our cavalry occupied it. Major Foote reported that he saw two cavalrymen on the road, but whether they were ours or those of the enemy he was not able to decide. I then went forward in person, accompanied by Captain Sanders, aide-de-camp, and Major Foote. Sent out Major Foote, who went up to the Federal pickets before he determined their character, and was captured. The command moved forward and brushed the enemy's pickets from the Namozine road after a slight skirmish in which only one Federal was killed. Maj. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee here came up with cavalry and moved forward to forks of the road near Brown's Bridge, which we found in possession of the enemy. Moody's and Wallace's brigades immediately moved up in line and made an attack with skirmishers. Wise's brigade came up on the right and its skirmishers pressed forward. The enemy opened with artillery but were pushed back after a sharp brush, in which we lost —. Having fairly cleared the road we promptly moved in quick time by the left flank to Brown's Bridge, which we crossed, and passed some five miles from Tabernacle Church to vicinity of Bevil's Bridge, over the Appomattox River, where we came up with Pickett's division.

On Tuesday, the 4th of April, we moved at 8 a. m.; marched about four miles, in rear of Pickett's division, toward Amelia Court-House, to where the road by Tabernacle Church crosses the road to Court-House. The enemy appeared on the road to Tabernacle Church. A line of battle was formed across this road, and skirmishing, with artillery fire, on our part continued until night, the enemy's cavalry feeling my line from left to right. At night the cavalry formed to protect my right flank, and we rested until 3 a. m. on the 5th of April.

On Wednesday, 5th of April, came up with Hill's corps and Lieutenant-General Ewell's command; moved between the two past Amelia Court-House and marched all night.

On Thursday, April 6, my division marched in rear of Pickett's division and in front of that of Maj. Gen. Custis Lee. Early in the day the enemy made a dash down the road between Major-General Lee's division and my own, and some thirty or forty stragglers, collected by some staff officers (Colonel Venable and Captain Whitner), held them in check until I halted and closed my command to the left to cover the road. Sharp skirmishing continued on my left for some two hours, during which the men constructed temporary breast-works, and Pickett's division closed on mine. Major-General Lee closed upon my left very shortly after the dash was made. About 2 p. m. I was ordered, by command of General Anderson, to close to the right and follow Pickett's division, which had moved to the right in consequence of the burning of a wagon train and the occupation of the road in our front. Rapid firing was now heard in Pickett's division. Upon closing to that division, it was found that the enemy was still on the road in its front and holding a commanding position, and my division was soon engaged in heavy skirmishing. Two regiments on the left of Wise's brigade, which had previously been detached by General Anderson, here took position on the left of Wallace's brigade, having come up subsequently to the latter. General Wise, having discovered the advantages of the enemy's commanding position in his front, at once ordered a charge, which was executed gallantly by his two right regiments; but, perhaps, for want of orders from division commander, who was not advised of the movement, it was not carried out by the troops of the other brigades on his right. The enemy, however, was gallantly driven from the crest of the hill in front. About this time General Anderson sent a staff officer to say to me that, as we appeared to be driving the enemy, I should advance my whole command. Not having been advised of the advance in Wise's brigade, and being at the time engaged with other parts of the line, and believing that the firing proceeded from an assault of the enemy, and that we were only maintaining our position, I stated the latter fact in reply, and awaited a repetition of the order, as I gave the staff officer to understand I would do. Subsequently, having learned the facts in the case, and General Anderson having stated that he thought the advance of my command should be made, I proposed to try it, and had given the necessary orders, when I received instructions from General Anderson to face my command and march directly toward the west in line of battle, while Pickett's division moved by the right flank, connecting with my left, and General Lee's command moved by left flank, connecting with my right. Three brigades of my division were placed in line, when I was urged, through a staff officer of General Anderson, to hasten the movement. Consequently, I moved the three brigades at once, leaving Moody's brigade, now in rear, to gain its position on my right, my whole division moving by rear rank. Upon passing out of the woods to an open field I halted the command to correct the line and to bring up Moody's brigade. The enemy's artillery now opened on our position from the rear and our left flank. The movement was resumed and a lane beyond the field was gained. The line was halted and corrected again. The command forward was given, when General Pickett rode up and asked me to halt until he connected with my left flank. At this moment the enemy appeared in rear of my left, having passed between my command and that of General Pickett's, and my troops broke and moved rapidly on to the west and gained the road in rear, which connected with the right or advanced portion of our army. I here reported to General Lee, who directed me, with my assistant adjutant-general, to collect together all the scattered forces from General Anderson's and General Ewell's commands. Darkness and the movement of our troops toward Farmville, under General Lee's instructions to assemble the stragglers on the north side of the Appomattox river, terminated the work here before much progress had been made therein. The losses in my division were quite small. A portion of the division provost guard, including its two ranking officers, were captured.

On the morning of the 7th of April General Wise, with his own brigade, Wallace's, about 250 of Moody's, and 80 of Ransom's brigade, arrived at Farnville, and formed on the hill on the north side of the Appomattox River. Here the work of collecting stragglers was further prosecuted. About 12 m., having been advised by an officer, who informed me that he was a member of Major-General Gordon's staff, that my command was assigned to General Gordon's corps, we marched under orders from the corps commander in direction of Lynchburg, and continued the movement until 11 o'clock at night.

On Saturday, April 8, 1865, we resumed our march at 4 a. m., and marched until about 3 p. m., encamping about one mile from Appomattox Court House. Under instructions given by the corps commander to Brigadier-General Walker, my division was moved out, under command of Brigadier-General Wallace, about 8 p. m., to Appomattox Court House, where it remained in line of battle all night, in consequence of a dash made by enemy's cavalry upon that position.

For the operations of the division on the 9th of April, I refer you to the report of Brigadier-General Wallace, who was in command on that day.

[B. R. JOHNSON,
Major-General.]

Capt. V. DABNEY,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Quaker road: Wise lost—killed, 3 officers, 17 men; wounded, 9 officers, 89 men; missing, 4 officers (4 wounded and missing), 53 men (3 wounded and missing); aggregate, 183.

March 31, White Oak road: Killed, 2 officers, 8 men; wounded, 6 officers, 74 men; missing, 8 officers (2 wounded and missing), 82 men (5 wounded and missing); aggregate, 187.

April 3: Wounded, 15 men.

April 9, loss about: Killed, 3 officers, 5 men; wounded and captured, 15; missing, 40; about 63.

April 9: Moody's brigade—captured after flag of truce passed out, 70 men, 16 officers.

---

No. 274.

Report of Brig. Gen. William H. Wallace, U. S. Army.

HEADQUARTERS WALLACE'S BRIGADE,
Near Appomattox Court-House, April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that this brigade was moved on the 28th ultimo from the lines near Hatcher's Run to a position near Burgess' Mills, where it remained in line during the day without being engaged, and retiring at night to its former camp.

On the 29th of March it was moved, with the rest of the division, to the plank road near Bevill's house, and at 3 p. m. was readvanced against a position of the enemy near Bevill's house (held by infantry and artillery), which it failed to carry. At night-fall it was withdrawn to the camp within the lines near Hatcher's Run.

On the 2d of April, instant, the remnant of the brigade which had escaped from the affair of April 1 at the Five Cross-Roads reported to Major-General Johnson at Ford's Depot, and was marched to a position on ——— Creek, where it intrenched and remained until 2 a. m., when it was moved across the creek and encamped.

On the 3d instant it was marched in the direction of Amelia Court-House, and skirmished with the enemy on the march.

On the 4th instant it moved on in the same direction, and intrenched about four miles from Amelia Court-House, where it repelled an attack by the enemy's cavalry skirmishers.

On the 5th instant the command marched through Amelia Court-House, and continued to march until 6 p. m. on the 6th instant, when it was placed in position, and about 12 m. repelled an attack of cavalry skirmishers, who were driven back some distance by our line. About 1 p. m. it was moved further on in the direction of the previous line of march, and ordered to hold a position, where it repelled an attack of cavalry skirmishers. At 5 p. m. it moved in line of battle in a direction unknown, with the division, which was attacked, after advancing a short distance, on its left flank by a party of cavalry and routed. The men, after falling back about a mile, were reassembled and marched to a road upon which the army was moving, where it joined the column and arrived at High Bridge about 11 p. m.

On the 7th instant, at 2 a. m., it moved to Farmville, and at 1 p. m. retreated with the army from that place.

On the 8th instant it reached a point about one mile from Appomattox Court-House, and at 10 p. m. was formed in line to meet a threatened attack. At 11 p. m. it was moved to Appomattox Court-House and again formed in line, the men sleeping on their arms. About this time I was directed to report with my command to Brigadier-General Evans, Second Army Corps.

The strength of the brigade on the 29th of March was about 1,300 aggregate, and the loss about 188. On the 2d of April about 350 men had been reassembled. The losses in the subsequent skirmishes cannot be stated, but were slight.

I beg to call attention to the conspicuous gallantry of Maj. R. J. Bettsill, Eighteenth South Carolina Volunteers, in all the actions mentioned in this report.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. WALLACE,
Brigadier-General.

Capt. J. E. SANDERS,
Aide-de-Camp.

---

No. 275.

Report of Lieut. Gen. Richard S. Ewell, C. S. Army.

SPRING HILL, TENN., December 20, 1865.

GENERAL: About the middle of February last I received a communication from you inclosing a law which I was directed to carry out. This law required preparations to be made for destroying the cotton, tobacco, &c., which the owners could not remove, in places exposed to capture by the enemy. I immediately sent Major Brown, of my staff, to Mayor Mayo with the document, and requested him to call a meeting of the common council to give their opinion as to the measures proper to be taken. After a free discussion with some of the council, and by their advice, I issued a circular to the "merchants and owners of cotton and tobacco," embodying the substance of your order and the law that accompanied it. This I intrusted to those gentlemen and to Maj. Isaac H. Carrington, provost-marshal, for distribution. Being informed a few hours later that it was misunderstood as to take effect at once, I substituted another, stating expressly that "the necessity had not yet arisen." Together with Mr. Scott, a tobacco owner and councilman, I visited and inspected all the warehouses containing tobacco, and after consulting the keepers we concluded they could be burned without danger of a general conflagration. I gave instructions to Major Carrington to make the necessary arrangements, and requested Mr. Scott and the other members of the council to consult with him and give him their views. The Ordnance Department offered to furnish barrels of turpentine to mix with the tobacco, so as to insure its burning, but this I declined for fear of setting fire to the city. I sent for the mayor and several of the most prominent citizens, earnestly urged upon them the danger of mob violence should we be forced to evacuate, and the entrance of Federal troops be delayed, and begged them to endeavor to organize a volunteer guard force for such an emergency, proffering the necessary arms. I regret to say but one man volunteered, and the rioters, as predicted, were unchecked.

On the night of Saturday, April 1, I received a dispatch from General Longstreet telling me he was going to the south side with two divisions, that Kershaw would be left on the lines, directing me to move whatever troops I could collect down the Darbytown road, and to ride by his headquarters for further instructions. I left my staff to see to the movement and collection of troops (of which only the cadets and three battalions of convalescents from the hospitals were in town) and rode down, but General Longstreet had gone before I reached his headquarters, and I received orders from his assistant adjutant-general, Colonel Latrobe, to relieve and send forward two brigades left on picket, which was done soon after sunrise by Colonel Shipp, commanding the cadets and convalescents.

At 10 a. m. of Sunday I received a message from Major Chestney, my assistant adjutant-general, to return at once to the city, and on doing so received the order for the evacuation, and to destroy the stores which could not be removed. All that time allowed was done.

General G. W. C. Lee's division, being mostly composed of heavy artillery, was almost without transportation, which was procured by impressing all that could be found.

All the guard forces were required to take the prisoners from the Libby and Castle Thunder, and as the militia had dispersed, being mostly foreigners, no troops remained in town, except a few convalescents. A mob of both sexes and all colors soon collected, and about 3 a. m. set fire to some buildings on Cary street, and began to plunder the city. The convalescents, then stationed in the square, were ordered to repress the riot, but their commander shortly reported himself unable to do so, his force being inadequate. I then ordered all my staff and couriers who could be spared to scour the streets, so as to intimidate the mob by a show of force, and sent word to General Kershaw, who was coming up from the lines, to hurry his leading regiment into town. By daylight the riot was subdued, but many buildings which I had carefully directed should be spared had been fired by the mob. The arsenal was thus destroyed, and a party of men went to burn the Tredegar Works, but were deterred by General Anderson arming his operatives and declaring his intention to resist. The small bridge over the canal on Fourteenth street was burned by incendiaries, who set a canal-boat on fire and pushed it under the bridge. This was evidently done in hopes of embarrassing our retreat, and General Kershaw's division passed the bridge while on fire at a double-quick. By 7 a. m. the last troops had reached the south side, and Mayo's and the railroad bridges were set on fire.

From the hills above Manchester we watched for some time the progress of the flames, and all at once saw fire break out through the roof of one of the large mills on the side furthest from the burning warehouses, the flames from which scarcely reached half way up the sides of the mill. It was considered a fire-proof building, and extra precautions had been taken by the owners. I cannot conceive how it could have caught in such a place, unless set on fire. I have been told that Mr. Crenshaw found his mill full of plunderers, whom he got out by agreeing to give them all the provisions in the mill, and that they were in the act of building a fire on the upper story of the mill when discovered. I tried to find out if this were true, but no reply has come to the letters written for that purpose. If correct, it affords exact proof of what I am firmly convinced is the case—that the burning of Richmond was the work of incendiaries, and might have been prevented by the citizens.

General G. W. C. Lee's division crossed the river at Drewry's, and united with Kershaw a few miles from Manchester. We marched very rapidly to join the main body, and though delayed by the swollen condition of the Appomattox came up with it near Amelia Court-House on the 5th of April. We were to march all that night, but, owing to the slow progress of the trains and troops in front, had only reached Amelia Springs, seven miles off, by 8 a. m. Parties of cavalry here appeared on our left flank, and about 11 a. m. made an effort to get to the road on which our trains were moving past us. Gordon's corps, the rear guard, was being hard pushed at the same time. I threw out as skirmishers part of Colonel Atkinson's command of heavy artillery, of General Lee's division, and a battalion of light artillery, acting as infantry, under Captain Dement, which had just been assigned to me. These troops soon repelled the enemy's cavalry skirmishers. Their demonstrations continued from 11 a. m. till 2 p. m., and I retained my troops in position to cover the passage of the trains. As soon as they were out of the way I followed General Anderson's corps, and was followed by General Gordon, who brought up the rear of the trains, constantly fighting.

On crossing a little stream known as Sailor's Creek, I met General Fitz Lee, who informed me that a large force of cavalry held the road just in front of General Anderson, and was so strongly posted that he had halted a short distance ahead. The trains were turned into a road nearer the river, while I hurried to General Anderson's aid. General Gordon's corps turned off after the trains. General Anderson informed me that at least two divisions of cavalry were in his front, and suggested two modes of escape—either to unite our forces and break through, or to move to the right through the woods and try to strike a road which ran toward Farmville. I recommended the latter alternative, but as he knew the ground and I did not, and had no one who did, I left the dispositions to him. Before any were made the enemy appeared in rear of my column in large force preparing to attack. General Anderson informed me that he would make the attack in front if I would hold in check those in rear, which I did until his troops were broken and dispersed.

I had no artillery, all being with the train. My line ran across a little ravine which leads nearly at right angles toward Sailor's Creek. General G. W. C. Lee was on the left, with the Naval Battalion, under Commodore Tucker, behind his right. Kershaw's division was on the right. All of Lee's and part of Kershaw's division were posted behind a rising ground that afforded some shelter from artillery. The creek was perhaps 300 yards in their front, with brush pines between and a cleared field beyond it. In this the enemy's artillery took a commanding position, and finding we had none to reply, soon approached within 800 yards and opened a terrible fire. After nearly half an hour of this, their infantry advanced, crossing the creek above and below us at the same time. Just as it attacked General Anderson made his assault, which was repulsed in five minutes. I had ridden up near his lines with him to see the result, when a staff officer, who had followed his troops in their charge, brought him word of its failure. General Anderson rode rapidly toward his command. I returned to mine to see if it were yet too late to try the other plan of escape. On riding past my left I came suddenly upon a strong line of the enemy's skirmishers advancing upon my left rear. This closed the only avenue of escape, as shells and even bullets were crossing each other from front and rear over my troops, and my right was completely enveloped. I surrendered myself and staff to a cavalry officer who came in by the same road General Anderson had gone out on. At my request he sent a messenger to General G. W. C. Lee, who was nearest, with a note from me telling him he was surrounded, General Anderson's attack had failed, I had surrendered, and he had better do so too, to prevent useless loss of life, though I gave no orders, being a prisoner. Before the messenger reached him General Lee had been captured, as had General Kershaw, and the whole of my command.

My two divisions numbered about 3,000 each at the time of the evacuation; 2,800 were taken prisoners, about 150 killed and wounded. The difference of over 3,000 was caused mainly by the fatigue of four days' and nights' almost constant marching, the last two days with nothing to eat. Before our capture I saw men eating raw fresh meat as they marched in ranks.

The heavy artillery brigade of Lee's division was closely engaged for the first time on this occasion, and spite of the kill of its commander, Colonel Critchfield, displayed a coolness and gallantry that earned the praise of the veterans who fought alongside of it, and even of the enemy.

I was informed at General Wright's headquarters, whither I was carried after my capture, that 30,000 men were engaged with us when we surrendered, namely, two infantry corps and Ouster's and Merritt's divisions of cavalry.

I deem it proper to remark that the discipline preserved in camp and on the march by General G. W. C. Lee, and the manner in which he handled his troops in action, fully justified the request I had made for his promotion. General Kershaw, who had only been a few days under my command, behaved with his usual coolness and judgment.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. S. EWELL,
Late Lieutenant-General, U. S. Army.

General R. E. LEE,
Lexington, Va.

No. 276.

Report of Maj. Gen. George W. C. Lee, U. S. Army.

RICHMOND, VA., April 25, 1865.

COLONEL: In obedience to instructions, I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of my command from the time of its leaving the lines at Chaffin's farm, on Sunday night, April 2, 1865, to its capture on the afternoon of the following Thursday, April 6, 1865:

The order to withdraw from the intrenchments was received by me at Major-General Kershaw's quarters, about 10 p. m. of the 2d of April, and was issued to the two brigades (Barton's and Crutchfield's) under my command, at Chaffin's farm, about 11 p. m. of that night. The wagons, which had been loaded up in obedience to the preparatory order received at Chaffin's on the afternoon of Sunday, April 2, were at once sent off to cross James River at Richmond and proceeded to Amelia Court-House, via Buckingham road and Meadville, as ordered. Not being able to cross the Appomattox River near Meadville, the wagon train moved up to Clemmuntown, there made the passage of the river, and proceeded with safety until within about four miles of Amelia Court-House, when it was destroyed by a detachment of the enemy's cavalry on the morning of Wednesday, April 5, with the baggage of my division and 20,000 good rations, as I have recently learned from the division commissary, who escaped. The troops (Barton's and Crutchfield's brigades) crossed the James River on the Wilton bridge about 1 a. m. of Monday, April 3. The picket-line was withdrawn at 3 o'clock of that morning, and passed safely over the same bridge about daylight. My command then moved to Branch Church, and thence by Gregory's to the Genito road, as directed, camping that night about half a mile beyond Tomahawk Church.

In the absence of Lieutenant-General Ewell in a Northern prison, it may be proper for me to mention here that the detachments of troops in Richmond and Kershaw's division, followed by Gary's cavalry, or a portion of it, crossed the James River at Richmond, and followed my division to Tomahawk Church.

On the following morning, Tuesday, April 4, it being positively ascertained that the Appomattox River could not be crossed at Genito Bridge, arrangements were made to prepare the railroad bridge at Mattox Station for the passage of the wagons, artillery, and troops, which was accomplished that night, and all went into camp on the hills beyond the river.

Early on Wednesday, April 5, the bridge having been destroyed, the column moved on to Amelia Court-House, at which place the Naval Battalion, commanded by Commodore Tucker, and the command of Maj. Frank Smith, from Howlett's, were added to my division. From Amelia Court-House, General Ewell's column, following that of General Anderson and followed by that of General Gordon, much impeded by the wagon trains, moved toward Jetersville and Amelia Springs, marching slowly all night. During this night march, firing having commenced between our flankers and some of the enemy's scouts, as is supposed, Maj. Frank Smith was mortally wounded, Captain Nash, assistant adjutant-general, Barton's brigade, lost a leg, and several others, whose names I have not been able to ascertain, were wounded. We passed Amelia Springs on the morning of Thursday, April 6, and moved toward Rice's Station. About midday, immediately after crossing a little stream within about two miles of Sailor's Creek, the enemy's cavalry made an attack upon a portion of General Anderson's column, about a mile in advance of us, at the point where the wagon train turned off to the right, causing some delay and confusion in the train. The cavalry was soon driven off, and my division, followed by General Kershaw's, closed upon General Anderson. About this time the enemy attacked our train at the stream we had shortly before crossed, and appeared in heavy force to the left of our line of march between this stream and Sailor's Creek, which, measured on the road we traveled, are about two miles apart. Word was also received from General Gordon that the enemy was pressing him heavily. To cover the wagon train and prevent General Gordon from being cut off, line of battle was formed along the road and a strong line of skirmishers was thrown out, which drove back the enemy's skirmishers, and held him in check until General Gordon came up in the rear of the wagons, which must have been from one to two hours after the skirmishing commenced.

So soon as General Gordon closed up, my division, following General Anderson's rear and followed by General Kershaw, moved on across Sailor's Creek toward the point where General Pickett was understood to be engaged with the enemy's cavalry, which had cut the line of march in the interval between him and General Mahone. General Gordon having filed off to the right after the wagon trains, the enemy's cavalry followed closely upon General Kershaw's rear, driving it across Sailor's Creek, and soon after the enemy's infantry (said to be the Sixth Corps) massed rapidly in our rear. To meet this movement General Kershaw's division formed on the right and mine on the left of the road upon which we were moving, our line of battle being across the road, facing Sailor's Creek, which we had not long passed. Before my troops got into position the enemy opened a heavy fire of artillery upon our lines, which was continued up to the time of our capture. After shelling our lines and skirmishing for some time, an hour or more, the enemy's infantry advanced and were repulsed, and that portion which attacked the artillery brigade was charged by it and driven back across Sailor's Creek. This brigade was then brought back to its original position in line of battle under a heavy fire of artillery. Finding that Kershaw's division, which was on my right, had been obliged to retire, in consequence of the enemy having turned his right flank, and that my command was entirely surrounded, to prevent useless sacrifice of life the firing was stopped by some of my officers, aided by some of the enemy's, and the officers and men taken as prisoners of war.

I cannot too highly praise the conduct of my command, and hope to have an opportunity of doing it full justice when reports are received from the brigade commanders. Among a number of brave men killed or wounded I regret to have to announce the name of Colonel Crutchfield, who commanded the artillery brigade. He was killed after gallantly leading a successful charge against the enemy. I have also to mourn the loss of Lieut. Robert Goldsborough, my aide-de-camp, who was mortally wounded by a fragment of a shell, while efficiently discharging his duty.

In the absence of Generals Ewell and Kershaw in a Northern prison, I have endeavored to give the principal facts of the march and capture of the former's command so far as I am acquainted with them, and although for the want of reports, memoranda, or maps I may be mistaken in some minor matters, I believe in the main features this report will be found to be correct so far as it goes.

G. W. C. LEE,
Major-General.

Lieut. Col. W. H. TAYLOR, Assistant Adjutant-General.

P. S.—I was told after my capture that the enemy had two corps of infantry and three divisions of cavalry opposed to us at Sailor's Creek, and was informed by General Ewell that he had sent me an order to surrender, being convinced of the hopelessness of further resistance. This order was not received by me.

G. W. C. L.

[Memorandum.]

On the morning of Thursday, April 6, when the enemy attacked our wagon train between Sandy and Sailor's Creeks, General Anderson, in conjunction with General Ewell, formed line of battle along the road between these two streams (as I have already stated in my report) to protect the train and prevent General Gordon, who was bringing up the rear of the wagon train, from being cut off. General Anderson seemed anxious to push on, and said to me that he must move on to support General Pickett, who was engaged with the enemy farther on toward Rice's Station (and as I suppose beyond Sailor's Creek). As soon as General Gordon closed up on General Ewell's rear (Kershaw), General Anderson moved forward toward Sailor's Creek. My division followed, and while its head was halted on the hill beyond Sailor's Creek to allow the rear to close up, General Ewell told me that the enemy had cut the road in advance of us, and that General Anderson wished us to unite with him and drive the enemy out of the way. To this end my division moved forward a few hundred yards, when the enemy's driving General Kershaw's rear across Sailor's Creek, and his appearance in heavy force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery in our rear, stopped the farther movement. General Anderson told General Ewell that the latter would have as much as he could do to take care of the rear, and that he (General Anderson) would endeavor to drive the enemy out of the way in front. General Anderson did make the attack, but failed, losing Brigadier-Generals Huntton and Corse and a large number of his officers and men as prisoners. No other general officers were captured at that time of General Anderson's command, as far as I know. General Ewell, with all his general officers, were taken prisoners.

But little of the above came under my personal observation. Most of the statement was gathered from conversations with General Ewell and other officers after the capture.

G. W. C. LEE,
Major-General.

No. 277.

Report of Maj. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, C. S. Army, commanding Cavalry Corps.

RICHMOND, VA., April 22, 1865.

GENERAL: I comply with pleasure with the desire expressed by you to have a report of the last operations of the cavalry of your army, and have the honor to submit the following:

On the 28th of March my division moved from its position on the extreme left of our lines in front of Richmond, on the north side of James River, marched to Petersburg and up the South Side Railroad, reaching Sutherland's Station, nineteen miles from Petersburg, on the 29th. In compliance with verbal instructions received from you, I marched the next day (30th) toward Dinwiddie Court-House, via Five Forks, to watch and counteract the operations threatened by the massing of the Federal cavalry at Dinwiddie Court-House under Sheridan. After passing Five Forks a portion of the enemy's cavalry were encountered with success, and driven back upon their large reserves near the Court-House. Night put an end to further operations, and my division was encamped in the vicinity of Five Forks. My loss, though slight, included Brig. Gen. W. H. Payne among the wounded; and the loss of the services of this bold, capable officer was severely felt in all subsequent movements. I was joined during the evening by the divisions of Maj. Gens. W. H. F. Lee and Rosser, and, by order of the commanding general, took command of the Cavalry Corps.

On the 31st of March, Pickett coming up with five small brigades of infantry, we attacked the very large force of the enemy's cavalry in our front at Five Forks, killed and wounded many, captured over 100 prisoners, and drove them to within half a mile of Dinwiddie Court-House. Mumford, in command of my old division, held our lines in front of the enemy's position, whilst the remaining two divisions of cavalry, preceding the infantry, moved by a concealed wooded road to turn and attack their flank. A short stream, strongly defended at its crossing, presented an unexpected obstacle to the sudden attack contemplated. It was finally carried, however, with loss in W. H. F. Lee's and Rosser's divisions. Mumford, attacking about the same time, also successfully carried the temporary works thrown up in his front, and by a gallant advance again united his command with the other divisions. Darkness put an end to our further advance. Amongst the wounded were numbered Major-General Rosser, slightly, Captain Dawson, my very efficient and gallant chief of ordnance, severely, and Lieutenant-Colonel Field, Third Virginia Cavalry; Lieutenant Croxton, Fourth Virginia, was killed, and a number of others whose names I have not been able to obtain.

Our position in the vicinity of Dinwiddie Court-House brought us in rear of the left of the infantry confronting the right of our line of battle at Burgess' Mills, and ascertaining during the night that that force, consisting of the Fifth Corps, had about-faced and was marching to the support of Sheridan and his discomfited cavalry, which would have brought them directly upon our left flank, at daylight on the 1st we commenced moving back to our former position at Five Forks, where Pickett placed his infantry in line of battle. W. H. F. Lee was on his right, one regiment of Mumford's command on his left, uniting with the pickets of General Roberts' command, who filled the gap between our position and the right of our main army, then at Burgess' Mills. Rosser was placed just in rear of the center as a reserve, Hatcher's Rm intervening between him and our line. Everything continued quiet until about 3 p. m., when reports reached me of a large body of infantry marching around and menacing our left flank. I ordered Mumford to go in person, ascertain the exact condition of affairs, hold his command in readiness, and if necessary order it up at once. He soon sent for it, and it reached its position just in time to receive the attack. A division of two small brigades of cavalry was not able long to withstand the attack of a Federal corps of infantry, and that force soon crushed in Pickett's left flank, swept it away, and before Rosser could cross Hatcher's Run the position at the Forks was seized and held and an advance toward the railroad made. It was repulsed by Rosser. Pickett was driven rapidly toward the prolongation of the right of his line of battle by the combined attack of this infantry corps and Sheridan's cavalry, making a total of over 26,000 men, to which he was opposed with 7,000 men of all arms. Our forces were driven back some miles, the retreat degenerating into a rout, being followed up principally by the cavalry, whilst the infantry corps held the position our troops were first driven from, threatening an advance upon the railroad, and paralyzing the force of reserve cavalry by necessitating its being stationary in an interposing position to check or retard such an advance. The disastrous halt was made at Five Forks upon the day of our retrograde movement from Dinwiddie Court-House, on account of the importance of the location as a point of observation to watch and develop movements then evidently in contemplation for an attack on our left flank or upon our line of railroad communication, the importance of preserving which intact could not be overestimated. It was thought Pickett's infantry and my cavalry could successfully contend against the superior numbers of the enemy's cavalry (and which the fighting the day before amply verified), and should their infantry be withdrawn from the position of their lines contiguous to our operations, a corresponding force of our own would have thus been made available and could be used to restore the status, the distance from Burgess' Mills (the terminus, respectively, of the right and left of the two lines of battle) being short from Five Forks, with a plain road joining the two. I remained in position on Hatcher's Run, near Five Forks, during the night, and was joined by the cavalry which was driven back the previous afternoon and by Lieutenant-General Anderson, with Wise's and Gracie's brigades, who, leaving the position at Burgess' Mills, had marched by a circuitous route to our relief. Had he advanced up the direct road it would have brought him on the flank and rear of the infantry forming the enemy's right, which attacked our left at Five Forks, and probably changed the result of the unequal contest. Whilst Anderson was marching, the Fifth Corps was marching back, and was enabled to participate in the attack upon our lines the next day, whilst the services of the three infantry brigades which General Anderson re-enforced us by too late for use and the live with Pickett, by their absence, increased the disparity between the contending forces upon the next day for the possession of the lines circumvallating Petersburg.

On April 3 General Anderson, learning that the enemy had been successful in penetrating our lines, and that our army was withdrawing from the vicinity of Richmond and Petersburg, commenced moving back on the Nanozine and Tabernacle road toward Amelia Court-House. I followed, protecting his rear and skirmishing with the enemy's advance until Amelia Court-House was reached, on the 5th instant. At Deep Creek, en route, the command was placed in line of battle to take advantage of the defensive position offered and to give a check to the enemy's rapid advance. Wise's and Hinton's brigades constituted a part of the rear guard at that time. The attack was not made upon us until after dark, and was principally sustained by Manford's command, of my old division, with a steadiness reflecting high credit upon the valor and discipline of his men. Owing to the fact that General Heth's troops were expected to arrive by the road by which the enemy advanced, they were permitted to approach very close to our lines, and it was not until Lieutenant-Colonel Strother, Fourth Virginia Cavalry, was sent to reconnoiter that it was ascertained who they were, he having walked into their line of skirmishers, which were so near to ours that the questions asked him were distinctly heard by our troops. At another of the temporary halts upon this march to check the enemy in the vicinity of Namozine Church, that very excellent North Carolina brigade, of W. H. F. Lee's division, suffered severely. The troops had been placed in motion again to resume the march. This brigade was the rear of the column, and I was obliged to retain it in position to prevent the enemy from attacking the remainder of the command. Whilst getting in motion their rapidly arriving forces soon augmented the troops it was so gallantly holding in check, and produced a concentration impossible for it to resist. Its commander, Brigadier-General Barringer, was captured whilst in the steady discharge of his duties, and his loss was keenly felt by the command. I also had the great misfortune to be deprived of the services of my most efficient and untiring adjutant-general, Maj. J. D. Ferguson, who was captured about the same time, and whose assistance, always important, was especially desirable at this time.

Reporting to the commanding general at Amelia Court-House on the 5th, I was ordered to move with my command on the Paineville road to protect the wagon train, a portion of which was reported to have been attacked by some of the enemy's cavalry. W. H. F. Lee was detached and sent in advance of Longstreet, who was moving from the Court-House toward Jetersville. I found the enemy had attacked and burned a portion of the cavalry train, including my own headquarters wagons, and had retreated again toward Jetersville. I started at once in pursuit, and soon closed up on Gary with his brigade, who had been previously dispatched in that direction, and was engaging their rear near Paineville. Re-enforcing him, the enemy were rapidly driven within a mile of Jetersville, where their infantry were found in large force. (A dispatch captured that night showed General Grant to be there in person.) The pursuit was discontinued, and the command placed in camp at Amelia Springs.

In this encounter 30 of the enemy were killed, principally with the sabre, and 150 wounded and captured. The attack was made with Rosser's division, mounted, supported by a portion of my old division, dismounted. The gallantry of Brigadier-General Dearing in leading the charge of his command was here very conspicuous. Our loss was not very heavy, and I can only recall in this connection the mortally wounding of two of my bravest and best young officers, Capt. Hugh McGuire, Eleventh Virginia Cavalry, and Capt. James Rutherford, assistant inspector-general, General Dearing's staff.

The portion of the enemy's cavalry engaged in this raid had preceded the column which had been marching on our left flank, and had reached Jetersville, on the Danville railroad, before Longstreet arrived in that vicinity. Their cavalry crossed the railroad and swept around on the north of our right marching flank, and hence came upon the wagon train.

During the night, at Amelia Springs, Longstreet's corps, deflected from its original line of march by the occupation of Jetersville and Burkeville by the enemy, passed by. The commanding general arrived also, and I received from him orders to march at daylight after General Longstreet. The main body of the enemy's cavalry had ceased to follow our rear after our approach to Amelia Court-House, and was moving on a parallel route upon our left marching flank.

The next morning (6th of April) I started the main portion of my command under Rosser (the senior officer present), and remained, in compliance with instructions, to explain in person to the first infantry officer who came up the situation of things, and to urge the importance of his keeping a sharp watch upon his left flank, as it was feared by the commanding general the enemy might tap the marching column coming down from the Amelia Springs and Jetersville road. I then rode on to rejoin the greater part of my command en route toward Rice's Station, but was stopped after crossing Sailor's Creek by the interposition of the enemy's cavalry, who, coming from their position on the railroad in the vicinity of Jetersville, had seized the road upon which we were marching after the rear of Longstreet had passed along and previous to the arrival of the head of Ewell's command. I was detained there some time, hoping an attack would be made to reopen the way. The infantry were formed in line of battle at right angles to the road and facing the direction in which they were marching. An attack commenced, but was stopped, though the enemy were being rapidly driven from our front. In the meantime the enemy made his appearance in the rear of Ewell's column, necessitating the formation of another line of battle on Sailor's Creek, the direction from which they had marched. The line of battle thus originally formed faced in opposite directions; and remained quietly in position until the Federal infantry re-enforced their large force of cavalry, and with it had almost entirely surrounded them. Though portions of this force, particularly the command of General G. W. C. Lee, fought with a gallantry never surpassed, their defeat and surrender were inevitable, after the dispositions of the enemy to effect it. I am clearly of the opinion (and I only express it because I was a witness of all that happened until just previous to the surrender) that had the troops been rapidly massed when their march was first interrupted, they could have cleared the way and been able to fall into line of battle on Longstreet's left, who was taking position at Rice's Station, some few miles ahead; or had the heads of the column been turned obliquely off in a western direction, more toward the road Gordon and the wagons were moving upon, an echelon formation adopted, the nature of the ground, wooded and much broken, would have kept the cavalry from harassing them sufficiently to retard their progress until the arrival of their infantry. I rode out by that way with my staff and a few men just previous to Ewell's surrender, and found it so feasible that I immediately sent a staff officer back to Generals Ewell and Anderson to reiterate to them my convictions previously expressed, and now so much strengthened by my own experience. The halt, allowing time for the accumulation of the enemy's troops, proved fatal. General Rosser, in command of his own, and my old division, under Munford, proceeded to Rice's Station, on the South Side road, where learning that a force had been detached from the Federal left, confronting Longstreet at that point, to open on his rear, moved at once to counteract their purpose. The enemy were overtaken and attacked on the road toward and in the vicinity of High Bridge. After a sharp encounter they were defeated, our forces capturing some 780 prisoners, and killing and wounding a large number, including amongst the killed their commander, Brigadier-General Read, chief of staff to General Ord, commanding Army of the James, whose body fell into our hands. The enemy's force proved to be a picked body of infantry and a squadron of cavalry, which, placed under this staff officer, had for its object the destruction of the High Bridge over the Appomattox, in our rear. The success was indeed dearly bought, for the lives of Brigadier-General Dearing, of Rosser's division, Colonel Boston, Fifth Virginia Cavalry, commanding Payne's brigade, of my old division, and Maj. James W. Thomson, Stuart Horse

Artillery, and Rosser's chief in that arm, were lost in attaining it. The splendid gallantry of these three officers had been tested on many fields, and their conspicuous valor was universally known. The genial and dashing Thomson was killed leading cavalry, his guns not being present.

On the night of the 6th the position at Rice's Station was abandoned, and I moved in rear of Longstreet, crossing the Appomattox a little above Farnville. Fighting took place between my rear and enemy's advance in the vicinity and in the streets of Farnville, it being found necessary to retard their progress to give time for the passage of the river by our troops.

On the 7th a portion of the enemy's cavalry, having crossed the river again, made an attack on the wagon train moving upon our line of march. They were met by Munford in front, whilst Rosser attacked their flank, and were driven back with considerable loss, including amongst the captured their commanding general, J. Irvin Gregg. Our position was held near this point of attack until 12 p. m., when the march was resumed toward Appomattox Court-House. The cavalry followed in the rear of Longstreet's corps, and maintained that order of march throughout the 8th, followed by a portion of the Federal infantry. Their cavalry and the remainder of their infantry pursued the line of railroad from Farnville to Appomattox Station.

During the evening of the 8th I received orders to move the cavalry corps to the front, and to report in person to the commanding general. Upon arriving at his headquarters I found General Longstreet there, and we were soon after joined by General Gordon. The condition of our situation was explained by the commanding general to us as the commanders of his three corps, and the correspondence between General Grant and himself, as far as it had then progressed, was laid before us. It was decided that I should attack the enemy's cavalry at daylight, then reported as obstructing our farther march; Gordon was to support me, and in case nothing but cavalry were discovered we were to clear it from our route and open a way for our remaining troops; but in case they were supported by heavy bodies of infantry the commanding general should be at once notified, in order that a flag of truce should be sent to accede to the only alternative left us. The enemy were enabled to take position across our line of march by moving up from Appomattox Station, which they reached earlier than our main advance, in consequence of our march being retarded by our wagon trains.

At daybreak on the 9th Gordon's command, numbering about 1,600 muskets, was formed in line of battle half a mile west of Appomattox Court-House, on the Lynchburg road. The cavalry corps was formed on his right, W. H. F. Lee's division being nearest the infantry, Rosser's in the center, and Munford's on the extreme right, making a mounted force of about 2,400 men. Our attack was made about sunrise, and the enemy's cavalry quickly driven out of the way, with a loss of two guns and a number of prisoners. The arrival at this time of two corps of their infantry necessitated the retiring of our lines, during which, and knowing what would be the result, I withdrew the cavalry, W. H. F. Lee retiring toward our rear, and Rosser and Munford out toward Lynchburg, having cleared that road of the enemy. Upon hearing that the Army of Northern Virginia had surrendered, the men were generally dispersed and rode off to their homes, subject to reassembling for a continuation of the struggle. I rode out in person with a portion of W. H. F. Lee's division, the nearest to me at that time, and previous to the negotiations between the commanders of the two armies. It will be recalled that my action was in accordance with the views I had expressed in the council the night before—that if a surrender was compelled the next day, I would try to extricate the cavalry; provided it could be done without compromising the action of the commanding general, but that I would not avail myself of a cessation of hostilities pending the existence of a flag of truce. I had no understanding with General Gordon that he should communicate to you the information of the presence of the enemy's infantry upon the road in our front. Apart from the fond, though forlorn, hope that future operations were still in store for the cavalry, I was desirous that they should not be included in the capitulations, because the ownership of their horses was vested in themselves, and I deemed it doubtful that terms would be offered allowing such ownership to continue. A few days convinced me of the impracticability of longer entertaining such hopes, and I rode into the Federal lines and accepted for myself the terms offered the officers of the Army of Northern Virginia. My cavalry are being paroled at the nearest places for such purposes in their counties.

The burning by the enemy of all my retained reports, records, and data of every kind near Paineville, in Amelia County, which were in one of the wagons destroyed, and my inability to get reports from my officers, is my apology for the rendition of a report incomplete in many, though I think minor, details. I particularly regret not being able to do justice in this the only way I can to the many acts of gallantry performed by officers and men upon the memorable retreat; but such conduct is usually derived from the reports of subordinate officers, the absence of which will explain it. I testify, however, to the general conduct of my officers and men as highly creditable to themselves upon every occasion which called forth its display. They fought every day from the 29th of March to the 9th of April, both inclusive, with a valor as steady as of yore, and whose brightness was not dimmed by the increasing clouds of adversity. I desire to call attention to the marked and excellent behavior of Generals W. H. F. Lee, Rosser, and Munford, commanding divisions. The former was detached from the main command, being the senior division commander, whenever it became necessary for a force to operate separately, and I hope has made a report direct to the commanding general. He surrendered with the army at Appomattox Court-House. The other two succeeded in getting out, and immediately made arrangements to continue the struggle, until the capitulation of General Johnston's army brought the convincing proof that a further resistance was useless. The notice of the commanding general is also directed to Brig. Gens. Henry A. Wise and Eppa Hunton, commanding Infantry brigades, and who were more or less under my command until Amelia Court-House was reached. The disheartening surrounding influences had no effect upon them; they kept their duty plainly in view, and they fully performed it. The past services of General Henry A. Wise, his antecedents in civil life, and his age, caused his bearing upon this most trying retreat to shine conspicuously forth. His unconquerable spirit was filled with as much earnestness and zeal in April, 1865, as when he first took up arms four years ago, and the freedom with which he exposed a long life helen with honors proved he was willing to sacrifice it if it would conduce toward attaining the liberty of his country. Brigadier General Munford, commanding my division, mentions most favorably Col. W. A. Morgan, First Virginia Cavalry; Col. W. B. Wooldridge, Fourth Virginia; Lieut. Col. Cary Breckinridge, Second Virginia (a brother of the gallant Capt. James Breckinridge, of the same regiment, who was killed at Five Forks, as was not previously mentioned); Lieutenant-Colonels Old, Fourth Virginia, and Irving, First Virginia—all of Minniford's old brigade; Capt. Henry Lee, assistant adjutant-general; Lieut. Abram Warwick, aide-de-camp; Lieut. Mortimer Rogers, ordnance officer; and Sergt. Maj. L. Griffin, Second Virginia Cavalry.

I cannot close this my last official report without commending for their valuable services the following officers of my staff not previously mentioned, and who at the last moment were found doing their duty on the fated field of Appomattox: Majors Mason and Treanor, assistant adjutant and inspector generals; Maj. W. B. Warwick, chief commissary; Dr. A. C. Randolph, chief surgeon; Major Breathed, chief of artillery; Maj. G. M. Lyns, formerly of General Stuart's staff, and Capt. Lewellyn Sanderson, who, having just arrived from his native country, Ireland, joined me previous to the fall of Petersburg, and remained with me to the last. The proverbial intrepidity of the dashing Mason and reckless Breathed upon every battle-field of the war that the Army of Northern Virginia contended for is too well known for me to do more than refer to. Major Warwick, apart from his onerous duties, rendered services on many fields, his cool courage causing him often to be employed in duties not immediately pertaining to his office. I deeply regret being obliged to mention the dangerous wounding of my aide-de-camp, Lieut. Charles Minnegerode, jr. One of the last minie-balls that whistled on its cruel errand over the field of Appomattox passed entirely through the upper part of his body. He fell at my side, where for three long years he had discharged his duties with an affectionate fidelity never exceeded, a courage never surpassed. Wonderfully passing unharmed through the many battles fought by the two principal armies in this State (for an impetuous spirit often carried him where the fire was hottest), he was left at last, writhing in his great pain, to the mercy of the victors upon the field of our last struggle. The rapidly advancing lines of the enemy prevented his removal, and as we turned away the wet eyes and sorrowing hearts silently told that one was no longer in our midst. Lieutenant Minnegerode combined the qualities of an aide-de-camp to a general officer in a remarkable degree. His personal services to me will forever be prized and remembered, whilst his intelligence, amiability, and brightness of disposition rendered him an object of endearment to all.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

FITZHUGH LEE,
Major-General, Commanding Cavalry.

General R. E. LEE.

---

APRIL 4, 1865.—Capture of the steamer Harriet De Ford, near Fair Haven, Chesapeake Bay, Md.

Report of Capt. Thaddeus Fitzhugh, Fifth Virginia Cavalry.

FREDRICKSBURG, VA., April 16, 1865.

GENERAL: In February, 1865, in obedience to orders from you, I reported to General R. E. Lee, then before Petersburg, to submit to him the expediency of an expedition to Cherrystone, on the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay, for the purpose of capturing the steamers Eolus and Titan. In the interview the general inquired whether a transport laden with supplies for General Grant's army could not likewise be seized and run into certain inlets, and by the aid of the land forces the supplies secured and brought to the Confederate army. Thinking such a thing possible I so informed him and offered to undertake it. He then directed me to report to my commanding officer, who would give me a detail of thirty or forty men, and to Capt. S. S. Lee, of the Confederate Navy, who would give me whatever assistance I needed in that department. I was directed by him to go into Chesapeake Bay at or near the mouth of the Rappahannock in such boats as I could there secure and proceed up the bay to such point as in my judgment might promise the capture of the steamers Highland Light or Harriet De Ford at such point below Annapolis as a copy of the Baltimore Gazette informed us they stopped. If successful in the capture of the steamers I was to proceed down the bay, seize such transports loaded with stores as I could, and push them into certain inlets above the Rappahannock River, where two companies of Mosby's battalion and a train of wagons under charge of Major Robinson, of the quartermaster's department, would secure the goods from the transports, take them across the Rappahannock at Boulware's Ferry, and then to the Confederate army at Richmond and Petersburg.

On the receipt of the above order I proceeded to execute it, and procured three open boats in which, under cover of night, we started up the bay from Wind-Mill Point, on the north side of the Rappahannock, reaching the Patomac River the next morning before day, where we remained for two days in consequence of head winds. On the third night, finding wind and tide favorable, we started, keeping so close inshore as to hear them talking on the wharf at Point Lookout.

The next morning at about sunrise we reached Cedar Point, near the mouth of the Patuxent River, where we hid our boats in the cedar brakes and my wearied men rested during the day. I with one man went up in the country to a small village and reported ourselves as deserters from Grant's army, who desired to go to Baltimore. From the citizens I learned that the De Ford would drop down the river the next day en route for Baltimore, touching at the town of Marlborough. There being telegraphic communication from that place to Point Lookout and Washington City I decided it unsafe to attempt a capture from that point, but learning she would also make a landing at Fair Haven, about fourteen miles below Annapolis, I decided on that place. As soon as it was dark we launched our boats and with a fair wind and tide started up the bay as fast as our oars and sails would take us. Reaching Herring Bay the next morning about 4 o'clock we found it all dotted over with the lights from the mast-heads of the numerous vessels at anchor, and selecting one of the largest as well as the most isolated we proceeded to capture her as a prize to operate from as well as secrete my men until time for action. Arousing our officers and men from their quiet slumbers we took possession of the boat, securing the prisoners below under guard, where my men feasted on the fine oysters with which she was about one-third loaded. That morning equipping nineteen of my best men in the clothes of the boats crew we went on shore leaving the prisoners and balance of the men in charge of Lieutenant Dutton. On shore I learned that the Highland Light (one of the fastest boats on the bay) would make a landing at a wharf on West River a few miles across by land from Fair Haven. I secured a wagon and team and we started over, stating that we were wood choppers, who wished to go to the eastern shore of Maryland to procure work, but we reached the wharf just in time to see the beautiful steamer majestically moving down the river, and out into the bay. Returning to Fair Haven we awaited the arrival of the De Ford, a fine steamer plying between the Government farms up the Patuxent and Baltimore.

As soon as the De Ford landed we went on board and procured passage for Baltimore under guise of wood-choppers. I immediately proceeded to place my men in positions to command all points of the boat, from the engine-room to the pilot-house, and when about five miles from shore, finding all was in readiness, I went to the pilot-house, where the captain was, exposing my uniform and arms, and demanded the surrender of the boat in the name of the Confederate States. Seeing resistance useless, he ordered the surrender of the boat, and at a signal of the whistle my men quickly drew their pistols, to which was yielded the most perfect obedience.

We then turned the boat about and signaled for Lieutenant Dutton and rest of men to come on board the other vessels with prisoners. At the wharf we landed all non-combatants and a part of the boat's crew, demanding of them their parole of honor to give us such time as to get down the bay in safety. During the day before we could hear the heavy guns at both Annapolis and Washington City, and from the captain of the De Ford learned it was in honor of the capture of Petersburg and the fall of Richmond, and knowing General Lee had changed his base, rendering the object of the expedition futile, I hastened down the bay as fast as steam could take us, hoping to get back to Lee's army as best we could.

We reached Dividing River a few miles north of the Rappahannock the next morning about daylight, when we pushed up the river as far as we could go, after which we removed from the boat all valuables and a part of the machinery and a gun (a brass pivot gun) and then setting fire to her burnt the steamer to the water's edge.

That afternoon about 4 o'clock, when removing some of the stores from the shore, we saw a squadron of seven gun-boats coming up the river at a slow and cautious gait, shelling the shores on both sides.

I had with me on this expedition Lieutenant Dutton and twenty-eight men, most of my Company E, Fifth Regiment Virginia Cavalry, Payne's brigade. We started in three open boats, going nearly 100 miles by water in three nights. Our captures, 2 vessels, 1 steamer, 1 cannon, 62 stand of small-arms, and many other valuable stores, and 205 prisoners, including about 60 negroes. Our loss none.

Respectfully submitted.

T. FITZHUUGH,

Capt., Comdg. Company E, Fifth Va. Cav., Payne's Brigade.

Brig. Gen. W. H. PAYNE, C. S. A.,

Commanding Brigade.

APRIL 6-10, 1865.—Scout from Vienna into Loudoun County, Va.

Report of Col. Nelson B. Sweitzer, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

HEADQRS. SIXTIENTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEER CAVALRY,

Vienna, Va., April 11, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that, agreeably to Orders No. 71, headquarters First Separate Brigade, I proceeded, with 412 men, by roads on the right of the Little River turnpike, and on reaching Aldie sent a squadron into the town. Here I learned that the Eighth Illinois had passed in the direction of Middleburg. I also learned that Mosby had been quartered near Harmony, with his men in the neighborhood, for some time. Crossing the Bull Run Mountains about three miles north of Aldie, I proceeded toward Snickersville and turned toward Harmony. I did not see any guerrillas until near Aldie, where several shots were exchanged; between Aldie and Harmony several charged by my flankers, and one rebel shot. Reaching Harmony I found that Mosby had left two days before, with all his men quartered in that vicinity, to a rendezvous at Upperville, for a raid, supposed to be on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. I found that the men conscripted lately by Mosby had left, and that his band is becoming very obnoxious to the citizens; that the recent victories of our armies were creating an active and outspoken Union sentiment. The desire is to have peace—with coffee, sugar, &c. Returning by Leesburg, I found the citizens quite sociable—the formerly cold and distant secession element quite anxious that we would accept some token of their hospitality, and the Union men, formerly whispering, now quite independent. I think the political health of this department is rapidly improving.

A great deal of rain having fallen during the scout, I found Goose Creek flooded. I, however, succeeded in crossing the command without loss, though a number were carried past the ford by the current. My men brought me quite a number of prisoners, but I could find nothing to justify me in retaining them—having no arms, and not having been taken in any hostile act.

The race of guerrillas is rapidly returning to their former pursuits, the hatred of the Yankee invader not being such now as to excite a population to arms and individual desperation.

I had no loss in my command.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. B. SWETZLER,

Col. Sixteenth New York Volunteer Cavalry, Comdg. Regiment.

Capt. C. I. WICKERSHAM,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., First Separate Brig., Fairfax Court-House, Va.

APRIL 8-10, 1865.—Scout from Fairfax Court-House into Loudoun County, Va.

Report of Lieut. Col. David R. Glendonin, Eighth Illinois Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY,

Fairfax Court-House, Va., April 11, 1865.

SIR: In compliance with instructions from Byt. Brig. Gen. William Gamble, I left this place on the evening of the 8th, with 400 men of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, for the purpose of scouring Loudoun Valley, south of the Snickersville pike, in search of Mosby's command. Marching at night, I arrived in the valley about 1 a. m., half my force passing through Cool Spring Gap and the other half through the gap at Aldie. Spreading over the country the houses were searched for concealed soldiers, but not one was found. One company went three miles north of Goose Creek on the Snickersville pike, and the whole force concentrated near Middleburg at daylight. The only intelligence thus far obtained was that Mosby had concentrated his forces at Upperville on the 8th and moved away.

Arriving at Upperville I learned that Mosby had been there the day previous, as reported, with considerable force, variously estimated, ranging from 400 to 900 men. From the best information I could obtain one company was sent to Maryland for the purpose of robbing a bank; another company, under Bush Underwood, was sent down to operate on this line; Mosby, with the balance of his command, crossed over into the Shenandoah to operate against Hancock's forces.

On the 6th forty Federal prisoners passed through Upperville, having been taken by Mosby's men near Harper's Ferry. These prisoners were reported to have belonged to the Loudoun Rangers.

From Upperville I moved in three columns, scouring the country, and encamped between Rectortown and White Plains, from which place I marched to camp yesterday.

During the whole trip not over fifteen rebels were seen by the entire command, two of them being captured near Sudley's Mills, and they belonged to White's battalion; about a half dozen more were seen in that vicinity. I brought in twenty-two horses, seventeen of them U. S. horses; they were found in the woods principally—nine were found in one place, seven of them being branded. Two were found near Broad Run, with old U. S. saddles on, bridles tied up, &c.; they belonged to the two men afterward captured, who had in the meantime provided other horses.

Twenty-two horses, 4 saddles, 3 revolvers and holsters, 2 belts comprise the captured property. They are subject to your order.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. R. CLENDENIN,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Regiment.

Capt. C. I. WICKERMAN,

Assistant Adjutant-General, First Separate Brigade.

---

APRIL 10, 1865.—Skirmishes near Burke's Station and at Arundel's Farm, Va.

Report of Col. Charles Albright, Two hundred and second Pennsylvania Infantry, commanding Post at Fairfax Station.

HEADQUARTERS,

Fairfax Station, Va., April 10, 1865.

CAPTAIN: I have the honor to report that this morning I received information, through a source that I consider reliable, that a force of rebel cavalry was south of this post moving toward Burke's Station for the purpose of capturing trains at work there. I immediately ordered out all the cavalry I have under my command, and started in the direction indicated. About three miles from here I came upon the trail of the enemy, and followed it toward Burke's Station, in the neighborhood of which place some shots were exchanged between the enemy and a detachment of Company K, Eighth Illinois Cavalry. The rebels upon being discovered beat back into the woods, and upon my recovery of the trail again followed, taking with me Lieutenant Hupp's command. At Arundel's I discovered them formed in line, and behind the house, barn, and fences. I ordered my men into line as rapidly as I could, advanced, and opened fire. The rebels soon broke, and I charged after them. We drove them to Wolf Run Shoals, and saw their rear cross. I did not deem it prudent to follow any farther, from the fact that our horses were pretty well exhausted and the column pretty well scattered along the road. The enemy's force was a battalion of Mosby's command, Companies D and H, Captain Baylor in command—Captain Briscoe was in command of Company D—numbering altogether about 150 men. They had started from Upperville Saturday morning last.

The casualties are as follows: Company G, 2 men slightly wounded, 3 horses killed and 3 wounded; Company H, 1 horse killed; Company K, 1 horse killed and 1 wounded.

List of prisoners and property captured: Richard McVey (wounded severely), Edward Heflebower, Thomas F. Harvey, engineer bureau, lieutenant Company F, Sixth Missouri—brought ordnance to Colonel Mosby and joined his command; First Sergt. David G. Mohler, Company H; Samuel Rogers. Six horses captured. Six or 8 horses killed; 7 complete sets of horse equipments.

The road from Mr. Arundel's to Wolf Run Shoals was strewn with blankets, hats, caps, &c. I have no doubt a number of the enemy was wounded, and probably some killed, that were got away through the woods.

I cannot speak too highly of the gallantry of Captain Warner, Lieutenants Brooks and Hupp, and also of their men. It is also my duty to add that the information was brought me from Arundel's, a heretofore suspected rebel family. Shall I send the prisoners over?

I have the honor to be, very truly, your obedient servant,

CHAS. ALBRIGHT,

Colonel 202d Regt. Pennsylvania Volunteers, Comdg. Post.
Capt. CHARLES I. WICKERSHAM,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SEPARATE BRIGADE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va., April 10, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to department headquarters.

Credit is due to Colonel Albright for his energy in obtaining the information, and especially to Captain Warner, who commanded and led the detachment Eighth Illinois Cavalry in his usual way. Captain Warner is, and always has been, an excellent fighting officer, and is eminently worthy of his position and the regiment he belongs to.

W. GAMBLE,

Colonel, Commanding Brigade.

APRIL 15-23, 1865.—Scout through the counties of Randolph and Pocahontas, W. Va., and of Bath and Highland, Va.

Report of Capt. Joseph Badger, Eighth Ohio Cavalry.

PHILIPPI, W. VA., April 23, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of a detachment of 150 men of the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry sent out under my command, by Special Orders, No. 32, dated April 15-23, 1865.

The command consisted of detailed men from different companies divided into four parties—Lieutenant McCoukey, 45 men;

Lieutenant Rockafeld, 45; Lieutenant Dalton, 30; Lieutenant Swain, 30. The arms consisted of 40 Spencer carbines, 60 rounds of ammunition each; 110 Burnside carbines, 100 rounds each; 150 sabers, and a very few revolvers.

Saturday, April 15, received orders at 2 p. m.; marched at 3. Intended to march ten miles and stop for night. It rained hard and the night promised to be bad. I concluded to march through to Beverly, where men could get shelter for themselves and horses. Before sundown stopped an hour and a half for feed and supper.

Sunday, 16th, reached Beverly at 1 a. m. During forenoon all information I could gather induced me to believe we could accomplish more by marching via Huntersville toward Warm Springs, taking Monterey and Hightown in rear on our return, than by marching direct to Hightown. Telegraphed to the general commanding at Clarksburg asking permission to take the Huntersville route. Request granted. Drew one day's rations and marched at 2 p. m. At sundown bivouacked three miles from Huntersville on the direct road to Hightown, and did what I could to create the impression that we were going on that route in strong force. Thirty men on picket.

Monday, 17th, marched very quietly at 2 a. m. across the neck of country between the Hightown and Lewisburg roads, fording Tygart River and coming into the latter road four miles above Huntersville. An hour after sunrise stopped for breakfast, and fed. Moved steadily all day, stopping at sundown at the north foot of Elk Mountain, within eight miles of Marlin's Bottom bridge. Forty-five men on picket. Had heard that Joe Gay had a few bushwhackers and horse-thieves about Stony Creek, and my intention was to march at 1 a. m. and come down on Stony Creek, Marlin's Bottom, and Huntersville before daylight; but hearing that Captain McNeill, a noted guerrilla, was at his home near Huntersville, I concluded to send at once and secure him if possible. Dispatched Sergeant Walker, of Company I, at 10 p. m., with fifteen men, to get him and pick up every one about Huntersville, waiting there till I came up.

Tuesday, 18th, marched at 2 a. m. Had twenty men, under First Sergeant Nelson, Company I, scour Stony Creek for a distance of four miles for Gay's men; to join me at the bridge over Greenbrier. He found no one. Moved on to Huntersville. Sergeant Walker had picked up several stragglers and deserters. McNeill had left home the day before. Put up here one of the telegrams, and told all people I saw the terms on which rebels could come in and be paroled. They seemed gratified. Moved on toward Warm Springs, Lieutenant Swain's party, armed with Spencers, in advance. At Knap's Creek, seven miles beyond Huntersville, he heard of some rebels up that valley, and went to find them. I moved one mile past Knap's Creek, and halted for him to join me. Before halting I had picked up a few fellows, from whom I learned that Jackson's command was disbanded at Buchanan on Saturday last, and the men were on their way home in squads, some coming on the road that we were moving on. Met a family of refugees, the women of which were frightened, and reported they had heard that a party of 300 of Jackson's men, armed and partly mounted, left Warm Springs this morning going to Huntersville, whence they were going to disperse to their homes. Heard different stories of their strength, all the way from 50 to 400, but the persons from whom I got the reports were panicky, and I placed no reliance in the report of any of one party so large. Thought there might be different squads of from twenty to forty, possibly fifty men. While waiting for Lieutenant Swain, and in less than an hour after I had heard these reports, my advance, under First Sergeant Mewellyn, Company F, was suddenly and furiously attacked. The attack was so sharp and came so soon after the reports of a large party of the enemy, that I was a little suspicious; so I immediately threw my three companies into a shape to make a strong fight if the enemy were in force, and to pursue instantly if he were not, also to give him an exaggerated idea of our number if it were simply a party of observation. Sent for Lieutenant Swain to join me as soon as possible; then galloped forward to see what it was. All this had occupied but a very few minutes. I found the enemy were running up the side of the mountain to get away. Told Lieutenant McCoukey to take his company instantly up the hill after them and shove them at top speed. Told Sergeant Mewellyn to dash ahead after a few who had run back on the road by which they came. He captured one, who said it was a squad of twenty-five, with Major Hutton, Captain Marshall, and Captain Harding, going to their homes. As soon as Lieutenant Swain came up I moved on. Lieutenant McCoukey joined me in two hours, having chased them four miles across the mountains. They tried to fight him, but he pushed so hard that part of them had to abandon their horses and run on foot through places where a horse could not follow. Moved ahead till toward evening, when I got the command into a secreted place, where I fed and got supper, one company at a time. I knew they would watch and see what route we took from Gatewood's, perhaps gather enough men to bushwhack the road on which they expected us. At Gatewood's, ten miles this side of Warm Springs, the road for Monterey and Hightown runs north up Great Back Creek. The pike to Warm Springs turns south and follows down the creek three miles, then crosses it and passes over a high mountain into the Jackson River valley. At Gatewood's a few fellows tried to skirmish with the advance, but were easily chased. The only benefit they derived was to gain the impression that we had 700 or 800 men. I managed to pass the forks of the road a little before dark, and pushed ahead on the Warm Springs road, going as far as the ford, three miles. It then being completely dark, went into a large field and lay down to sleep, whole command saddled and bridled. No fire. Fifty men on picket. At 12 midnight got the command up quietly and marched in perfect silence back past Gatewood's and up the road for Monterey, distant thirty-eight miles.

Wednesday, 19th, by daylight had marched sixteen miles from Gatewood's, searching every house for rebel stragglers. Found a little grain in some places, which was the first we had picked up. The people all up the valley of Back Creek were completely surprised. They had heard during the night that we had marched to Warm Springs. The story had spread that we were a strong force of cavalry going through by forced marches to join General Grant at Staunton or somewhere else. Within seven miles of Monterey the road forks, left-hand going to Crab Bottom. The horses were a good deal tired, and I concluded not to move the whole command around that way. Sent a party of thirty men to search that part, and join me at Crab Bottom. Picked up several rebels along the road to Crab Bottom, and within a few miles of that place captured Major Armesy, Thirty-third [Battalion] Virginia [Cavalry], commander of reserves of three counties. He was trying to run up a hill and escape us. Reached Hevener's farm, in Crab Bottom, just after dark. By this time the horses were a good deal exhausted from scant forage and constant going, and the men very much so from the loss of sleep; therefore concluded to rest all night. Whole command saddled and bridled. Fifty men on picket.

Thursday, 20th, the whole picket force deployed in skirmish line around the bivouac from 3 o'clock till after daylight. Got the command up half an hour before day. Feed and breakfast. Marched an hour after daylight. I expected to find that Mr. Harding and friends had gathered a pretty good squad through the mountains to bushwhack us on Greenbrier or about the Gum road, on Cheat Mountain. Therefore place half my Spencers in the advance guard and half in the rear. At the first crossing of Greenbrier found good grazing, so stopped two hours, putting out strong pickets and letting one company at a time unsaddle and groom horses half an hour. Moved on, and when near the next fork of the river the rear guard was bushwhacked sharply from the mountain on the south side of the river. Sent Lieutenant Swain's company ahead to examine the country about the Gum road (two miles ahead). Halted the two rear companies, and had them scatter about 2,000 cartridges all over the face of the hill, which made it so warm that the bushwhackers had to get out of their holes and leave on double-quick. There were four or five of them. Moved on, reaching White's, top of Cheat Mountain. An hour before sundown stopped for supper. Learned that Captain Harding had passed there in the middle of the [day] with five men, armed and on foot, saying he was going to Beverly. He also said my command was returning on that road, and would reach White's some time that evening. I studied a good deal as to his intentions. His character is such that I felt sure he was not going to surrender. Finally concluded he had gathered up thirty or forty men, had them coming through mountain by Becky's Creek, and either intended to entangle us in a blockade going down the mountain, and cut us up, or to surprise us after we encamped in the valley. It is eight miles from White's to Stipes' (foot of the mountain). Had Sergeant Kuott, Company F, take ten men on foot, with an ax, and [march] half a mile ahead of the advance guard to look for a blockade. Commenced the descent at 11 p. m., marching the main party three-fourths of a mile behind the advance company. Reached Stipes' without accident, and learned Harding with one man had passed there just at dark, saying he was going to Beverly to give himself up. This left four of his men unaccounted for, which made me look still more for another party acting with him. Had twenty men, dismounted, go ahead and in two squads search every house and barn within three miles of Hutchesville for Harding and Ward (whose mother lives close by), but found no trace whatever of them. Moved well into the valley and bivouacked near Mrs. Wade's, making as much noise as possible to let the enemy know where we were, it being my wish that he should attempt a surprise. By this time it was but an hour and a half till daylight. Put fifty men on picket, the whole deployed in an infantry skirmish line around the camp from time of stopping till an hour after daylight. Remained up myself to superintend it, and everything remaining quiet, I let the main party sleep till an hour after sunrise.

Friday, 21st, got breakfast. Gathered enough grain to feed the command. Moved on to Beverly, arriving at 5 p. m. Finding forage that the major commanding had sent there to meet us, I concluded to rest the command for twenty-four hours, both men and horses being much exhausted.

Saturday, 22d, rested at Beverly. Sent prisoners on at 2 p. m. with strong guard to march twelve miles. Major Amesby tells me he expected to see the command attacked about Huttonsville, as he was sure there were men through Pocahontas who would come across and attempt his rescue. As Captain Harding has not made his appearance nor been heard of at a late hour to-night, I have no doubt he had some design against us. He had no chance.

Sunday, 23d, marched at 7 a. m.; reached Philippi at 4 p. m.

I inclose a sketch* of our route, drawn by Lieutenant Swain.

I take pleasure in reporting that I received the most hearty co-operation and support from the other officers. I attribute our little expedition going off so well and successfully entirely to this fact. If we had met serious difficulty the spirit that the officers have manifested would have been most valuable to me.

From Beverly I was accompanied by Corpl. Samuel Goodwin, Privates Tomlinson, Golliday, and Hare, all of Company A, First Virginia Cavalry, and Mr. Frank Farris, a citizen, as guides. They gave me much valuable information in regard to roads and people.

I found the people all through my route completely conquered; Lee's surrender has finished them. They see no hope in further resistance and are willing to submit on our terms. They seemed gratified when they heard the terms. There are a great many stragglers and deserters all through the country who have no idea of going back to the army, but being afraid of us they run and hide as much as possible. I believe when they understand our terms they will all come in and give the parole. I met several paroled men of Lee's army. I judge from their talk that they will be an army of missionaries all through the South to preach to the people a doctrine of common sense and the folly of further resistance. From the spirit of submission that seems to have taken possession of the people since Lee's surrender, I believe that kindness and leniency toward them now would have the most beneficial results. Their only desire seems to be to get back their sons, brothers, and husbands who have been in the army, and live in peace. Before I explained to them they supposed that all who had been in the rebel army would be confined in Northern prisons for life. I would suggest (in my humble judgment it would do vast good) that cavalry parties be sent to post up and distribute all over the territory in our front large numbers of all the printed orders that have been promulgated since Lee's surrender in regard to the terms on which both soldiers and people can give up and return to their homes in peace. It would afford me very great pleasure to take 200 men through the counties of Pocahontas, Greenbrier, Monroe, Craig, Alleghany, and Bath on such a mission. In a very short time the grass through that country will be such that cavalry can subsist very well.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH BADGER,

Captain, Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

Lieut. E. KELLY,

Adjutant Eighth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

---

* See Plate CXVI, Map 3 of the Atlas.

APRIL 23-29, 1865.—Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to Danville and South Boston, Va.

REPORTS.

- No. 1.—Maj. Gen. Horatio G. Wright, U. S. Army, commanding Sixth Army Corps.
No. 2.—Capt. Edward Whiteford, Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Acting Aide-de-Camp to Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. Army.

No. 1.

Reports of Maj. Gen. Horatio G. Wright, U. S. Army, commanding Sixth Army Corps.

HEADQUARTERS SIXTH ARMY CORPS,
Danville, April 27, 1865—3.20 p. m.
(Received 4.30 p. m.)

I have the honor to report that the advance of this corps entered this place and received its surrender from the authorities at 9.45 this a. m. and that the corps is now going into camp about a mile south of the town. I will send further report this evening. The corps has marched from beyond Burkeville Station to this point, a distance of at least 100 miles, since last Sunday morning; is in good condition and ready for any movements that may be ordered, though I should prefer that the men and animals be allowed one day's rest. General Sheridan was at Boydton at 8 p. m. yesterday.

H. G. WRIGHT,
Major-General, Commanding.

Major-General WEBB, Chief of Staff.

DANVILLE, VA., April 27, 1865—7.35 p. m.
(Received 8.25 p. m.)

The captures at this place are, as far as reported, as follows: About 500 prisoners, 4 locomotives, 67 box and platform cars, 2 cacons, dismounted and mostly disabled; 3,000 shell, the iron-work for 10,000 stand of arms, and the machinery for manufacturing muskets, &c., taken from Harper's Ferry and subsequently from Richmond. Of the prisoners captured 132 are sick and wounded in hospital.

H. G. WRIGHT,
Major-General, Commanding.

Major-General WEBB, Chief of Staff.

No. 2.

Report of Capt. Edward Whiteford, Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Acting Aide-de-Camp to Bvt. Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. Army.

HDQRS. CAVALRY, MIDDLE MILITARY DIVISION, May 5, 1865.

GENERAL: In obedience to orders, I have the honor to make the following report of the marches of the command since its departure from Petersburg on the 24th of April, 1865:

Sunday, the 23d of April, 1865, headquarters cavalry, Ford's house, near Petersburg. Orders issued for reveille to be blown at 4 a. m., and the command to be in readiness to move at 6 a. m. the following morning (Monday). The command to carry fifteen days' rations and two days' forage. The attention of division and brigade commanders called to the shoeing of their command. Forges hard at work all day.

Monday, 24th April, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 6 a. m. on the Boydton plank road, Second Division (Army of the Potomac) Cavalry, Major-General Crook commanding, in advance, followed by First and Third Divisions Cavalry, Middle Military Division; passed through Dinwiddie Court-House at 11.30 a. m.; halted to rest; proceeded on the march. Headquarters and the command went into camp within half a mile of north bank Nottoway River. General Crook's command camped on the south side. Distance marched, twenty-five miles. Nature of country, wooded.

Tuesday, April 25, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters and the command moved out at 6 a. m. Order of march—First, Third, and General Crook's command. Marched south on the Boydton plank road. Crossed the Wauqua and Great Creeks. About one mile beyond the latter took the road to the left in the direction of Lawrenceville; turned to the right, crossed Red Creek at the mill on Doctor Price's plantation; halted to let the command close up; proceeded on the march. Reached the Meherrin River at 3 p. m.; found the ford in very indifferent condition. Pioneers of First Division ordered up to repair the banks of the river at the ford, under the supervision of Major Drew and Captain Gordon. Ford repaired; commenced crossing headquarters wagons of Generals Sheridan and Merritt; banks of ford very much injured by the crossing of the latter. Found it impossible to cross the command that night; orders for First Division to cross uncommanded, and First Brigade, of First Division, only ordered to cross, the headquarters and the other two brigades, together with Third Division, to remain on north bank. Headquarters and First Brigade, First Division, went into camp at 11 p. m. two miles south of the river. Distance marched, twenty-five miles.

Wednesday, 26th of April, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 6 a. m., First Division in advance. Marched south on the Boydton plank road. Halted two hours during the march to rest the command. Reached Boydton at 4 p. m. Headquarters at Doctor Jordan's. Distance marched, twenty-four miles. Received marching orders at 10 p. m. to move at 6 a. m. following morning for Abbyville.

Thursday, 27th of April, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, Third Division in advance, moved out at 6 a. m. in the direction of Abbyville. Reached Staunton River at 11 a. m., and commenced crossing. Second Division (General Crook's command) followed in order of march, and camped on south side of the river. Owing to the lateness of the hour the First Division could not be crossed, and went into camp on north side of the river. Headquarters at Mr. Russell's, half a mile from bridge. Distance marched, nineteen miles. Too much credit cannot be awarded to the inhabitants of this part of the country for the energy and zeal displayed to facilitate the crossing of the command. To Major Young and his scouts, for their energy during the night of the 26th in procuring the boats to build the bridges, credit is also partly due.

Friday, 28th of April, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 6 a. m. (the First Division had been crossing since daylight), General Crook's command in advance, followed by Third and First Divisions. Marched in the direction of Boston, crossing the Bawister River at Clark's farm. Reached Boston, a depot on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, at 1 p. m., where the column was halted on account of the surrender of Johnston's army. A detachment of the Sixth Corps occupied the place. Distance marched, about twenty miles. Headquarters at Mr. A. Bruce's. Feeling of the people about the country for the Union good.

Saturday, 29th of April, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 6 a. m., First and Third Divisions followed by General Crook's command. Crossed Banister and Difficult Creeks, passing through Scottsburg, and crossing the Staunton River over pontoon bridges built by the engineers of Sixth Corps. Distance marched, twenty miles. Headquarters at Hutchinson's house, about three miles north of river.

Sunday, 30th of April, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 11 a. m., Third, Second (General Crook's), and First Divisions marched on the Keysville road, crossing the Meherrin River near Pleasant Grove. Headquarters went into camp at Mr. Arvin's, distant from river about two miles and a quarter. Distance marched, about twenty-three miles. Roads in good order. Second Division, General Crook's command, to [ok] the left-hand road.

Monday, May 1, reveille at 4 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 7 a. m., First Division in advance. Marched in the direction of Blacks and Whites, passing through Hungarytown and over Little Nottoway Creek. Reached Blacks and Whites at 2.45 p. m. Went into camp at the depot, where forage awaited the command. Distance marched, about twenty-three miles.

Tuesday, May 2, reveille at 4.30 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 7 a. m. Marched in the direction of Petersburg, Third Division in advance. Halted and went into camp, at 2 p. m., near Ford's Station, in the orchard, Mr. Osborn's plantation. Distance marched, about twenty miles.

Wednesday, 3d of May, reveille at 4.30 a. m. Headquarters, together with the command, moved out at 6 a. m., and marched in direction of Petersburg. Reached there 11 a. m. Halted outside of town, awaiting orders. Received orders to go into camp on the north side of Appomattox River. General Crook's command marched on the Dinwiddie Court-House road. Distance marched, about fifteen miles.

Trusting the above account will prove satisfactory, I have the honor to remain, general, your obedient servant,

E. WHITEFORD,

Captain, Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Acting Aide-de-Camp.

Brevet Major-General MERITT.

APRIL 26, 1865.—Capture of J. Wilkes Booth and David E. Herold, at Garrett's Farm, near Port Royal, Va.

Report of Lieut. Edward P. Doherty, Sixteenth New York Cavalry.

HQRS. DETACHMENT SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,

Washington, D. C., April 29, 1865:

COLONEL: I have the honor to report that on Monday, April 24, 1865, I received the following order:

HQRS. DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON, TWENTY-SECOND ARMY CORPS,

April 24, 1865.

COMMANDING OFFICER DETACHMENT SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY:

SIR: The major-general commanding directs that you detail twenty-five men, well mounted, to be commanded by a reliable and discreet commissioned officer, to report at once to Col. L. C. Baker, Special Agent, War Department, 217 Pennsylvania avenue, opposite Willard's Hotel. Report your action.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. R. SEWALL,

Lieutenant and Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS DETACHMENT SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1865.

Lieut. E. P. DOHERTY,
Sixteenth New York Cavalry:

SIR: You are hereby detailed for the duty specified in the preceding order, and will report immediately to Col. L. C. Baker for instructions.

J. SCHNEIDER,
Captain, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, Commanding Detachment.

In pursuance to the foregoing orders I reported to Colonel Baker, at the time and place specified, and received the following information and instructions. He informed me that he had reliable information that the assassin Booth and his accomplice were somewhere between the Potomac and Rappahannock Rivers. He gave me several photographs of Booth and introduced me to Mr. Conger and Mr. Baker, and said they would accompany me. He directed me to scour the section of the country indicated thoroughly, to make my own disposition of the men in my command, to forage upon the country, giving receipts for what was taken from loyal parties, and to land at or near Belle Plain at all hazards, to swim my horses ashore if I could not land otherwise, and return when I thought proper. I embarked upon the steamer John S. Ide, at Sixth-street wharf, this vessel having been placed at my disposal by the following order:

ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, RIVER TRANSPORTATION,
Sixth-Street Wharf, Washington, D. C., April 24, 1865.

CAPTAIN OF STEAMER JOHN S. IDE:

SIR: Having received on board twenty-five men and horses, proceed down the river, subject to the orders of the officer in charge; having performed the duties required of you, return to this city and report to me.

Respectfully,

E. S. ALLEN,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster.

I then proceeded down the river to Belle Plain, and having landed my force I issued the following order to the captain commanding the vessel:

HEADQUARTERS DETACHMENT SIXTEENTH NEW YORK CAVALRY,
Off Belle Plain, Va., April 24, 1865.

Capt. H. WILSON,
Commanding Steamer John S. Ide:

CAPTAIN: You will please moor off, after landing my command, to a place of safe anchorage, not to exceed one mile from this place, and there await farther orders. Should you not receive a dispatch from me before the 26th instant at 6 p. m. return to Washington. Should you see any of the enemy's force report the fact to the gunboat. Forage will remain on board your boat.

E. P. DOHERTY,
First Lieutenant, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, Commanding Detachment.

I then proceeded in the direction of Fredericksburg, and after advancing about three miles I turned southwest and struck the Rappahannock River about twelve miles above Port Conway, 6 a. m. There I met two fishermen, who informed me of a number of surgeons living in the vicinity, and having previously learned the fact that Booth was crippled I deemed it proper to visit the different surgeons and search their premises, making such inquiries and examinations as were thought necessary; this being accomplished, and, finding no traces of the assassin his accomplice, Mr. Conger requested me to furnish him four men and a horse, which I did, and he moved down the Rappahannock, in its course. I then marched with the remainder of my command, making a detour of some fifteen miles by the way of King George Court-House, forming a junction with Mr. Conger at Conway's Ferry, at 2 p. m.

April 25, 1865.—Up to this time we had found no trace of the assassin or his accomplice. I then stopped to feed. It was thought by the detectives that we would not find any traces of the assassins. After feeding, however, I determined to push across the ferry; Mr. Conger, one of the detectives, remained at the house. Mr. Baker, the other detective, accompanied me to the ferry, where I met a negro, who informed me that men answering the description crossed the day before, and that one of them had been into Mr. Roland's house. Mr. Baker and myself proceeded to the house of Mr. Roland, and there, after exhibiting the photographs, we concluded that we were on their track. I dispatched three men in a small boat to bring over a scow, which was on other side of the Rappahannock River; I also dispatched one man to inform Mr. Conger that we had track of the assassins, and to come down immediately. Mr. Rollins, at the ferry, informed me that two men were brought there from Mathias Point by a negro, to whom they had paid $15, and wanted to engage him, Rollins, to take them to Orange Court-House; that he refused to go so far, but they engaged him to take them to Bowling Green for $10; that these men showed great anxiety to get across the river, and wished him (Mr. Rollins) to use his small boat, and they would pay him extra; that Herold told him that they were brothers, and that Booth was wounded at Petersburg; that he refused his small boat for the reason he was using it putting out his fishing net; that, at about this time, three Confederate soldiers came up and shook hands with one of them. Herold then came to the house and apologized for not taking the horse and wagon, and said he had met an old schoolmate, and that they were going to ride in "twain." Mrs. Rollins said the three soldiers were Capt. Willie Jett, Lieutenants Ruggles and Bainbridge; that Captain Jett was courting a young lady by the name of Gohman, whose father kept a hotel at Bowling Green. In the meantime the horses and men were being ferried across as rapidly as possible. At 6 p. m. my whole command was across, and I moved on toward Bowling Green. On the road, about three miles from Port Royal, I met a negro on horseback; not wishing to lose time I rode ahead of the column and directed the negro to turn back and ride beside myself. I learned from him that the party that we were in quest of had all returned except Capt. Willie Jett (rebel). Proceeding along we arrived at a house seven miles from Bowling Green. I learned here that some of Mosby's men had been along the day before and taken three horses from three Yankee soldiers. Messrs. Conger and Baker entered the house and were informed that the party who had passed there the previous day had all returned except Captain Jett. The house of Mrs. Clark, some four miles distant, was spoken of as a place where some of the party might be. I determined, however, to push on to Bowling Green and secure the said Captain Jett. Arriving within about half a mile of the town I dismounted ten men, who were ordered to accompany Mr. Baker into the town. Mr. Conger, Rollins (the guide), and myself rode ahead and surrounded the house; the dismounted men shortly afterward arrived and surrounded the house and outhouses; this was about 12 o'clock midnight. We knocked about fifteen minutes at each door without receiving any reply; at length a negro appeared on the street who showed the way to the negro house in rear, and on entering I asked a negro where Willie was, meaning Captain Jett; he replied that he was in bed.

Conger inquired where the room was, &c. In a few moments Mrs. Goldman opened the door, and we asked for her son; she showed us up stairs, and we found Jeff and her son in bed, partly undressed. We took Jeff down stairs and informed him our business, telling him that if he did not forthwith inform us where the men were he should suffer; that no parley would be taken, &c. He requested that two of the party withdraw and leave him with one, and he would make a full statement of what he knew of the assassin's whereabouts. This was granted. Mr. Baker and myself had scarcely left the room when he told Mr. Conger that he would show us the place. On learning this I took him in my own charge. His horse was got out, he was mounted, and we went back to the house of Mr. Garrett, about twelve miles from Bowling Green. I ordered my command to surround the house, and, as a precautionary measure, sent six men in rear of the barn and outbuildings. While I was placing my men around the buildings the detectives knocked at the door, which was opened by the elder Mr. Garrett, who was much excited; he said the men who had been there went to the woods the previous evening. While engaged in conversation the son of Mr. Garrett came in, advising the father to tell where they were. I seized this man by the collar, and pulled him out of the door and down the steps, put my revolver to his head and told him to tell me at once where the two assassins were; he replied, "in the barn." I said "show me the barn." We started on the run for the barn, I holding him by the collar, calling on my men to follow me and surround more closely the building I should indicate. In the meantime another of the Garretts appeared, who was seized by one of the detectives and ordered to get a candle. He immediately procured a candle. On arriving at the barn I left the Garrett I had in charge with some of my men, and posted my men around the barn. This accomplished, I returned to the front of the barn, and found Garrett coming out of the barn; it appears that he had been sent in there during my absence to summons Booth to surrender. This I disapproved, as there were soldiers enough there to perform such duty. Booth, however, refused to surrender. The detectives were in favor of firing the barn, which I opposed, declaring my intention to wait until daylight and I would send my men through the four different doors and overpower the assassin, but after consultation the project of burning the building was abandoned for the time being. In the meantime considerable conversation took place concerning the surrender of Booth between Mr. Baker, myself, and the assassin. Sergt. Boston Corbett, Company L, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, asked permission to enter the barn alone, which I refused. Booth all this time was very defiant and refused to surrender. At one time he said if we would draw up in line fifty paces off he would come out, adding that he was lame and had only one leg. This, however, I refused. Booth up to this time had denied there was anyone in the barn besides himself. Considerable conversation now took place between myself, Booth, and the detectives. We threatened to burn the barn if he did not surrender; at one time gave him ten minutes to make up his mind. Finally, Booth said, "Oh, captain, there is a man here who wants to surrender awful bad." I answered, and I think Mr. Baker did at the same time, "Hand out your arms." Herold replied, "I have none." Baker said, "We know exactly what you have got." Booth replied, "I own all the arms, and intend to use them on you gentlemen." <sup>A little</sup> some little parley I said, "Let him out." Some one objected. I

I Garrett, the younger son, who had the key, to unlock the barn, which he did. I partially opened the door, and told Herold to put out his hand, which he did. I then told him to put [out] his other hand. I took hold of both his wrists and pulled him out of the barn. Almost simultaneous with my taking Herold out of the barn the hay in the rear of the barn was ignited by Mr. Conger, and the barn fired. Sergt. Boston Corbett, Company L, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, shot the assassin Booth, wounding him in the neck. I entered the barn as soon as the shot was fired, dragging Herold with me, and found that Booth had fallen on his back. Messrs. Conger and Baker, with some of my men, entered the barn and took hold of Booth. I proceeded with Herold to find a rope to secure him, there being no irons for that purpose. The assassin Booth lived about two hours. In the meantime a doctor was procured, who remained with Booth till he died. I procured a wagon, sewed up the body in a blanket myself, and placed it in the wagon. I then proceeded to Port Royal, where we arrived at 9 a. m. April 26, 1865, and crossed the river in a scow. While crossing my command Mr. Baker, without authority, moved off with the body of the assassin, taking with him the two men who had been previously detailed as a guard to the body, also one of the prisoners (Captain Jett, rebel). I was some time crossing my command, and experienced some difficulty in bringing Herold and the two Garretts along, having only one horse to mount the three; thus delay was occasioned. After proceeding some distance I procured an additional horse. Fearing some accident might happen to the body of the assassin and the prisoner Jett, whom Mr. Baker had taken with him, I dispatched an orderly to tell Mr. Baker to halt. The orderly rode over four miles at full speed, when, overtaking Mr. Baker, he told him to halt until the column came up. This Mr. Baker, however, did not do, but continued on, missing me and the road. I arrived at Belle Plain at 6 p. m., and found the corpse had not yet arrived. I felt great anxiety, and was about to apply to Major Bosworth, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, who was at Belle Plain with his command, for a detachment of men to go in search of the body, when Mr. Baker arrived. I immediately asked him where the prisoner, Captain Jett, was. He replied, "he did not know; he had escaped." After a short delay the body of the assassin Booth was placed on board the steamer John S. Ide, and we proceeded to Washington, where I delivered over the body of Booth, Herold, and the two Garretts to Col. L. O. Baker, at 3 a. m. the 27th day of April, 1865.

The command consisted of twenty-six enlisted men of the Sixteenth New York Cavalry, and myself, the two gentlemen, Messrs. Conger and Baker, sent by Colonel Baker, making a total in all of twenty-nine men.

I would say that great credit is due to all concerned for the fortitude and eagerness they displayed in pursuing and arresting the murderers. For nearly sixty hours hardly an eye was closed or a horse dismounted until the errand was accomplished.

I would call the attention of the commanding general to the efficiency of Sergt. Boston Corbett, Company L, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, who was untiring in his efforts to bring the murderers to justice. His soldierly qualifications have been tested before this occasion, and, in my judgment, are second to none in the service. Mr. Rollins, at Port Conway, is also worthy of notice for his willingness to impart all the information he possessed.

In conclusion I beg to state that it has afforded my command and myself inexpressible pleasure to be the humble instruments of capturing the foul assassins who caused the death of our beloved President and plunged the nation in mourning.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

EDWARD P. DOHERTY,

First Lieut., Sixteenth New York Cavalry, Comdg. Detachment.

Lieut. Col. J. H. TAYLOR,

Asst. Adjt. Gen. and Chief of Staff, Dept. of Washington.

APRIL 26-MAY 5, 1865.—Operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Va.

Report of Col. Horatio B. Reed, Twenty-second New York Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SECOND NEW YORK CAVALRY,

May 5, 1865.

MAJOR: In obedience to orders from the major-general commanding, I moved on the 26th of April, 1865, from the Provisional Brigade with a force consisting of the Twenty-second New York and Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and camped for the night at Cedar Creek. On the following day I marched to Mount Jackson, camping there for the night. At the last-named place, as I was about going into camp, I noticed stationed upon the hill several men, apparently on picket. I sent forward a small force. When within carbine range they fired on my advance, and immediately retired over the hills and into the woods, out of my sight. I deployed a company to ascertain if these men were connected with a larger force, but soon satisfied myself that they were a small party of guerrillas, having no connection with troops.

On Friday, April 28, I marched to Harrisonburg, and while there in camp, agreeable to orders, I sent forward a force with one of the scouts from army headquarters to arrest a man named Rickenbarker, at whose house the detective from Washington was said to have been last seen. The force arrested three men, who were brought to my headquarters. They all proved satisfactorily to me that neither of them was the person in question and that no such man lived in the country.

On Saturday, April 29, I marched to Staunton. I learned at this place that General Rosser had left there the same morning, but without any force. He had been for several days, in connection with a General Lilley, endeavoring to raise a force for the purpose of going south, but without success, the men refusing to join him, and in justice to the citizens it should be stated that they were opposed to his operations.

On Sunday, April 30, I received a flag of truce from Colonel Thompson, commanding the force known as Jackson's cavalry brigade, asking upon what terms he could surrender his command to the United States. I informed him that he could surrender upon the same terms as the Army of Northern Virginia, to which he properly belonged. On Monday, May 1, the force not appearing to accept my terms, I sent out a scout to ascertain their whereabouts. He returned with the information that the force consisted of about 100 men, perhaps a few more, and they were widely scattered in the mountains. I did not think it proper to attempt to capture them, as it would occupy more time and labor than was justifiable under the circumstances (as I was under orders to return within ten days and was then very short of forage). The correspondence between Colonel Thompson and myself you will please find inclosed.

On Tuesday, May 2, I left Staunton, and arrived at my camp in this place this morning.

During my journey up the Valley upward of 900 soldiers belonging to the Army of Northern Virginia were paroled at different points by Captain Snyder, acting assistant provost-marshal-general.

I remain, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. B. REED,

Colonel, Commanding Twenty-second New York Cavalry.

Maj. WILLIAM RUSSELL,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Army of the Shenandoah.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

HEADQUARTERS JACKSON'S BRIGADE,

April 30, 1865.

OFFICER COMMANDING U. S. FORCES AT STAUNTON:

I send Capt. G. W. Silcott, acting assistant adjutant-general, with a flag of truce to ascertain upon what terms the U. S. authorities will accept the surrender of the troops under my command; and to that end I respectfully ask an interview, at such point as you may designate, to arrange the terms, or for me to decide whether they ought to be accepted or not. If they are not accepted, I am sure that the U. S. authorities will not attempt to interfere with myself or the troops under my command until they have at least five hours' notice of the disposition on the part of the U. S. forces to attempt mine and their capture; and I respectfully ask that such assurance be given me.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. THOMPSON,

Colonel Nineteenth Virginia Cavalry, Commanding, &c.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

HEADQUARTERS U. S. FORCES,

Staunton, Va., April 30, 1865.

Col. W. P. THOMPSON,

Commanding Jackson's Brigade, Lomax's Division, &c.:

COLONEL: I have had the honor to receive at the hands of Captain Silcott, with flag of truce, a communication from you asking upon what terms you can surrender troops under your command. I beg to say in reply, that the United States Government will receive your command upon the same terms given to the Army of Northern Virginia, viz, officers and men to give their parole of honor not to take up arms against the United States until exchanged; all arms, horses, and public property to be turned over to the United States, officers to retain their side arms, private horses, and personal baggage.

I have the honor to remain, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. B. REED,

Col., Twenty-second New York Cav., Comdg. U. S. Forces at Staunton.

MAY 6-14, 1865.—Expedition from Richmond to Staunton and Charlottesville, Va.

Report of Lieut. Col. Franklin A. Stratton, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS ELEVENTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY,
Charlottesville, Va., May 11, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report of my expedition from Richmond to Staunton, and thence to this place, under instructions received from department headquarters on the 5th instant:

I left Richmond on the morning of the 6th instant with the entire effective strength of my regiment, consisting of 500 men, accompanied by fifty-five wagons. Marching via Louisa Court-House, Charlottesville, Rockfish Gap, and Waynesborough, I arrived near Staunton on the evening of the 10th of May. Learning there that General Rosser had that morning left for Lexington, I did not enter town until the next day. I found Brig. Gen. I. H. Duval stationed there with one brigade of infantry and a regiment of cavalry, being a portion of his division—the Fourth Provisional Division of the Army of the Shenandoah. General Duval had arrived there two days previous to my arrival, and had already paroled a large part of Rosser's men and taken possession of the trivial amount of rebel government stores found there. General Duval therefore directed me to return to Charlottesville, in accordance with my instructions. A copy of his order is inclosed. I therefore, after resting my horses one day, left Staunton on the 13th, and returned to this place to-day. General Rosser, up to the time of my departure, had made no visible preparation for paroling the remainder of his men, nor was there any tangible evidence of his intention to turn over any rebel government property whatever. After several interviews with him, I ascertained that the men of his command were entirely dispersed, and would only come in in small detachments, or singly, to be paroled. This would occupy, perhaps, several weeks, and as my supplies would permit me to remain but three or four days, it seemed proper that General Duval should complete the business he had commenced.

General Rosser stated, or rather admitted, that about nine pieces of artillery were concealed somewhere about Staunton and four pieces at Lexington. These, too, I left for General Duval to find and dispose of. About eight pieces of artillery are said by General Rosser to be at Pittsylvania Court-House. I have information of there being considerable rebel property concealed about Charlottesville, but have not yet had time to find it. This comprises small-arms buried or concealed in buildings and quartermaster and commissary stores in the hands of citizens in various localities.

Not many disorders have come to my notice through the country, but there is much need of a military post at this place to preserve order and protect the citizens from small bands of marauders and robbers infesting various localities between here and the Blue Ridge. The large number of negroes here will require for some time the interposition of military authority to adjust differences in regard to labor, property, and personal rights. I have maintained the strictest discipline and order in my own command during the march, and permitted no injury whatever to the property of citizens. The railroad is now open to Keswick's Station, about seven miles from here, and will be opened within two or three days to the Rivauna River, some two miles distant. Supplies for troops at this point could, therefore, be furnished over this route.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANKLIN A. STRATTON,

Lieut. Col. Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, Comdg. Regiment.

Col. ED. W. SMITH,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Department of Virginia.

JUNE 1-13, 1865.—Expedition through Pocahontas and Pendleton Counties, W. Va., and Highland County, Va.

Report of Col. Wesley Owens, Eighth Ohio Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH OHIO CAVALRY VOLUNTEERS,

Near Clarksburg, W. Va., June 15, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit for the information of the commanding general the result of an expedition into the interior of West Virginia, made pursuant to instructions from headquarters Department of West Virginia, dated May 28, 1865.

I left here on the 1st of June, with 400 men and horses, and moved in a southeasterly direction, through Philippi and Beverly, in one column. After leaving the latter place I detached a company of reliable men, under Captain Moores, with instructions to make thorough examinations of every place where arms or other Government property might be concealed or improper persons harbored. This company preceded the main column two hours in time. On reaching Huttonsville I took the direct road to Lewisburg, passing over Elk Mountain, through Mingo Flats, to Marlin's Bottom. I took this route in order to avoid any suspicion of my destination to Huntersville. At Marlin's Bottom, however, I became satisfied that ex-Governor William Smith was not in that neighborhood. I therefore crossed over at Knap's Creek to Huntersville, which I found deserted, but two families living there. A squadron was left at this place to make a thorough search for Government property and particularly concealed arms. Nothing was found. Three miles southeast of Huntersville I detached a squadron, under Captain Bechtel, to proceed to Gatewood's; thence northeast, through the saltpeter-works, up Back Creek Valley, while I passed over the mountains by Knap's Creek. These two columns joined near Green Hill. From this place I moved to Hightown, sending on the way Lieutenant Cable's squadron through Dinwiddie Gap to Galltown, thence through Monterey to New Hampton, by way of Widow Weismers, and from New Hampton to Hightown, through Crab Bottom, where it joined me. The road from Hightown to Monterey was also carefully examined. From Hightown I proceeded along the Stannton pike, over Cheat Mountain, by "old man White's," and struck my old trail at Huttonsville.

It will be seen that I made a complete tour through the district where reports of horse stealing originated, viz: Pocahontas, Highland, and Pendleton Counties, Green Hill and Crab Bottom.

There were no horse thieves in this country, nor were any complaints of horse stealing. The citizens are well disposed and quiet. Returning rebels are going to work and conduct themselves with propriety.

I picked up on this trip thirteen horses, one mule, seven saddles and bridles, eleven carbines and fives, all Government property. Had it not been that a scout of West Virginia troops, under a Captain Allen, were prowling through the neighborhood of my route only a day ahead of me, robbing the people (I know of no other appropriate name to call it), under the pretense of gathering up United States property, it is very likely that I could have found many Government horses and other property; but the people, being warned of my approach, drove all horses to the mountains and concealed effectually all other property. I regret to say that this Captain Allen did not fall into my hands.

I returned after an absence of twelve days with my horses in better condition than when I left. The delay in forwarding this report is due to my serious illness since my return.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. OWENS,

Colonel Eighth Ohio Cavalry Volunteers.

Major T. MELVIN,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Dept. of West Virginia, Cumberland, Md.

(Through Brigade and Division Headquarters.)

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WEST VIRGINIA,

Cumberland, June 20, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded to Lieut. Col. A. B. King, assistant adjutant-general, Middle Military Division, for the information of the general commanding.

So much of this report as relates to Captain Allen, of the State Scouts, has been submitted to His Excellency the Governor of West Virginia for his information.

W. H. EMORY,

Brevet Major-General, Commanding.

ALTERNATE DESIGNATIONS
OF ORGANIZATIONS MENTIONED IN THIS VOLUME.*

Abbot's (Henry L.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Abbott's (George R.) Sharpshooters. See Maine Troops, 1st Battalion.
 Adams' (Charles F., jr.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, Colored, 5th Regiment.
 Adams' (George W.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery G.
 Adams' (Henry C.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Adams' (James T.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 26th Regiment.
 Adams' (J. Webb) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 10th Battery.
 Adams' (Thomas R.) Artillery. See Johnston Artillery, post.
 Adams' (Zabdiel B.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 56th Regiment.
 Adreon's (Harrison) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 4th Regiment.
 Ager's (George) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Alabama First Heavy Artillery. See Union Troops, Colored, 7th Regiment.
 Albemarle Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Alden's (Alouzo) Infantry. See New York Troops, 169th Regiment.
 Alleghany Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Allen's (Crawford, jr.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery H.
 Allen's (David C.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 30th Regiment.
 Allen's (James) Cavalry. See West Virginia Troops, 2d Regiment.
 Allen's (Thomas S.) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Allison's (W. B.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 18th Regiment.
 Amidon's (George H.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Anderson's (David W.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 44th Regiment.
 Anderson's (George C.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 53d Regiment.
 Angel's (James R.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery K.
 Anthony's (George T.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 17th Battery.
 Archer's (T. Marshall) Artillery. See Panquier Artillery, post.
 Archer's (William S.) Artillery. See Hampton Artillery, post.
 Arden's (G. de Peyster) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 10th Regiment.
 Armistead's (Andrew D.) Artillery. See Mathews Artillery, post.
 Armistead's (Samuel W.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 32d Regiment.
 Armstrong's (Samuel C.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 8th Regiment.
 Arnett's (William W.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 20th Regiment.
 Arnold's (John W.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 9th Regiment.
 Arnold's (Robert B.) Cavalry. See Hampton Legion, post.
 Ashby's (George E.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery E.
 Ashcraft's (Thomas E.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 53d Regiment.
 Ashford's (John) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 38th Regiment.
 Ashland Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Avery's (Martin P.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 60th Regiment.

* References, unless otherwise indicated, are to index following.

- Avery's (M. Henry) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 10th Regiment.
 Ayers' (Michael A.) Infantry. See West Virginia Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Badger's (Joseph) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Bagby's (John R.) Artillery. See Powhatan Artillery, past.
 Bally's (James E.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Baird's (Andrew D.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 79th Regiment.
 Baker's (Joel B.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Baker's (Joseph J.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Baker's (J. Standard) Cavalry. See District of Columbia Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Baker's (Stephen) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Baldwin's (Charles P.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Baldwin's (Francis W. H.) Infantry. See West Virginia Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Bamberger's (William W.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 5th Regiment.
 Bangs' (Frank D.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Barker's (Thaddeus L.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 36th Regiment.
 Barker's (Thomas E.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 12th Regiment.
 Barney's (Albert M.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 142d Regiment.
 Barney's (Valentin G.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 9th Regiment.
 Barnitz's (Albert) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 2d Regiment.
 Barse's (George H.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery E.
 Bartholomew's (Orion A.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 169th Regiment.
 Bartlett's (Anthony B.) Infantry. See Confederate Troops, 1st Battalion.
 Bartlett's (Ernestus G.) Infantry. See West Virginia Troops, 12th Regiment.
 Bass' (Frederick S.) Infantry. See Texas Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Bassett's (Isaac G.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 83d Regiment.
 Battersby's (Jonas C.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment (Lincoln).
 Baxter's (Hiram) Infantry. See Louisiana Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Bayley's (Thomas) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 9th Regiment.
 Beall's (Josiah N.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 12th Regiment.
 Beard's (John) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 57th Regiment.
 Becker's (Adolph) Infantry. See New York Troops, 36th Regiment.
 Bedford Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Beecher's (Henry B.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Battery F.
 Behan's (Edwin A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Bell's (J. C.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 12th Regiment.
 Bell's (John T.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 165th Regiment.
 Bennett's (David T.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 5th Regiment.
 Bentley's (William W.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 21th Regiment.
 Betton's (Matthew T.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 81st Regiment.
 Biles' (Edwin R.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 19th Regiment.
 Bill's (George P.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery E.
 Bingham's (William H. H.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery L.
 Binkley's (Otho H.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 110th Regiment.
 Bintliff's (James) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 38th Regiment.
 Bird's (Charles) Infantry. See Union Troops, Volunteers, 1st Regiment (Patron)
 Bird's (Patrick H.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 28th Regiment.
 Birkin's (Richard M.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 190th Regiment.
 Blzby's (Philip P.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Blackman's (Albert M.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 55th Regiment.
 Bliss' (James) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Blount's (Joseph G.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Blythe's (A. S.) Infantry. See Louisiana Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Boernstein's (Augustus S.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 6th Regiment.

- Bogardus' (Charles) Infantry. See New York Troops, 151st Regiment.
- Bolton's (William J.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 51st Regiment.
- Booth's (George) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 9th Battery.
- Bost's (Jackson L.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 37th Regiment.
- Boston's (Reuben B.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 5th Regiment.
- Bosworth's (George B.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Boughton's (John C.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Bowen's (George K.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 188th Regiment.
- Bowen's (Robert E.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 2d Regiment, Rifles.
- Bowerman's (Richard N.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 4th Regiment.
- Boyd's (William H., jr.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 21st Regiment.
- Bradford's (William D.) Artillery. See Confederate Guards, Artillery, post.
- Brady's (Hugh J.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 206th Regiment.
- Brady's Sharpshooters. See Michigan Troops.
- Brainerd's (Wesley) Engineers. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
- Branch Artillery. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate.
- Brander's (Thomas A.) Artillery. See Letcher Artillery, post.
- Braunon's (Isaac P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 48th Regiment.
- Braeswell's (Robert J.) Heavy Artillery. See Noblett Heavy Artillery, post.
- Brazie's (William R.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 5th Regiment.
- Breck's (George) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery L.
- Breckinridge's (Cary) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 2d Regiment.
- Briggs' (Alvah W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 106th Regiment.
- Briggs' (George G.) Cavalry. See Michigan Troops, 7th Regiment.
- Bright's (Aaron, jr.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 88th Regiment.
- Brinold's (John R.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Battery B.
- Briscoe's (James C.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 192th Regiment.
- Brooke Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Brooker's (Albert F.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Brooks Artillery. See South Carolina Troops.
- Brown's (Alexander D.) Artillery. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 13th Battalion, Battery C.
- Brown's (Charles C.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 22d Regiment.
- Brown's (Jack) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 69th Regiment.
- Brown's (James F.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 21st Regiment.
- Brown's (James G.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 64th Regiment.
- Brown's (Lewis G.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 117th Regiment.
- Brown's (Samuel B.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 39th Battalion.
- Brown's (T. Frederick) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
- Brown's (William H.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 14th Regiment, 2d Battalion.
- Buohanan's (Felix G.) Infantry. See Tennessee Troops, Confederate, 1st Regiment, P. A.
- Buckbee's (Edwin J.) Sharpshooters. See Michigan Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Bunker's (David T.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Burke's (Douis F.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 88th Regiment.
- Burke's (Timothy J.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 164th Regiment.
- Burns' (Michael W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 73d Regiment.
- Burroughs' (William H.) Cavalry. See Georgia Troops, 7th Regiment.
- Burt's (William G.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 22d Regiment.
- Bush's (Archibald McC.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 95th Regiment.
- Butler's (Andrew P.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 1st Regiment, P. A.
- Butler's (Thomas H.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Cable's (George W.) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 8th Regiment.

- Cade's (John H.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Calahan's (Charles C.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Campbell's (James B.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 10th Regiment.
- Campbell's (John F.) Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery F.
- Campbell's (Robert C.) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 53th Regiment.
- Cannon's (Madison M.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 46th Regiment.
- Capehart's (Charles E.) Cavalry. See West Virginia Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Capron's (Willis C.) Cavalry. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Carmical's (George H.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 7th Regiment.
- Caroline Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Carpenter's (John C.) Artillery. See Allegheny Artillery, ante.
- Carroll's (Charles H.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Battery E.
- Carruth's (Sumner) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 35th Regiment.
- Carson's (James M.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 25th Regiment.
- Carter's (Joseph F.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 3d Regiment.
- Carter's (William P.) Artillery. See King William Artillery, post.
- Casey's (James H.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery K.
- Cason's (Hillary W.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 56th Regiment.
- Caw's (David J.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 77th Regiment.
- Cayce's (George M.) Artillery. See Powell Artillery, post.
- Chadbourne's (Paul) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment, Mounted Rifles.
- Chaffin's (Thomas, jr.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Chamberlayne's (John H.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Chapman's (William H.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 4th Battalion.
- Chase's (James E.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
- Cheeseman's (Roland C.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 45th Regiment.
- Cherry's (Gwin R.) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 17th Regiment.
- Chew's (Henry P.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 12th Regiment.
- Chew's (Robert S.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 30th Regiment.
- Chew's (Walter S.) Artillery. See Maryland Troops, Confederate, 4th Battery.
- Cilley's (Jonathan P.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Clark's (A. Judson) Artillery. See New Jersey Troops, 2d Battery.
- Clark's (Charles A.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 12th Battery.
- Clark's (Gideon) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 118th Regiment.
- Clark's (Stephen R.) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 13th Regiment.
- Clarke's (Charles H.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 45th Regiment.
- Clarke's (Thomas E.) Infantry. See Florida Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Clay's (Cecil) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 58th Regiment.
- Cleary's (Joseph P.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Clendenin's (David R.) Cavalry. See Illinois Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Cline's (John A.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 155th Regiment.
- Clinton's (James B.) Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Battery.
- Clough's (Joseph M.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 18th Regiment.
- Clover's (Eli D.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 47th Regiment.
- Clutter's (Valentine J.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Coan's (William B.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 48th Regiment.
- Cobb's Legion. See Georgia Troops.
- Cobb's (Wiley J.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 43d Regiment.
- Coburn's (Marshal W.) Infantry. See West Virginia Troops, 10th Regiment.
- Coey's (James) Infantry. See New York Troops, 147th Regiment.
- Cole's (Eugene O.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 5th Regiment.
- Cole's (George W.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Colored, 2d Regiment.
- Collins' (Joseph B.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment.

- Colt's (William O.) Infantry. * See Michigan Troops, 16th Regiment.
 Colvin's (James A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 169th Regiment.
 Comings' (James H.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Compson's (Hartwell B.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Confederate Guards, Artillery. See Mississippi Troops.
 Cook's (Albert W.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 57th Regiment.
 Cook's (George B.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Cooper's (John B.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 9th Regiment.
 Cooper's (John R.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Cooper's (Joseph J.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 39th Regiment.
 Cooper's (Raleigh L.) Artillery. See Stafford Artillery, post.
 Cooper's (William P.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 31st Regiment.
 Coppinger's (John J.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Corbit's (George W.) Cavalry. See Illinois Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Cornyn's (Charles M.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 122d Regiment.
 Corrie's (William A.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Coulson's (John A.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 20th Regiment.
 Cowan's (Andrew) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Battery.
 Cowan's (Robert V.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 33d Regiment.
 Coward's (A.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Cowles' (Seneca R.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 10th Regiment.
 Cox's (Robert C.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 207th Regiment.
 Crafts' (Wolcome A.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Cranford's (Horace L.) Artillery. See Georgia Troops, 9th Battalion.
 Crawford's (E. A.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 17th Regiment.
 Crensey's (James) Infantry. See New York Troops, 95th Regiment.
 Croft's (Edward) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 14th Regiment.
 Crosby's (John W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 61st Regiment.
 Crow's (James M.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 9th Regiment.
 Crowninshield's (Casper) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 2d Regiment.
 Crump's (Samuel H.) Heavy Artillery. See Georgia Troops, 12th Battalion.
 Crumpler's (Lewis H.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 59th Regiment.
 Cryer's (Matthew H.) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Cullen's (George) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 13th Regiment.
 Culver's (Isaac F.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 6th Regiment.
 Cumming's (James D.) Artillery. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 13th Battalion, Battery C.
 Cunningham's (James A.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 32d Regiment.
 Curry's (Henry) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Curtis' (Arthur R.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 30th Regiment.
 Curtiss' (James E.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 152d Regiment.
 Dailey's (Dennis B.) Infantry. * See New York Troops, 147th Regiment.
 Dakin's (George K.) Heavy Artillery. See New Hampshire Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery M.
 Damon's (George B.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 10th Regiment.
 Dance's (Willis J.) Artillery. See Powhatan Artillery, post.
 Dandy's (James H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 100th Regiment.
 Daniels' (Percy) Infantry. See Rhode Island Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Danville Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Davant's (Philip E.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 38th Regiment.
 Davey's (George W.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 11th Battery.
 Davis' (Ebenzer W.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Davis' (Frank) Heavy Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 1st Regiment.

---

* Temporarily commanding.

- Davls' (W. H.) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 13th Regiment.
- Day's (Albert A.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Deane's (John M.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 29th Regiment.
- Deas' (William A.) Artillery. See Orange Artillery, post.
- Dempoy's (Marshall L.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colonel, 23d Regiment.
- Dent's (John T.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Denn's (George F.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment.
- De Witt's (Sewall W.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Dial's (Abraham S.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 85th Regiment.
- Dibbell's (Harmon B.) Engineers. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
- Dickenson's (Crispin) Artillery. See Ringgold Artillery, post.
- Dickerson's (James W.) Artillery. See Joseph G. Blount's Artillery, ante.
- Dickey's (Joseph H.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 6th Regiment.
- Dickey's (William D.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment, Battery M.
- Dimin's (James R.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 9th Regiment.
- Doane's (Charles R.) Artillery. See New Jersey Troops, 4th Battery.
- Doble's (William) Infantry. See New York Troops, 89th Regiment.
- Dodd's (Levi A.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 211th Regiment.
- Doheny's (Michael) Infantry. See New York Troops, 155th Regiment.
- Doherty's (Edward P.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Donlin's (Levi S.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 118th Regiment.
- Donald's (William K.) Artillery. See Rockbridge Artillery, No. 2, post.
- Donaldsonville Artillery. See Louisiana Troops.
- Donnell's (John S.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 51st Regiment.
- Doolittle's (Isaac) Infantry. See New York Troops, 188th Regiment.
- Dorey's (Stephen W.) Artillery. See Ohio Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery H.
- Doughty's (James E.) Sharpshooters. See Union Troops, Volunteers, 2d Regiment.
- Douglass' (Robert B.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Doyle's (Richard N.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Drewry's (John W.) Artillery. See Southside Artillery, post.
- Drown's (Azro) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery K.
- Drum's (William F.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 5th Regiment (Veteran).
- Drummond's (Thomas) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment.
- Du Bose's (D. G.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 21st Regiment.
- Dudley's (Hollis O.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Duggan's (James B.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 45th Regiment.
- Duncan's (Alender P.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Duncan's (James H.) Infantry.* See Mississippi Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Dungan's (Robert H.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 48th Regiment.
- Dunham's (Thomas H.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Durham's (P.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 12th Regiment.
- Durland's (Coo) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 17th Regiment.
- Dygart's (Charles H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 152d Regiment.
- Daklin's (Chandler P.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 1st Regiment, Batteries H and I.
- Darnest's (Robert H.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 115th Regiment.
- Daton's (John B.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 37th Battery.
- DeKman's (Charles W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 93d Regiment.
- Eddy's (Henry M.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 114th Regiment.
- Edmande' (J. Cushing) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 32d Regiment.
- Edmonds' (Thomas F.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 24th Regiment.
- Edmunds' (Henry) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 55th Regiment.

* Temporarily commanding.

- Egbert's (George T.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 183d Regiment.
 Egelston's (Rouse S.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 37th Regiment.
 Eiche's (Louis) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Einsiedel's (Dettlo von) Infantry. See New York Troops, 11st Regiment.
 Elder's (Samuel S.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
 Elfwing's (Nero A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 18th Regiment.
 Ellett's (Thomas) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Elliott's (Thornton J.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Emerson's (Charles W.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Colored, 1st Regiment.
 Emrich's (John P.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 8th Regiment.
 Emmett's (William T.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 3d Regiment.
 Erson's (Eric) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 52d Regiment.
 Eppy's (J. F.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 18th Regiment.
 Essington's (Heber B.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 203d Regiment.
 Evans' (Andrew W.) Cavalry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 1st Regiment.
 Evans' (Edwin A.) Heavy Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery D.
 Evans' (Ira L.) Sharpshooters. See Michigan Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Evans' (John B.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 10th Regiment.
 Faehitz's (Ernest F. M.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 8th Regiment.
 Faison's (Paul F.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 56th Regiment.
 Fannin's (Augustus B., jr.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 61st Regiment.
 Fanquier Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Faxon's (William C.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Ferrell's (George A.) Artillery. See William B. Hart's Artillery, post.
 Fleckling's (William W.) Artillery. See Brooks Artillery, ante.
 Fish's (Henry H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 94th Regiment.
 Fish's (Henry C.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 65th Regiment.
 Fish's (John) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment, Mounted Rifles.
 Fite's (John B.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 110th Regiment.
 Fitzgerald's (George P.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 3d Battery.
 Fitzgerald's (John P.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 23d Regiment.
 Flanders' (Alexander C.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 48th Regiment.
 Flanner's (Henry G.) Artillery. See Branch Artillery, ante.
 Fletcher's (Stephen C.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 1st Regiment (Veteran).
 Flint's (Edward A.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Flowers' (George W.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 38th Regiment.
 Floyd's (Hernando W.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 3d and 4th Regiments.
 Follett's (Frederick M.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Battery D.
 Folwell's (Muhlen B.) Engineers. See New York Troops, 50th Regiment.
 Forcum's (John B.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 4th Regiment.
 Ford's (Wayland F.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 20th Regiment.
 Foster's (Alfred H.) Infantry. See Palmetto Sharpshooters, post.
 Foster's (George W.) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 9th Battery.
 Frederick's (George W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 209th Regiment.
 Fredericksburg Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 French's (David A.) Artillery. See McComas Artillery, post.
 French's (George) Infantry. See New York Troops, 94th Regiment.
 French's (William H.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 2d Regiment.
 Fry's (C. W.) Artillery. See Orange Artillery, post.
 Fry's (William H.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 16th Regiment.

- Fuger's (Frederick) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Batteries C and B.
- Funk's (Augustus) Infantry. See New York Troops, 39th Regiment.
- Funk's (West) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 121st Regiment.
- Gage's (Charles F.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Gale's (John) Artillery. See Maryland Troops, Confederate, 1st Battery.
- Gallager's (John H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 106th Regiment.
- Galloway's (Thomas S., jr.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 22d Regiment.
- Gansevoort's (Henry S.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 13th Regiment.
- Garber's (Asber W.) Artillery. See Staunton Artillery, post.
- Garden's (Hugh R.) Artillery. See Pulmeth Artillery, No. 2, post.
- Gault's (Olney K.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Geddis' (John B.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 126th Regiment.
- George's (Benjamin) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 21st Regiment.
- Gessler's (Bernhard) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 98th Regiment.
- Getchell's (Edward L.) Infantry. See Missoc Troops, 31st Regiment.
- Gifford's (Haviland) Infantry. See New York Troops, 36d Regiment.
- Gilbert's (Thomas S.) Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 3d Battery.
- Gillryson's (Stephen R.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 40th Regiment.
- Giller's (Jacob) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 99th Regiment.
- Gilmor's (Harry W.) Cavalry. See Maryland Troops, Confederate, 2d Battalion.
- Gilmore's (Charles D.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Gist's (Moses B.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Givin's (James) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colonel, 127th Regiment.
- Glazier's (Theodore C.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colonel, 15th Regiment.
- Gleim's (Edwin A.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 198th Regiment.
- Glenney's (William) Infantry. See New York Troops, 64th Regiment.
- Goff's (Nathan, jr.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colonel, 27th Regiment.
- Goode's (John T.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 34th Regiment.
- Goodyear's (Ellsworth D. S.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 10th Regiment.
- Gould's (Ezra P.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 59th Regiment.
- Gould's (Seward F.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 1th Regiment.
- Gowan's (George W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 48th Regiment.
- Gower's (John W.) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 18th Regiment.
- Graham's (Archibald) Artillery. See Buckbridge Artillery, post.
- Graham's (Edward) Artillery. See Petersburg Artillery, post.
- Graham's (William W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 104th Regiment.
- Grandy's (Charles R.) Artillery. See Norfolk Blues, Artillery, post.
- Grantsynn's (William S.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 140th Regiment.
- Gray's (William C.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 119th Regiment.
- Green's (Charles A.) Artillery. See Louisiana Guard, Artillery, post.
- Green's (John) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 37th Regiment.
- Greenfield's (Andrew J.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 22d Regiment.
- Gregg's (Thomare) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 15th Regiment.
- Gregg's (Thomas E.) Heavy Artillery. See South Carolina Troops, 18th Battalion, Battery C.
- Gregg's (William M.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 159th Regiment.
- Griffin's (Charles B.) Artillery. See Salem Artillery, post.
- Griggs' (George K.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 38th Regiment.
- Grill's (Frederick) Heavy Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Grindlay's (James) Infantry. See New York Troops, 146th Regiment.
- Griswold's Light Cavalry. See New York Troops, 21st Regiment.
- Groner's (Virginus D.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 61st Regiment.
- Grubb's (James W.) Cavalry. See Louisa Rangers, Cavalry, post.

- Guild's (Charles E.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery F.
 Hagood's (James R.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 1st Regiment, Volunteers.
 Hall's (Henry C.) Cavalry. See Maine Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Hall's (James P.) Engineers. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Hall's (Josiah) Cavalry. See Vermont Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Hall's (Robert M.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 38th Regiment.
 Hall's Sharpshooters. See Michigan Troops.
 Hamilton's (Edgar A.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Hamilton's (Isaac T.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 110th Regiment.
 Hamilton's (Theodore B.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 62d Regiment.
 Hamlin's (James H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 115th Regiment.
 Hampden Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Hampton Legion. See South Carolina Troops.
 Hardenbergh's (Jacob B.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 80th Regiment.
 Harding's (Oliver P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 203d Regiment.
 Hardwicke's (William W.) Artillery. See Lee Artillery, post.
 Harman's (Asler W.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 12th Regiment.
 Harri's (William A.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 3d Battery.
 Harper's (John) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 95th Regiment.
 Harper's (Wilson) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 25th Regiment.
 Harriman's (Walker) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Harris' (James) Artillery. See Ohio Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery H.
 Hartford's (Henry) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Harwood's (Franklin) Engineers. See Union Troops, Regulars.
 Hasbrouck's (Henry C.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Battery L.
 Haskell's (Alexander C.) Cavalry. See South Carolina Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Haskell's (Lowellyn F.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 41st Regiment.
 Hastings' (Smith H.) Cavalry. See Michigan Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Hazelton's (James B.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery D.
 Hean's (J. Frank) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 93d Regiment.
 Heggart's (Robert) Infantry. See New York Troops, 183d Regiment.
 Heintzelman's (Mish T.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 208th Regiment.
 Herbert's (Arthur) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 17th Regiment.
 Herrell's (Henry A.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 33d Regiment.
 Herring's (Charles P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 118th Regiment.
 Hess' (Frank W.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Hickerson's (Francis G.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 10th Regiment.
 Hickman's (Haynton J.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 49th Regiment.
 Higginson's (James J.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Hill's (Caleb P.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 10th Battalion.
 Hill's (George H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 55th Regiment.
 Hill's (Jumathan A.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Hill's (Joseph C.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 6th Regiment.
 Hill's (W. T.) Infantry. See Texas Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Hinden's (George W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 96th Regiment.
 Hobson's (Edwin L.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 5th Regiment.
 Hobson's (William) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 17th Regiment.
 Holcombe Legion. See South Carolina Troops.
 Holliday's (John W.) Infantry. See West Virginia Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Holmes' (Joseph G.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 205th Regiment.
 Holt's (Bolling H.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 35th Regiment.
 Holt's (Erastus D.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 49th Regiment.
 Hopkins' (Archibald) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 37th Regiment.
 Hopkins' (Charles F.) Infantry. See Florida Troops, 10th Regiment.

- Hopper's (George F.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 10th Regiment.
- Horrell's (Napoleon J.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 31st Regiment.
- Horton's (Joseph H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 111st Regiment.
- Houston's (Frank) Infantry. See Miracosta Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Howe's (S. Augustus) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 9th Regiment, Battery L.
- Howe's (Shesh B.) Cavalry. See West Virginia Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Howell's (John H.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery M.
- Hubbard's (James) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Hudson's (Horace) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Colored, 1st Regiment.
- Hufty's (Baldwin) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 4th Regiment; also 1st Battalion (Veteran).
- Hulser's (Oscar F.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Humphreys' (Francis R.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Hunsdon's (Charles) Heavy Artillery. See Vermont Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Hunt's (Isaac F.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 13th Regiment.
- Hupp's (George C.) Cavalry. See Illinois Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Hurt's (William B.) Artillery. See Alabama Troops, Confederate.
- Husk's (Lewis W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 111th Regiment.
- Huysman's (Theodore) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Batteries C and I.
- Hyde's (John McE.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 39th Regiment.
- Hyde's (Joseph) Infantry. See New York Troops, 125th Regiment.
- Ives' (Bryton) Cavalry. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Ives' (Lucius H.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 26th Regiment.
- Jack's (John T.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 56th Regiment.
- James' (Martin S.) Heavy Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery C.
- Janeway's (Hugh H.) Cavalry. See New Jersey Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Janeway's (Jacob J.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Jardine's (George) Sharpshooters. See Michigan Troops.
- Jarrard's (J. A.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 24th Regiment.
- Jayne's (Joseph M.) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 48th Regiment.
- Jeff. Davis Artillery. See Alabama Troops, Confederate.
- Jeff. Davis Legion, Cavalry. See Mississippi Troops.
- Jenkins' (James E.) Cavalry. See Oncida Cavalry, post.
- Jenkins' (Joseph J.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 2d Regiment.
- Jewell's (James A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 59th Regiment.
- Johnson's (Daniel D.) Infantry. See West Virginia Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Johnson's (Deloss M.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery D.
- Johnson's (James H.) Infantry. See Tennessee Troops, Confederate, 14th Regiment.
- Johnson's (Lamis W.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 10th Regiment.
- Johnson's (Nathan J.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 115th Regiment.
- Johnston Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Johnston's (Charles F.) Artillery. See Albemarle Artillery, ante.
- Johnston's (Philip Preston) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Johnston's (William A.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 14th Regiment.
- Jones' (A. K.) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 12th Regiment.
- Jones' (Edward J.) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 11th Battery.
- Jones' (Enoch) Artillery. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery H.
- Jones' (John A.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 44th Regiment.
- Jones' (John W.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 56th Regiment.
- Jones' (Lorrain F.) Artillery. See Richmond Howitzers, post, 2d Company.
- Jones' (Richard W.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 12th Regiment.

- Jones' (Waters B.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 60th and 61st Regiments.
Kalt's (Hyrion) Infantry. See New York Troops, 158th Regiment.
Karples' (Henry M.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 52d Regiment.
Kelley's (Warren M.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 10th Regiment.
Kellogg's (Horace) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 123d Regiment.
Kennedy's (Richard) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 4th Regiment, Battery C.
Kennedy's (Ronald A.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 5th Regiment.
Kent's (Daniel H.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 4th Regiment.
Kent's (Lewis A.) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 6th Regiment.
Kephart's (Theophilus) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 104th Regiment.
Kerr's (Thomas) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 6th Regiment.
Kevill's (Thomas) Artillery. See United Artillery, post.
King William Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
Kinloch's (John M.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 23d Regiment.
Kleinz's (Christopher) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 5th Regiment.
Knapp's (Lynnan E.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 17th Regiment.
Kner's (Charles) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 76th Regiment.
Knight's (George D.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 95th Regiment.
Knight's (Walter M.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery II.
Knowles' (Oliver B.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 21st Regiment.
Knock's (James) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 26th Regiment.
Koerber's (Vincent E., von) Cavalry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 1st Regiment.
Krentzer's (William) Infantry. See New York Troops, 98th Regiment.
Kyes' (Ebenoxer S.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 31st Regiment.
Laird's (George H.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 116th Regiment.
Lamkin's (James N.) Artillery. See Nelson Artillery, post.
Lamoureux's (Sullivan B.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 9th Regiment.
Land's (Ceth S.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 26th Regiment.
Landry's (R. Prosper) Artillery. See Danaldsonville Artillery, ante.
Lane's (Nathaniel P.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 66th Regiment.
La Point's (George W.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 7th Regiment.
Lasseter's (Gideon J.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 18th Regiment.
Latham's (Louis C.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 1st Regiment.
Lathrop's (Joseph H.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
Latimer's (Alfred E.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 11th Regiment, 1st Battalion.
Lawhon's (Archibald F.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 20th Regiment.
Lay's (Richard G.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 3d Regiment.
Laycock's (Henry A.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 56th and 88th Regiments.
Lean's (John W.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 5th Regiment.
Leach's (Frank T.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 34th Regiment.
Lee Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
Lee's (Richard H.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 16th Battery.
Leib's (Edward H.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment.
Leiper's (Charles L.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 6th Regiment.
Lester's (Richard P.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 14th Regiment.
Letcher Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
Lewis' (Charles J.) Heavy Artillery. See Vermont Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery D.
Lewis' (Frederick W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 99th Regiment.
Lewis' (John W.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
Lewis' (Robert) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery I.
Lincoln's (Sumner M.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 6th Regiment.
Linebarger's (T. James) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 28th Regiment.

- Littell's (John S.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 76th Regiment.
 Lookley's (George) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Lockwood's (Abram L.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 120th Regiment.
 Logan's (Thomas H.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 28th Regiment.
 Loomis' (Henry) Infantry. See New York Troops, 146th Regiment.
 Loomis' (Henry W.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Lord's (James H.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 2d Regiment, Battery A.
 Lord's (Richard S. C.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 1st Regiment.
 Losee's (Alfred B.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 19th Battery.
 Loudoun Rangers, Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Union.
 Louisiana Guard, Artillery. See Louisiana Troops, Confederate.
 Lowther's (Alexander A.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 15th Regiment.
 Luby's (Timothy) Engineers. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Ludgate's (William) Infantry. See New York Troops, 69th Regiment.
 Lyman's (Jonas W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 203d Regiment.
 McAllaster's (William H.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 12th Regiment.
 McAnally's (Charles) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 69th Regiment.
 McCall's (William H. H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 200th Regiment.
 McClellan's (Samuel A.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery G.
 McClelland's (William) Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
 McClenahan's (Matthew R.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 138th Regiment.
 McComas Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 McCoy's (Thomas P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 107th Regiment.
 McDonald's (Andrew N.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 106th Regiment.
 McDonald's (Joseph M.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 47th Regiment.
 MacDougall's (Clinton D.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 111th Regiment.
 McGregor's (James) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 139th Regiment.
 McGregor's (William M.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 McIntosh's (Lucas) Artillery. See Valentine J. Clutter's Artillery, ante.
 McIntyre's (Martin V.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 7th Battery.
 McKenna's (James) Infantry. See New York Troops, 73d Regiment.
 McKinley's (James A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 147th Regiment.
 McKinley's (William P.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 184th Regiment.
 McKimlock's (John) Infantry. See New York Troops, 147th Regiment.
 McKinnie's (Thomas W.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 126th Regiment.
 Maclary's (William H.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 4th Regiment.
 McLellan's (Curwen B.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 6th Regiment.
 McNary's (William H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 158th Regiment.
 McNeely's (James W.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 10th Regiment.
 McNeill's (John H.) Partisans. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Macon Artillery. See Georgia Troops.
 Macon's (Miles C.) Artillery. See Richmond Fayette Artillery, post.
 Madison Artillery. See Louisiana Troops.
 Madison Light Artillery. See Mississippi Troops.
 Malony's (William S.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Maltbie's (Richard) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 13th Regiment.
 Manger's (Andrew) Engineers. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Manning's (James A.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 11th Battery.
 Manning's (William H.) Infantry. See Louisiana Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Mansfield's (James F.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Marble's (William S.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Marsh's (E. Jay) Infantry. See New York Troops, 186th Regiment.
 Marsh's (Thomas B.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 51st Regiment.
 Marshall's (Sylvester W.) Heavy Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery M.

- Marshall's (William C.) Artillery. See Fauquier Artillery, ante.
- Martin's (William J.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 11th Regiment.
- Martz's (D. H. Lee) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 10th Regiment.
- Mason's (Ebenezer P.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Mason's (Julius W.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment.
- Massie's (Plotcher T.) Artillery. See Nelson Artillery, post.
- Mathews Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Mathews' (Thomas) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 17th Regiment.
- Matthewson's (Angell) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery E.
- Mattocks' (Charles P.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 17th Regiment.
- Maxwell's (George R.) Cavalry. See Michigan Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Maxwell's (Norman J.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 100th Regiment.
- Mayo's (Ezekiel R.) Artillery. See Maine Troops, 3d Battery.
- Mead's (John B.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Megraw's (David W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 146th Regiment.
- Merrill's (Augustus) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 1st Regiment (Fetran).
- Meyer's (Francis X.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 117th Regiment.
- Middleton's (Gabriel) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Miles' (Eskine H.) Heavy Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery E.
- Miller's (James) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 105th Regiment.
- Miller's (John H.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 21st Regiment.
- Miller's (John O.) Artillery. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 1st Regiment, Battery E.
- Miller's (Marcus P.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Batteries G and H.
- Miller's (Theodore) Infantry. See New York Troops, 139th Regiment.
- Milliken's (Charles A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 43d Regiment.
- Milton's (Richard S.) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 9th Battery.
- Mims' (William J.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 43d Regiment.
- Minotree's (Joseph P.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 41st Regiment.
- Mink's (Charles E.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery H.
- Mintzor's (William M.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 53d Regiment.
- Mitchell's (John) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Battery B.
- Mitchell's (John) Infantry. See New York Troops, 170th Regiment.
- Mobley's (Edward M.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 7th Regiment.
- Moffett's (Charles J.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 2d Battalion.
- Moffett's (William D.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 49th Regiment.
- Montgomery's (Charles R.) Artillery. See Morris Artillery, post.
- Montgomery's (William W.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Moody's (George V.) Artillery. See Madison Artillery, ante.
- Moon's (John C.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 118th Regiment.
- Moore's (James B.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 17th Regiment.
- Moore's (John W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 203d Regiment.
- Moore's (Joseph D.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Moore's (Samuel A.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Moore's (Walker R.) Infantry. See Florida Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Morgan's (Albert T.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 94th Regiment.
- Morgan's (J. Frank) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Morgan's (William A.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 1st Regiment.
- Morrill's (Walter G.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Morris Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Morris' (Robert M.) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 6th Regiment.
- Morrison's (A. B.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 44th Battalion.

- Morrow's (Albert P.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 6th Regiment.
- Morrow's (B. Mortimer) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 205th Regiment.
- Mosby's (John S.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 43d Battalion.
- Moulton's (Albert P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 54th Regiment.
- Muhlenberg's (Charles P.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Battery A.
- Mulholland's (St. Clair A.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 116th Regiment.
- Murdock's (William) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Murray's (John B.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 148th Regiment.
- Myers' (Daniel) Infantry. See New York Troops, 187th Regiment.
- Myrick's (John R.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 3d Regiment, Battery E.
- Nash's (Edwin A.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Neblett Heavy Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Neely's (Robert) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 1st Regiment.
- Negus' (Edward L.) Cavalry. See Michigan Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Nelson Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Nelson Artillery, No. 2. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Newberry's (Walter C.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 21th Regiment.
- New York 1st Dragoons, Cavalry. See New York Troops, 19th Regiment.
- New York 1st Mounted Rifles. See New York Troops, 7th Regiment, Cavalry.
- New York 20th Militia, Infantry. See New York Troops, 80th Regiment.
- New York 69th National Guard, Artillery. See New York Troops, 183d Regiment, Infantry.
- Nichols' (Asahel W.) Sharpshooters. See Michigan Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Nichols' (Edwin) Infantry. See New York Troops, 100th Regiment.
- Nieman's (George W.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 18th Regiment.
- Noggle's (Dorman L.) Artillery. See Wisconsin Troops, 4th Battery.
- Norfolk Blues, Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Normant's (George M.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 34th Regiment.
- Norton's (Perez L.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 191st Regiment.
- Oakman's (Hiram A.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 30th Regiment.
- O'Brien's (John) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery I.
- O'Keefe's (Keefe S.) Engineers. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
- Olcott's (Egbert) Infantry. See New York Troops, 221st Regiment.
- Olcott's (Egbert W.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 1st Regiment, Battery M.
- Oliver's (William H.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Oneida Cavalry. See New York Troops.
- O'Neill's (Henry) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 118th Regiment.
- Orange Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Orr's (James L.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 1st Regiment, Rifles.
- Otey Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Overmyer's (John B.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Owen's (Edward) Artillery. See Washington (D. C.) Artillery, post, 1st Battery.
- Owens' (Wesley) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Palmer's (Charles S.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 19th Regiment.
- Palmetto Artillery, No. 2. See South Carolina Troops.
- Palmetto Sharpshooters, Infantry. See South Carolina Troops.
- Parker's (Ezra K.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery E.
- Parker's (William W.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Parr's (John G.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 139th Regiment.
- Parsons' (Augusta N.) Artillery. See New Jersey Troops, 1st Battery.
- Partridge's (Benjamin F.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 16th Regiment.
- tohell's (James) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 103d Regiment.

- Pattee's (Joseph B.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 157th, 190th, and 191st Regiments.
- Patterson's (George M.) Artillery. See Sumter Artillery, post, Battery B.
- Patterson's (Henry D.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery A.
- Patterson's (John N.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Paxton's (Samuel W.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 52d Regiment.
- Peace's (Abner D.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 23d Regiment.
- Pearson's (Alfred L.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 155th Regiment.
- Pegram's (Richard G.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Pendleton's (Edmund) Infantry. See Louisiana Troops, 15th Regiment.
- Pendrell's (William) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 13th Regiment, Batteries A and H.
- Penick's (Nathan) Artillery. See John W. Lewis' Artillery, ante.
- Pentecost's (Joseph H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 100th Regiment.
- Perine's (Dwight M.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery L.
- Perkins' (Joseph G.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 19th Regiment.
- Perrin's (William K.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 26th Regiment.
- Perry's (Clinton) Sharpshooters. See New York Troops, 1st Battalion.
- Perry's (Edward C.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 31st Regiment.
- Petersburg Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Pettes' (William H.) Engineers. See New York Troops, 50th Regiment.
- Petty's (Charles Q.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 49th Regiment.
- Petty's (Robert E.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 35th Regiment.
- Phillips' (Charles A.) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 5th (B) Battery.
- Phillips Legion. See Georgia Troops.
- Philpps' (Richard W.) Infantry. See Mississippi Troops, 19th Regiment.
- Pickering's (John, jr.) Heavy Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 5d Regiment, Battery I.
- Pier's (Colwort K.) Infantry.* See New York Troops, 109th Regiment.
- Pieroe's (Francis E.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 108th Regiment.
- Pierce's (Henry H.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Pifer's (George D.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 53d Regiment.
- Platt's (Thomas J.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 62d Regiment.
- Plympton's (Homer A.) Infantry. See Illinois Troops, 39th Regiment.
- Poindexter's (George) Artillery. See Madison Artillery, ante.
- Pokorny's (Anthony) Infantry. See New York Troops, 7th Regiment.
- Pollack's (John) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 40th Regiment.
- Pollard's (John E.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 20th Regiment.
- Pollock's (John G.) Artillery. See Fredericksburg Artillery, ante.
- Powell's (Edward H.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 10th Regiment.
- Powhatan Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Prados' (Louis) Infantry. See Louisiana Troops, 3th Regiment.
- Pratt's (Benjamin P.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 36th Regiment.
- Pratt's (Henry A.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Pratt's (Oscar E.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 7th Regiment.
- Pratt's (William M.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Prentiss' (Clifton K.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 6th Regiment.
- Preston's (John A.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 37th Regiment.
- Price's (Berryman Z.) Artillery. See Danville Artillery, ante.
- Price's (Fruwies) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 7th Regiment.
- Pride's (William G.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Batteries B, G, and L.

* Temporarily commanding.

- Prince's (Frederick W.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Pulford's (John) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 5th Regiment.
- Purcell Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Purse's (E. L.) Artillery. See Brooks Artillery, ante.
- Ramsay's (John A.) Artillery. See Rowan Artillery, post.
- Ramsey's (William H.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Ramsey's (William H.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 57th Regiment.
- Rand's (Arnold A.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Randall's (Francis V.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 17th Regiment.
- Randall's (George M.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 14th Regiment.
- Randol's (Alanson M.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment (Harris Light.)
- Rawles' (Jacob B.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Batteries D and G.
- Ready's (Horace) Infantry. See Teunessee Troops, Confederate, 17th and 23d Regiments.
- Redlich's (William) Infantry. See New York Troops, 103d Regiment.
- Reen's (Charles) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 38th Regiment.
- Reese's (A. J.) Infantry. See Phillips Legion, ante.
- Reese's (William J.) Artillery. See Jeff. Davis Artillery, ante.
- Reeves' (James H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Rehrer's (Jacob) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 200th Regiment.
- Reno's (Marcus A.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 12th Regiment.
- Reynolds' (Edward H.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Rhein's (Jacob) Artillery. See New Jersey Troops, 2d Battery.
- Rhinehart's (Alfred A.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 148th Regiment.
- Rhoads' (Samuel H.) Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, Battery D.
- Rhodes' (Elisha H.) Infantry. See Rhode Island Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Rhodes' (William H.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
- Rice's (Edmund) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 19th Regiment.
- Rice's (Thomas G.) Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
- Rich's (Giles H.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 1st Regiment.
- Rich's (Roulan H.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery G.
- Richards' (John N.) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Richards' (Melzer) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 24th Regiment.
- Richards' (Thomas J.) Artillery. See Madison Light Artillery, ante.
- Richardson's (Hollon) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 7th Regiment.
- Richmond Fayette Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Richmond Hewitzers, Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Richter's (Otto) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
- Riley's (Thomas M.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 5th Regiment.
- Ringgold Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Ritchie's (David F.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery G.
- Ritter's (Wade) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 5th Battalion.
- Ritzius' (Henry P.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 62d Regiment.
- Rivers' (Charles C.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Robbins' (Walter R.) Cavalry. See New Jersey Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Roberts' (John H.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Roberts' (Robert N.) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 38th Regiment.
- Robertson's (James T.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 1st Regiment, Rifles.
- Robeson's (William P., jr.) Cavalry. See New Jersey Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Robins' (William T.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 24th Regiment.
- Robinson's (Cornelius, jr.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 3d Regiment.
- Robinson's (Gillert P.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 3d Regiment.
- Robinson's (Lucian D.) Artillery. See King William Artillery, ante.

- Robison's (John K.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 16th Regiment.
 Rockbridge Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Rockbridge Artillery, No. 2. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Rockwell's (Alfred P.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Roder's (John W.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Battery K.
 Roemer's (Jacob) Artillery. See New York Troops, 34th Battery.
 Rogers' (Chauncey P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 83d Regiment.
 Rogers' (Edward W.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 19th Battery.
 Rogers' (George) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 4th Regiment.
 Rogers' (George T.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 6th Regiment.
 Rogers' (Joseph A.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 3d Battalion Reserves.
 Rogers' (Robert E.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
 Rogers' (William H.) Artillery. See Maine Troops, 6th Battery.
 Rogers' (William H.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Rollins' (Augustus W.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Ross' (Poleman D.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 12th Regiment.
 Rounds' (Lewis) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Rowan Artillery. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate.
 Royce's (Clark E.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 29th Regiment.
 Rucker's (Louis H.) Cavalry. See Illinois Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Russell's (Edward) Cavalry. See Illinois Troops, 8th Regiment.
 Rutledge's (Henry M.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 25th Regiment.
 Ryan's (Patrick M.) Infantry. See Illinois Troops, 23d Regiment.
 Salem Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Sanders' (William W.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 2d Regiment.
 Sanford's (John W. A.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 60th Regiment.
 Saunders' (William L.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 46th Regiment.
 Savannah Guards, Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 18th Battalion.
 Sawyer's (Charles F.) Sharpshooters. See Maine Troops, 1st Battalion.
 Saxton's (John) Cavalry. See Ohio Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Scales' (James T.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 2d Regiment.
 Schaffer's (George W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 61st Regiment.
 Schen's (Jacob) Infantry. See New York Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Schickhardt's (Henry) Infantry. See New York Troops, 5th Regiment (Veteran).
 Schneider's (Joseph) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
 Schoff's (Edward N.) Sharpshooters. See Minnesota Troops, 2d Company.
 Schoonover's (John) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Schwartz's (Edward) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Schwenk's (Samuel K.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 50th Regiment.
 Scott's (Henry B.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Scott's (John Wallace) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 157th Regiment.
 Scott's (Walter F.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 120th Regiment.
 Spriggs' (Lawrence H.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 4th Regiment.
 Sears' (William) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Battery.
 Sedgwick's (Thomas D.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 114th Regiment.
 Selkirk's (George H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 49th Regiment.
 Sellers' (Eli G.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 91st Regiment.
 Sellers' (Samuel) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 13th Regiment.
 Sergeant's (William) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 210th Regiment.
 Sewell's (William J.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 38th Regiment.
 Seymour's (Frank) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 4th Regiment, Battery L.

- Shafer's (John W.) Infantry. See Indiana Troops, 20th Regiment.
 Shammou's (Peter J.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 15th Regiment.
 Shatswell's (Nathaniel) Heavy Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Sheaffer's (Henry J.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 107th Regiment.
 Shellenberger's (William D.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 110th Regiment.
 Shelton's (William D.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 14th Regiment.
 Shepard's (Samuel G.) Infantry. See Tennessee Troops, Confederate, 7th Regiment.
 Shepherd's (Russell B.) Heavy Artillery. See Maine Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Shiver's (John M.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Shoemaker's (John J.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Shuford's (P. C.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 32d Regiment.
 Shute's (Richard S.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 121st Regiment.
 Sickel's (Hercules G.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 198th Regiment.
 Silliman's (Charles N.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Simmons' (Thomas J.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 45th Regiment.
 Slater's (C. W.) Artillery. See Maine Artillery, ante.
 Smith's (Benjamin F.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 126th Regiment.
 Smith's (Benjamin H., jr.) Artillery. See Richmond Howitzers, ante, 3d Company.
 Smith's (Charles W.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Smith's (Edward) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 21st Regiment.
 Smith's (Edward S.) Artillery.* See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Battery K.
 Smith's (George P.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 61st Regiment.
 Smith's (Howard M.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 19th Regiment.
 Smith's (James J.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 69th Regiment.
 Smith's (John) Infantry. See New York Troops, 88th Regiment.
 Smith's (John Donnell) Artillery. See Bedford Artillery, ante.
 Smith's (John P.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 112th Regiment.
 Smith's (Norman) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 13th Regiment.
 Smith's (Zenro A.) Heavy Artillery. See Maine Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Sneed's (Clairborne) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Sniper's (Gustavus) Infantry. See New York Troops, 185th Regiment.
 Snow's (Henry E.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 21st Regiment.
 Snyder's (James W.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 9th Regiment.
 Snyder's (William A.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 24th Regiment.
 Southside Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Spaulding's (Ira) Engineers. See New York Troops, 50th Regiment.
 Spaulding's (Joseph W.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 19th Regiment.
 Sperry's (William J.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Spessard's (Michael P.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 28th Regiment.
 Stafford Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Stallworth's (Nicholas) Sharpshooters. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 23d Battalion.
 Stansel's (Martin L.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 11st Regiment.
 Stanton's (David L.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 1st Regiment.
 Stanton's (John) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 198th Regiment.
 Starbird's (Isaac W.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 19th Regiment.
 Start's (Romeo H.) Artillery. See Vermont Troops, 3d Battery.
 Staunton Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Stearns' (Ozora P.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 39th Regiment.
 Stedman's (Charles M.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 4th Regiment.
 Steed's (W. G.) Infantry. See Ohio's Legion, ante.

* Temporarily commanding.

- Steedman's (John M.) Infantry. See South Carolina Troops, 6th Regiment.
 Stevens' (Atherton H., jr.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Stevens' (Charles E.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 77th Regiment.
 Stewart's (Franklin B.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 110th Regiment.
 Stewart's (Martin L.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 11th Regiment.
 Stiles' (George W.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 18th Battalion.
 Stitt's (William) Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery A.
 Stockton's (William A. F.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 140th Regiment.
 Stone's (Valentine H.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment, Batteries C and I.
 Stover's (John H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 184th Regiment.
 Stowe's (William A.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 16th Regiment.
 Stratton's (Franklin A.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 11th Regiment.
 Stubbs' (Charles E.) Artillery. See Maine Troops, 2d Battery.
 Sullivan's (J. E.) Artillery. See Hampden Artillery, ante.
 Sumner's (Edwin V.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Sumter Artillery. See Georgia Troops.
 Sumter Flying Artillery. See Sumter Artillery, ante, Battery A.
 Surry Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Sutton's (John F.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 118th Regiment.
 Sweltzer's (Nobum B.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment.
 Swift's (Frederick W.) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 17th Regiment.
 Tabb's (William B.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 59th Regiment.
 Tanton's (William H.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 38th Regiment.
 Tarbell's (Jonathan) Infantry. See New York Troops, 91st Regiment.
 Taylor's (Benjamin P.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Union, 2d Regiment.
 Taylor's (James M.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 5th Regiment.
 Taylor's (Osmond B.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Taylor's (Robert S.) Infantry. See Arkansas Troops, 3d Regiment.
 Tearney's (James) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 87th Regiment.
 Terrell's (John A.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 14th Regiment.
 Terrill's (Albert A.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 119th Regiment.
 Terry's (Ira C.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 22d Regiment.
 Terry's (John C.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment (Mounted Rifles).
 Terwilliger's (William H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 63d Regiment.
 Teters' (Willard B.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 116th Regiment.
 Tewksbury's (John) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Thomas' (Charles E.) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
 Thomas' (George W.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 22d Regiment.
 Thomas' (Hampton S.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 1st Regiment.
 Thomas' (H. R.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 51st Regiment.
 Thompson's (Henry C.) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 16th Regiment, Batteries E and H.
 Thompson's (John) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 7th Regiment.
 Thomson's (James W.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
 Tiers' (Edmund T.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 157th Regiment.
 Tilden's (Charles W.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 16th Regiment.
 Tippin's (Andrew H.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 63th Regiment.
 Tompkins' (James L.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 42d Regiment.
 Torsch's (John W.) Infantry. See Maryland Troops, Confederate, 2d Regiment.
 Towers' (John R.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 5th Regiment.
 Townsend's (Joseph G.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 189th Regiment.
 Tracy's (Amasa S.) Infantry. See Vermont Troops, 2d Regiment.

- Tremain's (Frank W.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 89th Regiment.
- Tremlett's (Henry M.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 39th Regiment.
- Trickey's (William H.) Infantry. See New Hampshire Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Troxel's (Elias S.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 22d Regiment.
- True's (Edward A.) Infantry. See Maine Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Tucker's (John A.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Tucker's (Julius M.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 57th Regiment.
- Tully's (Richard) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 1st Regiment, Battery D.
- Twiss' (John M.) Heavy Artillery. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery K.
- Twitshell's (Adelbert B.) Artillery. See Maine Troops, 7th Battery.
- Tyler's (Casper W.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 141st Regiment.
- Tyler's (James E.) Artillery. See Letcher Artillery, ante.
- Tyler's (Mason W.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 37th Regiment.
- Underhill's (Henry P.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 160th Regiment.
- United Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.
- Urban's (Gustavus) Cavalry. See Union Troops, Regulars, 5th Regiment.
- Utterback's (Addison W.) Artillery. See Brooke Artillery, ante.
- Van Eitten's (Orsamus K.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 1st Battery.
- Van Winkle's (Edward D.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 10th Regiment.
- Vaughan's (Samuel K.) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 19th Regiment.
- Vincent's (Nathan H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 86th Regiment.
- Vinton's (Harvey H.) Cavalry. See Michigan Troops, 6th Regiment.
- Voris' (Alvin C.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 67th Regiment.
- Vose's (William P.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 4th Regiment, Battery B.
- Wade's (Hamilton D.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 4th Regiment.
- Wainwright's (John) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 27th Regiment.
- Waite's (Charles) Infantry. See Michigan Troops, 27th Regiment.
- Walcott's (Charles F.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 61st Regiment.
- Waldron's (George W.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 50th Regiment.
- Walker's (David N.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 13th Battalion; also Oley Artillery, ante.
- Walkup's (Samuel H.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 48th Regiment.
- Walpole's (Horace H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 122d Regiment.
- Walrath's (Ezra L.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 125th Regiment.
- Walrond's (Robert L.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 58th Regiment.
- Walsh's (James W.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Ward's (Henry C.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 31st Regiment.
- Warner's (Clement E.) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 36th Regiment.
- Warner's (George F.) Cavalry. See Illinois Troops, 8th Regiment.
- Warren's (Charles) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 11th Regiment.
- Warren's (Horatio N.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 143d Regiment.
- Warren's (Zenas C.) Artillery. See New Jersey Troops, 5th Battery.
- Washburn's (Francis) Cavalry. See Massachusetts Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Washington Artillery Battalion. See Louisiana Troops.
- Waterhouse's (John R.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 114th Regiment.
- Watson's (Osborn) Heavy Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 3d Regiment, Battery I.
- Webb's (John M.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 9th Regiment.
- Webb's (Joseph C.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 27th Regiment.
- Weddell's (John H.) Artillery. See Osmood B. Taylor's Artillery, ante.
- Weiss' (Adolphus) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 2d Regiment (Veteran).
- Weld's (Stephen M., jr.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 56th Regiment.

- Weltner's (John R.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 118th Regiment.
- West's (Henry R.) Infantry. See Ohio Troops, 62d Regiment.
- West's (Robert M.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 5th Regiment.
- Westcott's (William B.) Artillery. See Rhode Island Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery B.
- Wetmore's (George) Infantry. See New York Troops, 184th Regiment.
- Weygant's (Charles H.) Infantry. See New York Troops, 124th Regiment.
- Whaley's (Edward A.) Infantry. See Wisconsin Troops, 6th Regiment.
- Wheeler's (Alger M.) Artillery. See New York Troops, 33d Battery.
- Whitaker's (Edward W.) Cavalry. See Connecticut Troops, 1st Regiment.
- White's (Charles W.) Artillery. See Maine Troops, 4th Battery.
- White's (Elijah V.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 35th Battalion.
- White's (Harrison) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 6th Regiment.
- Whitehead's (Richard O.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 16th Regiment.
- Whiton's (John C.) Infantry. See Massachusetts Troops, 58th Regiment.
- Whitted's (Walter A.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 55th Regiment.
- Wiedrich's (Michael) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 15th Regiment.
- Wigginton's (John W.) Infantry. See Alabama Troops, Confederate, 48th Regiment.
- Wilder's (I. Hart) Infantry. See New York Troops, 126th Regiment.
- Willey's (Henry Y.) Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 1st Regiment, Battery E.
- Widrick's (Abraam C.) Infantry. See New Jersey Troops, 39th Regiment.
- Wilkinson's (Charles H.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 18th Regiment.
- Williams' (Arthur B.) Artillery. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 1st Regiment, Battery C.
- Williams' (William G.) Infantry.* See Pennsylvania Troops, 67th Regiment.
- Wilson's (Franklin C.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 27th Regiment.
- Wilson's (John P., jr.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 9th Regiment.
- Wilson's (Peter E.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 5th Regiment.
- Wilson's (William) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 81st Regiment.
- Wilson's (William T.) Artillery. See Runkbride's Artillery, No. 2, ante.
- Winger's (Benjamin F.) Heavy Artillery. See Pennsylvania Troops, 2d Regiment.
- Winkler's (Clinton M.) Infantry. See Texas Troops, 4th Regiment.
- Winslow's (Bradley) Infantry. See New York Troops, 186th Regiment.
- Winslow's (Robert E.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 68th Regiment.
- Winston's (John R.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 45th Regiment.
- Witcher's (John S.) Cavalry. See West Virginia Troops, 3d Regiment.
- Witcher's (William A.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 21st Regiment.
- Withers' (E. Benton) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 13th Regiment.
- Witman's (Edward L.) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 210th Regiment.
- Woerner's (Christian) Artillery. See New Jersey Troops, 3d Battery.
- Wood's (Joseph H.) Cavalry. See New York Troops, 2d Regiment, Mounted Rifles.
- Wood's (William) Heavy Artillery. See New York Troops, 9th Regiment.
- Woodall's (Daniel) Infantry. See Delaware Troops, 1st Regiment.
- Woodard's (Jesse F.) Artillery. See Ronan Artillery, ante.
- Woodruff's (Carle A.) Artillery. See Union Troops, Regulars, 2d Regiment, Battery M.
- Woodruff's (R. W.) Sharpshooters. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 1st Battalion.
- Woods' (R. H.) Infantry. See Georgia Troops, 53d Regiment.
- Woodson's (Blake L.) Infantry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 45th Battalion.
- Woodridge's (Edwin S.) Artillery. See William W. Packer's Artillery, ante.

*Temporarily commanding.

Wooldridge's (William B.) Cavalry. See Virginia Troops, Confederate, 4th Regiment.

Woolfolk's (James) Artillery. See Ashland Artillery, ante.

Wooster's (William B.) Infantry. See Connecticut Troops, 20th Regiment, Colored.

Wooten's (Thomas J.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 18th Regiment.

Wright's (Joseph W. B.) Artillery. See Massachusetts Troops, 14th Battery.

Wright's (Samuel T.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.

Yarborough's (William H.) Infantry. See North Carolina Troops, Confederate, 15th Regiment.

Yeargain's (John W.) Artillery. See Maine Light Artillery, ante.

Yeoman's (Stephen B.) Infantry. See Union Troops, Colored, 43d Regiment.

Young's (Edward R.) Artillery. See Virginia Troops, Confederate.

Young's (Samuel B. M.) Cavalry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 4th Regiment.

Zent's (Samuel M.) Infantry. See Indiana Troops, 13th Regiment.

Zinn's (George) Infantry. See Pennsylvania Troops, 57th Regiment.

INDEX.

Brigades, Divisions, Corps, Armies, and improvised organizations are "Mentioned" under name of commanding officer; State and other organizations under their official designation. (See Alternate Designations, pp. 1327-1348.)

	Page.
Abbot, Henry L.
Assignment to command .....	665
Correspondence with
Ager, George .....	673
Hunt, Henry J. ....	175
Mentioned .....	168, 303, 395, 396, 399, 565, 577, 581, 593, 659, 661, 665, 1074, 1170
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	603-605, 607, 670
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	165, 168, 170, 172
Abbott, George R.
Mentioned .....	569
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	862
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	273
Abbott, Joseph C.
Mentioned .....	131, 140, 145, 395, 397-400, 403-404, 411-413, 416, 424, 425, 451
Reports of
Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	410
Myrtle Sound, N. C. Reconnaissance to, etc., Jan. 19, 1865 .....	453
Abbott, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	621
Abell, Charles C. Mentioned .....	137, 579, 595, 1178, 1224, 1225, 1257
Abercrombie, William H. Mentioned .....	909
Abrahams, Cornelius S. Mentioned .....	930
Ackermann, William. Mentioned .....	895
Ackley, William S. Mentioned .....	598, 919, 929
Adam, Louis. Mentioned .....	1013
Adams, Charles F., jr. Mentioned .....	576, 1211, 1227
Adams, George. Mentioned .....	335, 340, 1032
Adams, George W. Mentioned .....	572, 902, 1009, 1010
Adams, Henry C.
Mentioned .....	577
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1198
Adams, James T. Mentioned .....	1272
Adams, John. Mentioned .....	219
Adams, John R. Mentioned .....	938
Adams, J. Webb.
Mentioned .....	191, 239, 249, 568, 790, 792
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	794
Adams, Matthew. Mentioned .....	408

	Page.
Adams, Samuel.
Mentioned .....	610, 1021
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	320
Adams, Thomas R. Mentioned .....	1275
Adams, Zabdiel B. Mentioned .....	574, 1027
Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A.
Correspondence with
Gibson, John .....	1176
Hancock, Winfield S. ....	521
Meade, George G. ....	606, 1030
Ord, Edward O. C. ....	1163, 1107
Orders, General, series 1865: No. 10, 402.
Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, C. S. A. Correspondence with
Lee, Robert E. ....	391
War Department, C. S. ....	510
Adreon, Harrison. Mentioned. ....	283, 509
Ager, George.
Correspondence with Henry J. Abbot .....	673
Mentioned .....	175, 185, 565, 601, 605, 609, 672
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan 1-April 3, 1865 .....	171
Aiken, John. Mentioned .....	635
Ainsworth, Frederic S. Mentioned .....	1231
Alabama Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Artillery, Light—Batteries: Hmt's, 1273; Jeff. Davis, 1271.
Infantry—Battalions: 5th, 1272; 23d Sharpshooters, 1271. Regiments:
3d, 1270; 4th, 1268; 5th, 6th, 1270; 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 1273; 12th,
33d, 1270; 13th, 14th, 1273; 15th, 1268; 41st, 1259, 1274, 1287; 42d, 233;
43d, 268, 1274; 44th, 47th, 48th, 1268; 59th, 233, 268, 380, 1274; 60th, 233, 268, 1274; 61st, 1065, 1270.
Alberger, Morris H. Mentioned .....	1232
Albright, Charles.
Mentioned .....	1310
Reports of
Burke's Station and Arndel's Farm, Va. Skirmishes near, April 10,
1865 .....	1309
Prince William County, Va. Scout in, Feb. 18-19, 1865 .....	468
Alden, Alonzo. Mentioned .....	404, 416, 421-423, 426
Aldie and Middleburg, Va. Scout from Fairfax Court-House to, Feb. 15-16,
1865. Reports of
Corbit, George W. ....	461
Gamble, William .....	461
Alexander, Albert. Mentioned .....	569, 1068
Alexander, Edward P. Mentioned .....	1269, 1279, 1280
Alger, William. Mentioned .....	930
Allebach, Francis. Mentioned .....	1026
Allen, Captain. Mentioned .....	1326
Allon, Abner P. Mentioned .....	1257
Allen, Crawford, jr.
Mentioned .....	572, 912, 919, 1009, 1010
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1013
Allen, David C. Mentioned .....	1270
Allen, Edward S. Correspondence with H. Wilson .....	1318
Allen, James. Mentioned .....	575
Allen, Joseph H. Mentioned .....	423

	Page.
Allen, Littleburry W. Report of expedition from Fort Monroe to Fredericksburg, Va., March 5-8, 1865.....	544
Allen, Samuel J. Mentioned.....	908
Allen, Thomas S. Mentioned.....	301, 571, 918, 943
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	952
Allen, Vanderbilt. Mentioned.....	1115
Allen, William H. Mentioned.....	787
Allen, William T. Mentioned.....	1153
Alley, John H. Mentioned.....	632, 634
Allison, W. B. Mentioned.....	1274
Amee, Josiah L. C. Mentioned.....	1216
Amelia Court-House, Va. Skirmish at, April 4-5, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Baker, J. Sumner. Muckenzie, Samuel S. Stratton, Franklin A.
Byrnes, Andrew W. Morris, Wesley. West, Robert M.
Amelia Springs, Va. Engagement at, April 5, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Crunk, George. McPaffin, Thomas A. Robbins, Walter R.
Davies, Henry B., jr. Meade, George G. Smith, Charles H.
Gault, Seward F.
Skirmish at Flat Creek, near. See Flat Creek, near Amelia Springs, Va. Skirmish at, April 6, 1865.
Ames, Adelbert. Mentioned.....	131, 144, 145, 394, 395, 397-401, 403-406, 408, 410, 411, 413, 414, 418-422, 423, 429, 430
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	415
Ames, John W. Mentioned.....	144, 404, 421
Ames, T. Edward. Mentioned.....	1025
Anidon, George H. Mentioned.....	571, 963, 973
Annen, Jacob. Mentioned.....	40
Amsden, Frederick J. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1177
Anderson, Archer. For correspondence as A. A. G., see Braxton Bragg.
Anderson, Beverly. Mentioned.....	473
Anderson, Bruce. Mentioned.....	417
Anderson, Charles F. Mentioned.....	922, 933
Anderson, Charles W. Mentioned.....	509
Anderson, David W. Mentioned.....	1271
Anderson, George C. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	209
Anderson, George T. Mentioned.....	388, 1268, 1277
Anderson, John. Mentioned.....	1034
Anderson, John D. Mentioned.....	336
Anderson, Richard H. Mentioned.....	845,
1155, 1263-1265, 1274, 1278, 1279, 1281, 1286-1290, 1293-1298, 1300, 1302
Anderson, Thomas. Mentioned.....	1257
Andrew, John A. Mentioned.....	1168
Andrews, Albert S. Mentioned.....	223, 229
Andrews, William H. H. Mentioned.....	1196
Angel, Ashbel W. Mentioned.....	577
Angel, James R. Mentioned.....	579

	Page.
Angel, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	341, 528, 1000
Annesley, Richard L. Mentioned .....	4670
Ansell, George. Mentioned .....	1686
Anson, Charles H. Mentioned .....	958, 973
Anthony, George T.
Mentioned .....	579
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1223
Antrim, ———. Mentioned .....	516, 517
Apple, Andrew O. Mentioned .....	1257
Appleby, Samuel D. Mentioned .....	924, 929
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.
Casualties. Returns of
Confederate Troops .....	1291
Union Troops .....	581-599, 677, 680, 682, 685, 686, 699, 702, 718, 748, 752, 753, 755, 803, 819, 840, 842, 908, 909, 912, 917, 957, 995, 1020, 1056, 1058, 1060, 1065, 1111, 1147, 1156, 1159, 1176, 1182, 1188
Confederate troops paroled at Appomattox Court-House, April 9, 1865. .	1277-1279
Congratulatory addresses.
Custer, George A. ....	1133
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	686
Meade, George G. ....	909
Congratulatory Orders.
Ferrero, Edward .....	1173
Gibben, John .....	1176
Hartsull, George I. ....	1172
Engineer operations during. Communications from William R. King. ....	1165
Farewell address of Robert E. Lee to Army of Northern Virginia .....	1267
Flags captured during, by Union troops ....	788, 916, 957, 980, 981, 1005, 1147, 1182
Medals of Honor awarded by U. S. Congress .....	1257
Movements and disposition of troops during. Communications from
Grant, U. S. ....	552, 553, 807, 811, 1111
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	804, 806, 811, 813, 823
Meade, George G. ....	797-799, 803-805, 808, 810, 811, 821, 823, 826
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	797, 799, 803, 805-808, 811-813, 820, 822-824
Operations during. Communications from
Ayres, Remeyn B. ....	812
Bartlett, Joseph J. ....	801
Cope, Emmer B. ....	821
Grant, U. S. ....	56
Griffin, Charles. ....	861
Hartsull, George I. ....	1171
Locke, Frederick T. ....	827
Meade, George G. ....	812
Sharahan, Philip H. ....	824
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	801, 818
Organization, strength, etc., of
Confederate Troops .....	1267-1276
Union Troops .....	566-580
Prisoners of War captured during, by Union troops ..	788, 840, 938, 1011, 1147, 1182
Property captured during, by Union troops ....	660, 788, 939, 1041, 1042, 1147, 1182
Reported movements of Confederate troops during. Communications from Gouverneur K. Warren .....	808, 809
Reports of
Abbot, Henry L. ....	663-665, 667, 670
Abbott, George R. ....	862

Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865—Continued.
 Reports of

Page.

Adams, Henry C .....	1198
Adams, J. Webb .....	791
Allen, Crawford, jr .....	1013
Allen, Thomas S .....	852
Amesden, Frederick J .....	1177
Anthony, George T .....	1223
Armstrong, Samuel C .....	1237
Ayres, Romeyn B .....	868, 869
Baker, J. Stannard .....	1249
Behlwin, Francis W. H .....	775
Barlow, Francis C .....	758
Barse, George H .....	1083
Bartlett, Joseph J .....	860
Bassett, Isaac C .....	949
Baxter, Henry .....	889
Becker, Adolph .....	1049
Bentham, Henry W .....	641
Blukley, Otto H .....	1003, 1004
Buntin, James .....	1050
Bird, Puttick H .....	726
Bliss, James .....	1137
Bogardus, Charles .....	989
Breck, George .....	1085
Brinckle, John R .....	1014
Briscoe, James C .....	1189
Bruce, George A .....	1212
Burke, Denis F .....	731
Chamberlain, Joshua L .....	817
Chow, Henry E .....	770
Clune, John A .....	807
Clough, Joseph M .....	1052
Collis, Charles H. T .....	1091
Coppinger, John J .....	1138
Cornyn, Charles M .....	1004
Coulter, Richard .....	806
Cowan, Andrew .....	1009
Cox, Robert C .....	1069
Crafts, Welcome A .....	718
Crawford, Samuel W .....	870
Crook, George .....	1141
Curtin, John I .....	1057
Curtis, William B .....	1219, 1220
Cuslar, George A .....	1129
Damon, George B .....	990
Dandy, George B .....	1192
Davies, Henry E., jr .....	1143
Davis, Charles L .....	636
Day, Albert A .....	1048
Day, Hiram W .....	985
Deane, John M .....	1051
Douk, John T .....	770
DeTrobriand, Regis .....	776, 781

	Page.
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865—Continued.
Reports of
Devens, Charles.....	1211
Davin, Thomas C.....	1122
Dobie, William.....	1206
Doolittle, Isaac.....	858
Doubladay, Ulysses.....	1236
Eaton, John B.....	1086
Edwards, Oliver.....	941
Egbert, George T.....	756
Egelston, Rouse S.....	890
Elder, Samuel S.....	1225
Ellett, Thornton J.....	1257
Ely, Ralph.....	1047
Evans, Andrew W.....	1251
Ewell, Richard S.....	1202
Fairchild, Harrison S.....	1202
Ferrero, Edward.....	1172
Fisk, Henry C.....	935, 936
Foster, Robert S.....	1179, 1182
Gallager, John H.....	774
Gessler, Bernhard.....	964
Getty, George W.....	953
Gibbon, John.....	1173
Gibbs, Alfred.....	1127
Givin, James.....	1240
Glazier, Theodore C.....	1240
Glenny, William.....	718
Gould, Ezra P.....	1052
Gould, Seward F.....	732
Grant, Lewis A.....	967
Gray, William C.....	950
Gregory, Edgar M.....	853
Griffin, Charles.....	839, 840, 845
Griffin, Simon G.....	1053, 1058
Gwyn, James.....	875, 876
Hall, Josiah.....	1140
Hambill, Joseph E.....	931
Hamlin, James H.....	753
Hardenbergh, Jacob B.....	1096
Harn, William A.....	1013
Harper, John.....	938
Hartman, Samuel.....	1012
Harris, Thomas M.....	1221, 1223
Hartmanft, John F.....	1061
Hartsuff, George L.....	1170
Harwood, Franklin.....	650, 651
Haskell, Lowelllyn F.....	1238
Hawkes, Henry F.....	1234
Hayas, Joseph.....	870, 872, 873
Hays, William.....	757
Hazard, John G.....	790
Hean, B. Frank.....	964
Heichhold, Charles P.....	1230

Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865—Continued.
Reports of

Page.

Hickerson, Francis G.....	1197
Hickman, Baynton J.....	948
Hill, George H.....	1210
Hill, Joseph C.....	1000
Hopkins, Archibald.....	945, 947, 948
Hopper, George P.....	771
Howell, Charles W.....	655
Huffy, Biddwin.....	928
Humphreys, Andrew A.....	673, 675
Humphreys, Francis R.....	720
Hunt, Henry J.....	650
Husk, Lewis W.....	741
Hyde, John McE.....	738
Hyde, Joseph.....	742
Hyde, Thomas W.....	975
Ives, Lucius H.....	717
Jackson, Richard H.....	1228
Janeway, Jacob J.....	986
Johnson, Bushrod R.....	1286
Jones, Edward J.....	1070
Karples, Henry M.....	739
Kelley, J. Warren.....	992, 995, 997
Kellogg, Horace.....	1219
Kellogg, John A.....	882, 883, 885
Kennedy, Ronald A.....	974
Kershaw, Joseph B.....	1283
Lamm, James H.....	1285
Lane, Nathaniel P.....	749
Lathrop, Joseph H.....	1168
Lay, Richard G.....	610
Lee, Fitzhugh.....	1298
Lee, G. W. Custis.....	1296
Lee, Robert E.....	1263-1265
Liddell, John A.....	625
McAllister, Robert.....	758
McAnally, Charles.....	773
McCall, William H. H.....	1066
McCalmont, Alfred B.....	1066
McCallan, Samuel A.....	1084
McClelland, William.....	1088
McClennan, Matthew R.....	1007, 1008
McGey, Thomas F.....	891
McDonald, Andrew N.....	987, 988
MacDougall, Clinton D.....	733
McGregor, James.....	965
McIvor, James P.....	764
Mackenzie, Ramold S.....	1244
McNary, William H.....	1208
McPurkin, Thomas A.....	607
Muey, George N.....	639
Marsh, Elias J.....	618
Mathews, Joseph A.....	1068

	Page.
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865—(Continued.)
Reports of
Matthewson, Angell .....	1083
Maxwell, Norman J. ....	1053
Mendo, George G. ....	691
Merrill, Augustus .....	977
Merritt, Wesley .....	1116
Miche, Peter S. ....	1165
Miles, Nelson A. ....	709, 711
Milliken, Charles A. ....	962
Milton, Richard S. ....	1078
Mintzer, William M. ....	750
Morgan, J. Frank .....	760
Morrill, Walter G. ....	865
Muhlenberg, Charles P. ....	1226
Murray, John B. ....	1207
Myers, Daniel .....	856, 857
Nichols, Edwin .....	1200
Nugent, Robert .....	734
Oleott, Egbert .....	936
Olustad, William A. ....	759, 762
O'Neill, Henry .....	866
Ord, Edward O. G. ....	1160
Oshorn, Thomas O. ....	1185
Page, Charles .....	689
Paine, William H. ....	653
Parke, John G. ....	1015
Parker, Francis H. ....	607
Parker, George B. ....	634
Parsons, Augustin N. ....	1011
Pattee, Joseph B. ....	877
Pearson, Alfred E. ....	861
Pelton, John G. ....	706
Pendleton, William N. ....	1280
Poundington, Alexander C. M. ....	1131
Penrose, William H. ....	927
Phillips, Charles A. ....	1078
Phillips, Charles B. ....	658
Pier, Colwert K. ....	1015
Pierce, Byron B. ....	784
Pierce, Francis E. ....	772
Plympton, Homer A. ....	1188
Pokorny, Anthony .....	736
Potter, Andrew .....	1316-1318
Purlington, Dilwyn V. ....	1231
Ramsay, John .....	741
Reynolds, Edward H. ....	1205
Rhoads, Samuel H. ....	1089
Rhodes, Elisha H. ....	951
Ritchie, David F. ....	1080
Robbins, Walter R. ....	1148
Roberts, Robert N. ....	1016
Roemer, Jacob .....	1087
Rogers, Edward W. ....	1086

Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865—Continued.
Reports of

Page.

Rogers, William H .....	671
Sawyer, Charles F. ....	864
Schaffler, George W. ....	721
Scott, George W. ....	714
Scott, Henry B. ....	1067, 1168
Sellers, Eli G. ....	866
Seymour, Truman .....	978, 979
Shaw, James, Jr. ....	1231
Shepherd, Russell B. ....	783
Sheridan, Philip H. ....	1100, 1101
Smart, Charles .....	692, 699
Smith, Benjamin F. ....	1005
Smith, Charles H. ....	1156
Smith, James J. ....	728
Soyles, James W. ....	1002
Spaulding, Ira .....	642
Spaulding, Joseph W. ....	763
Stanton, David L. ....	874
Stanton, William A. P. ....	723
Stone, Valentine H. ....	1090
Stratton, Franklin A. ....	1254
Stuart, James T. ....	940
Sutton, John P. ....	754
Tarbell, Jonathan .....	886
Tatnuey, James .....	910
Terwilliger, William H. ....	727
Tidball, John C. ....	1070
Tippin, Andrew H. ....	1097
Townsend, Joseph G. ....	859
True, Edward A. ....	1201
Trues, William S. ....	981, 983
Turner, John W. ....	1214
Twitshell, Adolbert B. ....	1076
Van Elden, Orsamus R. ....	1012
Voris, Alvin C. ....	1189
Wainwright, Charles S. ....	898
Watts, Charles .....	1044
Wabnitz, Charles F. ....	1095
Wallace, William H. ....	1291
Warner, James M. ....	962
Warren, Charles .....	1213
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	796, 828
Waterhouse, John R. ....	1099
Weitzel, Godfrey .....	1227
Wellner, John R. ....	752
West, Robert M. ....	1248
Whenton, Frank .....	909, 912, 913, 916, 917
Wilder, L. Hart .....	743
Willeox, Orlando B. ....	1030
Williams, William G. ....	1006
Winne, Charles K. ....	842
Winslow, Robert B. ....	1098
Witman, Edward L. ....	878, 879

Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865—Continued.

Page.

Reports of

Woerner, Christian .....	1080
Woodall, Daniel .....	765, 768
Woodward, William W. ....	1241
Wright, Horatio G. ....	901, 905
Wright, Joseph W. B. ....	1079
Young, Samuel B. M. ....	1154

See also general report of Grant, p. 53.

Sketches ..... 802, 810, 814, 819, 830, 880

Appomattox Court-House, Va. Engagement at, April 9, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of

Abbott, George R.	Fairchild, Harrison S.	Murray, John B.
Adams, Henry C.	Foster, Robert S.	Orl, Edward H. G.
Armstrong, Samuel C.	Gibbs, John.	Ostern, Thomas O.
Baker, J. Stannard.	Gibbs, Alfred.	Patten, Joseph B.
Brisson, James C.	Grogory, Edgar M.	Pendleton, William N.
Chamberlain, Joshua L.	Griffin, Charles.	Peter, Andrew.
Crank, George.	Harris, Thomas M.	Rohling, Walter R.
Curtis, William H.	Haskell, Llewellyn F.	Scott, George W.
Custer, George A.	Hill, George H.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Dandy, George B.	Humphreys, Andrew A.	Smith, Charles H.
Davies, Henry E., Jr.	Lee, Robert E.	Stratton, Franklin A.
Devlin, Thomas C.	McCoy, Thomas F.	Turner, John W.
Doolittle, Isaac.	Mackenzie, Ranald S.	Veris, Alvin C.
Doubleday, Blyssas.	McParlin, Thomas A.	West, Robert M.
Ehler, Samuel S.	Mentz, George C.	Woodward, William W.
Evans, Andrew W.	Morritt, Wesley.	Young, Samuel B. M.

Also itineraries, pp. 87, 90, 92, 98, 115, 118, 119, 121, 123, 127, 128, 130, 134, 138, 142.

Appomattox Court-House (Clover Hill), Va. Surrender of Army of Northern Virginia at, April 9, 1865.

Confederate troops paroled ..... 1277-1279

See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of

Lee, Fitzhugh.	Meade, George G.	Sent, George W.
Lee, Robert E.	Miles, Nelson A.	Smart, Charles.
McParlin, Thomas A.	Ramsey, John.

Also general report of Grant, p. 56; Grant to Lee, pp. 56, 57, and Lee to Grant, pp. 56-58.Appomattox Station, Va. Engagement at, April 8, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of

Bliss, James.	Devlin, Thomas C.	Pendleton, William N.
Cuppinger, John J.	Hall, Josiah.	Pentington, Alexander C. M.
Custer, George A.	Morritt, Wesley.	Sheridan, Philip H.

Also itineraries, pp. 123, 125, 127, 128, 136.

Archer, Fletcher H. Mentioned .....	1270, 1277
Archer, George W. Mentioned .....	930
Archer, Jasper. Mentioned .....	924, 930
Archer, T. Marshall. Mentioned .....	1275
Archer, William S. Mentioned .....	1275
Arden, G. de Peyster. Mentioned .....	576
Arkansas Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Infantry—Regiments: 3d, 1268.
Armstrong, Lewis. Mentioned .....	69
Armstrong, Thomas D. Mentioned .....	1312, 1314
Armies of the Confederate States. Robert E. Lee assumes command of .....	1
Armies of the United States. Operations of, March, 1864—May, 1865. Report of U. S. Grant .....	11

	Page.
Armistead, Andrew D. Mentioned .....	1271
Armistead, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	1268
Armstrong, Samuel C. ....
Mentioned .....	580, 1237
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1237
Armstrong's Mill, Va. Battle of. See Hatcher's Run, Va. Battle of, Feb. 5-7, 1865.
Army Corps, 2d. (Union.) Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	74-85
Army Corps, 5th. (Union.)
Crawford, Samuel W., assumes temporary command of .....	3
Griffin, Charles, relieves Governor K. Warren of command of .....	557
Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	85-100
Sketch of position of. March 30, 1865 .....	810
Warren, Gouverneur K.
Relieved from command of .....	828
Resumes command of .....	3
Army Corps, 6th. (Union.)
Congratulatory address of George G. Meade to .....	906
Goffy, George W., assumes temporary command of .....	3
Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	100-107
Review of, in Washington, D. C. ....	3
Wright, Horatio G., resumes command of .....	3
Army Corps, 9th. (Union.)
Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	107-112
Parks, John G., resumes command of .....	3
Willeax, Orlando B., assumes temporary command of .....	3
Army Corps, 24th. (Union.)
Devens, Charles, assumes temporary command of .....	3
Gibbon, John, assumes command of .....	3
Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	120-128
Army Corps, 25th. (Union.) Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	139-144
Army Transportation. See Munitions of War.
Arnold, Henry J. Mentioned .....	1150
Arnold, Jesse. Mentioned .....	995, 1000, 1001
Arnold, John W. Mentioned .....	1268
Arnold, Robert B. Mentioned .....	1275
Arundel's Farm, Va. Skirmish at. See Burke's Station and Arundel's Farm, Va. Skirmishes near, April 10, 1865.
Asch, Morris J. Mentioned .....	1164
Ashbrook, Joseph. Mentioned .....	266
Ashby, George H. Mentioned .....	570
Ashby's Gap, Va. Skirmish at. See Loudoun County, Va. Expedition from Camp Averell into, etc., Feb. 18-19, 1865.
Ashcraft, Thomas E. Mentioned .....	1270
Ashford, John. Mentioned .....	1272
Ashland, Steamer. Mentioned .....	141
Ashland, Va. Skirmish near, March 15, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of
Custer, George A. ....
Pomington, Alexander G. M. ....
Sheridan, Philip H. ....
Atchison, Charles B. Mentioned .....	1164
Atherton, Charles W. Mentioned .....	881

	Page.
Atkinson, John W. Mentioned.....	1291
Atlantic, Steamer. Mentioned.....	395
Atlantic, Military Division of the. George C. Meade assigned to command of.....	3
Atwood, Alfred T. Mentioned.....	1232
Angur, Christopher C. ....
Assignment to command.....	3
Correspondence with.....
Gamble, William.....	516, 1310
Schneider, Joseph.....	1317
Mentioned.....	525, 1317, 1321
Auman, William. Mentioned.....	1026
Austin, Willard. Mentioned.....	451
Averell, William W. Mentioned.....	22, 23, 27
Avery, Martin F. ....
Mentioned.....	573
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	330
Avery, M. Henry. Mentioned.....	870, 1147
Ayers, Michael A. Mentioned.....	579, 1222, 1223
Ayres, Romeyn B. ....
Correspondence with Gouverneur K. Warren.....	278, 806, 812, 832
Mentioned.....	51, 66, 86, 91, 95, 97, 99, 157, 226, 253-257, 257-260, 261, 266, 269, 271, 278, 284, 569, 585, 1002, 621, 626, 677, 733, 741, 790- 799, 802-806, 808-816, 819-826, 829-843, 846, 849, 850, 853, 860, 857, 860, 863, 868, 874, 877, 880, 881, 884, 885, 892, 896, 897, 899, 1100, 1103, 1105, 1106
Reports of.....
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20-April 9, 1865.....	808, 809
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	277, 278
Aytoun, J. Frederick. Mentioned.....	214, 688
Babcock, Orville E. Mentioned.....	480
Babcock, William J. Mentioned.....	926, 941
Bach, Henry W. Mentioned.....	176, 177
Bacon, Francis. Mentioned.....	157, 162
Badger, Henry E. Mentioned.....	1035
Badger, Joseph. Report of scout through the counties of Randolph and Pocahontas, W. Va., and of Bath and Highland, Va., April 15- 23, 1865.....	1310
Badner, Marcus. Mentioned.....	996
Bagby, John R. Mentioned.....	1271
Bailey, Ezra H. Mentioned.....	462
Bailey, George A. Mentioned.....	969, 970, 973
Bailey, Joseph. Mentioned.....	34
Bailey, Samuel C. Mentioned.....	989
Baily, James E. Mentioned.....	60, 284
Bainbridge, Lieutenant. Mentioned.....	6319
Baird, Andrew D. Mentioned.....	573
Baird, Edward C. Mentioned.....	289
Baker, Alden S. Mentioned.....	901
Baker, Allen M. Mentioned.....	739
Baker, Eugene M. Mentioned.....	1116
Baker, Evan R. Mentioned.....	465
Baker, Francis M. Mentioned.....	512
Baker, Henry. Mentioned.....	463, 464, 466, 467
Baker, Joel A. Mentioned.....	898

	Page.
Baker, Joel B. Mentioned.....	567
Baker, Joseph J. Mentioned.....	577
Baker, J. Stannard.
Mentioned.....	580, 1247
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1249
Baker, Lafayette C. Mentioned.....	1317, 1318, 1321
Baker, Lawrence S. Mentioned.....	382
Baker, Luther B. Mentioned.....	1318-1321
Baker, Silas. Mentioned.....	417
Baker, Stephen. Mentioned.....	576
Baldwin, Charles P. Mentioned.....	577, 1193, 1198, 1199
Baldwin, Francis W. H.
Mentioned.....	567, 766
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	775
Baldwin, John B. Mentioned.....	522, 523
Baldwin, Peter M. W. Mentioned.....	1034
Ball, Charles J. C. Mentioned.....	922, 933, 935
Ball, William G. Mentioned.....	166, 170
Ballard, Charles L. Mentioned.....	1023
Ballou, Erastus G. Mentioned.....	969, 972
Bamberger, William W. Mentioned.....	578, 1212
Bander, Ephraim F. Mentioned.....	598
Bangs, Frank D.
Mentioned.....	175, 326, 358, 668
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	180
Banksrd, Josiah. Mentioned.....	283
Bankhsad, Henry, C.
Correspondence with Gouverneur K. Warren.....	831
Mentioned.....	257, 796, 822, 826, 831, 832, 835, 836
Banks, Nathaniel F.
Correspondence with U. S. Grant.....	14
Mentioned.....	13, 14, 33-35
Banner, Albert J. Mentioned.....	925, 934, 935, 939
Barber, James A. Mentioned.....	1257
Barber, Merritt.
Correspondence with Lewis A. Grant.....	968
Mentioned.....	967, 972
Barham, Theodore G. Mentioned.....	1284
Barker, Thaddeus L. Mentioned.....	573
Barker, Thomas H. Mentioned.....	147, 578
Barlow, Augustus C. Mentioned.....	1184
Barlow, Francis C.
Correspondence with Andrew A. Humphreys.....	688
Mentioned.....	76, 567, 583, 604, 605, 674, 675, 682-685, 687, 688, 691, 701-705, 713, 716, 725, 735, 741, 760, 761, 763, 767, 793, 795
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	758
Barnard, Daniel F. Mentioned.....	1176
Barnard, John G. Mentioned.....	600
Barnes, Joseph K. Mentioned.....	609, 611, 613
Barnes, Lewis S. Mentioned.....	1229
Barnes, Norman S. Mentioned.....	400
Barney, Albert M. Mentioned.....	403, 416, 418, 419, 425, 1163
Barney, Valentine G. Mentioned.....	578
Barnhart, Levant W. Mentioned.....	1115

	Page.
Barnitz, Albert. Mentioned .....	575, 1137
Barrett, Samuel F. Mentioned .....	995, 1001
Barringer, Rufus. Mentioned .....	390, 790, 802, 1119, 1139, 1261, 1275, 1278, 1301
Barry, Henry W. Mentioned .....	140, 141
Barse, George H.
Mentioned .....	565, 1071, 1083
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1083
Barstow, Simon F.
Correspondence with John G. Parke .....	318
Mentioned .....	318
Bartels, Elioh. Mentioned .....	598
Bartholomew, Orion A. Mentioned .....	580
Bartlett, Anthony B. Mentioned .....	1272
Bartlett, Erastus G. Mentioned .....	578
Bartlett, Franklin. Mentioned .....	69
Bartlett, Joseph J.
Correspondence with Charles Griffin .....	804
Mentioned .....	80,
87, 89, 90, 196, 267, 569, 584, 585, 706, 804, 817, 818, 820-822, 824, 838-842,
846, 850, 851, 854-856, 858-860, 862, 865, 867, 868, 877, 878, 892, 1105, 1106
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	860
Bartley, James C. Mentioned .....	966
Barton, Seth M. Mentioned .....	1270, 1290
Bartruff, Charles M. Mentioned .....	983, 985
Baer, Frederick S. Mentioned .....	1208
Baerett, Isaac C.
Mentioned .....	571, 918, 919
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	919
Bastian, George M. Mentioned .....	1020, 1064
Batoholder, Richard N. Mentioned .....	61-63, 160, 730
Batee, Delavan. Mentioned .....	144
Bath County, Va. Scout through. See Randolph and Pocahontas Counties,
W. Va., and Bath and Highland Counties, Va., Scout through, April
15-23, 1865.
Battelle, Charles P. Mentioned .....	1032
Battersby, Jonyus C. Mentioned .....	575
Battle, Cullen A. Mentioned .....	389, 1270, 1277
Bauer, John B. Mentioned .....	364
Baxter, Henry.
Mentioned .....	66, 67, 96, 250, 287, 290-293, 295, 296, 570, 686, 796, 830, 840, 866, 875, 880, 882-885, 887, 893, 897, 899
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	889
Baxter, Henry C. Mentioned .....	959, 971, 972
Baxter, Hiram. Mentioned .....	1271
Baxter, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1001
Bayley, Thomas. Mentioned .....	579
Baylor, George. Mentioned .....	1310
Beale, Richard L. T. Mentioned .....	1275, 1278
Beall, Josiah N. Mentioned .....	1270
Beale, Thomas P. Mentioned .....	1056, 1059, 1060
Bealeton Station, Va. Operations about. See Warrenton, Bealeton Station,
Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va. Operations about,
March 3-8, 1865.
Beau, Theodore W. Mentioned .....	1127

	Page.
Beard, John. Mentioned .....	1270, 1277
Beardslee, Frederick E. Mentioned .....	403
Beaufort, N. C.
Expedition sails from rendezvous off, Jan. 12, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of Abbot, p. 167; Collins, p. 414; Terry, p. 396; and itineraries, pp. 132, 145.
Fleets arrive at rendezvous off, Jan. 8, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of Rollins, p. 414; Terry, p. 395; also general report of Grant, p. 43, and itinerary, p. 132.
Beaufort, Stenner. Mentioned .....	115
Beaumont, Myron H. Mentioned .....	366, 622
Beauregard, G. T. Mentioned .....	19
Beaver, David R. Mentioned .....	625
Beaver Dam Station, Va. Skirmish near, March 13, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Report of Compson, p. 508.
Beaver Pond Creek, Va. Skirmish at. See Tubercule Church, or Beaver Pond Creek, Va. Skirmish at, April 4, 1865.
Bechtel, Lafayette. Mentioned .....	1325
Beck, William C. Mentioned .....	294, 295, 895
Becker, Adolph.
Mentioned .....	573
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1049
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	330
Becket, Joseph. Mentioned .....	335
Becker, Henry B. Mentioned .....	570
Beekman, Garrett V. Mentioned .....	1152
Beers, Edmund O. Mentioned .....	347, 648
Beers, Joseph D. Mentioned .....	647
Beers, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	170
Begor, Peter. Mentioned .....	961, 973
Behan, Edwin A. Mentioned .....	403, 416, 418
Belcher, Allen F. Mentioned .....	1168
Belcher, Irving M. Mentioned .....	861
Beldon, Charles R. Mentioned .....	458
Belding, Elias W. Mentioned .....	598
Bell, H. M. Mentioned .....	517
Bell, J. C. Mentioned .....	1272
Bell, J. Hamilton. Mentioned .....	1125, 1127
Bell, John T. Mentioned .....	271, 272
Bell, Louis. Mentioned .....	132, 398-400, 404-406, 416, 421
Bell, William W. Mentioned .....	1193
Bendell, Herman. Mentioned .....	612, 633, 635
Benham, Elbridge H. Mentioned .....	1031
Benham, Henry W.
Mentioned .....	50, 72-74, 166, 565, 581, 603, 607, 644-646, 649, 1018, 1040, 1095-1099
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	641
Benjamin, John F. Mentioned .....	1257
Bennett, David T. Mentioned .....	569
Bennett, George S. Mentioned .....	1082
Bennett, Orren. Mentioned .....	606, 1257

	Page.
Bennett, William. Mentioned.....	930
Benning, Henry L. Mentioned.....	388, 1268, 1277
Benson, Frederick S. Mentioned.....	459
Benson, R. Dale. Mentioned.....	459
Bontley, William W. Mentioned.....	1268, 1277
Bouvard's Mills, Va. Sent to South Quay from. See South Quay, Va. Scout from Bouvard's Mills to, Jan. 2, 1865.
Bouyard, William H. H. Mentioned... 157-159, 161-163, 797, 820, 822, 824, 835, 836
Benson, John L. Mentioned.....	286
Bergin, James J. Mentioned.....	178
Bermuda Hundred, Va. Expedition to Fearnsville and Smithfield from. See Fearnsville and Smithfield, Va. Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to, Feb. 11-15, 1865.
Bermuda Landing, Va. Expedition embarks at, Jan. 4-5, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of
Adams, Adellbert. Rollins, Augustus W. Ferry, Alfred H. Also itineraries, pp. 131, 132, 144, 145.
Bernard, George A. Mentioned.....	1015, 918
Bertolette, John D. Mentioned..... 317, 349, 354, 352, 1027, 1014, 1004, 1006 For correspondence as A. A. G., see John F. Hartman.
Betsill, Rolet J. Mentioned.....	1202
Betton, Matthew T. Mentioned.....	578
Betts, William H. Mentioned.....	1250
Beverly, W. Va. Capture of U. S. Forces at, Jan. 11, 1865.
Casualties. Returns of. Union troops.....	449
Communication from George Crook.....	449
Reports of
Lee, Robert E. ....	451
Wilkinson, Nathan .....	447
Sketch.....	450
Prisoners of War captured at, by Confederate troops, Jan. 11, 1865.....	449
Bewley, Charles H. Mentioned.....	960
Bibber, Andrew H. Mentioned.....	1143
Bickford, Henry H. Mentioned.....	509
Bigelow, Lendall H. Mentioned.....	1002
Biles, Edwin R. Mentioned.....	227, 231, 234
Bill, George F. Mentioned.....	1070
Bingham, Henry H. Mentioned.....	685
Bingham, William H. H. Mentioned.....	175, 183, 668, 1071
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	184
Binkley, Otho H. Mentioned.....	309, 313, 572
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1003, 1004
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	312
Binthiff, James. Mentioned.....	573, 589, 1016, 1021, 1040, 1044, 1050, 1061, 1064
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1050
Bippers, John G. Mentioned.....	1186, 1190
Bird, Charles. Mentioned.....	526, 535, 536

	Page.
Bird, Patrick H.
Mentioned .....	566
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	726
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	198
Bird, Wellington. Mentioned .....	598
Bird, William H. Mentioned .....	919, 928
Birkman, Richard M. Mentioned .....	284, 286, 875, 876, 878
Birney, David B. Mentioned .....	30
Birney, William. Mentioned .....	52, 139, 141, 142, 580, 596, 1160-1162, 1165, 1166, 1174, 1202, 1203, 1210, 1232, 1235, 1236, 1239
Bixby, Philin P. Mentioned .....	574, 1026, 1060
Black, John D. Mentioned .....	730
Black, Joseph T. Mentioned .....	966
Black, Patrick W. Mentioned .....	726
Black, William R. Mentioned .....	996, 1007
Blackman, Albert M.
Mentioned .....	399, 400, 404, 424
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	425
Blackwood, William R. D. Mentioned .....	612
Blanchard, Judson C. Mentioned .....	1191
Blakensderfer, Milton. Mentioned .....	980, 994, 1257
Bliss, James.
Mentioned .....	575, 1131
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1137
Blount, Joseph G. Mentioned .....	1275, 1270
Blunt, Asa P. Mentioned .....	556
Blunt, John W. Mentioned .....	408, 499, 1127
Blythe, A. S. Mentioned .....	1271
Bobb, Alexander. Mentioned .....	1028, 1064
Boernstein, Augustus S. Mentioned .....	404
Bogan, James C. Mentioned .....	733
Bogardus, Charles.
Mentioned .....	572, 981, 983
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	989
Boggs, Jackson. Mentioned .....	966
Boggs, John. Mentioned .....	451, 452
Boies, Theodore A. Mentioned .....	529, 540
Bolles, Albert A. Mentioned .....	599
Bolton, George A. Mentioned .....	1026, 1060
Bolton, Samuel M. Mentioned .....	926, 944
Bolton, William J.
Correspondence with Samuel Harriman .....	1014
Mentioned .....	573, 1017, 1030, 1039, 1040, 1044
Boltze, Frederick. Mentioned .....	311, 995, 1001
Bond, John. Mentioned .....	599
Bonebrake, Henry G. Mentioned .....	1257
Bonett, George W. Mentioned .....	959, 971, 972
Bonin, William O. Mentioned .....	1012
Bonnet, Henry. Mentioned .....	278
Book, David P. Mentioned .....	324
Boon, Hugh P. Mentioned .....	1257
Boone, Richard. Mentioned .....	1030, 1064

	Page.
Booth, George. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. . . . .	186
Booth, George W. Mentioned. . . . .	1076
Booth, J. Wilkes. Mentioned. . . . .	1318-1321
Booth, J. Wilkes, and David E. Harold. Capture of, at Garretts Farm, near Port Royal, Va., April 26, 1865.
Communications from
Allen, Edward S. . . . .	1318
Angus, Christopher C. . . . .	1317
Doherty, Edward P. . . . .	1318
Schneider, Joseph. . . . .	1318
Report of Edward P. Doherty. . . . .	1317
Booth, Lionel F. Mentioned. . . . .	33
Booth, William S. Mentioned. . . . .	1153
Boothby, Warren. Mentioned. . . . .	1035
Boreman, Arthur X. Mentioned. . . . .	1326
Borzy, John. Mentioned. . . . .	895
Bost, Jackson L. Mentioned. . . . .	1272
Boston, Reuben B. Mentioned. . . . .	1275, 1303
Bosworth, George B. Mentioned. . . . .	517, 1321
Botsford, James L. Mentioned. . . . .	447, 469
Bottom's Bridge, Va. Scout to. See Long Bridge and Bottom's Bridge, Va. Scout to, Jan. 30, 1865.
Boughton, John C.
Mentioned. . . . .	326, 573, 1023
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. . . . .	327
Boutwell, John Wilder. Mentioned. . . . .	1032
Bouvé, Edward T. Mentioned. . . . .	458
Bowen, Edwin C. Mentioned. . . . .	1027
Bowen, George K. Mentioned. . . . .	578
Bowen, Robert E. Mentioned. . . . .	1218
Bowerman, Richard N.
Correspondence with
Griffin, Charles. . . . .	283
Warren, Gouverneur K. . . . .	282
Mentioned. . . . . 66, 92, 93, 259, 277, 283, 284, 569, 585, 830, 833, 840, 870, 874-876
Reports of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. . . . .	282, 283
Bowers, Charles F. Mentioned. . . . .	239, 240
Bowers, Theodore S. Mentioned. . . . .	827
For correspondence as A. A. G., see H. S. Grant .
Bowey, Richard. Mentioned. . . . .	509
Bowlby, William W. Mentioned. . . . .	508
Bowman, Samuel. Mentioned. . . . .	365
Boyce, William. Mentioned. . . . .	289
Boyd, Isaac H. Mentioned. . . . .	508, 710
Boyd, William H., jr. Mentioned. . . . .	571
Boydton Road, Va. Action at. See Hatcher's Run, or Boydton Road, Va. Action at, March 31, 1865.
Boyer, George P. Mentioned. . . . .	994, 999, 1003
Boyle, Michael. Mentioned. . . . .	930
Bozier, James L. Mentioned. . . . .	930
Brackett, Levi Curtis. Mentioned. . . . .	325, 346, 349, 1022, 1014
Brackett, Peter. Mentioned. . . . .	961
Bradley, James M. Mentioned. . . . .	403
Bradley, John S. Mentioned. . . . .	923, 944, 946-948

	Page.
Bradshaw, John J. Mentioned .....	310, 994, 999-1001
Brady, Eugene. Mentioned .....	599
Brady, Hugh J. Mentioned .....	117, 577
Brady, James. Mentioned .....	1153
Brady, James K. Mentioned .....	325, 334, 342, 1032
Brady, Robert, jr. Mentioned .....	1198
Brady, Fort. See Fort Brady .
Bragg, Braxton.
Correspondence with
Colquitt, Hugh H. ....	444
Estill, Harry .....	445
Washington, George L. ....	446
Whiting, William H. C. ....	434
Mentioned .....	41, 436, 442
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	431
Bragg, Edward S. Mentioned .....	66, 255, 258, 287, 290, 293, 295, 296
Bralnerd, Charles D. Mentioned .....	1027
Bralnerd, Wesley. Mentioned .....	73, 159, 315, 565, 641, 614, 615, 617
Brander, Thomas A. Mentioned .....	1280
Brandt, Conrad. Mentioned .....	1252
Braunon, Isaac F. Mentioned .....	573, 1025
Brausom, William R. Mentioned .....	1153
Braut, William, jr. Mentioned .....	916, 920, 929, 1257
Braswell, Robert J. Mentioned .....	1275
Bratt, John T. Mentioned .....	278
Bratton, John. Mentioned .....	388, 1268, 1277
Braxton, Carter M. Mentioned .....	1271, 1270
Brazio, William R. Mentioned .....	401
Breathed, James. Mentioned .....	1273, 1280, 1305
Brook, George.
Mentioned .....	297, 565, 1071
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1085
Brooknridge, Cary. Mentioned .....	1275, 1304
Brooknridge, James. Mentioned .....	1305
Brooknridge, John C. Mentioned .....	20, 40, 41, 510, 521, 522
For correspondence, etc., see War Department, C. S.
Breor, George W. Mentioned .....	920
Bresso, K. Randolph. Mentioned .....	398, 399
Bremmer, William. Mentioned .....	952
Brennan, George. Mentioned .....	331, 341
Brenneman, John R. Mentioned .....	1216
Brentsville, Va. Sent from Fairfax Court-House to, Feb. 6-7, 1865. Report of George R. Maguire .....	457
Brest, Lewis F. Mentioned .....	606, 1258
Brewer, William J. Mentioned .....	1258
Bridgford, D. B. Mentioned .....	384, 386, 387, 1257
Briggs, Alvah W. Mentioned .....	572, 981, 983, 988
Briggs, Baron W. Mentioned .....	739
Briggs, Elijah A. Mentioned .....	916, 925, 934, 1258
Briggs, George G. Mentioned .....	575, 1127
Briggs, John A. Mentioned .....	135
Bright, Aaron, jr. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 ..	291

Brucklé, John R.
Mentioned .....	572, 980, 1009, 1010
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1014
Bringle, Andrew. Mentioned .....	1258
Brinkerhoff, George W. Mentioned .....	999, 1003
Brinton, Jeremiah B. Mentioned .....	613, 616, 625
Brinton, Robert M. Mentioned .....	850
Briscoe, David. Mentioned .....	1310
Briscoe, James C.
Mentioned .....	577, 1183
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1189
Bristol, Lansing. Mentioned .....	69
Brock, Alvan D. Mentioned .....	1056, 1059, 1060
Brockbank, John. Mentioned .....	1153
Brockner, August. Mentioned .....	953
Brooke, John R. Mentioned .....	525
Brooker, Albert F. Mentioned .....	669
Brooks, George W. Mentioned .....	366
Brooks, Isaac N. Mentioned .....	1310
Brooks, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1150, 1153
Brooks, William. Mentioned .....	334, 336
Brooks, William H. Mentioned .....	1230, 1237
Brower, Jeremiah P. Mentioned .....	1152
Brown, Lieutenant. Mentioned .....	1233
Brown, Alexander D. Mentioned .....	1275
Brown, Charles C.
Mentioned .....	523, 529
Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	532
Brown, Charles E. Mentioned .....	331
Brown, Charles G. Mentioned .....	1127
Brown, Edward P. Mentioned .....	1028, 1064, 1066
Brown, Elias S. Mentioned .....	456
Brown, Francis. Mentioned .....	1153
Brown, G. Campbell. Mentioned .....	1284, 1292
Brown, George. Mentioned .....	1163
Brown, George H. Mentioned .....	1193
Brown, Guy A. Mentioned .....	1002
Brown, Hiram G. Mentioned .....	1157
Brown, Hugh G. Mentioned .....	1163
Brown, Jack. Mentioned .....	1268
Brown, James F. Mentioned .....	578
Brown, James G. Mentioned .....	1273
Brown, John. (Lieutenant.) Mentioned .....	644, 646
Brown, John. (Private.) Mentioned .....	335
Brown, Josiah S. Mentioned .....	961
Brown, Lewis G. Mentioned .....	579
Brown, Richard A. Mentioned .....	118
For correspondence see A. A. G., see Nelson A. Miles.
Brown, Samuel B. Mentioned .....	1267
Brown, T. Frederick. Mentioned .....	704
Wilbur. Mentioned .....	1038, 1061
William H. Mentioned .....	486, 564
William I. Mentioned .....	598, 1053
William J. Mentioned .....	311, 995, 1000

	Page.
Brown, Charles D. Mentioned .....	1022
Brownlee, Edward. Mentioned .....	975
Brownson, Harry. Mentioned .....	1076
Bruce, George A. Mentioned .....	1211
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1212
Bruton, Christopher C. Mentioned .....	509
Bryan, Frederick K. Mentioned .....	311
Bryan, Goode. Mentioned .....	388
Brydon, John. Mentioned .....	1211
Buchanan, Felix G. Mentioned .....	1272
Buck, Dndley, Steamer. Mentioned .....	144
Buckbee, Edwin J. Mentioned .....	327, 573, 1023
Buckingham, Governor, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	453
Buckland, Latham L. Mentioned .....	1165, 1166
Bucklin, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	890, 893
Buffington, Charles L. Mentioned .....	353
Buffington, John E. Mentioned .....	311, 695, 1001
Euford, Abraham. Mentioned .....	33, 36
Bull, James M. Mentioned .....	301, 953
Bull, William S. Mentioned .....	252
Bullman, Joseph. Mentioned .....	895
Bundy, Lorrin E. Mentioned .....	1077
Bunker, David T. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27- April 23, 1865 .....	530
Bunker, Peter. Mentioned .....	1194, 1198
Buoy, A. Kinney. Mentioned .....	895
Burbridge, Stephen G. Mentioned .....	34, 36, 40, 41
Burch, John F. Mentioned .....	320, 322
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	337
Burdick, Daniel W. Mentioned .....	1225
Burgess, Nathaniel. Mentioned .....	71, 334, 338
Burghardt, Charles H. Mentioned .....	598, 746, 747
Burke, Denis F. Mentioned .....	566, 726
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	731
Burke, John. Mentioned .....	598
Burke, Timothy J. Mentioned .....	567
Burke's Station and Arundel's Farm, Va. Skirmishes near, April 10, 1865. Communication from William Gamble .....	1310
Report of Charles Albright .....	1309
Burkeville, Va. Expedition to Danville and South Boston from. See Dan- ville and South Boston, Va. Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to, April 23-29, 1865.
Burleigh, Alexander. Mentioned .....	1000
Burnett, Ellsworth. Mentioned .....	1022, 1044
Burnett, William A. Mentioned .....	624, 930
Burns, John A. Mentioned .....	723
Burns, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1078
Burns, Michael W. Mentioned .....	568, 777, 781, 782
Burnside, Ambrose E. Mentioned .....	17, 18, 20, 24-26

	Page
Burr, Allen L.
Correspondence with Governor K. Warten .....	269
Mentioned .....	65, 259, 270, 272, 273
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	268
Burritt, Henry B. Mentioned .....	598
Burroughs, William H. Mentioned .....	1275
Burru, John B. Mentioned .....	534
Burt, Samuel H. Mentioned .....	1275, 1278
Burt, William G. Mentioned .....	1274
Bush, Archibald McC. Mentioned .....	288, 290
Bush, Robert P. Mentioned .....	267
Bush, William H. Mentioned .....	599
Bushnell, Henry N. Mentioned .....	973
Butler, Andrew P. Mentioned .....	1272
Butler, Benjamin F.
Correspondence with
Grant, U. S. ....	14, 41
War Department, U. S. ....	19
Mentioned .....	14-16, 18-21, 23-25, 29-31, 41, 42, 44, 440
Relieved from command of Department of Virginia and North Carolina and Army of the James .....	3
Butler, John. Mentioned .....	864
Butler, Matthew C. Mentioned .....	381
Butler, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	580
Butterfield, Miles L. Mentioned .....	913, 915, 918
Butters, Alfred. Mentioned .....	448
Buzzell, Andrew J. H.
Mentioned .....	400, 429
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C.,
Jan. 16, 1865 .....	429
Byers, William H. Mentioned .....	924, 944
Byrne, Patrick. Mentioned .....	961, 973
Byrnes, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	1184
Byron, William. Mentioned .....	598, 940
Cabe, William. Mentioned .....	417
Cabell, Henry C. Mentioned .....	1276, 1279
Cable, George W.,
Mentioned .....	1325
Report of scout from Philippi to Currick's Ford, W. Va., March 14-16,
1865 .....	553
Cade, John H. Mentioned .....	570, 875, 876
Cadman, James. Mentioned .....	417
Cadwalader, George. Mentioned .....	525
Cadwell, Lucien B. Mentioned .....	533
Calahan, Charles C. Mentioned .....	567, 766
Caldwell, Daniel. Mentioned .....	368, 980
Caldwell, John A. Mentioned .....	1168
Caldwell, Joseph. Mentioned .....	135, 599, 1220
Calkin, Ivers S. Mentioned .....	1258
Callanen, Stephen A. Mentioned .....	707, 709
Calson, Frank. Mentioned .....	517
Cameron, Angus. Mentioned .....	926, 945, 953
mp, Carlton N. Mentioned .....	1032
np, Charles W. Mentioned .....	1149, 1153

	Page.
Camp, Wilson. Mentioned .....	1237
Camp Averell (near Winchester), Va. Expedition into Loudoun County from. See Loudoun County, Va. Expedition from Camp Averell into, etc., Feb. 18-19, 1865.
Campbell, Edward L. Mentioned .....	67, 298, 299
Campbell, Henry. Mentioned .....	1252
Campbell, J. A. Mentioned .....	518
Campbell, James B. Mentioned .....	1170, 1172, 1173
Campbell, James R. Mentioned .....	280, 871
Campbell, John A. Mentioned .....	510
Campbell, John F. Mentioned .....	505
Campbell, Richard. Mentioned .....	1031
Campbell, Robert C. Mentioned .....	146
Campbell, William T. Mentioned .....	294, 895
Campfield, James. Mentioned .....	930
Camp Russell (near Winchester), Va. Expedition to Edenburg and Little Port Valley from. See Edenburg and Little Port Valley, Va. Expedition from Camp Russell to, etc., Feb. 13-17, 1865.
Canby, Edward R. S. Mentioned .....	35, 37, 38, 44, 47-49, 59, 60, 139
Cannon, Madison M. Mentioned .....	224, 568, 778
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	231
Cause, Robert B. Mentioned .....	360, 1152
Capehart, Charles E. Mentioned .....	575
Capehart, Henry. Mentioned .....	127, 475, 476, 481, 482, 485, 501, 502, 575, 592, 1103, 1110, 1112, 1130-1132, 1134-1136
Capper, Meredith. Mentioned .....	539, 540
Capron, Willis C. Mentioned .....	499, 501
Captured Property. See Property captured.
Carey, Jabez W. Mentioned .....	925
Carle, Nelson B. Mentioned .....	961, 974, 975
Carleton, Charles A. Mentioned .....	417
Carman, Warren. Mentioned .....	509
Carmichael, George H. Mentioned .....	1268
Carnotross, Septimus. Mentioned .....	195
Carney, Edward. Mentioned .....	335, 338
Carothers, James A. Mentioned .....	599
Carr, Joseph B. Mentioned .....	61-63, 577, 593
Carr, Joshua W. Mentioned .....	335, 341
Carriek's Ford, W. Va. Scout from Philippi to, March 14-16, 1865. Report of George W. Cable .....	553
Carrington, Isaac H. Mentioned .....	1293
Carroll, Charles H. Mentioned .....	180
Carroll, Edward B. Mentioned .....	598
Carroll, James J. Mentioned .....	599
Carroll, John C. Mentioned .....	129, 452
Carroll, Samuel S. Mentioned .....	525, 526
Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	538
Carruth, Sumner. Mentioned .....	573, 1025, 1013, 1062
Carruthers, Robert. Mentioned .....	1184
Carson, James M. Mentioned .....	435
Carter, Albert A. Mentioned .....	960

	Page.
Carter, Joseph F.
Mentioned .....	324, 334, 336, 380, 573, 1024, 1050, 1053
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	336
Carter, Solon A. Mentioned .....	454
Carter, Thomas E. Mentioned .....	280
Carter, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	513, 1270
Carts, Eli. Mentioned .....	547
Carty, Carel. Mentioned .....	1151
Cary, James L. Mentioned .....	1258
Caryl, James B. Mentioned .....	413
Case, Alonzo R. Mentioned .....	509
Case, Leverette N. Mentioned .....	1023
Casey, James H.
Mentioned .....	174, 175, 185, 668, 1071
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	185
Casey, James B. Mentioned .....	319, 1019, 1021
Cash, Daniel G. Mentioned .....	1023
Cashman, Patrick. Mentioned .....	289
Cason, Hillary W. Mentioned .....	1269
Cassard, Louis R. Mentioned .....	93
Castle, Philip. Mentioned .....	1252, 1253
Casualties in Action. See Confederate Troops and Union Troops, Casualties, Returns of.
Caswell, Egbert H. Mentioned .....	888
Caswell, Fort. See Fort Caswell.
Catling, James. Mentioned .....	499, 1127
Catlett, R. H. Mentioned .....	544
Cavaller, William E. Mentioned .....	930
Cavalry Corps. (Union.)
Casualties. Returns of, March 1-April 9, 1865 .....	601
Itineraries. Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	113-128
Orders, Field, series 1865— Sheridan : April 1, 828.
Organization, strength, etc.
Feb. 28, 1865 .....	475
March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	575, 576
Recommendations for promotions, etc., in. Communications from Philip H. Sheridan .....	1111, 1114
Caw, David J. Mentioned .....	572, 958
Cayoe, George M. Mentioned .....	1274
C. C. Leary, Steamer. Mentioned .....	166
Centerville, Va. Operations about. See Warrenton, Bealeton Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va. Operations about, March 3-8 1865.
Chadbourne, Paul. Mentioned .....	576, 1157
Chaffin, Thomas, jr. Mentioned .....	1268
Chamberlain, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	542
Chamberlain, Alonzo W. Mentioned .....	499
Chamberlain, Joshua L.
Mentioned .....	207, 569, 584, 602, 796, 800, 815, 816, 839, 840, 842, 845-847, 853-856, 858, 860, 862, 868, 876
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	847
Richmond, Va. Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	207
Ibers, Harvey. Mentioned .....	547

	Page.
Chambers, Joseph B. Mentioned.....	324, 335, 342, 380, 1033
Champney, Jonas A. Mentioned.....	923, 944
Chandley, George B. Mentioned.....	947
Chapin, Alric. Mentioned.....	417
Chapman, Frederick A. Mentioned.....	1229
Chapman, John. Mentioned.....	606, 1258
Chapman, Robert T. Mentioned.....	435
Chapman, William A. Mentioned.....	230
Chapman, William B. Mentioned.....	889
Chapman, William H. Mentioned.....	527, 549
Chappell, Oliver. Mentioned.....	266
Charlestown, W. Va.
Affair near, April 6, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27- April 23, 1865. Report of Hancock, p. 526.
Skirmish near, March 13, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Hancock, p. 526.
Charlottesville, Va.
Expedition from Richmond to. See Staunton and Charlottesville, Va. Expe- dition from Richmond to, May 6-14, 1865.
Occupation of, March 3, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of
Custer, George A.                      Merritt, Wesley.                      Sheridan, Philip H.
Also general report of Grant, p. 18, and itinerary, p. 127.
Chase, Charles S. Mentioned.....	335, 340
Chase, Deloss. Mentioned.....	455
Chase, Edward R. Mentioned.....	1023
Chase, Heman, jr. Mentioned.....	1026
Chase, James H. Mentioned.....	252
Chase, Thomas C. Mentioned.....	707-709
Chase, George, Steamer. Mentioned.....	72
Chase, Governor, Steamer. Mentioned.....	166
Cheek, William H. Mentioned.....	1157
Cheeseman, Roland C. Mentioned.....	573, 1025
Cheney, Alpheus H. Mentioned.....	1299
Cheney, Frederick S. Mentioned.....	335, 340
Cherry, Gwin R. Mentioned.....	1269, 1277
Chesapeake Bay. Capture of steamer Harriet De Ford on. See Harriet De Ford. Steamer. Capture of, near Fair Haven, Chesapeake Bay, Md., April 4, 1865.
Chesley, Benjamin F. Mentioned.....	1025
Chestney, Theodore O. Mentioned.....	1293
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Richard S. Ewell.
Chew, Henry F.
Mentioned.....	507
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	770
Chew, Robert S. Mentioned.....	1268
Chew, R. Preston. Mentioned.....	1276, 1280
Chickamauga, C. S. S. Mentioned.....	406
Child, Thomas. Mentioned.....	1020, 1060
Childs, George L. Mentioned.....	1188
Childs, Jesse D. Mentioned.....	283, 870
Chilson, George W. Mentioned.....	288, 291
Church, Emory W. Mentioned.....	423
Church, Nathan. Mentioned.....	732

	Page.
Church, William H. Mentioned .....	886
Cilley, John K. Mentioned .....	1028
Cilley, Jonathan P. Mentioned .....	576
Cinton, Henry. Mentioned .....	995
Clafin, Hollis O. Mentioned .....	1027
Clancy, James T. Mentioned .....	1150, 1153
Clapp, Albert A. Mentioned .....	1258
Clapp, Alonzo F. Mentioned .....	303
Clapp, Channing. Mentioned .....	651
Clapp, Isaac D. Mentioned .....	958
Clark, Lieutenant. Mentioned .....	707-709
Clark, A. Judson. Mentioned .....	249, 568, 790, 791, 794
Clark, Ansel C. Mentioned .....	961
Clark, Atherton W. Mentioned .....	805
Clark, Charles A. Mentioned .....	565
Clark, David C. Mentioned .....	370
Clark, Gideon. Mentioned .....	571, 922, 943
Clark, Hiram. Mentioned .....	598, 852
Clark, John H. Mentioned .....	1250
Clark, John W. Mentioned .....	507
Clark, Richard. Mentioned .....	872
Clark, Stephen R. Mentioned .....	146, 576, 1158
Clark, William. (Captain.) Mentioned .....	1056, 1060
Clark, William. (Major.) Mentioned .....	922, 943, 950
Clarke, Augustus P. Mentioned .....	499, 1127
Clarke, Charles H. Mentioned .....	1268
Clarke, Rouse R. Mentioned .....	1216
Clarke, Thomas E. Mentioned .....	1273
Clarke, Thomas W. Mentioned .....	335, 1025
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Napoleon B. McLaughlen .
Clay, Cecil. Mentioned .....	578
Cleary, Anthony. Mentioned .....	1082
Cleary, Joseph P. Mentioned .....	334, 341, 1024, 1071
Clement, B. C. Mentioned .....	827
Clendenin, David R. Report of scout from Fairfax Court-House into Loudoun County, Va., April 8-10, 1865 .....	1308
Clendenin, George, jr. Mentioned .....	915, 918
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Frank Wheaton .
Clendenning, ———. Mentioned .....	537
Cleveland, Chester D. Mentioned .....	915, 918
Clifton, Harrison Y. Mentioned .....	599
Cline, John A. Mentioned .....	569
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	867
Clinton, Henry. Mentioned .....	1001
Clinton, James B. Mentioned .....	580
Clothing, Camp and Garrison Equipage. See Munitions of War .
Clough, Joseph M. Mentioned .....	573, 1053
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1052
Clover Hill, Va. See Appomattox Court-House, Va.
Cloward, William H. Mentioned .....	286
Clower, Eli D. Mentioned .....	1268
Coakley, J. B. Mentioned .....	1279

	Page.
Coan, William B. Mentioned.....	403, 416, 420
Cobb, Howell. Mentioned.....	59
Cobb, Wiley J. Mentioned.....	1270
Coburn, Marshal W. Mentioned.....	579, 1223
Cochran, Martin V. Mentioned.....	294
Cochrane, Edward B. Mentioned.....	288, 292
Cody, D. C. Mentioned.....	392
Coey, James. Mentioned.....	286, 288, 380
Cohn, Abraham. Mentioned.....	1056, 1060
Coit, James C. Mentioned.....	1275, 1279
Colburn, Isaac. Mentioned.....	960
Colby, George W. Mentioned.....	622
Cole, Albert B. Mentioned.....	69
Cole, David. Mentioned.....	1038, 1074, 1082
Cole, Eugene O. Mentioned.....	308, 959, 962, 973
Cole, George W. Mentioned.....	144, 579
Cole, Harley. Mentioned.....	473
Cole, Jacob S. Mentioned.....	1082
Cole, J. W. Mentioned.....	473
Cole, R. G. Mentioned.....	382
Collier, Charles F. Correspondence with U. S. Grant.....	1048
Collins, Joseph B. Mentioned.....	561
Collins, William. Mentioned.....	598
Collis, Charles H. T.
Correspondence with George G. Meade.....	1093
Mentioned.....	62, 63, 73, 318, 571, 590, 601, 603, 610, 611, 1018, 1055, 1082, 1095-1099
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1091
Colorado, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	435
Colquitt, Alfred H.
Mentioned.....	434, 444-447
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	442
Colquitt, Hugh H.
Correspondence with Braxton Bragg.....	444
Mentioned.....	442-446
Colt, Thomas G. Mentioned.....	922, 943
Colt, William O.
Mentioned.....	866
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	274
Colton, Richard. Mentioned.....	1209
Columbia, Va. Occupation of, March 9, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of
Dowd, Thomas C.	Pitzhugh, Charles L.
	Sheridan, Philip H.
	Also itinerary , p. 122.
Colvin, James A.
Mentioned.....	404, 417
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	422
Colwell, James. Mentioned.....	923, 944
Comings, James H. Mentioned.....	571, 920
Comins, Leander M. Mentioned.....	598, 1157
Commers, William. Mentioned.....	895
Commodore Read, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	543, 550

	Page.
Compton, Hartwell B.
Mentioned .....	509
Report of expedition from Winchester to front of Petersburg, Va., Feb. 27- March 28, 1865 .....	508
Comstock, Cyrus B.	43, 397, 400
Mentioned .....
Reports of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	405, 406, 408 889
Cone, Edward R. Mentioned .....
Confederate Troops.
Companies, Returns of.
Lowie Farm, Va. Engagement at, near Gravelly Run, March 29, 1865	1291
White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge, Va. Engagement at, March 31, 1865 .....	1291
Mentioned.
Engineers— Regiments : 1st, 2d, 1267.
Infantry— Battalions : 1st, 1272.
For Volunteers, see respective States.
Number of, paroled at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865 ...	1277-1279
Organization, strength, etc. Northern Virginia, Army of....	383-390, 1267-1276
Congdon, James. Mentioned .....	509
Conger, Everton J. Mentioned .....	1318-1321
Congress, U. S.
Medals of Honor awarded by.
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1257
Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865	431
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27- March 28, 1865 .....	500
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	380
Thanks of, to Alfred H. Terry and his command. Assault and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, 1865 .....	402
Connecticut Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 1st, 74, 166, 172-174, 176-182, 184, 186, 322, 333, 334, 342, 358, 565, 581, 660, 663-665, 668, 669, 671-673, 1017, 1013, 1045, 1070- 1072; 1st ( Batteries ), A, 1071; B, 401; E, 74, 175, 1070; G, 404; I, 175, 182, 1070; K, 71, 173, 174, 185, 186, 329, 356, 1071; L, 71, 173, 183-185, 356, 404, 1071; 2d, 67, 574, 587, 610, 931-934, 936.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : 1st, 580, 597; 3d, 505, 581, 660, 661.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 455-457, 476, 505-508, 575, 591, 1134, 1134, 1136.
Infantry— Regiments : 6th, 404, 405, 416-413, 415; 7th, 404, 405, 410, 412, 413, 453, 454; 8th, 578, 595; 10th, 577, 594, 1183, 1192-1195, 1197, 1198, 1200, 1201; 11th, 578, 594, 1213; 14th, 64, 212, 213, 223, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 767- 769; 21st, 578, 595; 29th ( Colored ), 579, 596.
Connell, Trustim. Mentioned .....	981, 995, 998, 1258
Conner, James. Mentioned .....	383
Conner, John. Mentioned .....	199
Connor, James. Mentioned .....	930
Conover, William A. Mentioned .....	1230
Cook, Albert W. Mentioned .....	573
Cook, Alphonso F. Mentioned .....	512
Cook, Edward L. Mentioned .....	1201
Cook, George B. Mentioned .....	565
Cook, James E. Mentioned .....	1255
Cook, John B. Mentioned .....	934, 939

	Page.
Cook, Nelson. Mentioned.....	331, 338
Cook, Philip. Mentioned.....	382, 389, 1270, 1277
Cook, Renben W. Mentioned.....	999
Cooke, John R. Mentioned.....	389, 1272, 1278, 1281
Cooke, William J. Mentioned.....	300, 915, 919
Cooley, Captain. Mentioned.....	490
Cooper, David B. Mentioned.....	1030, 1074, 1082
Cooper, Edward F. Mentioned.....	599, 1159
Cooper, Eugene H. Mentioned.....	417
Cooper, John B. Mentioned.....	574
Cooper, John R. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865..	364
Cooper, Joseph J. Mentioned.....	570, 820
Cooper, Samuel. Mentioned.....	381
Cooper, William P. Mentioned.....	1270
Cope, Emmor B.
Correspondence with Governor K. Warren.....	259, 821, 833, 837
Mentioned.....	257, 258, 797, 806, 812, 817, 821, 822, 831, 833, 834, 836, 868
Coppinger, John J.
Mentioned.....	575
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1138
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865.....	509
Corbett, Boston. Mentioned.....	1320, 1321
Corbit, George W.
Mentioned.....	461
Report of scout from Fairfax Court-House to Aldie and Middleburg, Va., Feb. 15-16, 1865.....	461
Corcoran, John. Mentioned.....	1258
Cordery, Enoch. Mentioned.....	930
Cordry, Francis. Mentioned.....	996
Corey, Charles W. Mentioned.....	1027
Corliss, Stephen P. Mentioned.....	211, 747
Cornleik, Edward J. Mentioned.....	598, 782
Cornell, James C. Mentioned.....	364
Cornell, Mansfield. Mentioned.....	1193
Cornno, John S. Mentioned.....	958
Cornyn, Charles M.
Mentioned.....	309, 572, 994, 998
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1004
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	313
Corrie, William A.
Mentioned.....	576
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	369
Corse, Montgomery D. Mentioned.....	384, 1158, 1268, 1277, 1298
Cosat, John J. Mentioned.....	953
Costello, George B. Mentioned.....	1025
Conch, George H. Mentioned.....	175, 183, 668, 672, 673
Coughlin, John. Mentioned.....	1161
Coulson, John A. Mentioned.....	1268
Coulter, Richard.
Mentioned.....	97, 98, 570, 586, 796, 830, 834, 835, 840, 880, 881, 885, 889, 890, 892
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	896

	Page.
Coulter, William A. Mentioned.....	349
Counselman, Jacob H. Mentioned.....	1252, 1253
Court of Inquiry. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865.
Detail for.....	425
Findings of, etc.....	430
Order for.....	425
Proceedings of.....	426-430
Testimony of
Buzzell, Andrew J. H.....	429
Huckins, George W.....	429
Johnson, Nathan J.....	427, 428
Mosley, Frederick G.....	430
Quinby, George F.....	430
Reille, Theodore.....	430
Roberts, John H.....	429
Walrath, Ezra L.....	428, 429
Zent, Samuel M.....	426, 427
Courtright, Aaron. Mentioned.....	244
Courtright, Adam T. Mentioned.....	1036
Cowan, Abraham A. Mentioned.....	458
Cowan, Andrew.
Mentioned.....	106, 572, 588, 661, 908, 909, 1012, 1014
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1009
Cowan, George W. Mentioned.....	646
Cowan, Robert V. Mentioned.....	1272, 1285, 1286
Coward, David G. Mentioned.....	1270, 1277
Coward, A. Mentioned.....	1268
Cowles, Ezra F. Mentioned.....	947
Cowles, Seneca R. Mentioned.....	1172
Cox, Robert C.
Mentioned.....	349, 354, 574, 1016, 1029, 1031, 1064, 1068, 1069
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1009
Cox, William R. Mentioned.....	389, 1270, 1277
Crafts, Welcome A.
Mentioned.....	566
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	718
Craig, John N. Mentioned.....	251, 662
Craig, Samuel. Mentioned.....	1144, 1147-1152
Crain, Frederick. Mentioned.....	1292
Crain, J. Frank. Mentioned.....	208
Cram, Omer F. Mentioned.....	1026
Cramer, Silas. Mentioned.....	1033
Cranford, Horace L. Mentioned.....	1271
Crapo, Angelo. Mentioned.....	1196
Crapser, William A. Mentioned.....	1157
Crater, John F. Mentioned.....	920
Craven, Walter C. Mentioned.....	1191, 1192
Crawford, Charles C. Mentioned.....	1005
Crawford, E. A. Mentioned.....	1274
Crawford, John S. Mentioned.....	1099
Crawford, Samuel C. Mentioned.....	959, 966

Page.

Crawford, Samuel W.

Assumes temporary command of 5th Army Corps .....	3
Correspondence with Gouverneur K. Warren .....	812, 831
Mentioned, 51, 66, 81, 86, 91, 92, 94, 97, 153, 155, 253-261, 264, 269-271, 273, 277-279, 282, 290-292, 296, 298, 299, 371, 570, 585, 602, 626, 628, 677, 714, 732, 741, 796, 798, 800, 802-806, 808, 810-812, 814, 815, 819-824, 829-843, 846, 850, 856, 859-863, 866, 868, 871, 874, 877, 880, 882, 885, 892-894, 897, 899, 1103, 1105, 1106, 1125
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	879
Crawley, William H. Mentioned .....	708
Crawley, William P. Mentioned .....	554
Creney, James. Mentioned .....	286, 288
Crenshaw, Lewis D. Mentioned .....	1294
Criswell, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1031
Crocker, Erastus B. Mentioned .....	494
Croft, Edward. Mentioned .....	1272
Crombargar, Thomas S. Mentioned .....	758
Cronkite, James W. Mentioned .....	800, 921, 931, 933
Cronkite, Walter M. Mentioned .....	827
Crook, George.
Correspondence with Philip H. Sheridan .....	449
Mentioned .....	16, 22, 23, 113, 125, 447, 468-470, 472, 509, 515, 525, 576, 592, 601, 610, 616, 697, 817, 1101-1104, 1106, 1107, 1109, 1111, 1117, 1120, 1121, 1125, 1126, 1130, 1141, 1144, 1151-1153, 1157-1159, 1187, 1191, 1245, 1246, 1253, 1316, 1317
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1141
Crooks, Chester C. Mentioned .....	1127
Crosby, John W. Mentioned .....	572, 599, 954
Crossman, James M. Mentioned .....	961
Crow, James M. Mentioned .....	1273
Crowley, Michael. Mentioned .....	569
Crowley, William H. Mentioned .....	930
Crowninshield, Casper. Mentioned .....	123, 124, 499, 575, 1128
Crow's House, Va. Action at, March 31, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Cam- paign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Baldwin, Francis W. H.	McAllister, Robert.	Pierce, Francis R.
De Trobriand, Regis.	Pierce, Byron R.	Spannling, Joseph W.
Humphreys, Andrew A.
Croxton, C. C. Mentioned .....	1299
Crump, Samuel H. Mentioned .....	1271
Crumpler, Lewis H. Mentioned .....	1274
Crusader, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	472
Crutchfield, Stapleton. Mentioned .....	1276, 1295-1297
Cryer, Matthew H. Mentioned .....	576
Cueman, Richard V. Mentioned .....	924
Cullen, George. Mentioned .....	1270
Culver, Isaac F. Mentioned .....	1270
Cumberland, Md. Raid on, Feb. 21, 1865. Reports of
Kennedy, Robert P. ....	469, 470
Lee, Robert E. ....	471
Sheridan, Philip H. ....	468
Whitaker, Edward W. ....	470
Cunningham, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	599
Cunningham, Francis M. Mentioned .....	1268

Cunningham, James A.	272, 569, 861
Mentioned.....	274
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	280
Cunningham, Patrick. Mentioned.....	569
Cunningham, William J. Mentioned.....	923, 944, 952, 953
Curran, Henry. Mentioned.....	875
Curry, Henry. Mentioned.....
Curtin, John I.
Mentioned.... 107, 110, 316, 573, 583, 967, 1016, 1018, 1021, 1054, 1056, 1059, 1069, 1077
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1077
Curtis, Arthur R.
Mentioned.....	567, 761
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	216
Curtis, Josiah M. Mentioned.....	1258
Curtis, N. Martin. Mentioned.....	42
131, 132, 395, 397, 398, 400, 403, 405, 406, 415, 422, 424, 431
.....	35
Curtis, Samuel R. Mentioned.....	1181, 1185
Curtis, Theodore J. Mentioned.....
Curtis, William B.
Mentioned..... 133, 134, 578, 585, 1214-1216, 1218, 1219, 1222
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1219, 1220
Curtiss, Homer S. Mentioned.....	922, 933
Curtiss, James E. Mentioned.....	567, 769, 761
Cushman, Harrie A. Mentioned.....	947, 949, 948
Custer, George A.
Congratulatory address, Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1133
Mentioned..... 111, 124-127, 456, 470, 475-481, 483-487, 489, 493, 495, 497, 500, 501, 504, 505, 507, 511, 529, 575, 591, 681, 821, 850, 880, 908, 1100, 1101, 1103, 1104, 1106, 1107, 1109-1112, 1116-1121, 1123-1126, 1128, 1129, 1133-1136, 1139, 1140, 1150, 1151, 1155, 1233, 1291, 1295, 1310, 1317
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1129
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865.....	501, 504
Custer, Thomas W. Mentioned.....	1115, 1258
Cutshaw, Wilfred E. Mentioned.....	1271, 1270
Cuyler, William C. Mentioned.....	551
Dabney, Virghins. Mentioned.....	1391
Dabney's Mill, Va. Battle of. See Hatcher's Run, Va. Battle of, Feb. 5-7, 1865.
Dagget, Levi H. Mentioned.....	1160
Daggett, Rufus.
Mentioned.....	410
Report of expedition to and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	418
Daggett, Samuel L. Mentioned.....	961, 973
Dalley, Dennis B. Mentioned.....	99, 570, 800, 808
Daken, Stephen M. Mentioned.....	328
Dakin, George K. Mentioned.....	568, 790
Daley, Thomas. Mentioned.....	925, 934
Dalien, Prosper. Mentioned.....	71, 345, 349, 1027
Dalton, David. Mentioned.....	1311
Dalton, Edward B. Mentioned.....	615, 632, 634, 1020

	Page.
Dalziel, James. Mentioned .....	360
Damon, George B.
Mentioned .....	300, 310, 312, 572, 981, 983
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	990
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	307
Dannuth, Charles A. Mentioned .....	990, 1001
Dannuth, George. Mentioned .....	311, 995
Dana, Amasa E. Mentioned .....	492, 493, 1123, 1127, 1135
Dann, Robert S. Mentioned .....	291, 895
Dandy, George B.
Correspondence with Robert S. Foster .....	1194
Mentioned .....	130,
577, 594, 1179-1187, 1193, 1196, 1199, 1200, 1202, 1203, 1209, 1214, 1242
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1192
Dandy, James H. Mentioned .....	577, 598, 1183, 1194, 1195, 1202
Dane, John H. Mentioned .....	1153
Danford, Charles H. Mentioned .....	598
Danforth, J. Harvey. Mentioned .....	889
Daniels, Percy. Mentioned .....	573
Danville and South Boston, Va. Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to, April 23-29, 1865. Reports of
Whiteford, Edward .....	1315
Wright, Horatio G. ....	1315
Darby, Henry H. Mentioned .....	598, 748
Darnstaedt, Richard. Mentioned .....	1152, 1153
Davant, Philip E. Mentioned .....	1271
David, Jacob. Mentioned .....	1200
Davidalzer, John A. Mentioned .....	1258
Davies, Henry E., jr.
Mentioned .....	50, 61,
62, 68, 113, 116, 119, 124, 366, 367, 576, 592, 618-624, 1102, 1103, 1107, 1110,
1117, 1122, 1123, 1141-1143, 1147-1152, 1154-1156, 1158, 1246, 1249, 1256
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1143
Davies, Thomas. Mentioned .....	468
Davis, Amos. Mentioned .....	311, 995
Davis, Charles L. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9,
1865 .....	636
Davis, Charles W. Mentioned .....	766
Davis, David O. Mentioned .....	880
Davis, Ebenezer W. Mentioned .....	571, 910, 928
Davis, Frank. Mentioned .....	785
Davis, George F. Mentioned .....	598, 1168, 1169
Davis, Jefferson.
Correspondence with War Department, U. S. ....	382
Mentioned .....	36, 59, 60, 382, 510, 1263
Davis, Jefferson C. Mentioned .....	32
Davis, John W. Mentioned .....	953
Davis, Joseph R. Mentioned .....	389, 1272, 1278
Davis, Morris. Mentioned .....	1030, 1064
Davis, Nathan. Mentioned .....	135, 599, 1220
Davis, Phineas A. Mentioned .....	1184
Davis, Thomas. Mentioned .....	473, 606, 1258
Davis, Truman. Mentioned .....	275

	Page.
Davis, W. H. Mentioned .....	1269
Dawson, Francis W. Mentioned .....	1269
Dawson, George W. Mentioned .....	961
Dawson, Richard W. Mentioned .....	417
Day, Albert A.
Mentioned .....	573, 1024
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1018
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	328
Day, Archibald B. Mentioned .....	926, 945
Day, George H. Mentioned .....	250
Day, Hiram W.
Mentioned .....	983, 985, 991
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	985
Day, Jacob. Mentioned .....	1209
Day, James B. Mentioned .....	925, 935, 939
Dea, John S. Mentioned .....	392
Dean, Henry C. Mentioned .....	265
Dean, Samuel J. Mentioned .....	926, 945
Dean, William. Mentioned .....	1127
Deane, James. Mentioned .....	301, 921, 934
Deane, John G. Mentioned .....	252, 704
Deane, John M.
Mentioned .....	334, 335, 573, 1024
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1051
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	338
Dearing, James. Mentioned .....	390, 1276, 1279, 1301, 1302
Deas, William A. Mentioned .....	1271
Decker, James. Mentioned .....	349, 1037
Deep Bottom, Va. Expedition to near Weldon, N. C., from. See Weldon, N. C. Expedition from Deep Bottom, Va., to near, etc., March 28-April 11, 1865. De Ford, Harriet, Steamer.
Capture of. See Harriet De Ford.
Mentioned .....	1306, 1307
De Groot, John F. Mentioned .....	162
Deitz, Frederick. Mentioned .....	1085
De Laoy, William. Mentioned .....	213, 221
DeLafield, Richard. Mentioned .....	108
De Land, James S. Mentioned .....	327, 1023
De Laney, John W. Mentioned .....	468
Delany, John. Mentioned .....	294, 295, 896
Delavis, Hiram A. Mentioned .....	881, 1258
Delaware Troops. Mentioned.
Infantry— Regiments: 1st, 61, 220-222, 567, 583, 603, 705, 706, 767, 770, 772; 3d, 4th, 66, 284, 570, 585, 875, 876; 8th, 570, 585, 875, 876.
Dement, William F. Mentioned .....	1275, 1279, 1291
Deming, Hobart W. Mentioned .....	177
De Molay, Steamer. Mentioned .....	132
Dempoy, Marshall L. Mentioned .....	579
Denahey, Michael. Mentioned .....	334, 336
Denio, Frank. Mentioned .....	726, 733
; Andrew W. Mentioned .....	93, 569, 585, 799, 808, 869, 874
n, Harvey G. Mentioned .....	857

Denny, Robert H. Mentioned .....	Page.	1188
Denslow, William J. Mentioned .....		884, 886, 887
Dent, John T.
Mentioned .....		567
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....		770
Dein, George F. Report of scout from Beuward's Mills to South Quay, Va., Jan. 2, 1865 .....		302
Desota, Charles. Mentioned .....		950
De Trobriand, Regis.
Mentioned .....	64, 74, 82, 83, 164, 102, 193, 224-226, 230, 232, 235-237, 241, 244, 249, 255, 568, 583, 674, 675, 677, 683-685, 687, 691, 693, 701-703, 706, 711, 713, 714, 716, 736, 762, 776-778, 781, 783, 786, 787
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....		776, 781
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....		226
Devons, Charles.
Assumes temporary command of 24th Army Corps .....		3
Mentioned .....	120, 137, 578, 594, 1173, 1175, 1212, 1227, 1228
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....		1211
Deverney, George. Mentioned .....		926, 945
Dovhi, Thomas C.
Mentioned .....	113, 120, 124, 125, 475-477, 479-487, 494, 501, 529, 575, 591, 681, 817, 824, 830, 838, 880, 1100-1104, 1106, 1107, 1139-1141, 1146, 1147, 1149-1151, 1156, 1130, 1131, 1135, 1144, 1155, 1316, 1317
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....		1122
Lovettsville, Va. Affair near, Jan. 18, 1865 .....		452
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865 .....		488
Devino, Daniel. Mentioned .....		292
Devine, Michael. Mentioned .....		301, 924, 933, 935
Dovre, Abram A. Mentioned .....		1031
Dewire, Montorville D. Mentioned .....		325, 335, 342, 1033
De Witt, Sowell W. Mentioned .....		757, 767, 768
Dexter, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....		158, 160, 161
Dial, Absalom S. Mentioned .....		577
Dibbell, Harmon B. Mentioned .....		73
Dickenson, Crispin. Mentioned .....		1274
Dickerhoof, Simon. Mentioned .....		310, 999
Dickey, Joseph H. Mentioned .....		1270
Dickey, William D. Mentioned .....		570
Dickson, Davis J. Mentioned .....		288, 291
Diehl, John J. Mentioned .....		278, 870
Dillingham, Lucius A. Mentioned .....		637, 639, 1021
Dinnin, James R. Mentioned .....		498, 575
Dinwiddie Court-House, Va. Engagement at, March 31, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Chamberlain, Joshua L.	Lee, Fitzhugh.	Poundstone, Alexander C. M.
Crink, George.	Lee, Robert E.	Robbins, Walter R.
Custer, George A.	Edgett, John A.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Davies, Henry E., Jr.	McParlin, Thomas A.	Smith, Charles H.
Dovhi, Thomas C.	Mingo, George G.	Warren, Gouverneur K.
Gibbs, Alfred.	Merritt, Wesley.	Young, Samuel B. M.

Also Itineraries, pp. 113-116, 118, 127 and Meade to Warren, pp. 817, 818;
Sheridan to Grant, p. 1110.

Disputanta Station, Va. Skirmish near, Jan. 9, 1865. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 9, 1865. Itinerary , p. 117.
Dissinger, Isaac S. Mentioned.....	204, 895
District of Columbia Troops. Mentioned. Cavalry—Regiments: 1st, 580, 597, 1244-1246, 1249-1252, 1255, 1256.
Diven, Charles W. Mentioned.....	68, 70, 316, 320, 321, 314, 318-350, 1028
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 9, 1865.....	350
Dix, Oscar B. Mentioned.....	458
Dixon, James W. Mentioned.....	908
Doane, Charles R. Mentioned.....	580
Doble, William. Mentioned.....	578
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1206
Dockun, Warren C. Mentioned.....	916, 925, 931, 937, 1258
Dodd, Allen G. Mentioned.....	599
Dodd, Levi A. Mentioned.....	574, 1016, 1061, 1063, 1064, 1067, 1069
Dodge, George S. Mentioned.....	400
Dodge, James G. C. Mentioned.....	1033
Dot, Helenus. Mentioned.....	736
Doggett, Hugh S. Mentioned.....	515
Doheny, Michael. Mentioned.....	567
Doherty, Edward P. Correspondence with Schubler, Joseph.....	1318
Wilson, H.....	1318
Report of capture of J. Wilkes Booth and David E. Harold, at Garrett's Farm, near Port Royal, Va., April 26, 1865.....	1317
Doherty, James. Mentioned.....	71, 334, 335, 339, 340, 1024
Doherty, Patrick. Mentioned.....	1091
Dolan, Alfred B. Mentioned.....	157, 158, 160
Dolan, Daniel. Mentioned.....	201
Dolbow, Charles. Mentioned.....	930
Dolloff, Charles W. Mentioned.....	957, 960, 970, 973, 1258
Doniny, Levi S. Mentioned.....	578
Donaldson, John. Mentioned.....	1258
Donnell, John S. Mentioned.....	271
Donohoe, Michael T. Mentioned.....	595, 1001, 1213
Doolittle, Edward L. Mentioned.....	1033
Doolittle, Isaac. Mentioned.....	569, 801, 818, 853, 854
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	858
Doran, James B. Mentioned.....	598, 1146
Dorrance, John K. Mentioned.....	924, 942
Dorsey, Stephen W. Mentioned.....	563, 1011
Doten, Edward. Mentioned.....	1034
Doten, Frederick B. Mentioned.....	758, 760
Doty, Franklin B. Mentioned.....	598, 1056, 1060
Dotze, Augustus. Mentioned.....	553
Donbleday, Ulysses. Mentioned.....	140-142, 580, 596, 1181, 1233, 1241, 1242
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1236
Dougherty, William. Mentioned.....	930
Doughty, James E. Mentioned.....	226, 228

	Page.
Doughty, John B. Mentioned .....	599, 952
Douglas, Henry Kyd. Mentioned .....	1270, 1277
Douglass, Arthur C. Mentioned .....	959
Douglass, Robert B. Mentioned .....	489, 497
Dowd, Le Roy. Mentioned .....	1188
Dowell, ———. Mentioned .....	551
Dowling, Joseph B. Mentioned .....	924, 944
Downs, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	920
Doyle, Richard N. Mentioned .....	573, 1016, 1022, 1044, 1061
Dracessville, Va. Skirmish near, March 18, 1865. Report of Henry S. Gansevoort .....	551
Draper, Alonzo G. Mentioned .....	140, 579, 596
Draper, Stephen H. Mentioned .....	462-464, 466
Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	539
Drew, George A. Mentioned .....	492, 493, 1316
Drewry, C. S. S. Mentioned .....	165, 168-170
Drewry, John W. Mentioned .....	1275
Driver, William R. Mentioned .....	229
Drown, Azro. Mentioned .....	320, 608
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	184
Drum, William F. Mentioned .....	569, 872
Drummond, Thomas. Mentioned .....	575, 590
Duane, James C. Correspondence with
Harwood, Franklin .....	159
Spaulding, Ira .....	157, 158, 161, 162
Mentioned .....	158, 173
Reports of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	157-159, 161
Du Bois, Henry A. Mentioned .....	1115
Du Bose, D. G. Mentioned .....	435
Du Bose, Dudley M. Mentioned .....	1136, 1269, 1277, 1284
Dudley, Alben M. Mentioned .....	1026
Dudley Buck, Steamer. Mentioned .....	144
Dudley, Hollis O. Mentioned .....	574
Dudley, Ira L. Report of affair at Williamsburg, Va., Feb. 11, 1865 .....	458
Dudrow, J. Parker. Mentioned .....	999
Duff, David K. Mentioned .....	465, 466
Duff, John M. Mentioned .....	294
Duff, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1000
Duggan, James B. Mentioned .....	1272
Duguidaville, Va. Skirmish at, March 8, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 29, 1865.
Reports of
Duvin, Thomas G. Gibbs, Alfred. Sheridan, Philip H.
Also general report of Grant, p. 48, and Itinerary , p. 121.
Dull, George. Mentioned .....	349, 355, 1037
Duncan, Alender P. Mentioned .....	576
Duncan, George J. Mentioned .....	1212
Duncan, James D. Mentioned .....	958
Duncan, James H. Mentioned .....	1219, 1273
Dungan, Robert H. Mentioned .....	1271
Dunham, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	242

	Page.
Dunlap, Lewis J. Mentioned.....	926, 945
Dunlap, W. Emerson. Mentioned.....	374
Dunn, James H. Mentioned.....	423
Dunn, John M. Mentioned.....	766
Dunn, Payson. Mentioned.....	1033
Dunn, Thomas B. Mentioned.....	509
Dupuis, Gustavus. Mentioned.....	508
Durell, James M. Mentioned.....	512
Durgin, Samuel H. Mentioned.....	620
Durham P. Mentioned.....	1270
Durand, Coe. Mentioned.....	575, 1127
Duryea, Richard C. Mentioned.....	74, 79, 195
Dustin, Redford. Mentioned.....	925, 934, 936
Dutton, Henry B. Mentioned.....	1306, 1307
Dutton, James. Mentioned.....	923, 944
Duval, Isaac H. Mentioned.....	447, 448, 525, 526, 1324
Duysing, Emil. Mentioned.....	598
Dwight, William. Mentioned.....	526, 527
Dygert, Charles H. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	219
Eakin, Chandler P. Mentioned.....	576
Earle, David. Mentioned.....	458
Early, Jubal A. Mentioned.....	27, 29, 30, 48, 126, 127, 383- 388, 451, 471, 475, 476, 479, 483, 486, 488, 495, 505-513, 517-519, 1270, 1277
Earnest, Robert H. Mentioned.....	579
Earnshaw, George A. Mentioned.....	970
East, Department of the. Joseph Hooker assigned to command of.....	3
Easton, John B. Mentioned.....	1153
Eaton, John B. Mentioned.....	574, 1071, 1073, 1074
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1080
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	362
Eaton, Joseph, Mrs. Mentioned.....	540
Eaton, William H. Mentioned.....	961
Eberly, Benjamin F. Mentioned.....	1028, 1041
Echols, John. Mentioned.....	510, 512, 521
Eck, Michael. Mentioned.....	371
Eckels, Charles E. Mentioned.....	1192
Eckman, Charles W. Mentioned.....	571
Eddy, ———. Mentioned.....	530
Eddy, Henry M. Mentioned.....	574, 599, 1000
Eddy, Orville M. Mentioned.....	1186
Eddy, Robert. Mentioned.....	1023
Edelman, Louis. Mentioned.....	203, 205
Edenburgh, Va. Scouts to, from Winchester. March 17-19, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865, Report of Brown, p. 532.
March 20-21, 1865, with skirmish (21st) near Pistor's Mill. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865, Report of Oliver, p. 534.
Edenburgh and Little Fort Valley, Va. Expedition from Camp Russell (near Winchester) to, and skirmishes, Feb. 13-17, 1865. Report of George R. Maxwell.....	400

	Page.
Edgar, John, jr. Mentioned .....	69
Edgeworth, James. Mentioned .....	930
Edmonds, J. Chasing. Mentioned .....	271, 272
Edmonds, Thomas F. Mentioned .....	577
Edmonds, Henry. Mentioned .....	1268
Edwards, Charles L. Mentioned .....	947
Edwards, David. Mentioned .....	872, 1258
Edwards, Oliver.
Correspondence with Frank Wheaton .....	943
Mentioned .....	102,
103, 300, 302, 571, 587, 904, 910-918, 926-929, 932, 933, 949, 950, 953, 1114
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	941
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	301, 302
Egan, Thomas W. Mentioned .....	525, 1050
Egbert, George T.
Mentioned .....	566, 744, 747
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	756
Eggleston, Rouse S.
Mentioned .....	570, 890, 891
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	890
Egle, William H. Mentioned .....	1231
Eichberger, Andreas. Mentioned .....	517
Elohe, Louis. Mentioned .....	569
Elusiedel, Detlev von. Mentioned .....	570
Elder, Harry G. Mentioned .....	898
Elder, Samuel S.
Mentioned .....	579, 1175, 1180
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1225
Elfwing, Nere A. Mentioned .....	403, 420
Elliott, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1274
Elliott, Alexander C. Mentioned .....	1258
Elliott, Stephen, jr. Mentioned .....	1278
Elliott, Thornton J.
Mentioned .....	1246, 1255
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1267
Ellis, Milton A. Mentioned .....	483, 481
Ellison, Frank. Mentioned .....	1186, 1190
Elmeler, Hermann. Mentioned .....	598
Elwell, Roderick. Mentioned .....	926, 945
Ely, Albert S. Mentioned .....	599
Ely, Ralph.
Correspondence with Clement A. Lounsberry .....	1048
Mentioned .....	70, 108, 109, 317, 318, 320, 322,
323, 325, 363, 573, 589, 1017, 1019, 1021, 1039-1041, 1051, 1063, 1067, 1090, 1091
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1047
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	325
Emerson, Charles W. Mentioned .....	577
Emmeloek, John W. Mentioned .....	1157
Emory, Campbell D. Mentioned .....	799
Emory, William H.
Correspondence with Winfield S. Hancock .....	1326
Mentioned .....	26, 27, 123, 525, 1325

	Page
Emrich, John P. Mentioned .....	1273
Engelhard, Joseph A. Mentioned .....	1286
Engelman, Clement. Mentioned .....	599
Engle, John M. Mentioned .....	1038
English, Hiram S. Mentioned .....	973
Ennett, William T. Mentioned .....	1270
Ennis, Charles D. Mentioned .....	1258
Entriken, Henry. Mentioned .....	926, 945
Eolus, Steamer. Mentioned .....	1306
Erdman, William H. Mentioned .....	331, 336, 1032
Erich, Henry C. Mentioned .....	1251, 1251
Erson, Eric. Mentioned .....	1272
Eshleman, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	1270
Esmond, Richard. Mentioned .....	288, 289, 291, 898
Espy, Calvin M. Mentioned .....	1001
Espy, J. F. Mentioned .....	1269, 1277
Essington, Heber B.
Mentioned .....	403
Report of expedition to, and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	420
Estill, Harry.
Correspondence with Braxton Bragg .....	445
Mentioned .....	442-445
Evans, Andrew W.
Mentioned .....	148, 580, 1245-1247, 1255
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1251
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	371
Evans, Clement A. Mentioned .....	381, 389-392, 1271, 1277, 1292
Evans, Coron D. Mentioned .....	1258
Evans, David M. Mentioned .....	1244
Evans, Edwin A. Mentioned .....	576
Evans, Ira H. Mentioned .....	1250, 1258
Evans, Ira L.
Mentioned .....	1023
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	327
Evans, John B. Mentioned .....	1269
Evans, Owen J. Mentioned .....	612, 701
Everhart, Samuel. Mentioned .....	599
Everson, Adelbert. Mentioned .....	1258
Ewell, Benjamin S. Mentioned .....	545
Ewell, Richard S.
Correspondence with Alexander C. Haskell .....	479
Mentioned .....	18, 101, 102, 105, 513, 514, 604, 631, 652, 907, 915, 912, 951, 951, 980, 984-986, 998, 1108, 1132, 1136, 1151, 1265, 1269, 1276, 1278, 1283, 1284, 1289, 1290, 1296-1298, 1302
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1292
Ewing, John C. Mentioned .....	1041, 1065, 1258
Ewing, Thomas. Mentioned .....	164
Expeditionary Forces. Landing of, Jan. 13, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of Ames, p. 415; Bragg, p. 423. Also general report of Grant, p. 41, and itinerary, p. 145.
Fadden, Warren C. Mentioned .....	889

Faehitz, Ernest F. M. Mentioned.....	Page.
Fain, John D. Mentioned.....	500
Fairchild, Harrison S.	1286
Mentioned.....	578, 594, 1179-1186, 1189, 1194, 1195, 1203, 1207, 1238, 1241
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1202
Fairfax Court-House, Va.
Scout into Loudoun County from. See Loudoun County, Va. Scout from Fairfax Court-House into, April 8-10, 1865.
Scout to Aldie and Middleburg from. See Aldie and Middleburg, Va. Scout from Fairfax Court-House to, Feb. 15-16, 1865.
Scout to Brentsville from. See Brentsville, Va. Scout from Fairfax Court-House to, Feb. 6-7, 1865.
Fair Haven, Md. Capture of steamer Harriet De Ford near. See Harriet De Ford, Steamer. Capture of, near Fair Haven, Chesapeake Bay, Md., April 4, 1865.
Faison, Paul F. Mentioned.....	1274
Falooner, John W. Mentioned.....	590
Fannin, Augustus B., jr. Mentioned.....	1270
Fannon, Peter. Mentioned.....	289
Farmer, George B. Mentioned.....	498
Farmville, Va. Engagement at, April 7, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Adams, J. Webb.	Humphreys, Andrew A.	Pendleton, William N.
Bahlwin, Francis W. H.	Humphreys, Francis R.	Pierce, Byron R.
Barlow, Francis G.	Hyde, John McK.	Pierce, Francis B.
Briscoe, James G.	Ives, Lucius H.	Ramsey, John.
Chew, Henry F.	Lee, Fitzlough.	Robbins, Walter R.
Crafts, Welcome A.	Lidell, John A.	Schnitzer, George W.
Crook, George.	MacDonnell, Clinton D.	Scott, George W.
Dent, John T.	McPartin, Thomas A.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Egburt, George T.	Mende, George G.	Smith, Charles.
Foster, Robert S.	Miles, Nelson A.	Smith, Charles H.
Glenny, William.	Nagant, Robert.	Smith, James J.
Gould, Seward P.	Obsted, William A.	Stockton, William A. F.
Harwood, Franklin.	Orl, Edward O. C.	Terwilliger, William H.
Hazard, John G.	Ostern, Thomas O.	Wadhall, Daniel.
Happer, George P.	Pago, Charles.	Young, Samuel B. M.
Howell, Charles W.	Pellon, John G.

Also itineraries, pp. 81, 115, 118-120.

Farnham, Augustus B. Mentioned.....	845, 881
Farnsworth, Ezra S. Mentioned.....	272, 861
Farr, Edward P. Mentioned.....	73
Farragut, David G. Mentioned.....	14, 35
Fairar, Henry W. Mentioned.....	908
Farrell, Barney. Mentioned.....	925, 934, 935
Farrington, John E. Mentioned.....	1254
Farris, Frank. Mentioned.....	1314
Faxon, William C.
Mentioned.....	608, 669, 1071.
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	178
Faxon, W. Lyman. Mentioned.....	636
Fay, Arnold C. Mentioned.....	1027
Fay, J. Augustus, jr. Mentioned.....	910, 938
Fay, Lawrence. Mentioned.....	1151, 1152
Fearey, Thomas H. Mentioned.....	939, 908

	Page
Fearnsville and Smithfield, Va. Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to, Feb. 11-15, 1865. Report of Franklin A. Stratton .....	459
Federal Point, N. C. Expedition arrives at, Jan. 12-13, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of Rollins, p. 414, and Itineraries, pp. 131, 144, 145.
Feichtner, Charles G. Mentioned .....	1000, 1001
Feight, Frederick D. Mentioned .....	1037
Feild, William M. Mentioned .....	1200
Felthouseen, John W. Mentioned .....	887
Fenn, Augustus H. Mentioned .....	301, 920, 931
Fenton, Reuben B. Mentioned .....	201
Ferguson, Daniel. Mentioned .....	423
Ferguson, James Dugué. Mentioned .....	1301
Fernald, Albert E. Mentioned .....	1258
Ferrell, George A. Mentioned .....	1273
Ferrero, Edward.
Congressional Orders. Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865 .....	1171
Correspondence with George L. Hartsuff .....	1171
Mentioned .....	61, 145, 570, 593, 600, 1170, 1171, 1173
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20-April 9, 1865 .....	1172
Ferrie, Robert R. Mentioned .....	1037
Ferry, Orlando N. Mentioned .....	1160
Fesq, Frank. Mentioned .....	017, 1258
Fessenden, James D. Mentioned .....	123, 526
Field, Charles W. Mentioned .....	383-388, 1268, 1277
Filer, Charles W. Mentioned .....	175
Flanagan, Joseph. Mentioned .....	380, 1273, 1278
Finkelmeier, John P. Mentioned .....	238, 240, 241, 700
Flanney, Charles G. Mentioned .....	915, 919
Flanney, Solon H. Mentioned .....	508
Fieh, Chauncey. Mentioned .....	312, 900, 1003
Fish, Ezra F. Mentioned .....	961
Fieh, Henry H. Mentioned .....	90, 570, 593, 881, 896-898
Fish, John. Mentioned .....	576
Fish, Timothy R. Mentioned .....	328
Fishback, John P. Mentioned .....	741
Fleher, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	481
Fishor, Charles G. Mentioned .....	073
Fisher, George C. Mentioned .....	801, 848, 850
Fleher, Fort. See Fort Fisher.
Fleher, French W. Mentioned .....	960
Fisher, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1258
Fleher, Samuel B. Mentioned .....	030
Fisher's Hill, Va. Skirmish near, March 21, 1865. See Edenburg, Va. Scout to, from Winchester, March 20-21, 1865, etc.
Fiek, Henry C.
Mentioned .....	571, 920, 931-933
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20-April 9, 1865 .....	035, 030
Fite, John B. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 4-April 3, 1865 .....	234
Fitts, James G. Mentioned .....	915, 919
Fitzgerald, George P. Mentioned .....	308, 309

Fitzgerald, John P. Mentioned .....	Page.
Fitz Gerald, William H. Mentioned .....	1271
Fitzhugh, Charles L. .....	1269, 1284
Mentioned .....	120-122, 125, 476, 478, 481, 486, 487, 489-493, 495, 496, 499, 575, 591, 1103, 1113, 1118, 1122-1128, 1133, 1135
Report of expedition from Winchester to the front of Petersburg, Va., Feb. 27-March 28, 1865.....	496
Fitzhugh, Robert H. .....
Mentioned .....	67, 100, 298, 661, 856, 857
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	297
Fitzhugh, Thaddens. Report of capture of steamer Harriet De Ford , near Fair Haven, Chesapeake Bay, Md., April 4, 1865.....	1305
Fitzpatrick, Dennis. Mentioned .....	809
Fitzpatrick, Joseph. Mentioned.....	895
Fitzpatrick, Terrence. Mentioned.....	1246, 1247, 1249
Five Forks, Va. .....
Battle of, April 1, 1865.
Communications from
Ayres, Ronneya B.....	832
Bankhead, Henry C .....	831
Cope, Eumer B .....	833, 837
Crawford, Samuel W .....	831
Griffin, Charles.....	831
Merritt, Wesley .....	1133
Sheridan, Philip H.....	1104
Warren, Gouverneur K .....	880
Sketches.....	830, 880
See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Abbott, George R.	Gregory, Edgar M.	Myles, Daniel.
Ayres, Ronneya B.	Griffin, Charles.	O'Neill, Henry.
Baker, J. Sumner.	Gwyn, James.	Pennington, Alexander C. M.
Bartlett, Joseph J.	Hall, Josiah.	Sawyer, Charles F.
Baxter, Henry.	Hayes, Joseph.	Sellers, Eli G.
Chamberlain, Joshua L.	Humphreys, Andrew A.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Cline, John A.	Kellogg, John A.	Smart, Charles.
Coppinger, John J.	Lee, Fitzhugh.	Stanton, David L.
Coulter, Richard.	Lidell, John A.	Stratton, Franklin A.
Crawford, Samuel W.	McCoy, Thomas F.	Tarbell, Jonathan.
Gaster, George A.	Mackenzie, Ronald S.	Townsend, Joseph G.
Devlin, Thomas C.	McPartin, Thomas A.	Warren, Gouverneur K.
Doolittle, Isaac.	Meade, George G.	West, Robert M.
Egelston, Ramse S.	Merritt, Wesley.	Whites, Charles K.
Evans, Andrew W.	Merrill, Walter G.	Witman, Edward L.
Gibbs, Alfred.
Also reports of Grant, p. 54; Spencer, p. 264; and itineraries , pp. 86, 88, 91, 93-96, 121, 123, 125, 127.
Skirmish near, March 30, 1865. Communications from
Grant, U. S.....		808, 809
Sheridan, Philip H.....		811
See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Devlin, Thomas C.	Lee, Fitzhugh.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Gibbs, Alfred.	Merritt, Wesley.
Also itineraries , pp. 121, 123, 125.
Fix, Augustus W. Mentioned.....		1100
Flagler, Charles W. Mentioned .....		1167

Flags.

Captured and lost. Communications from
Meade, George G. ....	1006
Miles, Nelson A. ....	726
Nugent, Robert. ....	726
Number of, captured by Union troops during Appomattox, Va., Campaign. ....	788, 816, 957, 980, 981, 1065, 1147, 1182
Number of, captured during expedition from Winchester to front of Petersburg, Va., Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. ....	482
Flanders, Alexander C. Mentioned. ....	1273
Flanner, Henry G. Mentioned. ....	1265
Flannery, Cornelius. Mentioned. ....	312
Flat Creek, near Amelia Springs, Va. Skirmish at, April 6, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Adams, J. Webb. ....	Lee, Fitzhugh. ....
De Trobriand, Regis. ....	Lee, Robert E. ....
Harwood, Franklin. ....	Ladd, John A. ....
Hazard, John G. ....	McPurkin, Thomas A. ....
Howell, Charles W. ....	Miles, Nelson A. ....
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	Page, Charles. ....
Ives, Lucius H. ....	Pelton, John G. ....
Peters, Byron R. ....	Scott, George W. ....
Shepherd, Russell B. ....	Smart, Charles. ....
Smith, James C. ....	Tarwell, William H. ....
Woodall, Daniel. ....
Also Memories , pp. 75, 83, 85, 115, 118, 119.
Fleming, James. Mentioned. ....	109
Fleming, John B. Mentioned. ....	901
Fleming, R. L. Mentioned. ....	172
Fletcher, Stephen C. Mentioned. ....	303, 372, 958, 977
Fletcher, William G. Mentioned. ....	930
Flint, Dayton E. Mentioned. ....	920
Flint, Edward A. Mentioned. ....	561
Flint, Thomas. Mentioned. ....	952
Flint Hill, Va. Skirmish near, March 7, 1865.
Communications from
Gamble, William. ....	516
Gault, Olney K. ....	517
Sweitzer, Nelson B. ....	517
Reports of
Gault, Olney K. ....	516
Richter, Otto. ....	517
Sweitzer, Nelson B. ....	516
Flood, Lieutenant. Mentioned. ....	519
Florida Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Infantry—Regiments: 2d, 5th, 1273; 8th, 1258, 1273; 9th, 10th, 1273; 11th, 1259, 1273; 18th [?], 1261.
Flowers, George W. Mentioned. ....	1272
Floyd, Horace W.
Mentioned. ....	1671, 968, 970, 973
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. ....	305
Fogarty, John. Mentioned. ....	1153
Fogarty, Michael. Mentioned. ....	364
Foley, John. Mentioned. ....	935
Foley, John C. Mentioned. ....	201
Follett, Frederick M. Mentioned. ....	580
Folwell, Mahlon B. Mentioned. ....	72, 159, 485
Folwell, William W. Mentioned. ....	139, 643, 614, 617, 618
Foot, Morris C. Mentioned. ....	921, 934

	Page.
Foote, Homer. Mentioned .....	334, 341
Foote, John B. Mentioned .....	423
Foote, R. E. Mentioned .....	1280
Force, Levi. Mentioned .....	1027
Forum, John B. Mentioned .....	1270
Ford, George W. (Lieutenant.) Mentioned .....	606, 725, 732, 1258
Ford, George W. (Major.)
Correspondence with Nathaniel Michler .....	162
Mentioned .....	162, 648
Ford, John A. Mentioned .....	1031
Ford, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	1151, 1153
Ford, Wayland F. Mentioned .....	577
Forney, William H. Mentioned .....	389, 1273, 1278
Forrest, Nathan B. Mentioned .....	13, 33, 34, 36, 39, 40, 59
Forester, Charles W. Mentioned .....	787
Forsyth, George A. Mentioned .....	1113
Forsyth, James W. Mentioned .....	605, 1112
Fort Brady, James River, Va. Action at, Jan. 23-24, 1865. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 2, 1865. Reports of Abbot, Henry L.                      Pierce, Henry H.                      Stillman, Charles N.
Mason, Ebenezer P.                  Pratt, Henry A.
Also report of McParlin, p. 608, and Itineraries , pp. 128, 132, 139.
Fort Caswell, N. C. Blewn up, and works at Smithville and Reeves' Point abandoned by Confederates, Jan. 16-17, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of
Bragg, Braxton.                      Terry, Alfred H.                      Whiting, William H. C.
Fort Fisher, N. C.
Assault and capture of, Jan. 15, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of
Abbott, Joseph C.                      Daggett, Rufus.                      Rollins, Augustus W.
Ames, Adolphert.                      Eastington, Heber B.                      Samuels, William J.
Blakelock, Albert M.                      Gordon, George T.                      Terry, Alfred H.
Bragg, Braxton.                      Harding, Oliver P.                      Thompson, John.
Calquitt, Alfred H.                      Johnson, Nathan J.                      Treloar, William H.
Colvin, James A.                      Marble, William S.                      Watkins, Ezra L.
Comstock, Cyrus B.                      Rockwell, Alfred P.                      Whiting, William H. C.
Also report of Abbot, p. 165, and Itineraries , pp. 131, 132, 144, 145.
Bombardment of, by naval fleet, Jan. 13, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of
Bragg, Braxton.                      Samuels, William J.                      Whiting, William H. C.
Gordon, George T.                      Terry, Alfred H.
Combined military and naval operations against, Jan. 13-15, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Reports of Paine , p. 423; Terry , p. 306; and Itinerary , p. 131.
Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865.
Casualties. Returns of. Union troops .....	405
Communications from
Calquitt, Hugh H. ....	444
Estill, Harry .....	445
Grant, U. S. ....	43

Page.

Fort Fisher, N. C.—Continued.

Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865.
Communications from

War Department, U. S.	402
Washington, George I.	446
Whiting, William H. C.	431

Congratulatory Orders. Terry	168
Medals of Honor awarded by U. S. Congress	431
Property captured during, by Union troops	167, 409

Reports of

Abbott, Joseph C.	410
Ames, Adolphert.	415
Blackman, Albert M.	425
Bragg, Braxton	431
Colquitt, Alfred H.	442
Colvin, James A.	422
Comstock, Cyrus B.	405, 406, 408
Daggett, Rufus.	418
Essington, Heber B.	420
Gordon, George T.	435
Harding, Oliver P.	419
Johnson, Nathan J.	421
Marble, William S.	412
Paine, Charles J.	423
Rockwell, Alfred P.	411
Rollins, Augustus W.	414
Saunders, William J.	437
Terry, Alfred H.	394, 401
Thompson, John	412
Trickey, William H.	413
Watrath, Ezra L.	422
Whiting, William H. C.	439, 441

See also general report of Grant, p. 43.

Thanks of U. S. Congress to Alfred H. Terry and his command	462
---	-----

Union Troops in. Organization, strength, etc.	403, 404
---	----------

Explosion of powder magazine at, Jan. 16, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C.
Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865.
Report of Terry, p. 401; and itinerary, p. 132; also Court of Inquiry,
p. 425.

Skirmishes near, Jan. 13, 1865. See Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, and its dependencies, Jan. 3-17, 1865. Report of Terry,
p. 396.

Fort Fisher, Va. Action at, March 25, 1865.

Casualties. Returns of. Union Troops	302, 310
--------------------------------------	----------

See also Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. Reports of

Ayres, Romeyn B.	Hamblin, Joseph E.	Mandle, George G.
Binkley, Otho H.	Hill, Joseph C.	Parr, John G.
Cornyn, Charles M.	Hunsdop, Charles.	Snyder, James W.
Damon, George B.	Keller, J. Warren.	Troby, Angus S.
Edwards, Oliver.	Kennedy, Ronald A.	Warner, James M.
Flynd, Horace W.	Lincoln, Sumner H.	Williams, William G.
Grant, U. S.	McKinnis, Thomas W.

Also report of Smart, p. 697, and itineraries, pp. 100, 102, 104, 106.

Page.

Fort Monroe, Va.

Expedition into Westmoreland County from. See Westmoreland County, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe into, etc., March 11-13, 1865.

Expedition to Fredericksburg from. See Fredericksburg, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe to, March 5-8, 1865.

Fort Stedman, Va. Assault on, March 25, 1865.

Casualties. Returns of. Union Troops..... 70, 71, 175, 320, 325, 350, 358

Communications from

Abbot, Henry L..... 175

McLaughlen, Napoleon B..... 345

Parke, John G..... 345

Newspaper extract concerning..... 173

See also Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. Reports of

Abbot, Henry L.	Bly, Ralph.	Miller, Theodorico.
Adams, Samuel.	Evans, Ira L.	O'Brien, John.
Ager, George.	Faxon, William C.	Parke, John G.
Avery, Martin P.	Frederick, George W.	Patterson, Henry D.
Bangs, Frank D.	Gordon, John B.	Randall, George M.
Becker, Adolph.	Gould, Ezra P.	Renda, Samuel H.
Bingham, William H. H.	Grant, U. S.	Rice, Thomas C.
Booth, George.	Hartmann, John F.	Robinson, Gilbert P.
Boughton, John C.	Hentzelman, Mch T.	Roemer, Jacob.
Burch, John F.	Jones, Edward J.	Rogers, Edward W.
Carter, Joseph F.	Lee, Robert E.	Stone, Valentine H.
Casey, James H.	Lewis, Robert.	Tidball, John C.
Cooper, John R.	McClellan, Samuel A.	Tucker, Julius M.
Day, Albert A.	McLaughlen, Napoleon B.	Twitthell, Adelbert B.
Deans, John M.	Mathews, Thomas.	Wilcox, Orlando B.
Diven, Charles W.	Maxwell, Norman J.	Woomer, Christian.
Drown, A. A.	Meads, George G.	Wright, Joseph W. B.
Eaton, John B.

Also reports of McParlin, p. 609; Smart, p. 696; and Hucurrics, pp. 75, 97, 100, 107-109, 111, 116.

Foss, James A. Mentioned .....	661
Foster, Albert. Mentioned .....	453
Foster, Alfred H. Mentioned .....	1268
Foster, George W. Mentioned .....	297
Foster, John G. Mentioned .....	38, 39
Foster, Robert S.

Correspondence with

Dandy, George B..... 1194

Gibben, John..... 1183

Mentioned..... 129, 130, 132, 133, 138, 142, 577, 594, 610, 1160-1163, 1165, 1173-1176, 1178, 1179, 1182-1187, 1191-1197, 1200-1204, 1214, 1215, 1217, 1221, 1222, 1224-1226, 1236, 1237, 1239, 1240, 1242, 1243

Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865..... 1179, 1182

Fowler, Adam C. Mentioned..... 458

Fowler, Lyourgus C. Mentioned..... 1251

Fowler, Munroe. Mentioned..... 278

Fowler, William. Mentioned..... 816, 849

Fox, George L. Mentioned..... 170, 179

Fox, Gustavus V. Mentioned..... 41

Fox, William R. Mentioned..... 925, 934, 939, 1258

France, Demetrius J. Mentioned..... 1097

Franck, Charles E. Mentioned..... 1033

Franklin, Walter S. Mentioned..... 908, 917, 1108

Franklin, William B. Mentioned..... 36

	Page.
Franklin, W. Va. Scout from New Creek through Greenbush Gap to, Jan. 11-15, 1865. Report of Elias S. Troxel.....	451
Franks, John. Mentioned.....	1166
Franz, August. Mentioned.....	926, 945, 955
Fraser, John. Mentioned.....	78
Frazer, Alexander B. Mentioned.....	164
Frazier, Charles W. Mentioned.....	69
Fred, John. Mentioned.....	1032
Frederick, George W.
Mentioned.....	318, 350, 574, 1020, 1063, 1064
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	353
Fredericksburg, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe to, March 5-8, 1865.
Reports of
Allen, Littlebury W.....	544
Martin, Rawley W.....	544
Roberts, Samuel H.....	542
Freeborn, Benjamin. Mentioned.....	1012
Freeman, Abraham. Mentioned.....	551
Freese, John W. Mentioned.....	1158
Freeze, William. Mentioned.....	1001
French, David A. Mentioned.....	1271
French, David S. Mentioned.....	1003
French, George. Mentioned.....	286, 288, 290, 598, 808
French, George O. Mentioned.....	599, 969
French, William H. Mentioned.....	527
Fritz, John. Mentioned.....	959
Frock, Jonas. Mentioned.....	311
Front Royal, Va. Scout from near Winchester to, March 16, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Bunker , p. 530.
Fry, C. W. Mentioned.....	1271, 1279
Fry, William H. Mentioned.....	576
Frye, William H. H. Mentioned.....	1181
Fuller, Decatur. Mentioned.....	1087
Fuller, Henry D. Mentioned.....	1157
Fulmer, Michael. Mentioned.....	1094
Fulton, John. Mentioned.....	349
Funk, Augustus.
Mentioned.....	77, 80, 81, 196, 506, 738
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	203
Funk, West. Mentioned.....	286, 288, 570, 834, 881, 897, 898, 1258
Furey, William A. Mentioned.....	1209
Furney, Luther. Mentioned.....	448, 449
Gage, Charles F.
Mentioned.....	241, 790
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	246
Gale, John. Mentioned.....	1275
Gallager, John H.
Mentioned.....	567, 767
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	774
John C. Mentioned.....	599
Thomas S., jr. Mentioned.....	809, 1272
a. Mentioned.....	1022

	Page.
Gamble, William.
Correspondence with Christopher C. Augur.....	546, 1310
Mentioned.....	536, 1308
Reports of
Aldie and Middleburg, Va. Sent from Fairfax Court-House to, Feb. 15-16, 1865.....	461
Peach Grove, Va. Skirmish near, March 12, 1865.....	551
Gandy, Cornelius. Mentioned.....	1214, 1223
Gannon, Austin. Mentioned.....	458
Gansevoort, Henry S.
Reports of
Dranesville, Va. Skirmish near, March 18, 1865.....	554
Peach Grove, Va. Skirmish near, March 12, 1865.....	551
Garber, Asher W. Mentioned.....	1271
Garden, Hugh R. Mentioned.....	1269
Gardner, Charles N. Mentioned.....	1258
Gardner, James A. Mentioned.....	1088
Gardner, Robert J. Mentioned.....	1258
Gardner, William M. Mentioned.....	59
Garfield, Henry T. Mentioned.....	884
Garrard, Kenner. Mentioned.....	32
Garrett, John M. Mentioned.....	1320, 1321
Garrett, Richard H. Mentioned.....	1320, 1321
Garrett, Willie. Mentioned.....	1320
Garrett's Farm, near Port Royal, Va. Capture of J. Wilkes Booth and David E. Herold at. See Booth, J. Wilkes and David E. Herold. Capture of, at Garrett's Farm, near Port Royal, Va., April 20, 1865.
Garvin, Paul C. Mentioned.....	1187
Gary, Martin W. Mentioned.....	386, 390, 1145, 1150, 1275, 1278, 1284, 1296, 1301
Gault, Olney K.
Correspondence with Nelson B. Switzer.....	547
Mentioned.....	545, 546, 548
Report of skirmish near Flint Hill, Va., March 7, 1865.....	546
Gause, Harlan. Mentioned.....	879
Gawthrop, Henry. Mentioned.....	286
Gay, Joe. Mentioned.....	1311
Gaylord, Asher. Mentioned.....	69
Gaylord, Henry M. For correspondence as Acting Adjutant see Nelson B. Switzer.
Gaylord, Levi B. Mentioned.....	335, 338
Gealy, John H. Mentioned.....	1088
Gearlug, Samuel. Mentioned.....	996
Gearlug, William. Mentioned.....	515, 517, 518
Geddie, John B. Mentioned.....	566, 743
General Jessup, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	512
General Lyon, Steamer. Mentioned.....	131, 414
General McClellan, Steamer. Mentioned.....	144
Gentry, William T. Mentioned.....	796, 821, 822, 836
George, Benjamin. Mentioned.....	1269
George, Charles L. Mentioned.....	618
George Chase, Steamer. Mentioned.....	72

Georgia Troops. Mentioned.

Artillery, Heavy—Battalions: 12th, 334, 1271.

Artillery, Light—Battalions: 9th, 1271; Sumter, 1260; Sumter (Batteries)

A, 1261; B, 1078, 1270. Batteries: Macon, 1275.

Cavalry—Regiments: 7th, 1275.

Infantry—Battalions: 2d, 1273; 3d Sharpshooters, 1269; 10th, 1273;

18th, 916, 1258, 1271. Regiments: 2d, 1268; 3d, 1273; 4th, 1270; 7th,

8th, 9th, 1268; 10th, 1269; 11th, 1268; 12th, 1270; 13th, 1271; 14th,

1272; 15th, 1268; 16th, 1269; 17th, 1268; 18th, 1269; 20th, 1268; 21st,

1270; 22d, 1273; 24th, 1269; 26th, 183, 1271; 27th, 336, 1032; 31st,

335, 342, 380, 1033, 1271; 35th, 1272; 38th, 1271; 44th, 1270; 45th,

1272; 48th, 1273; 49th, 1272; 50th, 996, 1007, 1259, 1269; 51st, 53d, 1269; 59th, 1268; 60th, 61st, 1271; 64th, 1273; 76th [?], 1261.

Miscellaneous—Cobb's Legion, 1269; Phillips Legion, 1269.

German, Charles W. Mentioned ..... 930

Gerrish, Hiram F. Mentioned ..... 1176

Gessler, Bernhard.

Mentioned ..... 571

Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 ..... 904

Getchell, Edward L. Mentioned ..... 574, 1026, 1060

Getty, George W.

Assumes temporary command of 6th Army Corps ..... 3

Correspondence with

Grant, Lewis A. .... 972

Wright, Haratio G. .... 957

Mentioned ..... 61, 101–103, 155, 303, 304, 315, 571, 587, 902, 904–911, 913, 927,
941, 946, 950, 952–954, 956, 963, 967, 976, 984, 992, 993, 1009–1011, 1013, 1108

Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 ..... 953

Ghiselin, James T. Mentioned ..... 845

Gibbon, John.

Assumes command of 24th Army Corps ..... 3

Congratulatory Orders. Assault upon and capture of fortified house in front of Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865 ..... 1176

Correspondence with

Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A. .... 1176

Foster, Robert S. .... 1183

Osborn, Thomas O. .... 1183

Mentioned ..... 52, 54, 58, 61–64, 75, 83, 87, 120, 136–138,
201, 375–378, 577, 594, 597, 600, 604, 604, 605, 626, 629–632, 644, 654, 675–677,
688, 689, 697, 698, 730, 739, 762, 764, 766, 773, 774, 777, 782, 841, 852, 855, 883,
894, 904, 907, 911, 932, 935, 939, 944, 955, 979, 983, 991, 1010, 1012, 1109, 1120,
1121, 1161, 1163, 1165, 1191, 1176–1179, 1181, 1182, 1184, 1187, 1208, 1212,
1214–1216, 1224, 1225, 1228, 1238, 1246, 1249, 1250, 1253, 1256, 1263, 1264

Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 ..... 1173

Gibbons, William E. Mentioned ..... 1031

Gibbs, Alexander. Mentioned ..... 1136

Gibbs, Alfred.

Mentioned ..... 120, 123, 124, 476, 477,
480, 481, 485, 489–493, 575, 591, 1102, 1103, 1110, 1114, 1117, 1122–1127, 1157

Reports of

Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 ..... 1127

Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27–
March 28, 1865 ..... 499

as, John S. Mentioned ..... 1216

	Page.
Gibbs, Wesley. Mentioned .....	916, 925, 934, 1258
Gibson, Charles J. Mentioned .....	994, 999
Gibson, Thomas. (Lieutenant.) Mentioned .....	1254
Gibson, Thomas. (Major.)
Mentioned .....	462, 467
Report of expedition from Camp Averall (near Winchester) into Loudoun
County, Va., etc., Feb. 18-19, 1865 .....	463
Gifford, Benjamin. Mentioned .....	916, 925, 934, 937, 1259
Gifford, Haviland. Mentioned .....	237, 568, 776, 785-787
Gifford, Henry J. Mentioned .....	958
Gilbert, Thomas S. Mentioned .....	565
Gilder, Will. Mentioned .....	214
Giles, Henry. Mentioned .....	861
Gilkey, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	1088
Gilkyson, Stephen R. Mentioned .....	571
Gillen, Alvan C. Mentioned .....	34, 40, 41
Gillen, Edward. Mentioned .....	1209
Giller, Jacob. Mentioned .....	568
Gillespie, George L. Mentioned .....	805, 1104
Gillespie, Marion. Mentioned .....	311
Gillmore, Quinoy A. Mentioned .....	15, 18, 21
Gihner, Jeremy F. Mentioned .....	518
Gilmor, Harry W. Mentioned .....	456, 512
Gilmor, William. Mentioned .....	456
Gilmore, Charles D. Mentioned .....	271
Gilmore, William D. Mentioned .....	1083
Gilpatrick, Thomas W. Mentioned .....	961
Gist, Moses B. Mentioned .....	570
Givin, James.
Mentioned .....	580, 1237
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1210
Glazier, Theodore C.
Mentioned .....	580, 1237
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1210
Gleason, Charles W. Mentioned .....	599, 952
Gleason, James. Mentioned .....	758
Glenn, Edwin A. Mentioned .....	267, 569, 599, 800, 801, 816, 847-851
Glenny, William.
Mentioned .....	566, 719, 726, 740, 747
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	748
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	207
Glutz, Henry. Mentioned .....	543
Goddard, John D. B. Mentioned .....	598, 1168
Goddard, Robert H. I. Mentioned .....	919, 949, 1019, 1021
Goe, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1003
Goff, Nathan, jr. Mentioned .....	404
Goheen, Charles A. Mentioned .....	509
Goldman, Columbia. Mentioned .....	1319
Goldman, Julia A. Mentioned .....	1320
Goldsborough, Robert H. Mentioned .....	1297
Goldsborough, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	1000
Goldsmith, Sanford K. Mentioned .....	1025
Goldthwait, George F. Mentioned .....	1035

	Page.
Golliday, Samuel. Mentioned .....	1314
Goochland Court-House, Va. Skirmish at, March 11, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Report of Fitzhugh, p. 498, and Itinerary, p. 122.
Good, Thomas G. Mentioned .....	1251
Goode, John Thomas. Mentioned .....	1274
Goodenough, John W. Mentioned .....	920
Goodfellow, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	1034
Goodrich, Asa L. Mentioned .....	598
Goodsell, George. Mentioned .....	1022
Goodwin, Leonard P. Mentioned .....	507, 1136
Goodwin, Samuel. Mentioned .....	1314
Goodwin, Samuel G. Mentioned .....	1023, 1060
Goodyear, Ellsworth D. S. Mentioned .....	577, 1183, 1193, 1195, 1198
Goose Creek, Va. Skirmish at, March 23, 1865. See Loudoun County, Va. Scout into, from Harper's Ferry, March 20-25, 1865, etc.
Gordon, Abram M. E. Mentioned .....	794
Gordon, David. Mentioned .....	921, 934, 939
Gordon, George A. Mentioned .....	1115, 1316
Gordon, George H. Mentioned .....	1164
Gordon, George T. Mentioned .....	434
Report of expedition to, and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	435
Gordon, John B. Mentioned .....	149, 151, 173, 192, 195, 225, 316, 317, 321, 332, 381-392, 514, 519, 608, 609, 820, 1030, 1110, 1155, 1162, 1191, 1265, 1266, 1270, 1271, 1277, 1279, 1282, 1283, 1291, 1294, 1296-1298, 1302-1304
Reports of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	390, 391
Gordon, Ray T. Mentioned .....	508, 1137
Gottlieb, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1025
Gould, Charles G. Mentioned .....	959, 969, 973, 975, 1250
Gould, Ezra P. Mentioned .....	573
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1052
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	340
Gould, Seward F. Mentioned .....	566
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	732
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	211
Goulding, John. Mentioned .....	541
Governor Buckingham, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	453
Governor Chase, Steamer. Mentioned .....	166
Gowan, George W. Mentioned .....	573, 599, 1033, 1055, 1058
Gower, John W. Mentioned .....	1269
Gracie, Archibald, jr. Mentioned .....	389, 1300
Grafton, John. Mentioned .....	889
Gragg, Isaac P. Mentioned .....	1094
Graham, Archibald. Mentioned .....	1271
Graham, Charles K. Mentioned .....	61, 166, 167
Graham, James S. Mentioned .....	462
Graham, Robert F. Mentioned .....	438

	Page.
Graham, William W. Mentioned.....	568
Granger, Charles M. Mentioned.....	726
Granger, Gordon. Mentioned.....	35, 59
Grant, Charles E. Mentioned.....	920
Grant, Lewis A.
Correspondence with
Barber, Merritt.....	968
Getty, George W.....	972
Mentioned.....	101, 304, 571, 587, 954, 955, 957, 972, 975, 976
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	967
Grant, U. S.
Correspondence with
Banks, Nathaniel P.....	14
Butler, Benjamin F.....	14, 41
Collier, Charles F.....	1048
Hallock, Henry W.....	22
Hunter, David.....	28
Lee, Robert E.....	56-58
McGraw, Thomas.....	1262
Meade, George G.....	50, 600, 807-809, 826, 841
Ord, Edward O. C.....	50
Paul, D'Arcy.....	1018
Petersburg, Va., Mayor of.....	1048
Schofield, John M.....	44
Sheridan, Philip H.....	48, 50, 52, 53, 811, 1110, 1111
Sherman, William T.....	36, 37, 55
Terry, Alfred H.....	43
Thomas, George H.....	47, 49
Tucker, Jacob R.....	1262
Warren, Gouverneur K.....	828
Young, David W.....	1262
Mentioned.....	10, 61, 84, 94, 98, 99, 114, 120, 125, 136, 158, 159, 166, 168, 172, 318, 382, 394, 395, 402, 441, 474, 478-480, 484, 526, 527, 544, 545, 550, 557, 564, 600, 601, 603, 605, 611, 628, 638, 641, 642, 652, 675, 680, 681, 691, 709, 733, 751, 793, 805, 807, 809, 818, 825, 826, 828, 836, 895, 898, 907-909, 916, 1001, 1017, 1059, 1101-1103, 1107-1110, 1152, 1160-1163, 1170-1172, 1227, 1241, 1264, 1266, 1301, 1303, 1306, 1312
Report of operations of Armies of the United States, March, 1864-May, 1865.....	11
Grantsynn, William S. Mentioned.....	569, 872, 873
Gratigny, Laroisier H. Mentioned.....	1231
Gravelly Ford, on Hatcher's Run, Va. Skirmish at, April 2, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Mackenzie, Randall S. Sheridan, Philip H. West, Robert M. Meade, George G.
Also general report of Grant, p. 54, and itineraries, pp. 86, 129, 130.
Gravelly Run, Va.
Engagement near. See Lewis Farm, Va. Engagement at, near Gravelly Run, March 29, 1865.
Skirmishes on the line of. See Hatcher's Run and Gravelly Run, Va. Skirmishes on the line of, March 30, 1865.
Graves, Eugene E. Mentioned.....	1227, 1228
Gravlin, Frank. Mentioned.....	1034

	Page.
Gray, William C.
Mentioned .....	571, 922, 943
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	950
Green, E. H. Mentioned .....	515
Green, John. Mentioned .....	573, 1044
Green, Lord B. Mentioned .....	294, 895
Green, Milbrey. Mentioned .....	239
Greenfield, Andrew J.
Mentioned .....	474
Report of scout from New Creek to Monrofield, W. Va., March 14-17, 1865 ..	553
Greenland Gap, W. Va. Scout through. See Franklin, W. Va. Scout from New Creek through Greenland Gap to, Jan. 11-15, 1865.
Greenough, William S. Mentioned .....	1024, 1053
Greenwood, Henry. Mentioned .....	639
Gregg, Albert T. Mentioned .....	995, 1001
Gregg, David McM. Mentioned .....	30, 61, 68, 113, 600, 607, 618, 622
Gregg, J. Irvin.
Mentioned .....	68, 89, 92, 113, 114, 116, 117, 119, 149- 152, 154, 193, 253-258, 260, 266, 267, 280, 284, 293, 298, 307, 308, 381, 382, 576, 592, 601, 608, 618-622, 681, 721, 1100, 1102, 1103, 1107, 1109, 1110, 1112, 1119, 1123, 1141-1143, 1145, 1146, 1148, 1150-1152, 1154, 1155, 1158, 1263, 1303
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	365
Gregg, John. Mentioned .....	1268
Gregg, Theodore. Mentioned .....	573
Gregg, Thomas E. Mentioned .....	1274
Gregg, William M. Mentioned .....	574, 1050, 1060
Gregory, Edgar M.
Mentioned ....	88, 569, 584, 796, 801, 816, 839, 840, 846, 848-851, 853, 855, 856, 858, 862
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	853
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	270
Gregory, Oliver C. Mentioned .....	1186, 1187, 1190, 1191
Gribben, James H. Mentioned .....	1259
Grierson, Benjamin H. Mentioned .....	40
Griffin, Charles.
Correspondence with
Bartlett, Joseph J. ....	804
Bowerman, Richard N. ....	283
Gwyn, James .....	286
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	271, 281, 804, 806, 811, 831
Mentioned .....	53-58, 63, 65, 86-88, 91, 95, 97, 99, 125, 128, 133, 155, 190, 224, 225, 227, 251, 253-261, 264-268, 271, 273, 277, 278, 281, 284, 298, 568, 569, 584, 601, 602, 605, 611, 617, 618, 620, 629, 631, 634, 639, 645, 654-656, 676, 680-682, 697, 699, 700, 714, 715, 719, 725, 729, 733, 735, 753, 767, 775, 778, 783, 786, 793, 795, 796, 798-817, 819-827, 830-813, 845, 847-851, 853, 854, 861, 869, 880, 890-892, 896, 897, 899, 905, 911, 913, 907, 1085, 1100, 1101, 1103, 1105-1107, 1109, 1117, 1119, 1121, 1124-1126, 1130, 1131, 1135, 1138, 1140, 1162, 1163, 1208, 1225, 1235, 1244, 1248, 1255, 1262, 1264, 1299, 1300
Relieves Gouverneur K. Warren of command of 5th Army Corps .....	587
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	838, 840, 845
Griffin, Charles E. Mentioned .....	1271
Griffin, Henry J. Mentioned .....	1050, 1060
Griffin, L. Mentioned .....	1305

	Page.
Griffin, Simon G.
Mentioned .....	72, 107, 110, 573, 574, 580, 641, 1016-1020, 1054, 1057, 1059, 1062, 1075, 1079, 1092, 1096
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1053, 1058
Griffin, Thomas S. Mentioned .....	1088
Griffin, William. Mentioned .....	272
Griggs, George K. Mentioned .....	1268
Griggs, James H. Mentioned .....	709
Grill, Frederick. Mentioned .....	577
Grimes, Bryan. Mentioned .....	389, 1270, 1277
Grindlay, James. Mentioned .....	569, 585, 871-873, 1259
Groner, Virginius D. Mentioned .....	1273
Grover, George W. Mentioned .....	925
Grubb, Isaac J. Mentioned .....	1088
Grubb, James W. Mentioned .....	535
Gruff, Charles. Mentioned .....	930
Guild, Charles E. Mentioned .....	579
Guild, Harlow M. Mentioned .....	455
Gunderman, Peter S. Mentioned .....	924
Gwin, James. Mentioned .....	473
Gwyn, James.
Correspondence with
Griffin, Charles .....	280
Wurwin, Gouverneur K .....	284, 285
Mentioned .....	66, 93, 253, 257-264, 277, 279, 570, 585, 796, 830, 833, 840, 850, 868, 869, 870, 892
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	875, 876
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	283
Hachenberg, George E. Mentioned .....	599
Hack, Lester G. Mentioned .....	957, 960, 970, 973, 975, 1259
Hackett, Henry A. Mentioned .....	884
Hadley, Charles A. Mentioned .....	864
Hadwick, Raine A. Mentioned .....	1023
Hagan, H. S., Steamer. Mentioned .....	144
Haggerty, Asel. Mentioned .....	606, 1259
Hagood, James R. Mentioned .....	1268
Hagood, Johnson. Mentioned .....	435, 436, 438
Haight, Sidney. Mentioned .....	1032
Haines, William. Mentioned .....	146
Halberstadt, Alfred M. Mentioned .....	491, 1127
Hale, Edward J., jr. Mentioned .....	1286
Hale, Martin G. Mentioned .....	349
Hale, Morton F. Mentioned .....	1127
Half-Moon Battery, N. C. Skirmish at. See Myrtle Sound, N. C. Reconnaissance to, etc., Jan. 19, 1865.
Hall, Austin H. Mentioned .....	972
Hall, Charles. Mentioned .....	458
Hall, Henry C. Mentioned .....	146, 1157
Hall, Houston. Mentioned .....	448
Hall, James F. Mentioned .....	576, 1165, 1166, 1224
Hall, John D. Mentioned .....	995, 1001
Hall, John T. Mentioned .....	926, 945

	Page.
Hall, Josiah.
Mentioned .....	575
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1140
Hall, Robert M. Mentioned .....	579
Halleck, Henry W.
Assignment to command .....	2
Assumes command of Military Division of the James .....	2
Correspondence with
Grant, U. S. ....	22
Sheridan, Philip H. ....	463
Mentioned .....	22, 27, 102, 103, 105, 660
Relinquishes command of Military Division of the James .....	3
Halliday, Frank S. Mentioned .....	924, 941, 951
Hallorn, Michael. Mentioned .....	311
Halsted, George B. Mentioned .....	797, 856
Halsted, Richard F. Mentioned .....	908
Ham, James. Mentioned .....	599, 1124
Hanberg, Charles. Mentioned .....	1164, 1165
Hamblin, Joseph E.
Correspondence with
Harper, John .....	939
Olcott, Egbert .....	936, 938
Wheaton, Frank .....	931
Mentioned .....	67, 102, 298, 299, 301, 571, 587, 604, 910-918, 920, 925, 928, 931, 932, 935, 940, 941, 946, 950, 1018, 1062-1064, 1090, 1092, 1114, 1179
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	931
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	300
Hamilton, Dwight. Mentioned .....	450
Hamilton, Edgar A. Mentioned .....	372
Hamilton, Isaac T. Mentioned .....	227
Hamilton, Theodore B. Mentioned .....	571
Hamilton, Va. Skirmish near, March 21, 1865. See Loudoun County, Va. Scout into, from Harper's Ferry, March 20-25, 1865, etc.
Hamlin, James H.
Mentioned .....	566, 747
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	753
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	210
Hamlink, Derrick F. Mentioned .....	732
Hammer, Ezekiah. Mentioned .....	1210
Hammon, Amos. Mentioned .....	1031
Hampton, Wade. Mentioned .....	384, 1140
Hancock, John. Mentioned .....	1251
Hancock, Winfield S.
Assignments to command .....	2, 3
Correspondence with
Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A. ....	524
Emory, William H. ....	1326
Torbert, Alfred T. A. ....	529
Mentioned .....	17, 18, 23-26, 30, 31, 50, 515, 522, 524, 526, 527, 529, 537, 539, 1264, 1309, 1326
Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 ....	524
Hand, Charles H. Mentioned .....	286
Hanner, Albon W. Mentioned .....	422

	Page.
Hanover Court-House, Va. Skirmish at, March 15, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of Devin, p. 493; Stagg, p. 496.
Hardaway, Robert A. Mentioned.....	1271, 1279
Hardenbergh, Jacob B.
Mentioned.....	574
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1096
Harder, Steamer. Mentioned.....	543
Harding, Joseph. Mentioned.....	931
Harding, Joseph F. Mentioned.....	1312-1314
Harding, Merritt S. Mentioned.....	1241
Harding, Oliver P.
Mentioned.....	403, 419, 420
Report of expedition to, and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	419
Hardman, George H. Mentioned.....	288
Hardwick, Louis W. Mentioned.....	1031
Hardwicke, William W. Mentioned.....	1271
Hardy, John. Mentioned.....	327, 328, 1023
Hare, Jacob. Mentioned.....	1314
Harlow, Calvin F. Mentioned.....	335, 338
Harman, Amzi D. Mentioned.....	1064, 1065, 1259
Harman, Asher W. Mentioned.....	1276, 1279
Harman, Michael G. Mentioned.....	522
Harman, William H. Mentioned.....	517
Harmony, John H. Mentioned.....	1160
Harr, William A.
Mentioned.....	572, 1009, 1010
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1013
Harper, John. (Captain.) Mentioned.....	69, 366
Harper, John. (Lieutenant-Colonel.)
Correspondence with Joseph E. Hamblin.....	939
Mentioned.....	571, 920, 931-933
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	938
Harper, William. Mentioned.....	1143, 1146, 1147
Harper, Wilson. Mentioned.....	1271
Harper's Ferry, W. Va.
Affair near, Feb. 3, 1865. Report of Marcus A. Reno.....	455
Scout from, into Loudoun County, Va. See Loudoun County, Va. Scout into, from Harper's Ferry, March 20-25, 1865, etc.
Harriet De Ford, Steamer.
Capture of, near Fair Haven, Chesapeake Bay, Md., April 4, 1865. Report of Thaddeus Fitzhugh.....	1305
Mentioned.....	1306, 1307
Harriman, Samuel.
Correspondence with William J. Bolton.....	1044
Mentioned.....	70, 108, 318, 324, 325, 345, 347, 362, 573, 588, 1016, 1017, 1021, 1039, 1049, 1046, 1061, 1063, 1064, 1069, 1076
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1042
Harriman, Walter. Mentioned.....	107, 574, 589, 1056
Harrington, Ephraim W. Mentioned.....	959
Harris, Arnold.
Correspondence with Samuel H. Roberts.....	550
Mentioned.....	543, 550

	Page
Harris, James. Mentioned .....	1021
Harris, Nathaniel H. Mentioned .....	389, 1273, 1278, 1281
Harris, Thomas M.
Mentioned. 129, 133, 135, 136, 579, 595, 904, 1161, 1174, 1179, 1180, 1203, 1214-1216, 1218
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1221, 1223
Harris, William T. Mentioned .....	1036
Harrison, George W. Mentioned .....	508
Harrisonburg, Va. Skirmish at, March 5, 1865. See Winchester, Va. Movement of convey of prisoners from Waynesborough to, March 3-8, 1865, etc.
Harrop, Thomas. Mentioned .....	895
Harry, William H. Mentioned .....	1003
Hart, Isaac C. Mentioned .....	1211
Hart, James. Mentioned .....	547
Hart, James H. Mentioned .....	508, 1146, 1148, 1149
Hart, Thomas B. Mentioned .....	508, 1006
Harter, Elem. Mentioned .....	1003
Hartford, Henry.
Mentioned .....	238, 239, 508, 773, 777, 788-790
Reports of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	244, 245
Hartley, James. Mentioned .....	1094
Hartnuff, John F.
Correspondence with
McLaughlin, Napoleon B. ....	345
Parke, John G. ....	315, 1005
Mentioned. ....	68-70, 107, 108, 110, 111, 193, 315-324, 333, 339, 341, 343, 350, 351, 353-355, 574, 590, 618, 632, 1015, 1016, 1018-1020, 1027, 1037, 1039-1041, 1043-1046, 1051, 1054, 1055, 1059, 1061, 1066-1070, 1095
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1061
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	344, 345
Hartsuff, George L.
Congratulatory Orders. Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865 .....	1172
Correspondence with
Ferrero, Edward .....	1171
Weltzel, Godfrey .....	1171
Mentioned. ....	62, 63, 145, 172, 576, 593, 597, 601, 603, 604, 607, 671, 1172, 1227
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1170
Harvey, Harry. Mentioned .....	509
Harvey, Thomas F. Mentioned .....	1310
Harwood, Franklin.
Correspondence with James C. Duane .....	159
Mentioned. ....	61, 157-159, 161, 162, 505, 612
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	650, 651
Hasbrouck, Henry C. Mentioned .....	579
Haskell, Alexander C.
Correspondence with Richard S. Ewell .....	479
Mentioned .....	1275, 1278
Haskell, John C. Mentioned .....	1269, 1279
Haskell, Llewellyn F.
Mentioned .....	580, 1229, 1237
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1238
Hassett, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	922, 933, 937
Hassinger, David S. Mentioned .....	923, 944

Hastings, James. Mentioned .....	Page. 492
Hastings, Smith H. Mentioned .....	120, 575, 1127
Haswell, Alvah R. Mentioned .....	471
Hatch, John P. Mentioned .....	38
Hatcher's Run, Va.

Battle of, Feb. 5-7, 1865.

Casualties. Returns of Union Troops ..... 63-69, 194, 240, 257, 367

Contributions from

Bowerman, Richard N. ....	283
Cope, Emma B. ....	259
Griffin, Charles .....	281
Gwyn, James .....	285, 286
Locke, Frederick T. ....	257
Meads, George G. ....	253
Pearson, Alfred L. ....	273
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	269, 271, 272, 278, 281, 282, 284
Withrop, Frederick .....	281

Congratulatory Orders. Humphreys. .... 104

Sketches .....

See also Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. Reports of

Ayres, Romayn B.	Kearns, Michael.	Phares, Francis E.
Bowerman, Richard N.	Knowles, Oliver B.	Price, Francis.
Bright, Aaron, jr.	La Point, George W.	Ramsay, John.
Burr, Allen L.	Lee, Robert E.	Rhee, Edmund.
Carrle, William A.	Leahwood, Abram I.	Robison, John K.
Carls, Arthur R.	McAlister, Robert.	Roder, John W.
De Trebriant, Regis.	McFar, James P.	Schmek, George von.
Dygert, Charles H.	Mansfield, James F.	Schmoecker, John.
Fitzhugh, Robert H.	Meads, George G.	Shenker, Henry J.
Glenney, William.	Miles, Nelson A.	Siebel, Herath G.
Gordon, John B.	Mintzer, William M.	Smith, Edward S.
Gould, Seward F.	Moore, Samuel A.	Smyth, Thomas A.
Grigg, J. Evelyn.	Morrow, Henry A.	Spaulding, Joseph W.
Gwyn, James.	Mott, Gershom.	Spencer, T. Rush.
Hamlin, James H.	Mulholand, St. Clair A.	Stover, John H.
Hartford, Henry.	Murphy, Malheur.	Warner Clement R.
Hartman, John P.	Olmsted, William A.	Warren, Gouverneur K.
Hazard, John G.	O'Neill, Henry.	Warren, Martin N.
Imboden, Frank.	Parke, John G.	West, George W.
Humphreys, Andrew A.	Pearson, Alfred L.	Wheaton, Frank.
Jewell, James A.	Peck, William R.	Young, Samuel B. M.

Also reports of McParlin, p. 603; Marsh, p. 621, and itineraries, pp. 74, 77, 81, 82, 81, 85, 88-93, 95, 96, 98, 100, 102, 113, 115, 116, 118, 119.

Skirmish at Gravelly Ford, on. See Gravelly Ford, on Hatcher's Run, Va. Skirmish at, April 2, 1865.

Skirmish on the Vaughan Road, near. See Vaughan Road, Va. Skirmish on, near Hatcher's Run, March 29, 1865.

Hatcher's Run and Gravelly Run, Va. Skirmishes on the line of, March 30, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.

Reports of

Crafts, Volcano A.	MacDougall, Clinton D.	Scott, George W.
Hamlin, James H.	Meads, George G.	Smart, Charles.
Humphreys, Andrew A.	Mintzer, William M.	Stackton, William A. P.
Humphreys, Francis R.	Nugent, Robert.	Stanton, John F.
Husk, Lewis W.	Olmsted, William A.	Warren, Gouverneur K.
Ives, Lucius H.	Ramsay, John.	Wilder, I. Hart.
Lane, Nathaniel P.	Schaffir, George W.	White, Charles K.

Also reports of Grant, p. 53, Spencer, p. 264, and itineraries, pp. 136, 142.

	Page.
Hatcher's Run, or Boydton Road, Va. Action at, March 31, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Birke, Denis F.	Scott, George W.
Gibson, John.	Smith, James J.
Gould, Seward F.	Stockton, William A. F.
Karples, Henry M.	Wildor, J. Hart.
Also Itineraries , pp. 84, 85, 96, 97, 100, 133, 142.
Hatfield, Samuel F. Mentioned .....	167, 669
Hathaway, Aaron D. Mentioned .....	1034
Havron, John. Mentioned .....	1259
Hawkes, Henry F. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1234
Hawkins, Frank. Mentioned .....	1193, 1195, 1196
Hawkins, Gardner C. Mentioned .....	966, 1259
Hawley, Michael J. Mentioned .....	294, 295, 895
Hawthorn, Harris B. Mentioned .....	925, 934, 937, 938
Haycock, Willis M. Mentioned .....	1084
Hayden, Augustine F. Mentioned .....	452
Haydn, Thomas L. Mentioned .....	908
Hayes, Joseph. Mentioned .....	569, 585
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	870, 872, 873
Hayes, Rutherford B. Mentioned .....	525
Haynes, Asbury F. Mentioned .....	606, 1259
Hays, John W. Mentioned .....	1003
Hays, William. Correspondence with Andrew A. Humphreys .....	757
Mentioned .....	75, 565, 567, 581-583, 603, 604, 627, 628, 635-637, 640, 661, 675-681, 686-688, 690, 693, 695-701, 707, 708, 712, 715, 737, 759, 760, 762, 763, 766, 767, 776, 777, 781, 785, 790-792, 794, 795, 1075
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	757
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	213
Haysman, Theodore W. Mentioned .....	191
Hayward, Joseph W. Mentioned .....	1184
Hazard, John G. Mentioned .....	63, 85, 194, 568, 584, 627, 661, 685-687, 690, 695, 697, 699, 702, 706
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	790
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	249, 250
Hazelton, James B. Mentioned .....	297
Heald, John A. Mentioned .....	598, 1158
Hean, B. Frank. Mentioned .....	571, 959
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	964
Heap, David P. Mentioned .....	157-159, 161
Hearn, Maurice O. Mentioned .....	926, 944
Heasley, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1076, 1081
Hébert, Louis. Mentioned .....	437
Heckman, Charles A. Mentioned .....	139
Hedges, Seth N. Mentioned .....	1076
Hedges, William R. Report of expedition from Yorktown to West Point, Va., Feb. 23-24, 1865 .....	472

Heebner, James B. Mentioned .....	Page.
Hefflebower, Edward. Mentioned .....	1008
Heggart, Robert. Mentioned .....	1310
Heichhold, Charles P. ....	221, 597, 680, 757, 765
Mentioned .....	1229, 1230
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1230
Heintzelman, Misch T. ....
Mentioned .....	348, 350, 574, 1016, 1028, 1061, 1061, 1067
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	352
Helm, John. Mentioned .....	505
Hondricks, Israel W. Mentioned .....	69
Hendrickson, Wellington. Mentioned .....	313
Henry, J. Edwin. Mentioned .....	599
Henry, Robert. Mentioned .....	1152, 1154
Herbert, Arthur. Mentioned .....	1268, 1277
Herold, David E. ....
Capture of. See Booth, J. Wilkes and David E. Herold. Capture of, etc., April 26, 1865.
Mentioned .....	1310-1321
Herrell, Henry A. Mentioned .....	1271
Herring Charles P. Mentioned .....	271, 272
Herzog, Charles. Mentioned .....	639
Heslop, Frederick W. Mentioned .....	115
Hess, Frank W. ....
Mentioned .....	191, 192
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	163*
Heth, Henry. Mentioned .....	149, 152, 196
383, 385-387, 389, 391, 808, 809, 981, 993, 994, 1250, 1272, 1278, 1287, 1300
Hewett, James H. H. Mentioned .....	1204
Heydlauff, John Gottlieb. Mentioned .....	272
Hick, William H. Mentioned .....	1148, 1150, 1152
Hickerson, Francis G. ....
Mentioned .....	577
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1197
Hickey, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1167, 1169
Hickman, Baynton J. ....
Mentioned .....	571
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	948
Hickock, Harris S. Mentioned .....	198
Hicks, George A. Mentioned .....	170
Hicks, Julius C. Mentioned .....	458
Hicks, Stephen G. Mentioned .....	33
Higby, Charles. Mentioned .....	1259
Higginson, James J. Mentioned .....	561
High Bridge, Va. ....
Action near, April 6, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Curtis, William B. ....	Lee, Fitzhugh. ....	Scott, Henry B. ....
Harris, Thomas M. ....	Ord, Edward O. C. ....	Turner, John W. ....
Lathrop, Joseph H. ....	Polter, Andrew. ....

Also Itineraries, pp. 134, 135.

High Bridge, Va.—Continued.

Engagement at, April 7, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., March 29–April 9, 1865. Reports of Aihema, J. Webb.	Hammonds, Andrew A.	Page, Charles.

Baldwin, Francis W. H.	Hyde, John McK.	Panlleton, William N.
Barlow, Francis C.	Karpis, Henry M.	Phares, Francis E.
Chew, Henry F.	Lidell, John A.	Puckney, Anthony.
Crofts, William A.	MacDougall, Clinton D.	Shurt, Charles.
Egbert, George T.	McFarlin, Thomas A.	Spaulding, Joseph W.
Goold, Seward F.	Mead, George G.	Wadner, John R.
Hazard, John G.	Miles, Nelson A.	Woodhull, Daniel.
Huquer, George F.	Olmsad, William A.

Also Itineraries, pp. 76, 78.

Highhill, Israel. Mentioned .....	960
Highland, Patrick. Mentioned .....	1259
Highland County, Va.
Expedition through. See Poahuntas and Pendleton counties, W. Va., and Highland County, Va. Expedition through, June 1–13, 1865.
Scout through. See Randolph and Pocahontas counties, W. Va., and Bath and Highland counties, Va. Scout through, April 15–23, 1865.
Highland Light, Steamer. Mentioned .....	1306
Hileman, John M. Mentioned .....	895
Hill, Albert J. Mentioned .....	1127
Hill, Ambrose P. Mentioned .....	19, 151, 152, 192, 195, 225, 381, 383, 385–387, 389, 608, 809, 977, 979, 993, 1008, 1272, 1278, 1280, 1289
Hill, Caleb F. Mentioned .....	1278
Hill, George H.
Mentioned .....	578
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 .....	1210
Hill, James H. Mentioned .....	420, 430, 436, 441
For correspondence as A. A. G., see William H. C. Whiting.
Hill, Jonathan A. Mentioned .....	577, 1183, 1192–1200
Hill, Joseph C.
Mentioned .....	572, 998
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 .....	1000
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1–April 3, 1865 .....	310
Hill, W. T. Mentioned .....	1268
Hindes, George W. Mentioned .....	578
Hindmarsh, Henry E. Mentioned .....	915, 919
Hine, Orrin E. Mentioned .....	157, 158, 160, 647
Hinkleman, William. Mentioned .....	805
Hinman, Stephen N. Mentioned .....	508, 1137
Hurichs, Oscar. Mentioned .....	519
Hitchcock, Henry K. Mentioned .....	1180
Hiteshow, Philip L. Mentioned .....	1253, 1254
Hixson, William C. Mentioned .....	766
Hobbs, George W. Mentioned .....	880
Hobensack, John. Mentioned .....	681
Hobson, Edwin L. Mentioned .....	1270, 1277
Hobson, William. Mentioned .....	237, 538, 776, 785–787
Hodges, William T. Mentioned .....	598, 1168
Hodgkins, William H. Mentioned .....	347, 349, 354, 355, 1027
Hoff, Esak W. Mentioned .....	741
Hoff, James V. Mentioned .....	924
Hoffman, Franklin A. Mentioned .....	310, 352, 1028

	Page.
Hoffman, Henry. Mentioned .....	1259
Hoffman, John S. Mentioned .....	381, 390
Hoffman, Thomas W. Mentioned .....	348, 1028, 1064
Hofmann, J. William. Mentioned .....	291, 292
Hogan, Michael K. Mentioned .....	1021
Hogan, William D. Mentioned .....	669, 672
Hogeland, Henry. Mentioned .....	455
Hoke, Robert F. Mentioned .....	19, 145, 383, 385, 396, 399, 401, 405, 431-433, 446, 820
Holbrook, James. Mentioned .....	360
Holden, Albert M. Mentioned .....	454
Holden, Giles H. Mentioned .....	1027
Holliday, John W. Mentioned .....	579, 1223
Hollins, George N. Mentioned .....	477, 503
Hollis, Abijah. Mentioned .....	1027
Holloway, William. Mentioned .....	884
Holman, Silas A. Mentioned .....	615, 629, 630, 908
Holmes, Albert B. Mentioned .....	214, 761
Holmes, James K. Mentioned .....	240, 241
Holmes, John. Mentioned .....	543
Holmes, Joseph G. Mentioned .....	574
Holmes, William T. Mentioned .....	1259
Holston, William F. H. Mentioned .....	328
Holt, Bolling H. Mentioned .....	1272
Holt, Erastus D. Mentioned .....	572, 598, 654
Holt, Robert. Mentioned .....	924
Holway, Daniel N. Mentioned .....	1022
Homan, Conrad. Mentioned .....	334, 338
Hood, John B. Mentioned .....	32, 36-40, 44, 45, 47
Hook, J. W. Mentioned .....	540
Hooker, Edward. Mentioned .....	543, 550
Hooker, Edward D. Mentioned .....	948
Hooker, George W. Mentioned .....	1213
Hooker, Joseph.
Assignment to command .....	3
Mentioned .....	32
Hooper, William B. Mentioned .....	1153, 1259
Hoover, John F. Mentioned .....	542
Hoover, William. Mentioned .....	895
Hopkins, Archibald.
Mentioned .....	571, 923, 944
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865....	945, 947, 948
Hopkins, Charles F. Mentioned .....	1273
Hopkins, Henry. Mentioned .....	239, 248
Hopkins, Mark. Mentioned .....	766, 768, 775
Hopper, George F.
Mentioned .....	567
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865....	771
Hopper, Milo H. Mentioned .....	743
Horan, James. Mentioned .....	1033
Horn, John D. Mentioned .....	1204
Horrell, Napoleon J. Mentioned .....	568, 797, 800, 820, 836
Horton, ———. Mentioned .....	530
Horton, Anthony B. Mentioned .....	919, 1014
Horton, Jere. Mentioned .....	1216

	Page.
Horton, Joseph H. Mentioned .....	237, 568, 785, 787
Hoskinson, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	999
Hospitals (Union). Records of, of Army of the Potomac.
January-February, 1865 .....	619, 620, 623, 624
January 1-June 30, 1865 .....	608, 614
February-April, 1865 .....	616-618
March, 1865 .....	622-635
March 27-June 30, 1865 .....	635
April, 1865 .....	703-706
Hotchkiss, DeWitt C. Mentioned .....	417
Hotchkiss, Jed.
Journal of. Expedition from Winchester to front of Petersburg, Va.,
Feb. 27-Mar. 28, 1865 .....	510
Mentioned .....	557
Hotchkiss, Newton J. Mentioned .....	144
Hough, John S. Mentioned .....	598
Houghton, Albert C. Mentioned .....	508, 1136, 1137
Houghton, Charles H. Mentioned .....	334, 341, 1024
Houlton, William M. Mentioned .....	1259
Honse, James H. Mentioned .....	940
Housel, Wilson. Mentioned .....	924
Houston, Frank.
Mentioned .....	214, 567, 761
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-Apr. 3, 1865 .....	217
Hovey, Walter P. Mentioned .....	1195
Howard, Conway R. Mentioned .....	521
Howard, Edward R. Mentioned .....	920, 929
Howard, Henry W. Mentioned .....	1091, 1095
Howard, Jacob M. Mentioned .....	1172
Howard, James. Mentioned .....	1209, 1259
Howard, John B. Mentioned .....	1161, 1232
Howard, John S. Mentioned .....	599
Howard, Ooran H. Report of expedition from Winchester in front of
Petersburg, Va., Feb. 27-March 28, 1865 .....	483
Howard, Oliver O. Mentioned .....	32
Howe, S. Augustus. Mentioned .....	572
Howe, Shesh B. Mentioned .....	575, 599
Howe, William H. Mentioned .....	335, 338
Howell, Charles W.
Mentioned .....	157-161, 773
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	655
Howell, Isaac. Mentioned .....	930
Howell, John H. Mentioned .....	579
Howes, William O. Mentioned .....	864
Howland, Ten Eyck C. Mentioned .....	508, 935, 937
Hoysradt, Nicholas. Mentioned .....	1097
Hoyt, George. Mentioned .....	417
H. S. Hagan, Steamer. Mentioned .....	144
Hubbard, Albert A. Mentioned .....	1003
Hubbard, Augustus M. Mentioned .....	599
Hubbard, James. Mentioned .....	67, 298-300, 574, 920, 931-933
Hubbard, William H. Mentioned .....	972
Hubbell, Augustus. Mentioned .....	761
Hubbell, William S. For correspondence as A. A. G., see Samuel H. Roberts,

	Page.
Huckins, George W.
Mentioned.....	417, 429, 430
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865 .....	429
Hudson, Edward McK. Mentioned .....	610
Hudson, Horace. Mentioned .....	577
Hudson, William. Mentioned .....	1153
Hueston, Edgar J. Mentioned .....	204
Hufty, Baldwin.
Correspondence with William H. Penrose.....	929
Mentioned .....	571, 919, 928
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	928
Huger, Frank. Mentioned .....	1269, 1279
Huggins, Thomas. Mentioned.....	214
Hughes, ———. Mentioned.....	530
Hughes, John N. Mentioned .....	569
Hughes, Robert P. Mentioned .....	1187, 1191, 1192
Hughes, Samuel L. Mentioned .....	569
Hughes, William. Mentioned .....	1151, 1153
Hughey, John. Mentioned.....	1259
Hulser, Oscar F. Mentioned.....	566
Humphrey, William H. Mentioned.....	970
Humphreys, Andrew A.
Congratulatory address. Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	686
Congratulatory Orders. Battle of Hatcher's Run, Va., Feb. 5-7, 1865 .....	194
Correspondence with
Barlow, Francis G.....	688
Hays, William .....	757
Meade, George G .....	688, 815
Parke, John G .....	319
Warren, Gouverneur K.....	803, 804, 806, 811, 813, 823
Mentioned.....	51-56, 61-63, 69, 71, 74, 75, 77, 79, 83, 85, 86, 88- 90, 97, 100, 102, 107, 110, 128, 129, 133, 136, 149-152, 154-158, 161-164, 191, 194-196, 213, 221, 227, 238, 239, 254, 255, 258-260, 267-271, 273-277, 292, 293, 297, 298, 308, 315, 319, 344, 381, 382, 560, 582, 590, 600-608, 610, 611, 616-618, 626, 627, 629-632, 634, 638, 642-644, 651-657, 660, 661, 673-675, 680-682, 684- 688, 696, 707, 710, 719, 730, 735, 750, 751, 758, 767, 773, 778, 797-800, 802-815, 817-820, 823, 827, 840, 841, 846, 853, 862, 863, 864, 899, 904-906, 908, 911, 913, 914, 916, 950, 978, 980, 998, 1041, 1105-1108, 1125, 1138, 1160, 1165, 1166, 1173, 1174, 1179, 1188, 1189, 1198, 1201, 1204, 1207, 1214, 1224, 1226, 1235, 1284
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	673, 675
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	191
Humphreys, Benjamin G. Mentioned .....	388, 1269, 1277, 1284
Humphreys, Charles. Mentioned.....	1683
Humphreys, Edward J. Mentioned .....	349, 354, 1037
Humphreys, Francis R. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29- April 9, 1865.....	720
Hunsdon, Charles.
Mentioned .....	571, 968, 971, 973
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	307
Hunt, Corporal. Mentioned .....	179
Hunt, Daniel J. Mentioned.....	1036

	Page.
Hunt, Henry J.
Correspondence with
Abbot, Henry J. ....	175
Meade, George G. ....	176
Mentioned .....	61-63, 172, 565, 584, 590, 600, 1301, 1374
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	659
Hunt, Isaac F. Mentioned .....	1272
Hunter, Charles A. Mentioned .....	1259
Hunter, David.
Correspondence with U. S. Grant .....	28
Mentioned .....	21-23, 25-28
Hunter, Thomas T. Mentioned .....	908
Hunton, Eppa. Mentioned .....	1136, 1263, 1277, 1287-1289, 1298, 1300, 1304
Hupp, George C. Mentioned .....	1310
Hurd, Charles H. Mentioned .....	1216
Hurdley, Daniel W. Mentioned .....	748
Hurlbut, George A. Mentioned .....	457, 1137
Hurlbut, Stephen A. Mentioned .....	34
Husk, Lewis W.
Mentioned .....	203, 566
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	741
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	205
Husted, David B. Mentioned .....	924
Hutton, Elfin. Mentioned .....	1312
Hutton, Henry H. Mentioned .....	204, 295, 895
Huyman, Theodore. Mentioned .....	329, 1074, 1090, 1091
Hyatt, James. Mentioned .....	1092
Hyde, George H. Mentioned .....	947
Hyde, John McE.
Mentioned .....	566
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	738
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	204
Hyde, Joseph.
Mentioned .....	566
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	742
Hyde, Thomas W.
Mentioned .....	104, 304, 572, 587, 954, 955, 957, 958, 963
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	975
Hyman, Joseph H. Mentioned .....	809, 1272, 1278
Iokes, George W. Mentioned .....	996, 999
Ide, John S., Steamer. Mentioned .....	1318, 1321
Ilgenfritz, Charles H. Mentioned .....	1038, 1064
Illinois Troops. Mentioned.
Cavalry— Regiments : 8th, 457, 461, 468, 536, 541, 542, 1308-1310.
Infantry— Regiments : 23d, 134, 135, 578, 595, 1219, 1220; 39th, 577, 591, 1183, 1185-1188, 1191, 1192.
Inboden, John D. Mentioned .....	517-519, 535, 536
Indiana Troops. Mentioned.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 564, 581, 640; 3d, 482.
Infantry— Regiments : 13th, 398, 404, 405, 416, 417, 421, 422, 426, 427; 20th, 61, 228-232, 568, 583, 693, 706, 776, 778, 781, 783.
Ingalls, Rufus. Mentioned .....	22
Ingalls, William. Mentioned .....	1076

	Page.
Inwood, Henry C. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	537
Iredell, Jonathan P. Mentioned .....	1008
Ireland, Jerome B. Mentioned .....	598, 1194
Ironsides, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	437
Irvin, Henry. Mentioned .....	1034
Irving, Charles R. Mentioned .....	1305
Itineraries. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.
Ivers, Albert. Mentioned .....	923, 943, 950
Ives, Brayton. Mentioned .....	533, 575, 1137
Ives, Lucius H. Mentioned .....	506
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	717
Ivory, Richard C. Mentioned .....	1029, 1064
Jack, John T. Mentioned .....	286, 287, 290
Jacklin, Rufus W. Mentioned .....	827
Jackson, Arthur M. Mentioned .....	163, 642, 643, 645
Jackson, Caleb G. Mentioned .....	598, 1208
Jackson, Daniel D. Mentioned .....	921, 933, 937
Jackson, J. Mentioned .....	537
Jackson, James M., jr. Mentioned .....	961
Jackson, Richard H. Correspondence with Godfrey Weitzel .....	1229
Mentioned .....	140, 142, 143, 1231, 1235, 1236, 1243
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1228
Jackson, William L. Mentioned .....	512, 517, 519, 521, 523, 1278, 1311, 1322
Jaerin, Emil. Mentioned .....	930
James, Army of the. (Union.)
Butler, Benjamin F., relieved from command of .....	3
Casualties. Returns of. Jan. 1-April 9, 1865 .....	600, 601
Davens, Charles, assumes temporary command of 24th Army Corps .....	11
Gibbon, John, assumes command of 24th Army Corps .....	3
Itineraries. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. Itineraries.
Ord, Edward O. C., assumes command of .....	3
Orders, General, series 1865—Ord: No. 54, 665. Ferrero: No. 4, 1173. Gibbon: No. 41, 1176. Hartsuff: No. 39, 1172.
Organization, strength, etc.
Jan. 31, 1865 .....	61
Feb. 28, 1865 .....	61
March 20, 1865 .....	62
March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	576-580
March 31, 1865 .....	62
April 10, 1865 .....	63
Recommendations for promotions, etc., in. Communications from
Foster, Robert S. ....	1183
Gibbon, John .....	1176
Jackson, Richard H. ....	1229
Mackenzie, Randall S. ....	1247
Ord, Edward O. C. ....	1163, 1167
James, Military Division of the. (Union.)
Halleck, Henry W. Assigned to command of .....	2
Assumes command of .....	2
Relinquishes command of .....	3
Organized April 19, 1865 .....	2

	Page
James River, Va. Sheridan's command crosses. March 26, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Report of Sheridan , p. 480.
James, Isaac. Mentioned.....	980, 994, 1003, 1259
James, Martin S. Mentioned.....	580
James, William L. Mentioned.....	550
Janeway, Hugh H. Mentioned.....	113, 366, 576, 598, 624, 1122, 1143, 1146, 1148-1150
Janeway, Jacob J. Mentioned.....	572, 981, 988
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	986
Jarrard, J. A. Mentioned.....	1260
Jarvis, James. Mentioned.....	1035
Jay, William. Mentioned.....	151, 152, 799
Jayne, Joseph M. Mentioned.....	1273
Jenkins, Horatio, jr. Mentioned.....	1168
Jenkins, James E. Mentioned.....	565
Jenkins, Joseph. Mentioned.....	219
Jenkins, Joseph J. Mentioned.....	1271
Jenks, Ethan A. Mentioned.....	1026
Jenne, William S. Mentioned.....	961, 973
Jenney, Edwin S. Mentioned.....	207
Jennings, Oscar S. Mentioned.....	1035
Jesse, ———. Mentioned.....	517
Jesup, General, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	542
Jett, Willie. Mentioned.....	1319-1321
Jewell, James A. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	218
Jewett, George T. Mentioned.....	1160
Jewhurst, Joseph W. Mentioned.....	999
John S. Ide, Steamer. Mentioned.....	1318, 1321
Johns, Henry T. Mentioned.....	1091
Johnson, Captain. Mentioned.....	533
Johnson, Alba A. Mentioned.....	288
Johnson, Andrew. Mentioned.....	522
Johnson, Bushrod R. Mentioned.....	126, 127, 196, 317, 332, 383, 385, 387, 389, 480, 602, 710, 801, 809, 816, 845, 1100, 1116, 1125, 1138, 1144, 1148, 1263, 1265, 1274, 1278, 1292
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1286
Johnson, Daniel D. Report of skirmish near Patterson's Creek Station, W. Va., March 22, 1865.....	555
Johnson, Deloss M. Mentioned.....	570, 809
Johnson, Edward. Mentioned.....	18
Johnson, Frank E. Mentioned.....	961
Johnson, George W. Mentioned.....	926, 945
Johnson, Gilbert J. Mentioned.....	1151
Johnson, Henry J. Mentioned.....	551
Johnson, James. Mentioned.....	921, 933, 937
Johnson, James H. Mentioned.....	1272
Johnson, John B. Mentioned.....	901, 973
Johnson, John L. Mentioned.....	324, 335, 312
Johnson, Louis W. Mentioned.....	1273
Johnson, Marmaduke. Mentioned.....	1271, 1279

	Page.
Johnson, Nathan J.
Mentioned .....	404, 416, 422, 427
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	421
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865 .....	427, 428
Johnson, Thomas S. Mentioned .....	1231
Johnston, Charles F. Mentioned .....	1273
Johnston, Hiram B. Mentioned .....	230
Johnston, James F. Mentioned .....	1038, 1064
Johnston, John W. Mentioned .....	1219
Johnston, Joseph E. Mentioned .....	13, 15, 31, 32, 46, 50, 52, 55, 58, 120, 122, 125, 523, 1153, 1154, 1304, 1316
Johnston, Robert D. Mentioned .....	388, 1270, 1277
Johnston, William A. Mentioned .....	1279
Jolliffe, George W. Mentioned .....	555
Jones, A. K. Mentioned .....	1273
Jones, Andrew F. Mentioned .....	1195
Jones, Benjamin. Mentioned .....	924, 930
Jones, Charles R. Mentioned .....	995
Jones, Edward J.
Mentioned .....	377, 358, 574, 1030, 1071, 1074
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 23-April 9, 1865 .....	1079
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	360
Jones, Edward W. Mentioned .....	921, 933
Jones, Enoch. Mentioned .....	579
Jones, Evan R. Mentioned .....	464-466, 952, 953
Jones, Francis B. Mentioned .....	267
Jones, Harvey E. Mentioned .....	1287
Jones, Hillary P. Mentioned .....	383, 391, 1275, 1279-1281
Jones, Hugh. Mentioned .....	71, 354
Jones, John A. Mentioned .....	1268
Jones, John W. Mentioned .....	1268
Jones, Lorraine F. Mentioned .....	1271
Jones, Marcellus E. Mentioned .....	458
Jones, Richard W. Mentioned .....	1273
Jones, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1078
Jones, Waters B. Mentioned .....	1271
Jordan, Absalom. Mentioned .....	1259
Jordan, Tyler C. Mentioned .....	1269, 1270
Joseph, Dagworthy D. Mentioned .....	286, 876
Joslyn, Henry C. Mentioned .....	331, 335, 338, 1024
Judd, Frederick A. C. Mentioned .....	133, 1214
Kabletown, W. Va.
Scout through, to Shenandoah Ferry. See Shenandoah Ferry, W. Va.
Scout to, etc., March 16-17, 1865.
Scout to Myerstown, Myers' Ford, and, March 20, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Underhill , p. 534.
Kalt, Hyron. Mentioned .....	578, 1183, 1203, 1204, 1209
Kane, John. Mentioned .....	1259

	Page.
Karples, Henry M.
Mentioned .....	566
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	739
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	205
Karr, Hamilton L. Mentioned .....	1216
Kauss, Augustus. Mentioned .....	872, 1259
Kautz, August V. Mentioned. 18, 19, 21, 25, 30, 61, 62, 139, 140, 147, 579, 596, 600, 1227
Keagy, David F. Mentioned .....	1029, 1061
Kearney, Samuel. Mentioned .....	995, 1000
Keasey, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	599
Keck, Peter J. Mentioned .....	422
Keeler, Birney B. Mentioned .....	417
Keeler, Samuel B. Mentioned .....	930
Keene, Augustus W. Mentioned .....	787
Keene, John. Mentioned .....	364
Keifer, J. Warren.
Mentioned .....	104,
106, 301, 305, 308, 310, 312, 313, 572, 588, 978-980, 982-984, 995, 1000, 1008,
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	992, 995, 997
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	309
Kelner, Charles H. Mentioned .....	340, 1037
Keiser, John J. Mentioned .....	906
Keller, David C. Mentioned .....	303, 950
Keller, Franklin W. Mentioned .....	71
Keller, William. Mentioned .....	990, 1007
Kelley, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	27, 468-470, 472, 515
Kelley, John H. Mentioned .....	335, 341
Kelley, Warren M. Mentioned .....	578
Kelliher, John. Mentioned .....	214
Kellogg, Horace.
Mentioned .....	578, 1214, 1215, 1217, 1218, 1221
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1210
Kellogg, John A.
Mentioned .....	96, 97, 570, 585, 796, 830, 840, 880, 886, 888-890, 897
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	882, 883, 885
Kelly, Daniel. Mentioned .....	509
Kelly, Eli. Mentioned .....	1314
Kelly, Michael. Mentioned .....	921, 933
Kelly, Moses T. Mentioned .....	1230
Kelly, Patrick. Mentioned .....	945, 946
Kelly, Thomas. Mentioned .....	880
Kelsey, Henry H. Mentioned .....	801, 848
Kenly, John R. Mentioned .....	93
Kennedy, Edward G. Mentioned .....	961
Kennedy, Richard. Mentioned .....	568
Kennedy, Robert P. Reports of raid on Cumberland, Md., Feb. 21, 1865 .....	469, 470
Kennedy, Ronald A.
Mentioned .....	571, 968
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	974
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	300
Kennedy, William. Mentioned .....	1023

	Page.
Kennedy, William, Steamer. Mentioned .....	143
Kenney, Edward J. Mentioned .....	961
Kenney, John B. Mentioned .....	961
Kennicutt, George W. Mentioned .....	422
Kent, Daniel H. Mentioned .....	253, 284, 286
Kent, Lewis A. Mentioned .....	570
Kenyon, George L. Mentioned .....	616
Kenyon, Samuel P. Mentioned .....	1259
Keough, John. Mentioned .....	981, 996, 998, 1007, 1259
Kephart, Theophilus. Mentioned .....	576
Kerr, Samuel S. Mentioned .....	198, 599, 716
Kerr, Thomas. Mentioned .....	570, 884
Kershaw, Joseph B. Mentioned .....	30, 383-388, 998, 1132, 1136, 1259, 1266, 1269, 1277, 1293-1298
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1283
Kerwin, Michael. Mentioned .....	68, 360, 397, 370, 623, 624
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	367
Ketchum, George B. Mentioned .....	1030, 1074, 1082
Kevill, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1275
Key, Preston J. Mentioned .....	392
Keyser, Sylvester. Mentioned .....	1022, 1047
Kibbe, George C. Mentioned .....	576, 598, 1172
Kichly, Henry A. Mentioned .....	1033
Kidder, John S. Mentioned .....	921, 933, 937
Kilburn, James A. Mentioned .....	1209
Kiley, Robert. Mentioned .....	1032
Killed and Wounded. See Confederate Troops and Union Troops. Casualties. Returns of.
Killey, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1148, 1149, 1153
Kinball, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1250
King, Adam E. Mentioned .....	1326
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Winfield S. Hancock.
Kling, Horatio C. Mentioned .....	1127
King, J. Floyd. Mentioned .....	1279
King, Samuel McK. Mentioned .....	164
King, W. Howard. Mentioned .....	618, 623
King, William H. H. Mentioned .....	1222
King, William R. Correspondence with Peter S. Michie .....	1165
Mentioned .....	1164-1167
Reports of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	376-378
Kingsland, Oscar R. Mentioned .....	417
Kinloch, John M. Mentioned .....	1274
Kinney, Samuel H. Mentioned .....	1143
Kinsey, John. Mentioned .....	1034
Kinsley, Willard C. Mentioned .....	97, 598
Kireker, Charles. Mentioned .....	1230
Kirk, Elsha L. Mentioned .....	311
Kirkpatrick, Samuel K. Mentioned .....	1223
Kithcart, Daniel W. Mentioned .....	924
Kleckner, Charles. Mentioned .....	218, 219
Klein, Daniel. Mentioned .....	415
Kleinz, Christopher. Mentioned .....	580

	Page.
Klespies, Philip. Mentioned .....	1153
Kline, Henry. Mentioned .....	606, 1259
Kline, Jacob. Mentioned .....	457, 458
Kline, Philip. Mentioned .....	996
Kling, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	1157
Klingenburg, Max. Mentioned .....	598
Klinkler, William. Mentioned .....	335, 338
Knaggs, Robert C. Mentioned .....	890, 893
Knapp, Lyman E. Mentioned .....	574, 1027, 1060
Knapp, Theodore E. Mentioned .....	758
Knerr, Charles. Mentioned .....	403, 420
Knight, George D. Mentioned .....	570, 897
Knight, Walter M. Mentioned .....	919, 1010, 1014
Knight, William H. Mentioned .....	923, 943, 950
Knott, Samuel. Mentioned .....	1313
Knowles, Oliver B.
Mentioned .....	68, 206, 366, 367, 576, 622-624
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	371
Knowles, Robert. Mentioned .....	517
Knowlton, A. L. Mentioned .....	408
Knox, James. Mentioned .....	1271
Koch, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	599
Koerber, Vincent E. von. Mentioned .....	1245, 1251, 1254
Koerner, John. Mentioned .....	924
Konigs, Julius. Mentioned .....	417
Koogle, Jacob. Mentioned .....	874, 1269
Kramer, John. Mentioned .....	1031
Kreutzer, William. Mentioned .....	578
Kreiger, B. Frank. Mentioned .....	303, 959
Krischmer, Charles. Mentioned .....	1153
Kuder, Andrew. Mentioned .....	509
Kyes, Ebenezer S. Mentioned .....	574, 1026
Kyle, Major. Mentioned .....	519
Ladd, James D. Mentioned .....	393
Ladd, George. Mentioned .....	509
La Grange, Henry. Mentioned .....	157, 158, 162, 163
Laird, George H. Mentioned .....	580, 1242, 1243
Laird, James S. Mentioned .....	272
Lamb, George. Mentioned .....	961
Lamb, William. Mentioned .....	399, 406, 415, 417, 434, 435, 438, 440, 443, 444, 446
Lamb, William M. Mentioned .....	598, 1186
Lambdin, J. Harrison. Mentioned .....	288, 290, 291
Lamberson, Edwin. Mentioned .....	1036
Lamney, John R. Mentioned .....	69
Lamoreaux, Sullivan B. Mentioned .....	979, 993, 994, 999, 1002
La Motte, Charles E. Mentioned .....	277, 870
Lancaster, William. Mentioned .....	599, 1244, 1255
Land, Ceth S. Mentioned .....	1274
Landell, Edwin A. Mentioned .....	922, 943
Landis, James P. Mentioned .....	1259
Landry, R. Prosper. Mentioned .....	1274, 1279
Lane, George. Mentioned .....	1033
Lane, James H.
Mentioned .....	389, 1272, 1278
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1285

	Page.
Lane, John. Mentioned.....	1276, 1279
Lane, Morgan D. Mentioned.....	630, 1250
Lane, Nathaniel P.
Mentioned.....	536, 730, 747
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	749
Laney, Thomas M. Mentioned.....	1196
Lanfare, Aaron S. Mentioned.....	1136, 1250
Lang, David. Mentioned.....	1273, 1278
Lang, John H. T. Mentioned.....	163
Lang, William. Mentioned.....	328
Langdon, Loomis L. Mentioned.....	139, 145, 580, 597
Langton, Robert H. Mentioned.....	926, 945, 953
Lank, William D. Mentioned.....	599
La Point, George W.
Mentioned.....	214, 557, 688, 757, 760-763, 766
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1867.....	216
Larimer, John. Mentioned.....	996, 1007
Larimer, Smith. Mentioned.....	1250
Larkin, Leavitt. Mentioned.....	864
Lasseter, Gideon J. Mentioned.....	1260
Latham, Charles H. Mentioned.....	436
Latham, Louis C. Mentioned.....	1270
Lathrop, Joseph H.
Mentioned.....	1168
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1168
Lathner, Alfred E. Mentioned.....	564
Latrobe, Osman. Mentioned.....	1203
Laughlin, George M. Mentioned.....	207
Law, Evander M. Mentioned.....	388, 1268, 1277
Lawder, Rynd E. Mentioned.....	508, 1137
Lawton, Archibald F. Mentioned.....	1270
Lawley, James. Mentioned.....	1033
Lawrence, Abram B. Mentioned.....	1176, 1232, 1233
Lawrence, Albert G. Mentioned.....	417, 418
Lawrence, John H. Mentioned.....	417
Lawrence, Robert A. Mentioned.....	1031
Lawrence, William Hudson. Mentioned.....	33
Lawton, Alexander R. Mentioned.....	513
Lay, Richard G.
Mentioned.....	565
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	610
Laycock, Henry A. Mentioned.....	99, 570, 881, 896-898
Layland, Hiram. Mentioned.....	964
Lazear, James R. Mentioned.....	1223
Loa, John W. Mentioned.....	1270, 1277
Leach, Frank T. Mentioned.....	578
Learned, Bela P. Mentioned.....	71
Leary, C. C., Stenmer. Mentioned.....	166
Leatz, Axel. Mentioned.....	280
Leatz, Paul. Mentioned.....	872
Leavins, Patrick. Mentioned.....	925, 934, 935
Leavitt, Ambrey. Mentioned.....	890, 893
Leavitt, Sheldon, jr. Mentioned.....	1177
Lebo, Henry. Mentioned.....	599

	Page.
Lebo, Thomas C. Mentioned .....	1151
Lee, Elias B. Mentioned .....	599
Lee, Fitzhugh.
Mentioned .....	121, 128, 382, 385, 387, 390, 478, 480, 498, 510, 514, 825, 897, 1110, 1131, 1169, 1263, 1264, 1266, 1275, 1278, 1288, 1289, 1294
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1298
Lee, G. W. Custis.
Capture of. Communication from Harris S. Hawthorn .....	937
Mentioned .....	101, 102, 907, 915, 925, 934, 937, 942, 947, 948, 998, 1132, 1266, 1269, 1276, 1283, 1284, 1289, 1290, 1293-1295, 1302
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1296
Lee, Henry C. Mentioned .....	1305
Lee, Richard H. Mentioned .....	403, 404
Lee, Robert E.
Assumes command of Armies of the Confederate States .....	1
Correspondence with
Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, C. S. A. ....	391
Grant, U. S. ....	56-58
Farewell address of, to Army of Northern Virginia .....	1267
Mentioned .....	13-16, 19, 21, 23, 27, 45, 49, 51, 52, 55-58, 76, 78, 80, 81, 83-85, 87-90, 92-96, 98, 99, 101-107, 111, 114, 117, 119, 121, 123, 125-131, 134-136, 138, 143, 148, 156, 255, 261, 383-391, 441, 478, 479, 488, 518, 520-522, 526, 601, 604, 605, 607, 610-612, 625, 631, 638, 644, 653, 674, 681-684, 691, 702, 709, 715- 717, 720, 721, 724, 728, 731, 733, 735, 739, 741, 742, 744, 747, 748, 751, 753, 756, 761, 780, 787, 789, 793-795, 816, 826, 841, 856, 856, 871, 892-895, 898, 901, 905, 907-909, 913, 915, 916, 929, 946, 948, 951, 953, 956, 967, 970, 971, 976, 987, 988, 997, 999, 1001, 1009, 1011, 1101, 1102, 1106, 1107, 1109, 1110, 1115, 1118, 1120, 1121, 1137, 1141, 1149, 1152, 1158-1163, 1165, 1167, 1169, 1174, 1175, 1177, 1178, 1181, 1187, 1192, 1196-1198, 1200, 1201, 1206, 1209, 1210, 1215, 1218, 1220, 1223, 1226, 1235, 1238-1240, 1242, 1243, 1245, 1250, 1253-1254, 1265- 1267, 1277, 1280-1282, 1286-1288, 1290, 1299, 1301-1307, 1314, 1322, 1323
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1263-1265
Beverly, W. Va. Capture of U. S. Forces at, Jan. 11, 1865 .....	451
Cumberland, Md. Raid on, Feb. 21, 1865 .....	471
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27- March 28, 1865 .....	510
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	381-383
Shenandoah Valley. Operations in the, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	540
Lee, S. S. Mentioned .....	1306
Lee, Thomas C. Mentioned .....	754
Lee, William H. F. Mentioned .....	150, 382, 384, 385, 377, 390, 825, 1110, 1118, 1121, 1125, 1131, 1144, 1261, 1266, 1275, 1278, 1299, 1301, 1303, 1304
Lehman, Daniel J. Mentioned .....	599
Lehr, John. Mentioned .....	895
Leib, Edward H. Mentioned .....	481, 494, 1127
Leiper, Charles L. Mentioned .....	124, 575, 1116, 1128
Le Moyne, Francois. Mentioned .....	618
Lenk, John. Mentioned .....	931
Leonard, Charles H. Mentioned .....	983-985
Leonard, William W. Mentioned .....	472
Lester, Richard P. Mentioned .....	1272
Levi, John J. Mentioned .....	349, 355
Lewis, Charles H. Mentioned .....	169

	Page
Lewis, Charles J. Mentioned .....	572
Lewis, Frederick W.
Mentioned .....	231
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	234
Lewis, George W.
Mentioned .....	556
Report of expedition from Suffolk, Va., to Murfrees Depot, N. C., etc., March 10-11, 1865 .....	548
Lewis, H. Edward. Mentioned .....	920
Lewis, Judson A. Mentioned .....	971, 972
Lewis, Osceola. Mentioned .....	995
Lewis, Robert.
Mentioned .....	174, 175, 185, 356, 668, 1071
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	183
Lewis, Samuel E. Mentioned .....	1259
Lewis, Silas H., jr. Mentioned .....	979
Lewis, William G. Mentioned .....	388, 674, 684, 1270, 1277
Lewis Farm, Va. Engagement at, near Gravelly Run, March 29, 1865.
Casualties. Returns of
Confederate Troops .....	1201
Union Troops .....	803
Sketch .....	802
See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Chambliss, Joshua T.	Johnson, Busbrod R.
Coalter, Richard.	Kellogg, John A.
Deell, Isaac.	Lee, Robert E.
Gregory, Edgar M.	Lidell, John A.
Griffin, Charles.	McCoy, Thomas F.
Humphreys, Andrew A.	McParlin, Thomas A.
	Moore, George G.
	Wainwright, Charles S.
	Warren, Gouverneur K.
	Winn, Charles K.
	Also Itinerary , p. 90.
Libby, Joseph. Mentioned .....	215
Libee, William H. Mentioned .....	458
Lidell, John A.
Mentioned .....	611, 615
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	625
Light, David. Mentioned .....	537, 538
Lightburn, Joseph A. J. Mentioned .....	625
Lightfoot, Charles E. Mentioned .....	1271, 1279
Lilley, John. Mentioned .....	1064, 1259
Lilley, Robert D. Mentioned .....	476, 1322
Lillibridge, George H. Mentioned .....	707
Lincoln, Abraham.
Assaulted by J. Wilkes Booth .....	2
Death of .....	2
Mentioned .....	58, 94, 97, 402, 522, 525, 527, 622, 1322
Visits Petersburg, Va. ....	2
Visits Richmond, Va. ....	2
Lincoln, Rufus P. Mentioned .....	299, 915, 918
Lincoln, Sumner H.
Mentioned .....	571
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	306
Idnebarger, T. James. Mentioned .....	1272, 1285
Linnard, James M. Mentioned .....	231
Linsley, James H. Mentioned .....	1195
Lippincott, Ellwood. Mentioned .....	920

	Page.
Littell, John S. Mentioned .....	403, 416, 420
Little, Thaddens. Mentioned .....	1158
Little, William. Mentioned .....	930
Littlefield, George M. Mentioned .....	961
Little Fort Valley, Va. Expedition from Camp Russell to. See Edenburgh and Little Fort Valley, Va. Expedition from Camp Russell to, etc., Feb. 13-17, 1865.
Livermore, Thomas L. Mentioned .....	683, 685
Llewellyn, Michael W. Mentioned .....	1312
Lochbrunner, Charles A. Mentioned .....	1024
Locke, Frederick T.
Correspondence with
Mende, George G. ....	827
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	257
Mentioned .....	161, 257, 796, 806, 811, 827, 836
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Gouverneur K. Warren.
Locke, Lewis. Mentioned .....	1150
Locker, John H. Mentioned .....	334, 336
Lockley, George. Mentioned .....	271, 569
Lockwood, Abram L.
*Mentioned .....	239, 568, 770, 779, 788-790
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	247
Lockwood, Henry C. Mentioned .....	417
Lodewick, Henry S. Mentioned .....	888
Loeb, Daniel. Mentioned .....	857
Logan, John A. Mentioned .....	82
Logan, Thomas H. Mentioned .....	579
Logsdon, Joseph R. Mentioned .....	1219
Lomax, Lunsford L. Mentioned .....	382, 387, 510-513, 519-521, 1278
Long, Armistead L. Mentioned .....	381, 386, 387, 476, 516, 1271, 1279, 1280, 1282
Long, H. Mentioned .....	1286
Long, Michael. Mentioned .....	362
Long, William H. Mentioned .....	959
Long Bridge and Bottom's Bridge, Va. Scout to, Jan. 30, 1865. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. Report of Evans, p. 371.
Longstreet, James. Mentioned .....	383-388, 479, 480, 487, 503, 506, 1110, 1132, 1160, 1265, 1266, 1268, 1272, 1277, 1279, 1283, 1285, 1293, 1301-1303
Loomis, Henry. Mentioned .....	569, 873
Loomis, Henry W. Mentioned .....	698, 1071
Lord, James H. Mentioned .....	576, 1143, 1159
Lord, Richard S. C. Mentioned .....	575, 1124, 1127, 1128
Lord, T. Ellery. Mentioned .....	1176
Loring, Charles G. Mentioned .....	319, 347, 349, 1019, 1020, 1030
Lossee, Alfred B. Mentioned .....	357, 362
Losses in Action. See Confederate Troops and Union Troops. Casualties.
Returns of.
Loudoun County, Va.
Expedition from Camp Averell (near Winchester) into, Feb. 18-19, 1865, and skirmish (19th) at Ashby's Gap.
Communication from Philip H. Sheridan .....	463
Reports of
Gibson, Thomas .....	463
Snow, Henry E. ....	467
Tibbits, William B. ....	462

	Page.
Loudoun County, Va.—Continued.
Scout in, March 12-14, 1865. Report of Nelson B. Sweitzer .....	552
Scout into, from Harper's Ferry, March 20-25, 1865, with skirmishes (21st) near Hamilton and (23d) at Goose Creek. See Shenandoah Val- ley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Reno , p. 535.
Scout from Fairfax Court-House into, April 8-10, 1865. Report of David R. Clendenin .....	1308
Scout from Vienna into, April 8-10, 1865. Report of Nelson B. Sweitzer ..	1307
Louisiana Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Artillery, Light— Battalions : Washington, 1261; Washington ( Batteries ), 1st, 1273. Batteries : Donaldsonville, 1271; Louisiana Guard, 1271; Madison, 1269.
Infantry— Regiments : 1st ( Volunteers ), 1271; 2d, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 14th, 15th, 1271.
Lounsberry, Clement A.
Correspondence with Ralph Ely .....	1048
Mentioned .....	1047, 1048
Lovejoy, George W. Mentioned .....	618, 620, 622
Lovell, Asa B. Mentioned .....	961
Lovettsville, Va. Affair near, Jan. 18, 1865. Report of Thomas C. Devin...	452
Low, Thomas. Mentioned .....	598
Lowe, Frank B. Mentioned .....	922, 933, 937
Lowe, John H. Mentioned .....	1271, 1277
Lower, Henry A. Mentioned .....	599
Lowther, Alexander A. Mentioned .....	1268
Loyd, George. Mentioned .....	981, 994, 1259
Lubey, Timothy Mentioned .....	72, 73
Luckett, John M. Mentioned .....	1254
Ludgate, William. Mentioned .....	567, 759-762, 1259
Ludlow, Benjamin C.
Correspondence with Edward O. C. Ord .....	472
Mentioned .....	473
Lutes, Franklin W. Mentioned .....	1259
Lydecker, Garrett J. Mentioned .....	162, 656
Lydig, Philip M. Mentioned .....	1019, 1020
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Jehu G. Parke .
Lyman, Jonas W. Mentioned .....	403, 420, 421
Lyman, Wyllys. Mentioned .....	991
Lynch, Thomas. Mentioned .....	960
Lyon, General, Steamer. Mentioned .....	131, 414
Lyon, James M. Mentioned .....	1230, 1237
Lyon, James W. Mentioned .....	373, 379, 1165-1167
Lyon, Robert W. Mentioned .....	959
McAllaster, William H. Mentioned .....	535
McAllister, Robert.
Mentioned .....	65, 74, 81, 84, 192, 193, 195, 207, 212, 222, 224-227, 229, 232-236, 242, 250, 568, 584, 677, 679, 694, 706, 744, 760, 776, 777, 779-781, 784, 785, 787, 792
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	788
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	238, 240
McAnally, Charles.
Mentioned .....	219, 507, 757, 767
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	773
McArthur, William M. Mentioned .....	1206

	Page.
McCabe, John. Mentioned .....	230
McCahan, John A. Mentioned .....	1030, 1064
McCall, Charles A. Mentioned .....	1335
McCall, William H. H.
Mentioned .....	70, 111, 344, 348, 350, 351, 574, 520, 1028, 1061, 1063, 1065-1067
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1066
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	351
McCall, William W. Mentioned .....	1024
McCallister, William. Mentioned .....	198
McCalmont, Alfred B.
Mentioned .....	574, 590, 1028, 1063, 1066
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1066
McCarthy, Lieutenant. Mentioned .....	707
McCarty, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1229
McCauley, G. W. Mentioned .....	1286
McCauley, John R. Mentioned .....	919, 928
McCausland, John. Mentioned .....	512, 513, 1276, 1279
McCauslin, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1259
McClellan, Arthur. Mentioned .....	908, 1108
McClellan, Ely. Mentioned .....	1164
McClellan, Samuel A.
Mentioned .....	357, 565, 1071
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1084
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	189
McClellan, General, Steamer. Mentioned .....	144
McClelland, George F. Mentioned .....	272
McClelland, William.
Mentioned .....	505, 1071, 1074, 1082, 1088
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1088
McClenahan, Francis B. Mentioned .....	1030, 1064
McClellan, Matthew R.
Mentioned .....	572, 904, 998
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1007, 1008
McClung, Thomas K. Mentioned .....	471, 505
McClure, William M. Mentioned .....	134
McCole, Henry. Mentioned .....	961
McColley, Thomas I. Mentioned .....	960, 971, 973
McComas, James. Mentioned .....	1028, 1034
McComb, William. Mentioned .....	389, 1272, 1278
McConkey, Alexander. Mentioned .....	1310, 1312
MacConnell, Charles C. Mentioned .....	191, 1091
McCools, Edward M. Mentioned .....	32
McCoy, John S. Mentioned .....	289
McCoy, Thomas F.
Mentioned .....	288-290, 295, 570, 800
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	891
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	289, 292
McCran, Patrick. Mentioned .....	325, 334, 336, 1032
McCrary, Charles H. Mentioned .....	1022, 1014
McCrary, Oakland. Mentioned .....	827
William. Mentioned .....	926, 945

	Page
McCullough, Christopher C. Mentioned .....	311
McCullough, James P. Mentioned .....	599
McCullough, Watson W. Mentioned .....	1254
McCune, James. Mentioned .....	1013
McDearmid, John. Mentioned .....	453
McDonald, Addams A. Mentioned .....	1025
McDonald, Andrew N. Mentioned .....	572
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	987, 988
McDonald, George E. Mentioned .....	380, 670
McDonald, James H. Mentioned .....	157, 613, 614, 647, 648
McDonald, John A. Mentioned .....	289
McDonald, Joseph M. Mentioned .....	403, 416, 420
McDonald, William O. Mentioned .....	635
MacDougall, Chuton D. Mentioned .... 80, 566, 582, 680, 685, 693, 705, 711, 712, 715, 722, 723, 725, 735, 741, 747
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	733
McDowell, Nelson. Mentioned .....	1001
McDuff, William J. Mentioned .....	417
McElhaney, William. Mentioned .....	919, 928
McElhany, Samuel O. Mentioned .....	1260
McElhany, Thomas. Mentioned .....	924, 930
Maceuen, Charles I. Mentioned .....	599, 800, 801, 848
McFarlan, James E. Mentioned .....	1247, 1254, 1255
McFarland, Benjamin. Mentioned .....	996
McGhinley, James. Mentioned .....	69
McGonnigle, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	1114
McGough, John. Mentioned .....	1189
McGowan, Samuel. Mentioned .....	389, 1272, 1278, 1285, 1287, 1288
McGrath, Michael H. Mentioned .....	159, 645, 647
McGraw, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1274
McGraw, Thomas. Correspondence with U. S. Grant .....	1262
Mentioned .....	1260
McGregor, James. Mentioned .....	304, 571
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	965
McGregor, John. Mentioned .....	1033
McGuire, Hugh. Mentioned .....	1301
McGuire, John. Mentioned .....	925
McGuire, Michael. Mentioned .....	221
McHenry, Samuel L. Mentioned .....	548
Mach-me-nom-o-nee, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1033
McIlwain, Hugh. Mentioned .....	303, 960
McIntire, Patrick. Mentioned .....	199
McIntosh, David G. Mentioned .....	1273, 1279
McIntosh, Lucas. Mentioned .....	1271
McIntosh, Rigdon M. Mentioned .....	1196
McIntosh, Schuyler H. Mentioned .....	1036
McIntyre, Martin V. Mentioned .....	577
McIvor, James P. Mentioned .....	64, 216, 221, 567, 583, 683, 689, 693, 705, 757-760, 762, 764, 766, 1198
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	761
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	221

	Page.
McKay, James. Mentioned .....	533
McKee, George. Mentioned .....	1260
McKeen, William H. Mentioned .....	924
McKendry, Archibald. Mentioned .....	123
McKenna, James. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	232
McKenna, John. Mentioned .....	6153
McKenny, John A. Mentioned .....	930
McKenny, Keeran. Mentioned .....	1003
Mackenzie, Ranald S.
Correspondence with Edward O. C. Ord .....	1247
Mentioned .....	52, 54, 58, 62, 63, 148, 580, 597, 601, 830, 832, 835, 850, 861, 865, 880, 1100, 1101, 1104-1106, 1109, 1111, 1118-1120, 1142, 1143, 1155, 1160, 1163, 1175, 1216, 1252-1254, 1256
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1241
McKibbin, Gilbert H. Mentioned .....	145, 570, 593
McKinley, James A. Mentioned .....	570, 897
McKinley, William P. Mentioned .....	577
McKinlock, John. Mentioned .....	210
McKinnle, Thomas W. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	314
Mackison, John T. Mentioned .....	278
McLain, Charles. Mentioned .....	599
MacIary, William H. Mentioned .....	570, 598, 875, 876
McLaughlin, Napoleon B.
Correspondence with John F. Hartranft .....	345
Mentioned .....	70, 316-320, 322-325, 332, 335, 345-347, 360
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	361
McLaughlin, John. Mentioned .....	925, 934, 939
McLean, John. Mentioned .....	931
McLellan, Curwen B. Mentioned .....	410
McMasters, William L. Mentioned .....	452
McMillan, Robert. Mentioned .....	500, 1186, 1190
McMillen, Francis M. Mentioned .....	980, 994, 1003, 1260
McNamara, James B. Mentioned .....	183
McNamara, John. Mentioned .....	925
McNary, William H.
Mentioned .....	578, 1203
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1208
McNeely, James W. Mentioned .....	571, 919, 928
McNeill, James H. Mentioned .....	1157
McNeill, Jesse C. Mentioned .....	470-472
McNeill, John H. Mentioned .....	1311
McNulty, Caleb J. Mentioned .....	554
Macomber, George. Mentioned .....	1216
Macomber, John H. Mentioned .....	900, 973
McParlin, Thomas A.
Mentioned .....	4, 707
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	607
McPeck, George W. Mentioned .....	1153
McPherson, James B. Mentioned .....	31, 32, 34
McQuaid, Joseph S. Mentioned .....	1038, 1031
McQuillan, James. Mentioned .....	1024
MacRae, William. Mentioned .....	380, 1273, 1278

	Page.
McTavish, Hugh G. Mentioned .....	69, 221
McVean, John J. Mentioned .....	509
McVey, Richard. Mentioned .....	1310
McWhorter, Walter F. Mentioned .....	1260
McWilliams, John. Mentioned .....	1028, 1064
Macy, George N. Mentioned .....	62, 564, 581, 590, 600, 601, 805, 806
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 3, 1865 .....	639
Madill, Henry J. Mentioned .... 80, 137-139, 203, 206, 207, 233, 563, 582, 677, 680, 685, 710, 711, 714, 718, 719, 721, 727-729, 733, 731, 738, 745, 746, 751, 777, 781, 853
Magee, James. Mentioned .....	599
Magner, William. Mentioned .....	335, 340
Maguire, George R. Report of scout from Fairfax Court-House to Brentsville, Va., Feb. 6-7, 1865 .....	157
Maguire, Jonathan. Mentioned .....	919, 928
Mahan, Joseph L. Mentioned .....	1000, 1001
Mahlstedt, Victor. Mentioned .....	1035
Mahnken, John H. Mentioned .....	499
Mahone, William. Mentioned .....	84, 146, 149, 381, 383, 385-387, 389, 390, 392, 608, 610, 663, 696, 720, 723, 786, 1125, 1129, 1170, 1172, 1205, 1273, 1278, 1297
Maillefert, ———. Mentioned .....	377
Maine Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 1st, 64, 227, 228, 230-235, 568, 583, 603, 706, 779, 781-783.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : 2d, 3d, 565, 581, 600; 4th, 565, 581, 600, 1011; 6th, 85, 565, 581, 600; 7th, 71, 360, 574, 590, 600, 1013, 1071, 1075-1077.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 68, 146, 576, 592, 618, 1156-1159.
Infantry— Battalions : 1st Sharpshooters, 72, 73, 273, 569, 585, 862-865, 867.
Regiments : 1st (Peteran), 303, 572, 587, 975-978; 5th, 578, 594, 1181, 1204-1206; 9th, 132, 421; 11th, 577, 591, 1180, 1183, 1192-1200; 16th, 66, 570, 580, 880; 17th, 64, 228, 237, 245, 568, 584, 693, 706, 776, 779, 785-788; 19th, 63, 212, 214, 215, 567, 583, 693, 705, 758-760, 762-764; 20th, 65, 271, 273, 274, 569, 585, 850, 861, 862, 865; 31st, 574, 589, 1054, 1056, 1059, 1060.
Malbon, Joseph H. Mentioned .....	797
Malcolm, William. Mentioned .....	508
Male, William H. Mentioned .....	1164
Mallam, Charles E. Mentioned .....	1025
Mallet, Samuel T. Mentioned .....	1038, 1074, 1075, 1082
Mallory, Thornton. Mentioned .....	1216
Malloy, Martin. Mentioned .....	1091
Malone, John K. Mentioned .....	1127
Malony, William S. Mentioned .....	968, 969, 1071
Maltbie, Richard. Mentioned .....	1271
Manderville, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	920
Mangam, C. Richard. Mentioned .....	1260
Manger, Andrew. Mentioned .....	615
Manning, Frederick L. Mentioned .....	1163
Manning, James A. Mentioned .....	568, 790, 791
Manning, Stephen H. Mentioned .....	908
Manning, William H. Mentioned .....	1271
Mansfield, James F. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	242
Maps and Sketches. See Sketches .

	Page.
Marble, William S
Mentioned .....	404, 410, 412
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	412
Marion, Edward T. Mentioned .....	599
Mark, Penrose G. Mentioned .....	959
Markley, Alfred C. Mentioned .....	1241
Marks, John. Mentioned .....	859
Marlin, Silas J. Mentioned .....	746, 755
Marquette, Charles. Mentioned .....	957, 960, 964, 1260
Marsh, H. Jay. Mentioned .....	574
Marsh, Elias J.
Mentioned .....	4, 610, 615, 1143
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	618
Marsh, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1153
Marsh, Thomas B. Mentioned .....	573
Marshall, Culver. Mentioned .....	1153
Marshall, J. W. Mentioned .....	1312
Marshall, Sylvester W. Mentioned .....	577
Martin, Archer N. Mentioned .....	841
Martin, Edward. Mentioned .....	850
Martin, Frederick. Mentioned .....	1164
Martin, Rawley W. Report of expedition from Fort Monroe to Fredericksburg, Va., March 5-8, 1865 .....	544
Martin, William J. Mentioned .....	1272
Martin, Zenas. Mentioned .....	555
Martindale, Edward. Mentioned .....	1230
Martindale, Franklin G. Mentioned .....	462-466
Martz, D. H. Lse. Mentioned .....	1271
Maryland Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Artillery, Light— Batteries : 1st, 1275; 4th, 1273.
Cavalry— Battalions : 2d, 450, 532.
Infantry— Regiments : 2d, 1272.
Maryland Troops. Mentioned. (Union.)
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 580, 597, 1214-1246, 1251-1255.
Infantry— Regiments : 1st, 60, 93, 569, 585, 874; 2d, 574, 589, 1054-1056, 1059, 1060; 3d, 70, 323, 324, 333, 334, 336, 337, 573, 589; 4th, 66, 93, 569, 585, 874; 5th, 578, 595; 6th, 308-311, 313, 314, 572, 588, 978, 979, 992, 994, 995, 997, 1000, 1001, 1003, 1007, 1009; 7th, 8th, 66, 93, 569, 585, 874.
Mason, Addison G. Mentioned .....	257
Mason, Ebenezer P.
Mentioned .....	166, 169, 170
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	181
Mason, Frederick T. Mentioned .....	1196, 1197
Mason, George. Mentioned .....	756, 1305
Mason, Julius W. Mentioned .....	564
Massachusetts, Steamer. Mentioned .....	549
Massachusetts Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 1st, 64, 225, 231, 235, 237, 568, 584, 601, 706, 777, 785, 788; 3d ( Batteries ), I, 373, 576, 593.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : 5th (E), 565, 581, 660, 898, 1071, 1078, 1082; 9th, 67, 71, 186, 187, 297, 565, 581, 660, 1071, 1075, 1079, 1079, 1080; 10th, 65, 74, 85, 191, 192, 212, 222, 223, 249-251, 568, 584, 660, 791-795; 11th, 71, 357, 360, 361, 363, 574, 590, 660, 1071, 1075, 1079; 14th, 71, 187, 334, 342, 356, 358, 565, 581, 660, 1071, 1079, 1080.

Massachusetts Troops. Mentioned—Continued.

Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 68, 564, 574, 581, 590, 618, 624, 640, 1003; 2d, 124, 420, 492, 499-501, 575, 591, 1127, 1128; 3d, 530, 531; 4th, 61-63, 148, 458, 576, 577, 579, 593, 594, 596, 1167-1169, 1227, 1223; 5th ( Colored ), 144, 576, 593, 1211.
Infantry— Regiments : 11th, 65, 240-243, 246, 247, 568, 584, 694, 706, 776, 788, 789; 19th, 63, 212, 214-217, 567, 583, 688, 693, 705, 757, 760, 762, 763; 20th, 63, 212, 214, 216, 218, 567, 583, 693, 705, 762; 24th, 577, 594; 28th, 198, 199, 566, 582, 692, 705, 724, 726, 727; 29th, 70, 183, 318, 320, 323, 331-334, 336-339, 342, 573, 589, 1051, 1052; 32d, 65, 271, 274, 569, 585, 589; 34th, 134, 578, 595, 1217; 35th, 36th, 573, 589, 1051, 1056, 1058; 37th, 67, 301, 302, 571, 587, 910, 915, 927, 937, 941, 942, 945-948, 952; 39th, 66, 570, 586, 889, 890; 40th, 578, 595; 56th, 574, 589, 1055, 1056, 1059, 1060; 57th, 70, 317, 320-322, 324, 332, 333, 335, 336, 339, 340, 342, 346, 351, 353, 361, 573, 589; 58th, 573, 589, 1056-1058; 59th, 70, 317, 331, 333, 335, 340, 344, 573, 589, 1052; 61st, 72, 73, 574, 590, 641, 1092, 1095, 1096.
Massie, Fletcher T. Mentioned .....	1269
Mast, Peter. Mentioned .....	313
Masten, Cornelius S. Mentioned .....	543
Masten, George G. Mentioned .....	1007
Mathews, John C. Mentioned .....	1061, 1200
Mathews, Joseph A. Mentioned .....	68, 71, 112, 316, 324, 347, 348, 350, 351, 574, 590, 1029, 1061, 1063, 1065, 1068, 1070
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1068
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	354
Mathews, Joseph S. Mentioned .....	417
Mathews, Oscar S. Mentioned .....	599, 1244, 1255
Mathews, Thomas. Mentioned .....	323
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	343
Mathias, Oliver H. F. Mentioned .....	1000, 1001
Matthews, George. Mentioned .....	761
Matthews, George L. Mentioned .....	1208
Matthews, Milton. Mentioned .....	957, 960, 1260
Matthews, William S. Mentioned .....	1024
Matthewson, Angell. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29- April 9, 1865 .....	1083
Mattocks, Charles P. Mentioned .....	568, 786, 787
Mattour, Louis. Mentioned .....	930
Mauk, John W. Mentioned .....	979, 993, 1008
Maull, David W. Mentioned .....	758
Maxfield, Albert. Mentioned .....	1194, 1197, 1198, 1200
Maxon, William P. Mentioned .....	1022, 1044
Maxwell, George R. Mentioned .....	477, 486, 490, 493, 495, 496, 575, 1127, 1135
Report of expedition from Camp Russell (near Winchester) to Edenburg and Little Fort Valley, Va., etc., Feb. 13-17, 1865 .....	460
Maxwell, John B. Mentioned .....	961
Maxwell, John F. Mentioned .....	756

	Page.
Maxwell, Norman J.
Mentioned .....	324, 335, 573
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1053
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	342
Mayell, Henry. Mentioned .....	483
Mayer, Charles H. Mentioned .....	599
Mayo, Ezekiel R. Mentioned .....	565, 607
Mayo, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1292
Mays, William B. Mentioned .....	599, 1155
Mead, John B. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-
April 23, 1865 .....	531
Meade, ———. Mentioned .....	530
Meade, E. B. Mentioned .....	1286
Meade, George G.
Assignment to command .....	3
Congratulatory address of, to 6th Army Corps .....	909
Correspondence with
Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A. ....	606, 1030
Collis, Charles H. T. ....	1093
Grant, U. S. ....	59, 606, 807-809, 826, 841
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	688, 845
Hunt, Henry J. ....	176
Locke, Frederick T. ....	827
Purke, John G. ....	1017, 1018, 1020, 1031
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	253, 796, 798, 799, 802-813, 815-824, 826, 828
Mentioned .....	12-23, 25, 28-31, 49-51, 54-57, 61-63, 72, 74, 79, 85, 88, 92-94, 97, 106, 107, 123, 127, 135, 139, 147, 172, 191-193, 228, 253, 254, 256, 258, 269, 298, 318, 319, 365, 366, 371, 487, 554, 581, 597, 600, 601, 607, 609-617, 624, 626, 628, 630, 631, 633, 635, 638, 640, 641, 647, 654, 657, 671, 675, 676, 678-681, 685-687, 716, 730, 735, 737, 747, 761, 761, 781, 795-797, 799, 800, 802, 801, 805, 807-809, 812, 813, 817, 818, 820-826, 828, 829, 839, 840, 842, 843, 852, 860, 895, 901, 902, 904, 907, 977, 1016-1019, 1095, 1101, 1102, 1106-1108, 1118, 1165, 1166, 1170, 1171, 1234, 1241, 1254
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	601
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	149-156
Resumes command of Army of the Potomac .....	3
Meagher, Thomas. Mentioned .....	1209
Medals of Honor. Awarded by U. S. Congress.
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 23-April 9, 1865 .....	1257
Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	431
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865 .....	509
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	380
Meehan, William. Mentioned .....	598
Meekins, William. Mentioned .....	1254
Megraw, David W. Mentioned .....	569, 747
Melcher, Holman S. Mentioned .....	257, 259
Meldrum, Norman H. Mentioned .....	407
Melvin, Thayer. Mentioned .....	470
Menter, John W. Mentioned .....	606, 1260
Menzler, Charles. Mentioned .....	737
Mercer, John D. Mentioned .....	599

	Page.
Merkel, Albert P. Mentioned.....	330
Merrell, Charles D. Mentioned.....	423
Merrell, George, Mentioned.....	417
Merrill, Augustus.
Mentioned.....	959, 1260
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	977
Merritt, Chester. Mentioned.....	1153
Merritt, Wesley.
Correspondence with Philip H. Sheridan.....	1133
Mentioned.....	20, 86, 123, 475, 477-480, 497, 498, 529, 575, 591, 806, 808, 809, 811, 812, 817, 830, 839, 880, 1100-1107, 1109, 1111, 1123, 1135, 1141, 1142, 1144, 1148, 1150, 1155, 1245, 1248, 1283, 1295
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1116
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27- March 28, 1865.....	484
Messer, Alvin A. Mentioned.....	598
Metcalf, Benjamin F. Mentioned.....	599, 1157
Meteor, Steamer. Mentioned.....	144
Metler, James B. Mentioned.....	1150, 1151
Meyer, Francis K. Mentioned.....	403, 416, 418
Miami, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	19
Michaels, John R. Mentioned.....	895
Michener, Charles T. Mentioned.....	146
Michie, Peter S.
Correspondence with William R. King.....	1165
Mentioned.....	664, 1163
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1165
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	373-376
Michigan Troops. Mentioned.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 460, 477, 490, 493, 495, 496, 575, 591, 1123, 1125, 1135; 5th, 575, 591, 1123; 6th, 575, 591, 1123, 1144; 7th, 575, 591.
Infantry— Battalions : Hall's Sharpshooters, 72. Companies : Brady's Sharpshooters, 569; Jardine's Sharpshooters, 569. Regiments : 1st Sharpshooters, 70, 72, 110, 322, 326, 327, 573, 589, 1019, 1040, 1047-1049; 1st, 65, 271, 272, 569, 585, 801, 818, 850, 861, 862, 865; 2d, 70, 317, 318, 322, 323, 325-329, 346, 573, 589, 1040, 1047-1049; 5th, 64, 286, 287, 568, 581, 694, 706, 777, 785, 788; 7th, 61, 214, 216-218, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 759, 760, 762, 763, 766-769; 8th, 70, 573, 588, 1016, 1013, 1061; 16th, 65, 271, 274, 275, 569, 585, 801, 827, 818, 862, 866; 17th, 70, 320, 321, 323-326, 313, 346, 573, 589, 1079; 20th, 70, 323, 320-329, 346, 573, 589, 1047-1049; 24th, 66; 26th, 556, 582, 692, 705, 712, 714-718, 723; 27th, 70, 573, 588, 1016, 1012-1015, 1061.
Michler, Nathaniel.
Correspondence with George W. Ford.....	162
Mentioned.....	158, 159, 651
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	162
Middleburg, Va. Scout from Fairfax Court-House to. See Aldie and Mid- dleburg, Va. Scout from Fairfax Court-House to, Feb. 15-16, 1865.
Middle Department. (Union.)
Hancock, Winfield S., assigned to command of.....	3
Morris, William W., assumes temporary command of.....	1
Wallace, Low., resumes command of.....	2

	Page.
Middle Military Division. (Union.)
Hancock, Winfield S., assigned to temporary command of troops of .....	2
Transfer of headquarters of, to Washington, D. C., April 23, 1865 .....	523
Middleton, Gabriel. Mentioned .....	575
Miles, Erskine H. Mentioned .....	577
Miles, Nelson A.
Correspondence with Robert Nugent .....	726
Mentioned .....	54, 55, 63, 74-77, 97, 101, 106, 155, 192, 193, 197, 198, 202, 204, 207, 229, 246, 249, 251, 267, 268, 275, 566, 582, 602-605, 610, 612, 627-629, 631, 655-657, 674, 675, 677-687, 690-692, 695-703, 705, 707, 708, 716, 719, 723, 726, 730, 732-735, 748, 753, 760-762, 764, 768, 771, 773, 776-783, 785-788, 790-793, 795, 803, 804, 806, 807, 810, 813, 815, 853, 1106, 1185, 1190
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	709, 714
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	195, 196
Military Division of the Atlantic. (Union.) See Atlantic, Military Division of the.
Military Division of the James. (Union.) See James, Military Division of the.
Miller, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	983, 985
Miller, Charles H. Mentioned .....	508, 1137
Miller, Frank. Mentioned .....	1260
Miller, James. Mentioned .....	237, 598, 785-787
Miller, John. Mentioned .....	509
Miller, John H. Mentioned .....	1270
Miller, John W. Mentioned .....	177
Miller, Marcus P. Mentioned .....	575, 1120
Miller, Penrose. Mentioned .....	1034
Miller, Theodore. (Artillery.)
Mentioned .....	189, 358, 661, 1030, 1073-1075, 1079
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	358
Miller, Theodore. (Infantry.) Mentioned .....	578
Milligan, James F. Mentioned .....	387
Milliken, Charles A.
Mentioned .....	572, 954
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	952
Milliken, Robert H. Mentioned .....	201, 730
Millot, Augustus. Mentioned .....	1084
Mills, Charles J. Mentioned .....	599, 677, 685
Mills, Edward. Mentioned .....	1034
Mills, George W. Mentioned .....	1036
Mihn, David I. Mentioned .....	908
Milroy, Robert H. Mentioned .....	1217
Milmore, C. Ianthus. Mentioned .....	1023
Milton, Richard S.
Mentioned .....	505, 1071
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1078
Mims, William J. Mentioned .....	1274
Minetree, Joseph P. Mentioned .....	1273
Minier, Daniel. Mentioned .....	598
Mink, Charles E. Mentioned .....	570, 899
Minnegerode, Charles, jr. Mentioned .....	1305
Minnesota, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	435
Minnesota Troops. Mentioned
Company—Companies: 2d Sharpshooters, 61, 567, 583. Regiments: 1st, 4, 217, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 760, 762, 763.

	Page.
Minter, Guinn. Mentioned.....	1223
Mintzer, William M.
Mentioned.....	196, 200, 566, 719, 747
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	750
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	208
Mirick, Franklin B. Mentioned.....	335
Mississippi Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : Confederate Guards, 1275; Madison Light, 1273.
Cavalry— Regiments : Jeff. Davis Legion, 543.
Infantry— Regiments : 2d, 1272; 8th, 1208, 1200; 11th, 1272; 12th, 1273; 13th, 1269; 16th, 1273; 17th, 18th, 1269; 19th, 1273; 21st, 1269; 26th, 1272; 42d, 960, 970, 973, 1272; 48th, 1273.
Mitchell, Edward. Mentioned.....	334, 336, 1032
Mitchell, John. Mentioned.....	567, 570, 899
Mitchell, Theodore. Mentioned.....	957, 960, 1260
Mitchell, Thomas. Mentioned.....	267, 801, 848
Moale, Edward. For correspondence as A. A. G., see John Gibbon.
Mobley, Edward M. Mentioned.....	283, 569
Modica, Joseph A. Mentioned.....	1025
Moffatt, Edward B. Mentioned.....	639
Moffatt, James W. Mentioned.....	994
Moffett, Charles J. Mentioned.....	1273
Moffett, William D. Mentioned.....	1270
Moffitt, James. Mentioned.....	508, 1136
Mohler, David G. Mentioned.....	1310
Molbone, Archibald. Mentioned.....	1260
Monroe, David A. Mentioned.....	960
Monroe, Robert B. Mentioned.....	500, 1244, 1254, 1255
Montauk, Steamer. Mentioned.....	143
Montgomery, Charles S. Mentioned.....	69, 280
Montgomery, John M. Mentioned.....	895
Montgomery, Samuel. Mentioned.....	895
Montgomery, William W. Mentioned.....	1260
Moody, Young M. Mentioned.....	1274, 1278, 1286-1291
Moon, John C. Mentioned.....	579
Mooney, Albert. Mentioned.....	1082
Moore, Benjamin H. Mentioned.....	447, 1143
Moore, Charles F. Mentioned.....	224-226
Moore, Clement C. Mentioned.....	758
Moore, Dennis. Mentioned.....	925, 934
Moore, Edward B. Mentioned.....	1028
Moore, E. Lewis. Mentioned.....	412
Moore, Henry H. Mentioned.....	362
Moore, James B. Mentioned.....	1268
Moore, John W. Mentioned.....	403, 416, 419, 420
Moore, Peter L. Mentioned.....	1083, 1087
Moore, Samuel A.
Mentioned.....	213, 768, 769
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	223
Moore, Samuel J. C. Mentioned.....	519
Moore, Walter R. Mentioned.....	1273
Moore, William G. Mentioned.....	1210
Moore, William R. Mentioned.....	1038, 1064

	Page.
Moorefield, W. Va.
Expedition from Winchester, Va., to, Feb. 4-6, 1865. Report of Edward W. Whitaker .....	455
Scout from New Creek to, March 14-17, 1865. Report of Andrew J. Greenfield .....	553
Moorea, Frank H. Mentioned .....	1325
Moorhead, Samuel. Mentioned .....	599
Moorhous, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	241, 247
Moran, Charles. Mentioned .....	930
Morey, Charles C. Mentioned .....	599, 970
Morgan, Albert T. Mentioned .....	570
Morgan, Charles H. Mentioned .....	536
Morgan, David H. Mentioned .....	417
Morgan, George P. Mentioned .....	272, 841
Morgan, Henry J. Mentioned .....	1237
Morgan, J. Frank.
Mentioned .....	567
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	769
Morgan, John H. Mentioned .....	31
Morgan, William A. Mentioned .....	508, 1275, 1304
Moriarty, John. Mentioned .....	1209
Moroney, Richard. Mentioned .....	729
Morrill, Edward H. Mentioned .....	1094
Morrill, Walter G.
Mentioned .....	569
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	865
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	273
Morrill, William C. Mentioned .....	923, 944, 946-948
Morris, Ford. Mentioned .....	297
Morris, Joseph. Mentioned .....	1163, 1167
Morris, Louis M. Mentioned .....	240
Morris, Robert Murray. Mentioned .....	775, 1113, 1122, 1127, 1128
Morris, Thomas. Mentioned .....	923, 944
Morris, William. Mentioned .....	1260
Morris, William W. Assumes temporary command of Middle Department. .	1
Morrison, A. B. Mentioned .....	1270
Morrison, Samuel. Mentioned .....	522
Morrow, Albert P. Mentioned .....	499, 500
Morrow, B. Mortimer. Mentioned .....	349, 355, 571, 1016, 1029, 1061, 1064, 1068
Morrow, Henry A.
Mentioned .....	67, 68, 286, 289, 291-293
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	286
Morse, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	550
Morse, Eli. Mentioned .....	598, 1157
Morse, Frank C. Mentioned .....	947
Morse, Horace J. Mentioned .....	223
Morton, Charles H. Mentioned .....	930
Morton, John T. Mentioned .....	748, 937
Mosby, John S.
Mentioned .....	463, 464, 726, 527, 536, 552, 1308-1310
Surrender of command of, April 21, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Hancock, p. 527.
Moses, Henry S. Mentioned .....	994
Mosher, Erastus R. Mentioned .....	423

	Page.
Mosher, Frederick G.
Mentioned .....	430
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865 .....	430
Mosswood, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	542, 543, 550
Mott, Alexander B. Mentioned .....	1164
Mott, Gershom.
Mentioned .....	64, 74-77, 82, 83, 155, 191-194, 199, 203, 206, 208, 209, 213-216, 222, 227, 235-238, 249- 252, 267, 268, 568, 583, 603, 627, 628, 631, 651, 655-657, 675, 677-682, 685-687, 690, 693, 695-700, 707, 708, 710, 714, 715, 717, 732, 731, 740, 750, 757, 759, 760, 762, 763, 766, 767, 776, 778, 780-783, 785, 786, 789-795, 810, 811, 904, 905, 1202
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	223
Moulton, Albert P. Mentioned .....	135, 578, 1215
Mount Crawford, Va. Skirmish at, March 1, 1865. See Petersburg, Va.
Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 23, 1865.
Reports of
Custer, George A. ....	Merritt, Wesley. ....
Sheridan, Philip H. ....
Also general report of Grant, p. 48; Hincaries , pp. 126, 127, and Journal of Hotchkiss , p. 545.
Mount Jackson, Va. Skirmish near, March 7, 1865. See Winchester, Va.
Movement of company of prisoners from Fagneshborough to, March 3-         8, 1865, etc.
Mower, Joseph A. Mentioned .....	645
Moyer, Samuel H. Mentioned .....	924
Muhlenberg, Charles P.
Mentioned .....	579, 1180
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1226
Mulcahy, Thomas. Mentioned .....	472, 473
Mulfrey, George W. Mentioned .....	599
Mulhall, John D. Mentioned .....	200, 201
Mulholland, St. Clair A. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1- April 3, 1865 .....	200
Mullen, James. Mentioned .....	1034
Mullen, Patrick W. Mentioned .....	888
Muller, Andrew R. Mentioned .....	1091
Mundee, Charles. Mentioned .....	571, 587, 652, 955, 958, 971.
For correspondence as A. A. G., see George W. Getty.
Mundell, Walter L. Mentioned .....	606, 1260
Mundin, Jacob. Mentioned .....	930
Munford, Thomas T. Mentioned .....	128, 511, 513, 520, 1275, 1299, 1300, 1302-1304
Munger, Lewis. Mentioned .....	598, 922, 933
Munitions of War. Supplies of. Communications from
Davis, Jefferson .....	382
Lee, Robert E. ....	381
Munn, Daniel. Mentioned .....	443-446
Murdock, Albert M. Mentioned .....	71, 340
Murdock, William. Mentioned .....	757, 767, 768
Munroe's Depot, N. C. Expedition from Suffolk, Va., to, with skirmish (10th) at South Quay, Va., March 10-11, 1865. Report of George W. Lewis .....	548
Murphy, James T. Mentioned .....	183, 380
Murphy, Matthew.
Mentioned .....	61, 69, 193-195, 212, 213, 220-222
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	220

	Page.
Murphy, Murtha. Mentioned.....	200, 201
Murphy, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	872, 1260
Murray, Edmund G. Mentioned.....	1205
Murray, Henry R. Mentioned .....	958
Murray, John B. Mentioned.....	578, 1202
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1207
Murray, John R. Mentioned.....	1186
Musgrave, Hathaway. Mentioned .....	1027
Myers, Daniel. Mentioned.....	569, 854, 860
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	856, 857
Myers, Isaac E. Mentioned .....	1190
Myers, William H. Mentioned.....	569, 1260
Myers' Ford, W. Va. Scout to. See Kabletown, W. Va. Scout to Myerstown, Myers' Ford, and, March 20, 1865.
Myerstown, W. Va. Scout to. See Kabletown, W. Va. Scout to Myerstown, Myers' Ford, and, March 20, 1865.
Scout through, to Shenandoah Ferry. See Shenandoah Ferry, W. Va. Scout to, from Summit Point, March 16-17, 1865.
Myrick, John R. Mentioned .....	401
Myrtle Sound, N. C. Reconnaissance to, and skirmish at Half-Moon Battery, Jan. 19, 1865. Reports of
Abbott, Joseph C.....	453
Thompson, John .....	454
Mystic, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	472
Naber, Henry. Mentioned.....	1038, 1064
Naeely, Henry. Mentioned.....	889
Namozine Church, Va. Action at, April 3, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Bliss, James. Eco, Fitzhugh. Pennington, Alexander C. M.
Chastor, George A. Morritt, Wesley. Sheridan, Philip H.
Hall, Josiah.
Also Itinerary , p. 128.
Nausemond, C. S. S. Mentioned .....	414, 639, 1259
Nape, John. Mentioned .....	71, 331, 337
Nash, Captain. Mentioned .....	1290
Nash, Edwin A. Mentioned.....	1270, 1277
Nason, Joseph W. Mentioned .....	598
Neahr, Zachariah C. Mentioned .....	417, 431
Neal, Joseph W. Mentioned .....	1186
Neals, Pierce. Mentioned .....	286
Neely, Robert. Mentioned .....	569
Negus, Edward L. Mentioned .....	575
Neidhart, Julius. Mentioned .....	1193
Neiler, James R. Mentioned .....	922, 943
Nellis, James J. Mentioned .....	275
Nelson, Colonel. Mentioned .....	960
Nelson, George W. Mentioned.....	1311
Nelson, H. Hotchkiss. Mentioned.....	513
Nelson, Peter. Mentioned .....	167
Nelson, William. Mentioned .....	521, 1276, 1279
Neptune, Stenner. Mentioned .....	145

	Page.
Smith, John H. Mentioned .....	465, 466
Stetson, A. Bayard. Mentioned .....	507, 508
Stetz, Richard. Mentioned .....	996, 999
Stevens, Robert. Mentioned .....	509
Steville, Edwin M. Mentioned .....	1260
Stowberry, Walter C. Mentioned .....	576, 1148
Stowcomb, Delon. Mentioned .....	961
Stow Creek, W. Va.
Scout to Franklin from. See Franklin, W. Va. Scout from New Creek through Greenland Gap to, Jan. 11-15, 1865.
Scout to Moorefield from. See Moorefield, W. Va. Scout from New Creek to, March 14-17, 1865.
Stowell, John B. Mentioned .....	1197
Stowhall, Frederic C. Mentioned .....	840
Stow Hampshire Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 1st ( Batteries ), M, 85, 251, 568, 584, 660, 713, 737, 791-793.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 457.
Infantry— Regiments : 2d, 578, 595; 3d, 464, 465, 410, 413, 414; 4th, 404, 405, 416, 421, 427, 430; 5th, 198, 233, 566, 582, 692, 705, 710, 713-720, 737, 741; 6th, 574, 589, 1054, 1056, 1059, 1060; 7th, 401, 405, 416, 411, 413-415, 453; 9th, 574, 589, 1054, 1056, 1059, 1060; 10th, 578, 595; 11th, 574, 589, 1054, 1056, 1059, 1060; 12th, 147, 578, 595; 13th, 578, 604; 18th, 72, 73, 108, 573, 589, 1051-1653.
Stow Jersey Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : 1st, 572, 588, 660, 1010-1012; 2d, 85, 250, 251, 568, 584, 600, 680, 712, 713, 734, 737, 701-793; 3d, 71, 85, 183, 188, 334, 342, 358, 359, 565, 581, 660, 1071, 1075, 1686; 4th, 5th, 580, 597.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 68, 576, 592, 618, 624, 1145, 1147-1154; 3d, 505-508, 575, 591, 1134, 1136.
Infantry— Battalions : 1st ( Veteran ), 67, 571, 586, 929. Regiments : 2d ( Veteran ), 67, 571, 586; 3d, 67, 571, 580; 4th, 67, 571, 586, 928-931; 7th, 65, 238-241, 243-245, 248, 249, 568, 584, 694, 706; 8th, 65, 238-241, 244, 245, 247, 568, 584, 694, 706, 776, 777, 788, 789; 10th, 67, 571, 586, 928; 11th, 65, 298, 240, 241, 243-249, 508, 581, 694, 706, 776, 788, 789; 12th, 61, 213, 222, 567, 583, 693, 705, 767, 768, 770, 771; 14th, 308, 309, 572, 588, 981-983, 986, 987, 989; 15th, 67, 571, 586, 928, 929; 38th, 577, 593; 39th, 573, 589, 1050-1658; 40th, 67, 571, 586, 910, 927, 928.
Stowkirk, Rodney B. Mentioned .....	241
Stowland, Frank F. Mentioned .....	1229, 1236, 1237
Stowlin, Alfred S. Mentioned .....	1094
Stowman, William H. Mentioned .....	606, 1260
Stowt, Alonzo H. Mentioned .....	972
Stowton, Warner. Mentioned .....	590
Stow York Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 2d, 197, 566, 582, 692, 705, 713, 715-717, 720-722; 4th, 198, 267, 209, 211, 566, 582, 693, 705, 724, 725, 730, 732, 733, 744; 4th ( Batteries ), C, L, 568, 584; 6th, 576, 593; 8th, 64, 358, 364, 365, 507, 583, 692, 693, 705; 8th ( Batteries ), G, 71, 757, 765; 9th, 101, 308-313, 572, 588, 979, 992, 994, 995, 997, 1000, 1002, 1003; 9th ( Batteries ), L, 572, 583; 10th, 145, 576, 593, 1172, 1173; 13th, 548; 13th ( Batteries ), A, H, 577, 593, 963; 14th, 70, 317, 320, 322, 331-334, 336, 341, 342, 364, 365, 573, 589, 1071; 15th, 66, 280, 569, 585, 872, 873; 15th ( Batteries ), M, 570, 586; 16th, 404; 16th ( Batteries ), E, H, 577, 593; M, 472.

New York Troops. Mentioned—Continued.

Artillery, Light—Batteries: 1st, 572, 588, 660, 979, 1009-1013; 3d, 308, 572, 588, 660, 955, 1009-1011, 1013; 7th, 137, 577, 593, 661; 8th, 548; 11th, 251, 568, 581, 660, 778, 791-793; 12th, 85, 565, 581, 660; 16th, 402-401; 17th, 129, 137, 570, 595, 1180, 1215, 1223-1225; 19th, 71, 334, 342, 355, 357-359, 361, 362, 574, 590, 660, 1071, 1075, 1086; 27th, 71, 362, 363, 574, 590, 660, 1071, 1075, 1078, 1082, 1086, 1087; 33d, 577, 593; 34th, 71, 323, 358, 363, 364, 574, 590, 660, 1070, 1075, 1087, 1088. Regiments: 1st (Batteries), B, 100, 297, 570, 586, 660, 899-901; C, 297, 565, 581, 660, 898, 1071, 1078, 1080-1082; D, 67, 100, 297, 570, 586, 660, 899-901; E, 297, 565, 581, 660, 898, 1071, 1083, 1084; G, 71, 85, 189, 357, 359, 565, 581, 660, 1071, 1084, 1085; H, 106, 570, 586, 660, 814, 858, 899-901; I, 67, 297, 565, 581, 660, 898, 1071, 1085; 3d (Batteries), E, H, K, M, 137, 579, 595.

Cavalry—Companies: Oneida, 61-63, 565, 581. Regiments: 1st (Lincoln), 575, 592; 2d (Harris' Light), 505-507, 575, 591, 1134, 1139; 2d (Mounted Rifles), 68, 146, 576, 592, 618, 1156, 1158, 1159; 3d, 392, 393, 548; 4th, 489, 497, 528, 534, 535; 5th, 540; 6th, 120, 122, 452, 489, 497, 498, 575, 591, 1123; 7th,* 62, 63, 148, 372, 458, 512, 555, 556, 576; 8th, 457, 476, 508, 509, 575, 591, 1131, 1137, 1138; 9th, 490, 497, 498, 530, 575, 591; 10th, 68, 576, 592, 618, 1145, 1147, 1149; 13th, 551, 554; 15th, 569, 575, 591, 1138-1140; 16th, 541, 542, 545-548, 552, 1307, 1308, 1317-1322; 19th, 491, 497, 575, 591; 20th, 147, 577, 580, 593, 597, 1244, 1248, 1249; 21st, 462-461, 467; 22d, 467, 528, 532, 533, 1322, 1323; 24th, 68, 576, 592, 618, 1145-1147, 1152; 25th, 489, 495.

Engineers—Regiments: 1st, 576, 593, 1165; 15th, 72, 73, 159, 172, 404, 406, 408, 565, 581, 611, 642, 645; 50th, 72-74, 157-163, 565, 581, 642-650.

Infantry—Battalions: 1st Sharpshooters, 570, 586. Regiments: 3d, 403, 405, 416, 418; 5th (Veteran), 66, 280, 592, 585, 872, 873; 7th, 202, 204, 566, 582, 693, 705, 731-737, 741; 10th, 61, 222, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 767-769, 771, 772; 39th, 80, 165, 202, 204, 205, 566, 582, 693, 705, 734, 735, 738-740; 40th, 64, 83, 224, 227, 231, 233, 568, 583, 693, 706, 778, 779, 783; 41st, 576, 593; 43d, 572, 587, 975; 46th, 70, 327, 330, 363, 573, 589, 1017, 1049, 1050, 1087; 47th, 48th, 403, 405, 416, 419, 426; 49th, 572, 587, 975; 51st, 573, 589, 1654, 1056, 1058; 52d, 80, 202, 205, 566, 582, 693, 705, 735, 739-741; 59th, 63, 214, 218, 567, 583, 693, 705, 759, 760, 762, 766; 61st, 77, 196-198, 566, 582, 692, 705, 715, 716, 719, 721, 722; 62d, 362, 363, 571, 567, 954, 962; 63d, 199, 566, 582, 692, 705, 724, 727, 728; 64th, 198, 267, 298, 566, 582, 693, 705, 719, 723, 745-749; 65th, 67, 571, 587, 910, 911, 931-933, 935, 936; 66th, 200, 566, 582, 693, 745, 747, 749, 756; 69th, 200, 201, 566, 582, 692, 705, 724, 728-731; 73d, 61, 229, 232, 568, 583, 693, 706, 777, 779, 781-784; 77th, 572, 587, 975; 79th, 573, 588; 80th, 73, 574, 590, 641, 1092, 1096, 1097; 81st, 573, 594; 86th, 61, 230, 232-234, 568, 583, 693, 706, 779, 783, 784; 88th, 201, 202, 566, 582, 692, 705, 724, 730-732; 89th, 573, 594, 1183, 1203, 1206, 1207, 1209; 91st, 96, 570, 585, 881-889; 93d, 61, 237, 568, 584, 694, 706, 776, 785, 786, 788; 94th, 67, 286, 290, 570, 586, 881, 897, 898; 95th, 67, 286, 290, 570, 586, 896, 897; 96th, 578, 595; 97th, 66, 570, 586, 890, 891; 98th, 578, 594; 100th, 577, 594, 1183, 1192-1195, 1200-1202; 103d, 576, 593; 104th, 65, 598, 584; 106th, 572, 588, 981-983, 987, 988; 108th, 61, 212, 222, 567, 583, 693, 705, 766-768, 772, 773; 109th, 70, 109, 324, 573, 588, 1016, 1012, 1013, 1045, 1046, 1061; 111th, 80, 198, 202, 263, 205-207, 566, 582, 693, 705, 710, 730, 734, 735, 741, 742; 112th, 403, 405, 416, 418; 115th, 464, 405, 416, 421, 422, 427; 117th, 403, 405, 416, 418, 419; 118th, 578, 595; 120th, 65, 239-241, 243, 244, 246-249, 568, 584, 694, 706, 776, 779, 788, 789, 1207; 121st, 67, 299, 574, 587, 910, 914, 931, 932, 936-939, 941, 947; 122d, 303, 572, 587, 975; 124th, 61, 233, 234, 237, 568, 583, 693, 706, 777, 778, 781, 783;

*Also called 1st Rifles.

New York Troops. Mentioned—Continued.

Page.

- Infantry—Regiments: 125th, 80, 195, 202, 566, 582, 693, 705, 735, 742; 126th, 80, 195, 202, 205-207, 566, 582, 693, 705, 733-735, 743, 744; 139th, 578, 594; 140th, 66, 280, 569, 585, 872, 873; 142d, 403, 405, 416, 418, 419; 146th, 66, 280, 569, 585, 872, 873; 147th, 67, 99, 286, 290, 570, 586, 806, 897; 148th, 578, 594, 1202, 1205, 1207, 1208; 151st, 572, 588, 981, 983, 986, 987, 989; 152d, 68, 214, 219, 567, 583, 693, 705, 759, 762; 155th, 64, 567, 583, 693, 705, 764; 158th, 578, 594, 1183, 1203, 1205, 1208, 1209; 160th, 534; 164th, 64, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 765; 169th, 132, 401, 405, 416, 421-423, 427; 170th, 64, 567, 583, 693, 705, 764; 179th, 574, 589, 1054, 1056, 1059, 1060; 182d, 64, 220, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 764, 765; 184th, 577, 593; 185th, 65, 90, 569, 584, 801, 841, 847, 850, 851; 186th, 574, 589, 1056, 1059, 1060; 187th, 65, 569, 584, 853, 854, 856, 857, 859, 860; 188th, 65, 569, 584, 801, 846, 848, 853-855, 858, 859; 189th, 65, 569, 584, 851, 853, 854, 856, 857, 859, 860.
- Nicholls, Joseph C. Mentioned..... 766, 770
- Nichols, Asahel W. Mentioned..... 573, 1023, 1047
- Nichols, Edwin.
Mentioned..... 577, 1194
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865..... 1200
- Nichols, George S. Mentioned..... 480, 497, 529
- Nichols, Henry J. Mentioned..... 303, 960
- Nichols, John S. Mentioned..... 930
- Nichols, Samuel E. Mentioned..... 947
- Nicholson, William T. Mentioned..... 1286
- Nickel, Peter. Mentioned..... 599
- Nieman, George W. Mentioned..... 505
- Nightingale, Steamer. Mentioned..... 143
- Nightingale, Charles L. Mentioned..... 335, 338
- Niles, Peter H. Mentioned..... 484
- Nimmon, John S. Mentioned..... 1247, 1255
- Noblett, Francis W. Mentioned..... 532
- Noel, David. Mentioned..... 895
- Noggle, Dorman L. Mentioned..... 580
- Noonan, John G. Mentioned..... 232
- Noonan, Michael. Mentioned..... 1034
- Norment, George M. Mentioned..... 809, 1272
- Norris, Grafton. Mentioned..... 1193, 1194, 1199, 1200
- North Carolina.
Designated as the District of North Carolina in the Department of the South..... 1
Military Departments embracing..... 1, 2
Military designation of..... 1
- North Carolina, Department of. (Union.)
Constituted..... 1
Schofield, John M., assigned to command of..... 1
- North Carolina Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Artillery, Light—Battalions: 13th (Batteries), C, 1275. Batteries: Branch, 1269; Rowan, 1269. Regiments: 1st (Batteries), C, 1273; E, 1275.
Cavalry—Battalions: 16th, 827, 1276. Regiments: 1st, 2d, 3d, 1275; 4th, 1275, 1276.

North Carolina Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate)—Continued.

Infantry— Battalions : 1st Sharpshooters, 1270; 2d, 1270. Regiments : 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 1270; 6th, 1259, 1270; 7th, 1286; 11th, 1272; 12th, 1270; 13th, 1272; 14th, 1270; 15th, 16th, 1272; 18th, 1258, 1272, 1285; 20th, 1270; 21st, 786, 1270; 22d, 1272; 23d, 1270; 24th, 25th, 1274; 26th, 27th, 1272; 28th, 1272, 1285; 30th, 32d, 1270; 33d, 1272, 1285; 34th, 809, 1272; 35th, 1274; 37th, 1272, 1285; 38th, 1272; 43d, 1270; 44th, 1272; 45th, 1065, 1270; 46th, 916, 1207, 1257, 1272; 47th, 1272; 48th, 1207, 1272; 49th, 1274; 52d, 1272; 53d, 54th, 1270; 55th, 1272; 56th, 1274; 57th, 335, 340, 1032, 1270.
Northamer, Steamer. Mentioned .....	543, 549
Northern Virginia, Army of. (Confederate.)
Farewell address of Robert E. Lee to .....	1267
Organization, strength, etc., of.
Jan. 10, 1865 .....	383, 384
Jan. 26-31, 1865 .....	384, 385
Jan. 31, 1865 .....	385, 386
Feb. 10, 1865 .....	386, 387
Feb. 20, 1865 .....	387, 388
Feb. 21-March 1, 1865 .....	388-390
March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1207-1276
Surrender of, at Appomattox Court-House, Va. See Appomattox Court-House (Clover Hill), Va. Surrender of Army of Northern Virginia at, April 9, 1865.
Troops of, paroled at Appomattox Court-House, Va., April 9, 1865. ....	1277-1279
Northrop, B. Theodore. Mentioned .....	923, 943
Northrup, James E. Mentioned .....	1204
Norton, Elliott M. Mentioned .....	1260
Norton, John R. Mentioned .....	1260
Norton, Llewellyn P. Mentioned .....	1200
Norton, Perez L. Mentioned .....	284, 286, 875, 876
Norton, Warren A. Mentioned .....	1022, 1044
Norvell, Erastus S. Mentioned .....	979
Norvell, John M. Mentioned .....	758, 762
Nugent, Charles E. Mentioned .....	590
Nugent, James H. Mentioned .....	930
Nugent, Robert.
Correspondence with Nelson A. Miles .....	726
Mentioned .....	81, 196-198, 203, 206, 566, 582, 677, 692, 696, 705, 710, 711, 713, 745, 732, 737, 739, 744, 746
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	724
Nye, Ephraim B. Mentioned .....	71
Oakes, William F. Mentioned .....	335, 340
Oakman, Hiram A. Mentioned .....	404
Oats, Jacob. Mentioned .....	540
Obenchain, ———. Mentioned .....	521
Obourn, Samuel P. Mentioned .....	895
O'Brien, Charles A. Mentioned .....	334, 344, 1024
O'Brien, John.
Mentioned .....	608, 1070
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	182
O'Brien, Theobald M. Mentioned .....	331, 338
O'Brien, William. Mentioned .....	930
O'Brien, Peter. Mentioned .....	509

	Page.
Ocker, Thomas. Mentioned .....	598, 1000
O'Connell, Patrick A. Mentioned .....	1022
Odell, John. Mentioned .....	71, 174, 185
O'Donnell, John. Mentioned .....	335, 340, 1032
O'Donovan, Cornelius. Mentioned .....	161
O'Ferrall, Charles T. Mentioned .....	520
Ogden, William A. Mentioned .....	1025
Ohio Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Light— Regiments : 1st ( Batteries ), II, 565, 581, 600, 1011.
Cavalry— Regiments : 2d, 456, 457, 505-508, 575, 591, 1134, 1135, 1137; 6th, 68, 253, 257, 371, 576, 592, 618, 624, 1156, 1158, 1159; 8th, 448-450, 512, 553, 1310-1314, 1325, 1326; 13th, 68, 113, 119, 146, 576, 592, 618, 624, 1157-1159.
Infantry— Regiments : 4th, 61, 212, 222, 567, 583, 693, 703, 757, 760-768; 34th, 448-450, 512; 60th, 70, 326, 327, 330, 573, 589, 1047; 62d, 577, 594, 1183, 1185-1188, 1190, 1191, 1196; 67th, 577, 594, 1180, 1183, 1185-1191, 1203; 110th, 106, 308-310, 312, 313, 572, 588, 979, 992, 994-997, 1000, 1003, 1004; 116th, 134, 578, 595, 1217; 122d, 106, 308-310, 312, 313, 572, 588, 979, 992, 993, 995, 997, 1004, 1005, 1008; 123d, 134, 578, 595, 1169, 1214-1216, 1218, 1219, 1221; 126th, 308-311, 313, 314, 572, 588, 992, 995, 996, 999, 1000, 1005, 1006.
O'Keefe, Joseph. Mentioned .....	598, 1115
O'Keefe, Keete S. Mentioned .....	72, 404, 406, 408, 642
Olcott, Egbert.
Correspondence with Joseph E. Hamblin .....	936, 938
Mentioned .....	293, 300, 571, 912, 931-933, 937, 939
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	936
Olcott, Egbert W. Mentioned .....	580, 1232, 1246, 1247
Old, Charles. Mentioned .....	1303
Oldershaw, John. Mentioned .....	726
Oley, John H. Mentioned .....	525
Oliver, Charles. Mentioned .....	324, 335, 342, 380, 1033
Oliver, Charles A. Mentioned .....	241
Oliver, William H. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	534
Olmsted, William A.
Mentioned .....	63, 212, 213, 217, 220-222, 567, 583, 688, 689, 693, 705, 757, 758, 766, 768
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	759, 762
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	214
Oltmanns, C. W. Mentioned .....	511-515, 518
O'Murphy, Patrick. Mentioned .....	599, 1186, 1190
O'Neill, Henry.
Mentioned .....	569
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	806
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	276
Opie, H. L., Mrs. Mentioned .....	511
Ord, Edward O. C.
Assignment to command .....	3
Assumes command of Department of Virginia and North Carolina and Army of the James .....	3
Correspondence with
Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A. ....	1163, 1167
Grant, U. S. ....	50
Ludlow, Benjamin C. ....	472
Mackenzie, Randal S. ....	1247

Page.

Ord, Edward O. C.—Continued.

Mentioned .....	16, 30, 44, 49-57, 61-63, 128, 132, 145, 153, 172, 373, 374, 376, 378, 422, 472, 480, 576, 592, 597, 600, 601, 605, 610, 611, 626, 627, 631, 671, 678, 679, 708, 818, 877, 955, 1104, 1109, 1110, 1120, 1161, 1162, 1165, 1168, 1170, 1171, 1174, 1175, 1214, 1227, 1228, 1232, 1244, 1245
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1160
Ord, Flacidus. Mentioned.....	1161
Ordway, George B. Mentioned.....	973
Organization, Strength, etc.
Confederate Troops .....	383-390, 1267-1276
Union Troops.....	61-63, 403, 404, 475, 561-580
Orr, Robert E. Mentioned.....	959, 1260
Osband, Embury D. Mentioned.....	38
Osborn, Thomas O.
Correspondence with John Gibban .....	1183
Mentioned.....	130, 577, 581, 1179-1181, 1188, 1190, 1191, 1194-1196, 1200, 1203, 1204
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1185
Otis, Frank G. Mentioned.....	1195
Ottarson, Asa C. Mentioned .....	1036
Otterson, George W. Mentioned.....	1035
Overmyer, John B. Mentioned .....	570, 890
Overturf, John W. Mentioned.....	535
Owen, Edward. Mentioned .....	1273
Owen, Thomas J. Mentioned.....	494
Owen, William Miller. Mentioned.....	302, 1273, 1279
Owens, Wesley. Report of expedition through Pocahontas and Pendleton Committee, W. Va., and Highland County, Va., June 1-13, 1865....	1325
Page, Charles.
Mentioned .....	615, 622
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	689
Page, George H. Mentioned.....	709
Page, Mason W. Mentioned.....	1074, 1078, 1082
Paine, Charles J.
Mentioned .....	139, 143, 145, 395, 397-400, 403-406, 408, 410, 411, 418, 453
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 3-17, 1865. ....	423
Paine, Edward M. Mentioned .....	688
Paine, Jedediah C. Mentioned .....	1163
Paine, John L. Mentioned .....	157
Paine, Robert T. Mentioned .....	623
Paine, William H. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	653
Paine's Cross-Roads, Va. Skirmish at. April 5, 1865. See Appomattox, Va.,     Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Cruck, George.

Lee, Fitzhugh.

Sheridan, Philip H.

Davies, Henry E., Jr.

Lee, G. W. Custis.

Yoong, Samuel B. M.

Kerstew, Joseph B.

Robbins, Walter R.

Also Itineraries, pp. 114-116.

Painter, George W. Mentioned .....	709
Palmer, Abraham. Mentioned.....	924
Palmer, Asa C. Mentioned .....	647, 648
Palmer, Charles S. Mentioned.....	567, 688, 757, 761, 763
Palmer, Frank T. Mentioned .....	1091
Palmer, Imus N. Mentioned.....	44
Palmer, Joseph E. Mentioned.....	1204

	Page
Palmer, William J. Mentioned .....	40
Palmer, William L. Mentioned .....	774
Pancoast, John R. Mentioned .....	709
Parke, John B. Mentioned .....	319, 1019, 1021
Parke, John G.
Correspondence with
Barstow, Simon P. ....	318
Harttrafft, John P. ....	345, 1067
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	319
Meade, George G. ....	1017, 1018, 1020, 1031
Wright, Horatio G. ....	319
Mentioned .... 50, 51, 53-55, 62, 63, 68, 70, 72-75, 86, 87, 90, 91, 94, 96-98, 100, 102, 103, 107, 112, 119, 149, 151, 154-158, 160-163, 172, 176, 178, 265, 298, 300, 301, 310, 321, 315, 317, 361, 382, 573, 588, 590, 600, 601, 603-605, 607, 609-612, 616-618, 626, 627, 629, 630, 634, 635, 637, 638, 641, 658-661, 663, 665, 667-670, 678, 679, 696, 782, 903, 904, 910, 911, 913, 932, 936, 938, 951, 967, 983, 994, 1017, 1018, 1031, 1041, 1061, 1075, 1080, 1061, 1070, 1074, 1085, 1091-1094, 1099, 1174, 1207
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1015
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	315, 316
Resumes command of 9th Army Corps .....	3
Parker, Ely S. Mentioned .....	808
Parker, Ezra K. Mentioned .....	505, 1011
Parker, Foxhall A. Mentioned .....	542
Parker, Francis H. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	607
Parker, George B.
Mentioned .....	615
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	634
Parker, Hiram N. Mentioned .....	1205
Parker, Thomas. Mentioned .....	926, 944, 1260
Parker, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	199
Parnelee, Uriah N. Mentioned .....	598
Parr, John G.
Mentioned .....	303, 304, 871
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	303
Parsons, Amos. Mentioned .....	930
Parsons, Augustin N.
Mentioned .....	572, 1010
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1011
Parsons, Charles B. Mentioned .....	377, 1166, 1167
Parsons, Henry. Mentioned .....	1207
Parsons, Oliver A. Mentioned .....	959
Parsons, Theron E. Mentioned .....	769
Partridge, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	271, 272, 569, 801, 848
Pasco, Clinton. Mentioned .....	743
Patch, Benjamin A. Mentioned .....	961
Patchell, James. Mentioned .....	303, 571
Patrick, Marsena R. Mentioned .....	61, 544, 607, 640, 1097
Pattee, Joseph B.
Mentioned .....	570, 841, 875, 876
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	877
Patterson, Corydon E. Mentioned .....	994

	Page.
Patterson, Henry D.
Mentioned .....	668, 669, 1071
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	180
Patterson, Joab N. Mentioned .....	578
Patterson, Stephen. Mentioned .....	598, 766, 768
Patterson's Creek, W. Va. Affair near, March 30, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Carroll , p. 538.
Patterson's Creek Station, W. Va. Skirmish near, March 22, 1865. Report of Daniel D. Johnson .....	555
Patton, Alexander G. Mentioned .....	543
Patton, Cyrus. Mentioned .....	135, 599
Patton, James. Mentioned .....	1186, 1190
Paul, Charles R. Mentioned .....	913, 927, 928
For correspondence as A. A. G., see William H. Penrose .
Paul, D'Aroy. Correspondence with U. S. Grant .....	1018
Paul, Henry W. Mentioned .....	1247
Paxton, Henry B. Mentioned .....	924
Paxton, John R. Mentioned .....	707
Paxton, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	1270
Payne, Mrs. Mentioned .....	537
Payne, Charles J. Mentioned .....	425
Payne, Irvin C. Mentioned .....	1260
Payne, William H. Mentioned .....	390, 512, 514, 1275, 1278, 1299
Peace, Abner D. Mentioned .....	1270
Peach Grove, Va. Skirmish near, March 12, 1865. Reports of
Gamble, William .....	551
Gansvoort, Henry S. ....	551
Pealer, Russel R. Mentioned .....	806
Pearson, Alfred L.
Correspondence with Governor K. Warren .....	272, 273
Mentioned .....	65, 255, 272, 278, 279, 299, 569, 585, 801, 810-819, 840, 848-850, 852, 867
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	861
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	270
Pearson, Richard. Mentioned .....	1003
Pease, Charles B. Mentioned .....	257
Peck, William R. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	391
Peckham, Peleg E. Mentioned .....	599, 1055, 1058
Pegram, James W. Mentioned .....	980, 984, 986
Pegram, John. Mentioned .....	149, 151, 388, 390, 392, 514, 608, 621, 1270, 1277
Pegram, William J. Mentioned .....	381, 1274, 1279
Pefrco, Luther H. Mentioned .....	1020
Pell, Abijah S. Mentioned .....	1237
Pell, Duncan A. Mentioned .....	319, 1019
Pelton, John G. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	706
Pelton, John M. Mentioned .....	599
Pendergast, Thomas. Mentioned .....	961
Pendleton, Edmund. Mentioned .....	1271
Pendleton, William N.
Mentioned .....	384, 386, 388, 521, (260), 1279, 1285
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1280

	Page
Pendleton County, W. Va. Expedition through. See Pocahontas and Pendleton Counties, W. Va., and Highland County, Va. Expedition through, June 1-13, 1865.
Pendrell, William. Mentioned .....	577
Ponick, Nathan. Mentioned .....	1273
Pennington, Alexander C. M.
Mentioned .. 126, 176, 480-182, 485, 498, 502, 503, 575, 591, 1103, 1110, 1118, 1130-1132
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1134
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865 .....	504
Pennsylvania Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 2d, 576, 593; 3d, 577, 593; 3d ( Batteries ), D, 576, 592; E, 577, 593, 664; I, 576, 592; M, 577, 593, 664.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : D, 71, 365, 574, 590, 660, 1071, 1075-1077, 1089. Regiments : 1st ( Batteries ), A, 138, 579, 595; B, 71, 190, 565, 581, 660, 1071, 1078, 1082, 1088, 1089; E, 580, 597; F, 85, 250, 565, 582, 660.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 68, 570, 592, 618, 1145-1147; 2d, 68, 114, 115, 366, 367, 574, 590, 618; 3d, 61, 163-165, 564, 581, 610; 4th, 65, 68, 115, 147, 368, 369, 568, 576, 584, 592, 618, 621, 1151-1156; 5th, 148, 580, 597, 1244-1246, 1248, 1249; 6th, 124, 125, 488, 490-492, 499, 500, 575, 591, 1128; 8th, 68, 115-117, 147, 366, 368-370, 576, 592, 618, 621, 1154-1156; 11th, 148, 580, 597, 1244-1246, 1252, 1254-1257, 1324, 1325; 12th, 455, 520, 535; 13th, 68, 113, 115, 117, 366-368, 370, 618, 621, 623; 14th, 462-465; 16th, 68, 117, 118, 147, 366, 368, 370, 576, 592, 618, 624, 1154-1156; 17th, 491, 497, 575, 591; 18th, 505, 533, 1322; 20th, 121, 489, 497, 575, 591; 21st, 68, 113, 119, 147, 371, 571, 576, 586, 592, 618, 623, 1156; 22d, 451, 452, 553, 554.
Infantry— Regiments : 11th, 66, 570, 586, 890, 897; 45th, 48th, 573, 589, 1056-1058; 49th, 67, 302, 571, 587, 941, 943, 948, 949; 50th, 70, 325, 330, 331, 573, 589, 1047, 1050; 51st, 70, 108, 109, 181, 573, 588, 1016, 1039, 1043, 1044; 53d, 196, 207-209, 566, 582, 693, 705, 744-747, 749-752; 54th, 135, 578, 595, 1169, 1215, 1219, 1220; 55th, 578, 594, 1202, 1203, 1205, 1210; 56th, 67, 69, 286, 290, 570, 586, 881, 896, 897; 57th, 61, 233, 235-237, 568, 581, 694, 706, 770, 785, 786, 788; 58th, 578, 595; 61st, 572, 587, 954, 975; 67th, 308-311, 313-315, 572, 588, 879, 992, 994-997, 1006-1008; 68th, 73, 574, 590, 641, 1092, 1097, 1098; 69th, 61, 212, 213, 222, 223, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 766-769, 773, 774; 76th, 403, 405, 416, 419, 420; 81st, 198, 566, 582, 692, 705, 713, 715, 716; 82d, 67, 302, 571, 587, 926, 941, 942, 949-951; 83d, 65, 271, 275, 569, 585, 862; 85th, 577, 594; 87th, 572, 588, 981-983, 990; 88th, 66, 291, 292, 570, 586, 881, 896, 897; 91st, 65, 271, 275, 276, 569, 585, 862, 866; 93d, 302, 303, 571, 587, 963, 964; 95th, 67, 571, 587, 911, 931-933, 936-939; 97th, 403, 405, 416, 419, 420; 98th, 571, 587, 963-965; 99th, 61, 227, 231, 232, 234, 568, 589, 693, 706, 783; 100th, 70, 318, 320, 323, 324, 331, 333, 335, 336, 342, 343, 347, 353, 573, 589, 1050, 1051, 1053; 102d, 303, 571, 587, 963, 965; 104th, 576, 593; 105th, 61, 161, 224, 225, 227, 235, 237, 568, 581, 694, 706, 779, 785, 786, 788; 106th, 61, 212, 567, 583, 693, 705, 757, 767-769, 774, 775; 107th, 67, 286, 290-295, 570, 586, 890-895; 110th, 61, 227, 230, 233-235, 241, 568, 583, 693, 706, 777, 779, 781-783; 114th, 73, 571, 590, 641, 1092, 1099, 1100; 116th, 207-210, 566, 582, 693, 705, 745, 747, 750, 752, 753; 118th, 65, 271, 272, 275-277, 569, 585, 801, 862, 866, 867; 119th, 67, 302, 571, 587, 941, 942, 948-951; 121st, 67, 286, 290, 570, 586, 881, 897; 138th, 309, 310, 572, 588, 980, 992, 993, 995, 997, 1001, 1006-1009; 139th, 303, 304, 571, 587, 963, 975, 966; 140th, 566, 582, 692, 705, 712, 714-717, 723, 724, 753; 141st, 61, 225, 235-237, 568, 584, 694, 706, 785, 788; 142d, 67, 286, 290, 296, 570, 586, 881, 897; 143d, 66; 145th, 207, 210, 566, 582, 693, 705, 745-747, 751, 753, 754, 756; 148th, 210, 211, 566, 582, 693, 705, 726, 745-747, 750, 751, 754-756; 149th, 150th, 66;

Pennsylvania Troops. Mentioned—Continued.

Infantry— Regiments : 155th, 65, 271, 274, 276, 569, 585, 801, 841, 848, 861, 862, 867, 868; 157th, 66, 91, 284, 570, 585, 875-879; 183d, 566, 582, 602, 705, 744, 745, 747, 756; 184th, 63, 214, 217, 219, 567, 583, 693, 705, 759, 760, 762; 183th, 578, 595; 190th, 66, 281, 570, 585, 841, 875-878; 191st, 66, 91, 284, 570, 585, 841, 875-878; 198th, 65, 268, 569, 584, 800, 816, 841, 847, 849-851; 199th, 577, 594, 1183, 1185-1192; 200th, 68, 70, 111, 112, 317, 320, 321, 323, 344-348, 350-354, 574, 590, 1016, 1061, 1063-1065; 203d, 403, 405, 416, 419-421; 205th, 68, 71, 111, 345, 347, 350, 354, 355, 574, 590, 1016, 1061, 1063-1065, 1068, 1069; 206th, 147, 577, 594, 1192; 207th, 68, 71, 111, 345, 347, 350, 354, 355, 574, 590, 1016, 1061, 1063-1065, 1068, 1069; 208th, 68, 70, 111, 112, 333, 345-348, 350, 352, 353, 574, 590, 1016, 1061, 1063-1065, 1092; 209th, 68, 70, 111, 320, 323, 345-347, 350, 351, 353, 354, 574, 590, 1016, 1061, 1063-1065, 1092; 210th, 66, 91, 283, 570, 585, 875, 876, 878, 879; 211th, 68, 71, 111, 321, 345, 347, 350-352, 354, 355, 574, 590, 1016, 1061, 1063-1065, 1068, 1069.
Pennypacker, Galusha. Mentioned . . . . .	131, 398, 400, 403, 405, 406, 415, 416, 419, 420, 481
Pennypacker, James M. Mentioned . . . . .	1088
Penrose, James W. Mentioned . . . . .	919, 927, 928
Penrose, William H. . . . .
Correspondence with Baldwin Hufty . . . . .	929
Mentioned . . . . .	102, 103, 571, 586, 904, 910-913, 916-919, 924, 927, 931, 941, 950
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 . . . . .	927
Pentecost, Joseph H. Mentioned . . . . .	71, 329, 334, 335, 342, 1024
Perdue, Dewitt M. Mentioned . . . . .	565, 1085
Perkins, Ellery D. Mentioned . . . . .	1190
Perkins, George W. Mentioned . . . . .	226, 229
Perkins, Joseph G. Mentioned . . . . .	579
Perkins, William A. Mentioned . . . . .	1200
Perrin, William K. Mentioned . . . . .	1274
Perrine, Isaac. Mentioned . . . . .	328, 1023
Perry, Clinton. Mentioned . . . . .	570
Perry, Edward C. Mentioned . . . . .	1271
Perry, William F. Mentioned . . . . .	1268, 1277
Perry, William H. Mentioned . . . . .	599, 952
Personius, Walker V. Mentioned . . . . .	618
Petersburg, Va. . . . .
Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of, April 2, 1865. . . . .
Casualties. Returns of. Union Troops . . . . .	680, 908, 912, 957, 995, 1020, 1056, 1058, 1060, 1065
Communications from . . . . .
Agee, George . . . . .	673
Barber, Merritt . . . . .	668
Barlow, Francis C. . . . .	688
Bolton, William J. . . . .	1044
Foster, Robert S. . . . .	1194
Grant, U. S. . . . .	1262
Hufty, Baldwin . . . . .	929
Humphreys, Andrew A. . . . .	688
Lounsberry, Clement A. . . . .	1048
Mende, George G. . . . .	1017, 1018
Osborn, Thomas O. . . . .	1183
Wright, Horatio G. . . . .	902
Congratulatory address to 6th Army Corps. Mende . . . . .	909

Petersburg, Va.—Continued.

Page.

Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of, April 2, 1865.

Congratulatory Orders.

Ferraro, Edward .....	1173
Gibbon, John .....	1176
Hartsuff, George L. ....	1172

See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865. Reports of.

Abbot, Henry L.	Harlenbergh, Jacob B.	Ord, Edward O. C.
Adams, Henry C.	Harn, William A.	Oshorn, Thomas O.
Adams, J. Webb.	Harper, John.	Parke, John C.
Allen, Crawford, Jr.	Harrison, Samuel.	Parsana, Augustin N.
Allen, Thomas S.	Harris, Thomas M.	Pennington, William N.
Amshien, Frederick J.	Hartnuff, John F.	Penrose, William H.
Anthony, George T.	Haskell, Lowellyn F.	Phillips, Charles A.
Barnes, George H.	Hays, William.	Phillips, Charles B.
Bassett, Isaac C.	Hazard, John G.	Pier, Colwert K.
Becker, Adolph.	Hean, B. Frank.	Pierce, Byron R.
Benham, Henry W.	Hickman, Baynton J.	Plympton, Homer A.
Blackley, John H.	Hickerson, Francis G.	Potter, Andrew.
Birdbill, James.	Hill, George H.	Rhodes, Samuel H.
Bognrhus, Charles.	Hill, Joseph C.	Rhodes, Eliza H.
Break, George.	Hinkus, Archibald.	Ritchie, David P.
Brinklé, John R.	Hopper, George F.	Roberts, Robert N.
Brinson, James C.	Hufey, Bahlwin.	Rosner, Jacob.
Brough, Joseph M.	Humphreys, Andrew A.	Rogers, William H.
Culla, Charles H. T.	Hyde, Thomas W.	Seymour, Truman.
Cowan, Andrew.	Jamway, Jacob J.	Shaw, James, Jr.
Cox, Robert C.	Kaifer, J. Warren.	Smart, Charles.
Crafts, Welcome A.	Kellogg, Horace.	Smith, Benjamin P.
Curtin, John I.	Kennedy, Donald A.	Snyder, James W.
Cutler, William B.	Lane, James H.	Sims, Valentine H.
Damon, George H.	Lao, Robert E.	Smart, James T.
Dandy, George B.	Lisell, John A.	Tearney, James.
Davis, Charles L.	McAlister, Robert.	Tidball, John C.
Day, Albert A.	McCall, William H. H.	Tippin, Andrew H.
De Troemant, Rogis	McClellan, Samuel A.	True, Edward A.
Doble, William.	McClelland, William.	Trux, William S.
Duntlelay, Ulysses.	McCormann, Matthew R.	Turner, John W.
Eaton, John B.	McDonnell, Andrew N.	Twitshell, Adolbert B.
Edwards, Oliver.	MacDougall, Clinton D.	Van Etten, Gramma R.
Ehler, Samuel S.	McGregor, James.	Yorls, Alvin C.
Ely, Ralph.	Melvor, James P.	Walt, Charles.
Fairchild, Harriman S.	McNary, William H.	Whatt, Charles P.
Fisk, Henry C.	Mathews, Joseph A.	Warner, James M.
Foster, Robert S.	Mathewson, Angell.	Waterhouse, John R.
Gassler, Bernhard.	Maule, George G.	Wheaton, Frank.
Getty, George W.	Merrill, Augustus.	Wilcox, Orlando B.
Gibson, John.	Mishin, Peter S.	Williams, William G.
Gleim, James.	Milliken, Charles A.	Whishaw, Robert R.
Gumbel, Seward F.	Milton, Richard S.	Worner, Christian.
Grant, Lewis A.	Murray, John B.	Woodall, Daniel.
Gray, William C.	Nichols, Edwin.	Woodward, William W.
Griffin, Simon G.	Olcott, Egbert.	Wright, Horatio G.
Hamblin, Joseph E.	Olsted, William A.	Wright, Joseph W. B.

Also general report of Grant, p. 44; and itineraries, pp. 73, 82, 84, 85, 101.

112, 129–131, 133–136, 138, 141, 142, 145.

Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27–March 28, 1865.

Communications from

Ewell, Richard S. ....	479
Grant, U. S. ....	48
Flags captured during, by Union troops .....	482
Journal of Jed. Hotchkiss. ....	510

Petersburg, Va.—Continued.*Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27–March 28, 1865.

Medals of Honor awarded by U. S. Congress .....	509
Prisoners of War captured during, by Union troops .....	481, 482
Property captured during, by Union troops .....	481, 482, 491, 504
Reports of
Compson, Hartwell B. ....	508
Coppinger, John J. ....	509
Craster, George A. ....	501, 504
Devin, Thomas C. ....	488
Fitzhugh, Charles L. ....	490
Gibbs, Alfred. ....	490
Howard, Ocran H. ....	483
Lee, Robert E. ....	510
Merritt, Wesley. ....	484
Pennington, Alexander C. M. ....	501
Sheridan, Philip H. ....	474
Stagg, Peter. ....	495

See also general report of Grant, p. 48.

Union Troops in. Organization, strength, etc. ....	475
--	-----

Expedition to Danville and South Boston from. See *Danville and South Boston, Va. Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to, April 23–29, 1865.

See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865. Reports of

Becker, Adolph.	Hardenbergh, Jacob B.	Shuge, James, Jr.
Buttiff, James.	Hartman, John F.	Stacy, Valentine H.
Brown, George A.	McCalmont, Alfred B.	Watts, Charles.
Collie, Charles H. T.	Meade, George G.	Watcott, Charles F.
Day, Albert A.	Phillips, Charles B.	Worron, Charles.
Dane, John M.	Pier, Colwort K.	Waterhouse, John R.
Davona, Charles.	Roberts, Robert N.	Wheaton, Frank.
Gould, Ezra P.

Also Itineraries, pp. 141, 142.

Occupation of, by the Union forces, April 3, 1865. Communication from

Mayor of Petersburg, Va., et al. ....	1048
Petersburg, Va., Mayor of. Correspondence with U. S. Grant. ....	1048
Peterson, Albert F. Mentioned. ....	745, 747
Peterson, Erich. Mentioned. ....	415
Petrie, Edward. Mentioned. ....	417
Pettes, William H. Mentioned. ....	565
Pettit, William L. Mentioned. ....	303, 960
Petty, Charles Q. Mentioned. ....	1274
Petty, Robert B. Mentioned. ....	1274
Phelps, Henry. Mentioned. ....	889
Philapy, James H. Mentioned. ....	1254
Philippi, W. Va. Scout to Carrick's Ford from. See Carrick's Ford, W. Va. Scout from Philippi to, March 14–16, 1865.

Phillips, Charles A.

Mentioned. ....	505, 898, 1071, 1082, 1085, 1089
-----------------	----------------------------------

Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865. ....	1078
---	------

Phillips, Charles B.

Mentioned. ....	157, 161, 162
-----------------	---------------

Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865. ....	654
---	-----

Phillips, Henry. Mentioned. ....	1080, 1087
----------------------------------	------------

Phillips, James. Mentioned. ....	920
----------------------------------	-----

	Page.
Phillips, Josiah. Mentioned.....	603, 1260
Phillips, Sylvester D. Mentioned.....	1029
Phipps, Richard W. Mentioned.....	1273
Pichler, Peter. Mentioned.....	598
Pickering, John, jr. Mentioned.....	373, 576
Pickett, George E. Mentioned.....	123, 125-127, 333-338, 478-480, 487, 503, 808, 810, 811, 815-817, 820, 825, 826, 839, 875, 998, 1100, 1110, 1116, 1122, 1125, 1128, 1138, 1144, 1148, 1154, 1157, 1252, 1263-1265, 1268, 1277, 1284, 1287, 1289, 1290, 1297-1300
Pier, Colwert K.
Mentioned.....	573, 1016, 1061
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1045
Pier, Orris. Mentioned.....	961, 973
Pierce, Byron R.
Mentioned.....	568, 584, 694, 706, 750, 776-781, 784, 789
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	784
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	236
Pierce, Francis E.
Mentioned.....	64, 82, 212, 216, 567, 766
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	772
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	222
Pierce, Henry H.
Mentioned.....	163, 170, 181
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	176
Pierce, Ira. Mentioned.....	961, 973
Pierce, Silas K. Mentioned.....	787
Piersol, James K. Mentioned.....	1260
Pifer, George D. Mentioned.....	744, 750
Plunkham, Charles H. Mentioned.....	324, 335, 340, 1032
Pioneer, Steamer. Mentioned.....	549
Pippin, Richard. Mentioned.....	473
Pitman, George J. Mentioned.....	1260
Pitzer, Andrew L. Mentioned.....	519
Pizer, John B. Mentioned.....	331, 338, 1022
Plank, Oliver F. Mentioned.....	996
Platt, Thomas J. Mentioned.....	577
Plimley, William. Mentioned.....	240, 790
Ployd, William. Mentioned.....	945
Plumb, S. Hiram. Mentioned.....	761
Plummer, Lincoln K. Mentioned.....	890
Plympton, Homer A.
Mentioned.....	577, 1183
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1188
Poague, William T. Mentioned.....	1273, 1279, 1280
Pocahontas County, Va. Scout through. See Bandolph and Pocahontas Counties, W. Va., and Bath and Highland Counties, Va. Scout through, April 15-23, 1865.
Pocahontas and Pendleton Counties, W. Va., and Highland County, Va. Expedition through, June 1-13, 1865. Report of Wesley Owens.	1325
Pocorny, Albert. Mentioned.....	547
Poindexter, George. Mentioned.....	1269

	Page.
Pokorny, Anthony.
Mentioned .....	506
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	736
Pollack, John. Mentioned .....	578
Pollard, John E. Mentioned .....	577
Pollock, John G. Mentioned .....	1271
Pomeroy, Andrew A. Mentioned .....	599
Pontoons. Employment of, etc. Communications from
Spaulding, Ira .....	617
Van Brocklin, Martin .....	616
Poor, James W. Mentioned .....	1158
Pope, John. Mentioned .....	50
Pope, Lemuel. Mentioned .....	167
Porteous, Samuel R. Mentioned .....	417
Porter, David D. Mentioned .....	34, 41-43, 45, 46, 395-398, 400-402
Porter, Horace. Mentioned .....	37
Porter, Robert. Mentioned .....	1242
Porter, Samuel. Mentioned .....	688, 758
Porter, William. Mentioned .....	1153, 1260
Porter, William W. Mentioned .....	371
Port Royal, Va. Capture of J. Wilkes Booth and David E. Herold at Garrett's Farm, near. See Booth, J. Wilkes, and David E. Herold, Capture of, at Garrett's Farm, near Port Royal, Va., April 26, 1865.
Potomac, Army of the.
Casualties. Returns of. Jan. 1-April 9, 1865 .....	600, 601
Crawford, Samuel W., assumes temporary command of 5th Army Corps of. ....	3
Getty, George W., assumes temporary command of 6th Army Corps of. ....	3
Hospital records of
January-February, 1865 .....	619, 620, 623, 624
Jan. 1-June 30, 1865 .....	608, 614
February-April, 1865 .....	616-618
March, 1865 .....	622-625
March 27-June 30, 1865 .....	635
April, 1865 .....	703-706
Itineraries. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. Itineraries.
Meade, George G., resumes command of. ....	3
Orders, series 1865— Meade : March 27, 797; March 31, 813. Warren : March 29, 803; March 30, 811; March 31 (two), 820, 822; April 1, 830, 880. Wright : April 1, 902.
Orders, Circular, series 1865— McParlin : No. 9, 616.
Orders, General, series 1865— Humphreys : No. 3, 194. Warren : No. 22, 707.
Organization, strength, etc.
Jan. 31, 1865 .....	61
Feb. 28, 1865 .....	61
March 20, 1865 .....	62
March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	561-574
March 31, 1865 .....	62
April 10, 1865 .....	63
Parke, John G., resumes command of 9th Army Corps of. ....	3
Recommendation for medals of honor, etc., in. Communications from John G. Parke .....	1031
Recommendations for promotion, etc., in. Communications from
Collis, Charles H. T. ....	1093
Edwards, Oliver .....	943
Getty, George W. ....	957

	Page.
Potomac, Army of the—Continued.
Recommendations for promotion, etc., in. Communications from
Grant, Lewis A. ....	972
Meade, George G. ....	1030
Parker, John G. ....	1020
Wheaton, Frank. ....	947
Review of, in Washington, D. C. ....	3
Warren, Gouverneur K.
Relieved from command of 5th Army Corps of. ....	828
Resumes command of 5th Army Corps of. ....	3
Willcox, Orlando B., assumes temporary command of 3d Army Corps of. ....	3
Wright, Horatio G., resumes command of 6th Army Corps of. ....	3
Potter, Andrew.
Mentioned. ....	131, 578, 595, 1214-1216, 1222, 1246, 1256
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. ....	1216-1218
Potter, George W. Mentioned. ....	1260
Potter, Horatio. Mentioned. ....	1025
Potter, Robert B. Mentioned. ....	61, 110, 111, 315, 316, 320, 321, 573, 589, 1015-1017, 1019, 1020, 1025, 1033, 1039, 1051, 1057-1060, 1062
Powell, Edward H. Mentioned. ....	404, 579
Powell, George C. D. Mentioned. ....	929
Powell, Robert M. Mentioned. ....	388, 1268, 1277
Powell, William H. Mentioned. ....	1153
Powells, E. W. Mentioned. ....	473
Powers, Elisha L. Mentioned. ....	426
Powhatan, Va. Skirmish near, Jan. 25, 1865. ....	3
Prados, Louis. Mentioned. ....	1271
Pratt, Benjamin F. Mentioned. ....	579
Pratt, Henry A.
Mentioned. ....	166, 169, 170
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. ....	178
Pratt, Oscar E. Mentioned. ....	580
Pratt, Robert. Mentioned. ....	975
Pratt, William M. Mentioned. ....	578
Prentiss, Clifton K. Mentioned. ....	310, 311, 572, 978, 994, 1000
President, C. S. See Jefferson Davis .
President, U. S. See Abraham Lincoln .
Preston, John A. Mentioned. ....	1271
Price, Berryman Z. Mentioned. ....	1273
Price, Francis.
Mentioned. ....	238, 239, 241, 568, 790
Reports of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865. ....	243, 244
Price, Sterling. Mentioned. ....	35, 39, 50
Price, T. H. Mentioned. ....	406, 408
Price, W. Redwood. Mentioned. ....	1113
Pride, William G. Mentioned. ....	404
Prince, Frederick W. Mentioned. ....	404
Prince Edward Court-House, Va. Skirmish at, April 7, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Baker, J. Stannard. ....	Stratton, Franklin A. ....	West, Robert M.
Mackenzie, Randal S.
Prince William County, Va. Scout in, Feb. 18-19, 1865. Report of Charles
Albright. ....		468
Prior, John. Mentioned. ....		925

	Page.
Prisoners of War.
Number of, captured during Appomattox, Va., Campaign, by Union troops.....	788, 840, 938, 1011, 1147, 1182
Number of, captured at Beverly, W. Va., Jan. 11, 1865, by Confederate troops.....	449
Number of, captured during expedition from Winchester to front of Petersburg, Va., Feb. 27-March 28, 1865, by Union troops....	481, 482
Prometheus, Steamer. Mentioned.....	143, 114
Property Captured. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865; Port Fisher, N. C. Expedition to and capture of, Jan. 3-17, 1865; also, Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865.
Pulford, John. Mentioned.....	237, 568, 777, 785, 787
Purdy, Wilson. Mentioned.....	372
Purinton, Dilwyn V. Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1231
Purnell, Washington I. Mentioned.....	870
Purse, E. L. Mentioned.....	1269
Quaker and Boynton Roads, Va. Skirmish at junction of, March 29, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Abbott, George R. McPartin, Thomas A. Warton, Gouverneur K. Humphreys, Andrew A. Also report of Spencee, p. 261, and Itineraries , pp. 81, 86, 99, 100.
Quarles, Samuel D. Mentioned.....	1026, 1080
Quay, John. Mentioned.....	598, 742
Quimby, George F. Mentioned..... Testimony of, Explosion of powder magazine at Port Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865.....	420, 430 430
Radle, Andrew J. Mentioned.....	859
Rager, William A. Mentioned.....	314, 996, 1007
Railton, William. Mentioned.....	926, 944
Rainear, Thomas. Mentioned.....	930
Rainier, Alexander G. Mentioned.....	930
Ramey, John. Mentioned..... Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865..... Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	74, 77, 79, 81, 192, 193, 195, 202, 207-209, 224, 225, 238, 245-247, 566, 582, 677, 693, 705, 710, 711, 713-715, 730, 734, 736, 751 744 207
Ramsey, William H. (Captain.) Mentioned.....	1268
Ramsey, William H. (Lieutenant-Colonel.) Mentioned.....	1268
Rand, Arnold A. Mentioned.....	61
Randall, Ansel B. Mentioned.....	508
Randall, Francis V. Mentioned.....	574
Randall, George M. Mentioned..... Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	317, 322, 334, 573, 1024 341
Randol, Alanson M. Mentioned.....	486, 505, 507, 575, 1137
Randolph, A. C. Mentioned.....	1305
Randolph, John F. Mentioned.....	1218
Randolph and Pocahontas Counties, W. Va., and Bath and Highland Counties, Va. Scout through, April 15-23, 1865. Report of Joseph Badger.....	1310

	Page
Ransom, Matt. W. Mentioned.....	323, 383, 389, 1274; 1278, 1286, 1287, 1291
Ransom, Robert. Mentioned.....	1148
Rappahannock, Steamer. Mentioned.....	145
Rath, Christian. Mentioned.....	1022
Rawles, Jacob B. Mentioned.....	570, 899
Rawlins, John A. Mentioned.....	400
Ray, J. Milton. Mentioned.....	723
Raymond, William. Mentioned.....	280, 872
Read, Commodore, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	513, 550
Read, James M. Mentioned.....	599, 991
Read, Morton A. Mentioned.....	1260
Read, Theodore. Mentioned.....	55, 599, 1161, 1162, 1169, 1302
Ready, Horace. Mentioned.....	1272
Reber, Effinger L. Mentioned.....	1029, 1064
Recor, Henry H. Mentioned.....	961, 973, 975
Redlick, William. Mentioned.....	576
Reed, Anthony A. Mentioned.....	930
Reed, Horatio B.
Correspondence with William P. Thompson.....	1323
Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, April 26-May 5, 1865.....	1322
Reed, Wells W. Mentioned.....	181
Reeder, Charles A. Mentioned.....	1219, 1260
Reen, Charles. Mentioned.....	571, 960
Rees, David W. Mentioned.....	1034
Rees, John J. Mentioned.....	1029, 1064
Reese, A. J. Mentioned.....	1269
Reese, Aquilla A. Mentioned.....	889
Reeves, James H. Mentioned.....	403, 405
Reeves' Point, N. C. Works at, abandoned by Confederates. See Fort Caswell, N. C. Blown up, etc., Jan. 16-17, 1865.
Rehrer, Jacob. Mentioned.....	574, 1028, 1064
Reifle, Theodore.
Mentioned.....	427, 430
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865.....	430
Reilly, Edward. Mentioned.....	598, 1203, 1204, 1209
Reilly, James. Mentioned.....	435, 438, 440
Reilly, James T. Mentioned.....	859
Renkenberger, Jacob. Mentioned.....	964
Reno, Marcus A.
Mentioned.....	526, 531
Reports of
Harper's Ferry, W. Va. Affair near, Feb. 3, 1865.....	455
Shenandoah Valley. Operations in the, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865.....	535
Reynolds, Edward H.
Mentioned.....	578, 1204, 1205
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1205
Reynolds, Gardner. Mentioned.....	668, 672, 673
Reynolds, Henry. Mentioned.....	1026
Rhinehart, Alfred A.
Mentioned.....	566, 755
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	210

	Page.
Rhoads, Samuel H.
Mentioned.....	574, 1071
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1089
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	365
Rhode Island, U. S. S. Mentioned.....	167
Rhode Island Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 3d ( Batteries ), C, 580, 597.
Artillery, Light— Regiments : 1st ( Batteries ), B, 65, 249, 250, 252, 568, 584, 660, 758, 791-794; E, 565, 582, 660, 1011; F, 137, 579, 595; G, 572, 588, 660, 1009, 1010; H, 572, 588, 660, 911, 913, 914, 955, 1009-1011, 1013, 1014.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 124, 489, 499, 528.
Infantry— Regiments : 2d, 67, 302, 571, 587, 941, 942, 946, 951, 952; 7th, 573, 589, 1054, 1056, 1058.
Rhodes, Elisha H.
Mentioned.....	571, 922, 943
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	951
Rhodes, Henry J. Mentioned.....	312, 909, 1003
Rice, Charles L. Mentioned.....	1229
Rice, Edmund.
Mentioned.....	214
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	215
Rice, Gustavus A. Mentioned.....	1038, 1074, 1075, 1082
Rice, Thomas C.
Mentioned.....	1082, 1088, 1089
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	190
Rice's Station, Va. Engagement at, April 6, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Amsden, Frederick J.	Gibbs, John.	Pondleton, William N.
Dobie, William.	Hill, George H.	Potter, Andrew.
Elder, Samuel S.	McNacy, William H.	Reynolds, Edward H.
Fairchild, Harrison S.	Murray, John B.	Turner, John W.
Foster, Robert S.	Osborn, Thomas O.	Wells, Alvin C.
Also Itineraries , pp. 129-131, 133, 135, 138.
Rich, Carlos H. Mentioned.....	961
Rich, Giles H. Mentioned.....	404
Rich, Reuben H. Mentioned.....	1010
Richards, John N. Mentioned.....	570, 875
Richards, Melzer. Mentioned.....	576, 598, 1146
Richards, William V. Mentioned.....	325
Richardson, Almyne H. G. Mentioned.....	1099
Richardson, Andrew. Mentioned.....	473
Richardson, Charles. Mentioned.....	1274, 1279
Richardson, Charles T. Mentioned.....	331, 334
Richardson, Hollon. Mentioned.....	570, 835, 839, 882, 884
Richardson, James. Mentioned.....	889
Richardson, John H. Mentioned.....	472, 473
Richardson, Theodore. Mentioned.....	473
Richardson, William R. Mentioned.....	1260
Richey, John L. Mentioned.....	348
Richmond, Va.
Evacuation of, April 9, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Exell , p. 1293; Kershaw , p. 1283.
Expedition to Staunton and Charlottesville from. See Staunton and Charlottesville, Va. Expedition from Richmond to, May 6-14, 1865.

Richmond, Va. —Continued.

Page.

Occupation of, by Union forces, April 3, 1865. See *Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of*Bruce, George A.
Devens, Charles.

Warren, Charles.

Weitzel, Guilfoyle.

Also Itinerary, p. 133.

Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.

Casualties. Returns of. Union Troops..... 63-71,
175, 191, 240, 257, 302, 310, 320, 325, 350, 358, 367, 697

Congratulatory Orders. Humphreys..... 194

Engineer operations during. Communications from

Ford, George W..... 162

Spaulding, Ira..... 157, 158, 160-162

Itineraries.

Army Corps, 2d..... 74-85

Army Corps, 5th..... 85-100

Army Corps, 6th..... 100-107

Army Corps, 9th..... 107-112

Army Corps, 21th..... 120-138

Army Corps, 25th..... 139-144

Cavalry Corps..... 113-128

Cavalry Division, Army of the James..... 147, 148

Cavalry Division, Army of West Virginia..... 125, 126

Engineer Brigade, Army of the Potomac..... 72-74

Ferro's Division, Army of the James..... 145, 146

Medals of Honor awarded by U. S. Congress..... 380

Movements and disposition of troops during. Communication from U. S.

Grant..... 50

Operations during. Communications from

Humphreys, Andrew A..... 319

Wright, Horatio G..... 319

Reports of

Abbot, Henry L..... 165, 168, 170, 172

Abbott, George R..... 273

Adams, Samuel..... 320

Ager, George..... 174

Anderson, George C..... 209

Avery, Martin P..... 330

Ayres, Romeyn B..... 277, 278

Bangs, Frank D..... 180

Becker, Adolph..... 330

Bingham, William H. H..... 181

Binkley, Otho H..... 312

Bird, Patrick H..... 198

Booth, George..... 186

Boughton, John C..... 327

Bowerman, Richard N..... 282, 283

Bright, Aaron, jr..... 291

Burch, John F..... 337

Burr, Allen L..... 268

Cannon, Madison M..... 231

Cartor, Joseph F..... 336

Casey, James H..... 185

Chamberlain, Joshua L..... 267

Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865—Continued.

Page.

Reports of
Colt, William O .....	274
Cooper, John R .....	364
Cornyn, Charles M .....	313
Corrio, William A .....	369
Cunningham, James A .....	274
Curtis, Arthur R .....	216
Damon, George B .....	307
Day, Albert A .....	328
Denno, John M .....	338
De Trohriand, Rogis .....	226
Diven, Charles W .....	350
Drown, Azro .....	181
Duane, James C .....	157-159, 161
Dygert, Charles H .....	219
Eaton, John B .....	302
Edwards, Oliver .....	301, 302
Ely, Ralph .....	325
Evans, Andrew W .....	371
Evans, Ira L .....	327
Faxon, William C .....	178
Fite, John B .....	233
Fitzhugh, Robert H .....	297
Floyd, Horace W .....	305
Frederick, George W .....	353
Funk, Augustus .....	203
Gage, Charles F .....	240
Glenney, William .....	207
Gordon, John B .....	390, 391
Gould, Ezra P .....	340
Gould, Seward P .....	211
Gregg, J. Irvin .....	365
Gregory, Edgar M .....	270
Gwyn, James .....	283
Hamblin, Joseph E .....	300
Hamlin, James H .....	210
Hartford, Henry .....	244, 245
Hartmanft, John P .....	344, 345
Hays, William .....	213
Hazard, John G .....	240, 250
Heintzelmann, Mish T .....	352
Hess, Frank W .....	163
Hill, Joseph C .....	316
Houston, Frank .....	217
Humphreys, Andrew A .....	191
Hunsdon, Charles .....	307
Husk, Lewis W .....	205
Hyde, John McE .....	204
Jewell, James A .....	218
Jones, Edward J .....	360
Karples, Henry M .....	205
Keifer, J. Warren .....	309
Kennedy, Ronald A .....	306

Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865—Continued.

Page

Reports of

Kerwin, Michael .....	367
King, William R. ....	376-378
Knowles, Oliver B. ....	371
La Point, George W. ....	216
Lee, Robert E. ....	381-383
Lewis, Frederick W. ....	234
Lewis, Robert .....	183
Lincoln, Sumner H. ....	306
Lockwood, Abram L. ....	247
McAllister, Robert .....	238, 240
McCall, William H. H. ....	351
McClellan, Samuel A. ....	189
McCoy, Thomas F. ....	289, 292
McIvor, James P. ....	221
McKenna, James. ....	232
McKinnie, Thomas W. ....	314
McLaughlin, Napoleon B. ....	331
Mansfield, James F. ....	242
Mason, Ebenezer L. ....	181
Mathews, Joseph A. ....	354
Mathews, Thomas .....	343
Maxwell, Norman J. ....	342
Meade, George G. ....	149-156
Michie, Peter S. ....	373-376
Michler, Nathaniel .....	102
Miles, Nelson A. ....	195, 196
Miller, Theodore .....	358
Mintzer, William M. ....	208
Moore, Samuel A. ....	223
Morrill, Walter G. ....	273
Morrow, Henry A. ....	286
Mott, Gerahom .....	223
Mulholland, St. Clair A. ....	209
Murphy, Matthew. ....	220
O'Brien, John .....	182
Olmsted, William A. ....	214
O'Neill, Henry .....	276
Parke, John G. ....	315, 316
Parr, John G. ....	303
Patterson, Henry D. ....	180
Pearson, Alfred L. ....	270
Peck, William R. ....	391
Pierce, Byron R. ....	236
Pierce, Francis E. ....	222
Pierce, Henry H. ....	176
Pratt, Henry A. ....	178
Price, Francis. ....	243, 244
Ramsey, John .....	207
Randall, George M. ....	341
Rhinehart, Alfred A. ....	210
Rhoads, Samuel H. ....	365
Rice, Edmund .....	215

Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865—Continued.

Reports of

Rice, Thomas C .....	190
Rivers, Charles C .....	243
Robinson, Gilbert P .....	332
Robison, John K .....	370
Roder, John W .....	251
Roemer, Jacob .....	363
Rogers, Chancey P .....	275
Rogers, Edward W .....	361
Schack, George von .....	202
Schen, Jacob .....	204
Schoonover, John .....	246
Schwank, Samuel K .....	330
Scott, George W .....	197
Scott, Walter F .....	248
Sellers, Eli G .....	275
Shafer, John W .....	229
Sheaffer, Henry J .....	294
Shepherd, Russell B .....	230
Sickel, Horatio G .....	265
Silliman, Charles N .....	186
Smith, Edward S .....	252
Smith, James J .....	200
Smith, John .....	201
Smyth, Thomas A .....	212
Snyder, James W .....	311
Squidding, Joseph W .....	215
Spencer, T. Rush .....	263
Stone, Valentine H .....	190
Stover, John H .....	219
Terwilliger, William H .....	199
Tidball, John C .....	355
Tracy, Amasa S .....	304
Tucker, Julius M .....	339
Twitcheil, Adelbert B .....	300
Vincent, Nathan H .....	232
Warner, Clement E .....	220
Warner, James M .....	302
Warren, Gouverneur K .....	253
Warren, Horatio N .....	296
West, George W .....	235
Weygant, Charles H .....	233
Whenton, Frank .....	297
Wilder, J. Hart .....	206
Willeox, Orlando B .....	322
Williams, William G .....	314
Winthrop, Frederick .....	280
Woerner, Christian .....	188
Wright, Joseph W. B .....	187
Young, Samuel B. M .....	369

See also general report of Grant, p. 51.

etch .....	262
Otto. Report of skirmish near Flint Hill, Va., March 7, 1865 .....	547

	Page
Ricker, John S. Mentioned.....	716, 719, 720
Rickerburker, ———. Mentioned.....	1322
Ricketts, James B. Mentioned.....	26
Ricketts, R. Bruce. Mentioned.....	365, 661, 1075, 1081, 1084
Riddell, Rudolph. Mentioned.....	606, 1260
Riely, John W. For correspondence as A. A. G., see Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, C. S. A.
Riemann, Adolph. Mentioned.....	69
Rierson, William J. Mentioned.....	361
Riley, John. Mentioned.....	925
Riley, Thomas M. Mentioned.....	1270
Ring, Enphronous P. Mentioned.....	1247, 1254, 1256
Ripley, Edward H. Mentioned.....	132, 578, 594, 1211-1213, 1227, 1228
Ripley, Thomas W. Mentioned.....	1219
Ripple, John L. Mentioned.....	1188
Ritchey, John L. Mentioned.....	1029, 1064
Ritchie, David F. Mentioned.....	565, 1030, 1071-1074, 1077, 1089
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1080
Rittenhouse, Albert F. Mentioned.....	1000
Ritter, Wade. Mentioned.....	1272
Ritzius, Henry P. Mentioned.....	566, 740
Rivere, Charles C. Mentioned.....	247, 508, 776, 788, 789
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	243
Roath, Phillip B. Mentioned.....	805
Robb, Levi R. Mentioned.....	599
Robbins, Walter R. Mentioned.....	576
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1148
Roberts, Charles T. Mentioned.....	1205
Roberts, Cyrus S. Mentioned.....	1143
Roberts, David B. Mentioned.....	599
Roberts, John H. Mentioned.....	404, 416, 429
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 16, 1865.....	429
Roberts, Joseph. Mentioned.....	1164
Roberts, Joseph W. P. Mentioned.....	923, 943
Roberts, Robert N. Mentioned.....	573
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1046
Roberts, Samuel H. Correspondence with Arnold Harris.....	550
Mentioned.....	545, 550, 578, 595
Reports of Fredericksburg, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe to, March 5-8, 1865.....	542
Westmoreland County, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe into, etc., March 11-13, 1865.....	549
Roberts, William P. Mentioned.....	1264, 1276, 1278, 1299
Robertson, James T. Mentioned.....	1272
Robertson, William. Mentioned.....	508
Robeson, William P., jr. Mentioned.....	507, 575, 1115, 1137

	Page
Robins, Charles M. Mentioned.....	1022
Robins, William T. Mentioned.....	1275
Robinson, Major. Mentioned.....	1306
Robinson, Cornelius, jr. Mentioned.....	1270
Robinson, Gilbert P.
Mentioned.....	70, 108, 109, 323-325, 336, 573, 589, 1039, 1040, 1047, 1051, 1053
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	332
Robinson, John C. Mentioned.....	923, 944-946
Robinson, Joseph C. Mentioned.....	979
Robinson, Lucian D. Mentioned.....	1271
Robinson, Sampson B. Mentioned.....	511-515, 517, 519-521
Robinson, Wardwell G. Mentioned.....	577
Robison, John K.
Mentioned.....	576, 1455
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	370
Rockafield, Anthony C. Mentioned.....	1311
Rockwell, Alfred P.
Mentioned.....	404, 410
Report of expedition to and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	411
Rockwell, Joseph P. Mentioned.....	455
Röder, John W.
Mentioned.....	191, 240, 568, 790, 794
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	251
Rodes, Robert E. Mentioned.....	153, 383-387, 389, 1270, 1277
Roemer, Jacob.
Mentioned.....	323, 326, 358, 364, 574, 1070
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1087
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	363
Rogers, Major. Mentioned.....	518
Rogers, Charles H. Mentioned.....	328
Rogers, Chauncey P.
Mentioned.....	271, 569, 862
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	275
Rogers, Edward W.
Mentioned.....	342, 574, 1071
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1086
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	361
Rogers, Eldridge T. Mentioned.....	288
Rogers, George. Mentioned.....	401
Rogers, George T. Mentioned.....	1273
Rogers, Hoxsey C. Mentioned.....	931, 973
Rogers, James A. Mentioned.....	1029, 1064, 1069
Rogers, Joseph A. Mentioned.....	1270
Rogers, Mortimer. Mentioned.....	1305
Rogers, Peter F. Mentioned.....	1026
Rogers, Robert E. Mentioned.....	570, 899
Rogers, Samuel. Mentioned.....	1310
Rogers, William H. (Captain.) Mentioned.....	565
Rogers, William H. (Lieutenant.)
Mentioned.....	664, 665, 668, 669, 673, 1030, 1072, 1074
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	671

	Page.
Rolfe, Charles A. Mentioned.....	1198
Rollins, Augustus W.
Mentioned.....	404, 410, 453
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 5-15, 1865.....	414
Rollins, Bettie P. Mentioned.....	1319
Rollins, William. Mentioned.....	1319, 1321
Rollyson, Samuel A. Mentioned.....	1223
Roof, Smith C. Mentioned.....	1208
Root, Augustus I. Mentioned.....	598, 1139
Root, William S. Mentioned.....	1036
Rose, Edward. Mentioned.....	1025
Rose, Lawrence B. Mentioned.....	544
Rose, Lawrin L. Mentioned.....	736
Rosecrans, William S. Mentioned.....	35, 39
Rosekrans, Isaac A. Mentioned.....	1216
Rosenorantz, Frederick. Mentioned.....	257
Rosetter, Cyprian H. Mentioned.....	246
Ross, George W. Mentioned.....	42
Ross, Poleman D. Mentioned.....	1270
Rossbach, Valentine. Mentioned.....	363, 364
Rosser, Thomas L. Mentioned.....	126-128, 448, 450, 451, 460, 469, 470, 475-477, 485, 504, 511-513, 516-523, 528, 529, 532, 535-537, 540, 825, 863, 865, 1110, 1115, 1155, 1169, 1196, 1264, 1276, 1279, 1299-1304, 1322, 1324
Roughan, Charles. Mentioned.....	953
Rounds, Lewis. Mentioned.....	757, 767, 768
Rousseau, Lovell H. Mentioned.....	32
Rowanty Creek, Va. Battle of. See Hatcher's Run, Va. Battle of, Feb. 5-7, 1865.
Rowland, Thomas. Mentioned.....	521
Royce, Clark E. Mentioned.....	580, 1242
Rucker, Louis H. Mentioned.....	468
Rude's Hill, Va. Skirmish at, March 7, 1865. See Winchester, Va. Movement of convey of prisoners from Waynesborough to, March 3-8, 1865, etc.
Ruffner, W. H. Mentioned.....	521
Ruggles, Lieutenant. Mentioned.....	1319
Ruggles, George D. Mentioned.....	803
For correspondence as A. A. G., see George G. Meade.
Rumery, William M. Mentioned.....	124
Rumsey, Will. Mentioned.....	467
Russell, Lieutenant. Mentioned.....	537
Russell, Charles S. Mentioned.....	579, 596
Russell, Edward. Mentioned.....	541, 542
Russell, Edmund K. Mentioned.....	908
Russell, Edmund McC. Mentioned.....	241, 790
Russell, Harvey Y. Mentioned.....	768
Russell, Henry A. Mentioned.....	1035
Russell, Michael. Mentioned.....	423
Russell, Solomon W. Mentioned.....	915, 918
Russell, Volney. Mentioned.....	289
Russell, William. Mentioned.....	1153
Russell, William, jr. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865.....	536
Rutherford, James. Mentioned.....	1301

	Page.
Rutledge, Henry M. Mentioned.....	1274
Rutt, Joseph W. Mentioned.....	(629), 1064
Ryals, G. M. Mentioned.....	1305
Ryan, James P. Mentioned.....	1219
Ryan, Michael. Mentioned.....	423
Ryan, Patrick M. Mentioned.....	578
Ryder, Warren. Mentioned.....	598, 720
Sackett, Homer S. Mentioned.....	925, 934
Safford, Benjamin D. Mentioned.....	1022
Safford, Darius J. Mentioned.....	968, 970
Sager, Willis. Mentioned.....	859
Sailor, ———. Mentioned.....	532, 533, 540
Sailor, Henry. Mentioned.....	365, 1089
Sailor's Creek, Va. Engagement at, April 13, 1865. Returns of casualties, Union troops.....	682, 909, 917

See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of

Allen, Crawford, Jr.	Hickman, Bryant J.	Minkow, William M.
Allen, Thomas S.	Hill, Joseph C.	Nugent, Robert.
Bassett, Isaac C.	Hopkins, Archibald.	Pennington, Alexander C. M.
Binkley, Otha H.	Hawell, Charles W.	Phelan, Byron R.
Bogertina, Charles.	Humphreys, Andrew A.	Pickens, Anthony.
Bruckler, John R.	Humphreys, Francis R.	Rhodes, Elsie H.
Burke, Denis F.	Hyde, John McE.	Robbins, Walter R.
Cornyn, Charles M.	Hyde, Joseph.	Schaffer, George W.
Cowan, Andrew.	Ives, Lucius H.	Seymour, Truman.
Crafts, Welcome A.	Janoway, Jacob J.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Crack, George.	Johnson, Bushrod B.	Smart, Charles.
Custer, George A.	Karpis, Henry M.	Smith, Charles H.
Damon, George B.	Kelley, J. Warren.	Smith, James J.
Davies, Henry E., Jr.	Kershaw, Joseph B.	Snyder, James W.
Day, Hiram W.	Lee, Fitzhugh.	Sutton, William A. P.
De Froelaud, Regis.	Lee, G. W. Cottle.	Sutton, John F.
Devlin, Thomas C.	Lee, Robert B.	Terwilliger, William H.
Edwards, Oliver.	Liddell, John A.	Trues, William S.
Ewell, Richard S.	McAllister, Robert.	Van Allen, Orasmus B.
Fisk, Henry C.	McClellan, Matthew R.	Weltner, John R.
Gibbs, Alfred.	McDonald, Andrew N.	Wharton, Frank.
Grant, Lewis A.	MacDougall, Clinton D.	Wilder, J. Hart.
Gray, William C.	McParlin, Thomas A.	Williams, William G.
Hambill, Joseph E.	Mendo, George G.	Wentzell, Daniel.
Harper, John.	Merritt, Wesley.	Wright, Horatio G.
Harwood, Franklin.	Miles, Nelson A.	Young, Samuel H. M.

Also Itineraries, pp. 76, 78, 80, 81, 101-103, 105, 106, 115, 117-119, 121, 123, 125, 128.

Salem, Va. Operations about. See Warrenton, Beacham Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va. Operations about, March 3-8, 1865.

Sample, John C. Mentioned.....	960, 966
Samuels, Alexander. Mentioned.....	908
Sanders, J. E. Mentioned.....	1289
Sanders, William W. Mentioned.....	257, 574
Sands, William. Mentioned.....	292, 380
Sanford, John W. A. Mentioned.....	1274
Sargent, Jackson. Mentioned.....	974, 975, 1261
Sargent, John D. Mentioned.....	930
Saunders, William J. Mentioned.....	434
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	437

	Page
Saunders, William L. Mentioned .....	1272
Saunderson, Lewellyn. Mentioned .....	1305
Savacool, Edwin F. Mentioned .....	508, 1261
Savage, Alexander. Mentioned .....	1157
Savage, William H. Mentioned .....	960
Sawyer, Charles F.
Mentioned .....	803
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	861
Sawyer, Frederick A. Mentioned .....	1184
Sawyer, Levi N. Mentioned .....	1026, 1060
Saxon, John. Mentioned .....	253
Scales, Alfred M. Mentioned .....	389, 809, 1272, 1278
Scales, James T. Mentioned .....	1270
Scammon, George S. Mentioned .....	1190
Soeva, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	1146
Schaal, Frederick. Mentioned .....	303
Schack, George von.
Mentioned .....	74, 79, 105
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	202
Schaffer, George W.
Mentioned .....	506
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	721
Schaffner, Tal. P. Mentioned .....	172
Scheffer, Theodore K. Mentioned .....	201
Schen, Jacob. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 ....	204
Schloekhardt, Henry. Mentioned .....	509, 872, 873
Schively, Albert. Mentioned .....	1237
Schmal, George W. Mentioned .....	1261
Schnoider, Joseph.
Correspondence with
Augur, Christopher C .....	1317
Doherty, Edward P .....	1318
Mentioned .....	552
Report of operations about Warrenton, Bealton Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va., March 3-8, 1865 .....	541
Schnieder, Frederick. Mentioned .....	931
Schoff, Edward N. Mentioned .....	567
Schofield, John M.
Assignment to command .....	1
Correspondence with U. S. Grant .....	44
Mentioned .....	31, 38, 39, 44-46, 49, 982
Schoonmaker, John M. Mentioned .....	1096
Schoonover, Amos H. Mentioned .....	606
Schoonover, John.
Mentioned .....	238, 240, 241, 247, 568, 776, 788, 790
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	246
Schorn, Charles. Mentioned .....	1261
Schreiber, Paul. Mentioned .....	598
Schroeder, Isaac. Mentioned .....	599
Schultz, Otto. Mentioned .....	408
Schmyler, Philip. Mentioned .....	165
Schwartz, Edward. Mentioned .....	528
Schwenk, Samuel K.
Mentioned .....	326, 573, 1023
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	330

	Page
Schwimle, Charles J. Mentioned .....	966
Scofield, James K. Mentioned .....	908
Scofield, Percy. Mentioned .....	365
Scofield, Samuel W. Mentioned .....	865
Scott, Steamer. Mentioned .....	166
Scott, Albert W. Mentioned .....	925, 926, 934, 935, 939
Scott, Antoine. Mentioned .....	1032
Scott, Charles H. Mentioned .....	1199
Scott, George W.
Mentioned .....	74, 77-79, 196, 197, 199, 200, 203, 205, 566, 582, 684, 692, 705, 710, 712, 718, 724, 725, 729, 730, 735, 738, 740, 744, 747
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	714
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	197
Scott, Henry B.
Mentioned .....	1163
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1167, 1168
Scott, James A. Mentioned .....	1293
Scott, John. Mentioned .....	69
Scott, John Wallace. Mentioned .....	284, 286, 877, 1261
Scott, Walter F.
Mentioned .....	241, 700
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	248
Scott, William R. Mentioned .....	362
Scott's Cross-Roads, Va. Action at, April 2, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Devin, p. 1122; Merritt, p. 1118, and Itinerary, p. 121.
Scribner, Harley B. Mentioned .....	371
Scruggs, Lawrence H. Mentioned .....	1268
Sculley, David F. Mentioned .....	331, 1021
Sears, William. Mentioned .....	1010
Seddon, James A. Mentioned .....	381
Sedgwick, John. Mentioned .....	17, 18
Sedgwick, Thomas D. Mentioned .....	579
Seitzinger, Amos N. Mentioned .....	267
Selkirk, Edward A. Mentioned .....	720
Selkirk, George H. Mentioned .....	572, 959
Sellers, Eli G.
Mentioned .....	569
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	866
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	275
Sellers, Samuel. Mentioned .....	1273
Sellmer, Charles. Mentioned .....	1180, 1182, 1184, 1199
Semmes, Raphael. Mentioned .....	998
Sergeant, William. Mentioned .....	94, 284, 286, 570, 599, 815, 875, 879
Sessions, George H. Mentioned .....	971, 972
Sewall, Ammi R. For correspondence as A. A. A. G., see Christopher C. Augur.
Seward, Daniel A. Mentioned .....	1038, 1094
Seward, Samuel S. Mentioned .....	1164
Seward, William H. Mentioned .....	522
Seward, William H., jr. Mentioned .....	525
Sewell, William J. Mentioned .....	577
Seymour, Frank. Mentioned .....	568

	Page.
Seymour, Truman.
Correspondence with Horatio G. Wright.....	980, 981
Mentioned .....	104, 155, 305, 307-309, 313, 572, 588, 651, 652, 902, 904-909, 911, 913, 914, 911, 912, 953-956, 967, 969, 974-976, 981, 981, 990, 993, 995, 997, 999, 1002, 1006, 1009, 1010, 1014, 1015, 1108, 1113, 1166, 1194, 1235
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	978, 979
Shadburne, George D. Mentioned .....	513
Shafer, John W.
Mentioned .....	508, 776, 778
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 9-April 3, 1865.....	229
Shahan, Emisire. Mentioned .....	1261
Shannon, Peter J. Mentioned .....	1268
Shannon, S. D. Mentioned .....	1284
Sharp, Redford. Mentioned.....	915, 919
Sharpless, Oscar. Mentioned.....	959
Shatswell, Nathaniel. Mentioned.....	237, 568, 785, 787
Shattuck, George W. Mentioned.....	1157
Shaul, Amos. Mentioned.....	1003
Shaw, James, jr.
Mentioned.....	141, 580, 590, 1229, 1230, 1233, 1242
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1234
Shaw, Lemuel. Mentioned .....	599, 896
Shaw, Reuben D. Mentioned.....	1033
Shaw, William H. Mentioned .....	948
Shaw, William L. Mentioned .....	903, 904, 909
Sheafer, Henry J.
Mentioned .....	290, 291, 293, 294
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 4-April 3, 1865.....	294
Sheen, William G. Mentioned .....	890, 893
Sheffey, Hugh W. Mentioned.....	522, 523
Shellenberger, William D. Mentioned .....	572, 901, 1003
Shelton, William D. Mentioned.....	1208
Shenandoah, Army of the. (Union.) Organization, strength, etc. See Cavalry Corps.
Shenandoah Ferry, W. Va. Scout to, from Summit Point, through Kuble- town and Myerstown, March 16-17, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Mead, p. 531. Shenandoah Valley. Operations in.
Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Reports of
Brown, Charles C.....	532
Banker, David T.....	530
Carroll, Samuel S.....	538
Draper, Stephen H.....	539
Hancock, Winfield S.....	524
Inwood, Henry C.....	537
Lee, Robert E.....	540
Mead, John B.....	531
Oliver, William H.....	531
Reno, Marcus A.....	535
Russell, William, jr.....	536
Thompson, John L.....	528
Underhill, Henry P.....	534
Webb, John M.....	530

	Page.
Shenandoah Valley. Operations in—Continued.
April 26–May 5, 1865.
Communication from William P. Thompson.....	1323
Report of Horatin B. Reed .....	1322
Shepard, Edward O. Mentioned .....	272
Shepard, Samuel G. Mentioned.....	1272
Shepherd, Russell B.
Mentioned.....	83, 508, 583, 706, 778–781, 783, 781, 786
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865.....	783
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1–April 3, 1865 .....	230
Shepherd, William. Mentioned .....	1261
Shepley, George F. Mentioned.....	1228
Sherer, John T. Mentioned.....	1103
Sheridan, Philip H.
Correspondence with
Crook, George.....	449
Grant, J. S.....	48, 50, 52, 53, 811, 1110, 1111
Halleck, Henry W .....	463
Merritt, Wesley .....	1133
War Department, U. S.....	1111, 1114
Warren, Gouverneur K.....	824, 1101
Mentioned .....	17, 18, 20,
21, 24–29, 43, 48–50, 52–56, 60, 72, 73, 75, 81, 86, 89, 91, 93, 94, 113, 120, 124–
126, 133, 136, 148, 150, 204, 479, 483, 484, 486, 502, 508, 521, 525, 529, 530, 536,
575, 580, 591, 597, 601, 603, 604, 610–612, 615, 634, 626–633, 615, 616, 651, 677–
681, 687, 698, 711, 712, 715, 717, 719, 720, 724, 727–729, 735, 736, 740, 742, 745,
746, 792, 803–808, 810, 811, 815, 817, 818, 820–826, 828, 829, 831–836, 838–841,
846, 847, 849, 851, 852, 854, 855, 858, 860, 861, 869, 870, 874, 875, 880, 883, 891
893, 894, 899, 906–908, 913, 979, 984, 989, 997, 1041, 1111, 1117–1149, 1121, 1135,
1139, 1134, 1138, 1149, 1151, 1153, 1155, 1160–1162, 1175, 1180, 1191, 1195,
1196, 1199, 1215, 1230, 1237, 1264, 1245, 1248, 1249, 1251, 1260, 1300, 1315
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29–April 9, 1865 .....	1100, 1101
Camberland, Md. Raid on, Feb. 21, 1865 .....	468
Petersburg, Va. Expedition from Winchester to front of, Feb. 27–
March 28, 1865 .....	474
Sherley, Edward G. Mentioned.....	886
Sherman, Benjamin C. Mentioned.....	1093
Sherman, Charles F. Mentioned .....	1032
Sherman, Francis T. Mentioned .....	1114
Sherman, William T.
Correspondence with U. S. Grant .....	36, 37, 55
Mentioned .....	12, 13, 30–36, 38, 39, 41, 44–49, 51, 52, 55, 58, 475, 522, 1102, 1154
Shield, John. Mentioned.....	1153
Shields, Bernard. Mentioned .....	1264
Shields, William. Mentioned.....	288, 296
Shipley, Robert F. Mentioned.....	872, 1261
Shipp, Scott. Mentioned .....	1293
Shiver, John M. Mentioned.....	1270
Shlesinger, Morris. Mentioned.....	286, 509, 879
Shontz, David. Mentioned.....	1037, 1064
Shook, Edgar H. Mentioned.....	236
Shopp, George J. Mentioned .....	1261

	Page-
Shorkley, George. Mentioned.....	346, 349, 1027
Shreeve, Lewis H. Mentioned.....	996
Shubert, Frank. Mentioned.....	957, 960, 1261
Shuford, P. C. Mentioned.....	1270
Shurtleff, Sylvan G. Mentioned.....	1205
Shute, Richard S. Mentioned.....	290
Sickel, Horatio G.
Mentioned.....	65, 80, 92, 258, 265, 266, 268-270, 280, 281, 297, 569, 800, 801, 847, 818
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	265
Sidelinger, Henry F. Mentioned.....	865
Siebert, Louis. Mentioned.....	471
Sieg, H. B. Mentioned.....	511
Sigel, Franz. Mentioned.....	16, 22, 23, 26
Silcott, G. W. Mentioned.....	1823
Silket, Aaron. Mentioned.....	540
Silket, John. Mentioned.....	540
Silliman, Charles N.
Mentioned.....	166, 169, 170
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jun. 1-April 3, 1865.....	186
Sillyman, Thomas H. Mentioned.....	1026
Simmons, John. Mentioned.....	606, 1261
Simmons, Thomas J. Mentioned.....	1272
Simms, James F. Mentioned.....	1269, 1277, 1284
Simon, Frederick W. Mentioned.....	93, 283
Simpers, John G. Mentioned.....	999-1001
Simpson, George. Mentioned.....	42
Simpson, Joseph B. Mentioned.....	1209
Sipe, John A. Mentioned.....	1037
Skelley, James A. Mentioned.....	1254, 1255
Sketches.
Beverly, W. Va. Capture of U. S. Forces at, Jan. 11, 1865.....	450
Five Forks, Va. Battle of, April 1, 1865.....	880, 880
Hatcher's Run, Va. Battle of. Feb. 5-7, 1865.....	262
Lewis Farm, Va. Engagement at, near Gravelly Run, March 29, 1865.....	802
Position of 5th Army Corps, March 30, 1865.....	810
White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge, Va. Engagement at, March 31, 1865.....	814, 819
Skilton, Alexander. Mentioned.....	1247
Slaten, C. W. Mentioned.....	1275
Slaughter, Montgomery. Mentioned.....	545
Slaker, Daniel. Mentioned.....	859
Sloann, Henry W. Mentioned.....	37, 46
Small, Michael P. Mentioned.....	1234
Small, Oliver R. Mentioned.....	761 <sup>m</sup>
Smart, Charles.
Mentioned.....	4
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	692, 699
Smiley, William A. Mentioned.....	1219
Smith, Alex Q. Mentioned.....	920, 945
Smith, Andrew J. (Major.) Mentioned.....	979, 980, 984
Smith, Andrew J. (Major-General.) Mentioned.....	33-35, 39, 44, 47, 59
Smith, Andrew J. (Private.) Mentioned.....	334, 336
Smith, Benjamin A. Mentioned.....	69, 271

	Page
Smith, Benjamin F.
Mentioned .....	300, 572, 990
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1005
Smith, Benjamin H., jr. Mentioned .....	1271
Smith, Brainerd. Mentioned .....	598, 1195
Smith, Charles H.
Mentioned .....	113, 116, 119, 146, 576, 592, 618-621, 1102, 1103, 1107, 1110, 1112, 1126, 1134, 1141-1145, 1152, 1154-1156, 1158
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1156
Smith, Charles W. Mentioned .....	668, 672, 673, 1070
Smith, Coburn S. Mentioned .....	335, 341
Smith, David L. Mentioned .....	257, 797, 836
Smith, Douglas. Mentioned .....	364
Smith, Edward. Mentioned .....	1270
Smith, Edward L. Mentioned .....	1195
Smith, Edward S.
Mentioned .....	212, 252
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	252
Smith, Edward W. Mentioned .....	1164
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Edward O. C. Ord .
Smith, E. Kirby. Mentioned .....	56, 59, 60
Smith, Francis W. Mentioned .....	1276, 1279, 1296
Smith, Frank T. Mentioned .....	926, 945
Smith, Gad N. Mentioned .....	921, 933
Smith, George. Mentioned .....	805
Smith, George F. Mentioned .....	572
Smith, George H. Mentioned .....	517, 521
Smith, Henry A. Mentioned .....	1024
Smith, Howard M. Mentioned .....	491, 497, 575, 1127
Smith, Isaac E. Mentioned .....	421
Smith, James B. Mentioned .....	1025
Smith, James J.
Mentioned .....	506, 726
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	728
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	200
Smith, James O. Mentioned .....	1035
Smith, John. (4th N. J.) Mentioned .....	930
Smith, John. (5th Vt.) Mentioned .....	975
Smith, John. (11th W. Va.) Mentioned .....	1223
Smith, John. (Captain.) Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	201
Smith, John Donnell. Mentioned .....	1269
Smith, John F. Mentioned .....	403, 410, 418
Smith, J. Sim. Mentioned .....	615
Smith, Lemuel O. Mentioned .....	1152
Smith, Levi A. Mentioned .....	349, 352, 1037
Smith, Michael H. Mentioned .....	961
Smith, Normand. Mentioned .....	578
Smith, R. B. Mentioned .....	301
Smith, Walter B. Mentioned .....	948
Smith, William. Mentioned .....	1325
Smith, William C. Mentioned .....	930
Smith, William F. Mentioned .....	15, 20, 21, 23, 24, 26

	Page.
Smith, William Proctor. Mentioned.....	512, 513, 515
Smith, William V. Mentioned .....	1229
Smith, Zenro A. Mentioned .....	568
Smithfield, Va. Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to. See Pearnsville and Smithfield, Va. Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to, Feb. 11-15, 1865.
Smithfield, W. Va. Scout to, from Stephenson's Depot, Va., March 29, 1865. See Shraamloak Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Inwood, p. 537.
Smithville, N. C. Works at, abandoned by Confederates. See Fort Caswell, N. C. Blown up, etc., Jan. 16-17, 1865.
Smoot, Thomas. Mentioned .....	468
Smyser, Henry W. Mentioned .....	895
Smyth, Thomas A. Mentioned .....	63, 74, 76, 82, 163, 191-195, 202, 213-215, 217, 220, 224, 236, 238, 239, 241-243, 246, 247, 249, 252, 261, 262, 267, 567, 583, 599, 631, 674, 683, 685, 693, 757-760, 762, 763, 769-768, 770, 777, 782, 785, 1198
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	212
Snead, Claiborne. Mentioned .....	1273
Sneyd, Nathaniel S. Mentioned .....	69, 306
Sniper, Gustavus. Mentioned .....	268, 569, 800, 801, 816, 847-851
Snodgrass, John. Mentioned .....	915, 918
Snow, George E. Mentioned .....	335, 339
Snow, Henry E. Mentioned .....	462-461, 466
Report of expedition from Camp Averell (near Winchester) into Loudoun County, Va., etc., Feb. 18-19, 1865.....	467
Snyder, James W. Mentioned .....	309, 572, 994, 998
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1002
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	311
Snyder, Martin. Mentioned .....	1094, 1097
Snyder, Simon. Mentioned .....	1323
Snyder, William A. Mentioned .....	576, 1144, 1147
Solbrig, Herman. Mentioned .....	509
Solomon, Joseph. Mentioned .....	756
Sorber, Martin V. Mentioned .....	1210
Sorrel, G. Moxley. Mentioned .....	389, 1273, 1278
Souders, Jacob A. Mentioned .....	448
Sonthard, David. Mentioned .....	1153, 1261
Sonthard, Lewis. Mentioned .....	930
South Anna Bridge, Va. Skirmish at, March 14, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of Devin, Thomas G. Merritt, Wesley. Sheridan, Philip H. Also itinerary, p. 121.
South Boston, Va. Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to. See Danville and South Boston, Va. Expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to, April 23-29, 1865.
South Carolina Troops. Mentioned. Artillery, Heavy— Battalions: 18th (Batteries), C, 1274. Artillery, Light—Batteries: Brooks, 1269; Palmetto, No. 2, 1269. Cavalry—Regiments: 7th, 492, 498, 1275.

	Page.
South Carolina Troops. Mentioned—Continued.
Infantry— Regiments : 1st,* 737; 1st P. A., 1272; 1st Rifles, 1272; 1st Vol- unteers, 1268; 2d Rifles, 1268; 5th, 6th, 1268; 12th, 13th, 14th, 1272; 17th, 18th, 1274; 21st, 435; 22d, 23d, 1274; 25th, 435; 26th, 1032, 1274; Palmetto Sharpshooters, 1268.
Miscellaneous—Hampton Legion, 1275; Holcombe Legion, 1274.
South, Department of the. (Union.)
Limits extended .....	1
North Carolina, District of, constituted .....	1
Southfield, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	10
South Quay, Va.
Scout from Beauvoir's Mills to, Jan. 2, 1865. Report of George F. Dorn. . .	392
Skirmish at, March 10, 1865. See Marfree's Depot, N. C. Expedition from Suffolk, Va., to, etc., March 10-11, 1865.
South Side Railroad, Va. Engagement at Sutherland's Station on. See Sutherland's Station, South Side Railroad, Va. Engagement at,   April 2, 1865.
Sova, Joseph E. Mentioned .....	1201
Sowles, George D. Mentioned .....	908
Spangler, Aaron. Mentioned .....	101, 310, 312
Sparks, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	899
Sparks, Miles G. Mentioned .....	924
Spaulding, Ira.
Correspondence with
Dwane, James C. ....	157, 158, 161, 162
Van Brocklin, Martin .....	645
Mentioned .....	157-162, 565, 642, 647, 648
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	642
Spaulding, Joseph W.
Mentioned .....	567
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	763
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	215
Spear, Ellis. Mentioned .....	861, 864
Spear, Samuel P. Mentioned .....	148, 580, 597, 1244, 1251, 1252
Spence, Robert. Mentioned .....	311, 905
Spencer, Green C. Mentioned .....	904
Spencer, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	1276, 1278
Spencer, T. Rush.
Mentioned .....	257, 557, 615, 797, 836
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	263
Sperry, William J. Mentioned .....	571, 959, 968, 970, 973, 1261
Spessard, Michael P. Mentioned .....	1268, 1277
Spillane, Timothy. Mentioned .....	380
Spreadbury, John. Mentioned .....	494
Spring, James. Mentioned .....	417
Sproul, Oliver. Mentioned .....	1192
Sprowl, Francis. Mentioned .....	925, 934, 935
Stagg, Peter.
Mentioned .....	120-122, 124, 125, 460, 475, 476, 481, 485, 486, 489-493, 575, 591, 1103, 1107, 1108, 1113, 1120, 1122-1128, 1316
Report of expedition from Winchester to the front of Petersburg, Va., Feb. 27-March 28, 1865 .....	495

* Impracticable to determine which 1st this refers to.

	Page.
Stair, Oliver P. Mentioned.....	294, 295
Stallworth, Nicholas. Mentioned.....	1271
Stanfield, Wesley W. Mentioned.....	1241
Stanley, David S. Mentioned.....	38
Stansbury, Whitfield. Mentioned.....	311, 995
Stansel, Martin L. Mentioned.....	1274, 1287
Stanton, David L. Mentioned.....	93, 569, 585, 875
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	874
Stanton, Edwin M. Mentioned.....	97, 401, 402, 606, 1153, 1161, 1267
For correspondence, etc., see War Department, U. S.
Stanton, John. Mentioned.....	569, 850
Staples, Daniel. Mentioned.....	1043, 1076
Starbird, Isaac W. Mentioned.....	507, 685, 758, 759, 761, 764
Stark, Alexander W. Mentioned.....	1271, 1279
Starr, Edward. Mentioned.....	1034
Starr, Samuel H. Mentioned.....	116
Start, Romee H. Mentioned.....	505, 1011
Staunton, Va. Occupation of, March 2, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of Devin, p. 489; Sheridan, p. 476; also general report of Grant, p. 48.
Staunton and Charlottesville, Va. Expedition from Richmond to, May 6-14, 1865. Report of Franklin A. Stratton.....	1324
Staup, Peter. Mentioned.....	1001
Stayner, James E. Mentioned.....	598, 1157
Stearns, Alvin. Mentioned.....	592
Stearns, Joseph L. Mentioned.....	599
Stearns, Ozeria P. Mentioned.....	404
Stedman, Charles M. Mentioned.....	1272
Stedman, Fort. See Fort Stedman.
Steed, W. G. Mentioned.....	1269
Steedman, John M. Mentioned.....	1268
Steele, Frederick. Mentioned.....	14, 35, 59
Stephens, Alexander H. Mentioned.....	60
Stephens, John H. Mentioned.....	1038, 1064
Stephenson's Depot, Va. Scout from, to Smithfield, W. Va. See Smithfield, W. Va. Scout to, from Stephenson's Depot, March 29, 1865.
Sterner, William. Mentioned.....	895
Stewart, George H. Mentioned.....	1268, 1277
Stevens, Atherton H., jr. Mentioned.....	579, 1213, 1227, 1228
Stevens, Charles E. Mentioned.....	572
Stevens, Charles H. Mentioned.....	1035
Stevens, Hazard. Mentioned.....	958
Stevens, Henry H. Mentioned.....	599, 994, 1003
Stevenson, John D. Mentioned.....	525
Stewart, Arthur. Mentioned.....	1241
Stewart, Franklin B. Mentioned.....	568, 777, 782, 787
Stewart, George W. Mentioned.....	1150, 1153, 1261
Stewart, Joseph. Mentioned.....	874, 1261
Stewart, Martin L. Mentioned.....	1273
Stewart, Matthew. Mentioned.....	236
Stickney, Clifford. Mentioned.....	639

	Page.
Stiles, Elbridge. Mentioned.....	349, 354, 1037
Stiles, George W. Mentioned.....	1271
Stillé, Louis R. Mentioned.....	164
Stitt, William. Mentioned.....	579
Stitzer, Francis A. Mentioned.....	1021
Stockton, Robert F., jr. Mentioned.....	1154
Stockton, William A. F.
Mentioned.....	506
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	723
Stokes, P. Byron. Mentioned.....	1247
Stone, Ebenezer W. Mentioned.....	1093
Stone, Mason A. Mentioned.....	1115
Stone, Peter. Mentioned.....	995, 1001
Stone, Valentine H.
Mentioned.....	356-358, 565, 1048, 1070, 1073, 1074
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1090
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	190
Stone, William. Mentioned.....	215
Stoneman, George. Mentioned.....	32, 40, 46-49, 58, 59
Stout, William R. Mentioned.....	1153
Stover, John H.
Mentioned.....	537, 761
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	219
Stowe, William A. Mentioned.....	809, 1272
Stowits, George H. Mentioned.....	1163, 1196
Straight, James H. Mentioned.....	423
Stratton, Franklin A.
Mentioned.....	459, 580, 1246, 1247
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1254
Fearnsville and Smithfield, Va. Expedition from Bermuda Hundred to, Feb. 11-15, 1865.....	459
Stamton and Charlottesville, Va. Expedition from Richmond to, May 6-14, 1865.....	1324
Strauss, Henry. Mentioned.....	265
Streeter, John F. Mentioned.....	1177
Strelle, Christian. Mentioned.....	1150, 1153, 1261
Strength of Troops. See Organization, Strength, etc.
Stribling, Robert M. Mentioned.....	383, 391, 1275, 1279
Strong, James. Mentioned.....	599
Strother, M. W. Mentioned.....	1300
Strumph, Isaac. Mentioned.....	748
Stuart, Alexander H. H. Mentioned.....	515, 523
Stuart, James T.
Mentioned.....	915, 916
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	940
Stubbs, Charles E. Mentioned.....	565
Stubel, William. Mentioned.....	827
Sturdivant, N. A. Mentioned.....	1276, 1279
Sturgis, Samuel D. Mentioned.....	33
Sturgis, Thomas. Mentioned.....	332, 336
Subsistence Stores. See Munitions of War.

Page.

Suffolk, Va. Expedition to Murfree's Depot, N. C., from. See Murfree's Depot, N. C. Expedition from Suffolk, Va., to, etc., March 10-11, 1865.
Sullivan, Jeremiah C. Mentioned .....	525
Sulphur Springs, Va. Operations about. See Warrenton, Bealeton Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va. Operations about, March 3-8, 1865.
Summerhayes, John W. Mentioned .....	689, 758
Summers, John W. Mentioned .....	1088
Summit Point, W. Va. Scout from, to Shenandoah Ferry. See Shenandoah Ferry, W. Va. Scout to, from Summit Point, etc., March 16-17, 1865.
Sumner, Alexander B. Mentioned .....	959
Sumner, Edwin V. Mentioned .....	50, 62, 63, 372, 542, 543, 545, 576
Report of expedition from Deep Bottom, Va., to near Weldon, N. C., etc., March 28-April 11, 1865 .....	575
Sumner, Samuel B. Mentioned .....	1021
Surrender of Army of Northern Virginia. See Appomattox Court-House (Clower Hill), Va. Surrender of Army of Northern Virginia at, April 9, 1865.
Sutherland's Station, South Side Railroad, Va. Engagement at, April 2, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Bird, Patrick H.	Hyde, Joseph.	Pohoritz, Anthony.
Burke, Denis P.	Kurples, Henry M.	Ratsey, John.
Custer, George A.	Tate, Nathaniel P.	Scott, George W.
Doyin, Thomas P.	Lidell, John A.	Sheridan, Philip H.
Egbert, George T.	MacDougall, Clinton D.	Solih, James J.
Gleamy, William.	Merritt, Wesley.	Stockton, William A. P.
Hamlin, James H.	Miles, Nelson A.	Sutton, John F.
Humphreys, Andrew A.	Mintzer, William M.	Torwilliger, William H.
Husk, Lewis W.	Nugent, Robert.	Waltner, John R.
Hyde, John McK.	Peltou, John G.	Wilder, I. Hart.
Also general report of Grant, p. 55, and Memories , pp. 75, 78-81, 88, 89, 98, 121.
Sutton, John F. Mentioned .....	211, 506
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	754
Suwanee, Steamer. Mentioned .....	145
Swain, William. Mentioned .....	438
Swain, Wilmon W. Mentioned .....	1311-1314
Swan, William W. Mentioned .....	277, 870
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Charles Griffin .
Swank, Daniel C. Mentioned .....	369
Sweatman, Robert. Mentioned .....	494
Sweeney, Patrick. Mentioned .....	859
Sweitzer, Nelson B. Correspondence with Olney K. Gault .....	547
Mentioned .....	1114
Reports of
Pint Hill, Va. Skirmish near, March 7, 1865 .....	545
Landon County, Va. Scout from Vienna into, April 8-10, 1865 .....	1307
Landon County, Va. Scout in, March 12-14, 1865 .....	552
Swift, Frederick W. Mentioned .....	573
Swisher, Alfred M. Mentioned .....	1088

	Page.
Swoope's Depot, Va. Affair at, March 2, 1865. See Petersburg, Va., Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 22-March 28, 1865.
Reports of
Devlin, Thomas C.	Shepherd, Philip H.
Fitzhugh, Charles L.
Also Itineraries , pp. 121, 122.
Swords, Henry L. Mentioned.....	322, 332, 1022
Swoyer, Francis J. Mentioned.....	204, 295
Sykcs, James. Mentioned.....	635
Symonds, Benjamin R. Mentioned.....	1024
Syphers, Albion. Mentioned.....	961
Tabb, William B. Mentioned.....	1274
Tabernacle Church, or Beaver Pond Creek, Va. Skirmish at, April 4, 1865. See Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.
Reports of
Devlin, Thomas C.	Johnson, Basilard R.
Lee, Fitzhugh.
Also Itinerary , p. 143.
Taggart, Charles A. Mentioned.....	916, 926, 945, 947, 1261
Taggart, Francis H. Mentioned.....	1230
Talcott, Thomas M. R. Mentioned.....	536, 1267
Tanner, Zera J. Mentioned.....	107
Tantum, William H. Mentioned.....	577
Tarbell, Jonathan.
Mentioned.....	570, 881, 884-886
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	886
Tarr, John F. Mentioned.....	599
Tatum, Daniel. Mentioned.....	1000, 1001
Tayloe, George H. Mentioned.....	1273, 1278
Taylor, ———. Mentioned.....	543
Taylor, Benjamin F. Mentioned.....	574, 1026, 1060
Taylor, Constantine. Mentioned.....	1143
Taylor, George F. Mentioned.....	1037
Taylor, Hosea B. Mentioned.....	925, 931, 939
Taylor, James M. Mentioned.....	1270
Taylor, John. Mentioned.....	1034
Taylor, Joseph H. Mentioned.....	461
Taylor, Judah. Mentioned.....	994
Taylor, Richard. Mentioned.....	34, 49, 59
Taylor, Robert S. Mentioned.....	1268
Taylor, Silas B. Mentioned.....	158, 163, 612, 643, 645
Taylor, Walter H. Mentioned.....	390
Tearney, James.
Mentioned.....	572, 981, 983
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	980
Teller, John J. Mentioned.....	1074, 1082, 1086, 1087
Templeton, Robinson. Mentioned.....	970, 973
Tennaut, Aldrich. Mentioned.....	761
Tennessee Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Infantry— Regiments : 1st P. A., 1272; 6th, 1260; 7th, 960, 1260, 1272; 14th, 17th, 1272; 23d, 960, 973, 975, 1272; 25th, 44th, 63d, 1272.
Tennessee Troops. Mentioned. (Union.)
Cavalry— Battalions : Bradford's,* 33.
Terrell, John A. Mentioned.....	1273
Terrell, William H. Mentioned.....	953, 958, 962

* Also called 13th Regiment.

	Page.
Terrill, Albert A. Mentioned.....	574
Terry, Adrian. Mentioned.....	168
Terry, Alfred H.
Assignment to command.....	3
Congratulatory Orders. Expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	168
Correspondence with
Grant, U. S. ....	43
War Department, U. S. ....	402
Mentioned.....	43-46, 129, 139, 166, 168, 402, 403, 407, 410, 418, 423, 425, 429, 441
Reports of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	391, 401
Thanks of U. S. Congress to. Assault and capture of Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, 1865.....	402
Terry, Ira C. Mentioned.....	579
Terry, John C. Mentioned.....	146
Terry, William. Mentioned.....	382, 389, 391, 392, 1271, 1277
Terry, William R. Mentioned.....	1264, 1268, 1277
Terwilliger, William H.
Mentioned .....	566
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20-April 9, 1865 .....	727
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	199
Teters, Wilbert B. Mentioned.....	578, 1217
Towksbury, John. Mentioned.....	574
Texas Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)
Infantry— Regiments : 1st, 1260, 1268; 4th, 5th, 1268.
Thames, Steamer. Mentioned.....	132
Thatcher, Charles M. Mentioned.....	1032
Thayer, Amos M. Mentioned.....	689
Thayer, John M. Mentioned.....	35
Thielemann, Henry. Mentioned.....	1023
Thomas, Alphens. Mentioned.....	97
Thomas, Augustus L. Mentioned.....	257, 797, 836
Thomas, Charles E. Mentioned.....	577, 1177
Thomas, Edward L. Mentioned.....	389, 1272, 1278, 1285
Thomas, George H.
Correspondence with U. S. Grant.....	47, 49
Mentioned.....	31, 32, 36-40, 44-47, 49, 1273
Thomas, Hampton S. Mentioned.....	576, 1143, 1146, 1261
Thomas, Henry G. Mentioned.....	140, 579, 596
Thomas, H. R. Mentioned.....	1269
Thomas, James B. Mentioned.....	294
Thomas, Joseph. Mentioned.....	265
Thomas, Lorenzo. Mentioned.....	883
For correspondence, etc., see Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A.
Thompson, Edward. Mentioned.....	1128
Thompson, Freeman C. Mentioned.....	1261
Thompson, Gilbert. Mentioned.....	1168
Thompson, Henry C. Mentioned.....	577
Thompson, John.
Mentioned .....	404, 419, 453
Reports of
Fort Fisher, N. C. Expedition to, and capture of, etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865..	412
Myrtle Sound, N. C. Reconnaissance to, etc., Jan. 19, 1865.....	454

	Page.
Thompson, John L.
Mentioned .....	477, 486, 529, 1115
Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865 .....	528
Thompson, Lewis M. Mentioned .....	598
Thompson, Thomas J. Mentioned .....	241
Thompson, William H. Mentioned .....	1082
Thompson, William P.
Correspondence with Horatio B. Read .....	1323
Mentioned .....	1322, 1323
Thomson, James W. Mentioned .....	1302, 1303
Thomson, John T. Mentioned .....	278
Thorne, Francis E. Mentioned .....	1036
Thorp, Frank. Mentioned .....	1077
Tibbitts, William B.
Mentioned .....	463
Report of expedition from Camp Averell (near Winchester) into Loudoun County, Va., etc., Feb. 18-19, 1865 .....	462
Tibbitts, William H. Mentioned .....	69, 214, 216
Tidball, John C.
Mentioned .....	71, 173, 189, 317, 319, 320, 319, 362, 363, 574, 590, 661, 667-669, 672, 673, 898, 1019, 1020, 1030, 1038, 1062, 1078, 1083, 1084, 1086-1090
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1070
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	355
Tiers, Edmund T. Mentioned .....	875, 876
Tift, John. Mentioned .....	977
Tilden, Charles W. Mentioned .....	570, 890
Tilden, George G. Mentioned .....	960, 970, 973
Tillman, James M. Mentioned .....	1153
Tilson, William F. Mentioned .....	970
Timber Ridge, W. Va. Scout Co. from Winchester, Va., April 11-12, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Draper, p. 539.
Tinkham, James. Mentioned .....	1211
Tippin, Andrew H.
Mentioned .....	73, 574, 641, 1002, 1095
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1097
Titau, Steamer. Mentioned .....	1306
Titus, Charles. Mentioned .....	1153, 1261
Titus, James. Mentioned .....	288
Tobey, John S. Mentioned .....	1021
Todd, Edward A. Mentioned .....	303
Tomlinson, Henry M. Mentioned .....	1314
Tompkins, Aaron B. Mentioned .....	1153, 1261
Tompkins, Daniel D. Mentioned .....	889
Tompkins, Daniel S. Mentioned .....	1076
Tompkins, George W. Mentioned .....	380
Tompkins, James L. Mentioned .....	1271
Tompkins, John A. Mentioned .....	294, 295, 895
Tonawanda, Steamer. Mentioned .....	131
Torbert, Alfred T. A.
Correspondence with Winfield S. Hamrock .....	529
Mentioned .....	20, 28, 123, 455, 525, 532, 533, 1322
Torsch, John W. Mentioned .....	1272

	Page.
Towers, John R. Mentioned.....	1268
Towles, George F. Mentioned.....	425
Towne, Myron S. Mentioned.....	1233
Townes, W. W. Mentioned.....	913
For correspondence, etc., see Petersburg, Va., Mayor of.
Townsend, Edward D. For correspondence as A. A. G., see Adjutant-General's Office, U. S. A.
Townsend, Joseph G.
Mentioned.....	560, 854, 857
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	850
Tracy, Amasa S.
Mentioned.....	307, 571, 587, 956, 959, 968, 971, 972
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	301
Tracy, Osgood V. Mentioned.....	979
Trafton, Leonard. Mentioned.....	1035
Transportation. (Army.) See Army Transportation.
Traver, John. Mentioned.....	995, 1001
Treanor, R. F. Mentioned.....	1305
Treher, Aaron. Mentioned.....	294
Treichel, Charles. Mentioned.....	1143
Tremain, Frank W. Mentioned.....	578, 598, 1183, 1203, 1204
Tremain, Frederick L. Mentioned.....	69, 366, 622
Tremain, Henry E. Mentioned.....	233, 1143
Tremlett, Henry M. Mentioned.....	97, 570
Trenor, Henry H. Mentioned.....	377
Trickey, William H.
Mentioned.....	404, 410, 453
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865.....	413
Trimble, Joel G. Mentioned.....	494, 1126, 1127
Tripp, Stephen. Mentioned.....	1255
Tripp, William H. Mentioned.....	214, 761
Troxel, Elias S.
Mentioned.....	469
Report of scout from New Creek through Greenland Gap to Franklin, W. Va., Jan. 11-15, 1865.....	451
Troxell, Jacob L. Mentioned.....	69
Troy, Daniel S. Mentioned.....	233
Troy, Thomas. Mentioned.....	1038
True, Edward A.
Mentioned.....	578, 1206
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1204
True, Herod W. Mentioned.....	953
Truesdell, Charles A. Mentioned.....	177
Trux, William S.
Mentioned.....	105, 572, 588, 978-980, 985, 990, 992, 998
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	981, 983
Tucker, Allen. Mentioned.....	1261
Tucker, Jacob R.
Correspondence with U. S. Grant.....	1262
Mentioned.....	1261
Tucker, John A. Mentioned.....	1270
Tucker, John R. Mentioned.....	652, 906, 915, 998, 1276, 1295, 1296
Tucker, J. Randolph. Mentioned.....	515

	Page.
Tucker, Julius M. Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.	339
Tully, Redmond. Mentioned	580
Turkington, Joseph. Mentioned	598
Turner, John W.
Mentioned	129,
133, 136, 177, 578, 595, 676, 1160-1163, 1165, 1166, 1173-1176, 1178-1181,
1183, 1192-1195, 1198, 1199, 1211, 1221-1225, 1235-1237, 1239, 1242, 1243
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865	1214
For correspondence as Chief of Staff, see Edward O. C. Ord .
Turner, Orlando S. Mentioned	961, 973
Tuttle, James. Mentioned	1208
Twiss, John M. Mentioned	74, 174, 175, 185, 356
Twitchell, Adelbert B.
Mentioned	574, 1030, 1043, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1084
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865	1076
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865	360
Twitchell, Marshall H. Mentioned	1230
Tyler, Albert M. Mentioned	915, 918
Tyler, Casper W. Mentioned	236
Tyler, James E. Mentioned	1274
Tyler, Mason W. Mentioned	302
Tynon, John. Mentioned	1153
Tyrer, Theodore. Mentioned	747
Tyson, Nathan. Mentioned	1001
Underhill, Henry P. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb.
27-April 23, 1865	531
Underwood, Bush. Mentioned	1309
Union Troops.
Casualties. Returns of
Beverly, W. Va. Capture of U. S. Forces at, Jan. 11, 1865	449
Cavalry Corps, March 1-April 9, 1865	601
Fort Fisher, N. C. Assault and capture of, Jan. 15, 1865	405
Fort Fisher, Va. Action at, March 25, 1865	302, 310
Fort Stodum, Va. Assault on, March 25, 1865	70, 71, 175, 320, 325, 350, 358
Hatcher's Run, Va. Battle of, Feb. 5-7, 1865	63-69, 194, 240, 257, 367
James, Army of the, Jan. 1-April 9, 1865	600, 601
Lewis Farm, Va. Engagement at, near Gravelly Run, March 29, 1865	803
Petersburg, Va. Assault upon and capture of fortified lines in front of April 2, 1865	650, 608, 912, 957, 995, 1020, 1056, 1058, 1060, 1065
Potomac, Army of the, Jan. 1-April 9, 1865	600, 601
Sailor's Creek, Va. Engagement at, April 6, 1865	682, 909, 917
White Oak Road, Va. Skirmish at, April 1, 1865	680
White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge, Va. Engagement at, March
31, 1865	677, 819
See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 , and Richmond, Va.,
Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.
Mentioned.
Colored.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 7th,* 33.
Artillery, Light— Regiments : 2d ( Batteries ), B, 140, 145.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 144, 577, 593; 2d, 144, 579, 596.

* Originally 1st Abnbaum Siege Artillery.

Union Troops—Continued.

Page.

Mentioned.

Colored.

Infantry—Regiments: 1st, 141, 401, 4th, 401, 421; 5th, 401, 423; 6th, 401, 424; 7th, 580, 596, 1234, 1235; 8th, 580, 596, 1236-1238; 9th, 579, 596; 10th, 146, 401, 579, 596, 1242; 19th, 22d, 23d, 579, 596; 27th, 143, 399, 400, 401, 403, 424, 425; 28th, 143, 146, 579, 596, 1242; 29th, 580, 596, 1211-1213; 30th, 144, 404, 421; 31st, 580, 596, 1241-1243; 36th, 579, 596, 1211; 37th, 401, 423; 38th, 579, 596; 39th, 401; 41st, 139, 580, 596, 1236, 1238-1241; 43d, 579, 596; 45th, 580, 596, 1236, 1240, 1241; 107th, 143; 109th, 580, 596, 1231, 1235; 114th, 579, 596; 115th, 139, 141, 579, 596, 1231; 116th, 580, 596, 1231, 1235, 1238, 1242, 1243; 117th, 139, 140, 579, 596; 118th, 579, 596; 127th, 580, 596, 1236, 1240, 1241.

Regulars:

Artillery, Light—Regiments: 1st (Batteries), B, 129, 138, 579, 595, 1180, 1181, 1196, 1225, 1226; D, 145, 580, 597; H, I, 68, 576, 592; M, 145, 580, 597, 1216; 2d, 527; 2d (Batteries), A, 68, 576, 592, 618, 1130, 1147, 1159; I, 618; M, 475, 502; 3d (Batteries), B, 395, 402-401; 4th (Batteries), B, 100, 570, 586, 660, 801, 846, 818, 899-901; C, 475, 575, 591, 1107, 1120, 1123, 1124, 1126, 1128; D, 145, 580, 597; E, 475, 575, 591, 1107, 1120, 1123, 1124, 1126, 1128; K, 165, 71, 85, 191, 192, 212, 221, 249-252, 568, 581, 660, 732, 791-791; L, 138, 579, 595; 5th, (Batteries), A, 129, 138, 579, 595, 1180, 1226; C, 71, 85, 190, 191, 329, 356, 358, 565, 582, 660, 1040, 1070, 1073, 1087, 1090, 1091; D, 100, 570, 586, 660, 899-901; E, 251, 572, 588, 660, 980, 1000-1011, 1014, 1015; F, 138, 579, 595; G, 100, 570, 586, 660, 899-901; I, 71, 85, 190, 191, 329, 356, 358, 565, 582, 660, 1010, 1070, 1073, 1087, 1090, 1091.

Cavalry—Regiments: 1st, 125, 575, 591, 1122-1124, 1127, 1128; 2d, 124, 527; 5th, 124, 479, 481, 487, 491, 492, 491, 500, 594, 575, 581, 591, 1122, 1127-1129; 6th, 121, 492, 499-501, 527, 575, 591, 1122, 1127, 1128.

Engineers—Battalions: Harwood's, 61, 565, 581, 650-653, 659.

Infantry—Regiments: 3d, 565, 581, 639, 640; 4th, 594, 581; 11th, 639, 640; 11th (Battalions), 1st, 564, 581; 14th (Battalions), 1st, 639, 640; 2d, 564, 581, 639, 640.

Volunteers.

Infantry—Regiments: 1st Veteran, 526, 535, 536; 2d Sharpshooters, 61, 226-228.

For other Volunteers, see respective States.

Organization, strength, etc.

Cavalry Corps .....	475, 575, 576
James, Army of the .....	61-63, 576-580
Potomac, Army of the .....	61-63, 564-574
Virginia and North Carolina, Department of .....	403, 404
Urban, Gustavus. Mentioned .....	575
Usher, Schollay G. Mentioned .....	598
Utterback, Addison W. Mentioned .....	1273
Van Benthuyssen, A. C. Mentioned .....	440
Van Brocklin, Martin.
Correspondence with Ira Spankling .....	645
Mentioned .....	160-163, 642-645, 647, 648, 797, 800
Van Buren, James L. Mentioned .....	349, 347, 349, 1019, 1020

For correspondence as A. D. C., see John G. Parke.

	Page.
Vanderslice, John M. Mentioned .....	380
Vandervoort, William. Mentioned.....	513
Van Deussen, Albert H. Mentioned.....	97
Van Etten, Orsamus R. ....	572, 1009
Mentioned.....	1012
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	422
Van Evera, Alonzo. Mentioned .....	930
Van Marter, Jacob. Mentioned .....	1261
Van Matre, Joseph. Mentioned .....	157, 160-163, 615
Van Rensselaer, William. Mentioned .....	423
Van Santvoord, Eugene. Mentioned.....	921, 933, 937
Van Scoy, Hiram C. Mentioned .....	211, 217
Van Stickle, Moracio. Mentioned .....	757, 767, 768
Van Winkle, Edward D. Mentioned.....	991
Varney, Ira F. Mentioned .....	131
Varuna, Steamer. Mentioned .....	1094, 1096
Vaughan, Benjamin. Mentioned .....	578
Vaughan, Samuel K. Mentioned.....
Vaughan Road, Va. ....
Battle of. See Hatcher's Run, Va. Battle of, Feb. 5-7, 1865.
Skirmish on, near Hatcher's Run, March 29, 1865. See Appomattox, Va.,
Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of
Churcherlain, Joshua L. ....	Griffin, Charles.
De Trobriand, Regls. ....	Hays, William.
Gallager, John H. ....	Lee, Robert K.
	Mincks, George G.
	Olmsford, William A.
	Wendell, Daniel.
Also Itinerary , p. 82.
Vaughn, John C. Mentioned .....	40
Venable, Charles S. Mentioned.....	1289
Venai, James B. S. Mentioned.....	294, 895
Vermont Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Heavy— Regiments : 1st, *304, 305, 307, 571, 587, 968-970, 972; 1st
( Batteries ), D, 572, 588.
Artillery, Light— Batteries : 3d, 565, 582, 600, 1011.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 575, 591, 1140, 1141.
Infantry— Regiments : 2d, 304, 305, 307, 571, 587, 956, 967, 968, 970; 3d, 305--
307, 571, 587, 968, 970; 4th, 305-307, 571, 587, 968, 970, 971; 5th, 306-308,
571, 587, 968, 970, 972, 974, 975; 6th, 306, 307, 571, 587, 968, 970, 972; 8th, 531,
532; 9th, 578, 595, 1211; 10th, 307-309, 572, 588, 978, 981-983, 987, 990-992;
17th, 574, 589, 1056, 1059, 1060.
Verplanck, Robert N. Mentioned .....	979
Verrill, George W. Mentioned .....	787
Vezin, Henry A. Mentioned .....	1166, 1167, 1177
Vienna, Va. Scout into Loudoun County from. See Loudoun County, Va.
Scout from Vienna into, April 8-10, 1865.
Vincent, Albert. Mentioned.....	948
Vincent, Nathan H. ....
Mentioned .....	568
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	232
Vinton, Harvey H. Mentioned .....	575, 1127
Virginia. Military Department embracing.....	2
Virginia, Department of. (Union.)
Abbot, Henry L., assigned as chief of artillery of .....	665
Ord, Edward O. C., assigned to command of .....	3
Perry, Alfred H., assigned to command of .....	3

* Also called 11th Vermont.

Virginia Troops. Mentioned. (Confederate.)

Artillery, Heavy—Battalions: 10th, 1212. Batteries: Neblett, 1275.

Artillery, Light—Battalions: 13th, 1274, 1279. Batteries: Albemarle, 1273; Alleghany, 946, 1271; Ashland, 1269; Bedford, 1269; Blount's, 1275; Brooke, 1273; Caroline, 1271; Chamberlayne's, 1273; Clutter's, 1271; Danville, 1273; Ellett's, 1274; Fauquier, 1275; Fredericksburg, 1271; Hampden, 1275; Johnston, 1275; Johnston's, 1276; King William, 1271; Lee, 1271; Letcher, 1274; Lewis', 1273; McComas, 1271; McGregor's, 1276; Mathews, 1271; Moore's, 1274; Morris, 1271; Nelson, 1269; Nelson, No. 2, 1271; Norfolk Blues, 1274; Orange, 1271; Otey, 1274, 1282; Parker's, 1269; Pogram's, 1275; Petersburg, 1276; Powhatan, 1271; Purcell, 1274; Richmond Fayette, 1275; Richmond Howitzers (companies), 2d, 3d, 1271; Ringgold, 1274, 1282; Rockbridge, 1271; Rockbridge, No. 2, 1273; Salem, 1271; Shoemaker's, 1276; Southside, 1275; Stafford, 1271; Staunton, 1271; Surry, 1271; Taylor's 1269; Thomson's, 1276; United, 1275; Wright's, 1275; Young's, 1275.

Cavalry—Battalions: 35th, 122, 552, 1276, 1309; 36th, 1275; 39th, 1267; 43d, 48, 462, 467, 526, 527, 529, 535, 537, 552, 1306, 1308-1310, 1319. Companies: McNeill's Partisans, 451, 469, 470, 515, 528, 538, 555. Regiments: 1st, 2d, 3d, 1275; 4th, 467, 1275; 5th, 1275, 1307; 6th, 1275; 7th, 1276; 8th, 9th, 10th, 1275; 11th, 1276; 12th, 460, 535, 1276; 13th, 1275; 14th, 512, 1155, 1275; 16th, 17th, 1276; 20th, 517; 21st, 22d, 1276; 24th, 1276.

Infantry—Battalions: 1st, 1267; 3d Reserves, 1270; 25th, 1260; 44th, 1267, 1270; 45th, 451. Regiments: 1st, 335, 342, 380, 1033, 1268; 2d, 1271; 3d, 1268; 4th, 1271; 5th, 335, 342, 1271; 6th, 1273; 7th, 8th, 1268; 9th, 865, 1257, 1268; 10th, 995, 1271; 11th, 1268; 12th, 1258, 1259, 1273; 13th, 1270; 14th, 15th, 1268; 16th, 1273; 17th, 1268; 18th, 1258, 1268; 19th, 1268; 21st, 23d, 1271; 24th, 1268; 25th, 1271; 26th, 1258, 1274; 27th, 1259, 1271; 28th, 29th, 30th, 1268; 31st, 1270; 32d, 834, 881, 1268; 33d, 1271; 34th, 1274, 1287; 37th, 1271; 38th, 1259, 1268; 40th, 1260; 41st, 1273; 42d, 44th, 1271; 46th, 1258, 1274; 48th, 1271; 49th, 1270; 51st, 334, 336; 52d, 1270; 53d, 1268; 56th, 816, 1268; 57th, 1268; 58th, 1270; 59th, 1274; 61st, 1273.

Virginia Troops. Mentioned. (Union.)

Cavalry—Battalions: Loudoun Rangers, 526, 535, 1309.

Virginia and North Carolina, Department of. (Union.)

Butler, Benjamin P., relieved from command of ..... 3

Ord, Edward O. C., assumes command of ..... 3

Orders, Special, series 1865—Terry: No. 9, 425; No. 11, 168.

Union Troops in. Organization, strength, etc. Jan. 13-15, 1865 ..... 403, 401

Voege, Charles E. B. Mentioned ..... 508, 1137

Vogel, Theodore K. Mentioned ..... 267, 801, 818

Voigt, Julius. Mentioned ..... 1035

Volk, Christian A. Mentioned ..... 924

Volke, Frederick J. Mentioned ..... 921, 933, 935

Voris, Alvin C. Mentioned ..... 577, 1180, 1183, 1203

Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 ..... 1189

Vose, William P. Mentioned ..... 570, 899

Wabash, U. S. S. Mentioned ..... 435

Waddle, George W. Mentioned ..... 1184

Waddles, Julius. Mentioned ..... 540

Wade, Frank S. Mentioned ..... 1076

	Page.
Wade, Hamilton D. Mentioned .....	1271
Wadsworth, James W. Mentioned .....	257, 797, 822, 831, 836
Waggaman, Eugene. Mentioned .....	1271, 1277
Wagner, Philip H. Mentioned .....	857
Wainwright, Charles S.
Mentioned .....	357, 570, 586, 661, 796, 803, 819, 823, 836, 842, 900
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	898
Wainwright, John. Mentioned .....	403, 416, 419, 420, 431
Watte, Charles.
Mentioned .....	573, 1021, 1012-1014
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1044
Walcott, Charles F.
Mentioned .....	574, 1092, 1093
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1095
Waldron, George W. Mentioned .....	1269, 1277
Wales, Elijah. Mentioned .....	960, 972
Walker, David N. Mentioned .....	1274, 1279
Walker Duncan S. Mentioned .....	538
Walker, George R. Mentioned .....	925, 934
Walker, Henry H. Mentioned .....	510
Walker, James A. Mentioned .....	384, 386-388, 1270, 1277
Walker, R. Lindsay. Mentioned .....	1132, 1266, 1273, 1280-1282, 1291
Walker, William H. H. Mentioned .....	1311
Walkup, Samuel H. Mentioned .....	1272
Wall, Maurice W. Mentioned .....	727
Wallace, Lew.
Mentioned .....	26, 525, 527
Resumes command of Middle Department .....	2
Wallace, William H.
Mentioned .....	380, 816, 881, 1274, 1278, 1286, 1287, 1289-1291
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1291
Wallace, William R. Mentioned .....	1056, 1060
Walling, William H. Mentioned .....	42, 1161
Walpole, Horace H. Mentioned .....	573
Walrath, Ezra L.
Mentioned .....	403, 422, 428
Report of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	422
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan. 10, 1865 .....	428, 429
Walrond, Robert L. Mentioned .....	1270
Walsh, James J. Mentioned .....	555, 556
Walsh, James W. Mentioned .....	564, 805
Walter, James X. Mentioned .....	289, 296
Walter, Joseph. Mentioned .....	598
Walters, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	801, 848
Walton, Samuel. Mentioned .....	1153
Ward, ———. Mentioned .....	1313
Ward, Henry C. Mentioned .....	580, 1213
Ward, John A. Mentioned .....	301
War Department, C. S. Correspondence with
Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, U. S. A. ....	510
Davis, Jefferson .....	382

	Page.
War Department, U. S. Correspondence with
Botler, Benjamin F. ....	10
Sheridan, Philip H. ....	1111, 1114
Terry, Alfred H. ....	402
Wardwell, Edward H. Mentioned ....	639
Ware, William H. H. Mentioned ....	1056, 1059, 1060
Warfel, Henry C. Mentioned ....	1261
Warfield, Horace P. Mentioned ....	996, 1007
Warfield, Richard H. Mentioned ....	157
Warner, Clement E.
Mentioned ....	567, 761
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 ....	220
Warner, Edward R. Mentioned ....	662
Warner, George C. Mentioned ....	756
Warner, George F. Mentioned ....	1310
Warner, Henry C. Mentioned ....	923, 944
Warner, James M.
Mentioned ....	104, 300, 571, 587, 841, 954, 955, 957, 958, 962, 976
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 ....	962
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 ....	302
Warner, John H. Mentioned ....	1153
Warner, Lawson S. Mentioned ....	1033
Warren, Sergeant. Mentioned ....	763
Warren, Charles.
Mentioned ....	578
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 ....	1213
Warren, Edgar W. Mentioned ....	872
Warren, Gouverneur K.
Correspondence with
Ayres, Romeyn B. ....	278, 806, 812, 832
Bankhead, Henry C. ....	831
Bowerman, Richard N. ....	262
Burr, Allen J. ....	269
Cope, Eunior B. ....	259, 821, 833, 837
Crawford, Samuel W. ....	812, 831
Grant, U. S. ....	828
Griffin, Charles ....	271, 281, 804, 806, 811, 831
Gwyn, James ....	284, 285
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	803, 804, 806, 811, 813, 823
Lacko, Frederick T. ....	257
Mendo, George G. ....	253, 796, 798, 799, 802-813, 815-824, 826, 828
Pearson, Alfred L. ....	272, 273
Sheridan, Philip H. ....	824, 1104
Winthrop, Frederick ....	281
Mentioned ....	17,
18, 21, 24, 30, 31, 52-54, 61, 62, 65, 69, 73, 75, 77-79, 81, 85, 86, 94, 97, 149-154, 157, 161-164, 191-193, 196, 199, 202, 212, 213, 215-217, 222, 224-228, 236, 250, 252, 254, 259, 262, 269, 271, 272, 278, 281, 282, 284, 285, 297-299, 318, 344, 366, 371, 381, 382, 568, 584, 590, 600-605, 607, 608, 610, 616, 617, 621, 622, 625-628, 642, 651, 653, 654, 660, 661, 676-678, 693, 707, 710, 711, 717, 719, 721, 723, 724, 727, 729, 731, 734, 736, 738, 740, 741, 744, 745, 749-752, 754-756, 791, 796-798, 801, 803, 806, 811, 815, 816, 819, 826-829, 832-834, 836-838, 845, 848, 849, 854, 867, 868, 879-881, 887, 893, 894, 899, 900, 904, 1102-1105, 1111, 1175

Warren, Gouverneur K.—Continued.
Relieved from command of 5th Army Corps.....			828
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20–April 9, 1865.....			790, 828
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1–April 3, 1865.....			253
Resumes command of 5th Army Corps.....			3
Warren, Horatio N.
Mentioned.....			99, 286, 290, 570, 896
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1–April 3, 1865.....			296
Warren, Jonas H. Mentioned.....			423
Warren, Robert P. Mentioned.....			278, 870
Warren, Zenas C. Mentioned.....			580
Warrenton, Bealeton Station, Sulphur Springs, Salem, and Centerville, Va. Operations about, March 3–8, 1865. Report of Joseph Schneider.....			544
Warsaw, Va. Skirmish near, March 12, 1865. See Westmoreland County, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe into, etc., March 11–13, 1865.
Warwick, Abram D. Mentioned.....			1305
Warwick, William B. Mentioned.....			1305
Washburn, Cadwallader C. Mentioned.....			33
Washburn, Francis. Mentioned.....			61–63, 573, 598, 1104, 1162, 1167–1169
Washburne, Elihu B. Mentioned.....			1267
Washington, George L.
Correspondence with Braxton Bragg.....			446
Mentioned.....			442, 444
Washington, Department of. Christopher C. Augur assigned to command of.			9
Waterhouse, John R.
Mentioned.....			574
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20–April 9, 1865.....			1093
Watkins House, Va. Action at, March 25, 1865. See Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1–April 3, 1865. Reports of
Abbot, George B.	Hazard, John G.	Rivers, Charles C.
Anderson, George C.	Husk, Lewis W.	Rogers, Channery P.
Bird, Patrick H.	Hyde, John McK.	Schenck, Jacob.
Cannon, Madison M.	Korpes, Henry M.	Scott, George W.
Chamberlain, Joshua L.	Lewis, Frederick W.	Scott, Walter P.
Cull, William O.	McAllister, Robert.	Sellers, Ed G.
Cunningham, James A.	McKenna, James.	Shaffer, John W.
Ellis, John H.	Menth, George G.	Shapard, Russell B.
Fink, Augustus.	Miles, Nelson A.	Smith, James J.
Gagn, Charles F.	Morrill, Walter G.	Smith, John.
Grant, W. S.	O'Kell, Henry.	Threllinger, William H.
Gregory, Edgar M.	Perry, Byron B.	Vincent, Nathan H.
Hartford, Henry.	Pike, Francis.	Weygant, Charles H.
Hays, William.	Ribochnet, Alfred A.	Whider, L. Hart.
Also reports of McPacker , p. 610; Searl , p. 696, and Winters , pp. 75, 77, 79, 81, 82, 85, 86, 88–90.
Watrons, Jerome A. Mentioned.....			884
Watson, Charles H. Mentioned.....			1090
Watson, James A. Mentioned.....			895
Watts, Charles. Mentioned.....			1151, 1152
Watts, Richard A. Mentioned.....			344, 348, 349, 1027, 1044, 1064
Watson, Osborn. Mentioned.....			575

	Page.
Waynesborough, Va.
Engagement at, March 2, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865. Reports of
Campson, Hartwell R.	Merritt, Wesley.
Custer, George A.	Sheridan, Philip H.
	Pennington, Alexander C. M.
Also Itineraries , pp. 126, 127, and Journal of Hotchkiss , p. 516.
Movement of convey of prisoners to Winchester from. See Winchester, Va. Movement of convey of prisoners from Waynesborough to, March 3-5, 1865, etc.
Webb, Alexander S. Mentioned.....	161,
225, 318, 673, 676, 679, 680, 682, 799, 802-813, 815-820, 822, 824, 826, 827
For correspondence as Chief of Staff, see George G. Meade .
Webb, Alfred. Mentioned.....	930
Webb, John M. Report of operations in the Shenandoah Valley, Feb. 27-
April 23, 1865.....	530
Webb, Joseph C. Mentioned.....	1272
Webbert, Reuben R. Mentioned.....	349, 354
Weber, Max. Mentioned.....	26, 525
Webster, Hiram. Mentioned.....	1039, 1071, 1076, 1082
Webster, Richard. Mentioned.....	261
Weddell, John H. Mentioned.....	1269
Weeks, Benjamin F. Mentioned.....	1026
Weir, Henry C. Mentioned.....	1143
Weisiger, David A. Mentioned.....	389, 1273, 1278
Weiss, Adolphus. Mentioned.....	571
Weitzel, Godfrey.
Correspondence with
Hartsuff, George L.....	1171
Jackson, Richard H.....	1229
Mentioned.....	41, 42, 50, 51, 61-63, 139, 141, 374-376, 378, 379, 579,
596, 597, 600, 601, 610, 626, 1100, 1160, 1165, 1170, 1211, 1212, 1220, 1230, 1241
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1227
Welch, John F. Mentioned.....	1216
Welch, Richard. Mentioned.....	917, 926, 945-947, 1261
Weld, Stephen M., jr. Mentioned.....	574
Weldon, N. C. Expedition from Deep Bottom, Va., to north, with skirmishes,
March 28-April 11, 1865. Report of Edwin V. Sumner.....	555
Welles, Gideon. Mentioned.....	43, 393
Welles, Thomas G. Mentioned.....	1164
Wells, Charles W. Mentioned.....	1177
Wells, Joseph R. Mentioned.....	919, 920
Wells, Sidney. Mentioned.....	361
Wells, William. Mentioned.....	476,
480, 482, 502, 504-506, 575, 591, 1112, 1119, 1130, 1131, 1136, 1139
Weltner, John R.
Mentioned.....	560
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	752
Welton, John A. Mentioned.....	599
Wenner, Edward F. Mentioned.....	1153
Wessells, Henry W. Mentioned.....	19
West, George W.
Mentioned.....	64, 74, 82, 83, 102, 103, 224-227, 238, 239
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	235
West, Henry R. Mentioned.....	577, 1183, 1187, 1190

	Page
West, John R. Mentioned.....	619
West, Robert M.
Mentioned.....	580, 597, 1214, 1217, 1218, 1252
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1218
Westcott, William B. Mentioned.....	568, 790, 791
Westgate, Preserved. Mentioned.....	335, 338
Westlake, Jeremiah. Mentioned.....	895
Westmoreland County, Va. Expedition from Fort Monroe into, and skirmish (12th) near Warsaw, March 11-13, 1865.....	550
Communication from Arnold Harris.....	549
Report of Samuel H. Roberts.....
West Point, Va. Expedition from Yorktown to, Feb. 23-24, 1865. Report of
William R. Hedges.....	172
West Virginia, Department of. (Union.) Winfield S. Hancock assigned to command of.....	2
West Virginia Troops. Mentioned.
Cavalry— Regiments : 1st, 482, 575, 592; 2d, 3d, 575, 592.
Infantry— Regiments : 7th, 64, 212, 222, 567, 583, 693, 705, 706-768, 772, 775;
10th, 11th, 135, 136, 579, 595, 1221, 1223; 12th, 135, 578, 595, 1219, 1220;
14th, 535; 15th, 135, 136, 579, 595, 1221, 1223.....	577
Wetmore, George. Mentioned.....
Weygant, Charles H.
Mentioned.....	518, 777, 781, 782
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	233
Whaley, Edward A. Mentioned.....	770, 880
Whalk, Amos. Mentioned.....	895
Wharton, Gabriel C. Mentioned.....	384, 385, 387, 470, 508, 513, 516
Wheaton, Frank.
Correspondence with.....	943
Edwards, Oliver.....	931
Hamblin, Joseph E.....	917
Wright, Harriet G.....
Mentioned.....	67, 69, 72, 100-102, 104, 106, 153,
155, 193, 255-257, 259-262, 269, 301, 310, 344, 571, 580, 902, 905-909, 940, 954-
956, 962, 966, 967, 980, 984-986, 993, 998, 1001, 1007, 1009, 1010, 1013, 1108
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	909, 912, 913, 916, 917
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	207
Wheeler, Alger M. Mentioned.....	577
Wheeler, Daniel D. For correspondence as A. A. G., see Godfrey Weitzel .
Wheeler, Joseph. Mentioned.....	32
Wheeler, Moses D. Mentioned.....	999
Whelan, Arvin F. Mentioned.....	1028
Whipple, Paul. Mentioned.....	453
Whitaker, Edward W.
Mentioned.....	485, 502, 505, 507, 1113
Reports of
Cumberland, Md. Raid on, Feb. 21, 1865.....	470
Moorefield, W. Va. Expedition from Winchester, Va., to, Feb. 4-6,
1865.....	455
White, Aaron H. Mentioned.....	1153
White, Adam. Mentioned.....	1201
White, Ansel L. Mentioned.....	758
White, Charles W. Mentioned.....	565, 1011

	Page
White, David D. Mentioned .....	947, 948
White, Elijah V. Mentioned .....	452, 552
White, Harrison. Mentioned .....	497, 575, 1127
White, James. Mentioned .....	1109
White, John A. Mentioned .....	1034
Whiteford, Edward. Report of expedition from Burkeville and Petersburg to Danville and South Boston, Va., April 23-29, 1865. ....	1315
Whitehead, Richard O. Mentioned .....	1273
White Oak Ridge, Va. Engagement at. See White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge, Va. Engagement at, March 31, 1865.
White Oak Road, Va. Skirmish at, April 1, 1865. Casualties. Returns of Union Troops. ....	680
See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Crafts, William A. Pokoray, Anthony. Scott, George W. De Trobriand, Regis. Schaller, George W. Stockton, William A. F. Miles, Nelson A.
Also Itineraries , pp. 75, 99.
White Oak Road, or White Oak Ridge, Va. Engagement at, March 31, 1865. Casualties. Returns of.
Confederate Troops .....	1291
Union Troops .....	677, 819
Communications from
Humphreys, Andrew A. ....	815
Mende, George G. ....	813, 815, 817
Warren, Gouverneur K. ....	813, 815-817
Sketches .....	814, 819
See also Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865. Reports of Abbot, George R. Hyde, John McE. Pokoray, Anthony. Ayres, Henry B. Hyde, Joseph. Ramsey, John. Barbo, Davis F. Ives, Lucius H. Selafos, George W. Chamberlain, Joshua L. Johnson, Rushrod R. Scott, George W. Crafts, William A. Kellogg, John A. Smart, Charles. Egelston, Rouse S. Lane, Nathaniel P. Stanton, David L. Henry, William. Liddell, John A. Sutton, John F. Gambel, Sewall F. McCoy, Thomas F. Tarbell, Jonathan. Gregory, Edgar M. MacDugall, Cibaon D. Terwilliger, William H. Griffin, Charles. McParlin, Thomas A. Wainwright, Charles S. Gwyn, James. Mende, George G. Warren, Gouverneur K. Hayes, Joseph. Miles, Nelson A. Westner, John R. Hazard, John G. Mintzer, William M. Wilder, I. Hart. Humphreys, Andrew A. Myers, Daniel. Wians, Charles K. Hunk, Lewis W. Nugent, Robert. Whitman, Edward L.
Also general report of Grant , p. 51, and itineraries , pp. 77, 78, 81, 85, 86, 91, 93- 95, 99, 126, 127, 136.
Whitford, John N. Mentioned .....	556
Whiting, H. Rees. Mentioned .....	288
Whiting, Shubael C. Mentioned .....	1024
Whiting, William H. C.
Correspondence with Braxton Bragg .....	434
Mentioned .....	391, 406, 410, 415, 417, 429-431, 433-438, 440, 442-447
Reports of expedition to, and capture of, Fort Fisher, N. C., etc., Jan. 3-17, 1865 .....	439, 441
Whitner, W. H. Mentioned .....	1289
Whitney, George C. Mentioned .....	598
Whiton, John C. Mentioned .....	573, 1025
Whitt, Meredith M. Mentioned .....	599

	Page.
Whitted, Walter A. Mentioned.....	1272
Whittelsey, Charles H. Mentioned.....	908, 917
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Horatio G. Wright .
Whittier, Charles A. Mentioned.....	685
For correspondence as A. A. G., see Andrew A. Humphreys .
Wick, William. Mentioned.....	1031
Wickersham, Charles I. Mentioned.....	468
Wickham, Williams C. Mentioned.....	300, 511, 1278
Wiedersheim, William A. Mentioned.....	922, 943
Wiedrich, Michael. Mentioned.....	569, 872, 873
Wiggins, John C. Mentioned.....	483, 493, 1127
Wigginton, John W. Mentioned.....	1268
Wilcox, Cadmus M. Mentioned.....	383, 385-387, 389, 808, 809, 1110, 1272, 1278, 1285
Wilcox, Edwin S. Mentioned.....	294
Wilcox, Wilbur H. Mentioned.....	331
Wild, Edward A. Mentioned.....	579, 596, 1212
Wilder, I. Hart.
Mentioned.....	566
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	743
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	206
Wilder, Walter D. Mentioned.....	962
Willey, Henry Y. Mentioned.....	580
Wildrick, Abram C. Mentioned.....	573, 1025
Wiley, Ephraim W. Mentioned.....	1205
Wilkins, Ira G. Mentioned.....	1023, 1060
Wilkinson, Charles H. Mentioned.....	1268
Wilkinson, Nathan.
Mentioned.....	440
Report of capture of U. S. forces at Beverly, W. Va., Jan. 11, 1865.....	447
Willard, Edward N. Mentioned.....	1241
Willard, James D. Mentioned.....	961
Willcox, Orlando B.
Assumes temporary command of 9th Army Corps.....	3
Mentioned.....	61,
70, 107, 110, 111, 315-317, 320, 321, 329, 343, 345-347, 351-353, 573, 588, 604,
638, 641, 1016, 1017, 1019-1021, 1031, 1041-1044, 1047, 1051, 1067, 1091, 1235
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1038
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	322
Willey, John L. Mentioned.....	895
Willey, Martin L. Mentioned.....	1023
Willhide, Cyrus P. Mentioned.....	311
Willhide, Josiah E. Mentioned.....	995, 1001
William Kennedy, Steamer. Mentioned.....	143
Williams, Arthur B. Mentioned.....	1273
Williams, Charles P. Mentioned.....	528
Williams, Frank H. Mentioned.....	854
Williams, George A. Mentioned.....	966
Williams, George W. Mentioned.....	272
Williams, John F. Mentioned.....	294, 295
Williams, John W. Mentioned.....	494
Williams, Lyman S. Mentioned.....	973
Williams, Michael. Mentioned.....	1153

	Page.
Williams, Price. Mentioned.....	1186, 1190
Williams, R. Wesley. Mentioned.....	335, 340
Williams, Titus V. Mentioned.....	1271, 1277
Williams, William G.
Mentioned.....	572, 998.
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1006
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	314
Williamsburg, Va. Affair at, Feb. 11, 1865.
Communication from Julius C. Hicks.....	458
Report of Ira L. Dudley.....	458
William, John. Mentioned.....	191, 238, 685
Willis, William S. Mentioned.....	1150
Wills, Thomas. Mentioned.....	540
Wilmington, Steamer. Mentioned.....	143
Wilson, Alphens. Mentioned.....	598
Wilson, Augustus C. Mentioned.....	024
Wilson, Charles. Mentioned.....	599, 1053
Wilson, Charles E. Mentioned.....	1153, 1261
Wilson, Charles J. Mentioned.....	930
Wilson, Francis A. Mentioned.....	025, 934, 939, 1261
Wilson, Franklin C. Mentioned.....	1271
Wilson, H.
Correspondence with
Allen, Edward S.....	1318
Doherty, Edward P.....	1318
Mentioned.....	1318
Wilson, Henry H. Mentioned.....	360
Wilson, James Arthur. Mentioned.....	511-515, 517-520
Wilson, James H. Mentioned.....	20, 21, 25, 28, 30, 37, 39, 49, 59
Wilson, John. (Captain.) Mentioned.....	920
Wilson, John. (Sergeant.) Mentioned.....	1153, 1261
Wilson, John P., jr. Mentioned.....	1268
Wilson, John W. Mentioned.....	69
Wilson, Lorenzo D. Mentioned.....	598
Wilson, Peter E. Mentioned.....	1271
Wilson, Robert A. Mentioned.....	89
Wilson, Robert D. Mentioned.....	925, 934, 939
Wilson, Thomas A. Mentioned.....	598
Wilson, William. (Lieutenant.) Mentioned.....	1150
Wilson, William. (Lieutenant-Colonel.) Mentioned.....	566
Wilson, William. (Private.) Mentioned.....	280
Wilson, William T. Mentioned.....	1273
Winans, David A. Mentioned.....	733
Winans, George A. Mentioned.....	787
Winchester, Va.
Expedition into Loudoun County from Camp Averell, near. See Loudoun County, Va. Expedition from Camp Averell into, etc., Feb. 18-19, 1865.
Expedition to Edenburg and Little Fort Valley from Camp Russell, near. See Edenburg and Little Fort Valley, Va. Expedition from Camp Russell to, etc., Feb. 13-17, 1865.
Expedition to Moorefield, W. Va., from. See Moorefield, W. Va. Expedi- tion from Winchester, Va., to, Feb. 4-6, 1865.

Winchester, Va.—Continued.

Movement of convoy of prisoners from Waynesborough to, March 3-5, 1865, with skirmishes (5th) at Harrisburg and (7th) near Mount Jackson and at Rude's Hill. See Shenandoah Valley. Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Reports of, Lee, Robert E., p. 540; Thompson, John L., p. 528; also Torbert to Hancock, p. 520.

Scout from near, to Front Royal. See Front Royal, Va. Scout from, near Winchester to, March 16, 1865.

Scout from, to Edenburg, March 17-10, 1865. See Edenburg, Va. Scout to, from Winchester, March 17-19, 1865.

Scout from, to Edinburg, March 20-21, 1865. See Edenburg, Va. Scout to, from Winchester, March 20-21, 1865, etc.

Scout from, to Timber Ridge. See Timber Ridge, W. Va. Scout to, from Winchester, Va., April 11-12, 1865.

Scout from, to Woodstock. See Woodstock, Va. Scout to, from Winchester, March 27-29, 1865.

Sheridan's command starts from, Feb. 27, 1865. See Petersburg, Va. Expedition to the front of, from Winchester, Feb. 27-March 28, 1865.

Reports of

Custer, George A.

Gibbs, Alfred.

Sheridan, Philip H.

Devia, Thomas C.

Howard, Ocean H.

Stagg, Peter.

Fitzhugh, Charles L.

Merritt, Wesley.

Also general report of Grant, p. 48, and Itinerary, p. 124.

Winegar, William W. Mentioned .....	1261
Winger, Benjamin F. Mentioned .....	570
Winkler, Clinton M. Mentioned.....	1268
Winne, Charles K. ....	257, 707, 836
Mentioned.....	842
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20-April 9, 1865 .....	574, 1056, 1060
Winslow, Bradley. Mentioned.....	35
Winslow, Edward F. Mentioned .....	797
Winslow, Gordon. Mentioned .....	257, 707, 799, 822, 836
Winslow, Gordon, jr. Mentioned .....	674, 1098
Mentioned .....	1098
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 20-April 9, 1865 .....	1270
Winston, John R. Mentioned .....	926, 945
Winterbottom, Samuel. Mentioned.....	281
Winthrop, Frederick. ....	60, 86, 89, 91-94, 254-256, 258-260, 266, 269, 272, 277,
Correspondence with Gouverneur K. Warren .....	281, 284, 297, 299, 569, 585, 598, 796, 814, 830, 833, 836, 840, 843, 868-873, 875
Mentioned .....	280
Report of Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....
Wisconsin Troops. Mentioned.
Artillery, Light— Batteries: 4th, 148, 580, 597.
Infantry— Regiments: 5th, 67, 301, 302, 571, 587, 910, 915, 941, 942, 945, 950-953; 6th, 7th, 60, 96, 570, 585, 882-887; 19th, 578, 591; 36th, 63, 214, 220, 567, 583, 693, 705, 759, 762, 763; 37th, 70, 109, 324, 573, 588, 1016, 1042, 1043, 1045, 1061; 38th, 70, 573, 588, 1016, 1043, 1046, 1061.
Wise, Henry A. Mentioned .....	389, 825, 846, 1110, 1274, 1278, 1286-1291, 1300, 1301
Wister, Francis. Mentioned .....	823
Witcher, John S. Mentioned .....	575
Witcher, William A. Mentioned .....	1271

	Page.
Withers, E. Benton. Mentioned.....	1272
Withey, William H. Mentioned.....	859
Witman, Edward L.
Mentioned.....	570, 876
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	878, 879
Woerner, Christian.
Mentioned.....	356, 358, 565, 1071, 1074
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1080
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	188
Wofford, William T. Mentioned.....	388
Wolf, Frederick. Mentioned.....	612
Wolfe, Levi J. Mentioned.....	1255
Wolford, Daniel. Mentioned.....	993, 1008
Wombach, Franklin W. Mentioned.....	924, 944
Wood, Anson S. Mentioned.....	994, 999, 1002
Wood, Charles. Mentioned.....	931
Wood, Charles S. Mentioned.....	1023
Wood, George E. Mentioned.....	908
Wood, Joseph H. Mentioned.....	146
Wood, Robert T. Mentioned.....	1029, 1064
Wood, William. Mentioned.....	365, 979, 993, 994, 998, 1002, 1003
Woodall, Daniel.
Mentioned.....	567, 583, 705, 760, 761, 766, 767, 770
Reports of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	765, 768
Woodall, William H. Mentioned.....	1261
Woodard, Jesse F. Mentioned.....	1269
Woodhull, Alfred A. Mentioned.....	1164
Woodman, Charles H. Mentioned.....	301, 921, 934
For correspondence as A. A. A. G., see Joseph E. Hamblin .
Woodruff, Carle A. Mentioned.....	502, 1115
Woodruff, R. W. Mentioned.....	1270
Woods, Daniel A. Mentioned.....	1261
Woods, R. H. Mentioned.....	1269
Woodstock, Va.
Scout to, from Winchester, March 27-29, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley, Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Russell , p. 536.
Skirmish at, March 14, 1865. See Shenandoah Valley, Operations in, Feb. 27-April 23, 1865. Report of Webb , p. 530.
Woodward, Walter W. Mentioned.....	930
Woodward, William W.
Mentioned.....	140, 141, 143, 580, 596, 1229, 1233, 1235, 1238, 1242
Report of Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865.....	1241
Woodworth, Madison J. C. Mentioned.....	1097
Woodridge, Edwin S. Mentioned.....	1269
Woodridge, William B. Mentioned.....	1275, 1304
Woolfolk, James. Mentioned.....	1269
Wooster, William B. Mentioned.....	579
Wooten, Thomas J. Mentioned.....	1272, 1285, 1286
Worcester, George F. Mentioned.....	1026
Worley, George C. Mentioned.....	895
Worth, William S. Mentioned.....	662, 1015
Wright, Charles J. Mentioned.....	144

	Page.
Wright, Elias. Mentioned .....	(14) 424
Wright, Horatio G.
Correspondence with .....	357
Getty, George W. ....	319
Parke, John G. ....	980, 981
Seymour, Truman. ....	917
Wheaton, Frank .....	18, 20,
Mentioned .....	24, 26, 27, 29, 51, 53-56, 61-63, 67, 75, 76, 83, 94, 96, 100, 103, 105, 136, 149, 151, 154-156, 158, 161, 203, 260, 262, 271, 272, 290, 292, 295, 297, 299, 300, 318, 319, 348, 382, 571, 586, 590, 600, 601, 603-605, 607, 608, 610, 641, 643, 646-648, 627, 629-632, 634, 637, 638, 644-646, 651-654, 656, 657, 660, 661, 674, 678, 679, 681-684, 697, 700, 701, 733, 777, 779, 780, 782, 784, 786, 789, 840, 841, 894, 901, 907-911, 913, 914, 924-926, 931, 949, 968, 969, 979, 980, 984, 992, 995, 997, 998, 1009, 1010, 1012, 1018, 1019, 1063, 1103, 1107, 1108, 1120, 1126, 1132, 1151, 1160-1162, 1165, 1166, 1174, 1177, 1179, 1180, 1182, 1185, 1188, 1190, 1191, 1199, 1203, 1207, 1208, 1215, 1221, 1222, 1235, 1262, 1284, 1297, 1316, 1317
Reports of .....	901, 905
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	901, 905
Danville and South Boston, Va. Expedition from Buckeville and Petersburg to, April 23-29, 1865 .....	1315
Resumes command of 6th Army Corps .....	3
Wright, Joseph W. B.
Mentioned .....	565, 1071
Reports of .....	1079
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	187
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865 .....	1025
Wright, Samuel. Mentioned .....	1220
Wright, Thomas. Mentioned .....	472
Wright, William. Mentioned .....	881
Wright, William B. Mentioned .....	520
Wyatt, Otis C. Mentioned .....	543
Yaukie, U. S. S. Mentioned .....	1272
Yarborough, William H. Mentioned .....	870
Yardley, Eldridge T. Mentioned .....	994, 999
Yarnett, Harrison D. Mentioned .....	961
Yates, John E. Mentioned .....	1273
Yeagain, John W. Mentioned .....	579
Yeoman, Stephen B. Mentioned .....	278
Yingling, William H. Mentioned .....	1195
York, Albert. Mentioned .....	389, 1271, 1277
York, Zebulon. Mentioned .....	447-449
Yorktown, Va. Expedition to West Point from. See West Point, Va. Expedition from Yorktown to, Feb. 23-24, 1865. ....	447-449
Yonart, Robert. Mentioned .....	1261
Young, Andrew J. Mentioned .....	1262
Young, David W.
Correspondence with U. S. Grant .....	961
Mentioned .....	456, 457, 479, 481, 1113, 1133, 1310
Young, Henry H. Mentioned .....	926, 945, 953
Young, James. Mentioned .....	689
Young, James W. Mentioned .....

	Page.
Young, Samuel B. M.
Mentioned.....	576, 592, 1142, 1143, 1156
Reports of
Appomattox, Va., Campaign, March 29-April 9, 1865 .....	1154
Richmond, Va., Campaign, Jan. 1-April 3, 1865.....	369
Young, Spencer W. Mentioned.....	1205
Youngman, John C. Mentioned.....	319, 349, 1019, 1021
Zartman, Alfred. Mentioned .....	996
Zent, Samuel M.
Mentioned.....	398, 404, 416, 417, 426, 429, 430
Testimony of. Explosion of powder magazine at Fort Fisher, N. C., Jan:
16, 1865 .....	426, 427
Zentz, Carl. Mentioned .....	857
Zinn, George. Mentioned .....	237, 568, 785, 787